I found that I was incapable of foreseeing, try as I might, a goodly percentage of the destructive jobs wrought by Mona, Freddy and Joey. What was the drive, I wonder, behind the three, the day they took all the sheets and bath towels and pillowcases and made a soggy mountain of them in the bathtub by turning the shower on? I didn't grasp it. I just screamed like an eagle. Nor would it have occurred to me that it would be fun to make a paste of face powder and expensive perfume and spread this mixture over a candlewick bedspread. I guess I'm just not groovy that way.

IF I'm feeling reasonably rested and well, many of these indoor sports seem funny to me, even at the time. And even if they don't seem funny, I can keep my shirt on. But there is a time in every busy mother's life—and that time is apt to be about 5:30 P.M.—when the confusion wrought by a bevy of tots is almost intolerable. At this point, if you hope to keep your shirt on, it is wise to put a lock on your zipper.

Let's choose a couple of moments at random. This is about what goes on: In the living room my husband, Wede, is giving his rather pathetic imitation of a man reading the evening paper. Baby Cassin hops across the rug and cleverly opens the door which gives on a short flight of stairs. Wede jumps up from his easy chair, saves Cassin from a header, shuts the door firmly, and turns the page of his paper. Through the dining room and kitchen Mona, Freddy and Joey are playing choo-choo train, which means that they hitch on to each other's bathrobes and shuffle around screaming "Choo-choo! Choo-choo!" "Waaaaaaaaah!" (Joey slips and falls down.) Ooops! Wait for the caboose. In the lower bathroom my lieutenant, Dotty, desperately grabs a couple of moments to comb her hair. The little girls rush into the bathroom, and notice a box of shoe-shine equipment in the corner. All three flop down on the shoe box like hungry buzzards, fighting over the cans, the brushes and the flannel rags. "Not now!" Dotty says wearily. "Run and play like good little girls. I said not now!" The three leave the shoe-shine equipment strewn over the bathroom floor for weary Dotty to put to rights, and burst into the living room. Wede tells them to shut the door before Cassin gets out. "I said shut the door!" he shouts. "And Joey—put down that poker!" At this juncture, the telephone rings, the dog barks and, from the living room, Joey is making that high screech she turns on when things are not going her way. I pick up the telephone, but seem to be speaking straight from the Tower of Babel. I put my hand over the receiver. "Children, will you please be quiet just for a minute? Please?" I return to the telephone and catch just enough of what's said to understand. I hang up. Now there is solid screaming from the living room. "Stop it!" I shout, beside myself. "Couldn't you be good girls just for a little while?"

As I wail, my amazement that they should be so pitilessly noisy is equally matched by their amazement. They stare at me, their ears perked like elves' ears. Their eyes are interested, but honestly (Continued on Page 200)

Whee! Made of "FLUFF" again!

Softer! Whiter!

NOTICE!

Your store has a new Northern Tissue now—and it's the softest, whitest ever.

It is made of "FLUFF"* again —and there just isn't anything that can compare with downy "FLUFF" for making a soft, white bathroom tissue.

Why not try it soon?

NORTHERN TISSUE

NORTHERN TISSUE made of "FLUFF"

* "FLUFF"—a registered trade-mark symbolizing the snow-white, cotton-soft pure cellulose of which Northern Tissue is made.

Time to eat, I hope!

That's the kind of feeding-time welcome that mothers who serve Gerber's Baby Foods come to expect! First of all, the choice vegetables and fruits that go into Gerber's are carefully washed in pure, artesian water, then cooked by steam . . . to retain precious minerals and vitamins. The same tender care produces uniform, "just-right" texture; and of course, Gerber's Baby Foods taste extra good. Laboratory-checked all along the line. Be sure to get Gerber's—with "America's Best-Known Baby" on the label!

Two Special Baby Cereals—

suitable as starting cereals and all through babyhood. Both Gerber's Cereal Food and Gerber's Strained Oatmeal are pre-cooked, ready-to-serve. Both cereals rich in added iron and B complex vitamins, needed by most babies. Serve each cereal turnabout to give baby variety.

ONE MOTHER TO ANOTHER

You may have heard the saying, "we are what we eat." How true that is of our babies! For the quality and purity of the food we give our babies has much to do with the kind of men and women they will become.

Mrs Dan Gerber

© 1946, G. P. C.

Gerber's

FREMONT, MICH. OAKLAND, CAL.

Baby Foods

Cereals Strained Foods Chopped Foods

Remember, it is wise to check baby's feeding program with your doctor.

Free sample .....

Address: Gerber Products Co., Dept. 84-6, Fremont, Mich.

My baby is now ..... months old; please send me samples of Gerber's Cereal Food and Gerber's Strained Oatmeal.

Name .....

Address ..... City and State .....

(Continued from Page 198)

uncomprehending. They don't know what it feels like to have a backache, to be tired and nervous and cross. They know not what they do. So again, and again, and again it is confirmed that children aren't naughty, usually; what they do is simply inconvenient to adults.

There is a means of charming little children to go your way, by borrowing a page from the Pied Piper's book. Sometimes I am too tired to think and I just holler. Other times I am smart enough to doctor up a bad situation. It works so well when I use my head that I often wonder why I ever have any trouble at all. Here are two examples of bad situations which were given the Pied Piper treatment:

I was alone with my babies one evening recently. Dotty had gone home for the week end. Wede was in New York. I had such a dreadful headache and sick stomach that I was obliged to lie on the couch and watch over the children with a croaky voice as my only asset. They were wildly scattered over the house and I knew that unless I managed to keep them in the same room with me washbowls would overflow, magazines would be torn up and bureau drawers would be looted. With dancing eyes they dashed into and out of the living room, aware of the convenience of mamma's feeble state but showing me no mercy, since that is a quality seldom found in children under five. Finally I pulled myself together and hailed the members of Migraine Makers Local 802. "Say, let's pretend mommy is sick, shall we?" They paused. Pretending—that was different. I talked fast. "Mona, you be the doctor, and Freddy can be the nurse, and Joey can be daddy." There were happy murmurs of assent. Joey pretended to telephone the doctor. Freddy grabbed my wrist and peered into my face with comic, important anxiety. Mona strode into the room with a small block and wedged it between my teeth in lieu of a thermometer. I lay in a comparatively happy coma, being prodded and exclaimed over. All I had to do was to give an exaggerated groan once in a while, or cry, and the game continued until bedtime.

If both sides make you laugh, you are broad-minded.

—The Public Speaker's Treasure Chest. (Harper).

Example two: For years getting the little girls upstairs to bed at night was a feat. I talked them to bed in a voice which would have done well at boot camp if I hadn't been in bootee camp at the time. "Put that book away now and go upstairs. I said put the book away. I mean now!" Any mother could join me in the routine. Well, one evening when I was feeling more competent, and happened to be near the piano, I hit upon the idea of playing and singing Good Night Ladies as a bedtime cue. I told Mona and Freddy and Joey, "Now listen! Whenever you hear this song, just stop whatever you are doing and march upstairs." In a few moments I sang Good Night Ladies. As if hypnotized, wearing tentative, dreamy smiles, the little girls drifted upstairs. I had bewitched them.

Well, it takes steady nerves and the wits of a Spitfire pilot to be the mother of preschool children. A month ago, Freddy and Mona started to go to kindergarten. Joey is three now and Cassie will walk any minute. Before long there won't be any babies in the house. You'd think I'd be delighted, wouldn't you?

The other night, as Wede and I started downhill to the movies, leaving Dotty at home with the babies, what do you suppose was the first thing I said, now that it was peaceful enough so that he could hear me? I'll give you a direct quote.

"It might be fun," I said, "to adopt a couple of boys to keep things quieter."

I guess I'm a little crazy. The strain, no doubt, poor thing.

CHILDREN NEED VACATION HANDKNITS

Knit 'em of Fleisher's Yarn

A CABLE-STITCH SLIP-ON. Knit it of Fleisher's Sock and Sport Yarn.

A CLASSIC SLIP-ON for chilly summer days. Knit it of Fleisher's Sweater Floss.

A SLEEVELESS SLIP-ON for active boys of all ages.

A BUTTON-TIGH CARDIGAN. Kni it of Fleisher soft Casa-Laine.

FOR ALL YOUR KNITTING

Fleisher's Yarn

THERE'S NOTHING FINER

230 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 1, N.Y., DEPT. JF

H. ARMSTRONG ROBERTS

Earache need no longer mean disaster for u child. New methods of treatment with penicillin or sulphonamides effect rapid recovery.

Don't Risk Precious Hearing!

BY DR. HERMAN N. BUNDESEN
President, Chicago Board of Health

WHEN your child wakes up at night complaining of earache, you are likely to become confused and frightened. Should you apply heat or cold? Use ear drops? Other medicine? Call the doctor right away? As you thus wonder what to do; your fears may be mounting: Will the baby's hearing be damaged? Will he get a mastoid infection? Will his life be in danger?

Next time this happens at your house, remember this fact: Most earaches are caused by simple infections which are dangerous or harmful to hearing only if proper treatment is long delayed. With this knowledge to reassure you, do these things first:

1. Apply heat externally, using a hot-water bottle or electric heating pad.
2. Give aspirin—half a tablet to a child under six, a whole one to an older child.
3. Keep the child lying down, covered and quiet.

In most cases, these emergency measures will relieve the discomfort enough so that the child will rest. If severe pain persists, or if the earache is accompanied by high fever, the doctor should be called at once. Under any circumstances he should be consulted in the morning unless the symptoms have disappeared entirely. If he advises ear drops, take care that you don't get them too hot. Test them by putting a few drops on the inside of your wrist; if the drops are hot enough to sting, they are too hot for the child's sensitive ear. Do not use ear drops unless the doctor advises them.

By examining the ear with an instrument, the trained doctor can quickly tell whether the infection is inside or outside the eardrum—a delicate membrane whose vibrations transmit sound waves from the outer ear canal to the intricate mechanisms of the middle and inner ear. In most cases of earache the infection is in the middle ear, just behind the drum. This area opens directly into the back of the throat by means of a passageway known as the Eustachian tube; thus ordinary colds and other infections of the nose and throat often spread into the middle ear. Measles and scarlet fever, for example, may result in severe ear infections because of this easy entry from the nose-throat region.

This is the reason, too, that children should be taught to blow their noses as seldom as possible—and never with the nostrils held shut. The force of a strong blow may drive germs into the Eustachian tube and so to the ear. (In the same way, the child who jumps feet first into water over his head without holding his nose may force infection into the sinuses and ears.)

The swelling and inflammation that accompany an ear infection quickly cause pain

GRATEFUL young mothers from Maine to California tell us that Doctor's Bundesen's baby booklets have been of the greatest help to them in caring for their own babies. The first eight booklets cover your baby's first eight months. They sell for 50 cents. The second series of booklets covers the baby's health from nine months to two years—seven booklets for 50 cents. The booklets will be sent monthly; be sure to tell us when you want the first booklet. A complete book on the care of the baby, a necessary supplement to the monthly booklets, OUR BABIES, No. 1345, is 25 cents. A booklet on breast feeding, A DOCTOR'S FIRST DUTY TO THE MOTHER, No. 1346, sells for 6 cents. Address all requests to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania.

"Oh, Mom—S'pose your face froze!"

BABY: Why, Mom! Don't you like being me—and wearing my pretty bonnet?

MOM: Frankly, no! I'm learning fast—that in a baby's life, clothes are just one more thing to bother his skin and make him uncomfortable!

BABY: Carry that ■ step farther, Mom. Doesn't it suggest something you could do for me? Like maybe a little attention with Johnson's Baby Oil and Johnson's Baby Powder?

MOM: Angel, I've been a delinquent mama! Gracious—a baby's poor little skin certainly does need something to protect it. What do I do?

BABY: Now you're talking! First, smooth me all over with Johnson's pure, gentle Baby Oil, after my bath. Use some more when you change me—to help prevent what Doctor calls "urine irritation"!

MOM: As good as done. Then what?

BABY: You know how chafes and prickles bother me when I get warm and perspiry? Chase 'em—with cool, soft sprinkles of Johnson's Baby Powder . . . Well, Mom—that's the story!

MOM: Let's hurry the happy ending! Off to the store for Johnson's!

Johnson's Baby Oil
Johnson's Baby Powder

Johnson & Johnson

in this highly sensitive organ, especially if there is a delay in giving one of the sulfonamide drugs or penicillin. Sometimes swelling is so severe that resulting pressure causes the eardrum to bulge outward. In many such cases the doctor decides that the drum must be punctured to relieve pressure. This procedure is quickly and easily performed and brings prompt relief from pain. It prevents possible harmful rupture of the eardrum, and it also prevents the swelling infection from burrowing into the mastoid bone behind the ear. The incision heals swiftly, and no lasting damage is done.

Before the advent of the sulfonamide drugs and penicillin, only a few years ago, doctors punctured the eardrum in many cases of middle-ear infection. Now that these drugs are available, however, such infections are usually brought under control before swelling has progressed to a point which makes puncture necessary—unless there is delay in calling the doctor. Very recently, doctors have treated the worst kind of ear infection—that which sometimes occurs as a result of scarlet fever and is called "acute suppurative otitis media"—with penicillin. In one group of cases treated by this modern method, the infection disappeared within five days after treatment started.

The Chinese pronoun "I" is represented by two crossed swords.

—H. G. WERNER: And We are Whole Again (Abingdon-Cokesbury).

When infection forces its way into the mastoid, dangerously close to the brain, decisive action is called for. Often the surgeon has to make an incision into the bone from the outside to drain off infected matter and scrape away infected bone. This is the dreaded mastoid operation. It used to be common for 40 to 50 per cent of patients with acute suppurative infection to have mastoid operations, but only 2 per cent of the group treated with penicillin had to be operated on! So here is one fear that is practically groundless today: You don't need to worry about mastoid, provided you keep the child with earache quiet (this helps prevent spread of infection) and call the doctor if symptoms do not subside quickly. These measures also protect the child's hearing. It is the long-continued or repeated ear infections that may in time interfere with functioning of the sound-conducting apparatus and cause some loss of hearing.

Sometimes earache is caused by hardened earwax that is lodged against the eardrum and exerts pressure. Gentle washing with lukewarm water applied by syringe usually suffices to soften and dislodge wax. However, this technique is exacting; too much pressure with the syringe may be harmful, so you should learn how this is done from the doctor before trying it yourself. Also, let the doctor handle any case of foreign bodies in the ear.

Your part in this problem is prevention; teach the child to keep things out of his ears, including his fingers, which often carry infection into the outer ear canal and sometimes, painfully, to the eardrum itself. Above all, don't try to remove earwax with a toothpick, hairpin or orange stick; anything inserted into the ear may cause injury or bring infection. Wash wax away with water instead; soap will not harm the ear if it is thoroughly rinsed out, but neglected, dried soap may form a film over the eardrum and dull the child's hearing.

Sometimes children's ears are injured in falling or bumping accidents, and every such case should be investigated thoroughly by a skilled doctor. Blows on the ear may easily rupture an eardrum; it is your responsibility to see that your child is properly protected with a helmet for rough sports like football and boxing. Your child's hearing is too precious to be risked through neglect!

Keep in mind the few things needed to prevent injuries to the ear. Remember infections are potentially dangerous and have them promptly treated by the physician.

I think confidently of her

in the years ahead

Her world will be wider, her dreams will know no bounds . . .

Physically, she will be better endowed, too, with these assets I promise to help her build . . . sound teeth

a well-shaped head ★ a fine, full chest

a strong back ★ straight legs

TO HELP YOUR BABY DEVELOP BEAUTIFULLY from birth, give Vitamin D every day. It will help transform important minerals of her food into a sound framework of lovely proportions. Depend on Squibb Cod Liver Oil to supply your baby with structural Vitamin D all the time she is growing. Give Squibb's daily!

A recent medical report shows that 9 out of 10 children have one or more decayed teeth by the time they are six years old. Dentists repeatedly stress the importance of baby's first teeth. Do your best to help build sound teeth by giving Squibb Cod Liver Oil daily.

SQUIBB *cod liver oil

a name you can trust

UNTIL THEIR FEET STOP... Growing

THEY SHOULDN'T STOP... Wearing

DR. POSNER'S SHOES

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

COMMENDED PARENTS MAGAZINE CONSUMER SERVICE

Dr. Posner's Scientific Shoes for Pre-School and School

Write for FREE illustrated folder.

Your children's feet aren't fully formed until they're grown up. During these important "growing" years, why gamble with foot ills? Dr. Posner's Shoes bring every foot health advantage to your child. They are scientifically designed to aid correct "Body Balance"—help feet grow straight. Your Dr. Posner dealer is an expert in fitting children's shoes. See him.

DR. A. POSNER SHOES, INC. • 137 DUANE ST. • NEW YORK 13, N.Y.

Specialists in Junior Health Shoes since 1888

FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

DR. POSNER'S SCIENTIFIC SHOES

GIVE YOUR CHILD CORRECT BODY BALANCE

The Sunshine Bakeshop

BY JAN WEYL

WHEN Nan and I were twelve we decided to go into business. We had been putting out a daily newspaper called The Sunshine News, but this time we wanted to try something different. We considered a racing sheet, a detective agency and a circus. But we finally hit upon what we thought was the best idea of all—a bakeshop. The Sunshine Bakeshop. (The sun seemed to intrigue us. Each issue of The Sunshine News had featured a picture of the sun in some form or other, and a large sunset drawn by my brother Tom, aged six, adorned the top of our bakeshop menu. We asked Tom to paint a sunset on our delivery cart, but he rebelled. My father wouldn't paste a sunset on his windshield either when he used the car for deliveries.)

Our parents weren't too enthusiastic about the bakeshop, but we couldn't be dissuaded. We wanted to learn to cook, and thought that as long as we were cooking we might as well do it for profit. Profit played a large part in our lives.

Dad's library became the bakeshop office because it had an outside door. We rarely used the outside door, but just having it made us feel worldly and independent.

The first thing we did was make out a resplendent menu list from a book of recipes donated by Nan's mother. The menu list boasted, in addition to the sunset on the top, a selection of more than fifty kinds of cookies, cakes and rolls. We used colored stars and arrows to point out the four or five things we actually knew how to cook. (This worked very well because our customers were inclined to be wary anyway. They usually ordered molasses cookies and brownies.) We got caught only once, when one woman ordered filled cookies. Mother was too busy to help us make them, so we sent the woman a batch of brownies at our wholesale price with a note of apology. She was quite baffled because she couldn't even remember ordering the cookies. I think we had several courtesy customers.

But we were also a godsend to some of the neighbors, particularly a woman with three little children and a fourth on the way. She ordered a daily batch of molasses cookies and rolls, and gave us encouragement to go on in our darkest hours. We had some dark hours, because our families weren't enjoying the bakeshop much. Mother couldn't get near the oven to bake anything herself, so she was obliged to buy from the bakeshop or go without. Often she went without anyway, because if we were terribly rushed we didn't bother to fill her order.

We slaved over the bakeshop. Nan got up every morning at six to make three or four batches of molasses cookies—all in the same bowl at the same time. This was quite a physical workout, and often she would have to lie down while they baked. In the meantime I would be toiling over such intricate delicacies as cinnamon and butterscotch rolls, or more probably brownies.

The Sunshine Bakeshop was a successful and happy enterprise during the first four days of its existence. But then my father balked. Mainly he objected to our delivery system, in which he, unwittingly, had become a key factor. Tom took care of neighborhood deliveries, but since our business was a far-flung affair with customers all over town, we had turned to dad for help. Every night when he arrived home from the office our front hall was full of baked goods for him to deliver. He was doing so much delivering that dinner was ready by the time he finished, and he was missing his before-dinner highball. Dad without his before-dinner highball is not dad, so with a few well-chosen words he gave up delivering. (We never quite forgave him for this, because we missed a lot of customers who were faithful to molasses cookies and brownies.)

Dad also said he was getting tired of cold cuts and salads for dinner. He would like, please, a nice big roast with hot potatoes and vegetables. But as mother explained, "Dear, I can't possibly do it. The girls have the oven going all day. When they finish there isn't time to cook much of anything for you." I won't bother to record dad's answer, but dinners at our house picked up considerably.

Nan's father brought up another problem. We were paying for the materials we used, but who was paying for the gas? This was a big matter, since we had two ovens burning every day for the better part of the day. Nan and I thought the matter over carefully and offered to pay each of our fathers ten cents a week.

They very generously said that in view of our offer they would be glad to contribute the gas.

With these difficulties surmounted, the Sunshine Bakeshop went on serenely for another week and a half. We spent three fourths of the day baking and the rest of the time delivering and taking orders. Nan experimented with a jelly roll and this became a popular selection. I remained restricted to the brownie-and-butterscotch-roll field, since I couldn't bake so well as Nan. I was more interested in the business side of the proposition anyway—to wit, the taking in of the coin. Unfortunately, this was not an active part of our business. We undercharged grossly, often making not more than five

Her father's a Doctor—

Golden-haired Joan M. is the daughter of a doctor. So her development is being watched with expert eyes! You can see what a happy-looking, healthy little girl she is.

Joan M. at 18 months

Weighs 28 lbs. Is 33¼ inches tall. (At birth she weighed 8 lbs. 2 oz., was 22 inches tall.)

Her cereal is CLAPP'S

Why so many doctors feed their babies Clapp's Baby Cereals

—because, in addition to fine whole grains, these special cereals provide extra food elements such as dry skim milk, wheat germ, and brewers' yeast.

—because every spoonful of Clapp's Instant Cereal gives a baby—

3 times as much iron as unfortified home-cooked cereals.

2½ times as much vitamin $B_1$ as most of the unfortified home-cooked cereals.

—because every ounce of Clapp's Instant Cereal provides:

Vitamin $B_1$—0.3 mg.
Vitamin G—0.1 mg.
Iron—6 mg.
Calcium—96 mg.

—because the texture of Clapp's Baby Cereals is fine but definite.

—and because preparation is so simple.

PRODUCTS OF AMERICAN HOME FOODS, INC.

No cooking needed. You just add milk or formula right in the serving dish. Try Clapp's Instant Cereal or Clapp's Instant Oatmeal today.

*Name on file at CLAPP'S BABY FOOD DIVISION, American Home Foods, Inc.

Ask your Doctor!

Only with GLASS! You SEE the size, style and color; how much liquid, how many servings.

It Tells All—the Duraglas Jar!

SONNY: I know why you get our vegetables in glass jars, Mother.

MOTHER: All right, professor, tell me—why?

SONNY: Because then you can always see exactly what you're getting—even before you buy it.

MOTHER: Sounds to me as if you'd been listening when I talked to Aunt Helen. What did I say about it being thrifty?

SONNY: No waste or mistakes.

MOTHER: Almost perfect. And just add to the list how they save work, too. I put unused servings in the refrigerator right in the jar. That saves using extra dishes.

There are a thousand and one other things you buy for which Duraglas, the modern container, provides the same ideal, economical protection. Owens-Illinois Glass Company, Toledo 1, Ohio.

Duraglas
TRADE MARK REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

cents per order of molasses cookies. Our total profit at the end of two weeks of heavy baking was $6.35.

The Sunshine Bakeshop was probably doomed to an early eclipse anyway, but the end came sooner than it might have. My grandmother had a serious operation quite suddenly one day, and mother, who couldn't find my father, sat through the ordeal alone. By the time she got home in the afternoon, not knowing whether grandma would live or not, she was in no mood for anything, much less the Sunshine Bakeshop.

Matrimony is like good mustard: men praise it with tears in their eyes.
—DR. J. A. HOLMES: Wisdom in Small Doses. (University Pub. Co.)

She came in the back door of the house and found me in the kitchen hurriedly slopping butter over dough for butterscotch rolls. Little rivulets of water were running about the floor. (I was wearing a wet bathing suit which I hadn't bothered to wring out.) The oven door was standing wide open with a good 450° fire blazing.

Mother closed the oven door, mopped up the floor, and told me to take off my bathing suit. I took her literally, which left me completely nude. I didn't dare leave the butterscotch rolls, so I put on an apron. That didn't work very well, so I put on two aprons, one facing each way. Then I asked mother to run out to the front driveway and tell the customers who were waiting there for the butterscotch rolls that it would be another half-hour wait. They were the Burtons, two of the town's most eminent citizens.

By the time mother got out to the Burtons, they were but remnants of their former selves. It was a scorching-hot day and there wasn't an ounce of shade on the driveway. Mr. Burton mopped his brow with a wet handkerchief and asked what the chances were of getting the —— butterscotch rolls in the near future. Mother broke the news gently and invited them in, but they were too hot and went home instead.

That night I went to bed without dinner (my family had butterscotch rolls) following a lecture on etiquette (one does not leave potential guests sitting in driveways, especially on blistering-hot days). The Sunshine Bakeshop came to a sudden end. And the next day Nan and I started publishing a horse-racing form with our own predictions. The Sunshine Racing Form.

JOHNNY WITH THE SPINDLY LEGS

(Continued from Page 26)

blind back and forth, and crooning, "The first one, the first one ——"

"Johnny, what do you want for lunch, dear?" But he didn't hear her. "Fix him something nice."

Mrs. Millikan kissed Johnny hastily, and then all of them were gone, Vic to the bus and Mrs. Millikan and Lola in the car to the station.

Almie came to clear the table. "Young man," she said to Johnny, "whut you mean leavin' your good cereal settin' here in dis bowl?"

Johnny turned around, serious eyes on her. "Do you know who was the first one?" he asked doubtfully.

"The fust one a what, boy?"

"The first President. Truman is now, but who was the first one?"

"The fust one," Almie said, proud of her knowledge, "was a white gennelman name of Washin'ton—Geo'ge Washin'ton. Why you wants to know?"

"Cassie bet me I didn't know. And I said I did. But I didn't. I said I knew but I wouldn't tell him." He cocked his head and examined her face to see if she would condemn this falsehood.

Almie looked down at his spindly legs. "Honey," she said stanchly, "you tell dat Cassie it's Geo'ge Washin'ton. An' he needn't think he so smart, cause you knows it jes as well as him. An' now you set down an' eat your cereal."

He regarded her large body and wide face with growing approval. "Sit with me?"

Almie looked into the round, defenseless eyes. "Seein' as how I got nothin' else to do," she said, with a crinkly smile Mrs. Millikan had never seen and never would, "an' seein' as how I is in sech good company, I don' min' settin' down with you, young man."

Johnny slipped into his chair, and Almie eased her bulk into Mrs. Millikan's. She took a slice of toast and covered it thickly with butter and jam for Johnny. Then she poured some coffee from the silver pot into an empty glass for herself.

Johnny sat chewing his toast and watching her with steady eyes as she supped the coffee. "You gonna stay here?" he asked, after a while.

"Why you want to know?" Almie parried.

"The other ones all went away," Johnny offered. It was not news to Almie. There were uniforms of all sizes in the maid's-room closet. "Everybody goes away," Johnny added philosophically.

"Whut you mean, evvybody?" Almie asked, puzzled.

"My father went away before I was born," the little boy recited, "and Lola and Vic go away every day, and Maggie got old and went away to live with her sister in the country."

"Who was Maggie, boy?"

"She was my nurse. She was very old and my father left her some money and she waited till I was grown up and then she went away. Everybody goes away."

"Not your ma," Almie said. "She don' go 'way."

"She reads to me sometimes at night," Johnny said. "But mostly she don't come home. And I must be a big boy and look at my picture books and go to bed when the maid tells me," he concluded, as if by rote.

Almie supped at her coffee angrily. Fine way to raise up a child. No wonder he so skinny. Takes a little lovin' to put flesh on a child's bones. She fixed him another piece of toast.

"She can't he'p it if she got to work," she told him. "She ruther stay with you. She jes love her Johnny." The boy looked at her with the big question in his eyes. His look was too candid. You could not lie to that look. But Almie managed it. She answered the unspoken question. "Yo' ma'd jes about die ef anything ever happen to her Johnny."

His face brightened momentarily, but the light faded almost at once, and he looked out the window wistfully. "Maggie said she'd invite me to visit her in the country, but she didn't. She's too old." He studied Almie's face. "Do you think she's too old?"

"I reckon so, honey," Almie sighed. She felt pretty old herself at that moment.

When Johnny had finished his breakfast, Almie cleared the table. She filled one side of the double sink with soapy water and put the dishes in to soak, meanwhile watching out the window to see if Sam would be coming home from the station. More likely, she knew, he wouldn't turn up for an hour or more, and then with liquor on his breath. When Johnny went into his room Almie slipped into hers, took her valise out of the closet and laid it open on top of the double bed. She had unpacked it only yesterday, but now she took her dresses, one at a time, and folded them neatly back in again.

After that she took the socks and underwear out of the hamper and did a big batch of them, the whites in the washing machine and the colored ones by hand. When they were hung in orderly rows on the drier she returned to the kitchen and finished washing the dishes, while Johnny stood at the sink watching her silently. Once she accidentally nudged him with her elbow when she placed a dish in the rack, and he said, sidling backward: "Do you want me to go away?"

(Continued on Page 206)

A glass of milk—yours for d-e-e-lightful refreshment. It invites . . . it pleases . . . it satisfies! No wonder milk is America's favorite in refreshment! . . . Remember, too, no other drink does so much for you. Into a glass o' milk, nature pours natural vitamins, proteins and minerals—the good things of life to help you look and feel good. No wonder authorities say "Drink at least two glasses a day." . . . So enjoy milk around the clock —frosty-cold or soothing warm—delighting and inviting, morning, noon or night.

AMERICAN DAIRY ASSOCIATION

20 North Wacker Drive Building Chicago 6, Illinois

ADA is a federation for nation-wide promotion, advertising and research activities supported by the dairy farmers throughout the country!

"Voice of the Dairy Farmer"

ANY TIME IS Glass O' Milk TIME

When baby's tears come from "Childhood Constipation"

...give Fletcher's Castoria!

"It's the laxative made especially for infants and children."

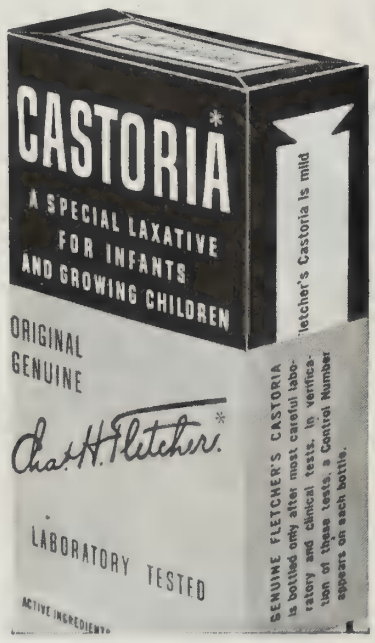
WHEN the trouble is "Childhood Constipation" . . . when your child's sunny little smile turns into whiny tears—here's the wise thing to do:



Give him Fletcher's Castoria. It's so gentle and safe, yet it works thoroughly and effectively. It won't upset his sensitive digestive system.

Unlike adult laxatives—which may be too harsh—Fletcher's Castoria is specially made for children. It contains no harsh drugs, and will not cause griping or discomfort.

And Fletcher's Castoria has such a pleasing taste that children really love it. They take it gladly without forcing.

Get Fletcher's Castoria at your drug-store today. Look for the green band and laboratory control number on the package.

Always take a laxative only as directed on the package or by your physician.

Chas. H. Fletcher

CASTORIA

The original and genuine

(Continued from Page 204)

"No suh!" she answered emphatically. "You stay right here with Almie. Keep Almie comp'ny."

He was satisfied. "The other ones mostly want me to go away," he said. "They're too busy."

It was eleven o'clock before Sam returned with the car. By that time Almie had run the vacuum and dusted in the downstairs rooms, and was ready for the kitchen floor. Almie had her own system. Sam came reeling in just as she was bending to get out the scrub pail, and he slapped her joyfully on her broad bottom.

She straightened up and took him by the collar. "You ol' skunk!" she spat at him. "You mud-rootin' hog! You an' me is finished, big boy! You listen here to me." But then, catching sight of Johnny standing round-eyed in the kitchen door behind Sam, she let go her hold on his collar and pushed him down into a chair near the kitchen table. "Dis man o' mine," Almie said, with a big chortle, "all he need is some black coffee—black an' bittuh." And she slapped Sam on the shoulder with a big, playful whup of her hand, to show Johnny it was all in fun, and yet hard enough so Sam would certainly know she meant it.

While Sam, chastened, was drinking his coffee, Almie washed up half of the kitchen floor, and then she spread clean paper over it and put Sam on that side to polish the metal ash trays while she washed the other half. Then she went into their room and came out with her rusty black hat and coat.

"You ain't leavin' here by yourself with no ma'ketin' list," she said to Sam, her eyes narrow. "You ain't stayin' out the whole shinin' day an' leavin' all your work fo' Almie Peal, even ——" She was about to say, "even though it's my last day." But she stopped, because Johnny was right there. She didn't want to be the one to tell Johnny she was leaving. Let him find it out some other way. "Me and dis young man here," she said, winking broadly at Johnny, "is goin' along jes' for the ride."

Johnny laughed out loud and ran for hi jacket. Something about this new cook mad him feel good. He felt good later, too, sittin in the front seat between Almie and Sam although he didn't like the medicine smell o Sam's breath. But he could lean towar Almie, and when he did she seemed to like it putting her strong arm around him and pull ing him to rest against her big, soft breast

After the marketing, they came home an Almie fixed creamy scrambled eggs and won derful little pancakes for dessert. Johnn ate more and more of the little pancakes, an Almie went on making them for him, chuck ling, "Almie could fix them bony legs, sh could."

When lunch was over, she sent Sam ou into the yard to beat the small rugs, an while she was cleaning upstairs she watche him through the window, calling out to hin from time to time so he'd know she had he eye on him. After the rugs, she put him t mowing the lawn. Midway in the afternoo Almie finished the bedrooms. Then she foun Lola's red dress and pressed it. This house go ing to be neat as apple pie, she said to hersel as she pushed the iron. Almie Peal was wonder, Mrs. Johnstone said. Almie Peal wa one in a million, Mrs. Link said. They wer both right, too, Almie proudly and silently affirmed. But she was no sucker, neither And taking a couple's job with that man San was sucker's work—not for Almie Peal! Th valise was ready under the bed.

When evening came, Sam, bathed and in fresh white jacket, his mouth well washe out with clove water, was setting the tabl for dinner. Almie, in a voluminous flowere apron, stood at the stove, and the kitche was full of tantalizing smells.

Johnny, at her side while she stirred th soup, had his head down, butted into he massive hip, and he was pushing. A lou growling sound came from his throat. H was a bulldozer, the bulldozer they had see this morning, leveling a hilly lot next to th market, and he growled as he butted hi head against Almie's hip. Once in a whil she would push him aside as she might pus

Kroll

—the name that enjoys the Confidence of America's Mothers!

Look for the name KROLL when you choose baby's carriage or crib, and you'll find many exclusive, patented safety and comfort features to guard your baby's health. America's babies deserve the best.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Sold At Leading Stores

FREE FOLDER
Write
KROLL BROS. CO.
Chicago 16

JUVENILE FURNITURE and BABY CARRIAGES

HEY, MOM! Don't be a Diaper Drudge! Dennison Diaper Liners reduce unpleasantness in changing and washing my diapers. Just fold a Liner inside diaper next to my skin. When soiled, flush away. No hard scrubbing. Sanitary. Helps prevent diaper rash. Costs only a few cents a day. BABYPADS: 200 for $1. DOWNEE-SOFT: 200 for 69¢.

FREE... To get one full day's supply of Diaper Liners write to Dennison, Dept. D-1, Framingham, Massachusetts.

Dennison
DIAPER LINERS
Wherever Baby Goods Are Sold

Heir Minded MATERNITY DRESSES From Jann of Hollywood newest in smart Maternity ses for home and street wear. ing frocks for comfort and concealing lines. All at risingly low prices. A dress for every occasion.

REE from HOLLYWOOD
New catalog sent upon request in plain wrapper, free. Write today.
INE OF HOLLYWOOD, Dept. 103, 5071 Hollywood
.., Hollywood, California.

BE A HOTEL HOSTESS

oy Your Work! Fascinating Positions in hotels as Hostess, Executive housekeeper, Manager, Social or od Director. Grade school education plus Lewis aining qualifies you. Lewis National Placement Serv- Free of extra charge. One student writes: "Offered positions by Lewis School, I selected this one as stess-Assistant Manager of a famous resort." Write Free Book.

WIS HOTEL TRAINING SCHOOL 30th SUCCESSFUL YEAR
Sta. HD-501, Washington 7, D. C.

a puppy, so that she could reach toward another pot, but he would come right back, growling and pushing.

Almie scarcely noticed him. She was tired, true enough, but not because of anything Johnny did. She was tired after the all-day struggle of watching that man Sam. She had to keep her eye on him every minute, holding him to the job, a little push when he got lazy, a little joke when he got sullen. It was too much for a woman to do all that and her own job too. Not that Sam meant any harm. He was just too handsome, maybe—too cute—too knowing when it comes to putting his arms around, too quick with a kiss. But that didn't make up for all the work and the fretting. Not any more. She would be glad to get away alone again. Maybe go back to Mrs. Johnstone. She could go back to any place she'd ever worked, and welcome.

"I had pancakes for lunch," Johnny said when Mrs. Millikan came in and kissed him absently on the forehead. Lola had made a beeline for her room to see if the red dress was pressed.

Vic came out of his room, yawning and stretching. He had been locked in there half the afternoon, racing like mad through his assignments so that he would be free in the evening for a fraternity smoker.

"I had pancakes for lunch, just for me," Johnny repeated contentedly, following Mrs. Millikan into Lola's room. "Will you read to me tonight, mother? Will you?"

"Of course, dear," Mrs. Millikan assured him wearily. "Of course I'll read to you."

Johnny went for his book. He brought it to the dinner table and sat on it so it would be there and ready. It was a new book, with tantalizing pictures that made the big printed words underneath seem mysterious and wonderful. He ate everything that was put in front of him quickly, so dinner would be over and they could get to the book. The dinner tasted so good too. It reminded him of the pancakes. The pancakes were just for him.

Next to the faculty of discernment, diamonds and pearls are the rarest things in the world.
—JEAN DE LA BRUYÈRE.

Lola got to the table a little later than the others, having taken time to shower and change into her red crepe. She looked flushed and excited. But in the middle of dinner a phone call came, and her date was canceled. She came stamping back from the telephone, thumped into her chair and dropped a spoon in the soup. A wet, greasy mark appeared on the front of the red crepe.

"What do I care!" she whispered furiously. "I hate this dumb dress, anyway." Then she burst into tears.

"Oh, for heaven's sake," Vic said, disgusted. "Why doesn't she take that actress temperament outside and drown it?"

Lola got up again and ran into her room, and Mrs. Millikan went after her. Soon Mrs. Millikan came back to the table alone, and sat down.

"You hurt her feelings very much, Vic," she said reproachfully. "You know how sensitive she is."

"She'll survive," Vic said. "Great Scott, what's one stand-up more or less? Take her to the movies and she'll forget all about it."

Mrs. Millikan picked at her dinner morosely. It had been a difficult day at the office—so many decisions to make, and she was so uncertain about all of them. The biggest one she had put off until tomorrow, and it itched at her now with a nagging insistence. And to top it off there was this trouble with Lola. What on earth could she do about Lola? The girl was in a constant turmoil of emotion. Maybe it would be a good idea to take her out to a movie. Besides, Mrs. Millikan sighed, she needed a little relaxation herself. Somewhat relieved by the thought of a few hours' surcease in the dark of the movie house, she finished her dinner with appetite.

When she wiped her mouth and put her napkin down, Almie was already stacking

"I GOT the RECIPE for beyootiful baby skin"

To make baby look 'good enough to eat'

"Here's the recipe. Sprinkle mild, soothin' Mennen Antiseptic Baby Powder on baby's skin every day, for smoother, lovelier skin, 'glowin' with health'. Mennen is smoothest. It's antiseptic—helps prevent diaper rash, urine irritation, many other troubles. Here's why it's best . . .

1. More baby specialists prefer Mennen Antiseptic Baby Powder than any other; they know best that Mennen Powder keeps baby's skin healthier, lovelier.*
2. Mennen is smoothest—shown in microscopic tests of leading baby powders. Mennen powder is "cloud-spun" for extra smoothness—means extra comfort.
3. Makes baby smell so sweet . . . new, mild, flower-fresh scent!

*According to surveys

MORE BABY SPECIALISTS PREFER MENNEN ANTISEPTIC BABY POWDER THAN ANY OTHER*

4 TIMES AS MANY DOCTORS PREFER MENNEN ANTISEPTIC BABY OIL AS ANY OTHER*

Twin Blessings for Baby— MENNEN

*Nationwide surveys

Also, MENNEN ANTISEPTIC BABY OIL is preferred by more Doctors, Hospitals, Nurses than any other. MENNEN Baby Oil is antiseptic, has helped millions of babies to have smoother, healthier skin . . . to be lovelier, happier babies!

BURLINGAME PUBLIC LIBRARY

THE YANKEE SHOEMAKERS

This seal, stamped in every pair of Little Yankee Shoes, is your assurance of quality.

ACCEPTED

and approved by parents, merchants and shoe experts as one of AMERICA'S GREAT BRANDS OF CHILDREN'S SHOES

FROM the very beginning it has been the goal of The Yankee Shoemakers to build the finest children's shoe famed New England craftsmanship could produce. LITTLE YANKEES have been tested on thousands of little feet as well as in scientific laboratories and have lived up to our finest expectations. Combining good looks with rugged wear, LITTLE YANKEES are made of top-quality leathers, on specially designed lasts which provide ample "growing room" and assure perfect comfort and foot health. These four important features are found in every pair of LITTLE YANKEES: (1) Correct heel flare for proper balance. (2) Correct proportion at toe, ball and instep. (3) Correct arch support and strength. (4) Counters with firm base, flexible top. Sizes: 4½-8 (infants)—8½-12 and 12½-3 (children). Priced from $4 to $6, depending on size. Expertly fitted at better grade dealers or write us for information on nearest source.

Yankee Teens too!

Big sisters of LITTLE YANKEES are these "Smart Shoes for Teen Age Girls." Now making their debut, and beauties, every pair!

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF DEFECTIVE OR NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

COMMENDED PARENTS MAGAZINE CONSUMER SERVICE

LITTLE YANKEE Shoes

"GREAT SHOES FOR LITTLE AMERICANS"

[Send for free comic booklet, "Little Yankees Who Grew Up to Be Great Americans."] The Yankee Shoemakers, Division of the Sam Smith Shoe Company, Newmarket, N. H.

the dishes onto the silver tray. Mrs. Millikan thought fleetingly of making some favorable comment on the dinner, but didn't. You mustn't spoil them.

"Almie," she said instead, "I'm going to take Miss Lola out to a movie. Will you please see that Johnny gets to bed soon?"

Almie stopped what she was doing and smoothed her hair back from her face with a proud gesture. "I was aimin' to speak to you ——" she began, undecided in her mind whether or not to offer to stay on until eleven o'clock with Johnny so Mrs. Millikan could still go to her movie.

But they were interrupted by Johnny. Johnny had got up from his chair, and with his book clutched to his chest he advanced upon his mother. "You said you would read to me," he said fiercely, and the tears began to run down his face. "You said you would read to me!" he shouted. He took the book and hit his mother twice with it, once on the shoulder and once a glancing blow on the face. He screamed, "You said you would read to me." And then he ran off into a corner and threw himself down on the floor behind a chair, crying and banging the floor with his fists.

Mrs. Millikan's face went white. "Dear heaven," she whispered. "Where did he get that nasty temper?"

"Oh, leave the kid alone," Vic said easily. "He'll survive."

Mrs. Millikan cleared her throat nervously. "Johnny, I want you to come here and apologize to your mother."

Johnny sobbed and banged the floor again and again and again. Almie could see his skinny, spindly legs sticking out from behind the chair, and she watched them, fascinated.

"Come here, Johnny," Mrs. Millikan repeated, but without conviction. She didn't expect him to listen to her. Somehow she could never seem to reach him. She tried a different tack. "Aren't you ashamed of yourself, Johnny?" she said. "Aren't you ashamed to act like a baby when your mommy works so hard? And your sister Lola is having so much trouble? Why don't you stop acting silly and get up like a big boy?" Her voice took on a wheedling tone. "You know I read to you lots of other times, and tonight when I'm so tired and I want to sit quietly in a movie, you should be ashamed to make so much trouble. Try to think how mommy feels, Johnny!" She got up and went over to him. "Now I want you to get up and say good night to me like a good boy."

JOHNNY felt her near him and he dug his face into the carpet. "Get away from me," he said in a muffled voice. "Get away!" And he kicked out viciously at her with his foot.

Mrs. Millikan swallowed painfully and turned to Almie. "Will you get him into bed?" she entreated helplessly.

Almie wrenched her eyes away from Johnny's legs and started for the door with her tray. "Yes, ma'am," she said briefly. She backed through the swinging door, put the tray down on the table and fumbled in her pocket for a handkerchief. Finding none, she wiped her nose with her apron.

Sam was sitting with his feet up on the kitchen table, chewing a toothpick. He got up now and came over to Almie. "Why, sugar," he crooned at her. "Is them tears i yo' pretty eyes?"

She pushed him aside and went into the room. The handkerchief she sought was i her purse, all right—but she saw in a flas that something else was missing. Almie throat closed up. Curse him. Curse hin Everything was so bad, so rotten. She cam back into the kitchen, breathing shakily, an took savage hold of the back of Sam's nec as she might have grabbed a hated cat.

"YOU took my money!" she said throug her teeth. "You slime! You scum! Yo took it again!" She was out of breath nov because Sam was struggling against her. An she was trembling. A deep inner sickness wa making her stomach feel weak as wate while only her hands had the brittle strengt to clutch Sam's neck and continue to shak him. "I'll smash your head," she hissed.

"What did he do?" Johnny asked, pullin at her skirt.

Her hands fell away from Sam's neck an stricken, she looked down into Johnny tear-stained face. Sh thought, That chi been through too mu this one day. And no he see me acting like she-wolf. Little suffe ing baby. It was minute before sh could use her voic Then she said husk ily, "He a rascal. B Sam's a rasca Johnny boy. But I punish him goo then he be's all right She turned her bac on Sam, and takin Johnny by the han she led him back in the dining room. Th others had left.

They found h book, cleared a spa on the table and dre two chairs togethe Then, with the boo propped against th sugar bowl, Almie b gan haltingly to rea Johnny wiped his no occasionally on th back of his fist. H eyes were dry no and bright with inte est. He leaned again Almie, and from tim to time he sniffed, b softly, in order not disturb the readin Almie read on a on until the very e of the book. Then s gave Johnny a ba and got him into b Just before she tucked the blanket under, s took Johnny by the neck and gave him playful shake. "Dis what I do to bad boys she said, with a make-believe scowl. Th she tickled his thin ribs, and when he giggl and squirmed down on the bed she took a vantage of the moment to whisk the blank firmly around him and under the mattre Then she tousled his hair softly, put out t light, and left him. Johnny's eyes follow her out of sight, and then he continu to watch the empty doorway until he cou control his eyelids no longer and he slept.

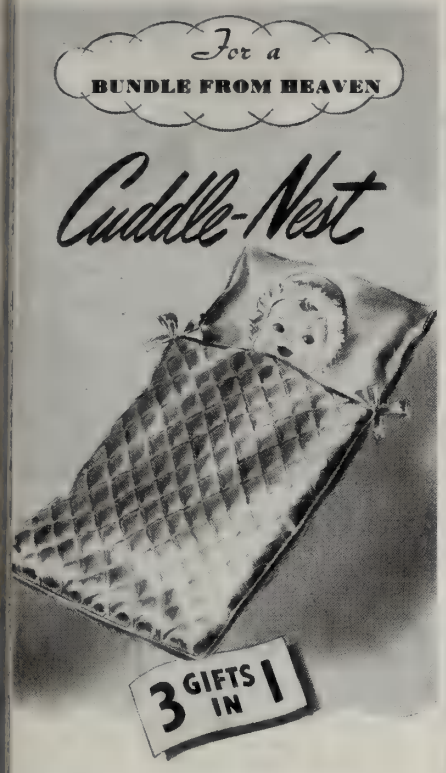
Almie passed silently through the kitch where Sam, with drooping shoulders and hangdog look, was washing the dishes. S continued on into her room and stood fo moment by her bed, rubbing one forea vaguely with the other hand. Then s opened her valise and unpacked it aga meanwhile muttering, "Almie Peal, you o big fool! You one sucker!"



The next morning there were pancakes f breakfast. Johnny crowed with delight. M Millikan loved pancakes, too, but she kn better than to say so. It just shows you, s thought, with satisfaction, you've got to ma them toe the mark. It's the only language th understand.

First Rain

BY JANET WEINBERGER

This is the first rain these young buds have known:
Let us claw through the earth, still seeds;
There is a drumming overhead.
Long fingers pelt the shoots;
The weeds are flattened down.
I wish the rain would stoop and touch me in this bed!
The new buds strain on tiptoe toward the sky;
Our seeds are bursting now,
The light cracks through.
A whole world here to cleanse and beautify:
I nudge the earth and tremble with the dew!

The rain swims down in silence,
Its hunger mouths the way;
The darkening earth lies tremulous and bare.
In quiet motion thirsty tendrils sway:
We shift the soil and prick the living air
And will dissolve, rise into the rain,
Startle the sun, when there is sun again!

PAD, PILLOW AND QUILTED COVERLET

With dainty, quilted rayon satin cover in baby pink, blue, or white. Kantwet's easy-to-wash wetproof lining keeps a little newcomer socially acceptable. Ideal for going calling, travel by car or train, or rides in baby's own buggy.

$4.95 AT LEADING STORES

A "KANTWET" PRODUCT

Use Q-TIPS double-tipped swabs for smoother, lovelier make-up! Apply cosmetics with one cotton tip, blend with the other. Get thrilling effects quickly—without waste, without soiling fingers—NOW!

PKG.

STERILIZED
Q-TIPS
Double-tipped SWABS
Tested beauty hints in pamphlet
Q-TIPS, INC., NEW YORK

The smartest looking youngsters wear

DE LIS fashions!

Outfit your Infants and Children the DE LIS way by Mail . . . It's as convenient and simple as sitting in an arm-chair!

Our brand new Spring and Summer catalog is out . . . with a gay, charming selection of modestly priced clothes for the crib-crowd to the roller-skating gang . . . and so beautifully illustrated that you and the young fry will read it like a book!

For your free copy, write to: DE LIS FASHIONS, 218 Chartres, New Orleans 16, Louisiana. Dept. M86

MATERNITY DRESSES! Write for Catalog

Spring Styles

Smart, youthful styles for Morning, Street, or Afternoon. Also Maternity Corsets & Lingerie.

CRAWFORD'S · Dept. A · 1233 Balt. Ave., Kansas City, Mo.

LEARNING TO LIVE

(Continued from Page 25)

fifteen years. The students represent almost every vocation, and range from doctors of philosophy to people who did not finish grammar school. They are not reading the books for credit, but for education.

Adult education is necessarily part-time education, except for the unemployed. Only 8 per cent, or 625,000, of the men in the armed forces expected to continue full-time education, when the Army Service Forces made a recent survey. Closer to 20 per cent hoped to go to school part time, but the ASF reports that this demand is heavily vocational. If the veterans can get jobs, they won't want either full-time or vocational schooling. But, whether or not they get the jobs, the problem of leisure in large quantities will confront them, as it will the entire adult population. Liberal education should be offered to every grown American, regardless of his ability to pay or his previous schooling.

With the spare time that is about to descend on us, we might well, as a nation, hasten to imitate the Scandinavian residential system of adul' education. Some of the greatest books that every American ought to read are, unfortunately, long, and an uninterrupted period of concentration is required to read them well. The Scandinavian system, running for four or five winter months when the northern farmer has little to do, was originated in Denmark by Bishop Grundtvig a century ago to enable grown men and women from the farms to renew the education which ended for most of them with the eighth grade. There are a few summer residential programs in our country, but the work deals primarily with vocational interests or current events.

Music takes up the thread that language drops. —SIDNEY LANIER.

The problem of transplanting the Danish system into an urban, industrial nation is a hard one. It is not insoluble if we can be made to understand that a worker who has something more than his work to look forward to may be more productive in nine or ten months than he now is in eleven and a half. With technology forcing longer vacations on us, as the weather forces them on the Scandinavian farmers, our adults should be able to go to school for two, or even three, months a year, taking their families with them.

At last we know that we do not know enough. We are no longer smug. And we know we have got to begin to learn in a hurry. Liberal education enables a man to know himself and his world and what to do with both of them. It is education for freedom and the education that a free man has to have. As it was the only education that made intelligible the age of the slingshot, so it is the only education that will make intelligible the age of the atom.

"THE WORLD IS OURS"

(Continued from Page 182)

puts Griff to bed when he gets home from work. On Saturdays, Georgie markets for the week, when Bob can drive her to the store and load up on staples. The Feeneys tried eating in Oak Ridge restaurants, and think the food varies from mediocre to awful. Georgie quotes the old Tennessee saying, "Nothin' is pizen if cooked in enough grease," as an ominous description of what to expect.

For a girl who couldn't even bake a potato, she herself has turned out to be a superb cook and efficient manager. As a friend of Bob's once said, "When Georgie meets up with a new situation, she not only takes the bull by the horns, but tosses it over her left shoulder for luck."

"MUMMY DEAR YOU'RE A SWEETHEART"

"YOU'VE THOUGHT OF EVERYTHING. I've got the swellest nursery that ever was. Cute pictures on my walls to amuse me. Wide shelves for my toys. A nice low chair so you can hold me easily. I just love my Whitney Crib. It's so good-looking and so comfy. I 'preciate the four level spring it has, 'cause it makes it so easy for you to dress or change me. Neither of us get tired or cross. Yet when I sleep I'm way down in my crib, perfectly safe. And what would you do without the chifforobe and chest to hold all my clothes! I guess we both think my nursery is about perfect, don't we?"

YOUR BABY'S NURSERY IS FUN TO PLAN. Gay and light. With everything for your darling's good health, comfort and happiness. Planned to make baby care easy for you. You'll want a Whitney Crib of smart design, sturdily made and beautifully finished. A matching chifforobe with deep diaper drawer and a long drawer for extra fleecy blankets. A chest of the same design will be another lovely piece and grand storage space for tiny underthings, sweaters, creepers or rompers.

You'll find Whitney Cribs and Nursery Furniture at your favorite store. Send for free descriptive leaflet. Address F A. Whitney Carriage Company, Dept. L-4, Leominster, Massachusetts.

Photograph courtesy G. Fox, Hartford, Conn.

The illustration shows Whitney Crib (6808) with matching chifforobe (6907) and chest (6906). Finished in blond.

Whitney
CRIBS
JUVENILE FURNITURE · HAMPERS
BABY CARRIAGES

F. A. WHITNEY CARRIAGE COMPANY • Since 1858 • LEOMINSTER, MASS.

Effa Brown says:

(Author: Designs for Living)

TO KEEP YOUR CHILD IN FAVORABLE LIGHT

DON'T

let the lighting in his room leave your child's favorite spot in shadow.

DO

give him a special, low floor lamp equipped with a diffusing bowl to eliminate glare. If you can't find such a lamp, cut down a discarded floor lamp to about four feet.

Send For This colorful, 16-page booklet by Effa Brown. Full of bright ideas for lighting your home. Address Sylvania Electric Products Inc., Dept. 634, 500 Fifth Avenue, New York 18, N. Y.

AND FOR THE BEST LIGHT IN SIGHT USE SYLVANIA ELECTRIC LIGHT BULBS AND FLUORESCENT LAMPS

SYLVANIA ELECTRIC

MAKERS OF THE WORLD-FAMOUS SYLVANIA RADIO TUBES

© 1946 Sylvania Electric Products Inc.

In budgeting their money, the Feeneys' one fixed rule has been to buy two $100 War Bonds every month, out of Bob's salary. For a wedding present, Bob's father gave them $1000, but Bob is fiercely independent, and wants to finance his own three years of postgraduate work at Yale. He would like to teach part time while he's working for his doctor's degree in engineering, after leaving Oak Ridge this summer. Eventually, he hopes to become a consultant engineer for some big industrial firm. Right now he grins tolerantly as Georgie hatches fearful and wonderful plans for making extra money while he's in school. "She wants us to board widowers' children and chaperon rich students on conducted tours of Europe," he explains. On the mild side, Georgie wants to take some education courses at Yale and open a nursery school there. The Feeneys are thinking seriously of buying one of the recently vacated prefabricated houses in Oak Ridge, now for sale at $800, and carting it along with them when they leave Tennessee, so they'll be sure of having a place to live. Georgie's father, being in the lumber business, would furnish a truck for this venture.

When you sit in on one of these Feeney planning sessions, you feel a gust of their enthusiasm as certainly as if it were a spring breeze rustling the curtains. And Georgie tells you radiantly, "We'll never bother making a lot of money, because we've got so much living to do."

OH, MY ACHING STOMACH

(Continued from Page 175)

so-called high teas, remain events that support as rational the hope that, if only British interest can be aroused, other meals could be improved.

The conservatism of the British housewife manifests itself in many small preferences for old ways. It is not cost but habit that denies her apple corers, string-bean slicers, stove salt-and-pepper sets. She does not apparently share her American opposite number's fondness for gadgets and kitchen aids. Even in so trifling a matter as matched measuring spoons for quarter, half, full and double amounts, the British housewife before the war tended to pass up this inexpensive and routine convenience and in imitation of her mom and grandmom used her thumb to measure salt or sugar.

To the extent that "novelty" entered the British kitchen during the war, it seems to have been a novelty in cold rather than hot foods. Sandwich making was a grievous challenge under rationing. We encountered cold mashed-potato sandwiches (chopped parsley and a little salt added) and also a cold soybean-flour spread in which thyme, sage, marjoram, salt, pepper and water played a part. Kippers (always fairly abundant) and various other forms of smoked fish were constantly employed as sandwich fillers. All this presented to the mind a picture of excessively "dry" luncheons badly in need of liquids to wash them down.

Potatoes were Britain's best-advertised and most government-expertized dietary item, literally the cornerstone of their whole survival program. Admired, recommended, ballyhooed, advertised as perhaps no vegetable in history, the potato became the great substitute for ordinary flour, the one dependable source of vitamin C in the British wartime diet. Potatoes yielded twice the calories per acre as wheat, and were therefore of the highest patriotic priority. "Fill up on potatoes rather than bread" was a prime government slogan. They could be utilized to stretch out almost anything—cookies, cakes, soups, casseroles, meat-meager stews, puddings, biscuits and what-have-you. The Ministry of Food bore down heavily on —Latin Proverb.

A plan which cannot be altered is a bad plan from its inception.

Babies Go For Evenflo

"America's Most Popular Nurser!"

Babies instinctively take to Evenflo because it nurses naturally and they can finish their bottles without struggling to get food. A pinhole valve in the Evenflo Nipple admits air as food is withdrawn, thus eliminating the vacuum. Mothers like Evenflo for its better nursing action and also because the self-contained unit saves time and is easier to use.

Complete Evenflo Nursers are 25c at baby shops, drug and dept. stores. Separate nipple, bottle or cap 10c each.

Unsightly HAIR OFF FACE ... LIPS ... ARMS ... LEGS

Ugly hair made me miserable. I tried many things . . . even razors. Finally I developed a unique, effective, easy way ...painless, inexpensive. You, too, may win beauty, happiness. Write for FREE Book "What I did About Superfluous Hair"; also TRIAL OFFER.

MME. ANNETTE LANZETTE
Box 4040, Merchandise Mart, Dept. 309 Chicago, Ill.

You can attach Cash's Names to anything with Cash's NO-SO Cement—25c a tube.

YOU PREFERRED THEM IN THE SERVICE!

In civilian life, too, the preferred method of marking clothes and other belongings is with

CASH'S
WOVEN* Names

Economical, permanent, positive identification and protection for all your things. Insist on Cash's at your Dept. Store, or write us.

CASH'S 76 Chestnut St., So. Norwalk, Conn., or 6227 So. Gramercy Place, Los Angeles 44, Calif., or 56 Gray Street, Belleville, Ont.

MATERNITY STYLE BOOK FREE

LANE BRYANT
Maternity clothes enable you to dress stylishly during all stages of your maternity period—and after baby comes as well.

Designed to conceal your condition and to provide ample room for expansion.

Latest styles in Dresses and Corsets. Also apparel for baby. Send the coupon today for your FREE Book.

Lane Bryant
DEPT. 5-D • 752 E. MARKET ST.
INDIANAPOLIS 17, IND.

Mail FREE Maternity Style Book in plain wrapper. (5-D)
Name.....
Address.....
Town.....State.....

ater respect for the potato. The domestic-ence tutors delighted in inventorying the wnright versatility of the spud. It was the arhead of their great proposed reforms British cooking. Potatoes could be used lieu of cooking fats. As a substitute for rtening, potatoes made up into a sort of cuit that was pronounced delicious by the thorities, provided such biscuits were con-ned piping hot directly from the oven fore they could cool off. (Cold, they de-loped the firmness of set cement.) Even hocolate pudding" made with ten tableonfuls of raw shredded potato was invated by the government's experimental chens. This concoction called for one lespoon of flour, two of cocoa, two of any d of jam, a pint of water-added powdered lk, a sprinkling of nutmeg and two hours the oven.

Tens of thousands of pounds of tax money re spent to advertise the potato in Britain build up its social standing, to enumerate manifold virtues and variations. But itish cooking habits were not easily anged. The potato, we can testify, conues habitually neglected, abused or taken granted. There are still only two stand-d British methods of handling it. The tato is either boiled to disintegration and ered as "veg" with e meat, if any, of e meal; or, alter-tively, it is sliced d saturated in a k-making synthetic ease to form the overbial "chips" to company fish.

In the West End staurant famous ough to be known name to millions of nericans we encounred potatoes peeled ce round their cir-mference and then mmersed, un-rubbed, in water to il. The boiling, the washed jackets, the en ridges all com-ned to permeate out one third of ch potato with good ack British earth nattractive dirt to mericans) so that oilage was considable. The British explanation of this and milar kitchen-spoiled servings was always,
Oh, they're short of staff, you know." ranted. But Britain was also short of od, and even an amateur statistician uld add up dirt-seeped potatoes in ousands of British restaurants twice a ay into considerable tons of sheerly uncessary garbage.

WHERE the potato was intelligently preared, or where an element of novelty was oted, it was invariably a case of either anagement or chef being non-British. So was with potatoes tinted green to join the ustere postwar hors-d'oeuvres tray. That as in a Greek establishment in Soho.
'omme lyonnaise and pomme boulangere
ere encountered two or three times in Lon-on restaurants under French and Belgian uspices.

Nor did we discover much visible evidence hat the ministry had succeeded any better n making the British public salad-conscious.
British salad is not, on the whole, one of he great experiences of a reasonably disriminating palate. British tomatoes are tunted for lack of sunshine to make them rge and fat. The lettuce is apt to be frayed nd beaten. Radishes, cucumbers and other arden products help a lot if anybody is imginative enough to include them. A decent alad dressing would help still more. The rim fact is that the missing ingredient in British salads (and American often enough!)
s artistry.

Actually tomatoes have become, as the esult of the long-continued war shortages, prime delicacy in Britain. They are apt to be presented as a main course rather than as part of a salad. Broiled tomatoes take the place of eggs at breakfast or—happily—of Brussels sprouts at luncheon. Women have apparently queued up more avidly for tomatoes than for any other vegetable. A friend told us of watching such a tomato queue, blocks long, during the era of the doodle-bug bombs (V-1). On this particular afternoon they could all hear very distinctly a succession of German aerial valentines passing overhead. Finally one motor cut out quite close. That meant that the bomb would fall in a matter of seconds somewhere in the district. All eyes were turned skyward, all nerves tensed for the explosion. But—this was my friend's point—nobody left the tomato queue. When the bomb exploded a couple of streets away some women were knocked down by the blast, but picked themselves up and moved steadily forward for their tomatoes.

THE shell egg, as such, is undoubtedly Britain's most consistently short edible. One a month is a matter of luck. Hence everybody is extremely egg-minded, and a gift from a country friend of two or three extra—and unbelievable—shell eggs will really dissolve British calm. Once possessed of the precious eggs, they proceed to boil them, of course.

Meanwhile British nostalgia for roast beef and a decent helping of it is overwhelming.

The British sigh for oranges, lemons, limes, strawberries. Although not ordinarily drinkers of cow's milk, they are sufficiently calcium-starved to envy the babies who get the full supply. A crushing yen for sweets that are really sweet (they get three quarters of a pound of candy each month) and for the right to an occasional second serving of almost anything (except potatoes) is everywhere apparent. And the need for fats is obvious. One tablespoon of butter a week, two of lard, four of margarine do not go far. A week's rations when laid out upon a table is a forebodingly picayune array of nothing in particular.

Baking powder, which is used sparingly in the United States, strikes the observant American visitor as much too prominent in British recipes. For example, in a cottage-pudding recipe, to eight ounces of flour four teaspoons of baking powder were specified. This is to "make more" by excessive rising and to substitute for other missing items. Cornstarches, rices, tapiocas cannot be had, of course.

Gastronomic horrors are, of course, not unknown in the U.S.A., and soda mints sell well among us. Nor are there lacking true devotees of fine cooking in Britain. One British couple of our acquaintance amused and tortured themselves during the grim days of 1943 and 1944 by reading aloud recipes from an American cookbook, said recipes being composed entirely of ingredients quite unavailable in Britain. Nor is it probably fair to discount the campaigns of the Ministry of Food to commend to the attention of their incorrigible constituents the—to untraveled Britons perhaps unbelievable—"delicate flavor of well-cooked vegetables." In the fullness of time the ministry's labors may pay off. But just now in our gaunt dedication to truth we are obliged to report our findings. With every admiration for the British character and with a low-bowing salaam to the British war record, we still find the British race, in the aggregate, ravenously hungry but spiritually dead to cooking.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Choice

BY LENORE WARREN

Let others take the high road,
The low road or the far—
But I will take the side road
Where apple blossoms are.

Let others take the long road,
The short road or the straight,
But I will take the winding road
Where honeysuckles wait.

Let others take the smooth road
Or the rough road as they will,
But I will take the lonely road
Where you tend daffodil.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

You'll turn all heads!

You'll be the proudest mother in the baby parade . . . your precious offspring will roll down the avenue in the style of a five-star general . . . when you ride him out in his magnificent new THAYER FOLDING COACH.

There's more than beauty in its gleaming aluminum chassis. There's an amazing lightness and ease of handling that has to be tried to be believed! Lightness and beauty are combined with super-safety in all Thayer models, in aluminum or steel. And the ingenious Body Stabilizer banishes bumps and sidesway, too.

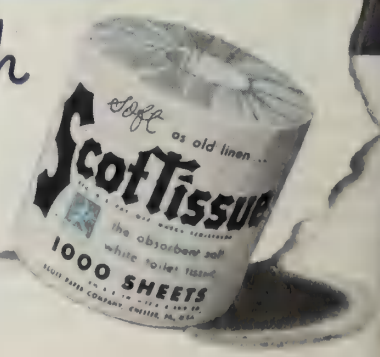
Add Thayer's other famous features . . . the Feather-Touch* Adjustable Back Rest, instantly changeable for three-way baby comfort . . . the big semi-pneumatic rubber-tired bicycle-type wheels with self-oiling, non-squeak bearings . . . safety brakes . . . adjustable aluminum push-handles . . . luxurious upholstery . . . lovely two-tone colors . . . and you have the world's last word in baby comfort, safety and maternal pride!

See these new beauties at your favorite dealer. And write us for your "PRIMER FOR PARENTS". It's helpful, amusing and free. Thayer Company, Dept. LH-61, Gardner, Massachusetts.

*Patented

Thayer



FOLDING COACH
NOW IN ALUMINUM

The Greatest Name in CARRIAGES, HIGH CHAIRS, STROLLERS, TODDLERS

Mothers find Gentleness and Strength ideally combined in Scottissue

Young America Gives Books

UNDER THE GUIDANCE OF PARENTS AND TEACHERS, OUR CHILDREN CAN HELP TO ANSWER THE NEEDS OF YOUNG EUROPE

American children, well stocked with educational materials in comparison with Europe's youngsters, send Treasure Chests of books overseas in an attempt to share their advantages.

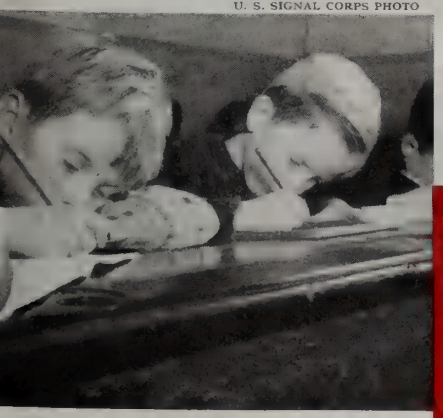
MARTIN



THOMAS KWANG

The lack of adequate equipment and educational facilities is a serious handicap to the learning of pupils in China.

BRITISH OFFICIAL PHOTO

Children in Holland might prefer reading stories or painting pictures to digging among ruins left by Nazi invaders.

U. S. SIGNAL CORPS PHOTO

Youngsters in France hold on to pencils with more possessiveness than candy sticks. Not every child can own one.

BY ELSIE JOHNS

"I LOVE you like a warm oven," said the little Jugoslav boy to the teacher who handed him the gift of American school children, "and I love you like a pair of shoes and a real bed. I have never had these things, but only they can tell my love for this storybook."

The empty desks of Europe are being filled. Into the waiting minds of the young who must soon work to preserve peace goes food: food for thought. During the present year at least eighteen thousand chests of books, pencils, crayons and magazine clippings will be sent by our children to those across the seas whose hope of educational guidance and cultural stimulus has been burned out from under them.

The voluntary group which sponsors the gathering and forwarding of these "Treasure Chests" is the year-old Book Committee of the Woman's Council for Post War Europe.* "If we carry this far enough," say the sponsors, "we, in our small way, may be of some aid in preventing World War III. The Nazi children turned on their hosts after the last war, but they had already been indoctrinated. Those whom we can reach today are the sons and daughters of our Allies; and the time to reach them is now."

Under the leadership of parents' groups, teachers and librarians, our own more fortunate youth is answering the need of young Europe. And in answering, they are learning to know their scattered brothers and sisters as people very much like themselves. In the letters of thanks our children may read from the pen of Hans what life is like today in Holland, suffering from the flooding of its fields. Or how things are going with Lu Chin Tao, the seven-year-old math wizard at the Yu Tsai School for Gifted Children just outside Chungking. Or perhaps the letter comes from the Philippines and tells young Americans about Manuel Reyes, whose family was bayoneted to death when the Japs entered Manila. And in like manner our children tell the others of themselves. "We want you to realize," wrote one little girl, "that in the United States the streets are not paved with gold." Another one said, "This is a picture of my grandmother. Does she remind you of anyone you ever saw?" A third wrote, "It takes a lot of money to pay our rent. How do you pay yours?", and added in a postscript, "How do you dress? I wear a beanie and sweaters."

A child in a metropolitan area, who had been taught in the public schools by a Chinese teacher, sent a book of verses for inclusion in a Treasure Chest going to Chungking. In the scrapbook he wrote, "I wish this chest had eyes and ears so that it could report to me on its trip to you." In a scrapbook destined for Warsaw children, a Kansas boy wrote, "Our state's motto is 'To the stars through difficulties.' We want you boys and girls in Poland to know that we in America have had difficulties too. So we can sympathize with you and be glad you are rising above yours. We want to reach the stars together with you."

The question which has been raised is: Why send books in English rather than in the native tongue of each country? The Book Committee answers that today all faces are turned toward America, and those who cannot come here say that they wish to read about us. This they do with the aid of dictionaries which are slipped into every book box. The popularity of our G. I.'s and the social acceptance with which they have been met in widespread occupied lands is another reason why it seems desirable to these foreign children to learn at least basic English.

That the committee is slowly reaching its global objective, making friends for America in every country that has felt Axis oppression, is indicated by what happened in an Italian city not long ago. A G. I. of Italian parentage came upon a little girl carrying a copy of The Five Chinese Brothers. He read on the flyleaf, "From the Robbins School, Trenton, New Jersey, U.S.A." It was his alma mater. His letter home told of the child's reaction. After he had told her the story in Italian and then helped her to translate it, a few sentences at a time, she said, "Why is it that someone in America I do not even know sends me this beautiful book?"

"Because they like you," he answered. "They want you to be their friend."

*Headquarters: 366 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

WIDE WORLD

Bundles of American equipment were sent abroad to follow around the blitzed-out children of England. Classes were ever on the move, Pied-Piper style.

U. S. SIGNAL CORPS PHOTO

American school children offer Europe's youngsters textbooks, clipping collections and magazines—food for thought.

"My mom says your mom needs a trip to the Singer Sewing Center!"

To be perfectly frank about it, both mother and offspring could do with a little assistance from that famous place, the local Singer Sewing Center.

Here, in one comfortable spot, they'll find a raft of things they need . . . lessons in making clothes; dress accessories; and finish-up services done by Singer.

No other place in town offers so much specialized help in sewing, or so many sewing conveniences. You'll find, too, that the Singer experts in charge are friendly and cheerful—glad to help with any problem, little or big.

Look at the timesavers and services here, and then come see all of them at your Sewing Center—soon!

Sewing Lessons. Let our experts show you the secrets of a good fitting job. Or how to perk up your home with new slip covers. Home Dressmaking or Home Decorating Lessons, $1.50 each. Complete course $10.

Gifts for Easter. See our collection, fresh and pretty as spring itself. We have lots of sewing boxes in gay patterns . . . beautiful scarves . . . flowers and dress accessories to choose from.

We make buttonholes and cover buttons—any number, any size. We also do hemstitching, picoting, belt covering, and other finish-up chores. Prices are low, service prompt.

Tricks in trims. Add color to a summer frock with bands of peasant braid. Or smarten up your bedroom spreads and curtains with fresh, sweet eyelet ruffles. We have trims, notions galore.

Sewing Stool with tray top. A wonderful place to keep attachments and supplies. Stool and removable tray, $11.50 up. Attachments and supplies at additional charge, according to your needs.

Sweet cover-ups. Tie on one of these charmers when the doorbell catches you in an old frock. The two shown are from a wide selection of hostess and kitchen aprons, from $1.00 up.

Cut dressmaking time in half. Order a Singer Form molded to your figure—a marvelous duplicate of you, exclusive with Singer. Complete with adjustable stand, only $19.75.

For your protection: Singer continues its policy of selling machines only through Sewing Centers identified by the Red "S" on the window, and never through department stores or other outlets.

Sewing machines have changed a lot in the 90 years Singer has been making them. But there is one thing that has never changed . . . the long years of faithful service you get from any Singer. Shown above is Singer's handsome modern desk combination . . . a machine to be proud of as long as you live. (Check address of your local Singer Shop in phone book—Singer Sewing Machine Co.)

SINGER SEWING MACHINE COMPANY

Copyright U. S. A. 1943, 1945, 1946, by The Singer Manufacturing Co. All rights reserved for all countries

ONE MORE SPRING for a favorite suit

Make a cotton vestee with standing collar—for black, navy or gray suit. 2260.

Buy Ida Kraines' new checked surah gilet with the Dandy collar—to change a suit.

Add a dickey with a trim little collar, pocket flaps and belt—complete transformation.

n shirt of wool or rayon jersey, gingham ar and cuffs; for suit or separate skirt.

Order patterns by number, 5 cents for each pattern, from the JOURNAL Reference Library, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

DRAWINGS BY REYNALDO LUZA

r printed halter adds color to a suit, or can vorn as a separate dinner blouse. 2261.

BESTFORM

Girdles
Brassieres
All-in-ones

no finer fit at any price

BRASSIERES 79¢ to $1.50

FOUNDATIONS $2.50 to $6.50

KING* SIZE billfolds for women

They've become standard accessories with busy women, these b-i-g good-looking billfolds. So spacious, yet so smart. This one is $3.00 plus tax . . . other styles at various prices. King FINE Leathers of Indiana, Pa.

*TRADEMARK. COPYRIGHT 1946.

America's own fragrance—

ROSES-AND-SPICE

SCENT IN SEQUENCE always yours:

Toilet Water 4 oz. 1.00†—8 oz. 1.75† Body Sachet 1.00†

Tablet Sachet 6 tablets 1.00† Dusting Powder 1.00†

Talcum 3½ oz. .50†—10 oz. 1.00† Bath Salts 1.00†

Soap 3 cakes for 1.00 Perfume ¼ oz. 2.50†

Each a Shulton Original

SHULTON

Rockefeller Center ▪ New York

America is the Story of Individual Achievement

†Plus Tax Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.*

A MATTER OF STYLE

(Continued from Page 41)

And we swarmed around her then. This was different. This was as if the wrapping was off the package and it was good inside. Because we love horses, June and I. More than almost anything.

We have two of our own. Misty, who is mine and gray and a little speckled now because she is old and we have had her so many years. But she is full of life still and can jump high and wide and takes care of me cross country when the going is rough. She has big and very soft eyes and she beams when she sees me, and bobs her head. Misty I love. And Spring Folly, who is June's horse and about fifteen hands high, just a bit larger than Misty, and part Arab and very stylish in a dark and dappled gray. Springy we trained from a colt, June and I. She can leap anything.

"Sure, we'll teach you," we both said. "You can ride dad's hunter, Blazing. You'll love him." And it all seemed so much better and Chris so much nicer and not so remote. Just because she liked horses.

"If she likes horses," I said as we went downstairs, "she must be all right. And—she'll like Jimmy."

June did not agree with that. "Listen," she said, "liking horses is just one thing. Just one. Jimmy doesn't care about dressing up or clothes or stuff like that. Jimmy isn't her type. You wait and see."

"Maybe not," I said, "but we'll find out."

In a day or so we took her over to Jimmy's.

Jimmy Roberts is a very special person. He is our best friend. He had been away for three years until a month ago. He flew a fighter plane. His house is only half a mile from us, a small and very old house where he lives with his father and mother. Every day he goes to town now, but evenings and week ends we are over there usually. Because he really likes to see us, and talks to us as if we were his own age and does the things that we like to do. Which are mostly horses.

JIMMY has three horses, and they had been waiting for him while he was away, and he broke them to ride, and schooled them, and we helped him. He is very quiet and easy and has a smile that takes a little while to come, especially since he got back, but that is bright all through him when it does break free.

I wanted Jimmy to like Chris, somehow. I don't know why. It was just a feeling that I had.

Chris was all right on Blazing. She fitted him. Except that her clothes were—well, sort of different. Sort of good in a shop and not so good in the country. Gray-blue whipcord jodhpurs and a coat that matched, very tailored, and a colored stock, which we do not care much for, and she sat pretty far back in the saddle and her feet weren't under her. But we helped her some and by the time we got to Jimmy's she began to relax.

Jimmy was there as usual—down by the low shingled stables. He had on boots with tan tops that were worn almost through inside the calves, and those breeches that he liked so much and wouldn't throw away even if they were patched some and faded almost white. He said they fitted. And a blue shirt open at the neck, and that crisp curly hair of his.

"Hi," I said, and he put down the saddle he was cleaning, and came over. He was quite tall and moved with that strong drawly walk that people who ride horses often have.

June introduced him to Chris and he nodded with just enough smile, his brown eyes taking in everything about her in one glance—those dressy clothes and the way she sat her horse and her feet wrong in the stirrups. He wasn't going to like her. I was sure.

Then he surprised me.

"Like to see the livestock?" he said to Chris, after a few minutes. And he never said that—not unless he liked a person. And liked them very much. It meant something when he said that.

New Freedom

FOR ACTIVE WOMEN!

Individually Yours by Dutchess

Pynpoints are "Individually Yours" to every active woman. Fine count "Dixie Durene" mercerized cotton . . . with the super-absorbency of a thirsty kitten lapping milk. Healthful, chafe-protecting, figure-hugging. You'll appreciate Pynpoints' caressing texture . . . cool comfort . . . body-in-action fit. Tights, briefs, bras . . . in pure all-purpose white.

Bra, About 65¢ Tights and Briefs, About 75¢

At all good stores or write

DUTCHESS UNDERWEAR CORP.

Empire State Bldg. ▪ New York 1, N. Y.

Dutchess PYNPOINTS

Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

He brought out Maygate first. Maygate, lean and trim and whippy Thoroughbred o breathed at you quick through her nose little snorts. Maygate was fine, but she s not the tops. And then Triumph, the iser, with heavy bone and the power ough his shoulders and hindquarters that ld lift you over big fences when the going s heavy. Triumph wasn't a girl's horse. ris didn't say much. And then he brought t The Lark—The Meadowlark, her full me was—and she was Jimmy's pride and , his heart almost.

Her education had been broken off when nmy went to war, but he had started to rk with her again, to perfect her form and nping. She had everything—grace and wer and a disposition that could be trigger-rfect or trigger-terrible—and she was rip-ng burnished gold with all the looks and the bloom and all the temperament that nt with champions. Someday, someday on, she would be it—the tops.

And then Chris spoke. "She moves like etry," she said very softly, "smooth and ong and very, very beautiful. The sort at takes some time to know and really un-rstand, but that is orth understand-g."

She said it almost herself, but Jimmy ard and the look at went toward her, ward Chris, was ry keen and lin-red on her face with st a trace of smile at was proud and derstanding—as if liked what he saw d heard.

When we started me he turned to hris. "Would you de with me," he id, "some morning on?"

And Chris nodded. I'd love to," she id.

All the way back e talked to her about immy.

"Jimmy has his wn ideas about raining and school-g horses," June ex-lained. "He believes n being very calm nd very patient, and ever asking them to lo anything that they ren't up to. So that hey will really want o jump and run, and will have a good time n the hunt field—just as good as their rider. They have fun with Jimmy."

"Does he ride them in shows?" Chris asked.

I frowned. "Jimmy doesn't care much for horse shows at that," I told her. "His horses aren't show hunters—they're real field workers."

"What do you mean?" Chris said. "I love horse shows."

I tried to explain. It was very important. "Sure, they're all right," I said, "but some people keep and train their hunters just to win ribbons in front of crowds and to perform in rings and short outside jump courses. Like," I said, turning to June, "like Mr. Chatfield. You don't know him," to Chris, "but he has a lot of very expensive horses and he wins a great deal with them at shows, but he isn't so good in the hunt field. Jimmy is always up front. Jimmy is first-flight. There's—there's a difference." I felt sort of helpless, as if I couldn't explain any better. So did June.

And Chris said "Oh." That was all. She didn't understand.

The next morning, Sunday, at nine o'clock, there was a call from the drive. I tore out. Jimmy was there. Jimmy riding The Lark and leading Maygate. Jimmy all neat and combed, for him, but with that old tweed jacket that he always wore and a tie that had got up under an ear.

"Hiya," he said, almost sheepish. "That cousin of yours around?"

"She—she's just getting up," I said.

"Well, ask her if she'd like to ride," Jimmy said.

I tore in and up, scattering rugs. I pounded on Chris's door.

"O-o-oh, yes," she said sleepily. "All right. If he can wait a little while."

"He'll wait," I said quite positively.

When she came down they rode off, she and Jimmy, just the two of them. Side by side. It looked nice.

It was nice all through the next week, when he took her riding several more times and to the movies Saturday night. Everything was nice until Sunday. Sunday we had a tea. And Allen Chatfield was there.

We hate teas, June and I. It means having Mrs. O'Mulligan in, and making a great many sandwiches, and not having much dinner because mother is busy, and it means picking up all over the house and not riding because we will smell and cleaning our nails several times and having to pass things. Passing things isn't so bad. That way you can hear things that you never would without a tray of sandwiches for a passport.

We were nearly dressed when Chris came into our room. She looked super. She had on a dress that was soft wool and colored like cherries, ripe cherries, and it made her blond hair seem almost white and her lips very red, and there were two tiny little ear clips of flowers. I didn't blame Jimmy.

And then she did a very nice thing for us. She fixed June's hair so that it made all the difference and made June linger pleasantly in front of the mirror, and she put just a dab or two of powder on my nose, and a flower in my hair. "Now you'll have every man on his knees," she said, and it was more her bothering to do it and the way she did it, as if she really liked us and wasn't posing. She could be so nice.

Jimmy was almost the first to arrive. He had on gray flannels and a blue button-down shirt and his hair was wet from the comb and his face had that clean scrubbed tan. He and Chris looked very fine standing there together. Her smile was bright up to his, and they talked in a corner as if they knew each other pretty well and had things to laugh about together.

And then Allen Chatfield came in. Allen Chatfield is very brushed handsome and most everybody likes him. He is about thirty, I guess, and lives in a tremendous and trimmed place and he has the most marvelous things and gives famous parties. His factories made something essential in the war, and made it very well, my father says. Everything he has is the very best and kept up the very best. He has a lot of people to keep them up for him, even during the war. He has a cruising sailboat and a big mahogany speedboat that you surf-ride behind, and he has the kind of cars that zoom and are always show-window clean. And his horses.

Boy, those horses! He brings them from Ireland and England and even one from France, and he has two men that work on them all the time. The whole stable is superswank with a thick bed of rye straw all over the whole floor. It is something. And his

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

April Wisdom

By Eleanor Alletta Chaffee

I had my pride. I said to myself, this only
Will be a shield, shining and pert and brittle.
I polished it when the evenings, long and lonely,
Swept gray hands over the sill. I used to whittle
A blade to carry, fitted to my hand.
How could I know that Love, who wears no sword,
Whose step is softer than shadow laid on sand,
Would shatter my weapon with a careless word?
How could I tell that pride is cold and late
When April looks through the window, and the wind
With Love beside him, rattles the swinging gate
To call the heart that follows, lost and blind?

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Glitter! Sparkle!

CHEN YU FIREFLY

THE NEW NAIL LACQUER AND LIPSTICK SHADE

Glitter is exciting. . .so are you in "firefly"

"Firefly" is something entirely new in color. A singing scarlet! Elegant, yes! Flattering, oh! so flattering—no matter what your complexion type may be—but, with an enchantment on nails and lips that red has never had before. A never-quite-still, elusive firefly something that says "I am here—I am there—I am almost beyond reach—I am extra lovely today—tonight." And, of course, "Firefly" is genuine CHEN YU which means it glitters—it sparkles an extra long, long time!

Firefly Smart Set (Lacquer, Lacquerol, Lipstick) $1.75

The Lipstick, $1.00

The Lacquer (with Lacquerol) 75c

Ironing never was a pleasure—

BUT HERE'S THE WAY TO MAKE IT EASY!

Let's face it ladies..ironing day offers no pleasant thrill regardless of your pride in the home..but why not try this new scientific way for finer, easier laundering? We are confident you will find that one trial of the Silex Duolectric Steam Iron will convince you how more and more women cut ironing time in half..keep fatigue to a minimum.. and have time for happy living besides.

* * *

Husbands..if you are tired of having exasperating things done to your pet slacks that shouldn't happen to a dog..just make with the check book, and maybe the little woman will welcome her Silex Steam Iron enough to give 'em a once lightly over now and then, that'll turn them out looking like they've had a Waldorf valet's practised hand.

Send for our FREE booklet "The Secrets of French Hand Laundering"..it not only tells you how to dry iron finer looking laundry but gives you detailed instructions for using steam to preserve the soft beauty, the subtle color of synthetic fabrics of today..The best way to iron them wrinkle free..without sticking or scorching.. Address The Silex Co., Dept. 15, Hartford, Conn.... In Canada, St. Johns, P. Q.

SILEX

Trade Mark Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Steam Iron

ribbons—he has cases and cases of blue ribbons that he has won in shows all over the country. He sits very well on a horse, only perhaps a little heavy.

When he came through the door into our house everybody sort of stopped talking and turned, because he is that kind of person. The wives got very, very animated and the ones with good smiles turned them on full blast. Allen saw us first, June and me.

"Well, here we are," he said, very jovial, and he picked me up and held me high and I felt a little silly. He is very strong and stocky and his clothes pour over him and he always makes me feel that when he is talking to me he is thinking what he will say to the next person. "How are the ponies?" he said. "Getting them schooled up for the Armory Show?" and we just grinned and he put me down and then he saw Chris.

For a second he quit smiling and just looked at her. And then—he was back smiling again and working around through the crowd. It was five minutes before my mother introduced him to Chris. It would have been sooner, but Jimmy went out on the sun porch with her. I grabbed a tray of sandwiches. This I had to hear.

"—— wish I'd known you were coming on from California," Allen was saying when I got there. Chris was between him and Jimmy on a bamboo settee. "I flew back only a week or so ago."

And Chris looked at him with that sparkle in her eyes that said he was exciting. And he was. I passed them the sandwiches three times in about four minutes, and the last time Allen was a little short with me. I went into the other room. Allen was going strong. And Jimmy was just sitting there examining a blister on his hand and not looking very happy.

"Give them some cakes," I said to June, "and hurry." She hurried. "What was he saying?" I asked, waiting for her.

"He was talking about riding. About the Armory Show," June said.

I went in with salted nuts. Allen was just turning to Jimmy. "You're riding at the Armory, aren't you, Jim?" he said.

Jimmy shook his head. "My stuff doesn't do too well at shows," he said.

Allen Chatfield laughed. "Nonsense," he said. "Better take them in—experience be good for them."

But Jimmy just grinned.

After a while I saw him get up and wander out of the sun porch. Chris was talking to Allen Chatfield and didn't seem to see him go. Later on June said that Allen was taking Chris to dinner and the theater Tuesday night. Jimmy went home about six. His car had a bad rattle in it. I thought it was a punk tea. And the next few weeks were punker.

THE only nice thing was Chris with us. She was always bringing home some little thing from Detros—just a tiny ornament to wear on your coat, or a charm for a bracelet, or a package of my father's favorite tobacco. She liked to do it. We liked it too. Some nights she would come into our room when June and I were ready for bed, and tell us about the store and mimic some of the funny customers. She was swell. The only trouble was that she went out with Allen Chatfield all the time.

Usually it was two or three times a week, and always Saturday nights. I let him in sometimes, and he wore a dinner jacket and a red carnation and he looked marvelous. Chris had a steady stream of new evening dresses and her cheeks were very red and her eyes bright with excitement. She got a big thrill out of the places they went and dressing up and being seen and all. She told us she did.

In one minute you can fly 13,610 yards. In a minute you can drive 10,819 yards. By hydroplane you can cover 4157 yards; by toboggan, 2758 yards. You can fall 19,200 yards, or you can steam at sea 1080 yards—in a minute. You can cycle 948 yards; run 482 yards; row 287 yards; walk 274 yards; swim 103 yards. In sixty seconds you can breathe 410 cubic inches of air and circulate 14 pounds, ten ounces of blood. You can speak 150 words clearly, write from 30 to 40 words, in a minute. And, in case you're interested, you can be knocked out six times—all in a minute. —MAGAZET.

Jimmy phoned Chris quite a lot—he certainly wasn't giving up easily—but it did not do him a great deal of good. Oh, they went to the movies some, and Chris seemed glad to see him always, but she was usually already signed up with Allen. Allen was a chain dater I guess. He tried for every free second of Chris' time.

About the fifth week June and I rode over to see Jimmy. We wanted to find out about something. He was not whistling so much these days, Jimmy wasn't. We sat around for a while, down by the stables, and then I said:

"Allen Chatfield is giving Chris a big rush, isn't he?"

Jimmy nodded. He did not say anything.

JUNE was going to ask him the big question, but it took her a little while to get her courage up. Finally she did.

"Are you in love with her?" she said. Her voice changed key in the middle of the question, and it was a hard one to ask. Probably it was none of our business, but Jimmy didn't get mad.

He just plucked away at a piece of straw, and looked on out across through the twilight. It was minutes before he spoke. At last, "Well, you're pals of mine," he said. "Why shouldn't I tell you?" He looked at us. "I guess I am," he said. He smiled a little twisted. "To date it doesn't seem to have done me much good, though, does it." He wasn't asking us a question. He was just telling us. And there didn't seem to be anything that we could say, June or I.

Except that, for some reason, I had the feeling that, down underneath, Chris was the sort of person who ought to like Jimmy more than she did Allen Chatfield. That he was more her style, really and honestly, than Allen Chatfield was.

Allen Chatfield was exciting and he took her to wonderful places and he was very, very successful and I suppose it was all very flattering to Chris. But somehow I couldn't stop the thought that he was the kind of man who would be successful and come out first no matter what he had to do to manage it. I told that to June on the way home. We were feeling very miserable. And she agreed with me.

"The only thing is," she said, and she is pretty smart sometimes, "we just think that. We don't know it. I wish that there were some way we could prove it—to Chris." Only, what was that way?

And then there came that evening when Jimmy and Allen were both at our house. That was a most important evening.

Jimmy had a date with her that night, and they were deciding what to do when the bell rang. It was Allen. When he saw Jimmy he grinned and said:

"Aha, just in time, I see. I dropped by to ask you if you'd sit in my box at the Armory Show, Chris, and root for me in the hunter classes."

Chris said she thought that would be wonderful, but just what was the Armory Show?

"Well," Allen said, "it's the biggest thing we have in a horse way around here. Pretty big time. The Armory is a huge place and a horse can really move and jump going on there. It's almost like a hunt field, isn't it, Jim?"

Jimmy grinned that quiet grin, only he didn't agree. "It's good," he admitted, "but not like real cross-country going."

Allen Chatfield frowned. "You're really not going into it?" he said. "Thought you had something pretty nice in that Meadowlark mare."

Jimmy got up. "I have," he said. "I think she's about the best working hunter I've ever seen. Or will be before long."

Chatfield grinned—and it seemed sort of a clever grin to me. "Well," he said, "if you

Sheer Genius!

NYRALON*

Flexees new miracle fabric

Check your dreams at the door, please. For Flexees combines nylon and rayon...into Nyralon ...the fantasy fabric come true. It's softer, it's stronger, it's lighter. And it's a wonderful feeling to know the greater comfort, the longer wear... the sheer genius of Nyralon!

* TRADE MARK APP. FOR

Flexees for FIGURE BEAUTY

FLEXAIRE BRAS: $1 to $5
FLEXEES GIRDLES & COMBINATIONS: $5.95 to $25

think she's that good, I'd just bet you a hundred, two to one, that my Avalanche horse can beat her."

"Where?" Jimmy said. "In the field?"

Allen frowned. "I mean at the Armory," he said. He looked at Chris. "After all, a horse that can leap can leap anywhere. Or should."

That wasn't true and I knew it. But Chris didn't. That was the trouble—Chris didn't know anything about it. "Oh, come on, Jimmy," she said. "I think it would be exciting. A real competition. Don't be a bum sport."

Jimmy looked at her for a second, as if he were going to explain some things to her—and I hoped and prayed that he would. But—he didn't. He hesitated, and then he turned to Allen.

"O.K.," he said very quietly, "I'll take that bet—Avalanche against The Lark. Only, even money. No odds." And they shook hands. And Allen Chatfield seemed very, very pleased.

The next morning we were over at Jimmy's early, June and I.

"What did you go and do that for?" June said to him. "You know his horses are show jumpers and he has those two men to school them for that every day. They're really jumpers—not hunters like The Lark. He'll beat you, Jimmy. I think it was silly."

Jimmy looked a little faded. But he grinned. "I guess you're right," he said. "Maybe a fellow gets into some foolish things when—but never mind. Maybe I was just fed up. Besides"—and his grin came out stronger—"besides, The Lark might fool them all. You never can tell."

And so we came up to the night of the Armory Show and, boy, was that important. How important June and I never did guess, beforehand.

We had never been to the Armory Show, June and I, because it was at night. But this time the whole town of Kitasset had heard about the bet, and my father and mother were excited especially and there wasn't much argument about our going. It was in the bag.

We got there early. My hands were clammy and I churned inside. There had never been anything like this before. It was so serious.

The Armory has a great huge dirt floor—longer than a football field and half as wide—and the seats are built high all around it and, that night, the boxes were flag-draped and the judges were in evening clothes and there was a band and just about everybody in the world was there. It was thronged. People that my father and mother kept bowing to, and a man with thin legs and a kind of long horn that he blew to announce the classes, and millions of horses that were just gleaming. Just simply perfect. Only June and I did not want to stay sitting in our box.

We wanted to get out back where the horses were stabled, and see them get ready, and talk to Jimmy. That was the place—out back. We were in the box next to Allen Chatfield, and Chris was there, and Allen had on his hunting pink and a top hat and his breeches were a very lovely cream and he looked perfect. And very nervous. So we watched our chance, June and I, and when nobody had their eye on us, we ducked out and headed for the stalls. It was a lucky thing we did. Maybe the most lucky.

Because first we found Jimmy, and he was sitting on his tack box behind The Lark's stall, and he looked very fine too. He looked finer than Allen. He had on his pink, and it sort of belonged on him and it wasn't as if he had put it on for a look in the mirror. And he had a velvet cap. Allen couldn't wear a cap. Jimmy was a whip in the Hunt, and he had a right.

"Hiya," he said, grinning. "How's my claque?" which we didn't know what that meant, and we just looked at The Lark.

She was a little nervous, because this was her first show, but she had a bloom, a gleam, and when Jimmy spoke to her she relaxed. She knew him. He was her friend. And then I wanted to look somewhere else. I wanted to see Avalanche.

Fashion Frocks

CHARMINGLY DIFFERENT

Yes, and in a wide selection of styles . . . designs . . . patterns . . . It's a rub-your-eyes-hard-to-believe dream come true to have such dream-dresses come to you in all their glory and in all the varied glorious styles and designs. With Fashion Frocks so close to your home you can forget all about the store-scouring scurrying that proves so discouraging. Remember, Fashion Frocks comes to you and with the kind of fashions you want and at prices you like. Write Fashion Frocks, Inc., Dept. J2, Cincinnati 25, O.

WELCOME THE FASHION FROCKS' REPRESENTATIVE WHEN SHE CALLS

How to make a dress other women admire

Start with the proper "tools"... a good pattern, a fine fabric and the know-how to put them together. Then—for a completely professional look—finish the placket with the Talon slide fastener. It's a sure way to avoid a bumpy, amateurish closure . . . to make a placket that clings as flatteringly as the fabric itself. And thanks to its patented bridge top-stop there are no accidental slip-downs—no sticking at the top when you're in a hurry. Yet with all this, the Talon placket fastener is inexpensive to buy . . . easy to apply. Just follow the instructions in the distinctive blue package.

FOR SKIRT PLACKETS
Look for the sturdy, self-locking Talon fastener in the ROSE package.

FOR NECKLINES
Choose the dainty, easy-to-operate Talon fastener in the ORANGE package.

"TALON" The Quality Slide Fastener
Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. Talon, Inc.
AT NOTION COUNTERS EVERYWHERE

We found him. He was in a great box stall, knee deep in straw, and those two grooms of Allen Chatfield's were standing there near him and whenever they moved he ducked back into his stall and his eyes bugged a bit and he whistled. He was scared. The grooms nodded at us.

"Think he's ready?" one of them said, half to us and half to the other groom. We just sort of shrugged. We weren't saying anything. "Well," the groom said, and he winked at the other one, "he's ready all right. You can bet on that. The boss saw to it—personally."

And just then Avalanche moved a little so that the light was right, and I saw something. I nudged June. And she saw it and she started to say something and then she clapped her hand over her mouth and we went away. Fast.

"What made him that way?" I said to June. I felt like crying. I felt shaky all over.

"I don't know," June said, walking very fast, "but I think I've got an idea and I'm going to find out. Tomorrow."

"Why tomorrow?" I said. "What do you mean? I want ——"

"Listen," June said—she is pretty smart—"just you let me handle this. It will be better that way. Honest it will. I promise you." And I had to let it be that way. But I didn't understand. I felt awful.

We went back to our box and sat in the back and didn't say a word. And finally Chris leaned over the rail and said, "What's the matter, kids? Something wrong?" And we just shook our heads.

Something was, but nothing we could tell her about.

And finally the working-hunter class came in. The big one. For us. And for Jimmy. There were a lot of good horses in the working-hunter class. But the jumps were tough. They really were. They were the right kind of jumps, the kind you would find in a hunting field—post-and-rail and a coop and a real brush or Aiken, and a gate, a big gate. They were all a stiff four feet or better, and a horse had to really work. We knew. And there wasn't a horse, until Allen Chatfield came in on Avalanche, that did a perfect job. There was something wrong with all of them. And then he went around.

That was a good horse, that Avalanche, and I loved to look at him. He was big and bay, and his mane was tight in six little braids with yarn, and he had the conformation and the way of going. Except that he moved as if he were afraid—in quick jerky starts, with his ears flicking front and back, and not loose and right and normal. But he could leap.

It is a question in marriage, to my feeling, not of creating a quick community of spirit by tearing down and destroying all boundaries, but rather a good marriage is that in which each appoints the other guardian of his solitude, and shows him this confidence, the greatest in his power to bestow. A togetherness between two people is an impossibility, and where it seems, nevertheless, to exist, it is a narrowing, a reciprocal agreement which robs either one party or both of his fullest freedom and development. But, once the realization is accepted that even between the closest human beings infinite distances continue to exist, a wonderful living side by side can grow up, if they succeed in loving the distance between them which makes it possible for each to see the other whole and against a wide sky!

From Letters of Rainer Maria Rilke, 1892–1910, translated by Jane Bannard Greene and M. D. Herter Norton. (W. W. Norton & Co.)

He went around. He came in to them right and he jumped way high and clear—too high and clear. And for some reason, I didn't want to hunt him. Not cross country. Not when you needed a horse who was a partner—a horse who worked and thought with you. I kept thinking of what I had seen—out back. That explained it. But he made a perfect score. He didn't bang a jump. And the two judges made notes on him, and then said a few words together, and I wondered what they were saying. Something that they had noticed.

And then Jimmy came in. On The Lark. Jimmy all right and easy, and The Lark putting her feet down as if she were walking velvet, and her ears up and her eyes taking the whole thing in, everything. The Lark relaxed, but wondering. What was all this—the lights—the crowd—the leaps all so close and so orderly, and no open fields to leap for, to gallop on in? This wasn't the field. This was strange. I knew what she was thinking. And she started around.

She went at just the right pace, controlled speed, and Jimmy's fingers were light on the reins and his legs just tightened to encourage her, and she took the first four, standing back and landing so daintily, and then another coop and the Aiken and then—that in-and-out.

An in-and-out jump is, usually, two post-and-rails about thirty feet apart, and you have to be handy and you have to be quick. And The Lark fumbled it. I don't know why. She didn't come in right. She was still so young and so green. Another year and she'd be in. But she refused the second rails. Just once she refused, but that was enough. Jimmy turned her and brought her at it again and she went over. But she was out. She couldn't win. I almost cried. And June's hands were tight in her lap. Especially when Jimmy went cantering out with his hand patting The Lark's neck, his voice in her ear, encouraging her, with her. It was beautiful. And it was more than beautiful when I thought what we had seen, June and I, out behind.

Allen Chatfield got the blue ribbon, the first. Jimmy was third. Another horse was in there. And the crowd's applause was loud for Allen and I looked at Chris. She was clapping, too, but she was clapping thoughtfully. I didn't think that she looked too happy. But maybe that was just the way I felt.

We went home pretty soon after that. But we didn't sleep much, June and I. We had this thing that tomorrow would decide. This so-important thing.

We were up at seven that next morning, up and on the ponies. But we didn't go to Jimmy's. We went to Allen Chatfield's. No one was at his stables that early, no one except a sleepy stableboy—just what we wanted.

"We can ask him," June said. We went over to him. "Where's your training ring?" June said, and he looked at us. He knew who we were. He didn't know much else—ever.

"You mean the big one or the little one?" he said.

"The little one," June told him.

"Oh, back up through the woods," he said, "through them trees. Only," he thought suddenly, "you ain't supposed to go up there."

We started off. "It's all right," we said, "we know Mr. Chatfield," and we left him burbling over a forkful of hay and not knowing what to do.

Then we found it. We found it, and it was what I had thought we might find. It was there all right. "See," June said, and we sat there on the ponies for a minute almost, and I wondered, then, if having horses was good, or if it wasn't. And I didn't know. It made me feel too queer.

And then we turned the ponies, June and I, and we started back. Back to our house. We had just one idea. We didn't have to tell each other what it was. We both knew. Chris was just getting up when we came to her room.

"Come on," we said, "we want to show you something."

"But," she said, "but I haven't had my coffee. It's so early."

"Never mind," June said. "Put on your riding clothes. This is important." And Chris looked at us and then—she came along. I guess she could see that we meant it—that we were determined.

(Continued on Page 223)

Reconversion . . . to prewar beauty, fit and comfort

It won't be long now until your mirror reflects new compliments to your figure—reconverted by the stretch technique of "Lastex" yarn. Yes, the Miracle Yarn is on its way back—just as fast as its makers and garment manufacturers can manage it. One of these bright days you'll again enjoy "Lastex" yarn not only in foundation garments but also in nearly everything you wear. There will be dresses with flawless fit, shoes that walk with wonderful ease, stockings and undies touched with the same magic. And swim suits blessed with "Lastex" will again make bathing beauties as thick as pebbles on the beach. Yes, from now on you'll see more and more things made with "Lastex" yarn in your favorite stores.

Lastex
Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

THE MIRACLE YARN THAT MAKES THINGS FIT

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY

NEW Vitality STYLES

EVE

DEMURE

REBECCA

HEDY

BERDELL

YOU'RE GLAMOROUS . . .
YOU'RE GLAD-AFOOT . . .

you're Twice as Smart with Vitality SHOES

It's true! You're twice as smart with clever Vitality Shoes for they're smart two ways. Styled with gaiety and designed with a gentle, heel-gripping, comfortable fit. Even more astonishing, these lovely, flexible shoes keep going, day after day, without showing signs of wear. At distinguished stores throughout America.

$6.95

Complete Range of Sizes and Widths
Vitality Open Road Shoes for Outdoor and Campus Wear, $5.50 and $6

Vitality Shoe Company, Division of International Shoe Company, St. Louis, Missouri

(Continued from Page 220)

And we put her on Blazing and he hadn't been brushed but that didn't matter, and we took her over to Allen Chatfield's stables—through the woods and the cool October morning. We didn't say anything to her all the way over. At the stables we got off. The two grooms were there then. They sort of wondered, I guess, but they had to be polite. We went right in and up to Avalanche's stall.

It was bright sunlight then, and when he turned you could see. Just as we had seen the night before at the Armory. We could see the long deep scratches, newly healed, that ran down all the length of the inside of his hind legs—thin narrow scars in even little rows. So deep, so even, that his legs had been cut to ribbons once, and not so long ago. And Chris saw them and her face went white.

"Why," she said, "why, he's been hurt. What did it?" And there was a look on her face that meant a lot to me. It meant a lot because she had said once that she loved horses. And I had thought that she did, and now I knew. That look that comes when people do love animals and when those animals have been hurt. It goes deep, that look. It means a lot. It did to me, and to June.

"We'll show you," we said, and we got on the ponies again and we led Chris up through the woods and to that ring, the little ring. And there were the things that made a horse jump. The things that made him jump, but that left scars—scars on his legs and deeper scars in his mind. Yes, horses have minds. We knew that, June and I.

It was a great thick rail, this thing, and it was covered with canvas stitched tight, and through that canvas had been driven tacks—thousands and thousands of tacks. And not just tiny things, but long and blue and sharp, so that they were a solid pincushion of cutting, biting points—the kind of things that rip and tear; that had made those gashes, deep and red, on Avalanche's legs inside. It wasn't a pretty thing, that rail. It was barbarous. And Chris looked at it, and her eyes were big and wide and horrified.

"What do they do with that?" she said, and her voice was thin.

"They rail him with that," June said. "When he jumps they lift that up under him so that it tears at him. And so that he will always jump high and wide and handsome. And he jumps because he knows that if he doesn't clear it he'll be cut and ripped. So—he always jumps. He always wins. At shows. Because he's scared. And because he has been hurt. So badly."

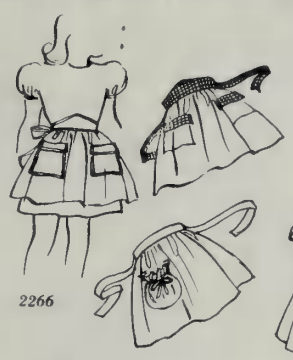
We just stood there then, on the horses. Stood there looking at that rail. There were other things, but the rail was enough. It was the worst. And while we stood there, Chris' hand went out, and she patted Blazing's neck, slowly and very gently, as if she were thinking deep. Up and down, up and down, her hand went. And we were watching, June and I. Looking at her face.

And then I said, "Jimmy'd kill anybody who used a thing like that on The Lark." I said it very quietly. That was all anybody said, but Chris knew. And, after a while, she turned her horse's head and rode off.

We followed her on down through the woods and through some fields and on. Until we came to Jimmy's stable. And he was out there working on The Lark, cleaning her, talking to her, and she was nibbling at him, playing. We rode right up to Jimmy and he didn't hear us until we were close. Then he looked up. And saw Chris. And his face went very red.

"Well," he said, straightening, "come over to console the vanquished?" He made his tone very light, as Jimmy would, but Chris didn't smile. She just looked at him. He had on dungarees and that same blue shirt—he wasn't very smartly turned out. But he looked good to me.

And Chris said, "No," finally, "no, not for that. I—I just came over to see if you would take me riding today. For quite a long ride, Jimmy. Would you?"



Her voice was soft and low, and it made me all goose pimples. I wanted to stay. I thought it was romantic. But June wouldn't let me. June kicked me.

"Come on, you dope," she whispered. And we went on home. Just the two of us. And leaving just the two of them.

Other Views, Sizes and Prices of Journal Apron Patterns on Pages 188 and 189

2262. Apron, glove and pot lifter. Trim with bands or rickrack. Small, medium, large sizes. 15c.

2266. Child's Tie Apron. (For Mother-and-Daughter set.) Sizes 4, 6, 8 and 10 years. 15c.

2265. Dirndl Apron. (For Mother-and-Daughter set.) Small, medium, large sizes. 15c.

2267. Coverall Apron. Trim with rickrack or eyelet ruffles. Sizes 12, 14, 16 and 18 years. 15c.

2263. Apron. With or without bib; trim with rickrack, fruit or flower appliqués. Small, medium, large. 15c.

2264. Party Apron. Round, with ruffles, or square with lace edging. Comes in one size only. 15c.

Order Journal Apron Patterns from the Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania, enclosing 15 cents for each pattern and stating size of each pattern wanted.

Big Excitement in Buttons!

Among the many gay-spirited B.G.E. Originales, the gayest of all are the new Lucites—the "glamor-girls" of buttons! Hand-polished, cut like precious jewels, in warm pastels or icy white . . . they shine with a hundred hidden lights. Be sure to see all the lovely new B.G.E. Originales at your favorite notion or button counter—they're full of fashion ideas!

B·G·E Originales

"Buttons, buckles, and clips in original designs"

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

PRETTY CHANGES

make an old dress new

THINGS TO DO

WITH PRINTS AND CHECKS—

FROM BOWS TO BLOUSES—

TO BRING AN OLD FAVORITE

BACK INTO FASHION

A halter gilet goes over front of a simple long-sleeved dress, ties in back. 2256.

Make neckline bow and matching gloves, 2223. for basic black dress (by Rose Barrack).

Crisscross capelet with hipline bows goes over slim crepe or lightweight wool. 2257.

Cotton drawstring blouse, 2258; and short crisp gloves, 2215—new top for jersey skirt.

Cut off the top of an old print dress; make new crepe or jersey basque and bow. 2259.

Order patterns by number, 5 cents for each pattern, from the JOURNAL Reference Library, Philadelphia 5, Penna.

A Guide to Quality Fashions for the Whole Family

"BOTANY" BRAND

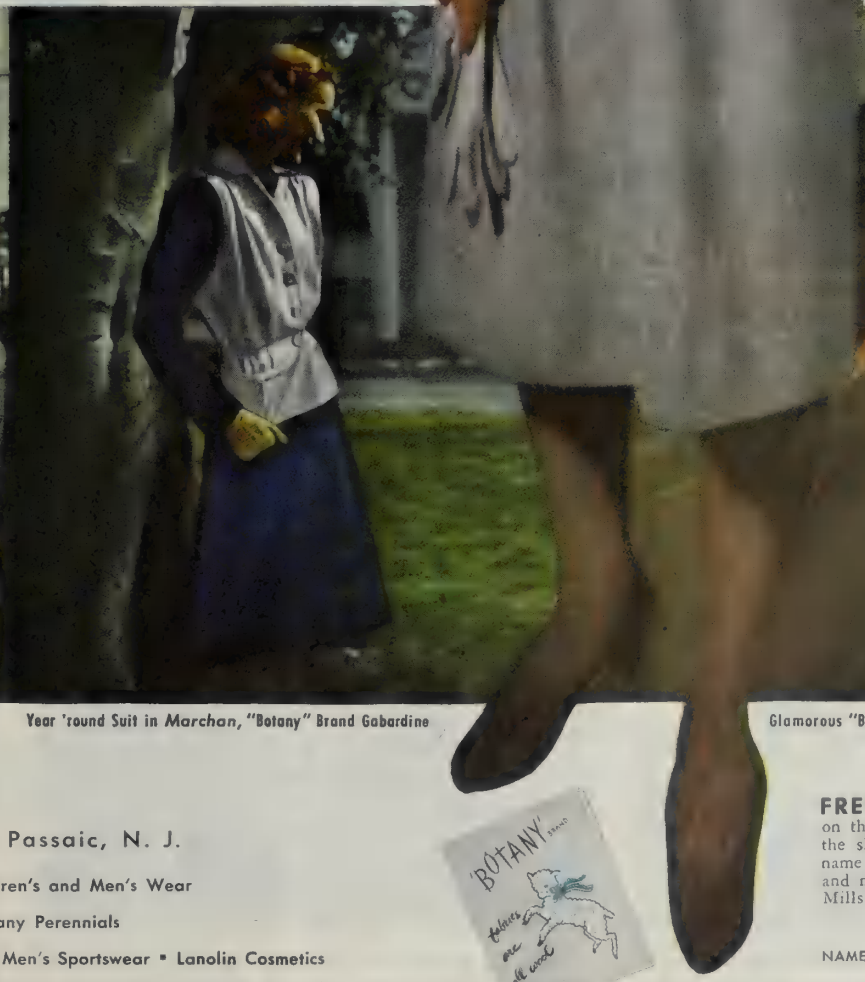
When you see the "Botany" Brand label in the clothes you buy . . . you know that you are getting a fine fabric . . . you know that the garment is style right.



No wonder whole families depend on "Botany" Brand as a quicker, surer way to safe shopping. "Botany" fabrics are all virgin wool. The way they stand up through hard wear and hold their beauty will convince you that in your search for quality The Fabric Comes First

TONI FRISSELL

Favorite Brother and Sister Suits in "Botany" Brand Flannel

Year 'round Suit in Marchan, "Botany" Brand Gabardine

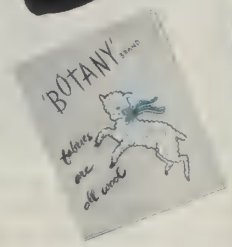
Glamorous "Botany" Brand Flannel—a Junior Dream Dress

BOTANY WORSTED MILLS, Passaic, N. J.



Worsted and Woolens for Women's, Children's and Men's Wear

No-Dye-Lot Knitting Yarns • Botany Perennials

†Certified Fabrics ▪ The Botany Tie, Robe, "500" Suit • Men's Sportswear ▪ Lanolin Cosmetics

†Certified by Botany Laboratories • Copyright 1946 by Botany Worsted Mills

*"BOTANY" is a trade mark of Botany Worsted Mills, registered in the U. S. Patent Office.

Illustrated Booklet on the story of "Botany" Brand Fabrics

FREE: Write for amusing, illustrated booklet on the story of "Botany" Brand Fabrics from the sheep to the finished fashion. Print your name and address below—paste on penny postal and mail to Department S61, Botany Worsted Mills, P. O. Box No. 538, Passaic, N. J.

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ STATE _____

"We tell friends to choose Servel . . . It's always silent!"

says Fred MacMurray star of "SMOKY," a 20th Century-Fox Production

The Fred MacMurrays say, "When we changed our noisy, troublesome old refrigerator for a silent Servel, years ago, we forgot refrigerator worries. For Servel never makes a sound! Never gives any bother! It's so quiet we almost forget it's there. That's why today, when friends ask about choosing a new refrigerator, we say—pick Servel. It really is dependable." If you're choosing a new refrigerator, talk to friends or neighbors who enjoy a Servel right now. They, like the MacMurrays—and 2,000,000 other happy Servel owners—will advise you, "Choose the Servel Gas Refrigerator." For they know from experience, it stays silent, lasts longer.

Not even a whisper! You'll never hear a sound from a Servel Gas Refrigerator. For there are no moving parts in the freezing system to get noisy, wear or need fixing. A tiny gas flame circulates the refrigerant that produces constant cold—silently, efficiently.

You'll be delighted at Servel's extra roominess. Its flexible shelves let you make use of every inch of storage space! And there are correct temperatures for meats, for vegetables, for frozen foods! See the beautiful new models at your Gas Company right now.

Stays silent...lasts longer

Servel

GAS REFRIGERATOR

SERVEL ALL-YEAR GAS AIR CONDITIONER
SERVEL AUTOMATIC GAS WATER HEATER
SERVEL UNIFIED GAS KITCHENS

For Farm and Country homes beyond the gas mains you can get a Servel that runs on Bottled Gas—Tank Gas—or Kerosene. Write for complete details to Servel, Inc., Evansville 20, Indiana; or in Canada, Servel Ltd., 457 King St. W., Toronto 1, Ont.

You drive up to the door or into the garage through the easily kept courtyard. Simplicity and purity of line and form give the house its elegance. Bricks laid with horizontal joints mortared, vertical joints butted, aluminum trim, and full-height doors of heavy clear or frosted glass give its modern design an ultraclean and classical distinction.

PHILIP C. JOHNSON, DESIGNER; HOUSE MODEL BY RAYMOND BARGER STUDIOS; SETTING AND PHOTOGRAPH BY PRATT

Glazed passageways connect the three main blocks of the house: entry and living room center; bedrooms left; kitchen-dining right. Note a bath for each bedroom, and commodious work space and storage in the garage.

A House For a Millionaire With No Servants

★

A SELF-HELP HOUSE DE LUXE, STARRING BEAUTY, AND FEATURING EASE AND CONVENIENCE OF UPKEEP

★ BY RICHARD PRATT
Architectural Editor of the Journal

UP to now in our series of homes for tomorrow, we've kept the question of cost severely in mind. But here in this house we've let the designer consider what could be done if no expense were spared. Only one catch—it had to be a home that could be run without help. Fortunately, modern planning, materials, construction and equipment all conspire to produce not only a house with a high degree of taste, style and elegant simplicity, but reduce daily housework and yearly upkeep to a point that does away entirely with the servant problem. The clean directness of the floor plan indicates a house that is as easily cared for as it is pleasant to live in; for what the plan and the picture reveal is reflected within where the smooth unbroken surfaces of walls, floors, windows, doors offer no awkward corners, crevices, moldings or ledges so difficult to clean. Dusting is reduced to a minimum by the radiant heating which rises from the floor itself with no open ducts or draft-producing radiators, and the fully automatic gas-fired heater is out of sight and out of mind. The luxury, if you want to call it that, of a bath for every bedroom is one the self-helping family for this house can be allowed, along with a living room and dining room-study of really decent dimensions, not to mention a two-car garage with plenty of storage and work space. The work space would, of course, contain the most modern equipment for easing the kitchen and laundry jobs in a room so well arranged and lighted as to make operating there on your own a pleasure.

New Ideas in Cozy Comfort

This beautiful mahogany room is designed to enhance the comfortable charm of apartment living. The corner china . . . drop leaf table . . . and graceful chairs combine in perfect harmony for snug, cozy comfort. The PACIFIC Silver Cloth lining in the server to safeguard silver is exclusive with Drexel.

For gracious living plan your room setting around Drexel masterpieces. There are collections to fit every budget. Each piece is carefully branded "by Drexel." Ask for Drexel by name at leading department and home furnishing stores.

Write for traditional furniture booklet by Drexel. Send 10c for postage to Dept. D.

Drexel
FURNITURE COMPANY
DREXEL • NORTH CAROLINA

by Drexel

THE BRAND MARK OF PERFECTION IN FURNITURE

AMERICA'S LARGEST MANUFACTURER OF QUALITY BEDROOM AND DINING ROOM FURNITURE

TIME ENOUGH

(Continued from Page 21)

Just then a clear voice called, and Jane's sister Ellen came in with a suitcase in one hand, leading a fat girl baby with the other. Ellen had been to the town where her husband's family lived, hunting an apartment. Jane came quickly from the kitchen, embraced her sister and picked up the baby, Trudy, and kissed her and removed her bonnet. Danny and Trudy greeted each other with loud glad cries.

"Hi, Jane," said Ellen. "Hi, sarge!" She kissed Tom. "You look wonderful, you big bruiser," she exclaimed, "and does Danny look like you! Everyone sent their best to you—especially Bill. He wants you to visit us right away. Jane, I got an apartment. The top floor of an old house. It needs DDT and paint and varnish, but we can make it habitable. I'll stay with Bill's family until we get it fixed. Is there plenty of hot water? I've got to wash this morning, iron this afternoon and pack tomorrow, for Bill's coming for us on Saturday. He loves his job. He never was happier. Where's mother?"

The average man is neither as clever as his wife thought he was when they were engaged, nor as much of a dud as she thinks he is now that they are married.

—Dublin Opinion: quoted in Irish Digest.

Jane and Tom laughed at Ellen's excitement.

"I'll go down and see about the hot-water heater," said Tom, and he went to the basement.

Danny followed him, going down the steps one at a time. Jane ran to stop Danny, then changed her mind and listened a moment to the two males talking together in the basement. Danny evidently went for the coalbin like a homing pigeon, but Tom distracted him.

When they came upstairs, Tom took Danny out-of-doors. Jane crushed down the several warning instructions and admonitions that rose to her lips. She washed the breakfast dishes, began preparations for luncheon. She baked a pie and did a lot of thinking. Her mother came in with groceries and put them away. Ellen was in the basement, washing, and Trudy was playing in the back garden.

"No wrecking crew yet?" asked Mrs. Wolcott.

Jane laughed. "Mother, please be patient," she said.

Mrs. Wolcott went down to the basement to get from Ellen details of her new home. In a little while Ellen and Mrs. Wolcott were out-of-doors with Trudy, hanging clothes on the line and talking—the unending interesting and intimate talk that goes on between mothers and daughters all over the world. Jane took her pie from the oven and dropped a tear on the golden crust. It seemed to her that Tom had just set himself to see how difficult he could be. She wondered anxiously where he and Danny were. For one treacherous moment she wished Danny were in the back yard with Trudy and her mother and Ellen. But she suppressed such a thought. Danny had had altogether too much feminine society. He needed his father. She must trust Tom that all would be well!

Meanwhile, Tom and his son walked in the little woods that lay in a triangle between Barberry Lane, the highway and a railroad that intersected both.

Danny was being very good. He sought his father's favor without finesse. Tom felt the strong pull of the boy's attractiveness. They were scolded by a squirrel which ran up and down a tree trunk and flicked its tail at them. Danny's laugh filled the little woods. They found an abandoned snakeskin, and then discovered a big anthill with important-looking ants running around in circles. The anthill made Tom think of an

NESCO enameled ware
stays new longer

NESCO porcelain-on-steel enameled ware is highly resistant to shock and heat. Its glassy smooth surface is practically stainproof. Even after years of daily use it still retains its lovely new whiteness.

NESCO enameled ware
cleans easier

Every woman knows that enameled ware is easier to clean. Food does not stick to its gleaming surface. Corners are rounded and easily accessible. All you need is plain soap and water—and presto!—it's clean.

NESCO enameled ware
is sanitary

Ask any doctor or dentist what kind of ware is preferred for sterilizing instruments in hospital or office. The answer is "Enameled Ware." Why? Because the nonporous porcelain finish has no refuge for germs. Dirt can't hide on its glass-smooth surface.

Look for the new porcelain-on-steel NESCO enameled ware at your dealers. It's worth shopping for—and worth waiting for.

Nesco products include oil ranges, heaters, decorated ware, galvanized ware and porcelain-on-steel enameled ware for all household uses.

National Enameling and Stamping Company, 276 North 12th Street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin —world's largest manufacturers of housewares.

NESCO
porcelain-on-steel enameled ware

Make any room gay this quick, thrifty way

WITH DEX TRADE MARK
Ready-Pasted Borders
FOR PLAIN, PAINTED OR PAPERED WALLS

Just Dip in Water...and Apply!

"Gayday" Pattern No. 6110

"Morning Glory" Pattern No. 6104

- Add a gay touch of color to walls, furniture, cabinets—around doors, windows, mirrors, too!
- 36 beautiful patterns for kitchen, bath, nursery, bed, dining and living rooms.
- Washable, fadeproof, guaranteed to stick.
- Cost as little as 15c per 12-ft. roll.
- At hardware, chain, drug, department and wallpaper stores everywhere.

Another Product of
UNITED WALLPAPER, INC.
Chicago 54, Illinois
COPYRIGHT 1946, UNITED WALLPAPER, INC.

Army encampment and, though he would never have admitted it, he felt a pang of odd nostalgia. Everything in an Army encampment was orderly, explicit. One could depend on procedure. One did not have to deal in intangibles, the moods and vagaries of women and children.

They came to a small pool, and Danny squatted and put his hand down into the water, wetting the wrist of his cotton sweater. Tom watched him, said nothing, wondered what the lad would do. He had often dreamed of just such an hour as this.

Tom Nelson had been a slender, supple boy, who liked to read. He had not cared especially for sports, except tennis. Skill rather than brawn was his forte. But now, after three and a half years of service, he was thick-chested and thick-shouldered. He wore bigger shoes and his face was red from wind and weather, with crow's-feet about his eyes. His voice was stronger, his bearing more truculent. He had authority. He carried himself with assurance and unself-consciousness. He had gone far and seen much and had his mettle tested by fire. The slender, sweet-tempered graceful boy, quick and light of foot and word, that Jane had married was overlaid, buried in the man. Only the quick brown eyes still showed his eagerness and responsiveness. The clothes Jane had saved so carefully were all too small for him. Just as his old attitudes and relationships were too small now.

Tom thought of Ellen's husband—of good old Bill. Bill had been home two months and now had a job. Tom had to find a job. He didn't know just what he wanted to do. He had been working on the local paper, running errands, with some aspirations to be a "journalist," when he went into the Army. That seemed only silly to him now. He had come to the shrewd conclusion that people who were articulate, who could talk and write easily and well, had too much power. They did not always have the sense of responsibility, the restraint that should accompany such influence. They just shot their mouths off, on the radio, in the magazines, and no one said them nay. Even when they didn't know what they were talking about. He had had officers like that. And others who kept still and did their work—men of few words. That was what one could trust! Tom wanted to do something orderly and with method to it. He had a longing to build, to create, after all the destruction. Something that would last, that would be useful.

He wanted both to yield obedience and to exact it, as he had been taught; he wanted obedience from his son, co-operation from Jane. Maybe he wanted obedience from her too!

The thought of Jane came over him strongly. He did not leave the thought of her for long, and had not for years. Yet now she was changed, as he was. She was steadier, gentler, sweeter, more patient. She was all woman now, and his heart throbbed to think of her. She was, if anything, too self-contained. He was not sure what she thought. She offered no resistance, and that did not reassure him. It was not like exacting obedience from a soldier, when one didn't give a hoot what he thought, or whether he thought! What Jane was thinking was of great importance, Tom suspected. But how was he to know what she thought? He had a feeling she was waiting, watching—hoping! But for what? And all the ideas he had evolved about Danny's training! No one asked Tom about those, consulted him, seemed to care. They just went ahead with routine as though it were the only possible method. He had been ridden by his need to make them listen to him, to force their attention—Jane's especially.

Danny had been getting happily wetter every moment, and now he slipped clear into the pool, let out a frightened yell and then went under. Tom stooped quickly and lifted him out of the water and stood him on the bank again. Danny continued to cry loudly.

"Be still!" Tom said. "You're not hurt."

Danny gulped down his sobs and stood looking at his father, water dripping from

(Continued on Page 231)

They're here again
...lovelier than ever!

Once more you can get beautiful Craftspun* Curtains that will give your windows an air of gracious living—make a house a home. The new designs, created by highly skilled craftsmen, are stunning! And there are styles to complement every decorative period.

Craftspun Curtains are a real investment, too. Each curtain is made to prewar standards, of finest 2 and 3-ply cotton yarn, and with that distinctive tied-in-place weave that keeps the size true through repeated washings. Craftspuns are expertly tailored, ready to hang, and many come in 6 standard lengths. See the new Craftspuns at your store now.

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

SCRANTON
CRAFTSPUN Curtains
"THE NET OF THEM ALL"

TO BE CONTINUED...

MAL: Come on, now. You'll have to admit I did a good job for you when I designed that new linen shelf—

MARY: Mmm. It's a beauty. But any linen closet would seem beautiful to me with some new Pepperell Sheets on the shelf!

MAL: Oh, well. Anything that makes you look that happy is OK with me . . .

MARY: Then we're both pleased. You see, I just don't want any other kind of sheets but Pepperells. And so many other women have the same idea—

MAL: But what's so special about those particular sheets?

MARY: Plenty! Pepperells are such practical luxuries, the beautiful sheets with the wear woven in. I can always depend on them to be still lovely after such long wear! That's why I bought some more like our wedding-present Pepperells—

MAL: Could be your smart shopping helps keep our marriage a continued story, pet—

MARY: Oh, Mal, that's my cue to promise I'll never use any other kind of sheets but Pepperell Sheets!

We know the stores don't have all the Pepperells everybody wants, but we're making more as fast as we can. And remember, there's no extra charge for famous Pepperell quality. Keep asking for Pepperell's luxury muslins, carded percales, and Peeress—one of the finest combed percales at any price. Find out for yourself why more women know Pepperell Sheets than any other sheets they can buy! Pepperell Manufacturing Company, Boston, Massachusetts.

Pepperell Sheets are super smooth, extremely long-wearing—finished with fine-stitched hems, Tapered Tape Selvages, "Tellmark" Tabs. Pepperell's factory-sealed carton keeps new sheets clean, ready for bed!

PEPPERELL Sheets

PEPPERELL FABRICS REG U S PAT OFF and Blankets

LADY PEPPERELL • • • DUCHESS • • • COUNTESS • • • ABBOTSFORD

(Continued from Page 229)

his scanty cotton clothing, his face wet and dirty. Tom took out his clean handkerchief and dried Danny's face and had him blow his nose.

"If you lean over water, you'll fall into it," he said. "You must learn not to fall into things. There now! You're all right."

But Tom was bothered. What if Danny had been alone and had fallen into the little pond? Could he have got out? Was the water deep enough to drown him? Would he just have opened his mouth to yell and swallowed or inhaled the water? Tom thrust these thoughts firmly aside. He had seen men who began to figure out what might or could happen—they were always finished when they began to think that way. There was a certain, an exact, amount of precaution, of anticipation, necessary to take care of oneself, to become a veteran. Beyond that one should not anticipate disaster. One should know what could happen, but not expect it! This was what he wanted Danny to learn.

But Tom's sure opinions were blurred nonetheless. He kissed the boy's cheek and Danny reached up his wet arms and put them around his father's neck. For a moment they were clasped together there in the little wood, their cheeks together. Tom picked Danny up to carry him home. All Danny's dismay was gone, and he was cheerful, but very soggy.

When they came within sight of the house Tom put the little boy down to walk. He was sober. He had felt, rather than seen, the many dangers that might already have threatened his son. All these Jane had fended off in her own way. She had not let him get hurt, or lost, or sick. Why, she was a veteran too.

Tom and Danny met Doctor Coble in front of Bellamy's, next door to Mrs. Wolcott's house. Tom asked politely after Mrs. Bellamy, and Coble assured him their neighbor was improving. The doctor stooped and chucked Danny under the chin, laughed when Tom explained that Danny had fallen into the pool in the wood.

"Just like him!" said Doctor Coble.

"What do you mean?" Tom asked. "Have you seen much of Dan?"

"Oh, not too much," said Doctor Coble. "He's never been sick a day. But he's been busy! He swallowed his grandmother's garnet ring last year. That took some X ray and patience. And he fell downstairs twice in one day when he found out how to open the gate at the top of the stairs. He got his foot in a drainpipe in Mrs. Wolcott's basement last spring and it took the fire department, me and a plumber with a blowtorch to get him out. He found a bottle of paint remover in Bellamy's garage and a folder of matches somewhere, and he lit the matches and stuck them into the paint remover until he managed a small explosion. Had some burns on his chest, but they healed right up. That was before they got the new latch on the yard gate. He's just been busy, that's all. . . . Hey, Danny, better not get into that!"

Danny had been trying to unlatch the fastening to Doctor Coble's bag while his father and the doctor were talking, and just then he got it unclasped.

"What's wrong with him?" asked Tom in despair as he pulled the wet little boy away from the bag.

"Wrong with him!" cried the doctor. "Nothing at all! He's perfect! He's just perfectly healthy, unusually bright and constantly inquisitive. Wonderful little boy. They are usually four or five before they can open that bag. But anything mechanical is just duck soup to him. He's got a wonderful mother too!"

"Jane never told me ——"

"Didn't want to worry you—the things always happened quickly and were over quickly. She's very alert, but sometimes he's too fast even for her."

The doctor drove away and Tom and Danny came to their own yard. Danny ran to the gate and tried to open it. Somewhat reluctantly, Tom opened the gate and let Danny into the yard. Wet as he was, he joined Trudy in the sand pile.

They had been gone such a little while, yet somehow Tom felt changed. He propped the gate open. He called to Jane, "Danny fell into the water. He's soaked. Better change him." Jane came at once. Suddenly Tom smiled at her, his brown eyes bright on her face. He said softly, "I'm sorry he got dunked. Please excuse it, Jane."

Jane flushed and she smiled, too, with tremulous self-consciousness.

Tom sat down on the low stone bench to watch his little niece, Trudy. Washing hung across the foot of the garden, obscuring the garage. Trudy came over to him, such a baby creature, compared with Danny. She was just about a year younger and, they had assured him, she was advanced for her age. She walked better, talked better, handled herself better than Danny had at fifteen months. Oh, well, he thought, girls were always precocious. He felt a certain ridiculous jealousy. But she was an appealing baby. The sergeant put out a tentative hand and touched her bright curls.

He had been too long away. He had seen no children but the pitiful beseeching children in foreign lands, their hands out, their mouths crying for treats, their little rag-clad bodies pathetic, children that stirred in a man only a dull pain and anger. Nothing exquisite like this feeling he had now, like that which had come with Danny's cold wet arms around his neck. But Tom was afraid. This was like Jane's fragrance and sweetness, her self-control, her reasonableness. It was the kind of thing a man had dreamed of so long—like starving prisoners who dream of great clean pitchers of foaming sweet milk. Now one hardly knew how to contend with the reality, how to control it. Though he behaved with rigid honor, though all yielded obedience, there were yet nuances, responsibilities, mysteries he could neither define nor answer. There were all the things that had happened which still must be absorbed.

Trudy leaned against his knee. She looked at him with candid searching blue eyes. She was measuring him. Tom held himself quiet under her regard. She seemed satisfied with what she saw, for she put her fat little hand on his and told him graciously, "T'udy loves you." It was said with a great air of com-

(Continued on Page 233)

Deepest Silence

By Robert P. Tristram Coffin

The deepest of the silences
Comes when a wife has gone,
A house becomes a lonely clock
Ticking on and on.

The master of the house takes note
Of every idle thing:
The spider that foretells the thaw,
A mouse, a loop of string.

It is so quiet every crack
In the ceiling cries,
A man comes now to understand
Small language of the flies.

The idleness is weariness,
A knothole grows a beam;
Tomorrow is a bolted door,
A dark returning dream.

And how much stiller are the days
When it grows understood
That the woman's being gone,
The silence, are for good.

Quality's first Name

Three generations of American women have made the name Premier a household word for quality in fine vacuum cleaners. Today, this preference has been multiplied a thousandfold, far over-reaching all present supply. Fortunate indeed is the woman who can get a Premier today at the drop of her pretty hat! But discriminating people are always willing to wait for quality . . . whatever its name. There is no substitute!

PREMIER VACUUM CLEANERS
1700 Ivanhoe Road, Cleveland 10, Ohio

PREMIER
"All that the name implies"

P. S. (Premier Saving) Compare the price of the Premier "21", illustrated, with that of any other top-quality cleaner. Built to give years of trouble-free service—sold by authorized retail stores exclusively.

Woven of hard-twist yarns, with pattern in plush pile, this rug, "Chaleur," comes in five other eye-catching, home-warming colors.

B*eauty* takes the floor again . . . new designs! new textures! new colors!

Wishes are coming true! Happy living . . . friendly rooms . . . and beautiful new rugs again!

What are the new Bigelow rugs like? Colors are fresher and clearer. Textures are more varied. Modern patterns are bigger and bolder. Traditional designs are charming and graceful.

Don't miss seeing them. Each month, as production increases, your choice will be greater. But right now, today, at good department and furniture stores in your town, you can see many of the new Bigelow rugs and carpets.

Priced from about four to twenty dollars a square yard, all Bigelow rugs are made of Lively Wool. You can always tell a Bigelow rug by the blue and gold label and by the name woven in the back. Buy the carpet you know . . . buy Bigelow.

Beauvais 1755 Cassandra 9201 Imperial 5398T Netherwood 26-4628

(Continued from Page 231)

agency and condescension, and an unexpected chuckle broke from Tom. Trudy turned to the sand pile, where she resumed her labor of digging up the sand and throwing it out of the sandbox onto the lawn. Now and then she gave Tom a melting flirtatious little look and he marveled.

Born that way! he told himself, for certainly she could not have learned those wiles in her brief days.

The back door opened and Danny appeared in clean overalls and T shirt.

The sun was warm. Tom could smell Jane's pie cooling on the window sill. The bright October day might be the last of such days. The need which pressed on him to establish change and order all around, and to do it at once, seemed to yield a little. For the first time since he had come home, he felt a sense of time. He had all winter, he reflected, to figure them out, this woman, this son of his. He had his lifetime! He had not felt this way until this very moment. He had felt rather a compelling need to establish his authority, as one did with new troops. Maybe he had better take time first to study what Jane had already done.

Jane came to the back door and called that there was someone to see him. Tom got up and went into the house. Jane gave him a bright look and he hugged her briefly as he passed her. He stopped, turned back, took her in his arms and kissed her.

He said to her, half whispering, "Jane, you're wonderful! You're marvelous. Not just because you've been such a wonderful mother to Danny, but because you're my Jane." He kissed her again. He ruffled her dark hair. He loved her achingly. "I'll never stop being grateful for the wonderful job you've done!"

Major Thompson was sitting in the living room, looking comfortable but still soldierly in old tweeds, and not needing a discharge button to mark him for a veteran. The two men shook hands warmly. They exchanged news, asked after each other.

"What are you going to do, sergeant?" the major asked.

"I don't know, sir. I've been thinking about it all day."

"You know I was a road contractor, and my brother-in-law has kept the business together while I've been gone. We can get all the work we can do at once. We're trying to organize a cadre. We need a couple of bosses for road gangs. We can use you. You handle men to suit me. We'll teach you the work. It's not a lot different from some we did over there. For the present we've got enough work right in this county that you can live at home."

Tom listened. He liked everything about it. He said, "We've saved some money, Jane and I. My wife is a good manager. Would it be possible for me to buy in?"

"I'm sure we can work out something. I'll talk to my brother-in-law. It would be good for you to share in our earnings."

They talked. Danny came in and leaned against Tom's knee. Tom had him shake hands with Major Thompson, and he was proud of the way Danny behaved. Now that he had expressed his gratitude, it grew by leaps and bounds. He called Jane and she came in and asked Tom's old major to stay for luncheon. Tom looked at her in amazement. Her lips were like silk, her eyes like stars, her cheeks bright with color. Tom was deeply moved. He understood a lot of things all at once. He thought:

Why, that's what she's been waiting for! Instead of trying to change everything and put my own will on all of them, I should have been praising her, appreciating her!

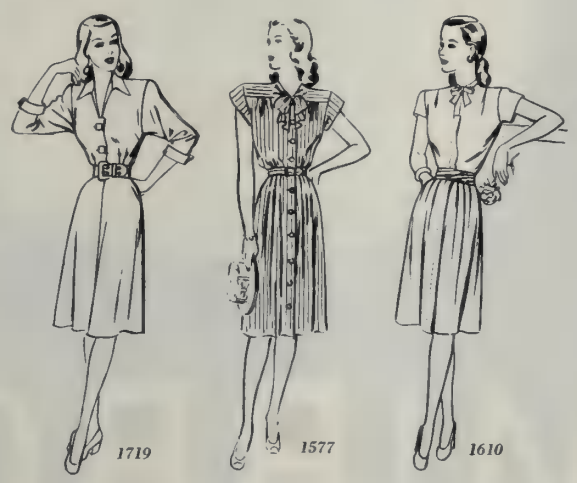
"I smelled a good pie, Mr. Thompson," Tom said—it was time to quit being "sergeant" and "major," he decided. He was full of a sunny pride and ease. He was lighthearted, comforted as he had never been before in his life.

They sat down at the table with the women. But there were three men now: the major, Danny and himself. The luncheon was good, the pie superlative. Stimulated by company, the three women were bright and laughing.

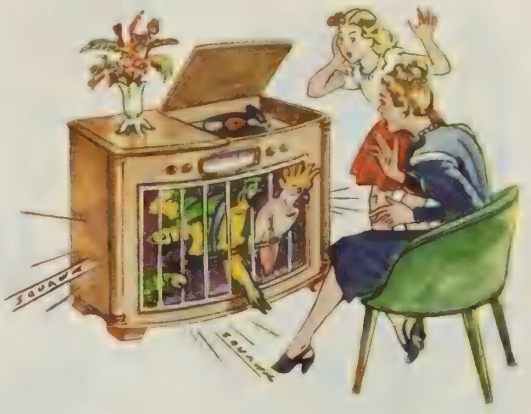
Later, Tom stood on the sidewalk beside Mr. Thompson's car, talking to him. He noticed Danny hanging about. He took his son by the hand.



"Excuse me a minute, sir," he said. "We're not far from the highway. The little fellow is safer in the yard. His mother has a lot to do and she doesn't like to have him running loose." He latched the gate and returned to finish his conversation with the major.

Jane had been watching all this. Nothing wrong with him hard work won't fix, she thought, and nothing wrong with me that love won't take care of. She felt a refreshing sense of time, as he had felt it. She couldn't expect to know him all over again in a day or a night. She was filled with a mysterious élan. An old enchantment came upon her. Smiling, she waited for him to come in and tell her all about it.

Other Views, Sizes and Prices of Hollywood Patterns on Pages 188 and 189



1719. Dress; 12 to 20. 25c.
1577. Dress; 12 to 42. 15c.
1610. Dress; 12 to 20. 25c.
1805. Child's Dress; 4, 6, 8 and 10 years. 15c.
1815. Dress; 10 to 18. 25c.

Buy Hollywood Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, postage prepaid, from Hollywood Pattern Service, Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Conn., or 2 Duke Street, Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

WHY LET NEEDLE-SQUAWKS DISTORT YOUR RECORDS?

New Floating Jewel* Tone System says "Goodbye" to needle-noise...chatter...hiss...and scratch

NEW DELIGHTS await your ears—your favorite records played by the Crosley Floating Jewel* Tone System. Its permanent sapphire stylus on feather-light tone arm plays from the sides of the record groove—cannot dig in, wobble or scratch like old-fashioned metal needles. It makes records last up to ten times longer.

Also, the Master Tone Control gives you a choice of 64 different tonal combinations for radio or records. Select the one you like best for each type of program.

Nineteen new Crosley radios and radio-phonographs offer every modern electronic improvement—new beauty and styling—new high standards of mechanical excellence. Hear them at your nearby Crosley dealer.

CROSLEY

THE CROSLEY CORPORATION, CINCINNATI 25, O.

REFRIGERATORS • HOME FREEZERS • KITCHEN SINKS AND CABINETS • RANGES • LAUNDRY EQUIPMENT • RADIOS RADIO PHONOGRAPHS ▪ FM • TELEVISION ▪ SHORT WAVE ELECTRONICS ▪ RADAR
HOME OF WLW—"THE NATION'S STATION"

NO MORE needles to buy—or change—or hear! Floating Jewel* Tone System uses a permanent sapphire stylus on delicately balanced tone arm. It plays on the sides of the record groove—cannot dig in (like sharp metal needles) to cause scratching, hissing or chattering.

THIS Crosley Combination Radio-Phonograph, table model, is one of nineteen new Crosley instruments. It is an electronic achievement, a mechanical masterpiece, in a high-styled cabinet. Equipped with Floating Jewel* Tone System.

ON ONE RECORD!—an actual demonstration of the Crosley Floating Jewel* Tone System and the Master Tone Control. Hearing is believing—and you can hear this record at your nearby Crosley dealer's store.

*Patented

REFRIGERATORS | RANGES | HOME FREEZERS | LAUNDRY EQUIPMENT | KITCHEN SINKS AND CABINETS

Ah-h! It's MIRRO again!

MIRRO FOR GREATER COOKING EFFICIENCY

- HEATS QUICKLY
- CLEANS EASILY
- HEATS EVENLY
- FRIENDLY TO FOODS
- LASTS EXTRA LONG

Blends well with any color scheme

Famous MIRRO, The Finest Aluminum, is available at your local department, hardware or housefurnishing store.

DOUBLE BOILER

1½ Qt. 2.25
2 Qt. 2.50

COMBINATION PAN

3 Qt. 2.25

PERCOLATOR

1½ Qt. 1.65
2 Qt. 1.85

LAYER CAKE PAN

9⅜ Dia. .50

COVERED POT

4 Qt. 1.75
6 Qt. 2.15

TEA KETTLE

5 Qt. 3.75

SAUCE PAN

1 Qt. .65
2 Qt. .85
3 Qt. 1.00

MIRRO-MATIC PRESSURE PAN

4 Qt. 12.95

Prices slightly higher in west

MIRRO

THE FINEST ALUMINUM

ALUMINUM GOODS MANUFACTURING COMPANY, MANITOWOC, WIS.
WORLD'S LARGEST MANUFACTURER OF ALUMINUM COOKING UTENSILS

Diary of Domesticity

The hardest thing to teach a cocker is to stay while you walk away.

By Gladys Taber

APRIL is the month when the youngest puppies come out in the spring sun. They live in the warm dry kitchen in a play pen until the danger of colds is past, and now they have their first walk on real green grass. We carry them out and put them down. "My goodness, what have we here?" they ask. They move tentative paws, they sniff the grass, they begin to wag their whole fat selves, they stagger around in dizzy circles of joy. Then they make silly lunges at one another, growling almost as loud as a mouse. When you pick them up, they snuggle in your neck, and make squeaks of joy and polish you thoroughly with baby flannel tongues. And all the time they wiggle. Cocker puppies are simply bursting with love from the minute they are born.

They all slide up and down the cellar door because there is a window at the top which is just across from the fireplace. Visitors sitting by the fire are sometimes surprised to turn around and see an earnest row of spaniel faces looking through the window. It is the cue for the family to get up and let them in.

Tigger and Esmé use the same method to get service with speed. They sit on the cellar door and rake the window with their claws. At night, if they have been out for a stroll, they come and look in and the firelight is reflected in their eyes, Tigger's shining green and Esmé's pure sapphire. Tigger is blacker than the night, so all we see are his eyes, with an expression of wistfulness. If he has to wait too long, he begins to make a low melancholy sound, intimating that he is a poor, poor lost orphan and probably will die on our doorstep. But Esmé, being a Siamese, never asks for pity. If she is not getting what she wants, she curses fluently in raucous and voluble Siamese.

We have done a good deal of talking this spring about training Melody and Hildegarde and Silver. We saw the Obedience Trials at the Spaniel Specialty Show and our consciences were smitten by the idea that our own darlings were growing up like hoodlums. Rip and Sister are the only perfectly trained cockers we have ever raised. There was nothing Rip couldn't have learned, except to cook roast beef. He would have had to taste the roast beef. He would retrieve over an obstacle, heel and do figure eights, sit motionless while my sister Jill walked away and hold his pose until she called.

The hardest thing to teach a cocker is to stay while you walk away. Heeling is fine because you do that together, but when you get about two paces away from your darling, there is a mad scramble and she flings herself at you, saying wildly, "You didn't really mean you were going to leave me alone?" Most cockers train very quickly to the leash. Even Melody leads well now that she has got over the habit of lying down on her back and waving her paws helplessly in the air the minute the collar went on.

The annual cocker show this year was the best, we thought, that has ever been held. It was, as usual, at the Hotel Roosevelt, and the lobby was full of cockers coming in, wearing white bath-towel coats.

Almost any minute the revolving doors would disgorge a man with two armfuls of cockers, or an anxious mamma persuading her treasure the door was not going to bite her. The benches upstairs were filled with cockers; the exercise rings were filled with cockers, whisking sawdust all over their satin-smooth coats; the judging ring was filled with cockers; half the people had cockers in their arms.

AT this show, I missed a whole class myself because I met a black cocker on the bench who decided I was nice to come home to. A cocker show is a merry show, and the feeling between the dogs and their people is a fine thing. Most people who are owned by cockers have a kind of cocker quality in their dispositions.

The blue ribbons and the purple rosettes and the silver the top dogs win are really only incidental. And every cocker is the best dog in the show to his family. As for us, we always come home and say, "Now really next year we will show Hildegarde and Melody and Silver, because there wasn't a dog there that could touch them! All we need to do is train them and keep the burs out of their ears!"

When they get in a rabbit mood, they never get a rabbit but they always get a mass of burs in their fur. And we are never hardy enough about this showing to keep them in a small pen weeks ahead.

Spring puppies and spring plowing! Of all the farm processes, I think plowing moves me most. Of course by August I shall begin to feel that harvesting is the thing. We wait and watch for days for the ground to dry out, the weather to be just right. And then, one clear sunny morning, George comes in with a smile to say, "I'll plow the garden today;

"I want the kind you never have to wind"

As automatic as your electric refrigerator . . . that's the Telechron kitchen clock. It's a gay little clock to be seen but not heard . . . to be depended on but not tended to. Why, there's no winding, no oiling, no regulating when you have the "Buffet" model . . . and you can look to it for the right time for years. Its self-starting, sealed-in-oil motor brings you the accurate, long-lived performance that has made Telechrons the most popular electric clocks in the world. Smartly styled to strike a colorful note on your kitchen wall . . . you can choose from green, red, ivory, and white plastic, with a clean-cut, easy-to-read dial. See your Telechron dealer.

Telechron
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.
ELECTRIC CLOCKS

WARREN TELECHRON COMPANY • ASHLAND, MASSACHUSETTS

I'm doing the upper meadow anyhow. Ground's all right."

We stop everything we are doing and rush outside to stand and watch the great plow ride along, turning the great dark furrows, turning the good earth, turning the rich soil. It is always new and it is always old. It is a tie between us and our forefathers, it is something we inherit with the land itself. The blades of the plow are silver in the sun and the earth breaks from the sterile grasp of winter and folds back. George rides the plow, and he looks beautiful to me with his farm shirt open and the sun on his face and his blue eyes smiling.

We have been all over Mr. Faulkner's book about not plowing, and Mr. Bromfield's and Mr. Ed Robinson's too. Jill is a fiend for Keeping Up with modern trends. And I fear it is really due to my romantic feelings that we go on in the old-fashioned way, plowing the garden. But I point out to the family that we have crops out of this world anyway, carrots a foot long and butter-tender, elegant crisp celery, rich tight lettuce. So why not go on plowing?

Teach your children to stick to a job until it is finished and to pick up after themselves, and you needn't worry about their characters.
—PAGE COOPER: All the Year 'Round. —Stackpole Sons).

The children come home for spring vacation too. Jill's son, Don, gets home for week ends all year, since his school is near, and he brings pals with him for Sunday dinner often. He phones casually and says, "Pick me up, and Dick and Joe are coming too." Whereupon we drop everything and go. Now Don and all his friends have grown to be at least six feet tall. And the house at Stillmeadow is prerevolutionary, and when it was built men were not that tall. So when the house is full of boys there is a constant bumping of heads as they try to get through doorways.

When my Cicely and Jill's Dorothy and Don are all home, the house is full also of music. Don drops his suitcase as he comes in and puts on a record of superior boogie. Boogie Walk or Boogie Stomp, by Lux Lewis or Ammons and Johnson; or Take the A Train, by the one and only Duke; or Mary Lou Williams' Boogie. Cicely goes upstairs and parks her luggage and moves down at once to put on La Borrachita or Songs of the Veldt. Dorothy stands it as long as she can and then says plaintively, "Could we play a symphony now?"

To me, it doesn't matter. My taste in music is entirely catholic. I simply love boogie, and folk songs fill me with intense pleasure, and a symphony sets me in a dream of wonder. Boogie is like olives: you acquire the taste for it. Folk songs are like poetry and romance and lost love and everything that life should be and seldom is. Symphonies are to music what the soul is to the body. So there you are.

Maybe the Spanish songs are best. Cicely has a complete collection, and since Spanish is her field, she can tell me what they mean. They usually mean "Good-by, I am going to the city to work for a boss," and they say it with all the emotion in the world. They make me ache, and I enjoy it. Last time she brought home the new records of the songs sung in the Spanish revolution, Songs of the International League. They were sung by Germans, French, Spanish who were fighting against Franco in that tragic fight for freedom. I shall never forget the song of the prisoners who worked in the peat bog, a song born from their hearts and sung by them until the guards put a stop to it. It was too much. It must have reached the guards in some secret place in their own hearts.

When the children are home, we pop corn every night and make hot chocolate or have cokes. Don and I have struggles over the checkerboard, or we play gin rummy. Our checker game is far from orthodox—it would make a real checker expert turn over in his grave if he were in one—but we love it.

Every week or so use Powder-ene where rugs soil quickest

Clean parts of your rugs

■ Be proud of the ever-fresh beauty of your rugs. Keep them clean and bright this so-easy way. Care for them as usual, but once a week or so Powder-ene the parts where grime collects—at the front door, in front and rear halls, at the fireplace, at the kitchen entrance to dining room, around the dining table.

1. Just sprinkle Powder-ene Rug Cleaner on the surface. 2. Brush it into the pile. Let it stand an hour or longer. 3. Remove the dirt-saturated Powder-ene with vacuum cleaner.

Powder-ene cannot harm any rug, including light colors. It does not leave rings nor cause shrinking, mildew, matting, fading nor removal of twist. Get Powder-ene in bright blue, shaker-top cans at department, furniture, hardware and other stores.

THE THREE LITTLE WOMEN OUR TRADE-MARK SINCE 1941

Patents 2,344,268 and 2,344,247

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

VON SCHRADER MANUFACTURING COMPANY · RACINE · WISCONSIN · U·S·A·

BANISH TOILET ODORS

- Cleans toilet bowls quickly
- Removes a major source of toilet odors
- Leaves fresh minty aroma

Used as directed

- Bleaches porcelain
- Harmless to septic tanks

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

ON SALE AT YOUR DRUGGIST

JUDSON DUNAWAY CORPORATION
(formerly Expello Corporation)
Dover, N. H.

Free! COLOR CHART

Shows color schemes of rugs, drapes, upholstery, etc. Gives right color of wall for each scheme. Enclose 10c for deluxe booklet, "Short Course in Interior Decorating."

NATIONAL CHEMICAL & MFG. CO.
3622 South May Street, Dept. D, Chicago, Ill.

Cicely has no head for games and, when we all play, we end in hysterical laughter at her because she always tells just what cards she has and what she is looking for. Dorothy and Don are learning bridge, but Cicely, who is not only Phi Beta Kappa but everything else on the list and then some, simply can't tell one suit from another.

Esmé loves to have us play games. Just as I reach for a card, there will be a brown velvet glove stretched out and the card is on the floor. Or she sits and folds her paws right on the deck. Or we have to push a brown tail away to see if it is a five or a seven on the table. Checkers are wonderful, because she can whisk the whole board off and make the disks bounce delightfully.

Tigger is above such things. He sits by the fire and stretches his black paws over his stomach. He is a born basker. He loves to bask.

We have a new supper dish that is easy and much liked. We cook a package of noodles, or two if the children are home, and add to it a cup of cottage cheese, or two cups for the larger quantity. A nice dab of butter goes on top. The cheese may be mixed in lightly with a fork, or served in balls at the side. This is a nice substitute for meat, and with a crisp green salad and dessert makes a delicious spring supper.

Another good dish for April is a cheese-and-egg dish. I hard-cook eggs enough for everyone to have two, and then I put a jar of cheese spread, preferably the snappy kind, in a pan with about half a cup of milk. I stir constantly until the cheese melts and a smooth velvety sauce is there, all ready to be poured over the eggs, which have been cut in half lengthwise and either deviled or left plain.

When I talk about recipes, I always think of one of my friends who confessed with much blushing that when she started to cook she couldn't figure out how to double a biscuit recipe, so she had to make it twice. Most of my recipes are supposed to serve six or eight, but I notice that they get completely eaten up even if there are only three of us.

The first rosy rhubarb is a treat. Baked rhubarb is my favorite. I cut three cups of rhubarb into one-inch pieces and put it in a greased oblong baking pan. I sprinkle a cup of sugar over it, cover and bake in a slow oven for an hour and a half. This is good because it is crusty and sweet. Stewed rhubarb tends to be too watery.

The first asparagus is spring's best gift. When the stalks come up aboveground, we begin snatching at them before they are more than an inch long.

Now is violet time. The little pale gold dogtooth violets are all over the hill beyond the brook. Honey and I go up to pick them when the light is long over Stillmeadow. Up on the hill it is very still and the woods are a green mist. The song of the brook is cool and sweet. The air has a special fragrance—an about-to-be-apple-blossom-time smell, I call it. It has magic.

You can sit down and pick all the violets you can hold. Honey sits down and crushes a whole bed, but I don't scold her, because the violets carpet the world. After we have picked all we want, we just sit there and do our thinking for the day.

The little old house looks sturdy and secure under the great budding sugar maples. The yard is busy with cockers. Down the road come George and Shep, driving the cows, and the cows are dappled with sunset.

"Honey," I say, "believe in life. Believe in love. Love is not words, love is a way of life. When we all know that, the world will be like spring all the time."

Honey looks at me with dreamy amber eyes.

"This is a beautiful world," I tell her. "All it needs is to be looked at."

Then we go down the hill, back to supper things and the lights of home. And as we go through the garden, I pick up a handful of rich soil and let it sift through my fingers, and I have a wordless prayer in my heart that we shall always keep April in our lives.

Curtains of Hathaway dotted marquisette though delightfully delicate are very durable — for the dots are carefully woven in. Hathaway Dots are dainty, sheer and serviceable, too!

Sauerkraut but NO After Odors if you Spray D'SAPEER

Not a cover-up. Instantly eliminates odors of kitchen, bath room, basement, sickroom, all through the house, office, store, etc.

2 FRAGRANCES "Importe" (oriental) "Cedar-Pine" (domestic).

Spray closets and clothing with D'sapeer. Harmless to fabrics. Easy to use. Economical. A little goes a long way. Complete satisfaction guaranteed or money back. Ask for D'SAPEER at drug, department, hardware stores, beauty shops—or order direct.

Prices (with atomizer) postpaid: 4 oz. bottle $1.25; 8 oz. bottle, $1.65. Refills (without atomizer) 4 oz. bottle 60c; 8 oz. bottle $1.00; Atomizer, 65c.

BAILEY, PRIHODA & CO., Mfrs.
303 W. Kalamazoo Ave., Kalamazoo 11, Mich.

The Aristocrat of Deodorants D'SAPEER

You'll Say THEY ARE THE BEST SERVANTS YOU EVER HAD

Better Cleaning! Better Washing! Better Ironing! For more than thirty years, in millions of homes, Apex home servants have proved their extra quality, extra performance and extra long life. When you buy Apex today, you are certain of every perfected hour-saving improvement...certain that you are buying the advanced design that you naturally associate with America's Grand Old Name in Appliances. See Apex leadership for yourself ...at your favorite appliance store.

CLEANERS WASHERS
IRONERS

The Peak of Quality

Apex

for more than 30 years

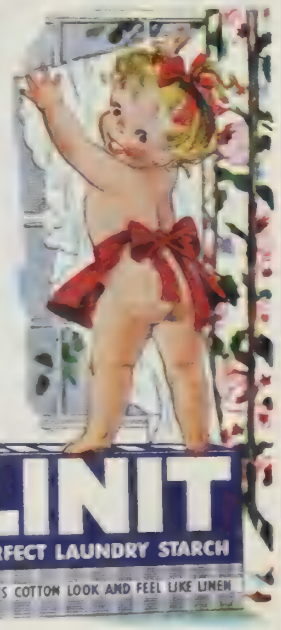
... AND SOON! New Apex Automatic Washer .. bringing you a sensationally new washing action.

Apex



THE APEX ELECTRICAL MANUFACTURING CO. • CLEVELAND 10, OHIO

Background for Beauty

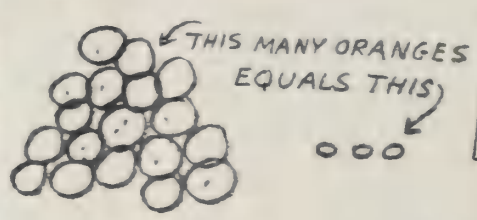
CRISP, snowy curtains dress up a room just as a freshly laundered jabot adds chic to your favorite suit. Dainty organdies, marquisettes, voiles and rayons take on new freshness and beauty when they are Linit-laundered.

Linit restores the original finish to all household and personal washables. It penetrates fabrics evenly and smoothly. Linit helps shed dirt and dust, keeps things clean longer. Linit is simple to mix, easy to use.

Sunny says: On every Linit package you'll find complete directions for starching sheets, shirts, table linens, lingerie . . . and all washable fabrics.



© Corn Products Sales Co.

LINIT adds the "finishing touch"

REPORT To the Housewife

BY JUDY BARRY

FIRST we'd like to remind you that although rationing is over—except for sugar, of course—the ration boards that did such fine work still exist, laboring valiantly to see that you, Mrs. John Q. Public, are not overcharged or cheated in any way by "deal-making" inflationary pressure groups. The boards have, however, been reduced in numbers and the official name is now Price Control Board. If any attempt is made to overcharge you, it is your privilege—in fact, your duty—to seek out the nearest Price Control Board at once and report the matter. Incidentally, as a further protection for our hard-working pocketbooks, almost all reconversion products will be preticketed with the OPA ceiling price.

Carry a Pocketful of Orange Juice!

Big juicy oranges have been reduced to hard candies, which preserve, their maker claims, all the real fruit's vitamins, minerals, sugars and other benefits, as well as the m-m-m-m flavor. Extensive tests have proved that each packet (of three drops) contains 30 milligrams of vitamin C, the minimum daily requirement as established at the present time by the Pure Food and Drug Administration. Won't it be comforting to feel that a pleasant-tasting tickle-stopper is also feeding us vitamins when we have colds and raspy throats? These candies are already on the market in limited quantities.

Juice bricks, too, are promised for appearance this spring. These are a frozen concentrate of the real thing, for storage at zero temperature. Come breakfasttime, add three parts of water. To your health!

Help Save 5 Billion Dollars

That's enough to service our national debt for one year, you know. It's also the amount of economic loss to our country each year as a result of accidents. And, appalling as it is, we must face the fact that one third of these accidents, in large measure preventable, happen in our homes, where we're the bosses.

Industry has done, and is continuing to do, a pretty good job at accident control. We, the homemakers of America, must, too, each in our own little way, and if possible in a larger way, by waking up our communities, by organizing and educating them. Here is a job for any woman who wants to contribute to the well-being of her world: 100,000 deaths a year, 9,000,000 injuries a year—and we could do something about it! Right now, please put down this magazine, go to your desk and write the National Safety Council, 800 Chrysler Building, New York 17, New York, to ask how you can help in your community.

"Coffee and —"

Great news for anyone who has been rendered kitchenless by the housing shortage is a new "plus" variation of the electric toaster, which makes a slice of hot golden toast, in a pull-out side compartment, at the same time that coffee is bubbling, or eggs are boiling, or soup is heating on the top plate. In fact, if you had bacon, you could even fry some on it! This convenient little appliance, while not yet on the market, is already in production. It operates on AC or DC, and seems to us like a fine thought for student families, or any one-room housekeeper, male or female!

Whoops, My Dear!

Speaking of accidents at home, nonskid rug underlays are back. Made of synthetic sponge rubber, they cling firmly to slippery polished floors, and appreciably reduce the hazard of even those fiendish little enemies of the human backbone, small scatter rugs! The underlays come in 24, 32 and 54 inch lengths, to be cut to size.

Now 'tis Safer to Iron

because of the new burnproof ironing-board covers. We think they're something you ought to look up from the standpoint of a safety measure. Woven of asbestos into a fabric originally developed for Army firefighters' suits, their makers claim that they will improve with age and use.

• • •

Nice: a new polished-wood rack for six various-sized knives, to be hung on a wall or tucked in a drawer. Good-looking, sturdy, it protects both knife blades and your pink-tipped fingers.

• • •

Out, Damp Spot?

Perhaps you've been intrigued by the tales of new paint compounds which promise to waterproof your basement walls. We'd like to warn you to have a care. Several new compositions of good quality are available, fairly useful in retarding the penetration of wind-blown rain. But the method of application is highly important. Brushing on is ineffective—they must be scrubbed on. And the National Bureau of Standards warns, "No such relatively simple treatment of the interior surface of basement walls is likely to be a complete cure for leakage."

Cold, Colder, Coldest

Arriving soon, a combination refrigerator and freezing unit, which provides three kinds of cold: 40° F. cold in the section for ordinary food storage; 0° in the compartment for storing frozen foods; and way down below zero for the section that makes ice. Added attraction: the chilling coils are concealed in the walls, so the job of defrosting is eliminated.

Mother-and-Dad Blanket

Soon there'll be a new double-bed variation on the electric-blanket theme, which will keep both dad, who sleeps warm, and mother, who sleeps cold, happy and comfortable. A separate temperature control for each side makes this possible.

Back Up!

Now there's an iron pointed fore and aft, to banish forever all those odd contortions we've had to make to get at gathers and shirrings. With this iron, we can back into 'em! It rests on its side while you answer the inevitable telephone call. (That's why we want you to investigate the burnproof ironing-board cover: that telephone call!)

Sudsable Wallpaper

Dwellers in smog-burdened areas, take note. This paper has been in the process of field-testing for the past year—first public appearance next summer, one hears. Its makers promise that even grease stains wash off this new wallpaper easily.

Blows Hot, Blows Cold

Now, in some shops, appears an all-in-one electric heater and fan. When the 1320-watt heating unit is on, the fan rotates slowly, circulating warmth. In summer, with the heating unit snapped off, the fan speeds up and spreads cool breezes.

For a Temporary Home Sweet Home

Promised to arrive in the shops in time to aid June brides who have to set up housekeeping in one room, is a new complete electric stove in miniature, with two surface burners and a pull-out broiler. It's about 22 inches long, 7 inches tall, and very good-looking in its white porcelain casing.

• • •

How do you like the idea of bright-colored aluminum clothespins? They're here!

All-Star Pressure-Cooker Revue

A pressure cooker seems to be what every woman wants at the moment, and with reason, for they do save time and fuel, retain vitamin and mineral values, and above all, make food taste good! They all look more or less like the conventional saucepan, with the addition of an airtight cover, bearing a steam vent and safety closing device. One type has, for its outstanding characteristic, ■ comfortable lightness in weight; another has three pressures; another a thumb-lock feature; still another has a dress-up cover which allows it to come straight from stove to table looking attractive. Choose whichever special charm attracts you most, for basically they all do an excellent job if they re the product of a reputable maker. (Only the four-quart size is available up to the time we go to press, however.)

• • •

Don't be frightened out of adding the soupçon of soda that keeps peas looking plump and colorful. Latest reliable word assures us that a pinch of it does not destroy the vitamins; but remember, only ■ very little pinch.

• • •

And the last word on those vanished treasures, SHEETS AND PILLOWCASES: "No rise in price to the consumer in sight. As to quantity, only a slight improvement." This is straight from the OPA's mouth.

To Make Your Floors Easier to Clean...Lovelier

change to

O-Cedar self polishing WAX

"It's PLASTICIZED!"

"Really better"... that's what critical homemakers say on first trying O-Cedar Self Polishing Wax. The reason? It's PLASTICIZED ... made by ■ special process to give it five very important advantages:

(1) Greater resistance to dirt, to enable you to wipe floors beautifully clean with ■ dry mop or damp cloth ... no scrubbing.
(2) Greater resistance to wear, moisture.
(3) Richer, lovelier luster.
(4) Easier application.
(5) Quick, 17 minute drying.

Try this improved floor finish now ... on linoleum, wood, composition floors. At your nearest dealer.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — IF DEFECTIVE AS ADVERTISED THEREIN — REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY

O-CEDAR Balanced-Formula PASTE WAX

Soft enough for easy application, hard enough for longer wear. Beautifies and protects furniture, floors, woodwork, venetian blinds, leather goods, automobiles, fixtures, etc.

O-CEDAR ▪ CHICAGO, ILLINOIS ▪ TORONTO, CANADA

O-Cedar "THE GREATEST NAME IN HOUSEKEEPING"

MOR Salad Plate

Cut 1 can MOR into 8 or 12 slices. Arrange around a tossed vegetable salad made of head lettuce, curly endive, watercress, cucumber and radish slices, tomato wedges and French dressing. Serves 4.

Glazed MOR Roast and Sweet Potatoes

Place two cans of MOR close together in a shallow baking pan, score in diamond shapes and stud with cloves. Garnish edge with mashed sweet potatoes put through a pastry tube. Place whole cooked sweet potatoes around the meat, pour over them a hot glaze made of ½ cup brown sugar, 1 tbsp. hot water, and 1 tbsp. melted butter. Drizzle 1 tbsp. of the glaze over the MOR. Bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., about 25 minutes. Serves 8.

It's Different!

OUR GUESTS WERE DELIGHTED WITH THESE

Time Savers

George Rector

Food Consultant to Wilson & Co.

"Easy does it" when there's a can of Wilson's delicious MOR on your "quickie" shelf. Besides being just right for sandwiches and cold snacks, MOR —when baked, fried or broiled—becomes a hearty, stick-to-the-ribs dinner meat.

You'll appreciate MOR's wholesomeness. Every slice has all the important proteins, vitamins and minerals of the good pork meat your dealer cuts for you.

Remember that MOR is different. Proof of this is its rare, distinctive flavor —its master's touch of seasoning.

WILSON'S "QUICKIE" SHELF. With a handy line like this, you're never out on a limb, come dinner time. Devote one shelf to these quality meat products—Wilson's MOR, Corned Beef Hash, Chili, Tamales, Deviled Ham and America's favorite meat flavor, Wilson's B-V. All seasoned the Wilson way.

WILSON & Co. INC.

The Wilson Label protects your table

CONVERSATION PIECE

By Ruth Mills Teague

A DINNER of even four courses, if each is as carefully done as it should be, daunts the average hostess in these help-less days. Yet exquisitely done, well-balanced dinners are still a civilized delight to all who attend them. So why not split the responsibility among four hostesses, and pool the results in one superb meal? Not so long ago a group of us in this countryside carried out such a project in a series of dinners that have taken their place in local folklore.

The plan is for four couples to combine to entertain one another, and each girl prepares one course of a carefully thought-out dinner. In the division of labor, the hostess of the evening prepares the main course, one girl brings the hors d'oeuvres and salad, another the soup, ready for reheating, and the fourth brings the dessert. Individually it's easy, but the combination is a more finished production than any one of the four might care to undertake alone. You can make this adventure in co-operation a gourmet's field day, and I'll give you a sample menu.

The point you must never lose sight of is that a perfect dinner cannot be a haphazard assembly of good dishes. Each item must be planned to complement what goes before and comes after, and while each cook can be an artist, no one can be a rugged individualist. So we must discuss the menu in detail, and plan every dish down to the last herb leaf and clove of garlic to make the ensemble a perfect harmony.

We don't want elaborate and too hearty hors d'oeuvres, but a real appetizer. A subtle blend of cream cheese, chutney and curry powder, molded in an attractive shape and surrounded by crisp potato chips and slender pretzel sticks, will be just the thing. The chips and sticks can be used as scoops, but there will be small knives for those who prefer to spread the cheese mixture.

The soup will be Consommè Avocado, made with the tender care a truly superb consommè demands: steaming cups of clear delectable broth flecked with tiny slivers of pale-green avocado—a soup to delight but not satiate the appetite.

For a dinner party without round-the-clock preparations, plan a co-operative meal. Split the neatly planned menu four ways, and let each guest arrive with a course in hand.

Y STUART

Hors d'oeuvres should be appetite teasers. Try scooping up cheese and chutney with pretzel sticks and potato chips.

The hostess steals the show with rich, savory chicken paprika, homemade noodles and a batch of hot bacon biscuits.

MORE WOMEN COOK ON

Magic Chef

THAN ON ANY OTHER RANGE

Here is another original kitchen design, planned by Magic Chef. Note the ventilating windows above cabinets, the window panels below, the colorful atmosphere. Write today for our new folder showing 10 New Freedom Gas Kitchens in full color. It's free.

Happiness Ahead—

IN A KITCHEN WITH

Magic Chef

The happiness that you enjoy with a new Magic Chef is happiness that lasts, day after day, year after year. That's because a Magic Chef, with its dozens of ease and convenience features like the four shown here, makes cooking delicious meals so much easier that kitchen worries vanish for good.

No wonder that American women vote Magic Chef their favorite gas range . . . that recent surveys again show that more women cook on Magic Chef than on any other range. Remember this when you go to see the new Magic Chefs at your Gas Company or Magic Chef Dealer's store. The search for freedom is abroad in the world—bring yourself new kitchen freedom with a shining new Magic Chef.

You Can Cook With Gas Wherever You Are!
If you live beyond the gas mains, you still can enjoy Magic Chef cooking. Investigate "Pyrofax" Gas in eastern or central states; other "LP" (bottled or tank) gases elsewhere.

AMERICAN STOVE COMPANY
Dept. L-2, ST. LOUIS 2, MO.

Magic Chef

© 1946, American Stove Co.

Automatic Oven Cooking—Simply set clock and temperature control. Gas turns on and off automatically; cooks while you are away.

Guaranteed Lifetime Burner Efficiency—Burners of your Magic Chef are guaranteed to operate with full original efficiency for your range's entire lifetime of service to you or will be replaced without charge.

Swing-Out Broiler—Exclusive Magic Chef feature! No stooping—no smoke. Easier to clean. Serves as food-warming oven.

Automatic Lighting—No matches needed. All burners light automatically on your "CP" Magic Chef—just turn on the gas.

THE GAS RANGE WITH THE FAMOUS RED WHEEL

For the pièce de résistance, Chicken Paprika! The exclamation point means that this is a very special chicken paprika—a Cordon-Bleu item. With it there will be Noodles Polonaise—homemade noodles, I hope—and bacon biscuits, all the contribution of the hostess. The biggest share of labor and expense falls to her; but after all, this is much more than less her party, and the next time someone else will be hostess. And with no hors d'oeuvres, soup, salad or dessert to bother with, why not a four-star production?

Salad Printanière, a delicious combination of fresh, tender vegetables and a French dressing made with tarragon vinegar, can be served with the chicken or follow as a separate course.

The finale will be Oranges à la grecque, a dessert I've been longing to include in a Conversation Piece, for it so well fits the title. I've restrained myself because there's a lot of work involved, but this time we can let ourselves go, and what fun it is. If Oranges à la grecque is all one has to prepare, it's no job at all, and it's the perfect dessert for this menu.

Now we must get busy with recipes, for they're rather long this time.

CHEESE AND CHUTNEY

Cream together 1 pound cream cheese and a generous half cup of chutney which has been cut into small pieces. If you can't get Indian chutney, use the domestic equivalent. Add 2 teaspoons curry powder, and when thoroughly mixed pack into a mold which has been rubbed generously with salad oil. For the mold use a small tin can, approximately three and a half inches in height and diameter—peanuts and powdered chocolate are often put up in this size can—or use a small bowl. Pack the cheese very tightly and store for at least twenty-four hours in the freezing compartment of your refrigerator. To serve, empty the cheese mold onto the center of a platter and surround it with crisp potato chips and pretzel sticks.

CONSOMMÉ AVOCADO

Wash thoroughly and allow to stand in cold water for half an hour about 3½ pounds beef, 3½ pounds veal, 1 pound heart (veal, pork or beef) and as many bones as you can beg or buy. Use the less expensive cuts of beef and veal. Drain, cover with 6 quarts water and set on the stove to cook. When scum forms, strain it off and then add 2 onions, 1 turnip, 4 stalks celery, 2 cloves garlic, 3 carrots, 1 teaspoon whole pepper, 3 bay leaves and 4 teaspoons salt. Cover and cook five or six hours, adding water as needed. (If pressure cooker is used it will take about two hours at fifteen pounds; use only 4 quarts water.) Strain through fine sieve and set aside to cool. There should be about 3 quarts of soup. When thoroughly cold, the soup will be firmly jellied and the grease will have congealed on top. Remove all the grease.

To clarify, bring the soup barely to lukewarm, add 3 eggs, shells and all, that have been beaten in a little water, and stir almost constantly until it boils. Let it boil for two minutes, set aside for ten minutes and strain through a sieve that has been lined with a double thickness of wet cheesecloth. Taste for seasoning and add more if needed. Reheat at the last minute, adding one ripe avocado cut into tiny pieces. Pour piping hot into hot soup cups, and serve with it stacks of crisp Melba toast.

CHICKEN PAPRIKA

You'll need three large chickens, preferably roasting chickens, but young hens will do. Cut into pieces and remove from the bones all the meat of the breasts, second joints and legs. Take a small, very sharp knife and go at this job carefully, trying to keep the pieces of meat as large as possible. If you succeed in getting the breast out whole, cut it into two or three pieces. Boil the wings, backs, gizzards and hearts in salted water until tender. This, except for 2½ cups of broth which we'll need for the Chicken Paprika, will make a fine dumpling or creamed-chicken meal some other day.

Mix 1 cup flour, 2½ teaspoons paprika, 2 teaspoons salt, ¼ teaspoon red pepper, ¼ teaspoon freshly ground black pepper, ¼ teaspoon ginger, ¼ teaspoon sweet basil and a dash of nutmeg. Roll the pieces of

French's WORCESTERSHIRE GIVES Scrambled eggs wonderful new flavor

Melt in a skillet over slow fire: 2 tablesp. butter or margarine. Beat and pour into the skillet: 4 eggs, 6 tablesp. milk, 1 teasp. French's Worcestershire Sauce, ⅛ teasp. salt, ⅛ teasp. paprika. As the mixture thickens break it into shreds with a fork. Serves 4.

TOP-NOTCH QUALITY AT half the price

MAESTROS OF THE SALAD BOWL

La Louisiane Dressing

1 cup olive oil, 1/3 cup vinegar, 1 tsp. salt, 1 tsp. paprika, 1 tablespoon sugar, a dash of Cayenne pepper, 1/2 clove finely chopped garlic. Combine dry ingredients, add oil gradually, beating constantly. Chill.

MAURICE OF LA LOUISIANE

● For 65 years this famous New Orleans restaurant has delighted the elite of "Crescent City's" society and gourmets of the world.

Like all great hosts, Maurice insists on genuine olive oil for his salads. Make your salad dressings with fine Pompeian Olive Oil, the choice of so many great cooks. Haunting nut-like flavor, delicate aroma, and clean golden color! There's none finer than Pompeian—the great name in olive oil. Pompeian Olive Oil Corp., Baltimore 24, Maryland.

POMPEIAN
Great Name in Olive Oil

PURE Full-Strength Vanilla Extract

GUARANTEED HIGHEST QUALITY

Dr PRICE'S VANILLA EXTRACT

icken in this mixture, patting in as uch flour as will stick to them. Brown e chicken gently in a half-and-half mixre of butter or margarine and shortenig. When each piece is a light golden own, transfer it to a large earthenware sserole, and when all are browned empty e fat from the skillet—not into the casrole Into the skillet put 2½ cups chicken oth, 1 pint sour cream, 2 tablespoons orcestershire sauce, 3 tablespoons chili uce, 1 large clove garlic finely minced, teaspoon salt and about 15 water chestuts cut into thin slices. (If you like, ½ cup erry may be added.) If you can't get ater chestnuts, use canned mushrooms stead, but I've been assured that those ecious water chestnuts are on their way the grocers' shelves. Heat this mixture ntil it steams, pour it over the chicken, ver the casserole and cook in a slow en—about 325° F.—until chicken is ten-r. It should bubble gently—not violently. 'ter an hour and a half of cooking, skim f surplus grease, add more seasoning if eeded and thicken the sauce with a tableoon of flour mixed with a little water. ooking time should be about two to o and a half hours, depending on the e of your birds. Don't overcook. As soon the chicken is tender, keep it hot by tting the casserole over steam or on an ectric hot plate. Serve the Chicken Papka in the casserole in which it is cooked, arrange it on a platter.

NOODLES POLONAISE

Put 5 eggs and 2 teaspoons salt into a owl. Stir with a fork and begin to add, adually, 2 cups flour. When dough bemes too stiff to stir with fork, add the reaining flour by kneading the dough with our hands. If the dough is still sticky, ld a little more flour. Separate into 3 alls. Put one ball on a ell-floured board and roll to a very thin sheet. urn the sheet over many mes as you roll, and on't be afraid to use a ttle flour to keep the ough from sticking to e board or the rolling n. Put the sheet on a oth-covered counter or ble and repeat the proces with the two other alls Let the sheets dry r an hour and cut as llows:

Place a sheet on the oard, make a cut through e middle and put one alf over the other. Fold e dough into a long roll and cut, shaking e little disks out as you go along so the oodles won't stick together. For this dish t them about a quarter of an inch wide. hey can be made ahead of time and spread ut to dry.

To cook, sprinkle them into a large kettle f rapidly boiling salted water. Let them boil welve minutes, drain into colander, rinse ith cold water and place colander over team until you are ready to serve. Of ourse you can buy store noodles if you on't want to bother with the homemade, ut please bother. It's really so easy, and hey're so delicious.

Cut 4 slices of stale bread into tiny quares no bigger than peas, and carefully fry them in butter or margarine ntil they are golden brown. Better do alf at a time, and keep your fire very ow. Just before serving the noodles, sprinle them generously with the buttered rumbs.

BACON BISCUITS

Add ⅔ cup crisp bacon crumbles to our favorite baking-powder-biscuit recipe. hese biscuits will go like the proverbial ot cakes, so make plenty.

SALAD PRINTANIÈRE

I'll give you the ideal ingredients for this alad, and if some of them are unobtainable ou'll have to make substitutions. The secret s that everything that goes into this salad nust be delightfully fresh, crisp and icy cold. f you can't get Boston lettuce and endive—oth have been rather shy about appearing n vegetable counters lately—don't worry. ust use more of whatever greens you can ind. But here's the ideal—at least it's nine:

Boston lettuce, endive, water cress, tomatoes cut into sixths, tiny tufts of raw cauliflower, young green onions, 1 cucumber, 1 bunch red radishes and 1 green pepper cut into rings. Wash the greens, wrap in wet towel and store overnight in refrigerator. Break cauliflower into small tufts, slice cucumber and radishes, cover each with ice water and store in refrigerator a few hours. (A separate dish for each vegetable.)

When you are ready to leave for the party, dry all wet vegetables on paper towels, rub salad bowl with garlic and fill it with all ingredients—but do not add the French dressing. Bring the dressing in a jar and toss the salad as nearly the last minute as possible.

FRENCH DRESSING

Into a jar put 1 cup olive oil (or salad oil), ¼ cup tarragon vinegar, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon sugar, 1 teaspoon paprika, ½ teaspoon dry mustard, 1 tablespoon grated onion, 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce, 1 teaspoon sweet basil and 1 clove garlic. Before using, shake thoroughly and remove garlic.

Remember, everything crisp, and everything cold, including the salad plates.

ORANGES À LA GREQUE

Remove the skin from 6 large navel oranges and cut it into very tiny julienne strips. Put the strips into a pan of rapidly boiling water and let them boil ten minutes. Drain and repeat this performance two more times, adding 1 teaspoon salt to the last water. Use plenty of water so that the bitterness will be cooked out of the peel.

Now to the oranges. Remove all the white underskin that clings to them—and does it cling! Take a sharp knife and scrape, dig, even cut if you have to, because off that stuff must come. Recently I made this dish with the biggest, finest oranges I'd ever seen; but the inner skin was so tough that finally I gave up and cut it all off. When this job is done, separate 5 of the oranges into halves, the other into sections, and put them in a flat-bottomed dish.

Make a sirup by boiling for ten minutes 3 cups sugar, 4 cups water and enough red vegetable coloring to make the sirup a light, bright red. Pour the hot sirup over the oranges and let them stand twenty minutes. Drain off sirup and boil it again for fifteen minutes. Add the orange peel to the oranges, pour the hot sirup over all, and let stand in refrigerator until very cold—at least six hours.

In arranging your serving dish, be sure that all the orange halves are round side up. The rest is easy, for this dessert can't help being a beautiful sight. And the taste? It's still more beautiful!

> The difference between you and other people is that their money looks bigger and their troubles smaller.
>
> —HELEN F. JAMESON: Pippins and Peaches.

> Mankind are very odd creatures: one half censure what they practice, the other half practice what they censure; the rest always say and do as they ought.
>
> —BENJAMIN FRANKLIN.

Service. Unless you have really adequate help, don't attempt formal service—eight people make quite a tableful to handle. Try for a helper—someone to clear the table is definitely indicated—and between the four of you this much help may be materialized. But if wise planning must do the job unaided, this dinner still can run with beautiful smoothness.

Each course, including the soup, can be served from the table, or from a serving table, by the girl who prepared it. This is rather fun, but if you want to be a little more formal the host and hostess can take over the serving.

With no help at all you'll have to know your signals, for with four hostesses all feeling a sense of responsibility and an eagerness to help, you may become involved in an obstacle race. The good conversation that is an essential and delightful part of any successful dinner party will wither on the vine amid too much confusion. So decide ahead of time who's to do what, when and how, and stick to your program.

This might be called the Dinner of Four Spécialités, and if you swing it successfully you will certainly go on to make it a quartet of dinners.

Here's hoping the four spécialités and the four dinners are equally tops!

New! Pyrex Bowls in the colors of Spring Flowers

...only $2.50 SET OF FOUR

2½ TIMES AS STRONG AS ORDINARY BOWLS!

HEAT RESISTANT FOR OVEN USE!

MAKES A LOVELY GIFT!

FOR MIXING, BAKING, SERVING AND STORING!

FOUR BEAUTIFUL PERMANENT COLORS!

THERE'S ONLY ONE PYREX WARE!

½ QT.

4 QT.

1¼ QT.

2¼ QT.

LOOK FOR THE FAMILIAR ORANGE LABEL ← OR THIS TRADE-MARK PRESSED IN GLASS

T.M. REG. PYREX U.S. PAT. OFF.

PYREX BRAND OVEN WARE for better and faster baking

CORNING GLASS WORKS Corning, N.Y., U.S.A.

Gee whiz, I'm just bowled over!

Most folks are, Stevie, when you tell them what it takes to install a telephone! The easiest part, now, is getting enough telephone instruments. But often other things are needed before we can start service . . .

Like what, for instance?

Well, switchboards, for one thing. More of them must be made to handle new telephone lines, and it takes time. Then—once a switchboard's finished—it must still be fitted into the nation's telephone system.

Some job, I'd say!

It really is, but it's getting done. We want every one who is waiting for a telephone to know we're working hard at it and we're coming your way as fast as we possibly can.

BELL TELEPHONE SYSTEM

THEIR HOME IS YOUNG AND GAY

(Continued from Page 195)

magazines or newspapers. She keeps a flourishing file of these, and not only reads them but heeds them. Bob is an invaluable ally at this. Fast as Georgie learns about a new worksaving notion, Bob is on the spot with tool chest in hand to help her manage the mechanics. Their kitchen and pantry, while its layout is far from ideal, and much of its equipment of the mid-McKinley period, is as step-and-motion-saving as their ingenuity can make it.

Lack of working surface was its most troublesome fault, so Bob hunted around till he tracked down some lumber, made wide counters and secured them with brackets at a comfortable working height for Georgie, who is rather a tall girl. These, covered with cheery yellow oilcloth thumbtacked on, give her room to stir up tempting cakes and toss crispy salads. In the pantry, he's conjured up cupboards from orange crates, with curtains of oilcloth to conceal their holdings. Plenty of hooks, for hanging pans and pot holders adjacent to the stove, was another step in Bob's make-it-easy campaign—hooks for hanging cups, too, along the edge of one long shelf.

Their broom closet, being on the skinny side (in company with most broom closets), was treated to a row of hooks inside its door, where the broom, dustpan and such flat things could be hung, thus leaving more room in its innards for plumper mops and sweeper. A sturdy shelf, down toward the bottom of the door, took care of jars of furniture polish and cleaners.

"It's amazing," says Georgie, as she beams on Bob proudly, "how much a few extra shelves and hooks can help to modernize even a middle-aged kitchen." She still dreams nights, though, of an electric mixer, her No. 1 yearning, and next to that, a washing machine.

"You should have seen some of our homes." Georgie laughs, although a trifle ruefully. "We've really had quite a time making them livable." Orange crates, begged or borrowed from the local grocer, came to their rescue many a time, and turned up in all sorts of weird and wonderful reincarnations.

Once, they made a pair of ottomans for the identical-twin German shepherds, with "springs" of crisscrossed clotheslines. Double faced cushions that could be flopped over quickly showed their light-colored fresh company sides after the dogs climbed down and went to bed. The side the pups used for rest periods during the day was covered with dark sturdy rep.

A quick pepper-upper and cleaner-upper they blessed often was "cold-water" paint (properly, it's resin-emulsion paint), the kind that's easy for amateurs to apply and goes on speedily even over wallpaper.

Lengths of cheap pretty dress fabrics, to drape bare walls and soften ugly windows, were another quick beauty treatment for many of their stopovers. Georgie soon learned not to cut into the cloth, however, for they moved so many times it would have been sheerest extravagance really to fit any one set of windows. So Georgie became very adroit at "pin-ups," managing all sorts of drapes, hangings and graceful swags without benefit of thread or needle. Her perky starched sheet-curtains she considers her chef-d'oeuvre, however, and plans to have more of them even when she can find and afford damask!

Griff's room have been decorated with husky duck shower curtains and bright bath mats, partly because they were cheap and more easily available, partly because they're so sensible anyway for a small boy's room. Bath rugs are easily washable, yet cozy for bare little toes to snuggle into. One of Griff's favorite rooms, Georgie reminisces, was a service porch that she and Bob painted and dressed up with a frieze of plump gingerbread men cut from colored paper. Miniature gingerbread men, scissored out of mending tape and pressed on with a warm iron, danced over the white shower-curtain draperies merrily. The fact that they camouflaged an imperfection or two was only incidental!

Because they like to have Griff share every possible minute with them, Bob cut a play pen up into the proper lengths to fence off a wedge-shaped corner of each room for Griff's special benefit.

The closet that became a bookcase helped a great deal the Feeneys' biggest problem of where to put their pressed-down-and-running-over measure of books. More of them are held within bounds by book ends that Bob makes of wood carved into giant initials. Georgie's contribution to the book-end supply was a pair of empty salad-oil cans, the big square kind, painted in her favorite soft chartreuse, filled with pebbles and trailing ivy gracefully.

"Cans are wonderful," says Georgie. "I remember one of the prettiest 'window boxes' we ever had—six of those short fat round coffee cans painted white, with beautiful purple pansies growing in them."

Even their mailbox, a gay peasant-painted desk accessory that everyone exclaims over, began life as one of the wooden boxes that two-pound squares of cheese come in.

Making do with what you have is a fine principle that deserves everyone's admiration. But can't it be a woeful-dreary business the way some people go about it? My Easter bonnet is doffed to Bob's and Georgie's way of making it a game they play with spirit and lots of laughs!

"You ought to be proud. Not many fathers are smarter than their sons!"

LADIES' HOME

THE MAGAZINE WOMEN BELIEVE IN • MAY 1946 • FIFTEEN CENTS

Journal

ESCAPE FROM YESTERDAY

A Complete Novel

BY MARY HASTINGS BRADLEY

PUBLIC LIBRARY

Red Rope
Binder
Gaylord Bros., Inc.
Makers
Stockton, Calif.
PAT. JAN. 21, 1908

erfect e's Day
ift...

THE FRILL — Finest rayon satin. A striking daytime slipper. Around $5.00.

ome and slippers go together...

Give Daniel Green slippers for their exquisitely styled beauty, yes—but more than that, give Daniel Greens for their superb tradition of craftsmanship. For every Daniel Green slipper is made with the skill, care, and materials of a custom-built shoe. From the expensive satin or felt that covers them, down to hidden details your eye cannot see, Daniel Green slippers are built to last, to keep their beauty, to "stay-in-shape" longer. For Mother's Day—give nothing less than Daniel Green.

Y—Lustrous satin, wool Dee-Gee clusive with Daniel round $4.50.

Daniel Green

COMFY SLIPPERS

THEY STAY IN SHAPE

UNDER-COVER STUFF

By Bernardine Kielty

INTERNATIONAL

America's No. 1 Man of Action stirs coffee as well as history. Capt. Butcher tells the story of General Ike from Africa to V. E.

MY THREE YEARS WITH EISENHOWER is a war book that women will like. Because no matter how patriotic one is or how much one truly cares—it is not easy to keep one's mind on battles, if one is a woman. But this book is something else. It's the diary kept by one of Eisenhower's good friends, Capt. Harry C. Butcher, a Navy man of all things, whom Eisenhower took to the wars with him for just this purpose. Captain Butcher gives a day-by-day account of life with General Ike that will delight your soul. He tells about all General Ike's visitors: Mountbatten, Montgomery, Alexander, Tedder, Marshall, Bradley, Clark, Patton, Harry Hopkins and Mrs. Roosevelt. He goes into the "P.M." at great length. That's Churchill. The P.M. only puffs at his cigars without finishing them, Captain Butcher tells us, and only sips at his drinks. But he loves to talk and argue far into the night, and General Ike runs down the hall at Chequers, trying to avoid him so that he, Eisenhower, can get his sleep. When invited to meet Bernard Shaw for luncheon, Eisenhower says, "To hell with it. I have work to do."

The book is a mosaic made up of trivia, each unimportant in itself, but building up, curiously enough, when put together, into a full, satisfying portrait of America's No. 1 man of action. The scene moves from Gibraltar before the African landing, to Malta before Sicily, to England before Normandy, and winds up in the room in Reims in which the Germans surrendered. Between the lines there is the constant unbearable waiting, the compromising, the clash of wills. It is "behind the scenes" of the greatest drama in which our country has taken part since 1776. But it reads like gossip.

• • •

On the afternoon of February 21, Miss Tilli Bean caused a traffic jam in East 52nd Street, New York. Two Rolls Royces got into the fray, taxi drivers yelled, the traffic cop was helpless, and great piles of unshoveled snow added to the confusion. In the swanky River Club, at the dead end of the street where a high-class fence overlooks the East River, her publishers were tendering Miss Tilli Chase, author of I LOVE MISS TILLI BEAN, a party. But the confusion was only on the outside. Inside all was decorum. Early in the season though it was, spring hats were conspicuous—and we mean conspicuous—the food was delectable, and people of elegance were lined up for ham-on-rye and fried meat cakes in a manner reminiscent (we're told) of the long ago free-lunch counters. Miss Chase looked the Vogue figure that she is (her mother is Edna Woolman Chase, Vogue's editor-in-chief). She wore a pale pink camellia on the bosom of her very suave gray dress and a bunch of violets at her waistline. (Camellia for "unpretending excellence," violets for "faithfulness.") When we saw her last year down in South Carolina she looked more like a Tilli Bean. There she was wearing a bright-green skirt and a purple sweater, an orange-and-green-and-blue striped large scarf, and her hair in two pigtails, with bright little bows at the ends, stuck out on each side of her head. The effect was startling but it was pleasant. She looked like a little girl, and she turned out, on acquaintance, to be an awfully smart little girl She had some competition with a certain titled lady of letters from the Riviera who

(Continued on Page 126)

REPRINTED PERMISSION THE NEW YORKER. COPYRIGHT THE F.-R. CORPORATION

"They went right to the point in naming this. It's just called frankly, 'Get Your Man.'"

IVES

JANE RICE (The Willapawampus) writes: "My childhood was spent in a Kentucky river town complete with paddle-wheelers, tobacco wagons, and auctions in the courthouse square. I was educated in convents; and my business career (in a radio-tube factory) was terminated by marriage. I have an eight-year-old child whose every activity is jet-propelled. I also have peepers on the front lawn, a vacuum cleaner that whistles when it's happy, and a dog whose father was apparently a raccoon. I like corn on the cob, men's pajamas, zoos and ghost stories; and I dislike galoshes, mathematics, people who put burnt matches back into the box, surrealism and stewed tomatoes!"

LORETTA BURROUGH, author of Cocker of the Walk, writes: "I was born in New York in 1909, and was educated there. While at Columbia University in 1931, the JOURNAL ran a college short-story contest and gave me the one-thousand-dollar First Prize. That, to say the very least, seemed quite encouraging, and, as a result, I have been at it ever since! My hobbies are amateur photography and gardening. I'm unmarried and have one dog—a know-it-all cocker spaniel who is more or less the inspiration for (and almost the spitting image of) the hero of Cocker of the Walk."

VAL TEAL, author of Button, Button, says: "I was born in North Dakota, moved to Minnesota, and have finally landed up in Omaha, Nebraska. I write stories for children's magazines, and have my second child's book on its way, so I can soon say that I write children's books. I do what most women like me do, only more of it—maybe because I never seem to know in the wonderful freshness of morning that the day and my energy are limited. I have an amateur-photography-loving husband and three sons, one of whom is an ardent nature student, another a collector of rock specimens, and the third a budding actor. My greatest wish is for more time; my greatest dislike is a lot of people; and my greatest love is a lot of other people!"

Journal CONTENTS

MAY, 1946

Vol. LXIII, No. 5

NOVEL COMPLETE IN THIS ISSUE

ESCAPE FROM YESTERDAY . . . . . Mary Hastings Bradley 17

FICTION

COCKER OF THE WALK . . . . . Loretta Burrough 20
LITTLE DUCK AND THE SHE-WOLF . . . . . Dwight Hutchison 22
THE WILLAPAWAMPUS . . . . . Jane Rice 24 BUTTON, BUTTON —— . . . . . Val Teal 28
PERHAPS YOU'LL SEE, SOMEDAY . . . . . Doris Hume 30
BACK TRACK TO LOVE . . . . . Anya Seton 32
THE DARK WOOD (Third part of five) . . . . . Christine Weston 48

SPECIAL FEATURES

"MANNERS MAKYTH MAN" . . . . . Struthers Burt 6
THE PREREQUISITE FOR PEACE . . . . . Dorothy Thompson 6
SERGEANT MICKEY AND GENERAL IKE
Michael J. McKeogh in collaboration with Richard Lockridge 26
WOMEN WITH A BROOM . . . . . William B. Monroe, Jr. 34
CAN AMERICA BE PROSPEROUS IN A SEA OF HUMAN MISERY?
Gretta Palmer 35
IF YOU ASK ME . . . . . Eleanor Roosevelt 45
HOW AMERICA LIVES: THE HOUSEWIFE'S DILEMMA
Dorothy Cameron Disney 167
HOW TO PREPARE YOUR DAUGHTER FOR A DIVORCE . Marcelene Cox 174
SO YOU WANT TO LIVE LONG . . . . . George Lawton, Ph.D. 202
WHAT MUSIC ARE YOU LIKE? . . . . . Marguerite Barze 229

GENERAL FEATURES

UNDER-COVER STUFF . . . . . Bernardine Kielty 4
NO PARKING, PLEASE (The Sub-Deb) . . . . . Maureen Daly 8
OUR READERS WRITE US . . . . . 10
FIFTY YEARS AGO ■ JOURNAL ABOUT TOWN . . . . . 15
REFERENCE LIBRARY . . . . . 138
THIS IS A GANGER . . . . . Munro Leaf 161
STAND STRAIGHT FOR GOOD HEALTH . . . Dr. Herman N. Bundesen 164
DIARY OF DOMESTICITY . . . . . Gladys Taber 230
ASK ANY WOMAN . . . . . Marcelene Cox 236

FASHIONS AND BEAUTY

SHAPING YOUR WARDROBE FOR SUMMER . . . . Wilhela Cushman 36
THE BLOUSE BEAUTIFUL . . . . . Ruth Mary Packard 40
MAKE IT A FOURSOME . . . . . Nora O'Leary 42
MORNING, NOON AND NIGHTTIME TOO . . . . . Dawn Crowell 44
IN HONOR OF COTTON . . . . . Wilhela Cushman 46
MR. AND MRS. TOGETHER AGAIN . . . . . Ruth Mary Packard 176
WAIST SPACE . . . . . Louise Paine Benjamin 179

GARDEN, INTERIOR DECORATION, ARCHITECTURE

NOTHING BUT ZINNIAS . . . . . Richard Pratt 206
A HOUSE TO FIT THE FAMILY . . . . . Richard Pratt 218
A ROOMFUL OF IDEAS . . . . . H. T. Williams 227
VICTORIAN SILVER . . . . . Henrietta Murdock 232

FOOD AND HOMEMAKING

KEEP IT UNDER YOUR HAT . . . . . Ann Batchelder 50
LINE A DAY . . . . . Ann Batchelder 52
PEAS AND PEARS OR PIES AND PANCAKES? . . . Lonella G. Shouer 180
"IF I HAD IT ALL TO DO OVER" . . . . . Judy Barry 182
NEVER A DULL MEAL . . . . . Sheila Hibben 192
CONVERSATION PIECE . . . . . Ruth Mills Teague 198
REPORT TO THE HOUSEWIFE . . . . . Judy Barry 214

POETRY

SONG AFTER WARTIME, Elizabeth-Ellen Long, 54 • IF YOU WERE HERE, Joan Story Wright, 62 • THE GARDEN SNOB, Marion Sturges-Jones, 67 ■ MEMO, Bernice Slote, 72 • CHOICE, Catherine Haydon Jacobs, 82 ■ BEING, Janet Weinberger, 95 • LINES TO A LITTLE GIRL, Ruth Mary DuBois, 106 • ■■■ TIDE, Doris Bryant, 115 • GREEN REMAINDER, Marjorie Lederer Lee, 119 • MY MOTHER LOVED HER ROSES, Jenny Lind Porter, 131 LAST DAYS OF CAMP, Virginia Brasier, 140 ■ CHILD IN SPRING, Sara Van Alstyne Allen, 150 • MODERN LOVE SONG, Harold Applebaum, 163 • BROTHER, Eleanor Alletta Chaffee, 175 • CORNER TABLE, Ethel Jacobson, 223 SONNET FOR A HAPPY EX-WARRIOR, Georgie Starbuck Galbraith, 234

Cover Design by Wilhela Cushman

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL (The Home Journal) is published ■■ last Friday of month preceding its date.

The names of all characters in all Journal fiction are fictitious. Any resemblance to actual persons, living or dead, is a coincidence.

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL PRICES

U. S. and Possessions, Canada, Newfoundland, Labrador, Costa Rica, Cuba, Nicaragua, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Panama, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America except the Guianas, 1 yr., $2; 2 yrs., $3; ■ yrs., $4; ■ yrs., $5. Other Countries, 1 year, $3.

Remit by Money Order or by Draft on a bank in the U. ■. payable in U. S. Funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

UNCONDITIONAL GUARANTY—We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The title of the Ladies' Home Journal is registered in the U. S. Patent Office and in Foreign Countries. The entire contents are copyright, 1946 (Trade Mark Registered), by The Curtis Publishing Company in United States and Great Britain. London, 6, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W. C. All rights reserved. ENTERED AS SECOND-CLASS ■■■TTER MAY 6, 1911, AT THE POST OFFICE ■■ PHILADELPHIA, PENNA., UNDER ACT OF ■■■ CH 3, 1879.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

Send change of address (naming publication) or other communica■■■ is to

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY

Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

Change must reach ■■ at least five weeks before the date of the ■■■ with which it is to take effect. Send old address with your new, enclosing if possible your address label. Duplicate copies cannot be sent. The Post Office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage.

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER'S

LION'S ROAR

Published in this space every month

The gre■ star of scree

Sometimes we wish we were a nove■ —just for the thrill we'd get from s■ ing our words brought magically the screen.

★ ★ ★ ★

As M-G-M has ju■ done, for instanc■ with A. J. Croni■ modern romant■ masterpiece, "T■ Green Years".

★ ★ ★ ★

If we had writt■ "The Green Years", we'd be especial■ proud of having created a whole gala■ of fascinating characters.

★ ★ ★ ★

And then, in a hushed and darken■ theatre, they would shine before us, t■ living images of what we'd envisione■

★ ★ ★ ★

There would be young Robert Shann■ —handsome, sensitive, fighting his wa■ in a hostile world. And Alison, Robert■ sweetheart, loveliest of all our heroine■ And Grandfather Gow, as rollicking rogue as ever ca■oused across the scree■

★ ★ ★ ★

We'd see that first kiss ■■ the lovers. and Robie's struggle against a friendless town ...and the feud of Grandpa Gow with his ghoulish in-laws!

★ ★ ★ ★

And, if we were that famous novelist seeing our story so superbly brought to the screen, we'd marvel at how perfectly each character has bee■ cast, as though born to the role!

★ ★ ★ ★

There couldn't be a better "Dandie" Gow than Charles Coburn; a more splendid Robert than Tom Drake; ■ lovelier Alison than Beverly Tyler. This, by the way, is Beverly's first—and very impressive—featured role.

★ ★ ★ ★

Laurels would certainly go to Director Victor Saville and Producer Leon Gordon; to screen play writers Robert Ardrey and Sonya Levien; and to a fine supporting cast: Hume Cronyn, Gladys Cooper, Dean Stockwell, Selena Royle, Jessica Tandy, and Richard Haydn.

★ ★ ★ ★

Yes, if we were A. J. Cronin, we'd be very happy to see "The Green Years" on the screen. But since we're a columnist and not the novelist, we take our measure of delight in typing out this sincere tribute and signing it

—Leo

How to grow a Model

by

ONE WHO IS

1. LOVELY LILA KILNER has been admired by millions—she's a famous fashion model.

She's "Timmy" to friends, and New York neighbors know her as Mrs. William Husted, a model mother. She took time out from her career to start a family. But now her daughter, Paige, is almost 2 and Lila's lovely complexion is again brightening the pages of magazines.

Lila should know how to grow an American beauty—she's one herself! Paige's complexion is "babied" with Ivory Soap care, just like Mom's! "Of course our beauty routine includes Ivory," Lila says. "Purity and mildness mean a lot in complexion soap."

OFF TO A GOOD START—here's an early ge, at 10 months.

cture of Pai

"You co ld call it a page from an Ivory mily albun ry—I know more doctors advise r I used Iv ther soap! Its pure, mild lather than any tender baby skin—and Paige grand fo it floats like a boat." ves the way

3. LILA HAS A 24-HOUR-A-DAY JOB . . . Marketing, housekeeping and modeling keep Lila busy. But no matter how she hustles, she's never careless about her complexion.

"You can't be careless, either," she says, "if you want that Ivory Look!"

4. DO YOU WANT TO BE SOMEBODY'S PIN-UP? Then try Paige and Lila's beauty secret! Change to regular, gentle Ivory care—and see how much softer, smoother, lovelier your complexion can be.

You can have that Ivory Look, too!

Use Every Sliver of Ivory—it contains scarce materials. Don't waste it!

More doctors advise Ivory than any other soap!

99 44/100 % PURE . . . IT FLOATS

Journal

"MANNERS MAKYTH MAN"

BY STRUTHERS BURT

YOU remember, perhaps, the retort of James McNeill Whistler, the renowned American artist, to the disillusioned lady who remarked that manners amounted to nothing, and were all on the surface. He said:

"Exactly where they should be."

Having none himself, he was not much of a judge. But if he meant that manners are an outer and visible sign of an inner grace and therefore should be shown, he was correct. If, on the other hand, he agreed with the lady that they were mere polish, but that polish in itself was valuable, he couldn't have been more wrong.

Manners and polish are not the same thing, and the confusion has plagued mankind for thousands of years. If tomorrow everyone understood what actual manners mean, and then practiced them, overnight half our troubles would disappear.

Wax and rubbing make a floor shine, but all the wax and rubbing in the world can't make a bad floor good.

Polish is excellent. It is what makes manners easy and beautiful. But polish by itself has little worth, nor is any intelligent person long deceived by it. "A good manner"—in other words, polish—is a totally different phrase from the phrase "good manners."

One of the virtues of the English language is that in all its multitude of words there is no perfect synonym. Furthermore, words being new and fresh, meant more to our ancestors than they do to us. When they invented words, or used them, they had a fairly clear idea of what they were saying. Manners mean "procedure, behavior"; and unlike manner, or polish, they do not mean solely outer behavior, but that inner behavior which expresses itself in your outer procedure. For example, when you say that someone is "a civil man," you are saying much more than you imagine. You are not merely saying that a man is polite. You are saying that this polite and thoughtful man, aware of his own rights and dignity, and the rights and dignity of others, is a good citizen. Civility means good citizenship, for civic, civil and civilization come from the same Latin root. Our ancestors, therefore, meant that decent manners are a requirement of decent citizenship, and so one of the cornerstones of civilization. Indeed, they are the beginnings of civilization, and the continuance and increase of it. And since they are the beginnings of civilization, and the continuance and increase of it,

(Continued on Page 145)

BRUCE GOULD and BEATRICE BLACKMAR GOULD, Editors

MARY BASS, Executive Editor LAURA LOU BROOKMAN, Managing Editor

Associate Editors: HUGH MAC NAIR KAHLER • JOHN SCOTT MABON • BERNARDINE KIELTY • ANN BATCHELDER WILHELM • CUSHMAN • FRANK ELTONHEAD • ALICE BLINN • LOUISE PAINE BENJAMIN • RICHARD PRATT HENRIETTA MURDOCK • LOUELLA G. SHOUER • MARY LEA PAGE • MAUREEN DALY • DAWN CROWELL

Assistant Editors: JOHN WERNER • CHARLOTTE JOHNSON • ROBERT ATHERTON • DONALD STUART • RUTH MARY PACKARD • RUTH MATTHEWS • NORA O'LEARY ALICE CONKLIN G • MILDRED ARNOLD • JUDY BARRY • JUNE TORREY • ELEANOR COLE • MARJORIE LEDERER LEE • JUNE CUNNINGHAM • EVELYN SAGER

Editorial Assistants: BETTY NILES GRAY • KATHERINE WEST MILLER • SELMA RUTHERFORD BURGESS • ALICE KASTBERG • ANNE EINSELEN • DOROTHY VOORHEES LILY GLENDINNING • FRANCES RODMAN • DOROTHY C. SELBY • JAN WEYL

The Prerequisite for Peace

By Dorothy Thompson

A RECENT article in the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, presenting to the Big Three the plea of Mary Doe, has resulted in many letters to the author, all asking, "What shall we do to promote enduring peace?" That is a legitimate question, but it exposes what is, perhaps, an American weakness, which is to believe in action previous to careful enough thought. Action which is not blind, or action which may not lead to the opposite goal than the one desired, begins with careful revaluation of past actions and assumptions, and the rejection, modification or reconfirmation of previously accepted ideas or programs.

It seems to me that our failure to create even the beginning of a real peace arises from the popular assumption that peace is an end in itself. The desire for peace—at any price—is, as often as not, the direct cause of war. Peace is the by-product of a world order, reasonably satisfactory to most nations and men, as war is the by-product of an accumulation of fears, frustrations and grievances. To have peace, therefore, involves the establishment of a world order compatible with existing standards of justice, providing proper institutions for adjustment and redress of grievances, offering legitimate hopes for a rising standard of life and culture, and providing protection by adequate power.

All civilizations rest on and are maintained by power. In general, the fault of peace lovers is to deny or ignore this fact and believe that peace can be maintained by purely negative pacifism—by the repudiation of power.

Peace, here at home, is maintained by law. But the law would fail without institutions for its interpretation—the courts; and for its enforcement—the police; just as institutions of enforcement would be tyrannous unless they were the servants of law.

In our domestic society, peace fails where the law is ambiguous or inadequate, as it is in respect of the legal rights and responsibilities of organized workers and employers. The law, for instance, grants to workers the right to organize in trades-unions for the purpose of collective bargaining. But the law fails to define what a trade-union is, nor does it legally fix its duties, responsibilities or limitations. It grants the right to strike and picket, but is ambiguous regarding the border line between picketing and rioting. It has never dealt with the problem of the "just" wage, in relation to production and prices. The result is that our industrial system is a series of intermittent wars patched up with temporary negotiated truces. This condition of affairs will either continue to the revolutionary outcome of "unconditional surrender" of one or another class, or until peace emerges as the outcome of adequate and enforced law.

International law, enforced by the existence of superior power on the side of its adherents and defenders, is the primary condition to create the by-product of peace. The present United Nations structure neither creates nor provides for the construction of world law. It is, instead, an apparatus for collective bargaining between Great Powers, using all the pressures, strategies, armies, threats, geographical positions and satellite-allies that can be mobilized over any specific issue. Every treaty, declaration or agreement, and every action based on varying interpretations of them, is thrown into the arena of these pressures. Each Great Power sits in judgment on its own case, and casts the decisive vote in the jury, while small countries become, in fact, small change, to be passed around amongst Great Powers as compensation for a negotiated truce. Thus each meeting ends in a temporary truce instead of in peace, which always, everywhere, is the victory of law, law being the embodiment and codification of principle.

The essential nature of law is that it have universal validity, and equality of application. There cannot be one law protecting the rights of, say, Poland or Denmark, and another protecting the rights of the U. S. or the U. S. S. R. Not all nations can contribute equally to the maintenance and enforcement of law, as not all persons and states contribute equally to the maintenance and enforcement of Federal law in the United States. But the United States does not become disinterested in the apprehension of a kidnaper in Mississippi, because that state contributes so little to its expenses.

Therefore we, as mothers of sons, and American citizens, interested in securing peace, should concentrate

(Continued on Page 136)

Want to Step up Your Family's E.Q.?

Energy Quotient

1 You can do it any morning! Simply by adding crisp, tempting Kellogg's RICE KRISPIES, with berries, milk, and sugar, to an ordinary skimpy breakfast! And look how much extra energy it can supply . . .*

2 From each delectable RICE KRISPIES' breakfast bowl, you can get enough energy to operate a foot-treadle sewing machine for 2½ hours.

3 While Daughter can get enough energy to pound away busily at a typewriter for 2 solid hours.

4 And that active boy can get enough energy to whip easily through a 2-hour period of shopwork.

5 While Father, bless him, can get not only all the energy he needs to drive to and from work (½ hour each way)— but have enough left for a game of ping-pong!

6 In addition, Kellogg's RICE KRISPIES are restored to natural whole-grain food values in energy vitamin $B_1$, niacin, and iron. Get a regular-sized package at your grocer's.

A Different Cereal for Extra Energy Every Day—with Kellogg's Variety!

It's fun for everyone to pick from Kellogg's Variety—6 different cereals, 10 generous packages, all in one carton! Some flaked, some popped, some shredded. Includes Kellogg's RICE KRISPIES, CORN FLAKES, PEP, RAISIN BRAN, SHREDDED WHEAT, KRUMBLES. Each a food for extra energy . . . with whole-grain important protective nutrients too. For fun plus food value, get Kellogg's Variety!

*These statements about extra energy are based on authoritative, scientific sources, considering the ordinary skimpy breakfast = about 300 food-energy units. Eat a better breakfast!

"THE GRAINS ARE GREAT FOODS"— W. K. Kellogg

No Parking, Please!

TONIGHT'S THE NIGHT

It happens to every girl—that mellow moonlight-and-roses feeling when the man of the moment begins to look like the biggest thing in her life. If you're a wide-awake, bright-eyed kind of gal who gets a kick out of good books, good football games and good brisk walks in the rain, it's inevitable. You're going to get a kick out of good dates too! The feeling is not completely new. You may have "liked" boys ever since you were an off-sized character back in the pigtails-and-pinafore department and the little chaps from round the neighborhood made good company for playing hide-and-seek and Red, Red Rover. But as you hit the upper age brackets, anywhere from a freshman to a senior in high school, your attitude changes. Boys are still fun, only now they are more fun, and instead of just "liking" them as you once did, you feel a new "appreciation" for them. (Maybe you're a smart character and think you know a better word, but when you spot a tall, dark and crew-cut fellow sitting in the back row in history class, see him stand up with poise and assurance to give the right answers and you decide, "That's for me"—well, isn't that "appreciation"?)

And the more boys you know, the more you want to know. You want to know boys who can make the basketball team, hold their own in a student debate in assembly or write a good column for the school paper. You want to date boys who are smooth dancers, know all the do's and don'ts about dating and are smart enough to push the button for a Woody Herman disk when they slip a nickel in the juke box. And then, suddenly—you're content to know just one. Because it's happened. You've suddenly met one boy who has almost everything you can ask for in any man! There may be a few things missing (he isn't so tall as you'd hoped, nor does he drive a red convertible coupé), but with this dream stuff so close at hand—who are you to quibble? You've found someone whom you can like and who likes you. Someone you can really "appreciate"—and that affection just can't put itself into words. So you've got to find some other way of expressing yourself, and to be completely articulate it will take—well, one good-night kiss, at least!

CAN THIS BE LOVE?

Of course, this is the old feeling you've heard so much about. It isn't just a hubba-hubba business; it's something much more important than that. You can't wait to get to math class each morning because he sits almost behind you, second aisle on the left; you can't begin your homework at night till after seven-thirty because that's the time he calls, and if he doesn't call that evening, you can't do your homework at all for wondering about him; and you carried a slip of paper round in your pocket for weeks, worn and tattered, because he'd scrawled "See you at 8:30" on it the first night you two had a date together. It's a wonderful feeling, all right; it's exciting, it's stimulating, it keeps you awake at night! But just a minute, honey-chile—haven't you felt this way before?

How about that supersharp fellow you knew back in the days when you were still a freshman? The one who asked you to wear his class ring one Saturday night (but the mood was off and the ring returned before the week was out)? And the boy who worked as a lifeguard down at the beach last year? And the fellow with whom you went on a blind date when you were visiting your cousin in St. Louis, and the soda jerker down at the drugstore who went to your school and who asked you to wait for him every night after work so he could walk you home? You liked them all, didn't you—and more than a little? It isn't that you meant to be fickle, but you just fell in love with all the boys in succession!

A DIME A DOZEN

And a kiss is an important thing. It is simply a physical expression which says "I like you very much," but if you do like a boy very much, you want him to know it! You show your interest first just by talking to him, smiling when he looks your way; you can give him a hint that he's the kind of boy who's No. 1 on your hit parade by saving your Friday nights just for him; and then, after a number of dates, lots of deep conversations and some real fun together—you may realize that this isn't just "any boy." This is someone special. And since your kiss is based on honest affection, it means something important to both of you. But if you change man-interests and dates every other evening, what happens to that sincerity? You may feel at the moment that tonight's the night, but who was that boy we saw you with last night! (That was no "boy"—that was the fellow you thought you loved, remember?)

Or are you, by any slim chance, one of those female high-school characters who have been fooling themselves with the old tale that "a girl has to neck to get around"? You may think that that's the true story, that the object of any fellow's affection will automatically be the gal from whom he gets the most . . . affection. But you just haven't got as far as the punch line!

Many a gal gets around so much for a while that the whole whirl leaves her dizzy; she loses her sense of what's what completely. She may think that all any boy wants is a gal with whom to hold hands, pat cheeks and rub noses on the front doorstep. She goes through the same routine with six out of ten fellows, and she's suddenly surprised when boys don't call her any more! That gal just forgot that anything too easy to get is considered "cheap," and that's just what happened to her. It doesn't take long for fellows to catch on to a girl's dating reputation—and a word to the guys is sufficient!

WHAT'S YOUR STORY?

Let's forget what this "moonlight madness" (all right, put in your own word) does to your dating rating and your reputation and figure out what it does to you. You may not spend much time on self-analysis, taking yourself apart to see what ticks. But if you did, you would realize that you are made up of hundreds of complex "reactions," all of which add up to make your total personality. You're a sensitive young character. Some things make you happy, some make you blue, some excite you, some make you wish today was tomorrow; but every single thing that happens to you in your life-time is important. You've always thought of yourself as a pretty special person, so keep that thought in mind! One kiss won't put you out of the pink-angel department with any boy, but you know that one kiss leads to another; you may have wanted to kiss a fellow good night because he's considered a good date and you want to see more of him, or simply because he's your guy and that's just the way you feel—but before you know it, you're necking! You can suddenly find yourself with a lot of emotions just too hot to handle! And don't even try to fool yourself with the smug assumption, "I'm not that kind of girl!"

So take time out occasionally to think about your date life. And take it slow and easy, for a smart gal will know how to keep those extra stars out of her eyes. This is one time you have to see what you're doing!

BUSY THIS FRIDAY NIGHT?

If you're not—if you're the kind of gal who has to sit home listening to the radio, playing with her little brother and working last week's crossword puzzles while other girls are having fun—now's the time to get on the ball and start rolling. Just send 5 cents to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania, for the new Sub-Deb booklet, HOW ABOUT A DATE?, No. 2269.

What's ahead for Sweet Sixteen?

It all depends . . .

So much happiness, so much opportunity —if she's careful.

So much trouble, so much failure—if she isn't.

Whether it's marriage you're after, or a career, or both—always put your best foot forward.

Above all, don't make the ghastly mistake of taking your breath for granted.

That's one matter you never can be sure about.

And there's nothing like a case of halitosis (unpleasant breath) to start you off with two strikes against you.

Why take unnecessary chances on offending when Listerine Antiseptic provides such an easy, effective and wholly delightful precaution?

Almost at once it makes your breath sweeter, fresher, less likely to offend.

Get into the habit of using Listerine morning and night and between times, before any date where you wish to be at your best.

While some cases of halitosis are of systemic origin, most cases, say some authorities, are due to the bacterial fermentation of tiny food particles clinging to mouth surfaces. Listerine Antiseptic halts such fermentation, then overcomes the odors fermentation causes. Almost immediately your breath is fresher, sweeter—less likely to offend.

LAMBERT PHARMACAL COMPANY, St. Louis, Mo.

LISTERINE ANTISEPTIC for Oral Hygiene

More beautiful than ever . . . in

Velva Leg Film

So easy to apply and quick to dry, Elizabeth Arden's leg make-up stays on the legs and off the clothes. Water-resistant. Clings, until deliberately washed away, with a blemish-concealing sheer-textured beauty that trims the ankle — slims the leg. Be sure to wear Velva Leg Film with bathing suits or shorts, it makes your legs look sun-burnished . . . far more lovely.

Sun Beige, light—Sun Bronze, medium—Sun Copper, dark

Approximately 20 pairs in the 5 oz. bottle, 1.00
Almost 50 pairs in the 12 oz. economy size, 2.00

SLEEK . . . the fragrant cream that removes hair and leaves the legs satin smooth, 1.00

VELVA LEG FILM BUFFER . . . for polishing after applying Velva Leg Film. Must be thoroughly dry, then buff lightly for a sheer-textured finish, .50

Elizabeth Arden

All prices plus taxes, except Buffer

Our Readers Write Us

Who Doesn't Remember Mama?

Mosinee, Wisconsin.

Dear Editors: I sincerely believe that no career is truly greater than that of homemaker. For who is going to comfort a man and help him keep his self-respect when he has apparently failed in his work? Not the public, nor his business associates, nor even his friends. That's a job no one can do so well as his wife. She it is who heals his wounded pride, gives him new courage and fires him with renewed ambition.

And if it were not for fine, brave mothers, who would train each new generation—mold the youth of our land into useful, worthy citizens? My conception of a good mother is not one who merely sees that her youngsters are properly fed and clothed, but one who instills character-building qualities—teaching the value of the basic virtues and the importance of being a good son or daughter, a loyal citizen, a follower of Christ.

ELIZABETH LOOK.

Annie Should Cook Up a Book

Caracas, Venezuela.

Dear Ann Batchelder: If you haven't already published a cookbook, complete with a Line-A-Day section and a poetry section as well as recipes, please do. If such is already in print, send me one—quickly. If not, put my name on the list of purchasers.

Of all the food and what-to-do-with-it-where departments there are in the magazines, companies and clubs, yours is way and by far the best. And why more editors have not grasped the simple fact that humor and imagination have a rightful place in the kitchen—rightful? necessary is more accurate—I don't know. You have. We thank you.

Yours truly,
ELEANOR HOPKINS HERASIMCHUK.

We have told Ann over and over that she could make a million dollars with another cookbook, besides Ann Batchelder's Own Cook Book, but she thinks money isn't everything. ED.

It Ain't What it Used to Be

Senatobia, Mississippi.

Dear Editors: The JOURNAL isn't what it once was. Sincerely yours, MRS. H. C. FEATHERSTONE.

Who is? ED.

Maybe it's Better

Wimbledon, North Dakota.

Dear Editors: For my money the JOURNAL is the best women's magazine published. 50 Years Ago is always so interesting; things and styles have surely changed for the better since then.

Sincerely yours,
MRS. ART VENHINGEN.

German Children Not Wanted

Sandvika, Norway.

Dear Editors: I don't think you will find many people in Norway today wanting to help the German people. Just after the war of 1914–18 families all over our country had German and Austrian children in their homes and got fond of them. The first thing the Germans did when they invaded Norway was to send these children, now soldiers, back to the same places, because of their knowledge of the districts. Poor boys! If they tried to communicate with their former adopted parents, they soon got to know that they were not welcome.

Of course we pity the poor German children of today. And oughtn't we to do something for them—we having been helped with gifts from all over the world?

I'm afraid we can't stand the thought of taking another German child into our homes. There are a couple of thousand with German fathers here—they won't be tolerated.

If we could only stretch out our hands towards each other—as your President Truman said—and start in a better way. Good will! What a mighty word, but so difficult to practice.

With kind wishes,
Yours,
MRS. ELI LUND.

Hoosiers Live Abundantly Too

Coal City, Indiana.

Dear Editors: I doubt that the Pennsylvania Dutch have anything on us Hoosiers. We have pickles in our cellar too: stuffed mangoes, beets, cucumbers, green tomato, corn salad, pickled peaches and pears. All kinds of vegetables and meats canned in our pressure cookers, fruits, butters, jams and jellies. We have compiled a cookbook with our favorite recipes of pork cake, cheese and amber pies, chicken wiggle, tomato noodles, and so on.

Of course we are proud of our good living because it comes through hard work, planning and ambition, and our old grandmother taught us to put away something for the other fellow too. The best was always saved for company, and it was almost a crime to serve something special without a guest to share it.

Sincerely,
HAZEL BLACKKETTER.

Memorial for the Future

Mount Royal, P. Q., Canada.

Dear Editors: We in the Town of Mount Royal are building St. Peter's Parish Hall for our war memorial. The auditorium will seat 500 people. There will be dressing rooms for plays and concerts; classrooms for Sunday school; a modern kitchen.

The slogan for the Town of Mount Royal is "The family that plays together, stays together." The rector has added: "The family that prays together, stays together."

Thus our boys will not have died in vain. We will have caught the torch and theirs will be a living memorial where the principles for which they died will be instilled into the minds and lives of future generations. Yours very sincerely, ORA SHACKLETON.

One Out of Twenty Persons Has a Nervous Breakdown

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Dear Editors: All during the war there was a hidden and terrible help shortage, on staffs in mental institutions throughout the country. One hospital, for instance, housed 6086 patients—with a capacity for 3587. One nurse to 170 patients. One attendant to 212 patients. Hard work, low pay, lack of recreation, and the usual war drains were responsible.

Few people are aware of the situation. But apathy might stagger if faced by the fact (and it is a fact) that one out of twenty will sooner or later spend time in a mental institution.

In June, 1943, the American Friends Service Committee began to enlist young women to meet the institutional emergency; the first unit of Women's Service in Mental Hospitals was established at Philadelphia State Hospital.

Under the WSMH plan, a unit member worked for an average period of five months, at the usual attendant's salary, about $70 a month plus maintenance. It was her job to bathe, feed, dress and comfort the patient, helping to educate him, if possible, toward making his way again in the "outside world." On sick wards, a WSMH member frequently took on some of the duties of a nurse. Even on a nine-hour working day stretched around double routine plus emergencies, the girls found time to make diverting innovations in the patients' vacuous lives. One group who sat for years with folded hands now has learned how to unravel burlap for rug-making material.

By the summer of 1945, the number of WSMH members had grown from 8 to 53, with a second unit at the N. J. State Hospital. Most of the girls (aged 18 to 45) have been college students, with a large proportion of psychology, sociology and education majors. They represented various religions and three races: white.

(Continued on Page 13)

Copyright 1946, Better Vision Institute, Inc.

Danger! EYES AT WORK against odds

There's hardly a waking moment when your eyes aren't working. They work for you—or against you. They control 80% of all your motions—help you make the right motions or the wrong ones. They influence 83% of all your learning—help you learn correctly or incorrectly.

If you strain, abuse or neglect your eyes—you pay for it at work, at play and in your health. But if you take good care of your eyes, they're pretty sure to take good care of you. Remember this fact!

With the professional skill and counsel of your ophthalmologist or optometrist—and the technical training and services of your ophthalmic dispenser (optician)—you can know that your eyes always will be doing their best for you.

There's a world of joy in good seeing. Let modern science help you to know that joy throughout life. BETTER VISION INSTITUTE, INC., 630 Fifth Avenue, New York 20, N. Y.

BETTER VISION FOR BETTER LIVING

BVI

For lovely You... new Improved

POSTWAR* ARRID

No other Deodorant

stops perspiration and odor so effectively, yet so safely![1]

It's the improved deodorant you've been waiting for! The new, soft, smooth, creamy deodorant that gives you the maximum protection possible against perspiration and odor with safety to your skin and clothes! No other deodorant of any sort . . . liquid or cream . . . meets the standard set by this wonderful new Postwar Arrid for stopping perspiration and odor with safety!

so Soft! so Smooth! so Creamy!

★ In the same familiar package . . . marked with a star above the price

Summer Fashion Forecast

The superb wide skirt . . . for graceful dancing! The wide midriff waistband . . . to make your waist divinely slim! The camisole blouse of white eyelet embroidery, to make you look so beguiling! And Arrid to keep you looking that way. Use Arrid daily. No other deodorant stops perspiration and odor so effectively, yet so safely!

THREE IMPORTANT FASHION NOTES! The bare-shoulder look of the new drawstring neckline. The perky look of the new puffed sleeves. The immaculate look of clothes protected by daily use of the new, improved Arrid. Arrid is nearly twice as effective in stopping perspiration as any other leading deodorant cream!

Only safe, gentle Arrid

gives you this thorough protection

1. No other deodorant stops perspiration and odor so effectively, yet so safely.[1]
2. Nearly twice as effective in stopping perspiration as any other leading deodorant cream.
3. Does not rot clothes. Greaseless and stainless, too.
4. Safe for skin. Non-irritating. Antiseptic.
5. Soft, smooth, creamy . . . easy to apply. Just rub in well, no waiting to dry!

39¢ plus tax Also 10¢ and 59¢

SOME OF THE MANY STARS WHO USE ARRID

Grace Moore • Beatrice Lillie • Carol Bruce
Jane Froman • Diana Barrymore • Jessica Dragonette

ARRID... nearly twice as effective in stopping perspiration as any other leading deodorant cream!

(1) Based on tests of leading and other deodorants.

(Continued from Page 10)

Negro and Japanese-American. They lived in attendants' dormitories, attended lectures and had frequent social gatherings.

"I've learned more psychology in three months here than in three years at college," one psychology major said. And these girls are actively educating the public—especially their parents!—in the true conditions and serious needs of our mental hospitals.

The plan is still expanding, as the Institutional Service Units. When selective service ends, we hope to make it coeducational. There will be a nation-wide need for such workers for years to come; and the need for the kind of public education they can give may never end.

This year we need 100 young people for the summer, and about 50 during the rest of the year. A new unit is to be opened at Clinton Farms, the New Jersey State Reformatory for Women. Members who can stay for six months or longer will be encouraged to do so. This is an unparalleled postgraduate opportunity, we believe, for anyone who expects to work with people. Sincerely,

PHOEBE M. BAILEY,
Exec. Dir., Institutional Service Units.

"Help Your Daughter to Face This Modern World and Find a Happy Marriage."

Dear Readers: Having had years of experience as matron of institutions for unfortunate girls, I feel in a position to say that in the majority of cases, the blame can be laid to their early home training. Facing the fact that your daughter, as everyone else, is a physical being with certain natural impulses, teach her to accept these impulses and utilize them to make life rich and beautiful and not to resist or fear them as if they were an imposition upon life.

Every mother should begin to drill her daughter not later than at the age of twelve. Teach her that sex, as such, is neither clean nor unclean, beautiful nor ugly, moral nor immoral, but becomes one or the other of each of these pairs of qualities, depending upon the way it is used. Above all, recognize sex as a part of life which can and should be discussed just as any other part of life. Some mothers act as if all children were neuter.

When girls come to a home they are shy and fearful at first, but gradually, as they become accustomed to the place and being with other girls who are in the same condition, the majority are willing, perhaps anxious, to talk to someone. I have listened to their stories for years and years, and I'm grieved to say that not one girl in a hundred received any sex teaching from her mother.

I'd like to tell you a few of the many cases I had during the years I was matron. Gladys was a beautiful child, only fourteen. Her mother died when she was just a baby. Her father remarried when she was twelve. Her childhood was happy and uneventful until the new baby came along, when the parents and relatives gradually turned from Gladys to the younger child. Gladys tried to compete, but always without success. Parents, permit no favoritism to be shown any of your children! Help each one to develop his own abilities that no child is made to feel inferior, as was Gladys. At thirteen, she began dating and staying away from home every possible moment. Neither her father nor her stepmother paid any particular attention to her.

When the time came for her to leave the home I asked her if she had any place to go and if she wanted to go back to her parents. She looked up suddenly at me and answered, "No, I don't know where I'm going, but I don't want to go home." I was glad when she found lodging with a family who loved children. When she said good-by, she told me, "I'm not scared any more now. My little son and I will face the world. I'm so glad I have him."

I've always thought it showed a good trait in any girl to want to keep her baby. Many do, while others can go out without as much as a backward glance. Perhaps many people firmly believe that girls who have babies out of wedlock are not fit to raise them. I can truthfully say not one girl who fought to keep her baby has ever proved unfit to raise the child. It's the mother who doesn't love her baby or want it that's unfit.

Then there was Mabel, who had a different story. "I can't remember a time when my parents didn't quarrel," she told me. "They sometimes took out their feelings on me, each one trying to turn me against the other." I always claimed that girls of her type were the hardest cases, resenting the neglect and lack of sympathy which had forced them to come to a home as surely as physical maltreatment would have sent them to a hospital.

Little June came to the home in a big snowstorm. She was only thirteen and one of the saddest cases I ever had. Her first words were, "Mommie brought me here to have my baby, then I'll have to give it up." She kept talking—one in a million that cared to talk at first—and was bubbling over with excitement about her baby. I finally succeeded in getting her story straight. Her father was dead and her mother ran a dance hall with the house always full of drinking people. She cried when her little girl was born and huddled over it every possible moment as excited as any child over her first doll. Her case was a real problem. Her mother's home was not the right kind of environment for either her or her child. Making a quick search, we located an aunt, her father's sister, in a distant state. She came and little June and the baby went away with her. Little June is now thirty-five years old and the respected wife of a prominent physician.

Lela's home atmosphere was also difficult. Discussion brought out that her parents were unusually strict. When she disobeyed their instructions, they punished her as if she were a little child. The result was that when she went to college, she was like a young colt turned out of a pasture. The mistake Lela's parents made was to govern her entirely without giving her an opportunity to govern herself.

My suggestion in all these cases is that as your daughter approaches maturity, help her to control and govern her behavior by principles rather than by promises of reward or threat of punishment.

But when I think back over the years and the many girls I've tried to help, one precious thought is continually in my mind: not one time under any circumstance, no matter how bitter and hard and how low she may have fallen, not one time did I ever tell any girl she was bad.

A Retired Matron.

Appeal From Holland

The Netherlands.

Dear Sirs: I am a Dutch girl (27 years old) and I have in Holland nobody who can help me. We had, as you would have heard, last year a bad time. My two brothers, 18 and 21 years old, could not go out, for the Germans arrested all men and boys from 16 till 40 years. So I had to go to everybody in the country, to get anything to eat, because we had only 4 ounces of bread in a week. I went on an old, tireless bike, and my clothes have got very bad. This year I have but one woolen gown.

Here you can buy nothing in the shops and nobody has something to spare, because everybody's clothes are worn out.

Perhaps one of your acquaintances or family can help me? I am long (5 ft. 9) and slender. I shall be glad to get something from you. My anticipated thanks.

Faithfully yours,
T. DIRKSEN.

One Burp, One World

The following letter, written by Lt. (j.g.) Fred Warner Neal to his wife in Washington, was sent to us by Mrs. Neal.

Petropavbvsk, Russian Siberia.

Dear Ginger: I miss you and baby Sue all the time, but I want to tell you of an episode that really made me feel nostalgic.

There are four Russian army guards here at our Naval aerological station. They are all big, good-natured fellows, as far away from their homes as we are. Their chief is a rosy-cheeked sergeant, about thirty-five, named Alexei Ivanovich Ivanov. Before the war he was a schoolteacher. Despite the fact that he knows no English and few of us know Russian, he soon became popular with the American officers and crew.

The other night Alexei Ivanovich approached me in great excitement. His wife, Anna, and six-weeks-old baby, who live on the other side of the Kamchatka peninsula, were here in the guard tent. It was bitterly cold, and the small patched

(Continued on Page 212)

delicate natural flavor

Millions are switching to Allsweet

"My family likes it so much better" . . . "You'll be simply amazed at the difference" . . . "It's just perfect" . . . that's the sort of thing women are saying about Allsweet, the margarine with the natural flavor. A true farm product, Allsweet is made from clear rich food oils blended—by an exclusive process—with cultured pasteurized skim milk. There's nothing artificial about its flavor. The cultured skim milk gives Allsweet that natural delicacy.

NUTRITIONALLY IMPORTANT—for food energy and for Vitamin A. All year round, Allsweet is a reliable source of Vitamin A. It supplies a minimum of 15,000 units per pound! Ask your dealer today for Allsweet . . . enjoy its delicate enriching goodness in your cooking as well as on your table. Right away, you'll see why delicious Allsweet is winning more new friends than any other brand.

EASIEST TO COLOR! Exclusive with Allsweet—a coloring packet that is extra easy to open. Smooth-spreading Allsweet comes to you white. To tint it the customary yellow for table use, one of these handier packets of pure coloring is provided with each pound.

Fifty Years Ago in the Journal

IN May, 1896, the bishop sleeve supplanted the leg-o'-mutton and the last of the Russian czars was crowned. St. Louis suffered a disastrous cyclone, A. E. Housman published A Shropshire Lad and Gen. Mark Clark was born.

In an article about railroads in the May, 1896, JOURNAL, John Gilmer Speed observes, "The most remarkable achievements of modern civilization are those which affect traveling, making it quick, comfortable and secure. We cross states and continents at the rate of thirty miles an hour."

Baby cribs: "The sheets and pillowcases should be of soft muslin, as linen is not considered healthy."

"Miriam: A menu card at a private dinner tells what is going to be served and one does not order from it as in a hotel or restaurant."

Spring dessert: "Mix together a quart of whipped cream, two and a half quarts of strawberries, half a pound of sugar. Spread between layers of macaroons and chill."

"A girl of sixteen, properly trained, would not wish to correspond with young men," chides Ruth Ashmore.

"Heartease: If a girl discovers very soon after her marriage that she has made a mistake, it is wisest for her to make the best of it."

"Winona: Wading at the seashore should be cautiously indulged in. The hot sun striking on the head while the feet are immersed in cold water is apt to be injurious. Ten minutes is enough at once."

"Lottie: For spring, select a cape of black satin, with jet passementerie and a black chiffon neck rouche."

A Livable House for $2000, the architectural feature of May, 1896, showed a nine-room house with three bedrooms and a servant's room.

"Anita: Colored table linen is very little used and may be said to have gone altogether out of style."

"When a stranger is introduced to you at an evening function," Ruth Ashmore tells her sub-debs, "talk about the beauty of the room and the many pretty girls present. Do not indulge in any personalities."

JOURNAL ABOUT TOWN

GOSSIP ABOUT PEOPLE YOU KNOW, EDITORS YOU LIKE AND WHAT GOES ON IN NEW YORK

FEININGER

Signs of spring in Washington Square: clothesline gallery, artists at work.

PRETTY soon now, if you happen to be in town, and wander down Washington Square way, you'll be able to pick up some bargains in contemporary art or get your portrait painted at a very attractive price. For every spring since 1932 a stretch of sidewalk has been hung with canvases like very colorful laundry, and now every year well over a hundred artists have to cope with crowds of curious passers-by containing quite a few cash customers—including, last spring, Mrs. Roosevelt, who bought two pictures, and Frank Eltonhead, who didn't buy any. One headache for exhibitors is having to take everything down at night, tote it home and put it back up in the morning. And another headache is the weather, which reminds us: don't go the first day. It always rains.

When a party she was giving here recently began to slow down, Tallulah Bankhead called up for a band that came over and played with great success. Cost her $100 as a contribution—to the Salvation Army.

EUROPEAN

Tallulah Bankhead entertains.

According to Henrietta Murdock, who goes there herself, there's a movie uptown where they run westerns every Saturday morning (just finished fourteen installments of The Phantom Rider), and where they've had quite a problem with the firing-off of cap pistols in the frenzied small-fry audience. So doorkeepers now, Miss M. tells us, frisk each young arrival for firearms, and arrange for all guns to be checked in the lobby.

In case you're considering hanging up the hoe this year or planting flowers instead of vegetables, Richard Pratt wants you to know what Paul C. Stark, of the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture, told him about how critical the Victory Garden need is—worse now than it was during the war. As head of the program, Mr. S. tells Mr. P. that another bumper crop from American back yards this season can pull hundreds of thousands abroad back from the brink of starvation and also help to keep our tables here at home well supplied in a time of tremendous shortages all over the rest of the world. He said that when President Truman told us we had to tighten our belts, he really meant it.

"How does it feel to be Beauty Editor?" we asked Dawn Crowell, whose final Sub-Deb fashion page appears this month and whose first beauty feature you'll see in July. "Well, for one thing," said Dawn, "I find myself still picking out dresses for pictures with an eye for the whole costume, when all I really need is the neckline. I'm adjusting myself from the Hattie Carnegies to the Elizabeth Ardens, but that's not hard. And when I call up Powers and Conover to arrange for models I have to remind myself each time that it's not the young-girl type any more, but older, more sophisticated. Kind of the way I feel myself, come to think of it."

Talking the other day to an ex-brass-hat friend, late of the Quartermaster Corps, Judy Barry uncovered a little-known wartime crisis which occurred when they were trying to make G. I. girdles for the Wacs. Nothing they made seemed to suit, so they just gave the girls the money and let them buy their own.

The reason Hugh Kahler was chuckling to himself the other day was because of a story Booth Tarkington had just told him about a farmer member of the Indiana legislature who was against a bill favored by many intellectuals. The opposition tried to reason with him, but after listening he told them, "You might's well quit where you be. You ain't got no chance to fool me. I'm too ignorant."

Remember the minister in Dorothy Walworth's Nicodemus in the February issue? Well, his story in the JOURNAL so affected a minister in New Mexico that he's resolved to devote all his wedding fees this year to sending the novel (now in book form) to other ministers all over the country.

Quite a few hearts are fluttering around the Workshop, with Laurence Olivier about to open here for six weeks of repertoire from London's famous Old Vic theater, in plays of Shakespeare, Sheridan, Yeats and Shaw. The whole company of fifty will have come by air, as well as some of the scenery, and will go right back the middle of June—the first important theatrical importation since the war, which the sponsors hope will be followed by troupes from France, Ireland, Russia, Mexico and elsewhere. Why, before we know it, we and the world will really become acquainted!

© JOHN VICKERS

Olivier sets hearts aflutter.

Some unsuspected talents of some unsuspected people: Lionel Blythe is a composer on the side—his work featured, in fact, by the Philharmonic here this spring . . . Emanuel Goldenberg, under his famous assumed name, is not only an art collector in private but a painter as well . . . Hedy Kiesler, though few of her public know it, is an inventor with several important patents to her credit . . . and a man born John F. Sullivan is an expert banjo player. And in case those real names mean nothing to you, here's who they are as you surely know them now, in order: Lionel Barrymore, Edward G. Robinson, Hedy Lamarr, and Fred Allen.

Nylons! GIVE THEM Longer Life WITH AMAZING COOL-WATER IVORY SNOW

NEW! DIFFERENT!
It carries stocking protection a step farther!

Careful there—pup! She's wearing nylons! Precious nylons that she washes every night in Ivory Snow for longer stocking life . . . to guard their elasticity and color, too! It's the newest thing in fine soap for fine washables! Different from cake soaps, newer than flake soaps, Ivory Snow's quick-sudsing granulated "snowdrops" make instant suds in lukewarm water—even in cool water! Safe suds that carry protection a step farther than other soaps not Ivory-mild! Wonderful Ivory Snow!

No other Soap Like it!

Ivory Snow is the only soap that is both

1. Ivory-mild
2. In quick-sudsing granulated "snowdrops"!

Follow tested directions on the box! Don't waste wonderful Ivory Snow—it's made of vital materials.

Longer Life FOR NYLONS, RAYONS, SILKS, WOOLENS

Escape from Yesterday

THE JOURNAL'S COMPLETE-IN-ONE-ISSUE NOVEL

BY MARY HASTINGS BRADLEY

BECAUSE the Germans were making a point of behaving "correctly" in Paris, Jeanne-Marie was startled when one of them paused, deliberately, beside her at the bookstore window. Her gray eyes had been roving scornfully over the display—collaborationist brew, of course—and for a moment she continued to look into the window as if unaware of the man beside her. Then, at a turn toward her, she walked off, her dark, hatless head high, her wooden-soled shoes clacking not too hurriedly, for the Boche must never flatter themselves they had driven you away.

In two strides the German was beside her. He said in heavily accented French, his tone ingratiating, "Was there something you desired, mademoiselle, in that window?"

Jeanne-Marie walked on with an air of not hearing, of not being conscious of his presence.

"Books are not very interesting," he continued. Beneath his suavity was something assured and amused. "A girl with such pretty legs might like stockings—yes?"

Her stockingless legs did not move faster, but her heart did. This was something new; something not "correct." But she had perfected

It was a dress designed for witchery—Jeanne-Marie knew that in it she could not fail.

ILLUSTRATED BY Charles

a complete blankness of expression and her eyes continued to drift along the perspective of the street with an air of utter unconcern.

She was a slender girl, her slenderness enhanced by the meager diet of the occupation, and accented by the tightness with which her black coat was belted. Her dark hair was drawn up from her neck and ears to tower in the exaggerated pompadour that was a Parisian gesture of defiant gaiety. She had delicate, very clear-cut features, set now in a mask of careful indifference.

"Stockings of silk ——"

"Your pardon, monsieur, but one can see the young lady does not care for the entertainment of your conversation." A French voice had cut into the German's. A young man had gained Jeanne-Marie's other side and was speaking directly across her. Her air of indifference was shattered. She turned swiftly and said breathlessly, "I beg of you ——" but for the warning in her voice and eyes she got back an incredibly merry look, out of bright, willful eyes. The young man continued, mockingly polite, "Nor for the pleasure of your acquaintance, monsieur. Offered, without doubt, in ignorance of the conventions of our civilization."

The German stopped and the Frenchman stopped and Jeanne-Marie stood between them, frightened and angry. It was utter folly to provoke the Boche, and it would be disaster to have her brought to their attention. Already, once or twice, she had fancied she was being followed, but it was easy to imagine that when one was in a certain work. There was a moment of silent tension, then to Jeanne-Marie's passionate relief the German assumed haughty indifference.

"I do not find this worth an incident," he said contemptuously. "So ——" With a stiff inclination he turned and strode away.

The young man looked after him, then smiled at Jeanne-Marie as if he expected her to smile back. "But this is folly!" she burst out. "What if he ——"

"I find it worth the incident."

But she would not smile back. "You are not wise. And not wise for me either. What if —— This was a mere inconvenience. A nothing. It was foolish to risk ——"

"I grant you. But there are times when a thing is too much for you."

"It is all too much. But we must not show it."

He said seriously now, "I am sorry if I have offended."

"I am not offended. Only alarmed for you. For us both. But I appreciate that you intended ——"

"You must own I succeeded."

She had to smile a little then at memory of the small triumph. "Nevertheless ——" she said stubbornly. Then, nervously, "We had better turn this corner. He might change his mind. I did not look at his uniform—his rank ——"

"Waffen SS. A captain."

"Oh, my God!" said Jeanne-Marie. Hurriedly, she turned a corner.

"Does this happen often?" asked the young man.

"No—they want us to love them," she said bitterly. "Is it not amazing? They take everything we have—they imprison and torture us and shoot hostages, and they want to be loved! There was never anything quite like them."

"No. There never was." He gave an odd little laugh, as if at some memories of his own.

Jeanne-Marie glanced at him. He was undeniably an attractive young man. There was something very masculine, very vital about him. He looked strong and well nourished, as if he had come from the country. His clothes were good tweeds, though rather shabby; his boots, French army boots, were patched and worn. His brown topcoat looked as if he had slept in it.

He was looking about with frank interest. It was early evening and the street was filled with home-going people, tired-looking, trudging along or pedaling bicycles. The only cars were the drab army trucks or the occasional sports car of some German officer. His eyes examined everything: the Soldatenheim they passed; the barriers of barbed wire they had to skirt, erected about a building of military importance. On one wall was a freshly put up poster: "Légion Volontaire Française—for France and for Europe." He looked at that and his eyes mocked it.

"Voluntary! How many do you think are in that?"

"Two thousand. At least that is what I heard."

"The flower of France, of course!"

"Of course."

"There are not many Boche on the streets."

"Not here. But on the Champs ——"

"They have all the hotels?"

"All the good ones. They are all Boche billets. Except the Bristol. That is for transients—Nazis, Spaniards, Portuguese. You have not been here ——"

"Not since the occupation. I am from Alsace."

"Ah. . . . Alsace."

"Look! In these hotels that are yet hotels, these not-so-good ones, would I have to show my papers?"

"Oh, yes. They would have to register you with the police."

"H'm. My papers are not too good. I left in haste."

"But you should not tell me that!" said Jeanne-Marie. "How do you know I am not a collaborator?"

She looked out over Paris. It seemed to her as if she were able to look into every window, hear the beating of every heart.

He gave her a glance that for a moment was his only answer. He had strange eyes, more yellow than brown, very bright and steady. Willful and mischievous they had been, when she first looked into them; now she saw their laughter was only on the surface.

"I am not quite a fool," he said dryly. He added, "They were combing the country for workers for Germany. I'd been hiding out on a farm and I got a tip I'd been informed on, so I beat it. I only got here this afternoon."

"Have you friends here?"

"None I trust. Oh, I had the address of the family of a comrade who was in prison with me in Germany, but they are not there now. I have been walking about, wondering. What I should like is a room with some French family."

So he had been a prisoner in Germany, she thought. Not many came back from there.

"I would not get them into any trouble," he was saying. "No one is after me. I am quite all right as long as I am unnoticed."

"You will certainly not be unnoticed if you go about affronting the Boche!"

The energy with which she spoke made him laugh. "I shall not do it again," he promised. "I will do exactly what you tell me. And I will not be here long. I want to get away to join De Gaulle. I am a flier."

A flier. Her work was to help smuggle foreign fliers out of France. But the Underground was only for men in danger. This man was a Frenchman, able to walk about freely, to talk, to travel. There was only the difficulty of his papers. She could do something about that, though that was a secret not to be shared without orders. But he must have shelter. She and Marte could not take him in, for at any moment they might have to receive some Americans. Perhaps Paul?

Paul, her brother, was cautious. He would not want to be involved with a man escaped from Germany, bent on escaping from France. She had never confessed to Paul what she was doing, though from his warnings she was afraid that he suspected. He was skeptical about the value of much of the Resistance work. It was senseless, he insisted, to risk torture and death to smuggle out foreign aviators when all they had to fear was military prison. And it was senseless to endanger yourself by printing secret papers when you could get the same news, with less risk, from the foreign radio.

It was better to keep alive to struggle when resistance meant something besides extermination. If that time ever came. It did not seem near, this March of 1944, with the Allies stuck in Italy and hope of a landing in France worn thin. But even Paul's caution might not find any great risk in harboring this young man for a day or two

Jeanne-Marie said slowly, "I cannot offer you hospitality because I live with a friend, a young married woman. Her husband is a prisoner of war in Germany. The Boche took our home. And my father and mother have both died since the occupation. There is only my brother and I now. I am meeting him for dinner. At a little café. If you will dine with us, perhaps he can think of something. He is a doctor and there might be some family among his clientele with a room to spare."

"You are kind!" His eyes looked deep into hers. "And my name," he said in a voice that found it droll they did not know each other's names, "is André Philippe Rallon."

"I am Jeanne-Marie Fontaine."

"Jeanne-Marie Fontaine." He repeated softly, "Jeanne-Marie."

Paul Fontaine was waiting at a table. He was ten years older than Jeanne-Marie, with a small dark beard she ridiculed because it made him look, she said, like an actor playing a French doctor. He had dark, worried eyes which looked more worried to see her with a stranger and not at all reassured when she told the story.

She told it gaily. "Urging those silk stockings on me, Paul—I am sure he had them in his pocket ready to brandish!"

But Paul's smile was nervous and he looked about to see if they were overheard. "I must thank you for your good intentions for my sister," he told André. "But, truly, it was not wise."

"Oh, I have lectured him!" said Jeanne-Marie.

The intimacy in her air made Paul glance at her sharply. She went on, in a low voice, to tell him André's story, and Paul did not like any of it. An adventurer. Going off to De Gaulle. Just the type to capture her imagination. His instinct, pessimistic and fearful, sensed danger for her. He wanted Jeanne-Marie to marry Pierre Roget, who would keep her safe and withdraw her from whatever her rash ardor for France was getting her into. This passion for France!

His apprehensions sharpened as the meal went on. There was animation in Jeanne-Marie which made her usually gentle face something gay and provocative. This André Rallon could not take his eyes off her. Her gaiety and laughter were signs to Paul of something he considered as much a malady as any with a medical name. He would rather she exhibited a flush and cough. He would know what to do then.

Nevertheless, when Jeanne-Marie brought up the subject of a room, he agreed to take in the refugee. His sensitive sense of obligation made him feel he owed something to a young man who had been foolhardy on her behalf.

(Continued on Page 74)

"Jeanne-Marie," he whispered, and she felt his lips [illegible] her hand. "To love you so much and to have you in such danger is more than I can bear."

Cocker of the Walk

BILL WAS TOPS AT TRAINING DOGS, BUT WOMEN DON'T COME WHEN YOU WHISTLE! ★ BY LORETTA BURROUGH

I ALWAYS was fresh. Mamma used to say so, trotting along with her head awry, and me up in the air, my teeth firmly clasped in her ear. "You're the freshest pup," she'd say, jerking her head, because she hated to have her beautiful ears chewed. "They ought to give you the needle, they ought."

Well, there was small chance of that. Of course, even in our best kennels, once in a while there comes along some awful undershot meat ball who isn't allowed to grow up, for the best interests of all concerned. But from the day I was born, I knew I was a king among spaniels. Mamma has told the story so often—too often, her friends think—that I seem to remember it actually happening. She says that I had just come into the world and she had hardly had time to get the Cellophane envelope off me, when Jack Morgan leaned over the whelping box, put his finger on me and said, "That's a champion! That little bit of black pepper there."

Incidentally, that was how I got my name—Black Pepper—although my familiars call me Pep. I was a gorgeous little pup, if I say so myself, and from the time I really began to take notice, I was conscious of my destiny. Jack used to bring me in from the box, stand me up on this rubber-topped grooming table he had in the kennel office, and show me off to his friends. It worried mamma, because she said I was conceited enough already. I'll admit it inflames the ego to have tall proud human beings stand around you, humble with admiration. "Brother, that's something," they'd say. "That's a dog!" And Jack would glow like a lamp, and run his big gentle hands lovingly over me. "I'll not show him," he'd say, "until he's ten months. I'll introduce him at the Garden." The show at Madison Square Garden is like playing the Palace for us dogs: it's big-time.

At least that was what poor Jack expected to do. But when I was six months old he got pneumonia, died, and his daughter Christy came home from college to run the kennels. And that tore things, rather. Because as mamma put it to me one day, "Dear Christy is beautiful, but dumb." She looked worried, since she had her heart set on my Garden debut. "She isn't handling you, training you enough," she complained, sitting down and scratching her left ear furiously, which she always does when she's really embarrassed about something. "Does she expect you to win all by yourself, a little ignorant pup like you?"

"Listen, mamma," I said, a bit annoyed, "if she shows me sitting on top of her head, I'll still beat 'em all!"

Mamma looked at me and raised her upper lip in a snarl. "You fresh," she said. "Beat feet."

But really, things were not going well at the Morgan Kennels now. They were losing money. It wasn't that Christy didn't love us as much as Jack had, or that she didn't work like a dog herself, but she was young, and she didn't have Jack's contacts and know-how. She made bad mistakes, like selling a good dog for practically nothing, and hanging on to some appalling dub she should have given away to the grocer's boy. And then, after the time she tried to trim mamma, she used to pay an expert to trim the dogs, and for a big kennel that costs.

I never will forget Christy's butchery of mamma, ha-ha. Mamma came off that table with the back of her neck looking like those steps General Putnam rode down on a horse. Mamma never was much on looks anyway; she was just a wonderful brood matron who threw great pups by some miracle, but you really wouldn't glance at her twice unless you loved her. I snickered—I couldn't help myself—and mamma made for me, and I made for a spot I knew she was too big to get into. She was mad all right; she sat outside for ten minutes, muttering, "Laugh at your poor mother, will you?"

That was how things were at the Morgan Kennels, sliding slowly downhill, on the day that Bill Wainwright came into our lives. It was a dull November afternoon, near dusk, with a cold wind clawing around the edges of the buildings. George, the kennelman, had given me some hard exercise, and I was lying in my own private cubby in the kennel, stretched out on my newspapers, and thinking about dinner. The lights were on in the office, and I could hear ledger pages turning over, and now and then a sigh; Christy was in there, worrying her head off over bills, as usual.

THEN the outside door opened with a gust of cold wind, and Martha, the maid, said, "Gen'leman to see you, miss," and this Bill Wainwright came in. Mamma told me later about him. It seems he has only a couple of million dollars, and owns the Flyaway Kennels, Famous for Cockers. One of mamma's many husbands had been a Flyaway dog, and although she pretended not, I know she always felt honored by the connection. Anyway, I didn't know anything at the time about the super-duper Flyaway champions, or the super-duper Bill Wainwright, so I stayed snoozing on my newspapers, thinking, if thinking at all, about a big warm plate of horse meat.

I was quite dead to the world when Christy opened my door suddenly, saying over her shoulder, "Since you're so interested, I'll gladly show him to you—but there's not a chance of my selling him." Fortunately, she had heard so much from her father about how wonderful I was that even Christy knew better than to sell me.

She carried me out and plunked me on the table in the brightly lighted office. I was limp as a snake with sleep, but—noblesse oblige; so when Christy's hand fumbled under my chin and her other hand grasped my tail in her clumsy fashion, I struck a pose that would have caused any judge to swoon.

After a moment I cut an eye around at this Bill Wainwright to see what impression I was making. Obviously good. A big, tweedy, sunburned fellow with nice eyes, he looked as though he had just sustained a severe shock.

"Fine little pup," he said huskily; "quite promising."

I waited patiently while he ran over me with very knowing hands. It was a long time before he stood back and sighed.

"I will cut out the shenanigans," he said. "A thousand dollars for him just as he stands. He's a wonderful puppy."

"I THINK so too," Christy said. She had stiffened up, as she does when she thinks someone is trying to outsmart her about a dog, which is practically all the time, poor girl, and her eyes were hot. "I'm not enough of a dope, either, to give him away for tuppence. He was father's favorite—I'm going to show him for the first time at the Garden in February, as father had planned." She seemed so tall and proud, standing there beside me, that you never would have thought she was beating her brains out just to meet her bills. "So he's not for sale, at any price."

"You're showing him for the first time at the Garden? A little untried pup?" He laughed, sat down on the edge of the table, lighted a cigarette, and said in a kind voice that didn't fool me much, "Look, Miss Morgan, don't mind if I'm frank. Neither you nor your grand little pup has enough experience for the tough competition of the Garden. You don't want to get your throat cut, do you?" He sat there, swinging his leg and smiling a little, a very nice, very rich young man of the world. But I could tell, from the hungry quiver in his hand as he ran it over my back, just how much he wanted me. "For instance, he'll be up against spaniels of the caliber of my own Flyaway Queen. Or has news of her penetrated to this rural retreat?"

"I believe so," Christy said, in a tone like the frost on a mint julep. "Mr. Wainwright, you waste your time."

He was quiet a moment, studying her with a good deal of interest. "Five thousand dollars if you let me walk away with him."

Five thousand dollars, and Christy's troubles would be all over. I prepared to change hands, wondering if I could have one last word with mamma before I went out the kennel gate forever. But you never can tell about human beings, and Mr. Wainwright had made Christy mad.

"Sorry," she said. "Pepper is not for sale!"

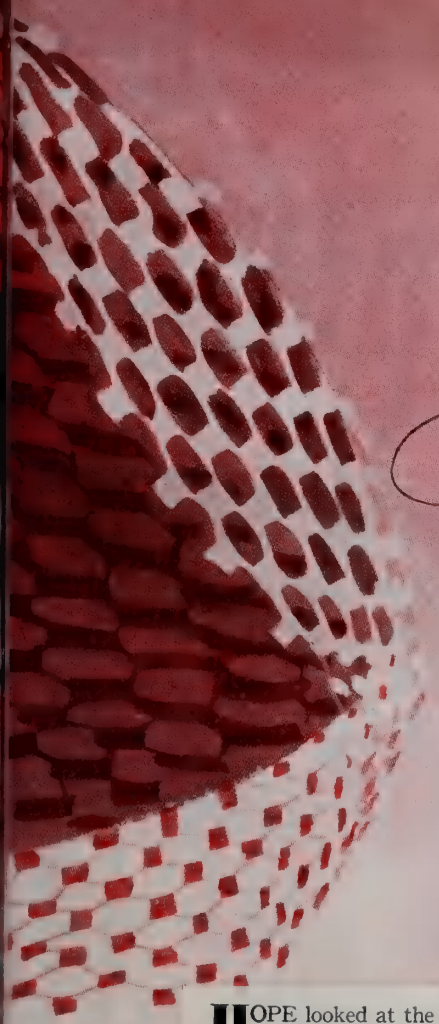
He knew when he was beaten. He gave up gracefully. In fact, he was so charmingly graceful about it that Christy snapped a lead on me and walked out with him to his station wagon, which she hadn't intended to do, I'm sure.

I'm glad she did, because sitting on the front seat of Bill Wainwright's station wagon was the most gorgeous black dog I ever (Continued on Page 152)

ILLUSTRATED BY



Bill said, "How about just one little apology so we can be friends?" Christy asked coldly, "Apology for what?"

There was something speculative about Tanagra's gaze. Hope thought furiously, as if she were wondering how much Wayne would give, and she didn't mean in down payment on the house.

ILLUSTRATED BY JON WHITCOMB

Little Duck and the She-Wolf

HOPE looked at the menu and her face lighted. "Look, Wayne—sweetbreads!" Hope was pretty, and prettier still when her face lighted up that way. "Look—sweetbreads." She guided his eyes to the line. "Remember? It means good luck tomorrow."

He laughed—tender, amused, possessive. "Of course we'll find a house tomorrow, but I don't believe what we have for dinner tonight will have anything to do with it. You get the craziest ideas."

Wayne was darling, with loads of imagination and sense of humor and all that, but he just didn't believe in omens and signs. The day she met him she had sweetbreads for lunch. The first day of their honeymoon—sweetbreads. The day before they got the letter about Aunt Lola's money she ordered sweetbreads, but the waiter brought veal cutlets by mistake. You couldn't laugh it off. Sweetbreads simply dogged her steps, always before good luck.

It was cozy there in the quaint old country inn. It was cozy anywhere with Wayne. She loved the way women in the dining room eyed him. He was tall and blond and had that clear skin that goes with blond men. People always said they were a perfect couple because she was small and dark. She smiled across at him. He had been so sweet driving all the afternoon at fifteen miles an hour through back roads and lanes. It had been her idea that they should submit themselves humbly to the spirit of outdoors before buying a house in the country. Cleanse themselves of city smells and ideas. Draw in deep breaths of God's own air, let the focus of their eyes out, accustom their ears to the sound of birds and bugs and things. He had stopped patiently at every view, breathed and listened and sniffed with no complaints. His mother had explained that she was likely to have queer notions now.

Hope would have preferred to take more time looking for a house so they could see every house in Westchester and Connecticut before they decided, but the apartment was so small—one closet, one bureau, four chairs and a couch. Certainly no room for bassinets and layettes—and anyway, they were probably going to be evicted.

"What time do we see this gal tomorrow?"

"Ten-thirty. It's funny you can't remember 'Tanagra.' Tanagra Tyler. Her husband ——"

"I know. Sin Tyler. I'd like to meet him."

"You won't. He's a foreign correspondent. That's why she sells real estate. I'm so glad I thought of her. She was so well dressed in college she won't waste our time on Cape Cods in developments."

Wayne had learned to think quickly. Not oysters, houses. He had listened to Hope's ideas on houses night after night, and always said yes when she asked if he didn't agree. He was prepared to let her do the picking. She had good taste, and he wanted her to have whatever she wanted—especially now. He'd like a fireplace, and a good closet in the cellar with a lock on it, and a tree or a bush or something to make the trip out worth it, but she could have anything else she wanted.

Before Hope got into bed she leaned out the window. It was so basic, buying a home, it scared her a little—the way she would feel the night before going to the hospital: uplifted, but scared too. It was a milestone, and you could trip over a milestone and bump your head. However—there were the sweetbreads.

They read the name on Tanagra's gates the next morning and drove in astonished. Either real estate or foreign corresponding paid very well.

"I hope she doesn't think we are in this class," Wayne said. "Did you tell her ten thousand was our limit?"

"I said eight thousand five hundred. Here she comes."

Tanagra was walking toward them across the grass. It was quite a sight. She was long-legged and strode slightly and held her head so high she seemed to be leaning back. You felt she had walked to meet guests thus many times, perfecting it each time. She wore an enormous hat. On me it would look like a dropped plane part, Hope thought. On Tanagra it was fine. Her green wool country dress with its short boxed jacket would make any woman feel that living in the city was pretty thoroughly outmoded.

"Hello, Hoopy. What fun to see you." Tanagra held her hand well out and smiled widely—she had a lovely mouth. She smiled at Hope, but she knew Wayne was there. Oh, yes, she knew it very well indeed. Hope saw that Tanagra was about fifty times better looking than she was in college. She had ripened like a fruit in the sun. Her hair was ripe gold, her skin ripe peach, her teeth ripe pearls. She was Demeter or someone—Demeter fresh from Hattie Carnegie.

Wayne was dumfounded. Meeting several of Hope's other college friends had prepared him for nothing like this. But he had never brushed off good-looking women. He stepped right up to meet her. Tanagra laughed at whatever she said to him, making it sound very clever, but Hope couldn't remember afterward that it was anything so funny. Her laugh seemed like a witty comment on the extraordinary notion of dividing the human race into male and female.

"I was all set to drive you around today, showing you places I knew darn well you wouldn't be caught dead in. There isn't a decent house in this town under thirty-five thousand," she explained to Wayne. "But the most exciting thing has happened. . . . Get down, Ginkgo—go find a stick. . . . Ben Fiddler has decided to sell!" Obviously they were supposed to faint dead away.

(Continued on Page 119)

HOPE THOUGHT: "I CAN HOLD MY OWN AGAINST ANY WOMAN ORDINARILY, BUT TANAGRA'S GOT ME WHILE I'M DOWN" ★ ★ BY DWIGHT HUTCHISON

The Willapawampus

BY JANE RICE

THE minute Jody saw his brother, Frank, coming up the street he knew something had happened. Frank took sandwiches to the newspaper office and ate them there, somewhere, instead of coming home. But there he was. Coming home. At noontime. Swinging his lunch sack. Jody thought, even if it hadn't been noontime, he could've told anyway—on account of how Frank was walking. He was walking springy.

Jody stood up on the top porch step and marked his brother's progress, hoping that, whatever it was, his mother wouldn't cry the way she had the day Frank had come home, walking springy, and had told her he'd got a job as office boy for the newspaper and wasn't going back to school anymore. When his mother cried it made his insides feel funny. As if they were leaking out of a hole in his stomach.

His insides felt funny now. Just thinking about it. As if they were fixing to commence feeling funny.

Frank pretended he didn't see Jody. It was a game. He passed the Gilhooleys', the Haggertys', the O'Briens', the Sheehans', and turned up the uneven brick walk.

When he reached the steps he said, "I wonder where Jody is." He glanced around. "That Jody," he said. He bent over and made believe he was lifting the bottom step. "Nope," he said. "Not under there." He went through the motions of lifting each step, one by one. "Guess the Willapawampus got him," he said. He shook his head sadly. "I expect the Willapawampus finally got him."

He went on into the house, using one foot as a bumper to prevent the patched screen door from slamming.

Jody went down the steps and around the side of the frame house to the back yard. He wriggled through his secret passage in the tangled thicket of honeysuckle that cloaked the paling fence and, gaining the cramped privacy of his hollowed-out place, he hunched there cross-legged and peered out through his green fragrant aloneness at the day that lay beyond—bright and flat as a plate. He plucked one of the yellow blossoms and held it against his nose, breathing in and out so that it made a fluttery tickle.

Presently his mother came out on the back porch and began calling him. Relief, warm and healing, surged through him as he listened to her voice. It was all right about his brother's coming home at noontime. Whatever it was, it was all right.

He could feel the day settling slowly back into place.

The kitchen was filled with the tantalizing aroma of fresh-baked bread. The table, a folded square of cardboard wedged under the short leg, was laid with a checkered cloth. The bowls of bean soup sent up wavery pencils of steam.

"Wash your hands," Jody's mother said. She sounded smily.

"Thought the Willapawampus got you," Frank said, surprised.

Jody washed at the sink, squeezing the soap bubbles through his fingers so they squished. He dried his hands on the roller towel and slid into his chair. His mother divided Frank's uneaten sandwiches between the two of them, and sat down.

"Put your napkin where it belongs," she said to Jody.

Jody picked up his napkin. There was a green ticket in it.

"Wonder what that is," Frank said. Jody could see that he was making his face straight. "You reckon it's for something?" Frank said.

Jody's mother smiled at Jody. She took the ticket and put it beside his glass of milk where he could look at it while he ate.

"No teasing," she said to Frank. She leaned over and tucked one end of Jody's napkin in the neck of his jersey. "Mr. Boone gave Frank the afternoon off and two passes to the circus," she said. She patted the napkin. "You can go."

For a blank, mind-whirling moment Jody stared at her, unbelievingly. Then, suddenly—so suddenly that he could feel it explode in him with a mushrooming pow!—he knew that it was true. The circus! He, Jody Murphy, was going to the circus! The circus! The word arose before him, a living dazzle of red, just as it was on the billboard across from Dugan's barbershop.

"It's a good thing the Willapawampus didn't get you," Frank said. "It's a mighty good thing."

"Eat your lunch," his mother said. "Both of you. If you want to get an early start."

It seemed to Jody that they'd never get going, no matter how they hurried. After lunch there was the business of getting really washed and into a clean pull-on and his blue overalls and having his hair slicked with a wet brush. It took forever.

WHEN at last they were ready his mother gave Frank four streetcar checks. Two for Frank. Two for him. "Just in case the conductor says anything," she said. "He's big for only five." She looked at Jody, and Jody could tell she was thinking about how he was growing. He was growing pretty fast. She gave him a hug. "You mind Frank." Her expression altered the least, least trifle.

Jody could tell about that too. It was because he didn't talk. And why because he didn't. Mostly why because, he decided. He couldn't remember it. But he'd heard about it until it was almost the same thing as remembering. How he'd climbed up on a chair, when he was three-and-a-half-going-on-four, and had pulled the hot corn meal over on him. And how he hadn't talked any more, afterward. And how the free doctor at the clinic had said he could talk if he wanted to. The clinic doctor had made it sound as though he was playing like he couldn't talk. His mother had got mad and had taken him to another doctor. One you had to pay for. He'd said the same thing. Only he'd made it sound like sometimes people couldn't help not talking.

(Continued on Page 159)

ILLUSTRATED BY AL PARKER

"I'm not ascairt of you," Jody said, but he didn't say it very clearly. How could he with a mouthful of heart?

His lips parted and it seemed as if fairyland had suddenly opened before him

Sergeant Mickey

BY MICHAEL J. McKEOGH

In Collaboration With Richard Lockridge

INTERNATIONAL

Ex-bellhop Mickey McKeogh had Irish luck in landing what he considers the war's top job with the world's best boss. After four years as chauffeur, valet, sometimes cook, he is probably the only living sergeant who salted a general's tea, survived to tell tale.

INTERNATIONAL

Wac Pearlie Hargrave was "very military looking as far as her uniform went—but her eyes weren't military at all." When Mickey saw her, he knew at once she was the right girl. Eisenhower approved his corporal's promotion to Mrs., gave them reception.

THE first time I saw the boss he didn't look much like a soldier. That was in July, 1941, and he was just a man in a gray civilian suit with a white shirt and blue tie, eating breakfast with his wife in their house in San Antonio. He stood up and held out a big hand—he has very big hands and long arms and broad shoulders—and then he smiled. There's no use trying to describe that smile, and anyway by now a lot of people have seen it.

I shook hands with him and he asked my name.

"Private Michael James McKeogh, sir."

"I know that. I mean, what do they call you?"

"Mickey, sir."

"O.K., Mickey. That's what it will be from here on out. You take care of things around here—and of Mrs. Eisenhower."

I said I'd certainly try, and then he sat down and finished his breakfast.

The Army had taken me a long way from home, Corona, Long Island. It had taken me out of New York for the first time in my life. I had a good job as a bellhop at the Plaza. I didn't want to leave the Plaza and go into the Army, but about a million guys must have felt the same. The Army settled that for me on March 10, 1941, when it inducted me at the Jamaica Armory, in Queens.

I hadn't been at Fort Sam Houston very long when my platoon sergeant told me he had heard that Lieutenant Lee, aide to Colonel Eisenhower, was looking for a young fellow to go on maneuvers as the colonel's orderly. The job looked like a good one. I told the sergeant I'd like to try for it and he sent me to headquarters.

The lieutenant looked me over and said he thought I'd do. He told me to return to the company and stand by until I was asked for.

I didn't see much of the boss for the first few weeks; but living most of the day in a house where people like the Eisenhowers live, you begin to learn things about them. You couldn't spend eight hours a day there, for example, without finding out how devoted they were to each other, and how much they both loved their home. The boss was always a great one for staying at home when he could. He liked to potter around in the kitchen. He likes to make vegetable soup, putting in all sorts of vegetables and different seasonings; and he likes to fry eggs. He fries them very slowly in butter, basting them carefully, and then usually makes them into sandwiches.

The officers then were wearing civilian clothes except for one day a week. The boss dressed very conservatively—the sort of clothes a conservative professional man would wear. He bought them ready-made, and his uniforms, too, except for his riding breeches, which he had made. He was the best-dressed soldier in the world in his riding outfit, I always thought. When he was in his pink breeches, high boots and pink wool shirt, he was a Clark Gable.

---

This is an excerpt from the book, Sergeant Mickey and General Ike, soon to be published by G. P. Putnam's Sons.

Maneuvers lasted two months and then we went back to Fort Sam Houston and the boss was made brigadier general. The rest of that fall was routine, with things pretty much as they had been before we went on maneuvers. And on December 7 we were loafing around in the barracks and some fellow came in and said the Japs had bombed Pearl Harbor.

I stayed close to the barracks in case the general wanted me for something. He didn't want me. When I went to the house the next morning it was a mad place, with Signal Corps men stringing in telephone wires. The general wasn't there. I heard, the way you hear things in the Army, that he had been called to Washington.

I left on the fourth of February and got into Washington on the seventh and reported to Mrs. Eisenhower, who was staying with the general at the Wardman Park Hotel.

He made a trip to England in May, but he was back in about two weeks. Then one evening he said, "Mickey, I'm going to be sent over to London and I'd like very much to have you come along."

I don't remember what I said. I mean I don't remember the words exactly. But there wasn't anything I wanted so much and I guess I said something like that.

We flew to England in a Stratoliner. General Mark Clark was with us, and Captain Lee and some other officers. I was the only enlisted passenger. We landed at a field outside London and I rode into the city in a station wagon with the luggage to Claridge's, where there was a suite for the boss.

In London I stayed around headquarters a good deal, doing things people wanted done. But we all had to be careful that I wasn't doing something for somebody else when the general wanted me. I was his orderly, and he didn't want anybody to forget it—most of all me. I was supposed to see that I was around when he called, and not off on an errand he didn't know about. I slipped up a few times, and that wasn't good. When he yelled, "Mickey!" he wanted me to be where I could hear him. If I was around, I could hear him all right. He has a big voice when he wants to use it. When he called me he seemed to want to use it.

The general stayed at Claridge's only about a week. Then he moved to the Dorchester. The general never liked living in a hotel, but I suppose he liked the suite at the Dorchester as well as anything he could get in a hotel. It was two bedrooms and a living room. The other bedroom was for Commander Butcher. He was in the Navy and acted as an aide for the boss—aide and friend. Somebody to talk to, somebody to argue with.

In August the general got a little house about ten miles from London. It was called Telegraph Cottage and, of all the houses we lived in, I think the general liked it best. There were three bedrooms and a bath, a big living room with a fireplace, and a dining

(Continued on Page 136)

and General Ike

AN ORDERLY REPORTS ON HIS FAVORITE BOSS

ACME

"There isn't anyone like the Boss," says Ex-Sgt. McKeogh. The two did have a spot of trouble when the General almost strangled in one of Churchill's nightshirts on a pajama-less English week end. "But then he only uses swear words as adjectives and I packed better after that." For the most part, a Wild West story, baked beans and week-end baseball keep Eisenhower happy. He can sing, too, Mickey reports—"One Dozen Roses" is shower special.

Button, Button—

"MR. PEMBERTON COMING HERE?

WHY?" ROARED FATHER.

'TO SEE MY COLLECTION OF BUTTONS,"

MOTHER TOLD HIM.

FATHER DIDN'T NEED WORDS.

HIS EYES FLASHED. "OH, YEAH?"

By Val Teal

MY father used to laugh at mother about Mr. Pemberton. "A Pen Pal, eh?" he would say, and mother kind of laughed too. Pud and I have Pen Pals in the little magazine we take. You write a letter in to the magazine and then some other kid sees your letter and he writes to you and then you write to him and you're Pen Pals.

Mr. Pemberton got mother's name from their magazine. It's a magazine about hobbies like antiques and stuff. Mother's hobby is buttons and mother advertised in the magazine and that's how Mr. Pemberton got her name and they got to be Pen Pals. Mr. Pemberton is buttons too.

When we went to Minneapolis to visit Aunt Amy mother met Mr. Pemberton. She went out to dinner with him and he bought a button from her. Mother collects all kinds of antique buttons but Mr. Pemberton collects just military buttons and mother has some that she says are very rare.

One day after we got back home we were eating dinner and I was telling father about the magic lantern Aunt Amy showed us. It has funny old pictures, pictures of things they don't have any more, like women who sell apples on corners and men digging with shovels and ladies going swimming with clothes on and even a picture of Santa Claus in a blue suit. That must have been a long time ago because for as long as we can remember he has worn a red one.

And mother said, "I didn't know Amy got that old thing out. Where was I? I didn't see it."

So I said, "That was the night you went out with Mr. Pemberton," and mother kind of laughed and got red and father looked very funny.

Mother said, "I just didn't think you'd be interested. You make so much fun of him."

"Well, I'm not interested," father said. "I'm not the least bit interested."

We ate our dessert, apple pie, and they were drinking coffee.

After a while father said, "Is he an older man?"

"Who?" mother said.

"That—Pembutton," father said.

"Mr. Pemberton?" mother said. "No-o-o. He's not old. About your age."

When we were reading the funnies, mother and Pud and me, father said, "Is Mr. Pemberton married?"

"No," mother said. "No, he isn't married."

"Well, why don't you tell me about it!" father said like he was exploding.

"Why all right," mother said, "if you're interested. He took me to the Athletic Club for dinner. I sold him one of those two Uncle Daniel buttons."

"The Athletic Club!" father said. "What does a button collector do at the Athletic Club? Tone up his muscles for lifting brass buttons?"

"Probably," mother said, good-natured. "I got a good price for the button anyway. I was going to buy you a birthday present with the money."

But father was still not very happy about Mr. Pemberton. But he tried to act like he didn't care.

When he would bring in the mail and there would be a letter from Mr. Pemberton for mother, father would hand it to her and say, "Here's one from Button Button, your Pen Pal."

Mother would read the letters and put them back in the envelope. Father would go on looking at bills for a while.

Finally he would say, "He didn't ask about me, I suppose?"

"Mr. Pemberton?" mother would say. "No, he didn't."

Before, she used to show father the letters. But he wasn't ever interested in buttons, father wasn't. He would always say, "Imagine, a grown man!" Mother didn't like that. She is a grown woman.

"Button collecting is dignified," she would say, "and educational and interesting and—and—dignified."

But now mother didn't even show father Mr. Pemberton's letters any more.

THEN one day mother said, "Mr. Pemberton is coming for a couple of days."

Father was reading the paper. He looked like he couldn't believe he had heard right. "Here?" he said.

"Yes," mother said, "here."

"To our house?" father said.

"Yes, to our house," mother said like she was talking to someone who couldn't understand very well.

"Why?" father asked. "Does he know you're married?"

"Well!" mother said. That was all.

"But why here?" father asked.

ILLUSTRATED BY JOHN GANNAM

Mother sat there looking as if the tears were just waiting to rush out of her eyes. It was awful.

"For two days," mother said. "On business."

"Button business?" father asked.

"Well, not daytimes," mother said. "The Crotchet ompany."

"You mean," father said, "that he does something else sides collect buttons?"

Mother didn't answer that one. "What you don't real-," she said, "is that my button collection is one of the st in the United States. Mr. Pemberton is very inter-ted in seeing it. Intelligent people are. He is also in-rested in seeing the military buttons I have, some of nich I have for sale."

"You've asked him to stay here?" father asked.

"I have," mother said. "I told him you and I both ould be delighted to have him. After all, where else would stay?"

"I wouldn't suggest," father said. "It's none of my busi-ss. The Crotchet Company ought to find him a place. ertainly I am not putting up the Crotchet salesman."

"He is not a salesman," mother said. "He happens to be n executive at the company's headquarters. Mr. Pem-rton was very nice to me and, after all, we have a spare om. And it's almost impossible to get a room in this wn."

Mother fixed up the spare room for Mr. Pemberton. She ok out the enlarged picture of father when he was con-med. She took the little lace pillows off the bed. She t an ash tray in and some hobby magazines.

"Why did you take them out?" we asked her.

"Oh, it was all right that way for Aunt Magdalene," mother said. "Mr. Pemberton might not enjoy the picture as much as she does."

AUNT MAGDALENE is about the only one who ever uses our spare room. She isn't really our aunt. She is an old friend of my father's since he was a little boy. And her name isn't really Magdalene, it's Marjorie. Mother calls her Magdalene because of the handkerchiefs. Aunt Magdalene got them at a bargain because the woman who ordered them wouldn't take them. They should have spelled the name "Magdalena" instead of "Magdalene." The name on the handkerchiefs, I mean. The woman had ordered them put on the handkerchiefs and then she wouldn't take them because it was spelled wrong. They were beautiful handkerchiefs, imported, and Aunt Magdalene said she got them for about one tenth of what they cost and that Magdalene looked a lot like Marjorie if you looked quick—M at the first and a at the end and a long letter in the middle. So she just bought them. They were such good handkerchiefs and twenty-four of them so they were lasting Aunt Magdalene a long time. Father didn't like mother to call her Magdalene, but mother said she would just have to do so until the handkerchiefs wore out. I guess mother did not like Aunt Magdalene so much. We always try to remember to call her Aunt Marjorie when father hears, only we forget because of mother.

It was just the day before Mr. Pemberton was supposed to come and mother had been working hard cleaning up the house and cooking. A telegram came from Aunt Magdalene, saying: ARRIVING TOMORROW LOVE MARJORIE. Mother threw it on the hall stand and made her mouth into a straight line and stood looking at it. When father came home we ran to meet him.

"Aunt Magdalene is coming!" Pud yelled.

"Marjorie is her name," father said.

"Anyway, she's coming," Pud said. "She sent a telegram."

"So Marjorie's coming," father said when he got in the house. "Where's the wire?"

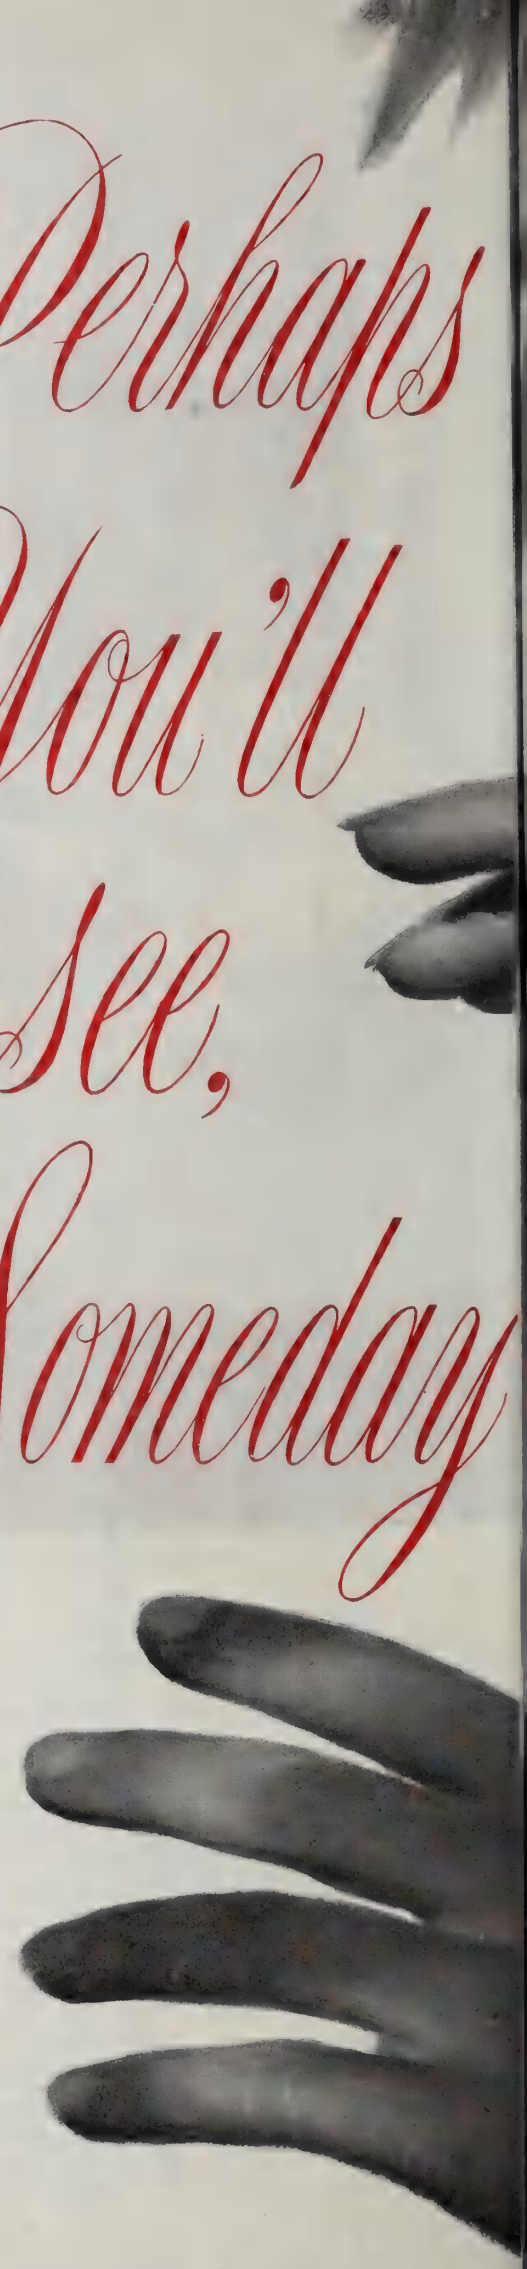
"On the hall stand," mother said. "She can't come here," she said.

"What do you mean she can't come here?" father said. He was reading the wire.

"She can't come here," mother said. "The room is taken. She will have to make some other arrangement this time. I'm tired of having her sponge a nice stopover out of us every time she goes through. She can take the night train on for once."

"At three in the morning?" father said. "She certainly cannot. If my home isn't open to my friends, it's a pretty state of affairs. Of course she will come here."

"The room is taken," mother said. "Have you forgotten Mr. Pemberton?"



"Do you mean," father said, "that you would put Marjorie out for that—that—for that—button collector!"

"I'm afraid so," mother said.

They had a real fight about it. But finally mother said Marjorie

(Continued on Page 142)

Perhaps You'll See, Someday

WATCHING HIS WIFE'S BEAUTIFUL ANIMATED FACE, BAXTER DENNING THOUGHT, "SOMEDAY SHE'LL LOVE SOMEONE ELSE."★

BY DORIS HUME

ILLUSTRATED BY R. G. HARRIS

OLD Mrs. Marrish said, "—— doesn't she?" and Baxter Denning realized guiltily he had heard not a word she was saying. He had been watching Stephanie, his wife, dancing with Hugh Rohn. Mrs. Marrish chuckled at his discomfiture. "Your preoccupation is a compliment to Stephanie, Baxter. I said, 'How beautiful Stephanie looks, doesn't she?'" She smiled. "When Stephanie is as old as I she will enjoy remembering that her husband could never take his eyes from her while she danced," she told him.

If it were only that, Baxter told himself when the old lady had gone. It used to be he could watch her dancing, could will his unease into submission, could reassure himself. But since her meeting with Hugh Rohn jealousy goaded him mercilessly. Was this the one? Was this the time?

With a soft swirl of skirt she approached. "Thank you, Hugh, it was perfect." Smiling radiantly, she dismissed her partner and sank into the chair Baxter offered her. "Are you being frightfully bored, darling?" she questioned. Before he could reply she leaned toward him, spreading the voluminous folds of her frost-white frock in her hands. "Everyone has been so complimentary, Bax. And the earrings are utterly perfect with it." She touched the little clusters of aquamarines.

"I wanted you to have them. No reason you shouldn't. After all, the Mackley case went off very well."

Momentarily her smile faded. Baxter loved her when she smiled; it was in moments of gravity that her beauty frightened him. Her features were so exquisitely drawn in the pure oval of her face. When, unsmiling, darkly blue, her eyes regarded him, panic always swept in, because he couldn't read them, tell what lay behind them.

It had been so from the first. Big, heavy-boned, awkward, what dared him to aspire to Stephanie Bonner he never knew. She was of another world than his self-made one. Yet something in him refused defeat. When, incredibly, he had won her, possession brought no peace of mind.

He remembered at the reception following his wedding how, slipping into the phone alcove under the stairs, he had found his return barred by two women standing near by speaking his name.

"But what she can see in Baxter Denning!"

"You can't have everything, darling, and Denning's on the way to making a name. He'll be able to give Steffie things. It's an ill-kept secret her mother's practically mortgaged the place for this send-off."

They began to move away.

"But he's so plain, so serious. And Steffie ——"

"I know. Well—let's wish him luck. He'll need it!"

BAXTER never forgot. To keep Stephanie happy was the prod, the spur, the lash that drove him. In eight years it moved him from offices in Jeffers Street to a suite in the Colony Building; from an apartment in Clovis Arms to a Georgian house in Matthias Wood.

She said now, "Shall we leave, Bax? I know it's dull for you, not dancing." She was not looking at him as she spoke; her gaze was on the dance floor where Hugh Rohn was waltzing with Linda West.

"I'm enjoying myself." He forced the words out. "Aren't you?"

She did not answer. Hugh Rohn and Linda were disappearing through the open doors leading to the terrace.

Then, "What—what was it, Bax? They're playing so loudly."

Her hands moved restlessly, fingers interlacing. How long ago he'd learned to watch the hands of persons in the courtroom. Faces might tell nothing, but hands —— He felt that familiar tightness at the pit of his stomach. Through eight years he'd clung to his precarious happiness. It seemed he could not exist without Stephanie, yet he lived always in fear of losing her.

"Perhaps we should go, Bax," she said. "You must be in court early tomorrow morning, I know."

He said, almost brusquely, "Don't bother yourself about that." Within him the question beat, Is it Hugh Rohn?

Stephanie rose. "Here come the Drakes; they'll talk indefinitely."

As they left the country club amid a flurry of good-bys it seemed to Baxter that Stephanie's smile was fixed, that her eyes kept searching. In his consciousness a name pulsed devilishly: Hugh Rohn—Hugh Rohn.

The social activities of their group endlessly fanned the flame of Baxter's jealousy. Wherever they went Stephanie was always the center of a group of admirers. But now among these Hugh Rohn stood out. Younger than Baxter, he had an engaging personality, a cool competence and a brilliance in argument which were winning him a place in the legal field.

There was nothing on which Baxter could actually put a finger. It was just an inner sense of loss, a sickening feeling that Stephanie was slipping from him. Had it been an obvious flirtation —— It was something deadlier—a sort of delicately attuned understanding in their attitude.

In his unease Baxter did the very thing he most wanted to avoid—he quarreled with Stephanie. About trivial things, unimportant things; never the thing that was cankering in him. He struck out impotently against shadows. When, later, he tried to make amends she was kind. "You're working too hard, Bax." That made him more savage than ever.

STEPHANIE spoke always with a disarming candor. "Hugh is going to make his name," she said once. "Corintha Diehl told me that John approached him regarding a partnership."

"And?"

"Nothing came of it. I wish you had someone like that with you, Bax, to help you shoulder the load."

"I don't need anyone. Anyway, he's a flash in the pan. Spectacular, but not solid."

"His record denies that, Bax. He's winning most of his cases. Mary Arbruster says ——"

"Mary Arbruster usually leads the crowd in making a fool of herself over an unattached man."

Color swept into her cheeks. "That wasn't nicely put, Bax."

"Why, because Rohn considers himself a friend of yours?"

Her chin came up. "Because I consider him one," she said. She turned at the door as she was leaving the room. "Meaning exactly what that implies," she added. "No more, no less." Never before had he seen her so angry.

Ironically, the following month found Baxter Denning opposing Hugh Rohn in what promised to be a difficult and long-drawn legal battle.

In the last year of a profligate life Gavin Blayr had married Naida Martello, half his age but twice as clever. His death was expected and most superficially mourned by Naida. Hitherto a bachelor and apparently without relatives, he left her as his only heir. His once diversified holdings had dwindled to a long-held portion of the rich San Bercos oil field. But enough to provide the thirty-seven-year-old Naida with the luxuries she craved, and to secure the attentions of a young man twelve years her junior with whom she had been reckless enough to fall utterly in love.

(Continued on Page 220)

Bax said, his heart pounding, "Stephanie, what have you done? I've got to know. I've got to, I tell you!"

Time rolled back and they were young again—young in heart, not just in years.

BACK TRACK TO LOVE

In cooking, in love, in everything that matters, if the timing goes wrong you've got to start over again.

BY ANYA SETON

THE meeting in the Pennsylvania Station, only two tracks away from the spot where they had said good-by, twenty-one months ago. Gale, waiting, pacing up and down near the gate, slender, poised—her auburn hair gleaming in sculptured smoothness above the sculptured black wool suit—oblivious of admiring glances. But inside the cream doeskin gloves her hands were icy wet. Her heart pounded—At last, at last.

And she had not known him. Until she heard his voice, slow, controlled. "Hello, Red. I'm this one in the brand-new homespun number."

"Phil, darling—darling!"

And they kissed, blindly clinging, almost as they had kissed good-by, twenty-one months ago—frantically trying to bridge the gulf to come. Then their arms dropped. He picked up his suitcase. They started walking. Beneath the roar of the station four incredible words hissed at her: This is my husband.

Forty-eight hours of marriage twenty-one months ago, of a rushing passion, guarding itself and them from the never-admitted menace of the inexorable advancing hours, never daring to mention the future. Impermanence. Unreality then too. But afterward there had been the letters; from San Francisco, from Okinawa, from Manila. Each one a shining link forged on an ever-strengthening bond.

And this was a stranger. Thin. Young-old eyes that were tired and yet ironic. So tall—had he really been so tall?—in a well-cut gray suit. The expensive conservative tie, the dark felt hat on the darker hair. This was a man she had not known: Philip L. Delafield of before Pearl Harbor, born New Yorker, rising young architect and art critic, debutantes' idol.

"You've shattered little debbie hearts from Long Island to Greenwich, Gale," Cheryl Fenton had laughed when she witnessed the scrambled ten-minute marriage in the Municipal Building. Gale had laughed, too, scarcely listening.

"You prefer the uniform, my sweet?" His voice was light, casual. He did not look at her. "It's not a novel predicament. Been quite a few cartoons on the subject."

"Oh, darling—of course not," she told him. "I love you in civvies. It's just that ——"

She stopped. That this doesn't seem real. But her sentence drifted off into the noise around them.

She squeezed his arm tight. They walked on. People jostled them. Near the escalator Phil had an encounter with a fat lady and a dachshund which in its escaping frenzy managed to leash itself around his ankle. The fat lady was indignant, the dachs resentful while Phil untangled himself. Gale and he laughed over the incident. Laughed too loudly and just a little too long.

In the taxi he looked out the window, said without emphasis, "Same old Seventh Avenue," and added immediately, "You aren't quite as I remembered you, either."

Her heart gave a sharp upward lurch, and paused.

"Much more—more beautiful," he went on, and her heart took up its slow wary beat again. "But I can't wait to see all that 'bright burning bush.' I used to dream of your hair—Red."

But he had not called her "Red" in the letters. There had been a private love name.

"The bush has been pruned and trimmed considerably," she said.

Jean Paul had spent hours on her hair, subduing the riotous auburn curls to a sophisticated sleekness. The black faille hat, high here and low there, was an Arnaud original and had cost half a week's salary. It had been bought for Phil's pleasure, because it made her look chic and yet romantic. Everything during those interminable months had been bought to please Phil. Phil, the eager, ardent young junior lieutenant, beloved companion of two days and nights. Phil of the letters, tender, understanding and so close that it was like hearing from oneself. Every half-finished thought, every experience shared. But was it?

HE stood in the middle of her room. The smart lime-and-white room which she had described to him piece by piece. The chartreuse taffeta curtains, the mirror tables, the white fur rug, the charming little rose porcelain horses on the mantel. In his eyes she saw a quickly masked dismay. He put his suitcase down on the white fur rug.

"You don't like it?" she cried, her voice high and rippling.

"It's charming, Gale," he said. "Very well done. I remember how you wrote of finding the horses in that little shop in Chinatown." He went over and touched one carefully. "They're good. Ming, I'm quite sure. You like horses?"

"Oh, yes," and she stopped. What was the use of explaining a love for horses that had colored all her childhood? At school in Winfield they had teased her about it, even nicknamed her "Pony." Or of mentioning old Jerry, retired farm horse which she had ridden, tended, loved for years. Now would she go on inanely with the natural sequence, "And do you like horses?"

Oh, where are you—what's happened to us? she cried silently. The constraint and the embarrassment crept through the room like a thick yellow fog.

He glanced at the luxurious disguised day bed with its load of taffeta pillows, sat down in a white leather chair. After (Continued on Page 147)

ILLUSTRATED BY HARRY ANDERSON

Women with a Broom

Ex-Colonel "Chep" Morrison, 31, will take over as mayor of New Orleans, May 6. He charged the election ring in uniform, brings the city a new political tradition, plus youngest (21), prettiest First Lady ever to win the favor of the ballot. Son Toni is two.

BY WILLIAM B. MONROE, JR.

MRS. JOHN T. CHAMBERS lives in New Orleans' Garden District in a big two-story white frame house set amid live oaks, magnolias, palms and banana trees. The wife of a civil engineer, she has two sons, one just back from Iran and the other still in the Pacific. Her fifty-odd years have not affected noticeably the olive complexion and dark eyes bequeathed her by a Creole ancestry, but they have turned her dark hair gray. Her quiet, slow, unruffled manner of speech seems to belie a firm jaw line.

Monday, May 6, is a day to which Mrs. Chambers is looking forward. So are thousands of other New Orleans women, for May 6 is the date for the inauguration of New Orleans' new mayor—thirty-four-year-old, movie-handsome deLesseps Story Morrison. Unanimously it is agreed that the election of "Chep" Morrison is a victory for New Orleans' women voters.

On the morning of January 22, Mrs. John T. Chambers and her son got up at 4 o'clock. They were election workers in the Democratic primary for mayor which assures the winner of eventual election. The Chambers were backing Morrison, reform candidate of an independent citizens' committee. But they felt sickeningly sure of defeat by the city's happily titled "Old Regular" machine and Mayor Robert Sidney Maestri, last of Huey Long's Long-Leche-Maestri triumvirate and nine-year boss of New Orleans politics. The machine boasted of winning every city election for the past twenty-five years. These four o'clock election mornings were nothing new to Mrs. Chambers.

There had been four or five of them, anyway, in the past ten or twelve years. She had expected no trouble today, however. Not many years ago, when few women worked at the polls, trouble had been the chief characteristic of New Orleans primaries. But now there were women everywhere, organized women. She remembered one of the first times she had been an election commissioner. The city policeman assigned to her precinct had pulled down the shade to a window in the polling room that opened on the street. Somebody had been annoyed that people outside were peering in to watch the proceedings.

She had turned to an Old Regular commissioner. "Don't you think we ought to leave that shade up?"

The Old Regular felt sure that here was one independent woman he could take care of. She spoke so timidly. "Lady," he said, "we've been running this poll like this for fifteen years and now you come along and tell us how to do it."

"Yes," Mrs. Chambers said, no more hurried than before, "but the law says the voting booth should be visible from the street, so there's no reason to pull the shade down."

Her opponent winced. If anything indicated something stirring in New Orleans politics more than the growing number of women working at the polls, it was that phrase "the law says." The two seemed to go hand in hand.

"You better put it up, Mac," he said to the policeman.

"And don't you think the policeman should stay outside?" Mrs. Chambers asked. "The law is that the policeman must be outside the barrier unless needed by a commissioner."

Without a word the policeman stopped by the window long enough to let the shade up and continued on out to the street.

Yes, things have changed since then. Like hundreds of other women, Mrs. Chambers, a watcher in the 1946 election, stuck at the polls all day, handing out sample ballots, wearing her Morrison ribbon so that voters could see it, keeping an eye on how the commissioners were running things.

By 10:30 that night 400 women were bone tired. They had been commissioners, working hard and hurriedly for seventeen hours, gulping sandwiches and coffee on the job. All day they had argued points of law, checked rapidly hundreds of names and numbers, inspected registration certificates, watched signatures of voters and commissioners to prevent double voting, kept one eye on the opposition workers and the other on the voting machines. At nine that night, when the polls

(Continued on Page 208)

"Democracy is a present you pay for with work and give to yourself." The Women's Independent Organization of New Orleans picks its candidates strictly by principle, won an election against the city machine for the first time in twenty-five years. Members canvassed voters, held rallies, on election day sent a woman's army to the polls.

"On the Continent nearly all the common articles of life have been destroyed. . . . A package from America will mean the difference between health and bodily weakness; it will mean that Europeans regard Americans as friends and not as insensitive strangers."
STUART

Can America Be Prosperous in a Sea of Human Misery?

A discussion between Mrs. Roosevelt and the Editors of the Ladies' Home Journal on our responsibilities to Europe • BY GRETTA PALMER

WILL Europe, Asia, Africa go Communist? Or will the countries devastated by the war turn, instead, toward the liberal democracy of our own Constitution? The answer to this question may be profoundly influenced by what the women of the United States feed their families, according to United Nations Organization delegate Eleanor Roosevelt.

"The task facing us today is no less a job than the rebuilding of half a world," said Mrs. Franklin Roosevelt, as she sat, sad-eyed and serious, at the tea table in her New York apartment. She had come up from Washington that day to discuss her experiences at the London General Assembly of UNO with Bruce and Beatrice Gould.

"In this rehabilitation of a broken Europe, who is going to take the lead—and the responsibility?" asked Mrs. Gould. "Who is going to feed and help the hungry, bombed-out people overseas?"

"Either our kind of civilization will take over the task, or ——" Mrs. Roosevelt paused a moment, as if to glimpse the future. "It's evident, isn't it, that the new and virile people of Russia will do the job instead?"

There was no "diplomatic discretion," no "this is off the record" caution in the conversation of Mrs. Roosevelt with the editors of the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL. She banished from her thinking the rigid, frigid world of protocol, as she has swept all signs of officialdom from her pleasant home.

Mrs. Roosevelt's living room faces the just-budding trees and the playing children of Washington Square park. The large Oriental rug, the unmatched pieces of old-fashioned furniture give it a comfortable, hearth-and-home atmosphere, as different as possible from the State apartments of her White House days.

It is the home of a child of traveled parents; the embroidered Chinese screen, the finely carved ivories, the brass trivet and much of the mahogany furniture came to Mrs. Roosevelt from the New York house in which she lived as a child. It is the room of a grandmother; photographs of the very youngest Roosevelts are prominent on shelves jutting off the fireplace. It is the library of a reader; shelves of books line the long side of the room, and they are varied in their scope: Thackeray's novels rub elbows with Harold Laski and Winston Churchill. Harry Hopkins' book rests next to sets of Sir Walter Scott and Charles Dickens. Marquand and Hemingway and Saroyan are here; and so are Rudyard Kipling and Hermann Rauschning, Robert Louis Stevenson and Will Durant. It is a fine hodgepodge of books, collected by a reader with interests as wide as the modern world, who knows that world's diversity.

While Mrs. Roosevelt busied herself with the hostess' stage business of lemon slices and sugar lumps, she chatted about the London conference as cozily as if it had been a meeting of a district school board. Russia, to her, is no mysterious subcontinent of steppes and snow; it is "The woman Byelo Russian delegate I like so much" and "Madam Vishinsky, who is a brilliant teacher of criminal law." England is no blot of red on a map; it is "Lady Reading, the head of the Women's Voluntary Services, who promised to supply me with lists of individual English families, in case American women wish to send monthly food packages to someone who will write back and become their friend." For food and its meaning in politics today was the point to which Mrs. Roosevelt wished to draw her guests' attention.

Mrs. Gould, a crisp, tailored figure in a black faille suit and organdy ruche, leaned forward as she took her cup of tea.

(Continued on Page 131)

PHOTOGRAPHS BY LESLIE GILL

JOHN FREDERICS HAT, SCHEPPS JEWELRY, KORET BAG

SUMMER SERIAL

CONCERNING A BLUE

RAYON LINEN TOWN SUIT

BY HOSE BARRACK

WITH MANY FASCINATING

CHAPTERS. GIVEN A

SHEER WHITE HAT

LADEN WITH CORNFLOWERS,

GOLD JEWELRY, A

SATINY-WHITE CALFSKIN

BAG . . . IT GOES ROMANTIC

FOR LUNCHEONS, AFTER-

NOONS, DAYLIGHT DINING . . .

JOHN FREDERICS HAT, SCHEPPS JEWELRY, PHELPS BAG

BACK IN THE DAILY GROOVE . . . THIS MOST AGREEABLE OF

SUITS CONVERTS ITS COLLAR WITH A GOLD CHAIN . . . ADDS

A BEIGE LATTICE-STRAW SAILOR, BEIGE CALFSKIN SHOULDER

BAG, COTTON GLOVES FOR ROUTINE WEAR . . . CHANGES AGAIN

WITH A PRINTED BLOUSE . . . AGAIN WITH SCARFS, BOUTONNIERES.

SHAPING YOUR WARDROBE FOR SUMMER

By Wilhela Cushman
Fashion Editor of the Journal

TO BE SUCCESSFUL . . . a wardrobe must be pursued to the end, not dropped in the middle or slighted at the edges. Then, and only then, it becomes a reliable fact—not wishful thinking—a kind of personal achievement that you can bask in . . . and that covers you with glory. In this four-page portfolio are seven elements that go into a soul-satisfying summer wardrobe. Versions will vary, colors change, accessories differ . . . but the formula remains essentially the same.

IF YOU LIVE IN THE CITY . . . the cool suit will be a cornerstone costume. It may be linen, silk or rayon shantung. It could be blue or green, black, brown, beige or gray. With change of accessories it goes everywhere from a business appointment to a wedding. An afternoon print could be sleeveless or puff-sleeved, slim or full-skirted. A black day-to-dinner dress is inevitable . . . a town cotton a cool necessity and an important fashion. An evening dress for city rooftops may be ruffled black chiffon, elusive as a black moth, or frost-white eyelet in a sophisticated Directoire silhouette. From there on, the city woman borrows from country wardrobes, for holidays and country week ends.

IF YOU'RE A COUNTRY DWELLER . . . you'll have more cottons, more casual clothes, the perfect golf or tennis dress . . . and you'll collect gay play shoes. Your country-club dance dress may be an ankle-length percale, or the enchanting new off-the-shoulder shepherdess style in a print or pastel. You may skip the black dress, but the chances are you'll want it for the theater in town. And you'd be lost without a suit—a wonderful cotton or linen to wear in the country with bright belts, scarfs, blouses, and to the city with the right hat and bag.

IF YOU SUMMER AT THE SEASHORE . . . you'll practically live in bathing suits and beach clothes. Oddly enough, the best fashion in sunback dresses includes a little jacket for cover-up purposes that could go to town. Black linen or white piqué gives you a basic in this sort of thing, subject to change with colored shoes, belts and scarfs. You'll adore shirt, skirt and halter combinations . . . dance in full cottons. And unless you are completely committed to the dunes, you'll still be faced with occasions that demand that Elemental Suit, and a plain or printed crepe.

FASHION ALWAYS TAKES ON FORM AND COLORATION from its locale, but seashore and countryside rub elbows with metropolitan life . . . and no wardrobe in its right mind is unmindful of this fact.

DRAWINGS BY REYNALDO LUZA

SHAPING YOUR WARDROBE FOR SUMMER

PHOTOGRAPHS BY LESLIE GILL

Summer wardrobes are incomplete without a town cotton. Adele Simpson does her parapet silhouette in chambray, the color of iced coffee. Hat and bag harmonize.

IN THE PINK PHELPS DUFFSKIN BELT AND SHOULDER BAG JOHN FREDERICS HAT

The bow dress in blue-and-white dollar-dot, picks up the cornflower hat, black straw bandeau, patent-leather flats, for its accessories.

Two-piece blue casual by Clare Potter—add color with belts, scarfs, 1920 sports-type fashion worn with the new short haircut by Michel.

Black jewel with high aptitude for change, by Rose Barrack. A matching bolero jacket is added for daytime with other accessories.

White piqué week-ender by Dorothy Cox attracts splashes of color. Bolero may be worn also with skirt of the basic blue rayon-linen suit.

UNDEBATABLE . . . THE CHIC, THE COOLNESS, THE ENDLESS POSSIBILITIES OF SUMMER BLACK AND SUMMER WHITE . . . A SHORT BLACK DRESS THAT SHEDS ITS SIMPLE JACKET FOR DINNER . . . A WHITE PLAY DRESS THAT ADDS VIVID BELTS AND SHOES . . . A DREAM OF A WHITE EVENING DRESS. . . .

ON THIS PAGE: ROY CHANDA'S CIRCLET HAT, PHELPS BELT-BAG, SCHEPPS PEARL EARRINGS

Directoire silhouette, slim and elegant, in crisp white eyelet with short puff sleeves and a long organdy stole by Wilson Folmar. Frost-cool on a summer night.

The Blous

Off-the-shoulder eyelet and batiste peplum blouse, by Ceil Chapman; for long or short skirts.

DRAWINGS BY REYNALDO LUZA

Leg o' mutton sleeve blouse in pure silk, by Dorina Liebert: from the gay and romantic period into the summer of '46.

The bow blouse by Dorina Liebert: sheerest white organdy with turquoise blue embroidery.

A blouse goes dancing — off-the-shoulder eyelet embroidery with a bouffant black taffeta skirt, by Ceil Chapman.

Butterfly blouse—hand-pai and embroidered in paillette organdy. Dorina Liebert de

Beautiful

BY RUTH MARY PACKARD

Not since the day of the Gibson Girl has there been such a fashion for the really beautiful shirtwaist blouse—feminine, romantic, with a fragile, under-glass look that Man—traditionally and today—finds enchanting. They are of the sheerest organdy or organza, often with Swiss embroidery, or of brilliantly colorful pure silk. They have full soft sleeves drawn into cuffs at the wrist, making the hands look small and fastidious . . . or puffed at the elbow. They have necklines bare to the shoulder tips or drawn to the throat by ribbon bows. Reminiscent of the French Directoire and the Victorian, they are part of today's fashion trend for a new elegance and femininity. Worn with suit or dinner skirt on the most special occasion.

TOGRAPHS BY PETER MOORE

The lovely lace-trimmed blouse returns; soft ruffles at the wrist and throat; a sheer crepe by Ida Kraines.

Organdy shirtwaist with schoolgirl collar, a little black tie of the most elegant silk ribbon. By Alice Stewart.

Victorian pin tucks, high neckline and shoulder ruffles; fine batiste with eyelet embroidery by Ida Kraines; Seaman Schepps jewelry.

The somewhat theatrical but wholly feminine sleeve. The blouse in pure silk; the colors heavenly; by Dorina Liebert for afternoon.

MAKE IT A FOURSOME

By Nora O'Leary

THE BLACK RAYON-LINEN SUIT: BUSINESS GIRL AND COMMUTER'S DELIGHT.

Two costumes with interchangeable parts—fashion's easiest trick, and no trick fashion. A black rayon-linen basque suit and a turquoise-and-black printed dress with new full skirt, puff-sleeve top and bare-back halter give you four combinations—each a current fashion. Make them yourself from Hollywood Patterns. Add black, white and printed gloves, one hat for all. Black suit, pattern 1812, 25c; halter, printed blouse and skirt, 1841, 25c

SUIT JACKET WITH PRINTED SKIR

TWO-PIECE PRINT FOR AFTERNOO

HALTER, PRINTED SKIRT FOR COUNTE

PLEATED SHANTUNG SKIRT PAIRS OFF WITH MATCHING SHIRT.

appy minimum for the casual girl—means new pleated skirt, jacket and louse in navy-blue silk or rayon shantung, plus a striped overblouse in red r green. Result: a town suit and two two-piece dresses. To these she adds a anama-style hat, pet scarfs and belts, white piqué shorts for week ends. acket, pattern 1810, 15c; skirt 1679, 25c; two blouses and shorts, 1843, 25c.

ack and other views and sizes of Hollywood Patterns are on page 146. Buy Hollywood Patterns at the ore which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, postage prepaid, from Hollywood Pattern Service, utnam Avenue, Greenwich, Connecticut; or in Canada from 2 Duke Street, Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

STRIPED BLOUSE ADDS COLOR, CHANGE.

© HOLLYWOOD

SHANTUNG BLOUSE GOES WITH SHORTS.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY GENE [redacted]

JACKET WITH SKIRT MAKES SUIT.

MORNING, NOON AND NIGHTTIME TOO

Morning-till-midnight patterns for Sub-Deb Cinderellas—who know how to look pretty at any time of day! Bright-and-early morning chores can be done in gay Guatemalan striped cottons, crisp chambrays. Afternoon parties find you telling everyone there that you really made your suit yourself! White organdy and checked gingham are combined for a summer evening dress to make your most delightful dream come true—Sub-Deb Hollywood Patterns for Sub-Deb figures—simple to make—fun to wear! ★ ★ BY DAWN CROWELL

Meet me at the movies. Three-piece bolero suit in crisp linen; John Frederics Junior hat; matching bag. Sketch: Blouse and skirt without jacket. 1818. 25c.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY KARGER

SKETCHES BY LEE LUNZER

Left: Pastel cotton for summer afternoons: separate peplum: gored skirt. 1779. 25c. Right: Pretty checked gingham: crisp white collar and cuffs: 1801. 25c.

© HOLLYWOOD

Guatemalan cotton suspender skirt; linen blouse. Blouse 1790. 15c; skirt

IF YOU ASK ME

By Eleanor Roosevelt

Do you think a mother should accept her son's foreign wife and child even though he was engaged to a lovely American girl? There are thousands of the girls overseas, deliberately roping these boys in. Our Government seems to be more concerned over other countries than our own people.

I do not see what the Government has to do with our acceptance of the wives whom our sons marry. Unfortunately, being engaged to someone is not quite the same as being married. If a young man marries someone else, the girl to whom he was engaged has no redress, but if the young man marries and leaves his wife, the situation is, of course, different. Therefore, I think whether the young man who married during his service abroad was engaged or not, a mother will have to accept the girl to whom her son is married. If there are children from the marriage, we most certainly will want to get on, since the children are our own blood. Paternity is something which cannot be wiped out. If we are wise I think we will learn to love the women our sons marry.

We will remember that the wives gave our sons, in the days that were hard, love and affection and a cure for the loneliness which might have been unbearable.

It is true that there are some foreign women who have "roped in" our young men and married them for selfish reasons, but I hope they are in the minority.

The best safeguard any boy could have, of course, was the knowledge that he had the love of his people at home, waiting for him to return, and their constant attention as far as the war would allow, during the time he was overseas.

Young people are prone to fall in love through propinquity. If they have married, we will be wise to do all we possibly can to help them in this new adventure, since we desire their happiness above all else in the world.

Do you think it is wrong to marry a man a few years younger than yourself? I am a widow 35 years old with two children.

I am not able to give this kind of advice. These are personal considerations which can only be decided by the individuals involved, and each case is different from every other case.

If you were to live your life over again, is there any one outstanding thing which you would like to change, or do differently?

I think anybody reaching the last decades of his or her life realizes that there are many things one would like to change. Often one had no choice, however, as in my case, since they were due to conditions when one was very young. Certain characteristics and qualities of character I think might have been developed earlier and obviated later difficulties, had one grown up in different circumstances.

A friend of mine is starting a neighborhood domestic-service business. She will have a trained staff, to do catering, cleaning, laundry, nursing and other chores, by weekly or individual appointments. Do you think the average community (of 10,000 or more) could support a business of this kind?

I certainly do. I think it is a very good idea and it will be a tremendous help to a great many housewives. I hope such a setup will include someone to take care of children a certain number of hours a day.

---

Letters should be addressed to Mrs. Roosevelt, c/o the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL. It should be understood that Mrs. Roosevelt's answers reflect only her own opinions, and are not necessarily the opinions of the Editors of the JOURNAL.

Most women fib about their age at some time, but I never had until now. Recently, when applying for a job, I was discriminated against because of my age. My prospective employer was extremely pleased with my work until I told him my age, and then his whole attitude changed. I decided not to be so frank in the future, but my husband argues that the Social Security Board will catch up with me and notify my employer of the discrepancy between his reports and their files. Is this true?

I think any employer who is satisfied with your work and then, when you tell him your age, loses interest in the work which you have done, is a pretty weak reed on which to lean for continuous employment. However, if your worry is just about the Social Security Board, you can be entirely honest with them, since I understand that they never divulge any person's age to any employer. However, you should be sure to tell the Social Security Board the truth because I think it might be serious if the records were not accurate.

You stated that you and Mr. Roosevelt were fifth cousins, once removed. Will you please explain what is meant by "once removed."?

Once removed means we belong to different generations. My husband was one generation older than I was. In other words, he was my father's fifth cousin.

Like many others nowadays, the thought of what an atom war could do to our world often comes to my mind. But, like most others, I push it to the back of my consciousness with the excuse that there is nothing that I myself can do about it. Is there anything really which the common man can do?

Yes, there is a great deal that the common man can do. We can work for peace. Even during the war some of our leaders were thinking about how to establish a unity among nations after the war which might prevent future wars. The machinery was set in motion first to write a charter which could be agreed to by many nations. At present fifty-one nations have agreed to that charter and in London, on January 10, they sent delegates actually to set up the machinery to implement that charter. That is now done. The permanent home of this organization will be in this country and under it many undertakings will begin which we hope will lead us to a peaceful world.

However, this will only be possible if the peoples of the various nations keep their interest alive and work to the best of their ability under the organization, whether it is a health organization, or an educational organization, or a labor organization, or any of the other numerous organizations which create the ties among peoples that make them want to work together and not to fight each other.

You and I, as ordinary citizens, can work for these various undertakings and, above everything else, we can create public opinion and make it favorable to cooperation. When one has seen Europe or the Pacific and understands what modern war does to countries and peoples, one can fully realize, I think, that our future existence depends on making the UNO a vital instrument for peace.

I have War Bonds which I hope to keep for ten years, with my name only on them. People tell me if I were to die, my own daughter could not collect anything from the Government for the bonds. Is this true?

I think your bonds would be part of your estate if they had no other name on them, and therefore they would be taxable as the rest of your estate would be. It would be wise to make a will specifying that the bonds are to go to your daughter, or take the bonds to a Federal Reserve Bank, or the bank with which you usually deal and have them changed to include both your name and that of your daughter. In that case if either one of you were to die, the bonds would automatically belong to the survivor and they would not be taxable.

My attractive sixteen-year-old daughter, a popular junior in high school, has been dating steadily. To this I have no objection, as she is a high honor student, but she repeatedly returns from dates on school nights well after midnight. Two or three years ago when she disobeyed, she went across my knee and was soundly spanked with a hairbrush. I think this practice should be utilized again. My wife disagrees. I would like to know your views.

I am afraid, when you reach the age of sixteen, to be spanked as though you were eight or nine would be rather bad for your sense of dignity. At sixteen a girl should be reasonable enough so that you could talk over the question of hours which are kept during the school week. My daughter never allowed her very attractive, charming daughter to make any dates during the school week, and the youngster herself realized that it was a wise plan and never even asked to make them.

CARTOON DRAWN BY JACK MARKOW; REPRINTED COURTESY THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

IN HONOR OF..

Cotton is covered with fashion citations this summer . . . chambray, gingham, percale, seersucker treated with the same deference as the finest silk . . . the enchanting new Dresden shepherdess style is interpreted in cotton, and the most sophisticated summer luncheon dress. The high compliment of beautiful hats and real jewels is bestowed upon cotton.

ashions in seersucker: Claire McCardell's camisole sash dress with matching bathing suit, and a bare midriff dress for beach and country.

Sunback dress with crisp bolero jacket, one of the biggest little fashions of the summer, from Long Island to Los Angeles. This one, designed by William Bass, is baby-blue chambray trimmed with white rickrack.

PHOTOGRAPHS
BY GENE FENN

Gingham for dancing: ankle-length, full skirt, basque top, dramatic plaid. Ceil Chapman design for the young and gay.

COTTON

Cotton is first in the hearts of American women who adore its freshness . . . find personal delight in its rise from kitchen and garden to the heights of fashion. The essence of youth—cotton is no longer limited to the young. Still . . . the young look is half its charm, and this magic it confers on every woman who wears it. ★ BY WILHELA CUSHMAN

Fashion Editor of the Journal

Shepherdess neckline and sleeves in striped chambray. This little cotton goes to town on a hot day with a John Frederics hat, or stays home for dinner. Essence of this summer's fashion, by Joset Walker.

Dresden dress in cotton with new neckline, darling of the season by Joset Walker, for town and country afternoons.

Gingham for town: bustle-back sophisticated silhouette like a faille or taffeta, worn with big hat; skirt a little longer, please.

THE DARK WOOD

BY CHRISTINE WESTON

ILLUSTRATED BY COBY WHITMORE

DOUBLY wounded—in war by the Germans, and at home by the conduct of his wife, Regan—Col. Mark Bycroft refuses her the divorce she wants in order to marry her lover. Instead, Mark keeps custody of their son, Neddy, and is tormented by the boy's casual references into wondering whether Regan has become the mistress of William Symes, an adviser to the State Department.

While Mark is angered and embarrassed by Regan's absence, she and Symes consult with Dick Sparrow, an attorney, on how to persuade Mark into an uncontested divorce. Dick and his wife, Miriam, are the best friends of a young widow, Stella Harmon, robbed by war of her husband, Alec. Remembering that Alec once told her never to believe reports he had been killed, Stella is unable to accept the finality of his death even after Symes arranges a trip to her husband's supposed grave in Italy.

Stella sees Mark for the first time in a restaurant. It is after Mark, intoxicated at a war-reunion party, has been knocked out by Symes in a hotel elevator, and he is alone at a table, brooding on his unhappiness. Both Stella and Miriam are struck by his startling likeness to Alec. Stella's face is transformed into radiance.

XVII

NEW YORK languished in June heat. Poetic denizens dreamed of the country, of cattle reclining in the shade like great furred fish in a pool, of fields dim with grass, of streams covered in yellow cow lilies, and killdeer fluttering from weedy banks. Wind from the sea mingled with the harsh breath of stone and asphalt to create a separate climate in which the spirit failed and ambition flagged, yet somehow men and women worked on, computing and deducting, making love in their crannied apartments, sleeping, wakening in the hope that tomorrow the wind might shift and rain fall from the iron sky.

In the great warehouses downtown those whose task it was to shunt and carry crates and cases did so with dogged vitality, shirts black with sweat, nostrils filled with fumes from exhaust pipes, ears ringing from the great crescendo of business—that inelegant, massive performance which, pursuing its charted course upstream, its cargo sifted by a thousand currents, disgorged itself at last on the counters and showcases of Madison and Fifth avenues. Here venders—trained poodles suave and superfluous as most of their wares—lifted wrist and eyebrow languidly amid the opulence, while shoppers, marked by the acquisitive curse, ogled and fingered the treasure.

The hat lately coveted by Miriam Sparrow was borne away on another head, and Octavia Evans, coming to work one morning on the subway, met and admired it from her seat. There would, she guessed, be a replica at quarter the price on 14th Street, and she wondered whether the style would become her daughter-in-law, who was low in spirit since Edgar's desertion. Might a bright green feather, and perhaps a new hair-do, lure Edgar home? Octavia thought about him with terror, but with pride also. Where was he going, and what was to be his fate? She could not forget the things he said, the wild dreams he flung before her, the contempt in which he held her, contempt which sprang from shame. He hated not only his color but his servile origins, of which she was a perpetual reminder. And when she tried to reprove him for inconsistency he shouted to her about the men he had seen tearing one another to pieces in Europe, and said that the white man was an intellectual beast, enslaver, destroyer! Against this pale monster Edgar elected to measure himself, and in the most secret places of her heart his mother felt pride and a chill of fear.

THEN, since it is usually easier to contemplate other people's misery, she turned her attention to the problem of her employer and his son. A week ago the colonel had come home from a party with a badly cut lip. He offered no explanation and she made no comment, but the incident had troubled her. In the days which followed she watched him closely, detecting a change in him, an unfamiliar grimness. This was no atmosphere in which to bring up a child. He should let his wife go her way, and try to find another way for himself. The desire for vengeance, thought Octavia, gets you nowhere, it leaves you, in the end, dried out in body and soul.

Later in the day Mark heard Octavia going about her duties, making beds, cleaning, dusting, putting the apartment in order, and he thought restlessly, In a week Neddy will be through school and I shall have him on my hands all summer. What then? Maybe I better send him to camp. But if I did that Regan might find him and snatch him away. Once Neddy was in her possession, it would be impossible to get him back without a real fight.

As the June sunlight blazed on his windows the crystal conglomeration of the city rose before him; he thought of the country and the sea, of the ardent, active life he had dreamed. Yet he felt chained to New York, to this apartment which had become, for him, a den, a cave in which he could hide his rotten pride and his failure. Remembrance of the evening at the Rotterdam Hotel dogged him, though he tried to dismiss it as nothing more than a drunken brawl. But detail by detail the whole miserable performance returned to plague him: the pursuit of Symes into the elevator, his own murderous impulse, Symes' amazed expression and the hard impact of the man's knuckles on his mouth. The blow resounded through him like a voice crying, "Blundering, conceited fool! I am not the man!"

Recovering his senses in the hotel lavatory with Perry bending over him, Mark had looked round for William Symes. "Where is he? I want to apologize."

Perry laid a wet cloth on his mouth. "You don't have to bother about him."

Perry had helped him into an elevator, then into a cab. Next day the young man called up to say that Symes, evidently a decent sort, had declared himself satisfied that the whole thing was a mistake, and had even gone so far as to make it all right with the people at the hotel, where he was apparently held in great respect. Mark, said Perry over the phone, could now dismiss the whole affair, unless he wanted to call Symes and offer his apologies.

"You got the wrong guy all right," Perry said. "I thought, when you chased him into the elevator, that you must be on the right tack. But that wallop never came from a guy with a guilty conscience!"

Mark groaned. "And old Wilmer? What does he think? I never even got to the dinner!"

"Wilmer doesn't remember anything. He was absolutely crocked himself. So far as I can make out everyone else was, too, except Symes."

After this conversation Mark meditated calling Symes on the telephone, but his gorge rose at the thought of making a further abject ass of himself. What was there to say? What excuse could he possibly offer for that unprovoked assault in the elevator? "I want to apologize, Mr. Symes, for having labored under the delusion that you were my wife's lover!" Drearily he rehearsed an imaginary interview, then abandoned the whole idea.

Left to himself, a man succumbs to the vices of egocentricity. But though Mark was aware of this, he felt powerless to aid himself. Perhaps he had seen too much action to believe in it; perhaps he was more exhausted than he realized; perhaps the only method by which he could, for the time being, grapple with his world was to see it as his enemy and himself as an unworthy opponent.

"What about it, little cat?" he inquired of the restaurant kitten which leaped on his table as he sat drinking beer at Philippe's.

The kitten squirmed against his hand, he felt the tiny intricate skeleton under its silky fur. He thought of the tomcats which had fought each other that this one might be engendered; of the tigerish jungle of the city, from which people could not escape; of the whole snarling tangle of sex which passed for love. His hand tightened on the kitten's body. One squeeze and there would be one cat the less. He released the creature and finished his beer. Then he went out into the crashing heat and the uproar of Third Avenue, unconscious of Stella Harmon's resurrected gaze.

IN her room overlooking the river, Hester lay with the radio playing in her ears. Her thoughts moved sullenly over the events of the past few hours, and she said aloud into the lonely air, "They are going to their favorite inn down in the country, and they could easily have taken me along. I would have a few days in the fresh air without getting in their way. It would be a change for me. I never get away from this place, or see anyone. But what does Regan care, or Symes? They've got each other. No one else counts. Nothing else counts."

Symes had called to pick up Regan, and they had treated Hester with (Continued on Page 54)

can't stop you from loving a ghost," Mark said. "But don't you surrender too easily, Stella?"

Menu
Sugared Strawberries
Salmon Mousse
Purée of Peas and Avocado
Pineapple-Cucumber
Basket Salad
Hot Rolls Relishes
Coconut Ice Cream
Jelly Roll Coffee
Bonnet Mints

Keep it under your Hat

BY ANN BATCHELDER

THIS is being written by one who never had an announcement party. Never a shower has fallen on me, except the one which stands out in memory like a bandaged thumb. That one, you remember, turned out to be a cloudburst and pretty nearly ruined the tulips I was going to exhibit at the garden-club show. That was a real shower, if I may say so.

Happened the night before the show. What did I do? Oh, no, I didn't wring my hands and weep. I figured there was dampness aplenty and who was I to add to it? So I assembled my minions. My cook, my gardener and myself got together three umbrellas—not the best umbrellas, you understand, but umbrellas just the same. And we staggered down to the lower garden (farthest from the house, of course) and there we lined up, each holding those second-best umbrellas over those first-class tulips.

At this point. Suddenly my gardener, who is a man of parts, as they say, cried out in an anguished voice and in Italian to boot, "Sacré Madonna, the peonies." I cannot spell "peonies" in Italian, but I knew what he meant, for off he sprinted to the tool house, and as the rain came fiercer and faster, he built a shelter over the peonies and he saved them. And we two females stood our ground with our umbrellas, and when the downpour ceased we carefully siphoned off, via a medicine dropper which I by chance had in my pocket, the water that filled the tulip cups, cut our tulips and the next day I took a blue ribbon—also a blue on the peonies. And that's the shower I remember best.

Now then. Having so gracefully led into this whole thing, we will get on with our announcement. Now an announcement comes before a shower. Maybe I should have thought of that, and put first things first. Maybe so. But by now you must be used to me. Used to my putting down a receipt for brown Betty, then lightly leaping back to soup.

Under your hat. Probably you knew about this engagement long, long ago. When they start to "go steady," buy a piggy bank and lay off those two-dollar boxes of candy. And if you aren't sworn to secrecy, you are unique. "Just keep this under your hat, darling, but Bert and I are getting married in June." This is your cue to swear on a stack of telephone books that wild horses can't drag this secret out of the deep well into which you've presumably dropped it. (P.S.: You'll hear all the details later at the Woman's Club or at Mabel's bridge, so don't worry.)

Now we're really off. Well, girls, it is May, and weddings come in June, and the announcement party you will be giving is right in the offing, so here are a few Maytime hints. As you can see, we have brought in with our decorations ("motifs," as the decorators say) spring hats, flowers, hatboxes and all the mysterious delights that go with announcements and weddings.

(Continued on Page 190)

PHOTOS BY STUART-FOWLER

LINE A DAY

By Ann Batchelder

1 Words from a bookworm: Don't read books when you have nothing else to do, except in bed. The most exquisite pleasure in reading a book comes when work hangs over you like the sword of Damocles.

2 Something new as a fifth string on a fiddle and twice as useful—the smoked capon. Not so formidable as a big smoked turkey, but delicious down to the last bone.

3 As for that smoked turkey pâté, mix it with deviled egg filling and stuff the inner stalks of finest celery. And you won't need to blush when the company forgets its manners and grabs.

4 One more news item and then to other things. Whole brook trout in neat tins come to you ready to fry or to broil. Find the salt pork and cream gravy for yourselves. Also the baked spuds.

5 Broiled chicken hash: A two-chapter eaterette, and worth anybody's time and trouble. Chop cold cooked chicken fine. Make a very rich cream sauce. Add two or three minced pimientos, tease it with thyme, tantalize it with paprika, perfume it with a little saffron, and excite it with freshly ground pepper.

6 Second chapter: Prepare fried sippets of bread and arrange in a deep plate, pie plate preferred. Now cover with the chicken in its sauce. Run the plate under the broiler until lightly browned and bubbling. Serve with fried sippets around the edge and pass the chutney. An original dish of great merit awaits you.

7 Another chicken creation is made by serving half a breast of steamed chicken with the filet and upper wing attached, allowing one to each person. (You can use the rest of the chicken for a mince or whatever next day.) Put the chickens in a deep saucepan and prepare the sauce, keeping the breasts warm and well covered.

8 The sauce makes the dish and don't ever let them tell you different. Chop to a fine mince an onion, four hard-cooked eggs, a cup of mushrooms, a green pepper and a stalk or two of celery. Very fine, remember. Add enough cream to make a generous sauce. Put in a good piece of fresh butter; season it all highly. And, when hot, beat in two fresh eggs. Pour over the chicken breasts, bring to a boil, reduce the heat and cook a few minutes to bind and blend the sauce. Serve with rice and currant jelly.

9 From an old cookbook: "Few ladies, or gentlemen either, care to appear before company with an ear of green corn in their hands and bite off the grains with their teeth." Handsome is as handsome does. Or else.

10 Trout baked in cream, with the grated rind of a lemon sprinkled on their speckled beauty, is a very delicious dish. But fried in salt-pork fat is still the classic way.

11 Secure for yourself some jars of black currant jelly. With grilled chops or breasts of guinea hen, turn a glass into the skillet they are done in. Add a little Worcestershire sauce, a trifle of mustard, juice of half a lemon and some melted butter. Bring to a boil, pour over the meat. The gods smile when such a sauce prevails.

12 Remember my years-long search for hulled corn? The kind I used to fill my blue bowl with out of the red cart and the tin dipper? Well, sir, you and I, too, can get it now, soak it overnight, warm it up and eat it with sweet creamy milk and salt. And it also comes in cans. My quest is done.

13 Cut and cook some young and up-and-coming shoots of asparagus, using just the heads. Drain, season with salt and pepper and fold them into a soft, creamy, dreamily browned omelet. Such a lovely thing. For luncheon or supper.

14 You doubtless know this as well as garden-crazy Annie. But—when you cut asparagus, cut below the bed. Don't leave a stalk showing. Looks bad, is bad.

15 Did you know that canned mushroom soup can, with the aid and comfort furnished by eggs beaten separately, turn out a marvelous soufflé? Well, it can, and you might look into this.

16 Speaking of the ubiquitous egg, don't hesitate to scramble. (I'd scram at many a scrambled egg I've manfully downed.) But go ahead and do some, in the chafing dish with fresh mushrooms and Gruyère cheese. It's the McCoy.

17 Reply to query: "My dear Bella, a galantine has nothing to do with Sir Walter Raleigh or with Beau Brummell, as you suggest. It is a glorified meat loaf, disguised with pistachio and truffles. It's done with ham and chicken or chicken and ham, as you choose."

18 For the appetizer tray, and such will soon be around for summer parties and suppers at the out-of-doors grill, make up some tiny fish balls, adding chopped pimiento to the mixture, dip them in beaten egg and finely rolled corn flakes and fry in deep fat. These come under the Lucullus Division and a try will tell you why.

19 Herb note: Young and unworldly peas companion the fragrant leaves of sweet basil, and as for tomatoes, no matter how you do them, the basil is practically a must.

20 Let me tell you something: little thin griddlecakes go over big spread with sweet butter, covered generously with jam and rolled up. Serve them with cream cheese beaten with a little fruit juice and cream. A dessert to write home about.

21 Another simple sweet as good as it sounds is made with beautifully cooked rice flavored with a vanilla bean, then heaped in sherbet glasses with whipped cream and shaved maple sugar. You could go farther and fare worse.

22 As the bee is to honey, so is lime to the melon. Put a ball of lime sherbet in the cut halves of melon, or, if the melon is too large, cut in quarters and fill with the sherbet.

23 It's something to get a different slant on a string bean. The string bean is as backward as a balky mule, but you can lick it. Finish the beans off, when cooked, with a good lump of butter, and add a touch of nutmeg to the seasonings. Now then—surprise those beans with grated Parmesan cheese! That'll learn 'em.

24 Dept. of Utter Depression: Did you hear of the man who, when offered an omelet Grand Marnier asked if there was any coleslaw in the house? Of such are the dark places peopled.

25 Tiny rosebud beets that arrive so tenderly cooked and so rubyesque in cans, are very smart served cold in salted sour cream, when the main course is trout or any fine fish.

26 Since you will eat carrots (folks do, I hear), give them a glazing treatment of honey, butter or margarine, and the grated rind of an orange. Turn and turn the halved cooked carrots in this glaze, over a low flame until they're really glazed. Not a bad idea, this.

27 Gooseberry tarts, beloved of Henry VIII, are a sweet delicacy, and for supper superb. Cook a quart of gooseberries with a cup of sugar for fifteen minutes. Serve in rich pastry shells with whipped cream and chopped pistachio nuts.

28 One of the things to look forward to is a fresh pear salad. Have the pears split and slightly scooped out. Fill the halves with cream cheese mixed with whipped cream or mayonnaise and chopped crystallized or preserved ginger. Chill. Delicious.

29 And then there are those Italian beauties. Dip hard-cooked stuffed eggs in beaten egg. Egg to egg, as it were. Roll them in fine cracker crumbs and into the deep fat with them. Just you wait.

30 We have come to the end. And I just want to say that sliced bacon dredged with corn meal and fried in bacon fat is out of this world. With hot muffins and coffee—oo là-là!

31 Now Venus returns to lead the galaxy of stars that glorify the evening sky. And promises young love her eternal benison.

THE VILLAGE BLACKSMITH—BY CURRIER & IVES

Hothouse MUSHROOMS... aristocrat of vegetables

plus rich cream... make this LUXURY SOUP

You'll go far before discovering a dish so filled with the things that make for luxurious eating. Let's check them over: Hothouse mushrooms, picked at the peak of their delicate flavor, and rushed fresh to Campbell's Kitchens. Whipping cream, heavy and rich, coming from cool country dairies. Then, in the cooking of this delicious soup, plenty of tender mushroom pieces are added and, for the crowning touch, a delicate just-right seasoning.

And there you have Campbell's Cream of Mushroom! And it's a truly wonderful soup. Have it soon!

Campbell's CREAM OF MUSHROOM SOUP

LOOK FOR THE RED-AND-WHITE LABEL

Man's war against Tuberculosis

can be won! Already the death rate from this disease has dropped to less than one fourth of the toll in 1900.

As more and more people have regular physical examinations,  doctors will be able to discover those carriers of tuberculosis who have the disease without knowing it.

An important part of such examinations is the use of the X-ray or fluoroscope.  Control of all such cases through modern medical methods can reduce the death rate still further!

Have an annual physical examination!

This is particularly important for those who have persistent coughs.

If you have tuberculosis, self-discipline in following all of your doctor's instructions will generally lead to recovery.

Periodic medical checkups will help to guard against recurrences, and permit you to lead a nearly normal life.

For information on public and private examination facilities in your community consult your doctor, health officer, or local Tuberculosis Association.

To help avoid tuberculosis, send for your free copy of Metropolitan's booklet, 56-J, "Tuberculosis."

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

(A MUTUAL COMPANY)

Frederick H. Ecker
CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD

Leroy A. Lincoln
PRESIDENT

1 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 10, N. Y.

COPYRIGHT—1946 METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

THE DARK WOOD

(Continued from Page 49)

an impatient, perfunctory kindness. She would be all right for a few days? The maid would come as usual, give her meals and fix the place up, and do any errands that were necessary. And Regan would be home in a couple of days. Home! Hester smiled at the word. As if a home was what Regan desired! She was really at home in a hotel, in something vast, impersonal, palatial. Ah, they were well matched, Regan and Symes.

Hester brooded on her sister's lover. He made her think of those geese they raise for their livers. Symes was pâté de foie gras, shaped like a man. Then she frowned. It was all very well to sneer at Symes, and she never missed an opportunity to do so in Regan's hearing, but didn't the cold fact remain that he was a man to be reckoned with? If his words—or his faith—could not move mountains, it was safe to say that they moved other men and set events in motion. A man who looks boyish at forty is quite apt to behave like a boy; and Hester knew that boys can be cruel, even dangerous. How limpid, how blue his eyes, how cleverly he selected his neckties, how well cut his clothes, how expensive his shoes and his Panama hat! In fact, how glossy his whole appearance! Today, while he sat chatting with Hester while Regan packed her suitcase for the trip to Connecticut, Symes had shown, for the first time in Hester's memory, a trait which she at first found difficult to name. He was always affable with her, she never could get under his guard with her gibes and insinuations. She had never to her knowledge attained her heartfelt ambition to hurt and insult him. And now she wondered whether she ever would, for today his manner had shown a distinct and extraordinary arrogance. That was it—arrogance! Like everything about him, the new mood was discreet, but it was unmistakable and Hester wondered from what fresh phase of his private life it sprang. One can usually judge the men who acquire merit and medals; their actions have spoken for them. But though Symes wore no medals there could be little doubt that his days were spent in the acquisition of merit. What a disturbing personality!

His references to his activities were always fascinating to Hester: "I had to pass up the most wonderful party last week. Something turned up at the last moment and I was obliged to catch a plane for San Francisco—hardly time to pack a bag!" Or: "Spent most of the night on the train from Washington, talking with the Under Secretary for Chinese Affairs. Those people never sleep!"

HESTER had given up questioning her sister on Symes' mysterious activities. It occurred to her that Regan was very likely as much in the dark as anyone. But of one thing Hester was sure: Symes and Regan belonged irrevocably to the new era. They were the product of the war and its aftermath; war had shaped them and had given them their opportunity. They were utterly without nostalgia for the past. Childhood, youth, the years before 1941 seemed to have been excised from their minds; they were like creatures gestated in speculative violence, delivered shrewd and ruthless to their epoch. And with sudden bleak insight Hester thought, We are at their mercy! All of us who are not as they are, who could not be even if we wanted to, all of us are at their mercy.

A FERRY tooted on the river and she raised herself to look out the window. The cliffs shimmered and regrouped themselves in faint mirage, sea birds fluttered in blue air, and the noise of the city came to her muted by distance and by the music from her radio. For years she had lain here or walked round this room, an invalid, a parasite, useless to any society no matter how well ordered. She rose and walked to the window, leaning her elbows on the sill. Far below, leaves and grass stretched to the boundaries of asphalt and concrete. Busses and automobiles glittered in the sun, figures sauntered, fanning themselves with newspapers and hats.

Hester thought, All this could be obliterated in an hour, and I buried under the ruin. Buried, but not killed. Left to gasp the frightful air of poison, left in the knowledge that there is no escape. Left with the thought that everything marvelous in the world, with every thing infamous, was coming down in a white heat of death. Memory itself dissolving with its monuments. The end of life, precious exquisite life.

Her heart began to pound as the greed earth drew her toward it, that earth which forever withstood the assaults of men. The climbed the air and roamed under the sea but the earth withstood them. The earth renewed itself, healed itself, rested quiet under the weight of its rivers and the eternal falling leaves. Tears filled Hester's eyes. She had a vision of the world as incomparably young, of hers at the window of the Ark, a perfume of citrons blowing in her hair. She leaned further out over the sill, holding her transparent hands toward the earth thirty floors below. She had but to push with her feet and the heavenly airs would enclose her forever.

Then it seemed to her that she heard Regan's voice, that attractive, husky voice which uttered its owner's ideas with such precision: "Don't be a fool, Hester!"

Hester turned from the window and went back to her couch, where she was overcome with sneezing. She lay exhausted among the pillows, mind and spirit completely blank, only her reddened eyes moving across the unresponsive ceiling.

In the meantime a crimson roadster driven by William Symes sped over the white Connecticut highway, and Regan, watching her lover's hands on the wheel, felt a surge of pride and desire. She was never more certain of her power over him than when they were together like this, the rest of the world with its Marks, its Neddys, its Hesters excluded, and, as the miles rushed away, forgotten. Regan saw that he was smiling. His manner these past few days had excited her curiosity; there was a new assurance about him, and, what pleased her even more, a renewal of possessiveness.

(Continued on Page 56)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Song After Wartime

By Elizabeth-Ellen Long

Oh, little does it matter to
A flowering field or one
Green hill what lads have laid them down
Before their day was done,

And little do the field larks care
That those who heard them sing
So short a time ago cannot Hear them or anything.

The world goes on as it has gone
In any other year
With April far too busy
To waste one pitying tear

On dark-haired lads or light-haired lads,
On short lads or on tall
Who'll never know the joy again
Of any spring at all,

On sober lads or lads as gay
As any lad could be
Whose going matters not at all
Except to you and me.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

HOSPITAL STAFF ASSISTANT—Early in the war Joy volunteered as Hospital Staff Assistant, admitting patients, taking histories. "It's desk work that is very, very human," she says. Hospitals still are in desperate need of volunteers for all kinds of work. If you have even two hours a week free—go to your local hospital and offer to help.

She's Engaged! She's Lovely!

SHE USES POND'S!

Her ring—seven diamonds set in platinum

Joy's beauty is gold and rose—aristocratic as an exquisite Venetian painting

Joyanne Barrett Thomas to wed former Air Corps Pilot

DAUGHTER OF MR. AND MRS. DAVID THOMAS II, CHESTNUT HILL, PA., ENGAGED TO JOHN A. H. DALE

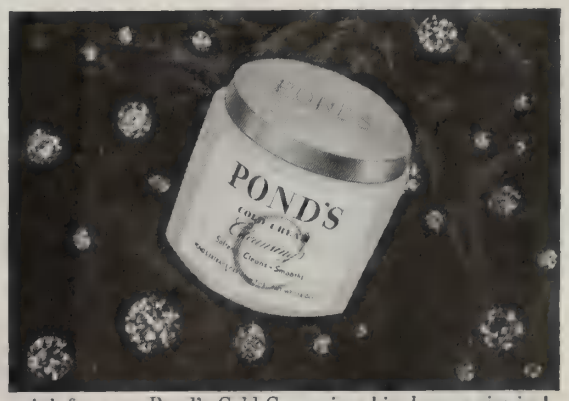
WHEN she was just a little girl Joy Thomas used to watch Jackie Dale play tennis, and ardently admired his skill.



Now, she's a tall, slim, golden girl happily wearing his beautiful ring. Another Pond's engaged girl with the soft-smooth witchery of an especially lovely complexion.

"I'm ever so keen about Pond's Cold Cream to keep my face looking nice and feeling soft and smooth to touch," Joy says. "Pond's is really a grand cream."

Joy uses her Pond's Cold Cream like this—she smooths the silky, white cream generously over her face and throat—and pats well to soften and release dirt and make-up. Then tissues off thoroughly.

She rinses with another Pond's creaming, circling cream-coated fingers around her face in little spirals. Tissues again. "It makes my face feel extra clean, extra soft," she says.

Pond's your face her twice-over way—in the morning when you get up, and again at bedtime. Use Pond's Cold Cream for daytime freshen-ups, too. It's no accident so many more women and girls use Pond's than any other face cream at any price. Ask for a big size jar, today. The wide-topped big jars are so luxurious to dip into!

Ask for your Pond's Cold Cream in a big, luxury-size jar!

A few of the many Pond's Society Beauties: Mrs. Anthony J. Drexel, III · The Lady Morris · Mrs. Ernest L. Biddle · The Countess de Petiteville

Watch for Paramount's latest LITTLE LULU cartoon in Technicolor at your favorite theatre.

(Continued from Page 54)

She laid her hand on his knee. "I wish you'd tell me what's on your mind."

"You!"

"It must be more than that."

"How could it be?" He lifted her hand to his lips, and she leaned against him.

For a moment or two he was tempted to tell her the reason for his elation, which sprang from his victory over her husband in the elevator of the Rotterdam Hotel. His instinct for secrecy had prevented his speaking of it before: even now he hesitated, and finally decided that he would wait a while longer before telling her about the encounter. In the first place, he was not quite sure how she would take it; in the second place, he wished to savor his truimph in private, and even to try to understand it. For the truth was he had been badly frightened.

Recapitulating the whole affair, he realized that the meeting had been inevitable, even though he had seen Mark from the moment he had entered the room with young Perry, and had managed for some time to keep the crowd between them. He had even begun to hope that the evening might pass without incident, but on the second that Mark and he had come face to face in the door he saw that the game was up. Sheer panic had plucked at his heels and out of it had risen the single lucid thought: I won't fight him. I'll let him knock me out—that will be the easiest, the simplest way. Yet he had tried to escape, making for the nearest elevator and praying that he might be missed in the drunken mob. What happened after that had all the elements of a dream, all the inconsequentiality, all the madness. He had seen at once that he was cornered, that Mark was going to hit him. As the elevator rose he braced himself for the blow as the timid soul braces itself to receive judgment. Then he saw that Mark was drunk. Here was no avenging angel but an inebriated clown, and, as such, easily dealt with. Symes had struck with all his strength and watched his enemy topple like a sack of onions.

Not till much later, when he was alone in his own apartment, was he able to appraise his action, or his reaction. Then, anointing his bruised knuckles, he experienced a hot stir of exultation which went to his head faster and more effectively than the liquor which he had imbibed with such discretion during the party. The unpremeditated blow, dealt in self-defense, released something long pent up and inarticulate. A weight was lifted, he felt himself to be, at last, the kind of man he most admired, the kind of man he had never quite become—till this moment. Fear, with its taproot, guilt, withered away, and in its place flowered scorn for the bruised and crumpled figure groping helplessly at his feet.

Symes felt Regan's body warm against his. He slowed the car, bringing it to a halt in the shade beside the highway.

She turned inquiringly. "Anything the matter, Bill?"

"You should know." He took her in his arms.

She laughed. "Aren't you afraid someone will come along and see us?"

He began to kiss her with unusual abandon. "Afraid?" he muttered. "No!"

STELLA, who had dined alone that day, left Philippe's on Third Avenue, and after a slight hesitation during which she gazed up and down the street, decided to walk back to her apartment. The man who looked like Alec had not been at the restaurant tonight. She had come early and stayed as long as she could, lingering over a meal she scarcely tasted, her eyes hardly moving from the door. The place was evidently better patronized at night than during the day, for every table was taken. But of the face for which she searched there was no sign. Well, she asked herself, what did she expect? He was in uniform when she saw him that afternoon with Miriam. Perhaps he had been ordered away. Perhaps she would never set eyes on him again. But as she pushed open the doors and emerged in the warm, dim air, Stella could not control a wild rush of hope. It had upheld her during the past days, ever since her first sight of him. Hope had become a habit, but as to the nature of that hope she dared not inquire of herself. All that mattered now was that she see him again. Would his voice remind her of Alec's? How far could such a resemblance go, how far dared she pursue it? As she walked slowly homeward through the noisy reaches of the city, Stella dwelt on her memory of the stranger. Rapture flooded her; it glowed in her face, so that people who noticed her smiled and wondered at her secret.

Snobbery is right in its impulse; it is wrong only in its aim. It has a good heart but a bad head. It means essentially the move toward a life richer, more generous and more secure than that to which we were born: it is the instinct of development. The mistake which it commits is the adoption of false standards.
—T. M. KETTLE.

XVIII

A THUNDERSTORM dispersed the accumulated heat of the city, but its denizens, to whom the elements are always hostile, to whom the four seasons are as disturbing as the footfalls of an invader, flung up angry umbrellas and leaped into busses and taxis; others, damp and distraught, sheltered in doorways or under awnings, there to await the end of the sudden downpour.

Stella, returning from a journey uptown, felt the rain on her face, felt it steal through the thin fabric of her shoes. She came to an abrupt stop on the sidewalk as memory struggled to compose some image in her mind. When had this warmth responded through her flesh to the flooding rain? People were pushing past her with umbrellas and raincoats, cabs splashed past the curb where she stood.

Then she remembered. There had been a day in Jarley, three years ago, and she and Alec had gone to the village to buy stores. While they were walking home the rain overtook them and they began to run, laughing, down the gravel road toward the house. The paper bags became soaked and spilled oranges everywhere. Pelted by rain, they stopped to pick up the fruit, and as thunder crackled overhead Stella, in mock fright, had flung herself into Alec's arms. Together they shrank into the heavy grass, and there he made love to her among the fallen oranges. Stella murmured, "Shouldn't we go under the trees?" And he answered, "Don't you know that trees are dangerous in a storm?"

In the past, such recollections had left her stricken, but today as she stood in the rain on a New York street, Stella felt vitality, like lightning, sweep through her.

Then her arm was taken in a firm grasp. Dick Sparrow inquired, "Are you trying to get pneumonia, or do you just want to ruin your hat?" He propelled her into a spacious doorway out of the rain. Stella realized that she had been standing within a few yards of his office. "Come on up," he suggested, still holding her arm. "Miriam's in the country for a few days. I've had a lonely lunch, and I'd like a little company." In the elevator he looked at her inquisitively. "Might an old friend ask what you've been up to? We haven't seen or heard from you for days."

Stella replied that she had been up to nothing in particular, but she was conscious of his shrewd gaze and waited apprehensively for further inquiries. Dick said no more till they were in his office, and once in that large, impersonal, stereotyped apartment, with Dick facing her across his plate-glass-topped desk, she began to derive a certain amusement out of mystifying him.

He began complainingly, "Why didn't you go to the country with Miriam? It's stinking in town."

"I like the heat."

He looked incredulous, then said grudgingly, "Well, it seems to agree with you. You're looking very well. Maybe the trip to Italy was a good idea after all."

She met his gaze calmly. "Perhaps it was."

(Continued on Page 58)

Four Little Pitfalls... and how to lick 'em

1. When you're getting ready for Bed...

YOU give your sleepy face a lick—he promise of a thorough workout you're not so tired?

OR whisk off dirt 'n dust with Swan's dreamy-mild lather? Regular Swanning, you know, helps you stay angel-faced! This grand floatie's pure as fine castiles!

2. When your white dickey is slightly gray...

DO YOU tuck it slyly into your drawer, thinking, "I'll wear it just once more"?

OR tub it pronto in Swan's duds-loving suds? Baby-mild Swan freshens up tired frills but fast—keeps you looking like a starched daisy!

3. When it's your first date with a new swain...

YOU work yourself into such a trying on every rag in the closet, you "haven't time" for even a er?

OR do you first relax in the whipped-cream magic of Swan's beauty bath? And dreamily plan your wardrobe strategy while mild Swan gets you sparkling-clean as a movie queen!

4. When mother says you can't go till dishes are done...

DO YOU spend 20 minutes arguing . . . and 10 minutes wailing over your lily-white hands?

OR polish off the dishes in jigtime with gentle, floating Swan? A smoothie for pretty hands, a busy sudser—Swan really helps chase dishwashing-dol drums!

Baby-mild for Everything

SWAN is 4 swell soaps in One

TUNE IN: THE JOAN DAVIS SHOW, featuring Andy Russell, CBS, Monday Nights

DON'T WASTE SWAN SOAP—it's made from vital materials!

Wrisley
Gold Tassel sets the stage

PERFUME • COLOGNE • TALC • DUSTING POWDER • BATH BUBBLES • BATH CRYSTALS

(Continued from Page 56)

The complaining note returned to his voice: "I've had a tough morning, and I called you up, hoping you'd have lunch with me, but you weren't home. I've called you up several times this week, but you never seem to be home."

"What happened to spoil your morning?"

"A client, as usual. As a matter of fact, you know him—Symes."

"He's rather a pet of yours, isn't he?"

"On the contrary, he seems to regard me as a pet of his!"

Dick frowned, reflecting on his interview with Symes, and on the latter's account of the party at the Rotterdam Hotel. Symes had called up and begged for a few minutes in which to discuss this highly important development, and to oblige him Dick had put off another client. The few minutes had stretched into hours. Dick had been amused and horrified by the story, and by Symes' manner, of a strong nature provoked beyond control.

"You shouldn't have hit him," said Dick.

Symes flushed. "You mean I should have let him kill me, there in the elevator? It was two to one—he had a friend with him."

"What makes you think he was going to attack you? Unless he has found out somehow about your relations with his wife—and we know that that is pretty much out of the question—there's no earthly reason to believe he was bent on attacking you."

Symes walked about the room in violent agitation. "I tell you, there was murder in his eyes! And when I held out my hand to him he struck it aside, like this!"

"He was drunk. You said so yourself."

Symes looked at him bleakly. "You think I made a mistake in hitting him?"

"I don't know. It's hard to tell. But you must have fetched him the devil of a blow to knock him out as you say you did."

"It was the devil of a blow," said Symes, with a revival of arrogance. He straightened his handsome shoulders. "Look, I'm getting tired of all this waiting around for him to make up his precious mind. There mu some way of hurrying him along. He's a like a heel—you know he is. And it isn if he was any great saint himself. I he story or two about him earlier that eve from a guy who knew him overseas. Th comes home and assumes this holier-t thou attitude toward Regan!"

"As I told you before, he could spoil e thing for you if he got mad enough."

"Well," said Symes, "I've got him faloed this time. His friend came to me ward and apologized. Confessed they both drunk, that Bycroft had adm making a mistake. I'm glad I hit him the same. He had it coming."

"Have you told Regan about this?" asked.

"Not yet, and I'm not sure I bette might upset her, and she has enough to as it is. So you think there is nothing w do now to bring him to his senses?"

"We can give him rope, and that's we're doing."

Now Dick turned to Stella. "You I I'm getting fed up with sitting here ar tening to people's problems. The war me rich. That sounds bad, doesn't it? it's the truth. My practice has increas the point where I could retire tomor

"Why don't you? Miriam would like She wants to live in the country."

He shook his head mournfully. know me! I can't walk through bushe high without losing my shoes." He ga her in silence for a moment. "On the hand, it isn't such a bad idea, the co Old people ought to be put out to g and do you know, I'm beginning to fe age. Stella, let's the three of us go b Jarley. It's the obvious thing to do. grow old together."

She laughed. "I wouldn't have be you could be so sentimental!"

"Why not? It's the privilege of

"But I don't feel old."

He looked at her closely. "Well, I admit you don't look old either."

MOJUD
. . . a name that means everything you can ask for in nylon stockings

"Mojud" means stockings we are proud to make and you'll be proud to wear. Skillfully fashioned of nylon, du Pont's miracle yarn, Mojuds are the last word in long-lasting loveliness.

At better stores everywhere.

MOJUD
the dependable
• HOSIERY •

© 1946, TRADE MARK REG. MOJUD HOSIERY CO., INC., N.Y.C.

BODY BALANCE

Camp Supports combine the art and science of corsetry in unique designs that help improve your posture. More grace, comfort and energy are frequent results.

Authorized Service
CAMP
Scientific Support

LOOK FOR THIS Camp Authorized Service at good stores everywhere. Remember the parts are never sold by door-to-door can Always priced to intrinsic value: $5 to $ S. H. CAMP and COMPANY, Jackson, M World's Largest Manufacturers of Scienti ports.

"I'm only a trifle over thirty," she reminded him. "And you can't be more than fifty-five."

"Fifty-three," he corrected her sharply, and both laughed. "Do you know why a man of my age likes the idea of having a love affair with another woman?"

"It's probably due to the deplorable example of your clients."

"It's because the thought of love renews youth. Miriam was quoting the other day, from some poet who said, 'I see in love an ancient aspect touching a new mind.' "

Stella said she thought it sounded like a good poem. Privately she reflected, He looks older. There is a softness about him, the inward decay of a man who has never quite believed in the things he says or does. And he is really uxorious. He'd be lost without Miriam.

"What are you smiling at, Stella?" And with increasing mystification: "What is it? You look different. Has something happened?"

"What could have happened?"

"You're changed, somehow. When I saw you standing out there in the rain I stopped to watch you. I knew it was you, and yet I had a feeling that I was seeing you for the first time."

"Maybe you were."

"Stella!" Dick rose, but as he came round the desk toward her she rose also. He took her by the arms and stared at her. "Stella, tell me something."

"Yes?"

There were little red veins in his eyes, in the flesh of his cheeks. "Stella!"

She freed herself gently. "The rain's stopped. I've got to be going."

"Tell me something, Stella."

"Yes?"

"What is it? What is there on your mind?"

Should she tell him? Had Miriam spoken to him of the stranger at Philippe's? Would he have mentioned it if she had? She hesitated, and he said with a puzzled air:

"You look—you look——"

She waited, but he found himself without words. Both were aware of some new influence between them, something neither could name, or explain.

Helping her on with her coat, he muttered, "Queer. You think you understand people, you think you know all about them, then first thing you know they have changed under your very eyes." He smiled. "They fool you in the end." He escorted her to the door. "You're looking lovely. It's what I've been trying to say all along. Lovely, Stella!"

Was he trying to tell her that he believed in the miracle of resurrection? She did not ask him, and the question hung in the dry professional air of his lawyer's office.

"I haven't met a soul I know for days."
"Why don't you try going out in your oldest coat with a ladder in your stocking?"
—IRISH DIGEST.

Walking home, Stella paused once to examine her reflection in a shop-window. The rain had stopped and a gigantic shaft of light slanted down the street. She saw herself transfigured, and as she continued on her way, past the library, it seemed to her as if the hordes through whom she moved were transfigured also, as if they walked with her in a kind of celestial procession. At any moment the special figure she sought might separate itself from this nameless throng and come toward her. What would she do then, how would she greet him? She conjured up a memory of his face as she had seen it in the murky little restaurant, and passion stirred her, shaping her lips to endearments.

Every day since that first sight of him she had walked about the city, traveling on busses and in subways, pursuing one figure, then another, only to lose it in the end, or to discover that it was not the one she sought. She ate most of her meals at Philippe's, where the waiters accepted her as a regular customer and greeted her as a friend. She

MY California Fashions are the kind you can wear!

If you like the bright gaiety of California fashions without going to extremes, you'll like my California dresses... comfortable, colorful, casual... in short very "wearable." Look for...

Lady Alice
STITCHED AND STYLED IN CALIFORNIA

LADY ALICE
Sizes 12 to 20. Retail from about $5 to $12

Lil' Alice
STITCHED AND STYLED IN CALIFORNIA

LIL' ALICE
Sizes 9 to 17. Retail from about $5 to $12

AT BETTER STORES OR WRITE TO Alice OF CALIFORNIA · SAN FRANCISCO 5

Spring Song
by SunBird
Louis Philippe's new lipstick

You'll fall head over heart for Sunbird... Louis Philippe's new high-flying red...

in a golden-colored metal case of jeweler design. Keyed for color to the song in your heart this happy Spring... wear it with Sunbird rouge to match. Creme or cake

...what matter so long as it's Louis Philippe!
Lipstick $1. Rouge 49¢, plus tax.

made a point of going there alone, for she could not bear the thought of someone's being with her should Mark appear again. She wanted leisure and privacy in which to study him, to make sure that the resemblance was no mere hallucination. It was true that Miriam, too, had seen him, but there was a chance that they might both have been deceived. Stella had not found an opportunity—nor had she sought one—to discuss the incident with her friend; and all the cold logic in the world had no power to dim the image she carried in her mind.

Thanks to the ironies of city existence and city geography, Mark and Stella were often within an ace of meeting—on the street or in the same restaurant where he happened to drop in for a meal on days when she had decided, in despair, to eat somewhere else. Twenty minutes' walk would have brought her to his door, yet the days passed and she did not see him. But she had seen him once and her life centered, now, on that memory. And on that chance encounter—if it could have been called that—on that glimpse which occupied, at most, no more than a few seconds, Stella built an incredible, secret edifice. How often does one not meet, among strangers, one familiar face? How often is one told that one has been seen and appraised all unknown to oneself? Coincidence? But she would have none of it. There was a reason for this meeting. Given the extraordinary resemblance, how could she doubt it? Perilous ideas roamed through her brain, through her dreams. Was it Alec after all, or one so like Alec that the separate identity became irrelevant? She believed that if she could only see him again, hear his voice, she would know beyond the shadow of doubt. What she did not, what she dared not, consider was the nature of that doubt—doubt itself, that chill mainstay of a mind unreconciled.

Be not disturbed at being misunderstood: be disturbed at not understanding. —CHINESE PROVERB.

XIX

THE maid was out and the telephone rang, but Stella ignored it. She was dressing for a Landowska recital at Town Hall and dreaded an interruption of her afternoon and an invasion of her solitary frame of mind. Judging from the persistence of the summons, she guessed it must be Miriam Sparrow calling up to talk at length about her visit to the country, to reproach Stella for not having accompanied her, and to make searching inquiries about her friend's activities during the past few days. Stella felt profoundly averse to such conversation, and to the whole idea of companionship. For the first time since Alec's disappearance she was conscious of a completeness in her life, as if it had acquired boundaries and a perspective. She no longer felt lonely, nor were her thoughts easily communicable. If she could not have silence she would have music, and share with strangers the inexpressible experience of her own heart.

The telephone stopped ringing, but when Stella reached the door it started again with increased stridency, as if it had paused to get its breath. The sound pursued her all the way downstairs into the street, an insentient voice bidding her return to her discarded world.

"Taxi!" she cried in panic, and waved her white glove at a cab which ground to a halt on the other side of the street. Breathless, she climbed in and gave the driver her destination.

The sound of the telephone bell seemed imprisoned in her ears. She no longer thought of Miriam impatiently waiting for her to lift the receiver. She thought of the sound as something materializing out of empty air, recalling her to the dull core of sense beneath the senselessness of life. Let it ring, let it scream its reminders through the empty rooms, into the street—she would not answer. She pictured it perched on the little table beside her bed, above the drawer

TOASTED CHEESE SANDWICHES

1 cup grated American cheese; 1½ teasp. Colman's (dry) Mustard; 6 slices white bread (¼" thick) toasted on one side.

Mix cheese with mustard, spread thickly on untoasted side of bread. Put under broiler at moderate heat until cheese is melted and begins to turn brown.

FREE! NEW RECIPE BOOK
"Mealtime Magic"
Write to Atlantis Sales Corp., 3626 Mustard St., Rochester 9, N. Y.
Name_____
Address_____

which held all Alec's letters. She saw the gay air-mail envelopes, and his writing in the dry ink of the past.

"Dead!" screamed the phone. "Dead in Montescari, where you dared not look! Dead, dead!"

"Darling, if you should hear it said that I am dead, never believe it."

The telephone had stopped ringing, the letters lay undisturbed in their dark drawer, each weighted with its separate experience, its separate moment of life, of the past.

But the present was what the musician unlocked for her audience when, all tall, gaunt grace and humor, she stepped across the glowing dais to the harpsichord, there to pause, there to acknowledge her adorers' greeting with a smile, half goddess and half mother, making play with the cushion, testing the piano stool for comfort and height, sending, from where she stood, a tingle of mirth across the footlights into the crowded, eager darkness beyond. Then she sat, all chignon and golden gown, and looked at her keyboard as though she expected some word from it, a sigh, a trembling of its hidden nerves.

Tears rose in Stella's eyes. She felt the unbearable suspense and sweetness in the pause during which every face lifted toward Landowska in an unspoken plea to those poised, capacious hands: "Let us be transfigured through you!" Creator and created stand in direct relation to each other, but the listener stands alone, judge and victim of his own experience. The marvelous hands, hovering and striking, were voice and spirit which bade the heart rejoice, the imagination accept the perpetual human paradox.

When, later, Stella emerged from Town Hall she drifted with the homing crowd from which the music had temporarily estranged her. Now each face into which she gazed seemed transformed; intimate and friendly, her fellow beings spoke to her with their eyes, with fleeting smiles of recognition. Believe in us, they said, believe in yourself. Humanity is all we know and all we ever shall know.

In no hurry to go home, she walked downtown, then across to Madison Avenue, and waited for her bus. Light played on the familiar buildings, ignited fires in the windows and dyed the limp banners an intenser hue. The bus stopped beside her and she got in. They plunged past the demure façades of 36th Street and the Morgan Library, where the spectral maples shed a few dead leaves on the pavement. A woman dodged across the street, wearing a hat with a parrot feather, like some secret signal. Where had Stella seen a hat like that? One day when she had gone shopping with Miriam.

Light clambered up the stone walls, and images formed and dissolved in Stella's mind: she saw Landowska's hands poised like birds; the luminous faces of the audience; the imaginary laughter of music in peacock gardens came and went in her ears. And as she stared at the people on the street she saw Mark. He had paused to light his pipe and she had no need to persuade herself that it was actually the face and figure she had been seeking. Desperately, she pulled the signal cord and made her way to the door. But the bus kept on its way, headed toward its appointed stop. Passengers looked at her curiously as she reached for the cord again.

"Stop," she begged the driver. "Please stop and let me out!"

He paid no attention, and she gazed with hatred at the broad back, the thick Irish profile, the adamant hand on the wheel. He might have been part of the machine itself—deaf, blind, heartless, driven by an inhuman compulsion. On and on they went and Stella watched despairingly as a sea of concrete and humanity swept over the spot where she had seen Mark.

At last the bus stopped and she stumbled out on the sidewalk, pushing through an opposing group of passengers. She saw them now, not as flesh and blood but as obstacles diabolically interposing between herself and her desire. At last she was back on the corner of Madison and 43rd Street, but Mark had disappeared. Five minutes before—it could

A sure way to make Super Salads
. . . be generous with the
Real Mayonnaise

Here's how to put together a mighty satisfying dish

Cut cheese into balls with vegetable ball cutter. Line salad bowl with salad greens. Arrange cheese balls in center and alternate slices of tomato, onion, and bologna around outside of bowl. Beat Real Mayonnaise and French Dressing together until smooth, and pour over salad. Serves 6 and serves 'em well. Mother knows that salads go over big when she's generous with her Real Mayonnaise.

America's largest-selling mayonnaise—Best Foods-Hellmann's Real Mayonnaise—has that extra something that makes any salad extra flavorful and satisfying. There's no other mayonnaise just like it. No starchy filler goes into this delicious mayonnaise. It's pure mayonnaise—all mayonnaise: eggs freshly broken from the shell, added egg yolks, our own "Fresh-Press" salad oil, mild vinegar, and spices—all double-whipped to a delightful smoothness.

Delicious in MORE ways than one

Real Mayonnaise is a grand spread for thin "company" sandwiches—a swell sauce for hot vegetables. So rich and pure that even when you thin it with milk or fruit juice, Best Foods-Hellmann's Real Mayonnaise is still creamy in texture—rich in flavor. Another delightful surprise is that anything that tastes so good can be so good for you. Actually, Best Foods-Hellmann's Real Mayonnaise contains 3,140 food energy units per pint—almost the same amount, spoonful for spoonful, as Nucoa or butter.

BEST FOODS
IN THE WEST
Real Mayonnaise
IN THE EAST
HELLMANN'S

FLAT to RENT
(and repent?)

"A miracle! Look! Yes—APARTMENT TO RENT!"
A glance was sufficient for Lucy and Kent.

They moved the next morning, and looked all around—
The place was as dark as a hole in the ground!

"Oh, dear!" muttered Kent, and "Oh, WINDEX!" said Lu,
"There's plenty of light, but it doesn't come through!"

She sprayed the first window with WINDEX, and then
A whisk of a cloth got it shining again!

And soon all the windows were gleaming and bright,
The apartment was nice—
there was plenty of light!

So—better get WINDEX!
Wherever you dwell,
'Twill get all your glass
looking sparkling and swell!

Get Brighter Windows Quicker With—

WINDEX

TRADE-MARK REG. U.S. PAT. OFF. by The Drackett Company

WINDEX is a must for house cleaning. No streaking, no film, when you insist on this noninflammable, oil-free cleaner that costs but a fraction of a cent per window. Don't trust cheap substitutes.

Copr. 1946, The Drackett Co.

Costs less than a penny per window—

For Extra Economy, Buy the Big 20-Ounce Size.

be no more than that—five minutes before he had stood on this spot. She had seen him distinctly, a newspaper tucked under his arm as he paused to light his pipe. It seemed that the image she had nurtured for so long had suddenly intensified in the beam of reality; what she felt was not surprise, but shock at an encounter expected but not designed. Nor had she the faintest idea what she would do if she were to catch up with him. Passion informed her that she would find him where she had seen him from the bus window, but he was not there. Instead she found herself staring at relays of strangers, or pursuing their backs; she heard, falling about her like hail, idiot, unfriendly voices.

Stella forced herself to walk slowly down the avenue. He might have gone into one of the doorways on either side of the street; he might have walked faster than she had bargained for in any of four directions! On the other hand, he might appear before her at any moment, and with that thought she stopped, terror sweeping over her. So intense was her sense of imminence that it paralyzed her limbs, and a man, not seeing her in time, bumped against her. "Pardon!" he muttered, giving her an inimical look. The jarring impact brought her to her senses. What a fool to stand here like a stranded rock while the tide of humanity flowed around her. Meantime he might easily be walking away, west toward Fifth Avenue, east to Grand Central.

Grand Central! Could he have been on his way to take a train out of New York? This awful possibility made her shy away at once; she faced the choice of going through Vanderbilt Avenue, or of following 42nd Street to the river. Afterward she decided that her body, not her brain, made the choice, and because she found herself near 42nd Street she walked toward it, then turned and followed the human stream eastward. On another day she would have stopped and bought a newspaper, but this evening the universe and its obsessions had ceased to exist so far as she was concerned. Life had reasserted its personal claim; she moved in obedience to something older, stronger than the remote menace of headlines.

When she reached Lexington Avenue the sun had gone, but a translucent memory of it lingered everywhere. It was after six, cafés and bars were filled. Perhaps he was in one of them, and with this thought Stella realized that she would soon be on Third Avenue, a few blocks from Philippe's restaurant where she had first seen him. Dared she hope that he might have been on his way there? It was a chance, the flimsiest of chances, but she was in the mood to read meaning into the most trivial incident; when a taxi slowed up and the driver poked his head toward her, she took it for a sign and climbed in, her heart beating with excitement.

THE traffic was heavy and they were forced to wait while trucks and busses crawled across their bows. The driver turned on his radio and Stella listened to jive while overhead trains thundered, and on either side of her automobiles exuded acrid smells of gasoline and hot metal. The impulse to scream, to order the driver to go on, go on, almost overcame her. She wanted to lean forward and say, "Can't you get through somehow? It's a matter of life and death—life and death!" Impossible that the throbbing world should remain indifferent to her anguish! Would she perhaps make better time, or stand a better chance of seeing him if she walked? Might he decide not to eat Philippe's after all, but merely pause th for a drink before disappearing once mo Every second of delay increased the chan of her missing him, whereas if she were to out now and walk, or even run——Then lights changed, the cab shot forward, bur ing over cobbles, weaving between stanchions of the elevated, while the ra contributed its gay discord to the turn within and around her.

EMOTION, given its head, has the attribu of panic, so when Stella's taxi deposited at her destination she stood for several onds unable to make up her mind to en Lights shone behind the glass panel of door, and she had a glimpse of the waiter they moved about. Her agitation becam violent that it compelled her attention. wondered whether she might collapse on sidewalk and die there for sheer want breath. How absurd to die crushed ur the bedlam of one's own heart! It quiete last and she walked down the two step the door and went in.

Mark was not there. A couple sat at table where she had first seen him, and gazed at them with incredulous eyes. waiter who always served her came forw with his frien smile. "Dinner, dame?" She nod and let him guide to the table where habitually sat. gazed round her growing hosti toward the occupa The joyous strai Landowska's pla petered out on a l jeering echo. M was not here. she really seen h Had her glance a ally plucked single portentous ure from out the c seven million boc She stared at hist usurped by stran talking French drinking wine in glasses. The res rant cat appe and rubbed ag their ankles. watched a proce of shadowy fig pass on the stree yond the door. The noise of traffic was m except when a train went by, when the quivered and glasses on their shelves forth a musical response.

A hand grasped the doorknob, it s open, and Mark came in. The thing she longed for, and which she had dreaded, to pass, and she stared into eyes that Alec's eyes, eyes which met hers b and without recognition. He found a and sat down with his back toward her all she could see of his face was its bl reflection in a corner of the window. A w came to take his order, and Stella list hoping to hear his voice. All she caught an indistinguishable murmur, then he sp a newspaper on the table and began to She gazed at his shadowy reflection o window, a reflection stirred, broken stored again by the shifting lights an darkness of the world beyond. How se he looked, how almost sullen! Me ached in her mind and she recalled how looked when he was reading without a tion, his thought elsewhere. How jealou used to be of those thoughts, how cu how envious! What was this man thi now? Where had he come from, where, he left this place, would he go? Her thoughts dissolved and materialized the restless iridescence of his image i window. A shadow play of figures, ob movement formed a background to h mysterious and beloved face, and she ceived that she, too, was mirrored th distant, spectral self colored by life, or b

(Continued on Page 64)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

If You Were Here

By Joan Story Wright

If you were here—if you were here
What songs we'd find to sing;
How high the hills that we would climb,
How short the gay and glorious time;
If you were here—if you were here
What gladness you would bring!

If you were here—if you were here
What love words I would say;
How tightly hold your blue-veined hand,
How deeply make you understand;
If you were here—if you were here—
But you are far away.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Mama's in the "moo-vies"!

Though she may never win an "Oscar," nor sign an autograph, she's the star of a picture that's drawing quite a public!

From its title, you can tell the film is something different in movie fare. It's called "Quality Milk Production"— and it deals, not with make-believe, but with scientific methods of getting more and better milk to market.

These methods cover everything from the brushing of a cow to the construction of a barn. They show how to keep equipment sterile; milk scrupulously clean. They bring progressive—and practical—guidance to the 350,000 dairy farmers who will see them on the screen.

Filmed by National Dairy, the movie is distributed to U. S. Public Health Services, Vocational Agricultural Departments, Agricultural Extension Services, and state and city Boards of Health. It is shown to farm youth groups, farm associations, grange meetings, and many other such audiences.

In a sense, this picture might be cited as research in action. For it's another means by which the findings of National Dairy Laboratories reach out to improve milk — nature's most nearly perfect food—right at the source, and protect its purity every step of the journey to your dinner table.

Dedicated to the wider use and better understanding of dairy products as human food . . . as a base for the development of new products and materials . . . as a source of health and enduring progress on the farms and in the towns and cities of America.

Kraft · Sealtest · Breyers

NATIONAL DAIRY
PRODUCTS CORPORATION
AND AFFILIATED COMPANIES

(Continued from Page 62)

illusion of life. In this peculiar element their glances met and drowned; her spirit, like his, stayed moored in a weird reality like ships held fast by invisible chains.

When he left Philippe's Stella followed him through the dim evening streets to his door. She watched from a distance as he sought for his key and let himself into the house and out of her sight. Then she crossed the street and descended to the narrow entry, and studied the names on the letter boxes. Symons, Brown, Gerber, Winslow, Bycroft, Glazer, Bernstein, Hume. Which of these belonged to him? He wore the uniform of a colonel in the Air Corps, but no colonel was listed here. Was he visiting one of the occupants? Was he a newcomer who had not yet put his card in one of the empty boxes? She read the names over again, enduing each one with an especial magic and significance. Finally she turned and walked homeward between the spiraling walls and windows which glowed in the darkness, reminding her once more of honey stored in vast combs.

XX

Summer drew over the city, but for Stella the season had lost its conventional meaning. She moved through it, indifferent as a bird, and day by day added to the Paradise she had built for her beloved and herself. Here she chose to live, half in torment, half in rapture, through pulsing days and stifling nights. Now every familiar sordid detail of the city changed, in her eyes, for the color of enchantment. There was ecstasy in the mornings, when she awoke and knew that the day spread before her, as varied as a kaleidoscope whose patterns are not less magical because the mind understands them. She revived old tricks of vanity and lingered over the selection of a dress or a pair of earrings, and the exact shade of crimson for her lips and cheeks. Instinct, fused with desire, became her instructor, and she studied from afar such of Mark's habits as circumstances allowed. It was a strange pursuit of which the quarry remained for many days innocent, for she was careful to keep distance between them, moved as she was between the twin impulses of fear and longing.

She walked every morning to East 53rd Street and waited for him to appear, then followed till she lost him. Sometimes a small boy accompanied him, and on one such occasion—a hot, still afternoon—she pursued them as they strolled along Marie Curie Avenue to Rockefeller Institute. They walked slowly, the child sometimes taking the man's hand, and though their voices reached her they were always too far away for her to catch the words. Was the child his? Was he a widower, or divorced? The questions occurred to her, but she did not linger over them, for their implications had no bearing on her Paradise.

On this particular hot afternoon the light lay like pewter over Welfare Island; gulls swayed in the air and their cries fell languidly through the assorted noises of the street and the river. To Stella there seemed something solitary and meditative in the man's walk. She remembered Alec in moods when he made her feel that he had retreated into a region from which he excluded not only his surroundings, but herself, and those dear aspects of himself which she believed she knew. Not since his death had she allowed herself to dwell on those moods, when, like a kind of warning, a premonition perhaps, she experienced the cold emptiness of loss. There are in all of us small, dark islands of solitude which we are bound to enter alone if we enter at all; habitations intolerable to those who love us, and in those whom we love. Stella, spinning her fantasies round the unconscious figure of this man who so much resembled her husband, felt the resemblance grow more poignant as she recognized in his walk, in his aloof and burdened air, yet another vanished trait. So, sometimes, Alec used to walk on the narrow roads round the house at Jarley; so she would come on him sitting on the rocks facing the sea, when, rousing, he was unable to tell her where he had been or what he had been thinking.

Mark and Neddy had turned and were walking toward her. They walked faster than she realized, and she had the choice of pursuing her course or of turning and walking before them. But as she hesitated, slowing her step, the man strode toward her, so purposeful, so animated by a remembered vitality that Stella found herself unable to move. Then they were face to face and as Mark's eyes stared into hers, she uttered a faint exclamation and her whole face came to life. Startled, perhaps, by this recognition, he half smiled, then continued on his way, passing her and taking the boy's hand as they crossed the street. Stella watched them go, but they did not turn to look back at her, and for several minutes she stood tremulous with happiness.

What did she expect from the situation? Had a friend asked her she would have found it impossible to put her feelings into intelligible language, or to reduce her thoughts to stale rationalizations. Perhaps a friend might have explained that the man's resemblance to Alec had re-created, not Alec but a figure more fateful, one which entered upon her consciousness at a moment when resignation had reached its final pitiful boundary, the very edge of the abyss. The friend would have known that there are people who cannot accept the inevitable—people who hunger on into oblivion—and that Stella was such a person. Instinct and imagination united to make her discern in Mark something besides his extraordinary likeness to Alec, to find in him a reflection of her own defrauded passion, and bleakly aware that in another year she would have become an old woman—one of those human travesties for which the casual eye finds no excuse and the humdrum heart no pity—to discover and to adore him as her savior, just as she had discovered and adored Alec. Stella knew well enough that it was no ghost she pursued, day after day, evening after evening, through the sweltering hours and in intervals when the sea air blew miraculously through the burning streets. A ghost would have recognized her, claimed her—yes, in the very center of Babel, a ghost would have taken her hand and greeted her by name. But this other, this lonely and stalwart figure stared at her with blank brown eyes, and passed her without a word.

There were opportunities when she might have spoken to him: once when they waited for a bus and he stood aside to give her precedence; again when she followed him and his small companion to the park and lingered near by while they sailed a boat on the pond. But she shrank from breaking a spell which left her free to dream and to speculate, free to paint the days that passed and the days to come as a panorama of impossible and miraculous happenings.

By now Mark had realized that he was being shadowed, and his reactions fluctuated

(Continued on Page 67)

---

Once there was a fabulously rich potentate who died, bequeathing all his property to Yusef, his favorite slave, with one reservation: that each of his sons was to be allowed to select some one thing of value which should be set aside from the residue of the estate for the sons, to have and hold forever, with all pertaining thereto.

The sons each selected some one valuable piece of property. The eldest chose the royal palace; the second, the famed hanging gardens; the third, the jeweled peacock throne, studded with precious stones of great value; and so on.

Each son made his choice, and yet each bewailed the fact that the great bulk of the parent's possessions must pass into the hands of Yusef.

Awaiting his turn sat the youngest son, a mere stripling. When his brothers had each made his choice and the opportunity of the youngest had come, he turned to the executors, saying, "I choose Yusef, the slave."

Shining Lines: (Mergenthaler Linotype Co.)

---

The best and nothing but the best is labeled Armour Star

© ARMOUR AND COMPANY 1946

How to Bake Bacon: When a quantity of bacon is to be served, baking is the easiest method of preparation. Place bacon strips on rack in shallow pan with fat edges overlapping lean of next slice. Bake on top shelf of oven at 400°F. for 12 to 15 minutes or until desired crispness is reached. No turning is necessary.

Hand Picked
Sugar Cured
Tender Smoked

America's Luxury Bacon

Listen to Hedda Hopper's Hollywood every Monday night over ABC (Blue) Network. See local papers for time and station.

Keeping up with the Joneses

There is a man in our town and he is wondrous wise . . or at least he'll do till a wiser one comes along . . and that goes for the rest of his family. For you see, the Joneses like lots of fun in a good old-fashioned way. They dodge the night spots . . but when it comes to the outdoor sports . . count on the Joneses to be in the thick of it all. Their boast is they like to play while the sun is shining . . but they always manage a grand finale to round out a pleasant day . . with a bit of good cheer . . a snack or two . . and coffee that's the toast of the town.

There's no problem to "Keeping Up With The Joneses". Our free brochure, "Head Chef Recipes", brings you newest hors-d'oeuvre and sandwich secrets of famous restaurants . . . also tested recipe for making the world's freshest, most delicious coffee . . . the *Silex Coffee Maker way. Address The Silex Company, Department 15A . . . Hartford 2, Conn. . . . In Canada, St. Johns, P. Q.

*Only Silex has the exclusive patented flavor guard filter.

SILEX

Trade Mark Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Coffee Maker

(Continued from Page 64)

between curiosity and amused contempt. He gave no sign, however, nor did he alter his routine existence in order to avoid her. He guessed that the world must be filled with lonely and obsessed people, and that this strange young woman who trailed him up and down the streets, into and out of restaurants and theaters, was probably no more of a menace than others, less diffident.

One evening as he took his accustomed seat at a table in Philippe's restaurant, he glanced across the room and saw her sitting alone in a corner which he had learned to associate with her somewhat colorless personality. But he was not prepared for the intensity of her gaze. It startled him, and he smiled. Neither spoke, but for Stella the moment had surely arrived. Alec's eyes held hers, they drew her irresistibly to her feet even while something cried out to her to fly from this encounter, to rush through the door into the drab world outside. Instead she found herself standing beside his table. He rose and pulled out a chair for her, and she felt herself subject to a will that was no longer her own.

"Please sit down," said Mark. "I'm Colonel Bycroft—Mark Bycroft. I was just about to order myself another drink. Will you join me?"

"I'm Stella Harmon. Thanks, yes."

He signaled the waiter and gave his order. The kaleidoscope shifted, its radiant design became fixed. It was Alec who faced her, Alec, notwithstanding his voice, which was never Alec's.

"You've been following me," said Mark.

"I've been following you for almost two weeks."

"That long? I noticed it only two or three days ago. I'm flattered, but puzzled. Will you tell me why you followed me?"

"I wonder if you'll understand. It sounds absurd, reduced to words."

"Yet you can't blame me for wanting to know."

The waiter brought their drinks, and Mark stirred his with the glass muddler. It was not for the usual and obvious reasons that she had followed him, he told himself. She's not that sort. So much he could guess easily enough from her voice, as from her manner. Perplexed, he waited.

STELLA said at last, "I was here with a friend one day. We were seated in that corner. You were here, drinking beer and playing with the kitten."

"I often come here for meals because it's within walking distance of where I live." He looked at her. "You still haven't told me why you followed me."

Stella put her glass down and said simply, "Because of your extraordinary likeness to my husband."

"I don't understand."

"He was killed in the war."

Mark felt a twinge of revulsion, and Stella saw the sneer on his face.

"I know," she murmured. "I know what you're thinking. It's a new gag, and not in very good taste. But it does happen to be true." She gazed at him earnestly. "Believe me!"

He frowned at his glass, but said nothing.

She went on: "You must have seen likenesses yourself—there are such things. This is really extraordinary. Try to put yourself in my place! Don't blame me for following you, for wanting to talk to you."

"Oh, I'm not blaming you. Why should I? But you could have spoken to me before this. One day when we took the crosstown bus on Fifty-seventh Street, another time in the park, once when we—my son and I—were walking by the river." He looked at her scornfully. "What did you expect, trailing me all over town?" His voice, his face were full of enmity.

For a moment Stella was silent, crushed by a development she had not foreseen. At last she said, "I don't know what I expected. I suppose I just wanted to look at you, to watch you. I don't see why you should care, one way or another."

He replied grudgingly, "Well, I'm sorry. But I am not your husband, you know."

HE did not want to sound brutal, but his own words evoked another memory, and Regan's face rose before him, Regan's voice filled his ears. An hour ago she had called him on the telephone and they had quarreled violently, wit and sensibility stripped of everything except the instinct to wound and destroy. He would not let her have Neddy. And he had hung up before Regan could complete her part of the tirade. But as the savage exultation of battle ebbed, Mark felt a weakness, a positive physical impotence. Hatred of Regan was followed by the image of William Symes, by a stinging pain in his lips, still sore from the blow dealt him in the elevator of the Rotterdam Hotel.

He was obsessed by the foliations of catastrophe as he saw it touching his life and the lives of people he knew—Neddy, Symes, even young Perry, with whom he had quarreled and parted a week ago. Perry, following an ill-advised impulse, had recommended Mark to seek advice from a psychiatrist and get himself "straightened out." It was bad enough to be considered a heel of the first water by one's wife, but to be classified as a "case" by one's friend was too much. Curtly he advised Perry to go West and castrate bulls beside his native Pecos.

Mark saw these disasters, absurd and tragic as they might be, as springing directly from Regan's ruthless egotism. The impulse to hurt someone, to revive his own tumbled ego at the expense of another's, returned as he looked, now, at Stella. "I am not your husband," he had just reminded this strange girl, another casualty of the age, a somnambulist in search of bed. His bed? Not if he knew it. He was through with the role of husband and incipient cuckold.

A blur formed in his eyes, then cleared, and he saw Stella gazing at him with the profound gaze he sometimes surprised in Neddy's eyes.

She said sadly, "Don't hate me."

"Hate you? Why should I? I don't even know you."

"You looked as if you were hating me."

"I wasn't thinking about you." He hesitated, then went on: "I was thinking about my wife. She has left me, and I ought to be grateful, but instead I find myself wanting her and detesting her at the same time. Not loving her, mind you. No, not loving her at all."

It was the truth, of course—he wanted Regan without loving her, but what possessed him to confide in this stranger? Unable to stop now that he had begun, he went on to speak of his home-coming, of Regan's desertion, of his own reactions, of his little boy. And as he spoke of these things they took a shape entirely different from the picture in his mind; they became as distorted as his own mental image of himself. He told her of his attempt to kill an innocent man, of his torments of self-discovery, of the fiend of violence which he had often waylaid and

(Continued on Page 69)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Garden Snob

By Marion Sturges-Jones

The primrose by the river's brim
Primula hybrid* is to him,
And it is nothing less.
Sweet columbine he'll tell you is Aquilegia canadensis,
Which stops you, I'll confess.
By tone of voice he will infer
A garden Social Register
Of great exclusiveness.
(When such as he comes in my garden
I always beg the flowers' pardon:
To me the man's a mess!)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The grandest news in pressure cooking is the EKCO pressure cooker that stays to dinner

You'll be "Mrs. Lightning" with an Ekco Pressure Cooker that cooks up tastier-than-ever dishes in ¼ the usual time . . . then serves them at the table. A quick change of covers and the Ekco is a handsome serving dish . . . keeps foods hot, saves steps and dishes.

Only the Ekco Pressure Cooker brings you the magic of quick, flavor-saving pressure cooking plus the ease and convenience of serving style. And only the Ekco Pressure Cooker seals with a twirl of the Fingertip Knob . . . no cumbersome clamps, no loose parts. At better stores.

EKCO pressure cooker

EKCO PRODUCTS COMPANY
CHICAGO

EKCO

Patents Pending. T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

"Now, Hulda—I hope you can dig us up some Jell-O!"

Oh, what a wonderful morning... when the first tender salad greens are ready to pull, and the first home-grown fruits come shyly on the market!

And it's twice as wonderful if you can combine those crisp new greens with cool, tart Jell-O . . . or your fresh berries with a creamy Jell-O Pudding.

True, the crop of Jell-O and Jell-O Puddings isn't as plentiful as it will be later, when the sugar supply increases.

But keep these notes for the days you do run across a Jell-O treasure. And then let yourself go lyrical, and compose a spring duet!

For instance, combine crisp spring vegetables with Lime Jell-O. Prepare Jell-O as directed on the package, adding 2 tablespoons vinegar and ½ teaspoon salt to give it salad tang. When chilled and syrupy, add ½ cup sliced radishes and 1 tablespoon sliced onion; let set. Another go-together treat — fresh strawberries in creamy Jell-O Vanilla Pudding. (Make pudding with extra milk if you like it custard-y.)

Try a ruby parfait made of plain and whipped Strawberry Jell-O, sprinkled with shaved chocolate. Or, a heart mold of brilliant Cherry Jell-O with a flower garnish of whipped cream, candies, and mint. Jell-O's "locked-in" flavor makes them both extra delicious!

Jell-O Puddings—
Like Grandma's—only more so!

PRODUCTS OF GENERAL FOODS

More pudding ideas? Prepare Jell-O Butterscotch Pudding, using 3½ cups of milk to the package—then top with baked meringue, and have Butterscotch Floating Island! Or, lace country cream into Jell-O Chocolate Pudding to make it even more old-fashioned tasting.

What's found only in Jell-O?
That "locked-in" Jell-O Flavor!

JELL-O IS A TRADE-MARK OWNED BY GENERAL FOOD

(Continued from Page 67)

conquered in the past. A curious superstition made it impossible for him to name Symes, for the name had become a nightmare.

"If I'd killed him they would have blamed it on the war. They would have said I was psychotic, and instead of shooting me for being a criminal they'd have sent me off to some military institution for the mentally unstable. When the truth is, actually, so simple. We are all responsible for what we do, and in a sense for what others do to us. We're responsible, all of us."

She gazed at him with a brooding tenderness. He thought vaguely, I shan't see her again. She's used an imaginary resemblance as an excuse to pick me up, and I'm using it as an excuse to leaven my loneliness. What harm? We'll talk a little. I'll pay for her drink, and we'll part. And he remembered other encounters in Europe, nameless women who had listened to him, their faces responsive, like this one; their husbands dead or vanished—like this one's.

Stella said, "Tell me about your son."

"I hardly know him. He was a baby when I went away, now he's a person. There are things going on in his mind—speculations, decisions in which I have no share. What can I tell him? What can I teach him, that the world won't revise and alter? How can I warn him to learn from his father's experience? We move separately in the same orbit. Not strangers exactly, but not friends either."

"We are all like that, aren't we? Not strangers exactly, but not friends either."

He shrugged. "It's a human world, whether we like it that way or not. We've got to deal with one another. It's only when I try to find something honest and comforting to say to Neddy that I find myself in a corner."

"Something comforting?"

"Well, when I was his age my mother used to make me say prayers. I said them unthinkingly, but I relied on them, and on her. When I was fourteen I gave up saying prayers, but by that time I'd formed other allegiances besides my mother and God Almighty. One passes from one attachment to another; in my childhood we began with the idea of a comforting God Who spoke to us through our mothers—or our fathers."

"Through some kind of love, you mean."

"I suppose so. And that's where Neddy is out of luck."

"Yes, and you too, and I!"

He nodded. "Sorry. I seem to have done nothing but talk about myself," he said. "Tell me about you, about your husband."

"He was killed in Italy."

"And this likeness you speak of, is it really so noticeable?"

"It's very noticeable." Her voice trembled. "It's extraordinary."

STIRRED by pity, Mark laid his hand on hers and envied the dead man who had been so loved and was so deeply mourned. Then something she had said recurred to him: "You are out of luck, and I am too." But he had no wish to be included in her bad luck. He had his own, which was more than enough, and pity for her was succeeded by revulsion against this likeness between himself and the dead. Our fundamental sense of identity is a subtle and precious thing, not easily shared even with the living. The touch of Stella's hand sent a current of intimacy toward him, and he recoiled from it as he would have from fire.

"Dinner?" inquired the waiter, and placed a menu on the table.

Mark shook his head. "I'm sorry I can't stay." He laid the price of their drinks on the table, and nodded to Stella. "I've got to get home. Thank you for talking to me."

"Colonel Bycroft, will you have lunch with me tomorrow?"

He hesitated, but it seemed easier to leave her with an acceptance. "Thanks, I'd like to. Here?"

"Here, at one o'clock, if that suits you?"

"Fine," said Mark, and left her.

XXI

WALKING home, he speculated about Stella. Should he have stayed and had dinner with her instead of running away? It would have been kinder. But he was in a mood to suspect some trick, though unable to define his fears. He began to regret that he had accepted her invitation to lunch the next day. Well, there was time to change his mind; he could easily leave a note for her at Philippe's, expressing regret and saying good-by. He had found her sensitive, intelligent; she could hardly fail to take the hint and leave him alone thereafter. Then he recalled her face and found beauty in it, and in her voice. He guessed that it would not have been difficult to make love to her, that she would not have repulsed him. But was that what she was after—the cheapest of commodities? There had been nothing cheap about her, rather something ardent and pathetic, like the friendliness of a child. Remembering the response of her hand when he touched it, he felt now a rekindling of desire and half turned to go back. But desire brought the image of Regan: he saw her face contorted in a mask of dislike even while her limbs embraced him, he heard her voice, precise as a chisel: "I didn't want to have it on my conscience that I refused you!"

Mark walked on, scurrilities filling his mouth, uttering themselves so that several people who passed glanced at him with disgust. He walked slowly in the cooling summer air, and by the time he reached the apartment Neddy was in bed, and Octavia, neatly hatted and gloved, was reading a paper while she awaited his return so she could go home.

"Sorry to be late, Octavia."

She rose and stood looking at him with an air of indecision. "Colonel Bycroft, you've got to do something about Neddy."

"Isn't he all right?"

"Oh, he's all right, I guess." She frowned. "He's all right so far as his health goes. But there's something on his mind."

"I suppose you're getting ready to tell me that he misses his mother."

She faced him stubbornly. "He'd be a queer sort of child if he didn't miss his mother! I've been sitting here thinking. I think it is time you let him go to her."

"There's nothing to prevent her coming back and living here with him, you know."

She shook her head. "What do you expect to get out of this, colonel? Where is it going to get you, or Neddy? Something is happening in that child's mind."

"Well?" said Mark. Queer, he thought, how this woman can always command my attention. If she had been twenty years younger —— But, as things were, she was sixty and respectable. "Well?" he repeated, relenting.

"Neddy wants his mother."

"Look, we've discussed this before. You know how I feel about it."

"He needs her! For better or worse, he needs her."

"I'm afraid it looks as if he'll have to put up with me instead."

"Ah, no; let him go to her now. He'll come back to you in the end."

Mark said bitterly, "How do you know?"

"Because I think he's trying to love you, only he's frightened. He's frightened of you. Listen, something happened today. He must have heard your quarrel with Mrs. Bycroft over the phone. When you left the house he went and locked himself in his room and wouldn't let me in, nor answer me. When he came out again I saw he'd been crying. I wanted to ask him why, but I didn't dare. I was scared that if he told me I wouldn't know what to say to him to set things right."

Mark felt confused and angry. "Why should I let him go to her, probably to be brought up by some man not his father?"

"And you? Do you intend to live alone, yourself, the rest of your life? If you keep him won't he be brought up by some woman that isn't his mother?"

"It's none of your business!" he shouted.

The austerity in her face gave way to a queer smile. She moved to the door. He was touched by the look of her, straight and severe, from the stiff pink rose in her hat to the bows on her brown shoes.

"Octavia!" She turned, and he asked miserably, "How have I scared Neddy?"

"I don't know. It's the easiest thing in the world to do, isn't it? To scare children."

WHEN the door had closed on her, Mark went into the pantry and mixed himself a drink. He came back to the living room and picked up the newspaper, taking the chair Octavia had just left. Here is the world, he told himself sardonically as he spread the newspaper on his knees. The world beyond my stinking personal one, the world which might explode at any moment and become a shudder of blue light in the void. Regan's face gazed at him from the front page. She had delivered an address before some gathering of clubwomen the evening before, on the question of democratic training in the kindergartens of Japan. There were excerpts from the address, followed with a glowing description of the speaker's charm and the excellence of her delivery. Readers would recall that Mrs. Bycroft was the wife of Colonel Bycroft, the distinguished soldier, just returned from duty in Germany.

So Regan was not going to have the infant Nips on her conscience, either, thought Mark, and tossed the paper on the floor. He stretched his legs and began to reflect on the events of the day with a sense of astonishment that so much should have happened. First the row with Regan. Where had Neddy been during that highly articulate quarter of an hour? He'd forgotten all about the boy and about Octavia, both of whom could not have helped overhearing every syllable of his outburst. Afterward he had gone on one of his long walks, trying as usual to burn off unexpended emotion. Stopping for a drink at Philippe's, he had met Stella.

(Continued on Page 71)

"Please try to remember I don't really look like this!"

1846 THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FOUNDING OF THIS BUSINESS 1946

MOLASSES COOKIES

8 cups all-purpose flour
4 teaspoons Arm & Hammer or Cow Brand Baking Soda
¼ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon ginger
1 teaspoon cinnamon
3 cups molasses
1 cup lard, melted
½ cup butter, melted
10 tablespoons boiling water
Granulated sugar

1. Sift, then measure the flour. Sift three times with the baking soda, salt and spices. 2. Combine the molasses, melted shortening and boiling water. 3. To these liquid ingredients, add 4 cups of dry ingredients and blend well. 4. Add remaining 4 cups of dry ingredients gradually, beating well after each addition. 5. Let stand in a cool place about 1 hour. 6. Turn onto a lightly floured board. Roll ¼ inch thick. Cut with large, floured cooky cutter. Sprinkle with granulated sugar. Bake in hot oven. Amount: 5 dozen. Temp.: 425° F. Time: 15 minutes
All spoon measurements level

ARM & HAMMER BAKING SODA OR COW BRAND BAKING SODA

CHURCH & DWIGHT CO., Inc.
10 Cedar Street, New York 5, N. Y.
Please send me FREE BOOK, describing uses of Baking Soda; also a set of Colored Bird Cards. (Please print name and address)
This offer good only in the United States.
E-87
NAME
STREET ADDRESS
CITY TOWN STATE

PUBLIC LIBRARY

Why I'm choosing these

'cause I'm sure Holmes & Edwards is a better kind of silverplate. It is

Sterling Inlaid with two blocks of sterling silver at the backs of bowls and handles of the most used spoons and forks. Surely that means my precious spoons and forks will stay lovelier longer.

'cause I'm told that most other kinds of silverplate are only "reinforced" or "extra plated" and not Sterling Inlaid invisibly like Holmes & Edwards.

'cause I love Holmes & Edwards patterns best, particularly Danish Princess. They're the kind you can live with day after day and never tire of.

'cause I'm thrifty and appreciate good values. A fifty piece service for eight, including chest, is really inexpensive...only $65.75 No federal tax.

HOLMES & EDWARDS
STERLING INLAID° SILVERPLATE

HERE AND HERE
It's Sterling Inlaid

Copyright 1946, International Silver Co., Holmes & Edwards Div., Meriden, Conn. In Canada: The T. Eaton Co., Ltd., °Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

(Continued from Page 69)

Now the sense of waste, of existing in a acuum, came over him. Was the rest of his fe going to be spent in child surveillance, imless saunterings, chance encounters, with nly a dim horizon of hope for something etter? Just what was it he wanted or ex-ected, now he knew that he could not live ith Regan or return to the old life? I shall ave to hunt up a job. The thought brought s now familiar spasm of distaste. A job, ffice hours, commuting, business luncheons, uying, selling, and the rest of it. For several inutes he busied himself with financial omputations. He could count on about ten r twelve thousand dollars, enough to tide Neddy and himself over the next year or two he used discretion. Thank heaven Regan ad her own income, which spared him the ile intimacy of money dealings with her. he best thing to do would be to clear out f New York the minute he was quit of the rmy, and invest some of the money in lace in the country. If he just had the house n Connecticut —— Ferocious longing rose n him with memories of the house, of the mell and shape of a garden, of friendly ooms, of voices hailing him on quiet roads, f the give and take and the small politics of ural society.

Visions drifted through his mind; darkness lled the room and the lights went on across he street. He sat quietly ipping his drink and vatching strangers pull heir curtains against his nvious eyes. Voices ed-ied up from the street, he eard the clang of a mail-ox lid as someone mailed a letter. The con-inuity of life was thick and consistent as the titches in tapestry, and perhaps to some all-eeing eye it afforded a comprehensible de-ign, but all his could detect were patches of adiance in the threadbare warp of ruin and ilence. What was it Stella Harmon had aid? "We are all out of luck."

Mark thought of her face. I am not your usband, my dear, he told her again inaudibly. He's dead somewhere under the Italian mud, Mussolini's mud, the mud of the Medicis, of he popes and the Caesars, beneath the rotten olives and the wilted chestnuts. He died to make America safe for the competitive system. Death as smoothed away his flesh and his wounds with t. Now only his straight white bones remain o lime the Italian field. But his wife walks in he sunlight, and it wouldn't take much, no it vouldn't take much to bring her to life again!

He got up and went to the window. The warm night greeted him and he stood watch-ng figures saunter under the lamps. Then he went to Neddy's room, where the child lay notionless in his narrow white bed. Mark had to bend low to make sure the big eyes were closed. He stood for a little while pon-dering Octavia's argument. Was she right after all? Was this battle over a child worth the price? But what was the price? Should he take it for granted that Neddy must pay for his parents' mistakes? Only in America, thought Mark, are these dilemmas important. Only in this great lush land of plenty, where the hordes have thankfully turned their backs on war, on the broken invisible pieces of the world, and their thoughts to the cream pie. How long before the pie blew up in their faces?

Poor little Neddy. Mark bent and kissed his hair, but the child slept on undisturbed.

HE was late in keeping his engagement with Stella next day, and found her waiting for him at Philippe's, at the table beside the window.

"I was afraid you might have changed your mind," she said as he sat down.

"I did change it, several times."

"Did you? Why?"

"Suppose you tell me why you were afraid I might."

She hesitated, then: "I was afraid you might decide I was a fraud. But apparently you didn't, for here you are."

He felt a slight twinge of guilt, for the truth was he had not meant to keep the engagement. He had drunk too much the night before and had awakened with a headache. The morning had seemed interminable, walls and ceiling seemed to press upon him, he saw himself as a prisoner of his own self-righteousness. The need to escape from yet another situation drove him forth at last. Remembering Stella, he thought, I'll leave a note for her at Philippe's, then take a ferry and go somewhere, anywhere. But by the time he reached the restaurant it was twenty minutes past the appointed hour and there she was, waiting.

AS for Stella, she had spent the morning as she spent most of the previous evening, scheming for this moment, dreaming of it, fearful of disaster or interruption. She had directed her maid to take all telephone calls and to tell friends that she would call them back. By this means she circumvented the Sparrows, who had been trying to get in touch with her for several days. Her mood was as delicate, as ephemeral as the color of blown glass; she felt that a touch, a single smile of derision, would shatter it. And it was in this mood that she had come early to Philippe's, anticipating the joy of watching Mark enter the room. Waiting, she indulged herself in all the simple sensuous pleasures of expectation—pleasure in the knowing smile of the waiter, in the play of sunlight on the checked tables, in the gambols of the kitten stalking its own shadow across the floor; pleasure in the smell of food and the rattle of cutlery and the sound of a pulled cork. It seemed to her that she had not heard these things, seen them or felt them for a long time, that her absence from them had ended at last in the house of the living. Then came terror lest Mark change his mind, followed by the thrill of his step and his appearance.

Your own faults look as big to the other fellow as his do to you. —ANON.

She noticed that he looked as if he had not slept, that his eyes were bloodshot.

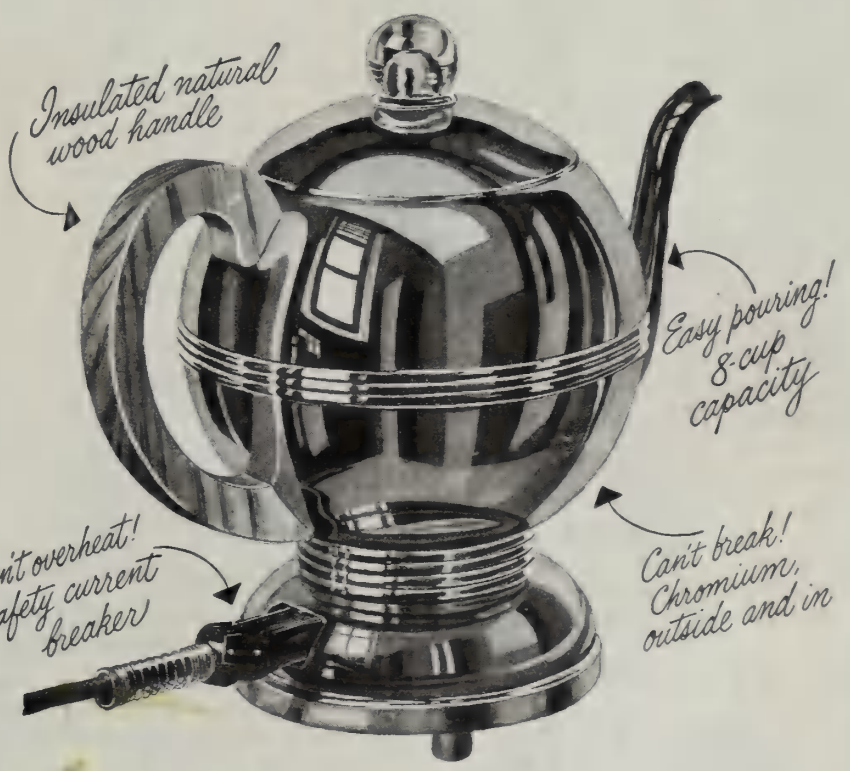
He read her glance and shrugged. "I got drunk last night, all by myself."

"Have you no friends to get drunk with?"

"I was not feeling particularly friendly." Then, drawn once more by the ardent sympathy in her eyes, he began to talk about himself, wonderingly, disgustedly, as if he were describing a younger and a difficult brother. He told her of his stupid quarrel with young Perry, during which he had said all the quick, sure, irrevocable things. "There's one friend I'll never drink with again!" Of his argument with Octavia Evans and of his uncertainties concerning his son. "You see," he said, "it's no longer a question of love and responsibility being the deciding factors. I find myself living a whole series of separate lives. Contradictions may be all right for purposes of rhetoric or argument, but it's not the way to live."

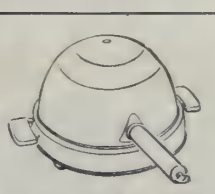
"I don't see anything contradictory in your wanting to keep Neddy."

"I'm not sure that I want to keep him if his unhappiness is going to poison me. That's not as selfish as it may sound. The truth is, men don't understand children the way women do. That's what Octavia meant when she told me it was better for Neddy to go to his mother. Maybe what she meant was that it would be wiser to let him learn to know his mother for whatever she is—after which he might want to come back to me. Yet I hold on to him for a multitude of reasons. One, because I can't help seeing him as a symbol—a symbol of the past and the future."

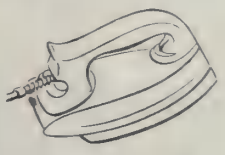


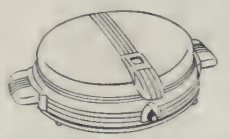
"You can't expect to reconcile the two. That's something you've got to leave to Neddy."

"Ah yes, a little child shall lead them, and all that stuff." His face darkened with a memory of the children of Europe. He believed that Christianity had died there with them, while Mamma and Papa God were looking the other way. He said fiercely, "And we go on making a kind of sense—moral sense, intellectual sense. On the surface we see the returns. Trains run, cars and busses start and stop, people walk about on two legs, buying and selling remain the inspiration of survival. Some of us paint pictures and read poetry. My wife, for instance. She makes sense. I, too, make sense. But something has gone from us—from all of us. Something has gone from the middle of us."



"Carrie's a jewel—but I'm glad I've got this M-B unbreakable percolator!"





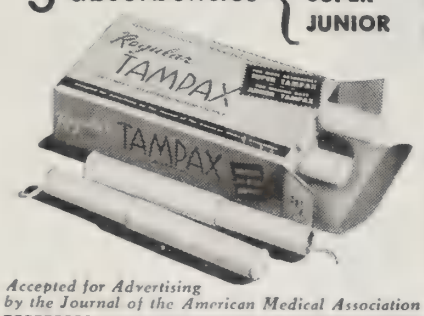
Look What's Here!
The Long-Last Percolator!

Manning Bowman
Means Best

SMOKELESS TABLE BROILER
No smoke, odor, effort

IRON-THAT-WAGS-ITS-TAIL
Light weight — swivel cord

WAFFLER-THAT-DOESN'T-OOZE
Overflow control — automatic



Don't turn thumbs down against any product without personal knowledge. It isn't fair, it isn't ladylike and it isn't American! . . . Many of the millions of present Tampax users were not at all quick to adopt this method of monthly sanitary protection. But they did weigh the evidence and compare this "different" product with whatever they were using at the time. And Tampax does appeal to the thoughtful, logical woman's mind . . .

(1) Tampax was perfected by a doctor. (2) It is worn internally. (3) No belts, pins or external pads required. (4) Causes no odor or chafing. (5) Produces no bulges, ridges or wrinkles under your dress. (6) Can be changed quickly. (7) You do not feel it when it is in place. (8) Disposed of easily. (9) Need not be removed in tub or shower.

NO BELTS NO PINS NO PADS NO ODOR

Tampax is made of pure, long-fibered surgical cotton, very absorbent and compressed within patented applicators for dainty and easy insertion. . . . Sold at drug and notion counters. Whole month's supply goes into your purse. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

3 absorbencies { REGULAR SUPER JUNIOR

Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of the American Medical Association

TAMPAX INCORPORATED LHJ-56-M
Palmer, Mass.

Please send me in plain wrapper a trial package of Tampax. I enclose 10¢ (stamps or silver) to cover cost of mailing. Size is checked below.

( ) REGULAR ( ) SUPER ( ) JUNIOR

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

The waiter returned with their drinks.

Mark went on: "The queer thing is that all this doesn't really depress me. If it did, I'd bump myself off. During the war I saw the naked helplessness of people and felt that it was matched only by their tenacity for life. What really stops me in my tracks is the fact that I cannot, actually, despair."

Stella regarded him pensively. "We are in another world, Mark. Perhaps we're only just beginning to get the feel of it. Another world, and a scientific morality."

"Scientific morality!" He laughed then. "That's a nice expression. But if the scientists had the gift of prophecy, any old morality would be good enough."

They were silent for some minutes. Round them rose the voices of other guests, and from the door, left ajar because of the heat, came the familiar noise of traffic. Through this larger, impersonal orchestration moved the small, intense preoccupations of Mark and Stella, drawing their lives together, shaping the invisible and inviolable design of their future.

XXII

He did not see Stella again for several days, nor did he hear from Regan. Time became a succession of furnace hours in which he read, walked, slept, and tried without notable success to understand his son. Together they went to movies and to the park, on ferry rides to the Jersey shore, and excursions to the airport to watch the great transcontinental planes come and go. There were occasions when the boy emerged from his cocoonlike abstraction to ask when Mark would get the sailboat he had once spoken of hiring, and whether they would ever really go and live in the country.

"As soon as I'm out of the Army," Mark assured him. "As soon as I'm free to call my soul my own, we'll go and live in the country."

Neddy accepted the assurance as he accepted most things, equably. Why doesn't he rebel? wondered Mark. Why doesn't he quarrel with me, make demands, ask embarrassing questions? He longed for a glimpse at the concealed mirror of his son's mind. What would he have found there? What images of himself and Regan, how far distorted, or how faithful to reality unperceived by the actors themselves?

One evening a week after his luncheon with Stella the phone rang. It was Stella. "I'm down in the Village. Won't you join me for dinner?"

He hesitated. "Isn't it a bit warm to move around?"

"It's cooling off. There's actually a breeze down here." Her voice had a ring of gaiety. For some reason Mark imagined her as wearing a white dress with frills at the neck. The prospect of an evening alone in the apartment with Neddy in bed and Octavia pottering in the kitchen, struck him suddenly as intolerable.

"All right," he said. "Where shall I meet you?"

"At Longchamps on Twelfth and Fifth Avenue. They have an outdoor café."

"I'll be there," said Mark.

He felt quite lighthearted as he took a shower and changed his clothes. As Stella had said, it was quite cool outdoors, and he imagined that he smelled the sea. He had ample time so took a bus instead of the subway and, climbing to the top, watched the city subside in a pink evening haze, and the Washington Arch emerge from the rosy brick façades and the dusty trees of the square.

Stella was waiting for him and they sat down at a table facing the avenue. Mark said, "I believe I have second sight. I knew you'd be wearing a white dress. However, I miss the ruffles."

"Ruffles?"

"White dresses should always have ruffles."

"Are you disappointed?"

"No."

Far from being disappointed, he experienced a peculiar new pleasure in being with her. A breeze wandered down the avenue, fraught with the smell of gasoline and the vagrant perfume of women's clothes. Mark wondered whether all American cities possessed this aura of femininity—expensive and erotic. The Martini which he ordered tasted like nectar, which he had never drunk but which he now believed must taste just like a Martini. And how nice, he thought, to be out on such an evening with an attractive woman, and with the certainty of a moon soon to appear above the tired trees in the square. For the first time since his homecoming he felt grateful that this wondrous city had been spared the fate of Europe, but with the gratitude was mingled the foreboding which had been his inveterate companion during the past six years. How would New York smell after bombing? He had not smelled Hiroshima, but would this one give forth the sickening odors of burning rubber and scorched brick, like Kassel, Hamburg, Pforzheim? Like Caen and St.-Lô? How had Nineveh smelled, and Babylon, and Ur? Thinking of this, he felt a familiar tightening of all his nerves as they prepared for something—for some sound, for an impact which would leave him, as it had always left him, untouched but shivering and incredulous.

"What's on your mind?" asked Stella, and her face emerged out of the ruck of faces and noise. Her face a shade or two duskier than the dress she wore, the flesh of her neck and shoulders faintly visible under the thin material.

Mark told her what was on his mind, and she shook her head.

"That's finished, isn't it? Finished."

"Yes," he said. "Finished—kaput. But here we are, you and I, alive and not too decrepit to rejoice in being alive."

Happiness seemed to crown her like a halo. "I'm glad you came this evening, Mark. I woke up this morning with such a feeling of peace and optimism, and it's lasted all day. I wanted to share it with you. How long since you were last down in these regions?"

"Not since before the war."

And as he spoke he understood why he had known Stella would be wearing a white dress this evening. Memory had been pressing against the edges of his mind, and now it came into the open. In the early summer of 1941 he and Regan had come up from the country for a farewell party with John Halloran, who had enlisted in the Army and was being sent South for training. They had spent a merry evening here at Longchamps, and Regan had worn a white dress with ruffles, and her beauty made people turn to look at her. Suddenly newsboys had appeared as if out of the ground. Headlines told of the sinking of the British battle cruiser Hood by the German battleship Bismarck. Savagery and desolation seemed to tower above the happy diners and to hang there, a great comber threatening them all with extinction. Now Mark tried to remember Halloran, but all that came back to him was an impression of someone young, slight, fair-haired. Why was it always so difficult to remember the color of a person's eyes?

He looked at Stella. "Your eyes are gray, aren't they? What color are mine?"

"Brown."

"You're not looking at me!"

She looked at him. "Brown," she repeated in a whisper, and he put his hand on hers.

"Sorry! I forgot." But the recollection made him self-conscious, and to change the subject he began to talk about future plans. "If I don't hear from the War Department pretty soon I'm going on to Washington and beard them in their den. Meantime Neddy's growing paler and paler, and it bothers me."

"Why don't you send him to the country?" she asked.

"I'm afraid to let him out of my sight."

"Afraid?"

"Afraid of my wife. Sounds ugly, doesn't it? Sounds absurd too. But I'm afraid she might get her hands on him."

"You speak of him as if he were an object, a mere possession like a piece of furniture."

"Well, what is he, actually? A child. The property of his parents. So long as we don't abuse him too much we can do what we like about him. What is he, if not a mere possession?" The old bitterness began to rise, and he fought it off. "No, I'll keep Neddy. Once I'm out of the Army I'll be able to think, to make concrete plans for both of us."

There was a short silence, then Stella said: "I have a house in the country. It's on the Maine coast, with fields in front and woods on either side. The house is old and looks like one of those shells one picks up at low tide. At night when the windows are open you can smell the pine trees and the sea. In fall the air smells of apples."

"You're lucky. I had a house once—or thought I did! And I had the usual sentimental feelings about it. I thought of it as something solid and permanent, something that would always be there no matter what happened. But the house belonged to my wife, and she sold it."

The color had risen gloriously in Stella's face. She said, "Take my house!"

"What?"

"My house—take it. It's there, ready and waiting. Take it, Mark."

He looked at her in disbelief. "Your house? But why don't you live in it yourself?"

She ignored the question. "You and Neddy. Yes, of course, that's the solution. Why not?" She leaned toward him eagerly. "Why not, Mark? The house is there. It's been there right along."

He felt an answering excitement. "That's an idea. I could rent the place, couldn't I? It sounds as though it might be ideal for Neddy and me. But I still don't see——" Then, as he studied her, he did begin to see a little, and his feeling for her, a feeling compounded of many things, of attraction, suspicion, friendship, fear, resolved slowly into a sort of grudging tenderness. "Poor Stella. I see. You can't bring yourself to live there alone. Is that it?" Once more he touched her hand. "Well, why don't I take your house since you're so kind as to offer it? Would you come and live with us?"

"Do you want me?"

"Of course!" Then, because he could not bear the thought of a misunderstanding, he added, "I've become a dull guy these past few years. I've not much to offer people, but we could be good friends, I think, the three of us."

They gazed at each other across the table and to Mark it seemed as if she were perilously near committing herself, and him, to further responsibilities; in another mood, with another woman, he might have welcomed the peril out of loneliness, anger and revenge. But though this woman attracted him, she always strangely repelled him. His feelings toward her were not whole feelings; passion for her died almost at the moment of inspiration. He had said that they could be friends, and he meant it. There was comfort in the thought, and fittingness too. But he was through with love for the time being and perhaps for the rest of his life. Regan had seen to that. She had seen to it with her customary efficiency, and he felt that no matter what relationship he might embark on henceforth, there would always be a lack in him, an incapacity for complete fulfilment, a weariness.

"Well," he said, smiling, "what do you say? Neddy and I offer you a handsome rental and our undying gratitude. Shall we drink to it?"

(Continued on Page 74)

Memo

BY BERNICE SLOTE

Fill out the spring in triplicate:
One for him, and one for me,
And one to file, immaculate
For some odd day when we may be
In sun or snow or any weather,
After years, again together.

M-G-M has caught, with vibrant warmth and understanding, the spirit of this modern masterpiece . . .

A. J. CRONIN'S

The Green Years

M-G-M presents A. J. Cronin's "THE GREEN YEARS" starring CHARLES COBURN with TOM DRAKE · BEVERLY TYLER · HUME CRONYN · Gladys Cooper · Dean Stockwell · Richard Haydn · Screen Play by

"The Secret that Wouldn't Keep"

A PLAY IN 3 ACTS

"Ever since I was in high school, I have wanted to write a play!" says Marion Hoessel, in a letter from her home in Milwaukee, Wis. "So that's how I'm going to tell you about the most dramatic thing that ever has happened to me:

ACT I

"Time: August, 1945. Marion Hoessel, 25, has been putting on weight since the birth of her second baby. She now weighs 162, much too much for her 5 feet 7. Dismayed by housework that never gets done, she's a disagreeable 'sourpuss' and looks and acts the part. One day she reads in a magazine that a famous Fifth Avenue Salon is helping women to make themselves over at home. 'That's for me!' says Marion. 'I'll keep it a secret.'

ACT II

"Time: September, 1945. Marion has lost 21 pounds, wakes up with a gay spirit that lasts all day. 'What's happened to you?' asks her husband. 'What's happened to you?' ask her friends. What's happening is a secret that's hard to keep.

ACT III

"Time: January, 1946. Marion steps on the scale—121! Marion looks in the mirror. Can that slim young thing really be the stodgy 'sourpuss' of five months ago? Marion visits a dress shop. 'A perfect 14,' says the saleswoman, 'and nothing to alter. My dear, you have a figure!' Marion breaks down and tells husband all. 'I've had a rendezvous with the mailman,' she says. 'He brought me the DuBarry Success Course.'

Before

After

Left, Marion Hoessel on August 20, 1945, when she started the DuBarry Success Course. Above, Marion Hoessel, January 23, 1946. She reduced her bust measurement 5 inches, her waist 6½, abdomen 9½ and hips 8. Slim and sparkling, she has that "lovely lady look"—and knows just how to keep it the rest of her life.

"Yes," writes Mrs. Hoessel, "and it's all true and it was really fun. What's more, I've learned a part I'll be playing all my life. Thanks to the DuBarry Success Course I've learned how to keep my slim figure, care for my skin and hair, use make-up skillfully—and how to be always at my best."

How about YOU? You can spend the rest of your life looking your best if you learn the DuBarry way to beauty and vitality. And the sooner you start, the more years of beauty you will have to enjoy. So many women and girls say, "If only I had started sooner I could have had so much more fun." Remember, you get an analysis of your needs—a goal to work for and a plan for attaining it. You follow at home the same methods taught by Ann Delafield at the famous Richard Hudnut Salon on Fifth Avenue, New York.

Why not use the coupon to find out what this Course can do for you?

DuBarry Success Course

ANN DELAFIELD, Directing

DuBARRY BEAUTY CHEST INCLUDED!

With your Course you receive this Chest containing a generous supply of DuBarry Beauty and Make-up Preparations and Accessories.

Accepted for Advertising in Publications of the American Medical Association

RICHARD HUDNUT SALON
Dept. SE-2, 693 Fifth Ave.,
New York 22, N. Y

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Please send the booklet telling all about the DuBarry Home Success Course.

Miss
Mrs. _____

Street _____

City _____ Zone No., if any _____ State _____

(Continued from Page 72)

She returned his smile, but he guessed that she had read his mind, that she forgave him, that she loved him.

She had reminded him, once, that they were both people out of luck, but in this capacity for love she was less wretched than he; shouldn't he, then, be grateful to her for that also? And how demonstrate his gratitude unless through candor? She seemed to expect that much of him, at any rate.

He said gently, "You're finding me a mean customer. But I've been rooked—cleaned out. Do you understand that? Can any woman understand it? I don't want to make excuses or play for your pity. I think I'd kill you if you showed me pity. I've seen enough of that, in Europe, where all we had to offer those wretches was pity. Where every natural emotion dribbled into pity. The inevitable return for pity is hatred, Stella, and I would never want to hate you!"

She sat still, looking at him.

Mark said, "I became very simple in those days, when there was nothing to look at except blasted houses and human beings who looked back at you with eyes like empty windows." He stroked her hand. "Your eyes are not like that, Stella."

"Will you tell me why you said, just now, that women cannot understand men who have been—rooked?"

"Because they can't understand how war—I mean the actual waging of war—affects men. It leaves us bankrupt. That's why governments dole out the medals, the citations, the pensions, the bribes. They're supposed to take the place of our humanity, to reward us for our impotence."

She looked away, unable, suddenly, to face him.

He said, "Perhaps all I really need is the country. I need to see things in humble perspective. Green things, harmless things." He stared at her anxiously. "Would you say I was trying to dodge the issues?"

Her voice broke with tenderness. "The house is there for you, Mark." And she talked to him about the house, describing the rooms and the garden, the pasture which sloped toward the sea, the dusty roads which threaded the fields around it, the neighbors fishermen and hunters, like James Anderson little shopkeepers; craftsmen who made the weathervanes, the coffins, and the toys for the village children. Mark listened with delight. Her face charmed him by its color and animation, beauty flashed under his gaze.

All through dinner they discussed the house and plans for setting it in order.

"I've neglected it, I'm afraid," Stella said. "It'll need a lot of work."

"I used to be good with a hammer and nails," Mark assured her. "Can't say the same for my gardening, though."

He was seeing himself, his son, his home as the beginning of life, not of a life in the sentimental vein but life germinating out of rottenness and death. Was this a return to the impossible—to the lyric state? He did not think so. The future assumed recognizable dimensions in his mind—he saw himself working, he saw the results of brain and hand, and read their promise.

Say what you please about the devil, he's a hustler.
—ABE MARTIN:
Quoted in Capper's Weekly.

They finished dinner and walked round the square, where evening glowed on the brick of old houses, and all the light in the city seemed to have rushed to the sky and there resolved itself in an aquamarine background for the moon. When at last he took her back to her door he stood for a few minutes, holding her hand, reluctant to let her go with a word of thanks and good night. People passed them in two thin, irregular streams and a radio made music from a parked cab.

"Stella——"

"Mark, let me come and see you, you and Neddy," she said. "Let's meet again soon, Mark!"

He kissed her hand. "As often as you wish. Tomorrow, next day, the day after—every day!"

Gaiety wreathed her eyes. "Every day, then. Good night."

"Good night, my dear."

He waited till the white dress had vanished through the dim entry and out of his sight.

(To be Continued)

ESCAPE FROM YESTERDAY

(Continued from Page 18)

"I shall not inconvenience you long," said André. "I must manage a room of my own. I don't want to involve you in the contacts I hope to make."

"I don't want either of us to become involved," said Paul with a pointed glance toward Jeanne-Marie. But his instinct told him she was already involved.

It was a hard ride, pedaling back from the hospital in Neuilly through dark streets, and Paul's legs were tired and his mind distressed by the girl's death. If only she had come to him in the beginning! Not that he would have operated—he refused illegal risks—but he could have sent her to a clean, competent man. But she had been ashamed to come. She had gone secretly to some quack. And then it had been too late.

The young German lieutenant had sat outside, waiting. He had been miserable, almost tearful. "I would have married her," he told Paul. "I could have arranged it. But she was afraid of her mother. Her mother is bitter—you see, her father is a prisoner. You see —— But with us it was love."

Love. The word echoed sardonically. A lonesome German boy, crazy for a girl; a lonesome French girl, crazy for a boy. They had glossed it by calling it love. The girl had been blond, like his own Mädchen. A sweet-fleshed, warm-blooded girl. Now she was something cold, inanimate, sheeted. . . . He should be used to death by now. As a physician his nerves should be impervious, but distress gnawed at him.

A sports car roared past so near that in his nervousness his wheel wobbled and he was almost spilled. What is the matter with me? he thought. Coffee. I need some coffee. His own bleak rooms behind his office were uninviting. He turned down the Avenue Kléber.

Since that dinner at the café he had seen Jeanne-Marie only twice, and each time with this André Rallon. She had asked them to a meal with Marte and herself, and then André had asked them to dinner in the lodging that Jeanne-Marie had found for him. André and Jeanne-Marie—it had become André and Jeanne-Marie to them then—had been in high spirits, making ridiculous jokes about the convenience of being up under the roofs, with a dormer window out which you could scramble if you had unwelcome callers. The SS were no subject for jokes. . . . How many times since then those two had seen each other he did not know. Jeanne-Marie was never at home when he telephoned.

She was out now. "But she will be back soon," Marte Morel told him. "She telephoned she would be in early."

Marte was making coffee for him on a spirit lamp in the small front room. She was twenty-nine, eight years older than Jeanne-Marie, a blond girl with deep blue eyes whose natural gentleness had become a bleak patience. She had been married only a year before the war, and Guy Morel had been gone over four and a half years.

"She is with this André Rallon?" At Marte's nod he said sharply, "What do you think about him?"

"He is—likable."

(Continued on Page 76)

No other shampoo leaves your hair so lustrous, yet so easy to manage!

MAYTIME can be a gay time when you're a Drene Girl! For, when you Drene your hair you reveal all its natural beauty. See how the new improved Drene with Hair Conditioning action leaves your hair far softer, silkier, smoother.

No wonder glamorous Cover Girls like Margaret Finlay always use Drene Shampoo! "Whether it's romance or a modeling career you're after," says Margaret, "there's no beauty asset more important than lovely, lustrous hair." Here, she shows you three of her favorite hair styles that you can try at home or ask your beauty shop to do.

"You'll love the way Drene with Hair Conditioning action leaves your hair so beautifully behaved," she adds. So insist on Drene Shampoo with Hair Conditioning action. No other shampoo leaves your hair so lustrous, yet so easy to manage.

▲ UNDER STUDIO LIGHTS, Margare is the picture of Spring with her gleam ing hair swept up into large curls. "I us Drene with Hair Conditioning action," she say "because the camera demands my hair be rad antly clean . . . every hair in place." Drene r veals as much as 33 percent more lustre tha any soap or soap shampoo. Since Drene is not soap shampoo, it never leaves any dulling fil on hair, as all soaps do. For extra glamour, tuc some sprigs of spring flowers in your hai

NO MIKE FRIGHT for Margaret. She's confide she looks her loveliest with shining-smooth hai "Do you know," she asks, "that Drene remov unsightly dandruff the very first time you use it? To arrange this intriguing hairdo, simply con all hair over to one side, then tie firmly, for ▼ two buns and finally, add a jeweled cli

▲ FOR DATES AT HOME, Margaret combs her silken, shining hair into demure little-girl curls. "It's fun to fix your hair after a Drene shampoo," she says. Today's improved Drene with Hair Conditioning action leaves your hair far silkier, smoother and easier to manage. Margaret ties her top curls back with a narrow ribbon bow.

Drene

Shampoo with Hair Conditioning Action

"... its definitely the kind of make-up that does things for you!"

THE COLORS OF EVENING IN PARIS face powder are so wonderful . . . and the smooth velvet texture clings for hours. Evening in Paris rouge and lipstick are designed to harmonize, of course, so your make-up always has that exquisite perfection you strive for.

You really should try this marvelous Evening in Paris make-up for Romance . . . then you'll see why the men say "If a lovely woman would be even lovelier . . . her make-up should be Evening in Paris."

Evening in Paris
Face Powder $1.00
Rouge 50¢
Lipstick 50¢
plus tax

BOURJOIS N. Y.—Distributor

Tune in the Powder Box Theater Thursday, 10:30 P.M., E.S.T., Columbia Network.

(Continued from Page 74)

"Likable! That's the devil of it. He has charm. Too much charm."

"And he has patriotism."

"Patriotism? What does he do but keep himself safe?"

"He is going ——"

"Why hasn't he gone? Surely, in these two weeks ——" Almost Paul regretted that he did not know the ways. André had sounded him out and he had explained his position. "He doesn't seem in any hurry. He is in a snug nest here."

"Here is your coffee, Paul. You are upset."

"Who isn't, these days?"

The coffee was hot and strong.

Paul sipped it and said surprisedly, "Not bad!"

"André brought it." A faint mischief flickered in Marte's face. "He is always bringing things—he spends a fortune on the black market. He says he has enough money for it. And he is generous."

"But what do we know of him? It is a misfortune for Jeanne-Marie to be so attracted to him. What will it do to her?"

"I know." Marte was serious now. "I tried to talk to her. I told her it was a mistake to let herself become involved—that she would be like me, alone and waiting. She said it would be a glorious waiting. She sees him in the skies, risking himself, raining down bombs on the Boche."

"And on the French who have the misfortune to live near railway stations."

"That cannot be helped. They are making our war. I understand how Jeanne-Marie feels. And if this is love—what can you do?"

Yes, what can you do? He thought ironically, Physician, heal thyself! He, so long hopelessly in love with this woman with him, knew all the futility of contending with love. The utmost you could do was to hide it.

Had Marte any idea? Did she ever ask herself, What am I waiting for? Would she turn to him if Guy Morel did not come back? He hardly thought so—he had no confidence in his own charm. There were times that he was grateful—meanly grateful, he told himself—that Guy was living and holding her in this suspension of emotion.

The wife of a captive soldier was a sacred trust. As a man, a man of fastidious taste, it would have shocked him if Marte had betrayed a human longing. As a physician he mocked this ascetic life.

The line of her throat—made for a man's lips. That sudden mischief which had flickered in her eyes. . . . The dead girl's eyes had been blue as Marte's, her hair more blond . . . . Why did he have to think of that dead girl?

He said harshly, "Do you think there is any understanding?"

"I don't know. I truly don't know. But here she is now," said Marte in relief, as a clatter of wooden soles sounded outside the door.

Jeanne-Marie came in. Her eyes held a soft brightness, like stars through a mist. She had the mien, Paul thought, of coming from another world.

"Paul! How nice! How are you? How are all your sick?" And aside to Marte, "Any calls?"

Marte shook her head.

"One of my sick is dead." Paul did not know why he said that, but he went on to tell the story.

Jeanne-Marie sipped her coffee. "How could she," she said wonderingly, "with a Boche?" She saw Paul's lips pleat in irony and she flung out, "I'd kill myself before I gave in to a German lover."

"You don't know what you'd do. None of us knows—till the time comes." That was not the right thing to say, he told himself, but he was impatient with dramatics.

"Perhaps I don't know all the things that I might do," said Jeanne-Marie reflectively, "but I do know what I would not do. And loving a German is one of them."

"I'm not worried about your loving a German," said Paul dryly.

Marte gave him a slant look, picked up his empty coffee cup and left the room.

Bucilla
HAS A GOLD MINE OF EASY THINGS TO EMBROIDER

It's more fun, more economical and easy to embroider things yourself. So try your hand at this cleverly designed "Ivy Pot" dinette ensemble...or a Bucilla Nursery Set, Hostess Set, guest towels, etc. For everything in Art Needlework ask for Bucilla and you're sure of the best.

The Mark of Good Taste and Good Value

Bucilla
GUARANTEED QUALITY

Other Famous BUCILLA Products
Embroidery Flosses
Crochet Yarns
Knitting Yarns
Decorative Linens

330 FIFTH AVENUE • NEW YORK 1, N. Y.

Jeanne-Marie looked suddenly attentive and a little wary.

"You are seeing too much of this André Rallon," he said abruptly. "No—let me speak, Jeanne-Marie. What do we know of this young man? Simply that he is charming and rash and openhanded and wants to join De Gaulle. Or says he does."

"He has fought for France."

"So have thousands of others. So has Pierre Roget, for that matter, and he says you never have time to see him now. Leave the past out of it. What is his future if he escapes from France? No one here will know. Perhaps a message or two might be smuggled. But always the waiting, always the anxiety. That is no life for a woman."

"So you think the women of France should never wait for the men who fight for her!"

"You know better. When a woman is married or engaged—then those two are one. Or should be." The thought of Marte was making his voice sharp. "But I think it is folly for a woman to become involved—in haste——"

"I am not 'involved,'" said Jeanne-Marie with a pronounced distaste for the word. "We are good friends, that is all."

"Such good friends that you see no one else. What will it lead to? Has he not been asking you for more than friendship?"

"He has asked me for nothing!"

"He may be engaged, for all we know."

"That is true." Her voice was a cool little shield.

"Then do not alienate Pierre Roget. You will never find another like Pierre. Or any other at all," said Paul bitterly, "with so many young Frenchmen held in Germany."

"I do not want to marry Pierre or anyone. I am not thinking of marriage. I am thinking of this war. I admire André because he is going to fight this war—to help rid us of this terror. I wish I could fight for France! I wish I could join the Maquis."

"Oh, Jeanne-Marie! You who can't bear the sight of blood!" Twice she had tried to help at his office in emergencies, and each time she had turned faint and sick.

She said, "I know," in a suddenly humbled voice.

He urged, "I want you to be safe and happy. There is still a little happiness to be had, even in France. I could not bear it to have you one of the unhappy ones."

He would have said more, but the telephone rang and Marte called her. Jeanne-Marie spoke into the instrument. "Yes, it is I—your little rabbit." She listened and said over her shoulder to Marte, "It's Elise." She listened again. "Yes. . . . Yes, it's perfectly convenient. . . . That's kind of him. . . . Tomorrow. Understood." She hung up and told Marte, "Elise is sending her uncle with two heads of lettuce for us tomorrow."

"What was the result of the lecture on economy you gave your wife?"

"I have to give up smoking."

"Two ——"

"You can ask Pierre to dinner," said Paul from the doorway. "You should share your salad." He wondered why both girls laughed so hysterically. He asked, "Who is Elise?" and Jeanne-Marie told him:

"She used to work at the Red Cross with me."

Later in their bedroom, Marte said, "But two! They eat so much. It's good we've saved up."

"Lettuce" was the code word for aviators. "Rabbit" was the Underground name for Jeanne-Marie, and "Elise" the name for the girl who telephoned. "My uncle" was the designation of the man who brought the aviators to the station of the Metro where Jeanne-Marie met them.

"It's good that I've gone out to dinner so often," said Jeanne-Marie. "André has been very useful."

Her voice was beautifully casual. They were not to imagine, she told herself, that she

1. Start here—to look your prettiest—to face a bright new season with a radiant new complexion. Over clean face and neck, spread Hopper White Clay Pack. Relax while it coaxes your tense, weary skin back to fresher loveliness. A marvelous deflaker of "top skin." And no slouch at cleansing pore openings of clogging dirt,

Once a week—White Clay Pack

2. About 8 minutes later. Off with your beauty mask, using plenty of clear, cool water. Now feel your softer, smoother skin. See its brighter bloom. That's the warmer new glow from White Clay Pack's gentle blushing action. Your skin looks more radiant, younger. Texture appears finer. And your make-up—um-m-m . . . glamorous!

How to Spring Clean your skin

Edna Wallace Hopper Twin Treatment works beauty magic on dry, flaky skin . . . clogged pore openings

3. Daily . . . mere minutes for beauty-cleansing—the kind that helps you hold onto the new radiance you awakened with your weekly White Clay Pack. Start at the base of your throat, pat on Hopper Homogenized Facial Cream with upward, outward strokes. (Follow diagram arrows.) This rich, blush pink cream is homogenized for exquisite cleansing, expert lubrication.

Every Day—Homogenized Facial Cream

4. What lovely things your mirror says. And why not? You look prettier, younger because your skin is beauty-cleansed. And only a clean skin can be lovely . . . Ps-s-t! Extra beauty note: Don't miss out on Facial Cream as a lubricant. Smooth on a thin film at bedtime. Or, apply before starting your household chores. It works!

Sold at leading cosmetic counters

"Lovely as new after 30 Luxings!

"My pretty negligee and nightie were Luxed 30 times before this picture was taken"

Would you believe this seashell pink satin negligee and matching gown were both Luxed 30 times before this color photograph was taken? Notice how fresh the color is—the lace, too, is perfect.

You can keep your pretty undies lovely longer this easy Lux way. Tests prove colors stay fresh 3 times as long with gentle Lux care. Strong soap, hot water and rough handling often make straps fray, seams burst out. Be thrifty—be dainty—Lux undies after each wearing.

Soap contains vital materials. Don't waste it!

Lux care keeps undies lovely 3 times as long cared whether André was engaged or not. Very probably he was. It was queer, now you thought of it, how little he had said about himself. He had seemed content to listen. Perhaps that was part of his charm. But it was also queer that he should seem so interested and yet had never asked an intimate thing, never asked if she were engaged.

She must have been behaving very childishly or Paul would not have humiliated her with this warning. And Paul did not know how she had lingered at table tonight. André had had to remind her that they must leave, that he had a later engagement.

She promised herself tensely that she would have a little more pride. She had not realized before that there was need for pride. She had been conscious of nothing but a happy excitement.

ONE was tall, the other short. They wore French work clothes and carried bulky parcels over which they carefully bent their browned young faces, but they looked so utterly American that Jeanne-Marie felt passionate relief to get them out of the Metro. When one brushed against a man and did not say "Pardon" that drew glances. But it was not so bad as the last time, when that blue-eyed boy had said "Gee!" in contrition when he stepped on a lady's foot. For a time after that she had felt she was being followed.

In the streets she led the way, turning with constant cautions—"Be careful of that glass!"—as if directing workmen. She made herself walk slowly. When two German soldiers passed and eyed her covertly with their hungry, half-sullen, half-propitiating eyes, she felt her heart pounding. Before she turned into her building she gave a quick look back. They were not following. Their interest had been for her, not for those two figures. Now only the stairs. Three flights. No one was going in or out. Such good luck.

Home was sanctuary. She shot the bolts and said quickly, "Please don't talk loud." Americans had hearty voices and you never knew about the people downstairs.

"Boy, she speaks English!" said the tall one softly.

"A little. My friend speaks very little."

With the door shut and the boys safely here, she could breathe again. She led them into the front room and took the bundles of glass from them. Marte came in and they named themselves. Madame Morel. Mademoiselle Fontaine. Bill Steffens. Bud Garnheim. Bill was the tall one. They were a gunner and a navigator, the only two of their

This is Linda's Story

Linda, who, as a child, dreamed that some magic day the Prince of Wales would break down in his motorcar outside her family's house and catch a glimpse of her. "I love you," his eyes would tell her.

The Prince never came, but others said those words. There was Tony, whom she married; she later ran away from his pompous smugness. There was Christian, the intellectual "pink," so surrounded by dreams that only in rare moments did he really see Linda. And there was Fabrice. "Undoubtedly one of the wickedest men in Europe—where women are concerned," Lord Merlin said.

Because Linda was Linda it would of course have to be someone like Fabrice to whom she whispered, "I never want to leave you as long as I live."

The Pursuit of Love

BY NANCY MITFORD

to be published in condensed form in the June JOURNAL

Dream come true

Luxite

the lingerie of the stars

You're dressed for a dream and you look like a dream in the magic beauty of Luxite gowns. Other intimate apparel by Luxite includes slips, panties, briefs, step-ins and girdles.

Makers of Men's Socks by Holeproof and Proportioned Nylons of Note

HOLEPROOF HOSIERY COMPANY
Milwaukee 1, Wisconsin

"The sun shines bright" this year on gala vacation scenes . . . where Miracle-Tread Shoes flatter and add smart interest to your ankles.

Miracle-Tread
SMART SHOES FOR GRACEFUL POISE

$5 and $5.50
Distant points slightly higher
Write for name of nearest dealer
MIRACLE-TREAD DIVISION
CRADDOCK-TERRY SHOE CORPORATION
LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA

crew who had come down alive. Children had piloted them to a farmhouse that was a station of the Underground.

"Just like the stories," said Bill, grinning.

They kept the boys three days. Marte was away during the days, employed by a ration board; Jeanne-Marie, who lived on the money left her by her father, had her time free and was constantly on guard. She had hired a neighbor's child to queue for her—she did that frequently to save herself the everlasting waiting—and when the child came in with the food the boys were hidden in a closet.

They played cards, listened to the radio, got meals, washed dishes, taught one another French and English words. "Life in the nest," Bill called it. It was the repetition of a pattern grown so familiar to the girls it had almost ceased to seem dangerous.

André telephoned the second day and Jeanne-Marie said she had a cold and did not feel like seeing anyone. No, it was not serious. The doorbell rang afterward, but Jeanne-Marie did not answer. She did not know whether it was André or not.

The next day he telephoned and she said she was much better but not up to seeing callers.

"Not to see me?" he said.

"Why should you be an exception?" said Jeanne-Marie in a laughing voice.

There was a pause. "If you do not see a reason ——" He sounded offended.

Let him be offended. He was playing with words. She was really quite indifferent to him, she told herself. But she went very quickly to the telephone when it rang a little later.

It was not André. It was Pierre Roget. He had just come from the country, he said, and had some "souvenirs" he would like to bring them. He said "them," not "her," she noted. And his voice was quite formal.

She asked him to dinner the next night, Saturday night, when the boys would be gone. She felt a sudden anxiety to see Pierre again, to reassure herself that his kindness and steadiness were still there for her.

Saturday afternoon she took the Americans to the house of Mme. Chaffours in Passy. Mme. Chaffours was a small gray-haired woman, an old family friend. She had lost her husband in the other war, and one son in this; the other son was a prisoner in Germany. Her greatest happiness was sheltering these sons of other mothers. All these Bills and Buds. She called them her sons. She had her arms about these two when Jeanne-Marie left.

The west was a brilliant band of color beneath a dark gray sky, drawn levelly across the brightness like a descending curtain. That glowing band of color was so lovely that Jeanne-Marie's eyes lifted to it, when she came out of the Metro, and she did not see André Rallon until he swept off his hat before her. The light was bright on his red-brown hair. He was smiling at her surprise.

"Marte said you would be coming soon," he told her, and tucked her arm through his and walked along with her.

"You have been at the apartment?"

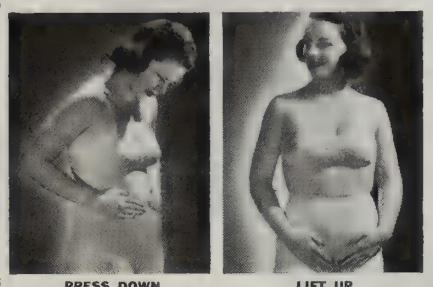
"Yes. Marte seemed very occupied."

Was Pierre there, she wondered. If not, he would be coming any moment. She did not want him to see her with André. André took too much for granted. She had been too naïve.

"Do not let me take you out of your way," she told him a little formally. "We are engaged for dinner."

His arm dropped. "You would rather I did not come back with you?"

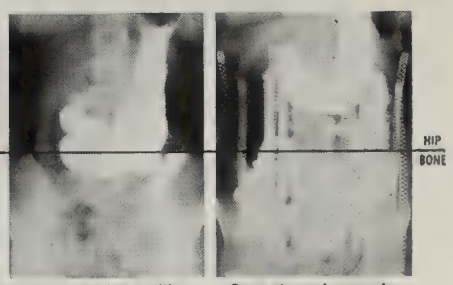
She hesitated. "Yes."



He left her so quickly she was astonished. She gave him one backward look—he was giving none—then went on, her head high. Now she was really angry. She was furious at herself, at André, at Pierre, for being the cause of it all.

A cauliflower was cooking. The smell greeted her. André must have known they were having company. Oh, certainly he had known, and known who the company was, for there was Pierre, coming out of the front room, a magazine in his hand, as if he belonged there.

I've got the biggest, loudest welcome mat in town!



1 I guess I've been "funny" about people who called at my house on business. But from now on I'm putting out a big WELCOME mat for one business woman anytime she wants to call! Why? Because this woman is in business for herself, just like any storekeeper except she doesn't have a store. She brings her service to your house instead. And she brought me more than service. She brought me a new feeling of being young and alive again—

2 You've probably guessed it, she's the Spirella Corsetiere. And the first thing she showed me was the famous Spirella Press and Lift Test. I pressed down on my stomach. Ouch! It felt like the ordinary corset. Then I lifted up. Right away I felt better and less tired.

3 "That's the way a Spirella makes you feel," she said. "And here are some new doctor approved X-Ray pictures that prove Spirella supports you naturally inside as well as out, while other garments simply squeeze you in."

Abnormally low position of stomach (Ptosis)
Same stomach properly raised with Spirella

4 Then she adjusted the patented Spirella Modeling Garment on me to get accurate measurements for my new Spirella. And when she delivered my new Spirella it fitted perfectly. Now I feel and look years younger. Even my husband has noticed—and that's saying something! So you see now why I've got my welcome mat out for the Spirella Corsetiere. Invite her in when she calls at your house and you'll feel the way I do about this business woman who helps you to be young and alive again!

KEEP FIT AND LOOK TRIM WITH Spirella
INDIVIDUALLY-DESIGNED FIGURE SUPPORT

P. S. If we can help by giving you the name of your local Spirella Retailer, write Dept. G-27.

In the U. S. THE SPIRELLA CO., INC. NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.
In Canada THE SPIRELLA CO., LTD. NIAGARA FALLS, ONT.

Stops Perspiration Troubles Faster

THAN YOU CAN SLIP ON YOUR SLIP

Look for this new, excitingly different idea in deodorants. Ask for new super-fast ODORONO Cream Deodorant... stops perspiration troubles faster than you can slip on your slip. Works better because it contains science's most effective perspiration stopper.

Affords other greatly needed blessings too: Will not irritate your skin... or harm fine fabrics... or turn gritty in the jar. And really protects up to 3 days.

Change to new ODORONO Cream Deodorant— super-fast... super-modern... excitingly different.

NEW, *Superfast

ODO·RO·NO

CREAM DEODORANT

39¢ Also 59¢ and 10¢ Plus Federal Tax

ODORONO ICE is back from the wars... 39¢

"Your Monsieur Rallon was here asking for you. He said he would return."

"I saw him outside." Her voice was bright and brittle. I can't help it, she thought. Pierre is infuriating. So jealous. Was it my fault?

Marte came out of the kitchen. "Pierre has brought us the most beautiful cauliflower!"

"It announces itself," said Jeanne-Marie coldly. "I will be with you in a moment." She hurried into the bedroom.

Marte followed her. "Was everything all right?"

"All right?" Then she remembered. "Yes, yes, quite all right."

"I didn't know. You seemed ——"

"I always feel shaken afterward," said Jeanne-Marie. That was true, she thought. That was what was the matter with her.

MARTE would not let them help with the dishes. "You two take your coffee to the front room," she said. "You are both cross and I am tired of you."

In the front room Pierre put down his coffee cup. "Oh, Jeanne-Marie, why are we always quarreling?" There was open distress in his eyes.

"I did not think I was quarreling."

"You were mocking about the work I do," he told her.

"I do think it is collaborating to work for a printing firm that publishes Nazi books."

"We don't write the stuff. We only print it." They had gone over that a dozen times before. He said impatiently, "I did my utmost in the war." He had been wounded, that first winter, and discharged. His left shoulder was still somewhat stiff. "Anyway," he went on, "I shall not be doing it any more. I am going to get out of Paris—it is too dangerous. I am going to the country, to manage one of mother's farms. I want you to come with me, Jeanne-Marie. Let us have what we can of life."

She heard him with dismay. She was not ready for finality. She said, "I could not leave Paris."

"Why not? What keeps you here?"

"Why, it is Paris—my home. I could not leave till it is free."

"Your staying will not help. Or do you think it can? No, do not say—I do not want to know. Only I am so afraid for you, Jeanne-Marie. You are so rash. And you have so little sense."

So little sense! She thought indignantly how clever she had been with those aviators that very day, but she could not tell him so.

She said evasively, "This is all too soon, Pierre. We have never said ——"

"You have always known how I have felt about you. And I thought that you—that you felt for me too."

At sixteen, she had cried when he went off to war. He had treated her like a child then, and she had resented it. Now she felt she had been a child.

"Of course, I have a feeling—a true feeling," she said confusedly. "But I don't know how much. In these times I seem to feel nothing but this awful waiting for freedom. And I could not leave Paris ——"

"It is this André Rallon," he said angrily. "He has changed everything."

"I admire him, that is all. I admire him for going to De Gaulle."

"Why doesn't he go? He is hiding here. He is using you to help him hide here."

Her eyes blazed. "You think of hiding because that is what you mean to do. And you want me to hide with you. No, thank you. I shall stay in Paris till the Allies come and we walk the streets a free people again!"

"Oh, Jeanne-Marie," he said helplessly and bitterly. "Why should I not keep myself alive if I can? Do you want to see me deported as a labor slave?"

"Oh, no," she said. "No—not that."

"I tell you I have done my part," he said stubbornly. "And now I must do what is best for me. If I mean anything to you at all ——"

They argued on and on, until he suddenly looked at his wrist watch.

"And now I must go. That curfew—they spoil even our love-making."

The thing to use is

UNGUENTINE

It's the first thought for first aid:

1. It relieves pain.
2. It is antiseptic and fights infection.
3. It promotes healing — usually without a scar.

In tubes and jars at all drug stores.

FREE!

"WESTERN VACATIONLANDS"

● Description of famous western vacation regions with pictorial map of the West. Will help you to plan your summer or fall vacation. Also information on Union Pacific travel facilities.

Folder contains information about California, Pacific Northwest, Colorado, Sun Valley, Yellowstone, National Parks of Utah-Arizona and other scenic regions. Mail coupon for free copy.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD

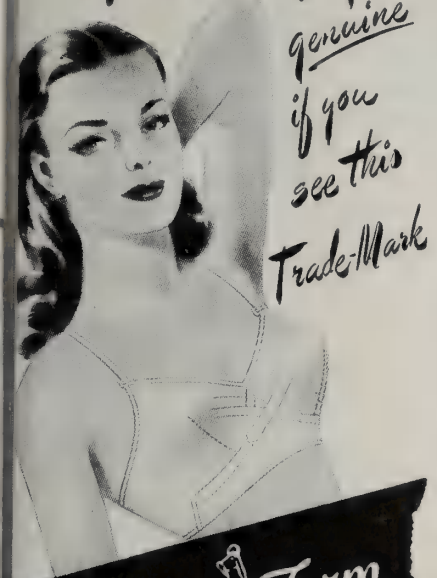
Passenger Dept.
Union Pacific Railroad,
Room 21, Omaha, Nebraska



Please send free copy of "Western Vacationlands."

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____

Surest thing You know.. they're genuine if you see this Trade-Mark

Maiden Form BRASSIERES

If you can't find your style at first, try again! Dealers receive supplies monthly. Send for free folders: Maiden Form Brassiere Co., Inc., New York 16

"There is a Maiden Form for Every Type of Figure!"

"Love-making!" said Jeanne-Marie in a voice hinting of rueful laughter.

"Well, it could have been," said Pierre. His own voice was faintly humorous. But there was no time for more words if he was to be home and off the streets before ten o'clock.

She went to the door with him, watched him going down the stairs. She saw a figure rounding the landing, hurrying up past him. André! She saw Pierre look at him, then back at her, and though she could not see his face, she knew what was in it.

"André!" Her voice held a conflict of emotion.

He caught her hands and drew her back within the hall. "I should never have left you like that! But I was angry—I had seen him waiting for you ——"

"But ——"

"All evening I have been waiting for him to come out. To ask you to forgive me." His arms went about her, holding her tightly. "I love you so. Promise to marry me, Jeanne-Marie." His mouth bent and found hers. And in that kiss her confusion was resolved.

"So now they are engaged!" said Paul bitterly.

There did not seem any answer to that, for they had just finished drinking toasts to the fiancés in the bottle of champagne that Marte had been saving for victory. Now Jeanne-Marie and André were in the front room and Paul and Marte were in the kitchen with the dishes.

"I suppose I can be thankful that they do not plan to be married before he takes himself off," Paul continued. "I am afraid she would agree to that too."

You find yourself refreshed by the presence of cheerful people. Why not make an earnest effort to confer that pleasure on others? You will find half the battle is gained if you never allow yourself to say anything gloomy. —L. M. CHILD.

"He can't very well marry—without papers. He is wise not to risk himself. But I think Jeanne-Marie feels badly that he plans to go so soon."

André had said at dinner, "I have only waited for this. To know that Jeanne-Marie will be waiting for me. Now I must not lose a day."

"He did not say what his plans are."

Marte handed him a dish towel. "No. Those things are best not talked about."

"You seem very sympathetic to him now," Paul said.

Marte smiled. "I like him—yes. I like the way he adores Jeanne-Marie. She is so happy. It makes a woman happy to be adored."

What would she feel if he said, "Then you ought to be ecstatic!" The words exploded in his chest. Aloud he said harshly, "What am I to do with this thing if you don't give me a dish?"

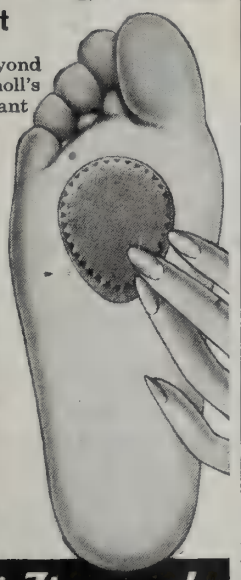
"Here you are, doctor."

In the front room Jeanne-Marie was saying, "But so soon ——"

"I feel guilty to have waited so long. I have already let one chance slip by. A fellow Alsatian I met offered to take me along. He did not tell me his contacts. But I shall find other ways."

"Be careful about it." She looked at him worriedly.

"I have money—and I hear that ——"



"There are Boche who promise and then turn you in. Don't trust them, André. Don't trust them. Don't trust even the French unless you are sure!"

He was walking up and down the room, his hands deep in his pockets. His brows were frowning. She had never seen him reveal worry and uncertainty before.

"I have got to take chances," he argued. "Otherwise —— Look! I had a tip—from that Alsatian—about a priest. Well, I went to him and he professed himself ignorant. Frightened, I suppose. Or perhaps he did not trust me. Then I got to talking with a

Callouses

Dr. Scholl's Quick, Soothing Relief For Painful Callouses, Burning, Tenderness On Bottom Of Feet

For quick relief beyond belief, use Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads. The instant you protect the sensitive spot with these thin, downy-soft, wonderfully soothing, cushioning pads, pressure is lifted. Painful callouses, burning or tenderness are relieved at once. Separate Medications included in every box for speedily removing callouses. Cost but a trifle. Get a box today. Insist on Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads! At Drug, Shoe, Department Stores, Toiletry Counters.

Dr Scholl's Zino-pads

FEET HURT, BURN?

Dr. Scholl's Foot Balm quickly relieves foot discomfort caused by exertion. Very soothing and refreshing. Costs but a trifle. Try it!

Dr Scholl's FOOT BALM

KNITTING YARNS

Ask for FREE Sample Card. Highest Quality for over 35 years. Large selections still available.

CLIVEDEN YARN CO. Dept. E-1, 711 Arch St. Philadelphia 6, Pa.

Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt

Great natural dignity and an infallible sense of style make Mrs. Vanderbilt's handsomeness unforgettable. Her most striking features are expressive dark eyes accented by the ivory smoothness of her skin. Three or four times weekly, Mrs. Vanderbilt has a 1-Minute Mask of Pond's Vanishing Cream. "It makes my skin feel softer . . . look brighter and clearer," she says.

1-Minute Mask "so quick... so easy ...so refreshing!"

Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt—devotee of the 1-Minute Mask of Pond's Vanishing Cream

Make your complexion look clearer . . . more radiant . . . smoother!

Mask your face with a satiny white coat of Pond's Vanishing Cream, covering everything but your eyes.

One minute later—tissue off the Mask! Such a quick beauty treatment—and so effective! "Keratolytic" action of the Cream loosens ugly particles of dead, chapped skin and imbedded dirt. It dissolves them!

Your complexion is "re-styled"! After a 1-Minute Mask, your skin looks brighter, finer-textured, even lighter! It feels fresher and softer—all "smoothed up" for a perfect and lasting make-up!

Get a BIG jar of glamour-making Masks!

"Delightful powder base!"

Mrs. Vanderbilt finds "Pond's Vanishing Cream makes a delightful powder base, too!" Smooth on a light film—and leave it on. Ungreasy! Keeps make-up fresh for hours!

No need for rubber bands—no stretching—makes a snug-fitting cover!

make your own Cut-Rite

BOWL COVERS

1. Tear Off To Size . . . Tear off enough Cut-Rite to extend beyond the rim of the bowl at least an inch on all sides. Center the Cut-Rite on the bowl and hold it firmly in place with left hand

2. Pleat And Twist . . . Still holding the wax paper firmly in place, start by pleating a corner, then twist and tuck under-and-up to the rim of the bowl.

3. A Snug Cover . . . Continue to twist and tuck under-and-up, working on the bias, and turning bowl away from you as you go . . . until you have completed a snug-fitting roll

You can make transparent Cut-Rite covers to fit any bowl, use them once and throw away or put them back on again and again. Left-overs wrapped in Cut-Rite keep delicious because Cut-Rite is waxed all the way through to help keep air out, food flavor in! Saves icebox space, too . . . half a tomato rolled in Cut-Rite fits neatly into a corner.

Cut-Rite cooks find dozens of uses for this neat, pliable, durable wax paper. They mix messy foods on Cut-Rite, cut out rolls, roll pie crust on it. Keep Cut-Rite always handy! A Scott Paper product.

Get Cut-Rite with its famous sawtooth cutting edge in the big 125-foot roll

CUT-RITE

Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

TEARS-RITE · SAVES-RITE · LOOKS-RITE

fellow in the black market—don't look like that; you have to take some chances—and he gave me an address, but when I got there I heard the man had been arrested. Now I don't know where to turn. But I'll find out. I must get myself near some frontier. Do you know of any way? That we could trust?"

She hesitated. Mme. Chaffours was a way for only men in danger. André was not in danger. He did not need to be disguised and passed from house to house. But he would be in danger if he went about talking to strangers.

He was saying, "I don't even know what part of the frontier is advisable."

She said slowly, "I can tell you that. There is a girl in a certain village who walks refugees across the frontier. I have heard about her. She has never had an accident. And it is not difficult for a Frenchman to get to that place. With the right papers."

"See what you think of these." He took the papers from his wallet and put them into her hands.

She studied them intently. Then she looked up, brushing back the dark hair that had fallen across her forehead. "They are not good enough. They are not good at all."

"How can I get others? There must be some way."

"Don't you try," she told him. "Let me."

"I don't want you to risk yourself."

"I don't want you to risk yourself. I can't bear to have you go."

"Of course you want me to go!" he said. "Would you have me be a traitor to De Gaulle?"

She would like to go with him, she thought. But that was impracticable.

"I'll see what I can do," she said. "In the meantime, don't talk to another soul."

"I saw that Pierre Roget of yours on the street today," he said suddenly. "He pretended not to see me."

She had told André all about Pierre. And she had written Pierre a contrite little note and received back a few formal lines.

André said, not sounding troubled at all, but rather amused, "You know, I think that fellow would inform on me."

"Oh, no! Pierre is not like that."

He looked down on her with laughter in his eyes. "How do you know what men are like?"

Two nights later she gave him his papers. "These are good," she told him.

"Jeanne-Marie, you are wonderful!" He caught her hands and pressed them to his lips. "How did you ——"

"It is better you do not know. With these you should be able to manage."

"Where do I go? What do I do?"

She got out a map. "You take the train to here. I think the line is open now. Then you walk to here." She made him memorize the name of the girl and the village and the passwords.

"I wil' go tomorrow," he said, putting his papers carefully away.

"Tomorrow?"

"Before the line is bombed again. That is only good sense. And every day is important. It must be tomorrow. Early."

There was no hesitation in him; he was all eagerness. And this was the man, she thought, whom Paul, and Pierre too, had accused of wanting to stay safe. She felt a tremendous pride in him, a resolve to be as brave and unemotional as he.

Yet she said anxiously, "But I will see you again?"

"Oh, you will see me again!" he told her. "I promise."

"I know you will come back. I know. But I mean—tomorrow? Before you go?"

He thought a moment. "Yes, tomorrow. I promise you."

But that was a lonely assurance to hug to her heart that night. She was utterly alone because Marte was away, off in some basement where her Intelligence group got out their small paper. Jeanne-Marie lay awake thinking of the cautions she must give. It was very different, sending off your own man. But that girl had never had an accident. André ought to get there safely. Those papers were good. But you never knew what could happen. Perhaps she should have taken André to Mme. Chaffours, hid him with the Underground.

At last she fell asleep. A loud knocking on the outer door brought her violently awake. She sat up, her heart pounding. She had had so many dreams of the Gestapo, in the days when she started Resistance work, that for a moment it seemed another of those nightmares. But this was no nightmare. She was awake.

She got out of bed, groped for slippers and a robe. She was so frightened she could hardly stand. Men's voices were shouting through the door. She drew a deep breath. She must not lose her head, say something foolish in her consternation. Her mind was a turmoil of conjectures. Had Bill and Bud been taken? Or had Marte's work been discovered?

Now she was at the door, drawing the bolts, saying in a surprisingly steady voice, "One moment, gentlemen."

The car rushed her through the dark Paris streets. She sat very still between two soldiers. She had put on a black skirt and a gold-colored wool blouse and her black coat; they had let her take one small bag with a few necessary things. She had remembered to put in all her hairpins. While she dressed, men had rummaged through the flat, carrying off the papers from the desk. It would be a shock to Marte, coming back to that flat. But perhaps Marte was already taken.

"Out! Out quickly!" They said "Schnell!" with every order.

This was like your dreadful dreams of what a prison would be—stone walls, stone floors, cold sour air, burly guards snapping to attention at the SS officers with her. In a side room a hard-faced woman warder searched her—no firearms, no concealed poison. They made sure of that. Jeanne-Marie felt shuddering humiliation at those masterful, experienced hands. It is hard to seem proud and dignified when you are naked.

She dressed hurriedly, the woman watching her with a sort of sadistic satisfaction. She was taken back to her guards and then marched her through long stone corridors and up flights of stairs. How was she going to bear being beaten—or having her fingernails torn out? Sometimes they did that. They had to a twelve-year-old girl, a Resistance worker, they had questioned. The girl had told nothing. They had let her go, persuaded she knew nothing. But if a twelve-year-old could be so brave ——

She was marched into a brightly lighted room. An officer with the black collar of the SS on his uniform sat behind a desk and two other men were lounging a little at one side. Jeanne-Marie was holding her head high, her face rigidly composed. She was so intent on bearing herself well that at first she was able to concentrate on little more than the thick-fleshed face of the man at the desk.

(Continued on Page 84)

Choice

By Catherine Haydon Jacobs

Vistas and panoramas pall!
Show me a lonely waterfall,
A mountain peak against the sun,
Cool evening stars fixed one by one.
Count what the hungry eyes extol;
Know single beauty tempts the soul.
One steady beam on a darkened shore
Quickens the pulse, assures more
Than any galaxy of light
Feathering the even wave of sight.
A solitary heron brings
Enchantment. Of God-given things
I choose one tall and silent tree
Between the universe and me.

Swift's Brookfield Cheese

Whenever you buy cheese, remember to say, "Swift's Brookfield, please!"

ift's Brookfield Eggs

Quality protected from farm to your food store.

Flavor like a breath of spring

AND SWIFT protects that refreshing flavor all the way. From the heart of America's richest dairylands comes the cream that makes Swift's Brookfield Butter. Then the Swift distribution system transports that delicious Swift's Brookfield Butter to your dealer's, ready for your table, with all its golden goodness. That's why, the taste appeal of every meal is better with Swift's Brookfield Butter!

Swift's Brookfield

BUTTER, EGGS AND CHEESE

(Continued from Page 82)

was a sardonic, young-old face. The mouth was heavy and sensual. The round head was almost clean-shaven.

Then she became aware, more clearly, of the two other men beside him. One was turned a little; she saw on his shoulder the silver insigne, like forked lightning, of the SS. Her eyes traveled to the black collars, with "SS" on them, then she made herself look higher. One had a narrow fox face with sleek black hair. The other ——

A man bayoneted will give that same unbelieving, wonder-struck look that she gave to André Rallon.

Her white face was empty of everything but that incredulous wonder. André was looking directly at her, completely at ease; he even smiled a little, as if reminding her, "You see—I said you would see me again."

She felt as if dying. Everything within her seemed dissolving. Her heart felt drained of blood. It is impossible, she thought. It is utterly impossible.

It was an effort to stand, to remain conscious. But there was a pride in her that held her up. She became aware that their eyes were feeding on her, that this was a moment they had greedily anticipated. She was a diverting spectacle. A French girl who discovers that her lover is a Nazi spy. That was a superb joke. They were waiting for her first babbling words, holding in their guffaws.

She made herself stand straight and still in a semblance of composure. She felt so stiff, so rigid, that it was an effort to obey when the man at the desk said, finally, "Sit down." But her weakness, her inner trembling were gone.

The SS captain at the desk was regarding her with sardonic humor. "You are surprised, mademoiselle, to find your dear friend is one of us?"

THE sound of his voice, in its heavily accented French, exploded a flash of recognition. Of course! He was the German officer who had accosted her that day at the bookstore window. When André had intervened. It had all been arranged, that drama. The intrusive German, the rash, chivalrous Frenchman. Nothing could have made her more surely take a stranger on trust. And she had fallen into the trap. Into all the traps.

But André had been so good an actor. Her mind was able to think that quite detachedly. He was so easy, so sincere-seeming. And with such natural charm. Never saying too much, but saying what he did so well.

"But naturally," she heard herself say, in a light voice of which she was intensely proud. "I was thinking what an excellent performance he gave. He is of the theater, perhaps?"

The captain turned to André with a grin. "This one takes it coolly. Perhaps you did not make such an impression?"

"Enough to get her here," said André's amused voice.

"But she is not emotional about you, André."

So his name really was André. A Frenchman. A traitor. "How is it that a Frenchman wears the uniform of the SS?" said Jeanne-Marie in that same light, impersonal voice.

"His mother had the honor to be German. And his father is Alsatian, not French. But we have not brought you here to discuss his antecedents. Now, your name ——"

They knew all these things he began asking, she thought; surely all those obvious facts were in the stack of papers before him. But they were methodical, these Boche. Name. Age. Family. Circumstances. She answered slowly so that when it came to the difficult questions her hesitations would not be so obvious.

A German soldier was taking down the record. Step by step the questions led on. There could be no denial that she had obtained shelter for a young man she thought escaping German authority. She had induced her brother to take him in.

"Out of courtesy," Jeanne-Marie said quickly. "Because he had tried—as we thought—to protect me." She felt an agony of fear for Paul. Would they arrest him too?

MODERN home makers carefully heed the advice of health authorities who urge hygienic home cleansing to protect family health. That's why so many women use Clorox in routine cleaning to make kitchens and bathrooms sanitary, for Clorox is an effective germicide. In laundering, Clorox provides sanitation, too... it also bleaches white cottons and linens snowy-white (brightens fast colors). Clorox is economical and easy to use. Directions on the label.

AMERICA'S FAVORITE BLEACH AND HOUSEHOLD DISINFECTANT

CLOROX

FREE FROM CAUSTIC

"When it's Clorox-clean... it's hygienically clean!"

© Copyright, Clorox Chemical Co.

MOP the EASY WAY

KEEP HANDS DRY!

A Blessing for Busy Housewives

Famous DuPont Cellulose Sponge MINUTE MOP and DRAINER—an all-purpose mop that protects hands from unsanitary, grimy water, helps prevent chapped, sore skin. Saves tiresome wringing, kneeling and splashing. A great labor-saver. Simplifies, speeds up housecleaning, eliminates drudgery of mopping and cleaning.

Handy for Countless Cleaning Chores

Minute Mop's Cellulose Sponge quickly works up rich suds that's ideal for washing floors, steps, walls, woodwork, windows, linoleum tiles, bathtubs, automobiles, etc.

No Mechanical Parts to Bother With!

Simple to drain—all you do is rest sponge on drainer, lightly lean on handle, and in a jiffy Minute Mop easily drains itself. Drainer fits any size pail—it's adjustable. $1.59 COMPLETE

Get MINUTE MOP & DRAINER *NOW!

Amazing MINUTE MOP and Drainer is now available at all department stores, many hardware stores. If your dealer cannot supply you, write us direct, enclosing 14c extra for mailing costs. Get it today.

MINUTE MOP CO. 21 E. 23rd St. Chicago 16, Ill.

NO OILY FILM

Glass shines in seconds—stays clean longer with Bon Ami!

Just do this—(1) Apply a thin coating of Bon Ami to mirror or windows. (2) Wipe it off before it dries. And dirt's gone—glass is crystal-clear. For Bon Ami Cake polishes as well as cleans, leaves no oily film to dull glass and pick up dust. So thrifty, too—cleans 10 average windows inside and out for a penny.

Best for windshields, too!

IN HANDY CAKE FORM

"hasn't scratched yet!"

Burbank NEW-TYPE 2,4-D WEED KILLER

No Digging
WILL NOT Kill Grass

WEEDLESS LAWNS QUICK and EASY

2, 4-D, developed by U. S. Dept. Agriculture, now in instant dissolving, easy to use, tablet form . . . . .
Non-Caustic. Non-Corrosive. Stainless. Will not harm soil . . . 12 tablets 25c . . . 60 tablets $1. large size, enough to keep average lawn weed-free all summer.

At 5 & 10, Dept. and Garden Stores—or direct postpaid Burbank Weed Killer, Dept. L ▪ Los Angeles 6, Calif.

For Larger, More Beautiful Plants and Flowers
BURBANK VITAMINS AND HORMONES

Laundry Fresh
EXCELLO
Kitchen Towels with a Tradition

Made of the same highly absorbent, lint-free, soft-as-a-cloud fabric that has been a tradition in thrifty American kitchens for generations. At leading Department Stores.

EXCELLO, LTD. Chicago

But Paul had told André he was not in favor of resistance. That might clear him.

And there could be no denial that she had found a room for the refugee with a Frenchwoman who had disobeyed the regulations and not registered him. How had she found that room?

Jeanne-Marie gave a clear account, since André already knew. She had gone to Mlle. Clement, an old schoolteacher of hers, who lived in a locality where rooms were rented, and Mlle. Clement had directed her to Mme. Albiers. Mlle. Clement knew nothing of the circumstances. Mme. Albiers had been told that the Frenchman had left his papers at home through accident and was waiting for them to be forwarded, and she had consented not to report him immediately, simply as a favor.

"For a bribe," André mentioned. "My sojourn, Captain Kummler, is one of constant blackmail."

"These greedy people!" said Kummler, with mock lightness. "They will have to be taught."

The accusations went on. You have sheltered a refugee. You have patronized the black market. They could send you to prison for that alone, Jeanne-Marie reflected. But this was only the beginning.

The captain consulted a document and looked across his table to her. "You provided your—fiancé"—his voice gave ironic humor to that—"with the name of Marguerite Allecours. Where did you learn of Marguerite Allecours?"

That brave girl who walked refugees across the frontier was already taken, or as good as taken, Jeanne-Marie thought bleakly. This was her doing. In her trust in André she had been a betrayer.

---

Let the woman dearest to a man say tenderly, "You were so handsome tonight, dear—I was proud of you." See his face light up with noble, unselfish joy, because he has given such pleasure to others!

—MYRTLE REED: The Spinster Book (G. P. Putnam's Sons).

---

"There was an old tobacconist ——" Jeanne-Marie said slowly. She named a man who had been in the work, had been caught and executed. Those were the names you used, when you had to name anyone. "I was talking to him one day—I was very depressed, very hungry. And he told me if ever I wanted to go away, to get in touch with this girl."

"When did you talk to him?"

"It was in the winter." The tobacconist had been taken in January. "In December, I think. About Christmas."

"With what other means of escape did he furnish you?"

"Why, none. None at all."

"You did not think it your duty to report this to your government?"

"It did not occur to me to betray a confidence."

"And if he had confided that it was his intention to assassinate one of our troops?"

Jeanne-Marie said carefully, "I would have done my utmost to dissuade him."

"Possibly. You might have taken thought of reprisals. And now, Mademoiselle Fontaine, suppose you tell us how many you have sent out by this Marguerite Allecours? How many?" he shouted suddenly in a harsh voice.

"I have never sent anyone."

"But you remember the name so well. The passwords. And you have all the maps."

"I have the maps—yes. We have always had maps of France. As for remembering—I have a fairly good memory."

"What other means of evasion do you remember?"

"I do not know any others. If I had known would I not have told him?" she asked with an air of reasonableness. "Naturally I told him everything I knew."

The black-haired young man said something aside to André and they both grinned.

(Continued on Page 87)

HOT IN 30 SECONDS

Sunbeam
DOUBLE AUTOMATIC IRONMASTER
REG U S PAT OFF.

•HEATS QUICKER•STAYS HOTTER•IRONS FASTER

Until you've used Sunbeam Ironmaster, you've no idea how much faster and easier ironing can be. No waiting for it to heat up—it's ready to go in a split minute, and always delivers the correct, steady heat for whatever fabric you're ironing. That's why you finish quicker, feeling fresher with a Sunbeam on the job.

ONLY SUNBEAM HAS the Thumb-tip Heat Control Dial up in the handle, where it is always cool and convenient. Easy-to-see. Easy-to-set. A finger-touch sets it for the correct, safe heat you want.

ONLY SUNBEAM HAS the Quick, Steady Heat made possible by Double-Automatic Heat Control, an exclusive Sunbeam invention. Heats faster—but never overheats. Reaches safe Low Heat for rayons in 30 seconds, quick High Heat for heavy, damp linens in 2½ minutes.

IN ADDITION, IT HAS the air-cooled, wrist-resting handle . . . larger ironing surface . . . permanently attached cord set . . . new streamlined beauty.

SAFE steady Low heat that will not scorch the finest lingerie.

QUICK steady High heat for your heavy, dampened linens.

On sale wherever good electric appliances are sold.

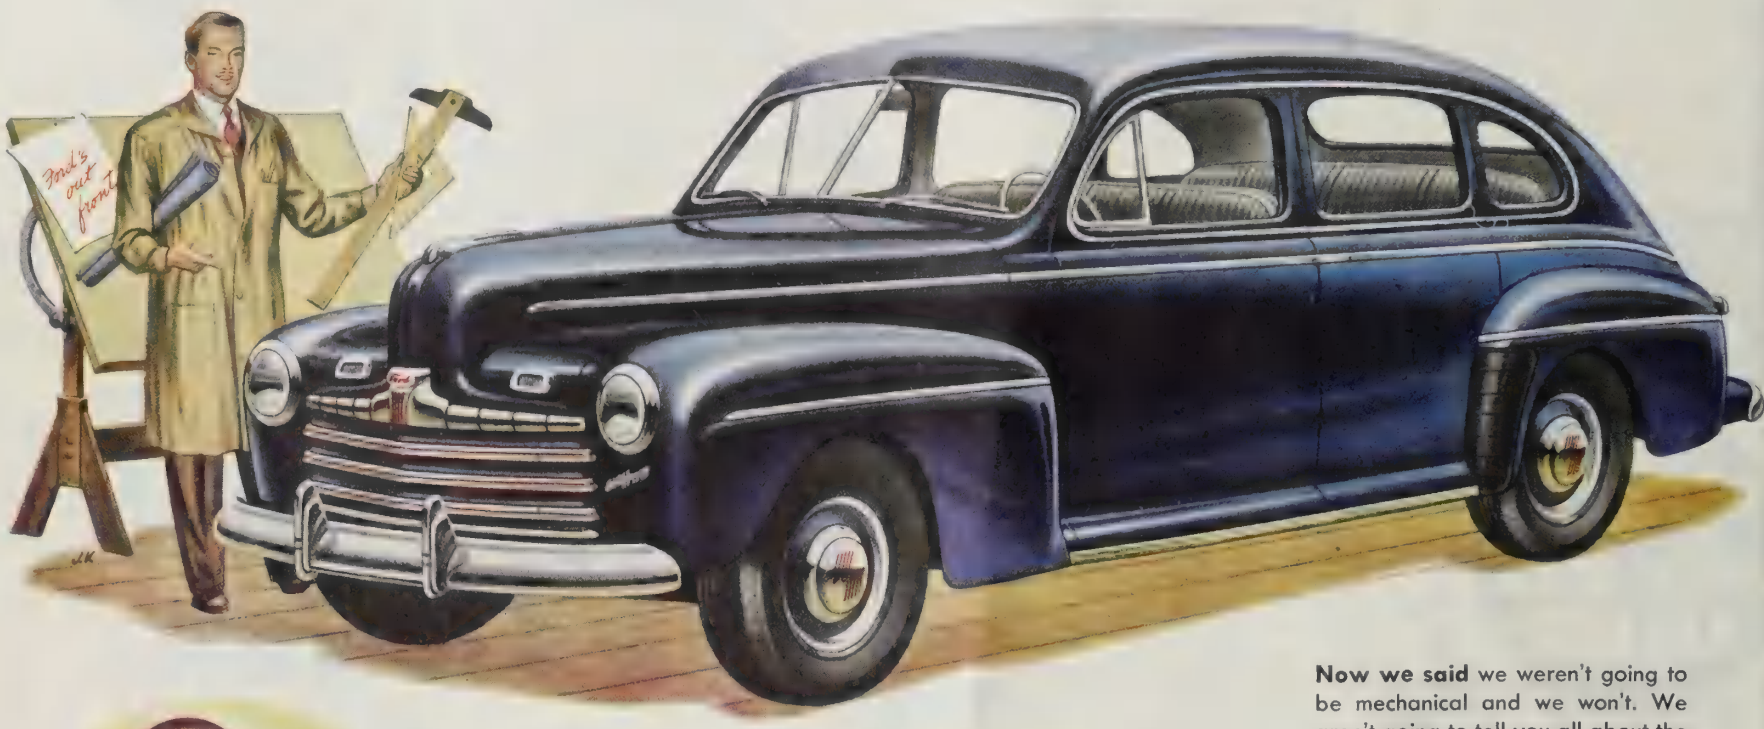
Made and guaranteed by SUNBEAM CORPORATION (formerly Chicago Flexible Shaft Company)
5600 W. Roosevelt Road, Dept. 50, Chicago 50, Illinois
Canada Factory: 321 Weston Rd., So., Toronto 9 • Over Half a Century Making Quality Products

Famous for Sunbeam TOASTER, MIXMASTER, COFFEEMASTER, SHAVEMASTER, etc.

"Look, lady, you designed the big new Ford"

This is probably the most unmechanical advertisement you've ever read about an automobile!



It is just about those things you told us you liked and wanted.

Upholstery, for instance. When we cover the big soft cushions in our new cars, we pretend we're you. If you want mohair, you get it—the finest long-wearing mohair on the market. Or if you like broadcloth, you get it—smooth, supple broadcloth with the finish of finest doeskin.

But do we stop there? No, in our Super De Luxe cars, for example, we bind the tops and edges with special material for tailored smartness and additional wear.

Now take hardware. Expert silversmiths design and make our door handles and window-openers. They're not fussy but functional — chosen with the same care you choose your silver pattern.

The instrument panel — it's not cluttered up with so much brilliance that you can't keep your eye on the road. It's orderly, useful and beautiful. You can see instruments easily, and there is a locking glove compartment that's a joy. The steering wheel feels good to your hands.

Now we said we weren't going to be mechanical and we won't. We aren't going to tell you all about the big new 100-horsepower Ford V-8 engine or how our engineers have made it thriftier than ever. Nor do you care about the details of our new hydraulic brakes, so all we say is tell your Ford Dealer you would like to drive one of our new cars.

There's a Ford in your future

TUNE IN...The FORD-Bob Crosby Show—CBS, Wednesdays, 9:30-10 p.m., E.S.T....The FORD Sunday Evening Hour—ABC, Sundays, 8-9 p.m., E.S.T.

(Continued from Page 85)

"You were not very prompt with your confidence," said the captain. "He had to waste a good deal of time on you before you used your memory. Come now, who was the first you sent out by this girl? You cannot harm them if they are gone, and if you are frank, that is in your favor."

"But I never sent anyone."

Over and over she made her denials. She knew nothing of any other ways of escape. She had never helped any other to escape.

The captain flung the name of De Gaulle at her. He was gratingly sarcastic now. "Do you also deny that you admire this De Gaulle?"

André was watching; he appeared diverted to know what she would find to say to that. He was like a cat with a mouse beneath its paws. Listening amusedly to its futile little squeaks.

"I admired De Gaulle," she said slowly. "As you would admire any general who does not surrender. Perhaps I exaggerated my admiration a little to impress a young man who was so ardent for him. Women are like that," she said with a rueful, astonishingly natural-sounding laugh.

"And women also lie when they are caught by the Gestapo," said Kummler sardonically. "But it is better not to lie. Because we always find out." Then he leaned forward and barked at her, in sudden violence, "Who was the man with you on the Metro on March twelfth?"

"March twelfth?"

"March twelfth. A Sunday, if your fairly good memory needs refreshment."

So that was it, she thought. The time that young American had said "Gee!" when he stepped on someone's foot. That had been remarked. Someone had informed on her. It had been after that she had fancied she was being followed. Then André had been sent to spy on her.

BILL and Bud had been the next aviators. Had they —— But she must concentrate on one question at a time, one problem. She made a violent effort to resist the inner trembling that wanted to start up again in her.

"The young man in the Metro?" thundered Captain Kummler.

She suddenly put on a bright expression. "Why, that was my American."

"Your American?" He seemed taken back by the admission.

"That is what I called him. He was really a Frenchman who has lived in America. We got to talking on the platform ——"

"Who is he? His name?"

"But I do not know. We simply got to talking. He bumped into me and said something in English and explained it by saying he had lived so long in America—his father gave some lectures over there, I think—so we kept on talking. He was very amusing."

"Where did you go after the Metro?"

Perhaps they had been followed. "He accompanied me to my home—he wanted to come in and when I refused," Jeanne-Marie improvised, "he went up the stairs anyway. He was what you would call in English 'fresh,'" said Jeanne-Marie. André knew that she spoke some English, so it was better to bring it out. She continued, "I had to shut my door on him."

"Remarkable! And you were surprised? And that did not teach you not to talk to young men in the streets?"

He asked more questions about this young man, but it seemed clear his suspicions were based on a report some informer had turned in. Then the inquisition returned to Marte Morel.

Jeanne-Marie could not deny that Marte knew of André's plans, but she insisted that Marte disapproved of evasion, although, in this case, she was glad to have André leave Paris because she thought him a dangerous influence. "Too much for De Gaulle," Jeanne-Marie said, wondering helplessly how much Marte had been led to say to André.

Now he leaned forward. "And where did you get my papers, Jeanne-Marie?" André asked gently.

This could not be happening, she thought. This simply could not be happening.

Kummler was sorting his documents. He found the papers she had given André, and tapped them with a thick finger. "Yes, tell us how you got these."

Jeanne-Marie's eyes widened. They looked very clear and gray; the pupils were black pin points. "Why, it was the man," she told them.

Bit by bit she unfolded a fantastic story. She did not know the man's name—people in that work, she said, naturally do not give their names—but she had heard of him through that same tobacconist, the same time he had told her about the girl. This was a man who furnished papers. For a price. This man frequented a certain café—she named L'Oiseau Noir, which was kept by a collaborationist. She was making up the fantasy as she went along, trying to impress every word on her own mind, not to contradict herself later.

"So," she said, "when he asked for papers, I thought of this man and went to that café."

"You hear about a man and four months later you go to a café and there he is!" mocked the captain.

"It was like that. I told you I had been fortunate," she said, quite simply, to André.

"Well, let us hear the rest of the fairy tale," Kummler ordered. "Describe this man."

She described a very nondescript man, neither young nor old, light nor dark. She did not recall what he wore, she said. Except a big dark overcoat and a muffler, and a dark hat pulled low. She did not notice any distinguishing marks. His teeth? No, she had not remarked his teeth.

"And by what miracle did you recognize him?" Kummler was heavily sarcastic. "This man without identifying features."

"By the way he used his hands. When he ate or drank. He used first the right hand, then the left. That was the sign. First I was to look for a very ordinary man. Then to watch his hands. That is how I found him."

"And then you introduced yourself? And he took you on faith—because of your pretty legs?"

"It was not like that," said Jeanne-Marie evenly. "There was a certain way of doing it."

She explained. You sat down at the table with this man and laid a certain book on the table. You left very soon, abandoning the book. He took it and inside was the money and a list of the requirements—the name and places and descriptions. The next day you came, and if he was there he gave you your book, saying you had forgotten it. The papers would be in the book. If he was not there you kept on coming till he came. Jeanne-Marie said, "With me he was prompt."

It sounded nonsensical, but it was the involved sort of thing they believed in, she told herself. She almost believed in that man herself. She gave detail after detail. The time. The cost. How she happened to have money on hand. She explained her finances and Kummler carefully checked the record before him. Then he shot at her, "What was the book?"

"Mein Kampf."

"You dared make use of the book of the Fuehrer for an act of treachery?"

"I put the enclosure at the paragraph about the advantage of big lies," she said in her gentlest tone.

FROM the way he looked at her she suspected him of something close to wry admiration for her spirit. But it was a mistake to show spirit. It put them on guard. If they believed her capable of defying them, then they would use torture.

Kummler said grimly, "You have not read that great book in the right spirit, Mademoiselle Fontaine. You need re-educating."

It was almost dawn when the questioning ended. Kummler said finally, "Enough for now. Try to refresh your memory before we continue this. It will be easier for you."

The guards took her away.

The cell was small, cold, damp and sour with prison smells. As he thrust her in, the guard flashed his light about and Jeanne-Marie saw narrow wood bunks against two walls and women staring out—one face was hideous, distorted, with unkempt gray hair. The door clanged and she was in darkness, facing a small oblong of pale gray barred with black lines.

A young, tired voice said, "The bunk above me is empty."

Jeanne-Marie felt her way to it and climbed up. There was a blanket that felt stiff with dirt, but the cold was penetrating, and she buttoned her coat tightly and wrapped the blanket about that and stretched out.

The release from the tension of the questioning gave her a sensation that was almost peace. For a time she was conscious of nothing but the cessation of strain, the comfort of surrender to the weakness of shock. Then her mind began to race. It went backward and forward, examining the things she had said, testing the impression made.

That fantastic story. But it was not more fantastic than the plot they had arranged to trap her. That elaborate scene—Kummler accosting, André intervening.

André. Her mind reached him and stopped. Intolerable to think of him, intolerable the pain and humiliation. But something tough and resistant in her fiber, a strength that had upheld her in that agony of shock, told her that shame and heartache did not matter now. The André she had thought she loved had never existed. There had been an actor, with great charm, playing the patriot.

She had been a fool to be deceived, she thought stonily, but it was hard to see how she could have suspected. Paul had distrusted his sincerity of intention, but not his circumstances. Marte liked him more and more. Oh, dear God, what would happen to Marte?

The fear was a knife moving in Jeanne-Marie's heart. It was

"She was terribly disillusioned when she found out her parents liked him!"

TO MAKE A LAWN STORY SHORT

Doo-Klips GRASS SHEARS ARE BACK!

1. You've happy gardening days ahead—thanks to Doo-Klip exclusive quality features!

2. Doo-Klip famous Long-Handled Grass Shears and Weeders all have pinch-proof grips, keen long-lasting cutting edges.

3. Doo-Klip Long-Handle Tools let you garden standing up! Your hardware store has Doo-Klips NOW!

Standard Grass Shear, Price $1.50

Buy Doo-Klips at Hardware and Seed stores or order direct from factory. Write to—

LEWIS ENGINEERING AND MANUFACTURING CO.
Dept. J, Alliance, Ohio

Long-Handled Grass Shear, price $2.50

Be lovely to love

Make the famous Fresh test. See why more women are switching to Fresh than to any other deodorant.

Fresh stops perspiration worries completely. Fresh contains the most effective perspiration-stopping ingredient known to science.

Fresh stays smooth...never sticky or gritty...doesn't dry out in the jar.

near morning now and Marte would be still in her basement hideout, sleeping now—Jeanne-Marie did not know where she worked or who worked with her—ready, when the curfew was off at half past five, to bicycle about distributing that Resistance paper until it was time to go to work at the ration board. She would not be home till late afternoon. All this day she would know nothing of what had happened. Then she would come home, turn the key, see the confusion, the emptiness.

Jeanne-Marie visioned the scene. She saw Marte move to the telephone to call Paul. Sometime, in those next hours, André would come. He would explain his return—say the trains had been so crowded he could not get on. That often happened. He would come as if eager to see Jeanne-Marie one more time. They would tell him. He would be very quiet, not saying much. But saying always the right things. What was the reason for this? How had Jeanne-Marie risked herself? There were those papers she had got for him—had she been betrayed? How had she got those papers?

Marte did not know that, so Marte could not tell him. But she might own that Jeanne-Marie had got papers before. Marte might even confide about the aviators. Oh, if she could only get some word to her, some warning! She lay trembling in cold and terror. Then, in utter exhaustion, she sank into sleep.

Oblivion was brief. She was awakened by the entry of guards; she had to scramble down to stand at attention, to receive a piece of black bread and a tin cup in which was poured the ersatz coffee. There was light enough in the cell now to see its furnishings; the bunks, a stool, a pail, and a container on the wall which held water for drinking and washing.

---

Books do not exhaust words, nor words thoughts.

---

There were three women with her. The woman with the distorted face and wild gray hair that had looked so hideous in the torchlight looked more hideous by day, a crazed, filthy creature. The girl who had directed her to the bunk was young and haggard; her hand had been tortured by being run through a press. The third was a stout, friendly seeming woman, full of sympathetic interest. She was there for a violation of the food rules, she said.

She told Jeanne-Marie, "If they only knew what I did with that food! It went to feed a Britisher a friend was hiding." She gave a little chuckle. "What have they got on you, little one?"

Behind her back the girl with the tortured hand warned Jeanne-Marie with her eyes. So it was like that. A stool pigeon. But if she seemed to trust her and told only what she wanted the SS to believe ——

So Jeanne-Marie told about André, speaking in a dry, emotionless voice, not joining in the woman's angry outburst against him, but smiling a thin little smile. She told about getting the papers for him, telling the same story she had told Kummler.

She said, pretending despair, "Now I suppose they will get him too."

"It will be better for you if they do," the woman consoled. "Then they will see you told the truth."

"That's why I did," said Jeanne-Marie quickly and, she hoped, naïvely.

"That girl at the frontier—I suppose they've got her now, the brutes!"

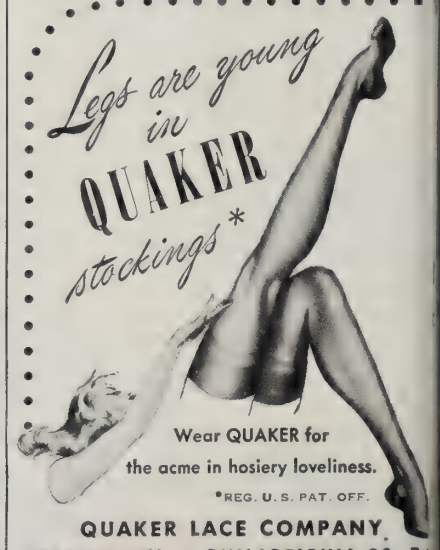
"I suppose."

Jeanne-Marie could not endure to think of that girl. To think of what might be happening to her. Nothing could undo what she had done. Nothing could atone. The sight of that tortured hand was an awful reminder.

The girl in pain was walking up and down the cell. Five steps forward, five steps back. The space was so narrow no one could move without brushing against someone else. Jeanne-Marie climbed back in her bunk and lay down again. The friendly seeming woman climbed up beside her and asked more ques-

YOUR SHOES ARE SHOWING!

EMBARRASSING, ISN'T IT?
YOU NEED SHINOLA



● It's not that your feet are too big—it's ju that your shoes always show. Might as wel break down and keep Shinola on hand. I addition to the way your shoes look, there the matter of wear. Shinola's oily waxe help preserve leather. It pays to KEEP 'E SHINING WITH SHINOLA.

In summer, SHINOLA WHITE is th thing to ask for. It's tops for a white shoes, leather or fabric. Easy to p on—hard to rub off.

SHINOLA PASTE OR LIQUID ALL COLORS 10¢

IN CANADA IT'S 2 IN 1

QUAKER LACE COMPANY
HOSIERY DIV. • PHILADELPHIA 33, P

STICKS PERMANENTLY IN 8 SECOND

Sanford's LIBRARY PASTE

The only genuine Library Paste. Never stains nor discolors.

10¢ A JAR

FOOT HEALTH WEEK
MAY 18-25
Sponsored by National Assn. of Chiropodists

MAKE EVERY WEEK Happy Feet Week WITH BLUE-JAY

NO LONGER is there need to suffer from common foot ailments. There's a Blue-Jay product to give you just the relief you need from . . .

CORNS?

Blue-Jay Corn Plasters have exclusive pain-curbing NUPERCAINE that curbs pain around corn till gentle medication loosens core—you lift it out! Soft Dura-felt pad instantly stops shoe pressure! New Blue-Jay is streamlined, comfortable, flesh-tinted. Two sizes: Standard and Little Toe. Also Special Blue-Jay Soft Corn Pads.

CALLUSES?

Blue-Jay Callus Plasters relieve painful pressure while medication helps remove callus.

TIRED, BURNING FEET?

Blue-Jay Foot Powder reduces perspiration and deodorizes, is soothing and cooling.

SHOE TORTURE?

Blue-Jay Cushion Moleskin, extra-soft, adhesive, flesh-colored, can be cut to fit over tender parts where shoe rubs.

For more serious foot ailments, see your chiropodist

There's a Blue-Jay relief for almost every common foot trouble! Don't accept substitutes.

BLUE JAY

Products of BAUER & BLACK
Division of The Kendall Company, Chicago 16

IT'S EFFECTIVE yet gentle

Nujol
MINERAL OIL

The easy-action laxative for ordinary constipation

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Appr. 1946, Stanco, Incorporated

tions. She abused André for a scoundrel, and now Jeanne-Marie tried to play her part more cleverly. She blamed herself.

"I never should have helped him—what do I care about De Gaulle? I was only trying to help him." She saw the girl below turn her pale face up toward her. Perhaps she understood. Jeanne-Marie went on to lament that she had ever listened to that tobacconist. "It was all I ever knew of the ways to go," she said.

"Oh, come, little one, we all know a great deal more than that," the woman said, with a comfortable, knowing laugh. "I can tell you I have saved many a man."

She told stories about what she had done; she said she could put Jeanne-Marie in touch with the Underground, if ever she got out of here, but Jeanne-Marie protested she did not want to know. She wanted to live in peace. She did not know whether she had deceived the woman or not, but she felt faintly hopeful.

In the afternoon the guards took the woman away.

"She pretends that she is being questioned, but she goes to report and eat," the girl with the maimed hand said fiercely. She advised, "You had better sleep—they may question you again tonight. They like to work late, when we are tired."

"I must find some way of sending a message—a warning."

"There is no way."

"The guards? A bribe?"

"Don't try. They would inform. One is a brute, the other a sneak. Better go up there and try to get some sleep."

She climbed up. Finally she slept.

THEY were together in the front room, Marte, André and Paul. Marte's face was swollen with crying. Paul's eyes were sunken and tormented. André sat with his head in his hands.

He said over and over, "If it is for those papers—I can never forgive myself."

"You should never forgive yourself," said Paul harshly.

Marte looked at André's bowed head. "Don't say that, Paul. It does not help."

"He has a right to say it," muttered André. "Where did she get those papers, Marte? Could I find the man? At least I could find if he had been taken, if he was the one who denounced her."

"I don't know. I truly don't know where she got them."

"Could it have been something besides those papers?" He seemed pleading to have it something else. "She used to talk vaguely of Resistance."

"It is more to the point," said Paul, "to discover what has become of her. In what prison." He said bitterly, "This is the time you wish for collaborationist friends."

"Perhaps Pierre's aunt," said Marte. She explained to André, "She is a collaborationist, one who admires the Germans because they are strong, will make a strong Europe. Her husband was an attaché for a time at Berlin, and she became impressed by the master race." Her choked ironic voice was hardly recognizable. She looked at Paul. "Perhaps Pierre could induce her ——"

"She might, if ——"

There was a heavy silence. Then André got to his feet. "You wish, very naturally, that it had been Pierre instead of myself. To have her safe now, I could wish that. But perhaps I can do something. Sometimes one can buy information. Good night." He bowed toward Paul. Then he caught Marte's hands and looked down into her tear-stained face. He bent and kissed both her cheeks. "I will see you tomorrow," he said gently.

When he had gone the mask of repression slid from Paul's face. He looked toward Marte in naked agony. "This is the second night she has been in their hands. What are they doing to her?"

Marte's tears blinded her again. She stumbled toward him, putting both hands on his shoulders. "Don't, Paul, don't! We must have hope."

"Hope? How can we hope?"

The terrible stories that he knew were torturing him. He shuddered and put his

Phil Baker, star of Eversharp "Take It or Leave It" (Sunday night, CBS)

Roaster-fresh because in Nescafé all the fresh flavor of newly-roasted coffee is sealed in by added carbohydrates

YOU'LL BE DELIGHTED, TOO! For Nescafé offers you the peak in coffee enjoyment . . . because Nestlé's knows the way to give you all the flavor—all the lift—of really fine coffee! First, we make an extract of choice coffees fresh from the roaster—then instantly seal in the wonderful flavor! To release the flavor, you simply put a teaspoonful of Nescafé in a cup and add hot water.

No bother with a coffee maker. No grounds to dispose of. No waste—you make exactly the amount you need—and just the strength you like. A teaspoonful makes a cup—for about 1¢. Ask your grocer for Nescafé today . . . it's the sure way to coffee enjoyment.

★ CAN'T GET IT? Well, honestly, the demand fooled us, too . . . but we're stepping up production as fast as we can. In the meantime, if you can't buy NESCAFÉ, may we ask your patience, please?

NESCAFÉ (PRONOUNCED NES-CAFAY) IS NESTLÉ'S SOLUBLE COFFEE PRODUCT, COMPOSED OF EQUAL PARTS OF SKILLFULLY BREWED SOLUBLE COFFEE AND ADDED CARBOHYDRATES (DEXTRINS, MALTOSE AND DEXTROSE) ADDED SOLELY TO PROTECT THE FLAVOR. NESTLÉ'S MILK PRODUCTS, INC., NEW YORK, U. S. A.

NESTLÉ'S EVAPORATED MILK
another famous Nestlé's product arms about Marte. They clung together, in utter abandonment to grief. Then the touch of her, soft and yielding, made him ache with another agony. A flame spread through him and through her. He held her tighter.

"Oh, Paul, Paul," she sobbed, half clinging, half resisting.

"I love you so," he said in a tormented voice. His lips pressed against her throat. "Oh, Marte, we have only each other now. Only—this."

They did not question her that second night. She slept fitfully, waking to tenseness at sounds in the corridor. Once there was an alert and a terrific noise of antiaircraft guns, but she heard no bombs; the target must have been a distant one. Her mind played with visions of a bombardment that would shatter the prison walls. But the walls were there when the gray light of before dawn came in the window. She felt as if she had lived a hundred years in that prison room.

Somehow she got through the long hours. She made herself as clean as she could with the little water to use, but she felt begrimed, and she shuddered when the crazed, filthy old woman scratched at her hair and skin. Hunger was beginning to gnaw; the prison food was wretched. Bread and coffee for breakfast—never enough—and thin soup twice a day. It was disgusting soup, but it was food of a sort.

The third night Captain Kummler questioned her again. André came in only briefly; he was not in uniform, but in the worn brown tweeds so familiar to her, and ice seemed to form about her heart as she realized he must have come from Marte. He gave Jeanne-Marie an almost bantering look and talked to Kummler in low tones. Kummler swung toward Jeanne-Marie and said loudly:

"Good! Your friend, the Morel woman, has confided everything. Now you tell the truth before we lose patience with you."

Another trap, Jeanne-Marie thought. He was not so good an actor as André. "But I have told the truth," she said steadily. "And I never told Marte Morel about the girl at the frontier or the man who made false papers. I never told anyone but him. I never tried to use them for anyone but him."

"What did you order at that café—when you sought that man? What did you order—quick!"

Kummler jumped from one question to another. There was a light turned on her face, a light so blinding that looking into it was like looking into the headlight of an onrushing locomotive. She was told to keep her eyes open, and her eyeballs felt seared, and her head throbbed, and the strain distracted her so that it was hard to think clearly.

She was afraid that soon they were going to try something on her more interesting than this light, which pinned her exposed face up before them. But they did not. Finally she was sent back to the cell.

André had found Marte alone that night. All day, instead of going to her work, she had hurried about Paris, trying to find someone who might know someone who had influence and courage enough to make an inquiry—a hopeless quest. You asked no questions of the SS. She went to friends where members of the family had been arrested to learn when they had been informed, if visits had been obtained, and her heart grew heavier at every story. She was almost beside herself with worry. The worry drove out of her even the memory of the last night with Paul. It was as if she refused to believe in that night.

André brought her tea and bread and cheese which they drank and ate together. "I was afraid you would forget to queue," he said, and Marte was touched at his thoughtfulness.

"I was almost afraid to come home," she told him with a smile. "I was afraid the SS might be here for me."

"But why for you?"

"Because we lived together."

"But could you find a refuge?" he said with an air of anxiety. "Do you know a safe place?"

She could go underground, with some member of her Intelligence group, but she could not tell him that. She had wondered if she ought not to go underground, but if she disappeared that would look guilty and make things worse for Jeanne-Marie. She simply did not know what to do.

"A safe place?" she repeated. "There are no safe places."

"If they were coming for you, would they not have come last night?"

"I suppose so." But last night, she was thinking, Jeanne-Marie might still have guarded her name. Who could say what would happen, any hour, if they tortured her? The thought of Jeanne-Marie in torture contorted her face.

"Marte, is there something you know you are not telling me?" he said quickly. "I know there is—Jeanne-Marie has talked vaguely of Resistance. I never questioned her, because I thought —— But now, nothing should be hidden. I am her man. I live only for her. I should know where this danger has come from."

That was true, she thought. There was no sense in secrecy now, with Jeanne-Marie taken. It would be comfort to confide and seek advice. But—I live only for her. She did not know why, but that struck coldly on her ears. She did not like the way he said it.

The impulse to confide receded a little. She said, "I am afraid it can from those papers."

"But is that all you can think of? Could it not have been something else?" It was as if he were beseeching her to take that load from him, and again his sympathy swayed toward him, and she hesitated.

The bell rang. Paul, she thought. Paul is the one to confide to. She said to André, "I can think of nothing but those papers."

Pierre Roget was at the door. "Paul told me the morning," he said in a taut voice. The he saw André and his bearing stiffened. André seemed unconscious of constraint, eager to talk together, but Pierre sat silent and André quickly left. When Marte came back from seeing him out, Pierre said harshly, "Why is he still here?"

"The trains—he could not get on the day. You knew he was going?"

Pierre asked, "You trust him?"

"Naturally. He is almost of the family, Pierre," she reminded him.

"Paul does not like him."

"Paul blames him. And he blames himself because he is afraid it is his papers. The papers Jeanne-Marie got for him."

Pierre was silent a moment. "How can that be?" he pointed out. "He has not been picked up and his papers examined."

"No, but the man who made them might have been arrested for some other cause and made to confess those who had come to him. That way the SS would have Jeanne-Marie's name."

Pierre thought that over. His face was grim and set, but something like a quirk of grim humor tugged at his tight-shut mouth. "That isn't it," he said in a wry tone. "The man isn't taken."

"How do you know?"

"Because I am the man. Making papers is my job. Why else do you think I started with that printing firm? That gives me the facilities. The man in the antique shop takes the requests and makes the photographs and relays them to me. He does not say who has brought them, so I did not know it was Jeanne-Marie. But I recognized this fellow from the description. There are not too many with red-brown hair, yellow-brown eyes, the build of an athlete, a scar on the left hand. So I knew he was planning to be on his way."

(Continued on Page 93)

The Average Woman—

Marries at 26 years.
Quarrels with her husband twice during the first year of marriage.
Weighs 130 pounds.
Sleeps 26 years.
Eats three tons of chocolate and sweets.
Grows 38 yards of hair.
Talks for eight years.

—GORDON COOPER: Belfast Telegraph.

Before You Start to Can

Send for this New FREE CANNING BOOK!

You'll get Finer Flavor . . . Firmer Texture . . . Brighter Color

ERE it is! The new Karo Syrup Book that tells you how to can or freeze fruits so e finer than ever before! All by using Syrup and sugar, instead of sugar ! And see how you save sugar. What's , you can put up 20% to 30% more with your sugar. In freezing fruits, an save up to 50% of your sugar. s big, 32 page book gives complete nation on canned and frozen fruits nd on jams, jellies and relishes. It's d with recipes—every one of them , re-tested and proved for you! For every recipe, correct proportions of Karo Syrup, water and sugar are worked out in simple, easy form.

This fascinating book is free! Send for it, now. Use it for fruits that look so beautiful you'll be proud to serve them . . . and that taste so delicious they'll thrill your family.

© Corn Products Sales Company

SEND THIS COUPON NOW!

Karo Syrup,
Madison Square Station, P. O. Box 342,
New York 10, N. Y.

Yes, I want the latest word on Canning and Freezing. Please send my Karo Syrup Book—"Finer Canned and Frozen Fruits"—at once.

Name_____
(Print Clearly)

Street_____

City_____ Zone_____ State_____

"CAN DO" and KEDS go together

WHAT's going on up there? Their feet go to work to find out. Keds help the climb with traction soles and a Scientific Last that leaves toes free to grow. Jumping off the cliff —chasing the gang—Keds Shock-Proof Arch Cushion absorbs jolts.

No matter what a boy asks his feet to do—Keds help him do it better. Four generations of shoe building experience go into Keds—one reason they've always been favorites with boys. Cool breathing uppers protect his feet from excessive perspiration and they are washable just like his socks.

KEDS SHOCK-PROOF ARCH CUSHION
(in certain shoes) absorbs jars and jolts—helps avoid overstrain and fatigue. A Keds feature famous for years.

KEDS SCIENTIFIC LAST
is designed to fit growing feet. Gives straight-line toe action. Barefoot freedom with protection.

HYGIENIC KEDS are kept clean and odorless—the right way. Plain soap and water. Tub-able and scrub-able.

"U.S." Keds
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.
The Washable Shoe

Genuine "U. S." KEDS are made only by United States Rubber Company. Look for the name.

SERVING THROUGH SCIENCE

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY

ROCKEFELLER CENTER, NEW YORK

(Continued from Page 90)

Marte was preoccupied by her astonishment that Pierre was in the Resistance. "Why didn't you tell Jeanne-Marie? What you did, I mean. She thought you were against it."

"I had no right to tell. I should not have told you now. Only now nothing seems to matter. But don't tell that fellow. And I was against her doing anything. I wanted to keep her safe. I wanted to take her to the country with me. It was getting too dangerous—I'd had a tip I ought to get out."

"You should get out then. If they make her tell about the man in the antique shop who takes the orders that man may confess about you."

"I shall hide as long as I can behind my aunt's skirts," he said bitterly. "I saw her today—I came to tell you. Naturally she is not anxious—she does not like to acknowledge the prisons, the deportations. To interest her I had to tell her that Jeanne-Marie and I were engaged. I thought you should know that. You and Paul."

"Do you think, then, that she ——"

"She says she does not know what she can do. But she will make some 'discreet inquiries.'" His emphasis was savagely mocking.

"You were good to tell her that. To let her think ——"

"I haven't too much hope of her. She was chagrined that I could have a fiancée so indiscreet as to be arrested. Since the engagement has not been formally known to my family, she besought me to break it. Nice people, my family."

"All families are—divided."

It was growing near curfew time now and Pierre rose to go. It was then that Paul came. His face was pale above his black beard and his eyes dark and sunken.

Pierre said quickly, "No news?" and Paul took his head. In parting Pierre gave them an odd look, as if curiosity had wakened.

"That was bad luck," said Paul.

"Yes. He knows now you must stay all night. Unless you leave at once."

"He will think I'm leaving. I had to come."

"It is all wrong," she said in a choked voice.

"I know. But it is all we have."

What did it matter, she thought? She could not send him away to loneliness and his fears for Jeanne-Marie. She could not endure her own loneliness and fears. Since he had stayed once, let him stay again. He loved her so deeply. Was she loving him too? Or was this only yielding to love? She could not tell. It was a brief oblivion, a bitter ecstasy, a comfort, a clinging together. Two desolate human beings, driven and desperate.

One night more then, since honor was already shattered. But surely, she thought, with irony, no lover ever came to his tryst with a more riven conscience than this Paul. Never were two lovers more shocked by their love, more secretly self-condemning.

The third day in prison passed. The fourth evening. It was long past midnight when the guards came for her, and brought her to Captain Kummler again. Only the recorder was with him. The captain's face was red; he looked as if he had been at a party. His manner was sharp, abrupt, making an end of it. He made her go through her stories again, but this time without the light. Finally he brought his hand down heavily on the papers.

"Enough. We have enough. You are a traitor, Mademoiselle Fontaine. And do you know what we do to traitors? We crush them. We kill them. You are to be hanged."

He was watching to see how she would take this and she tried to make the words mean nothing. She simply looked at him and her face, clear-cut and delicate, was so composed that it seemed the face of some serene young nun.

"Do you understand?" he demanded. "You will be hanged tomorrow morning. It is already almost day, so you will be hanged tomorrow."

She asked, "May I see my friend, Madame Morel? To bid her farewell."

"No. The Reich grants no favors to its enemies."

"May I write a letter?"

"No. Your effects will be sent her."

"Thank you," she said automatically.

He looked her up and down. Something gleamed in his eyes and then they dulled, as if caution had breathed on them. "It is a pity," he said ambiguously. "But you chose to defy the Reich. You will meet the end of an enemy of the Reich. Heil Hitler!"

So she was to die, she thought, when she was back in her cell. She had not thought much about what would happen to her, at the end, but she found now that, unconsciously, she had been expecting a concentration camp. But it was to be death.

And such a death. There was a horror to being hanged. And that horror was enhanced by what the guard told her. The guard with the morning coffee, who emptied the pails, was a brutal fellow, and since he found she understood German he enjoyed saying brutal things. This morning he knew about her sentence and he told her they did not hang with a short rope, so the fall would break the neck, but with a rope long enough for the feet to touch ground, so she would slowly strangle.

"It is never sooner than five minutes," he said gloatingly.

Afterward, Jeanne-Marie said to the girl, "Five minutes is not very long." Her thoughts brushed past the horror. Her own death seemed a small thing compared with the deaths that she had caused and would cause.

The Reich was hanging her as a traitor to Germany. She was a traitor to the true France. She had trusted André. Now Marte trusted him. He would destroy Marte. He would stay close to her, make some excuse

(Continued on Page 95)

". . . and it does wonders for your posture."

Always look for the brand name "SCOTCH" and the Scotch plaid design—your double assurance of quality!

25¢ including dispenser.

© 1946 3M CO.

SCOTCH Cellulose TAPE

BRAND

"SCOTCH" is the registered trade-mark for the more than 100 varieties of adhesive tapes

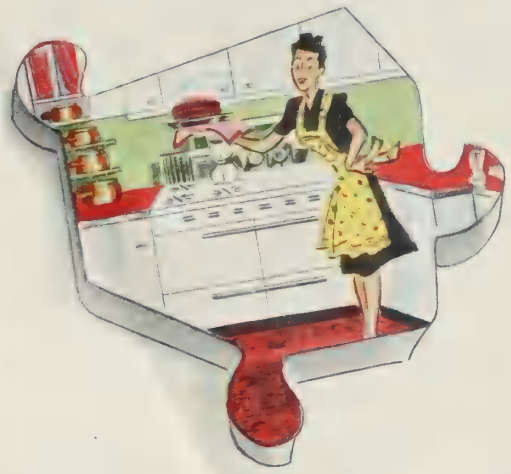
Made in U.S.A. by MINNESOTA MINING & MFG. CO. Saint Paul 6, Minn.



THE 3M COMPANY

Also makers of "3M" Brand abrasives, adhesives, and a wide variety of other products for home and industry

Copyright 1946, American Gas Association

"GARDEN" KITCHEN . . . another "New Freedom Gas Kitchen" design . . . with every work-savi feature you've ever wanted. (Even a special ventilating system to keep it cool, clean, free from u wanted cooking odors!) Use it to help plan your own modern Gas kitchen. And join the nation-wi swing to Gas—for cooking, refrigeration, water-heating, house heating and air-conditioning—toda

Put 'em together for a new kind of Freedom!

NEW FREEDOM FROM "POT-WATCHING"

. . . on the newest, grandest, Gas range you ever saw . . . with an automatic clock control that goes on and off by itself . . . does a complete meal to perfection when you're miles away! And that's just the beginning. A smokeless, quick-searing broiler turns out the juiciest steaks ever . . . flame-roasts whole chickens to melting tenderness. Even vegetables taste better and are better for you thanks to the speed and flexibility that only Gas top-burners can give. Yet a new automatic Gas range built to "CP" standards is just one of the wonders in your "New Freedom Gas Kitchen"!

NEW FREEDOM FROM "TEPID WATER TROUBLES"

. . . just turn the tap and your new automatic Gas water-hea gives you hot water galore. Even replaces the supply fa enough for those marvelous (but hot-water-hungry) auto-matic dishwashers and laundries. All for a few cents a d

NEW FREEDOM FROM MARKET BASKET "BLUES"

. . . Your new streamlined—completely silent—Gas refrigerator is not only arranged for more storage room . . . but its constant cold keeps all foods fresh longer. Economical, too . . . for there are no moving parts in the freezing system to get noisy or wear out. Order one for your "New Freedom Gas Kitchen"—right now!

GAS

AMERICAN GAS ASSOCIATION

THE WONDER FLAME THAT COOLS AS WELL AS HE

(Continued from Page 93)

not leaving Paris. He would win her idence. Marte would be careful at first— must have been careful so far or she ld already have been arrested—but he ld find a way to trap her.

hat was it Captain Kummler had said? is one takes it coolly." So there had t others before her. And there would thers after her; there would be Marte others after Marte.

he girl at the frontier—she must be in r hands now. She was one they would ly torture, for they knew she knew much. who would do her work? That escape blocked for the aviators who were to fly over the Reich with their bombs. . . . e were French, on this side, working se- y with the Allies, about the places for ings, and it might be André who would a clue to them. With his French bearing, French tongue, his wit and charm, he d do anything. He was a hideous danger. one thing, the success or failure of it, t be all-important to the war.

e poured out the story to the girl with maimed hand; she begged her to send ings. The girl said she had been two ths in that cell without seeing anyone the men who tortured her.

e said, "They let it mend a little and ——" She told Jeanne-Marie dully, u can do nothing," but Jeanne-Marie d not accept that.

e thought, There must be something! there was so little time. If only she d think. Mad plans sometimes succeeded use they were so mad. These Boche were o clever that they could not be deceived. had deceived them already, for if they thought that she was not telling all she they would have tortured her. That mmler ——

e stopped short. She had been walking nd down the cell. Now she began to walk , thinking intently of Kummler. The he had looked at her. Something in his at times ——

e thought that she conceived was so that it seemed insanity, and so hideous she dared not look deeply into it and ts ultimate horror. She could only com- erself to it, feeling she could endure any r, if only she could do one thing vital e cause she put above her life and in- ual honor.

noon guard was the one they called neak, sly, inquisitive. When he brought oup Jeanne-Marie begged him to get a age to Captain Kummler. "Tell him I something important to reveal. Some- that is for him alone." She gave the l her bag of good leather, and said, l the captain will make you a present." guard said he would see what he could Now she was in a fever of tension. She to walk again.

e girl with the maimed hand stopped nt of her. "What are you going to tell?" ne-Marie looked at her mutely. The held out her hand. "I never told one ."

nne-Marie choked out, "I plan to de- —deceive ——" e girl looked at her disbelievingly.

nne-Marie turned to the water tank took a little water for washing. She ed her compact on the stool and swirled air into a soft pompadour. She made ips brilliant. She smoothed down her and gold-colored blouse.

is might all be no use. The guard might deliver the message. The captain might e in the prison that day. And if he was he might not trouble to see her. Yet were thorough and curious, the Boche. got that message ——

e wrapped her toilet things in her towel, she had now no handbag. She smoothed air again. Fortunately she had remem- l to take hairpins. How long ago was hat night seemed in another life. Four s ago. This was the afternoon of the h day.

e door opened and two strange guards for her. She had a sudden feeling that might be taking her to her execution. for the SS were whimsical about time; but no, she was taken the way grown so familiar, past the doors where sometimes she heard sounds she tried to shut her mind to.

Kummler was alone at his desk. He lifted his head, and gave her a slow stare. "Well, mademoiselle, so your memory is improving?"

"If I could see you alone?" she said breathlessly. "This is for you alone, captain." She tilted her head and smiled as she had practiced. She did not wonder he stared. "You may tie my hands," she suggested in a whimsical voice.

"I think I can take care of myself." Deliberately he laid his Luger on the desk. He dismissed the guards.

"Thank you," she said softly, in German.

"Ah, you know German?"

He knew she did—it was in those reports he had checked so tirelessly.

"Only a little. Anyway, I cannot say this except in French. It is difficult ——"

"You have a confession to make? You have remembered some names?"

Being

By Janet Weinberger

I cannot quite believe that I am dead!
I had been young forever and I grew
More alive with every day of being.
Yet I never grew as tall as I wanted to.

To be forever reaching, on tiptoe ever stretching,
Holding the wind to my face, and my face moving Into the wind and my feet running into the hills—
I cannot quite believe that will not be again!

I gave the earth my life because it was
All that I had to give. I used to touch
My fingers to her heart till every sense
Churned with her breath, and I belonged to her.

And now I will not grow again, or run or breathe or be,
Who used to think that living was the sole essence of me!

"No, no. I am saying this because you have understanding—you will not laugh. You see, since I am to die tomorrow ——"

She could see the refusal forming for the request he thought she was to make.

She burst out, "It is dismal to spend your last night in a cell! With only memories of words of deception to mock you. I would like to know something of life before I leave it. Something exciting. I am not ashamed to say this to you, Captain Kummler," she said, looking at him directly. She was not smiling now; her face was earnest and intent. "You have understanding. You seem to me a man of—of great attraction. It is with you that I would spend this last night." He continued to stare at her, his eyes narrowing. "I cannot bear to go out of life without having known it," she flung out.

"So. You propose ——"

"It is only to you I would propose it. I feel that you—even in these strange times I have felt you were a man of breeding. I am of good family, as you know. I think I could offer you something—congenial. You Germans have not known the true French."

"Don't be too sure. We have our choice."

"Yes? Then perhaps I have not so much to offer. I am only a girl. Without experience"

"So André let you remain a virgin?"

"He was dealing with a girl of good family. He was correct."

"And you are disappointed? Perhaps what you'd really like is to spend the night with him."

"No. What I admired was his spirit—what I thought his spirit. Now I know he is only a tool. He does what you tell him. You are his masters."

"He is one of us," Kummler said, but she thought he seemed flattered. He threw out, "It would do you no good to want him anyway, for he is away for the night. He will not be back even for your hanging." His eyes glinted sardonically. "We are taking pictures for him. He has a collection."

"Of his own? Is it large?"

"One hundred," said Kummler solemnly. "He has brought one hundred to death." The figure palpably impressed him. He expected her to be suitably impressed.

This simply is not happening, she thought. And she thought, How Paul would laugh, if I told him this. Then the dreadful meaning of his words cut through her. One hundred loyal French. Dead through that spy.

"But he is not such a man as you," she declared. "He is an actor, not a soldier." She continued to look at Kummler with that desperate coquetry which made her face alight, and the man heaved himself back in his chair, looking at her like a big businessman dealing with a small commodity.

"What makes you think I want you? I could have you, if I wanted you."

"But not prettily! I do not imagine that you care for that type of thing. But if I came gladly—oh, how gladly, for a night's distraction—that would be a diversion for you. We could have supper together and be gay—you surely have some place where you could offer supper to a lady? Where we could spend a few hours?"

"And do you imagine that you can make an escape?"

"I am not so foolish." Then she smiled, with an air of confession. "I think perhaps you may like me so well you won't have me hanged the next morning."

"So that's it! You can put that out of your head now." His face grew a little sullen. "And I don't want to spend a night being importuned."

"Not a word!" she said eagerly. "I promise you. I am thinking only of the gaiety that I could have with you tonight."

He would not believe her. He would believe, as she wanted him to believe, that she would try to become his mistress. That, in her desperation, she would do everything to endear herself. He continued to stare at her, looking undecided.

She flung out, "Oh, I do want to be gay! My nature is gay. And for this last night I want to experience all the gaiety of a thousand nights."

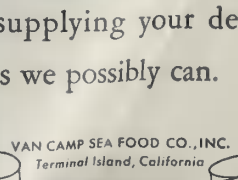
"Like Scheherazade! Only I do not want you to tell me stories." He was playful now. Then he turned sharp. "And no sniveling into the champagne."

"Ah—champagne! No sniveling. It is understood. All the gaiety there is—for my last night on earth."

Back in the cell she asked herself, Have you gone mad? Are you going to do this thing? Yes, she was mad, she thought, mad with that intense, consuming purpose, with the utter frenzy of rage that drives men straight into the face of fire, of certain destruction. She would go through with this—she felt in her tense spirit and body the strength to bear any horror that would serve her.

But if it was useless? If she gave herself to this dishonor and accomplished nothing?

It was the only chance. If she stayed in this cell she would be taken out in the morning and hanged. There would be no one to save Marte, her dear, brave Marte, dear as a sister. There would be no one to save all those others after Marte, to avenge those who had been betrayed before: that girl at the frontier, all those brave, unknown ones, risking themselves, fighting so desperately against this terror, fighting to free France. For their sakes she could do anything.



With the greatly increased purchasing power of the nation, more people want to enjoy these famous brands of quality tuna. Because they're always so delicate and delicious (and everyone knows it!) these brands melt off grocers' shelves like snow in the sun! But, we're supplying your dealer as often as we possibly can.

VAN CAMP SEA FOOD CO., INC.
Terminal Island, California

FAMOUS VAN CAMP SEA FOODS

Buy EITHER Brand.. the quality is the same

When you run across a toilet tissue that's soft as cleansing tissue, yet firm and practical, too, you've made a rare "find." That's Scott's new Soft-Weve! . . . a toilet tissue that every member of the family will like!

Cleansing tissue soft ...toilet tissue firm

But perhaps Kummler would not send for her as he had said. Perhaps the chance would not come. But she must be ready.

The girl with the maimed hand watched as she put more brightness on her lips. Her stern eyes asked, "What have you told?" When, at the beginning of evening, the guards came and Jeanne-Marie said with a strained smile, "Pray for me," the girl did not answer.

Even then she was not sure of their purpose. As before, she had a fear they might not be taking her to Kummler. But they brought her down to the prison entrance, to the room where she had been searched on her entry, and she was searched again, but less rigorously, the guards running their hands down over her clothes—as if she could have acquired a weapon in her stay here! Outside the door a long dark sedan was waiting. She was put into the back seat beside a soldier who had his Luger in his hand. On the front seat Captain Kummler, beside the soldier driver, made no sign of recognition.

Suddenly she felt very quiet and calm. The decision had been made and there was nothing to do but play her part and watch for opportunity. She felt capable of anything. The madness in which she was involved was all part of the madness which had possessed the world. A mad world. You fought fire with fire.

They were rolling along the Champs Élysées; the sky was still light, pure and beautiful. Jeanne-Marie looked out eagerly. The avenue was full of cars—French and American makes, chiefly, all holding Germans. Bicycles were weaving in and out, pedaled by home-going Parisians. On the sidewalks German soldiers strolled in twos and threes; a few had German nurses with them, or "mademoiselles." Out of a side street swung a detachment of soldiers, singing a marching song, moving with precision, like a many-legged piece of machinery. Sturdy. Invincible. When you saw those men, when you saw their equipment, when you thought of millions of men like them, millions of guns, tanks, planes, trucks, you felt it almost folly to hope. But you did hope. Fiercely. Tensely. There were the Allies, fighting near the top of Italy. Once they had been retreating in North Africa. There was Russia, lunging forward and forward. Once she had been ravaged and besieged.

America had turned the tide. Her equipment, her men. The radio told of great preparations massed in Britain. Any day now ——

A passion of longing went through her. Longing to see the day of liberation. Longing to help it by even one useful act. She had so much to atone for, she thought. So much to avenge.

THE car turned off the avenue and stopped before a maison de luxe. It was already shuttered, but the driver was instantly admitted and came out with a great box which he stowed in back, at the feet of Jeanne-Marie and the soldier. They drove on, down another avenue, and stopped again. They were before one of the dignified old mansions of that part of Paris, one apparently taken over for the residence of German officers.

Captain Kummler got out and went in and the driver followed with the box; presently he came back to the car and said to the guard, "Bring her in."

"Aus!" said the guard peremptorily and added the inevitable, "Schnell!"

Following the driver, with the guard behind her, she went through the door and mounted two flights of stairs. The carpeting was deep and soft, the stair rail delicate.

In the upper hall the captain was standing. He jerked his head toward a door that was ajar and told Jeanne-Marie, "Go in there." Then he dismissed the men.

Jeanne-Marie walked in slowly. This room was not at the front of the house, she was thinking. The captain came in behind he They were in a large bedroom, a very sp cious old room, with a marble fireplace in t wall at her right, and tall windows opposit opening on a balcony. There must be a ga den, Jeanne-Marie thought instantly. A ga den walled off from the street, for this was the side of the house. Or perhaps this was court, an inner court.

At one end of the room was a big doub bed, covered with yellow satin brocade, li the draperies on the high windows; the were fine old pieces of furniture about t room, and in the center stood a round tab with a white cloth falling to the floor. It w set for two with china and silver, and the were flowers in a silver bowl. On the tab stood a bottle in an ice cooler.

Jeanne-Marie said softly, "Ah—the cha pagne." She glanced at Kummler with smile which showed nothing but delig "This is magic, Herr Kapitan."

THE box was on the bed. Kummler we over to it and opened it. He threw out the bed a crimson-velvet dressing gov heavily furred. Beneath it, in the box, w folds of something white. He thrust the box into Jeanne-Marie's arms.

"Go in there," he said, nodding to a d beside the bed, "and get those stink clothes off. Wash yourself clean." He add "Leave the door open."

Was that to humiliate her, or did think she might drown herself in a last ment panic? She said audaciously, "N at all; we are comme il faut tonight," closed the door behind her. She was i small dressing ro with a bathroom yond. Kummler jer the door open ag grinned at her, then, as if to show was magnanimo closed it halfway.

Jeanne-Marie loo about swiftly, sea ing the shelves. razor. No poss weapon. Not eve drinking glass. He thorough, that one She heard him n ing about the bedroom, calling out or Hurriedly she got out of her clothes and them neatly near the door, her shoes be them. She turned on the water in the Hot water. Hot water for the Boche v the French had shivered in their free houses. It was delicious to be in a hot again. She used the soap luxuriously. dried her slender body on fine towels w monogram on them and a crest—some French family must have owned this h She was sorry there was no perfume, bu talcum had a sweet smell. She did not of prison now.

Outside, in the bedroom, she heard so of preparation; dinner was being broug Heavy steps. A rich fragrance of food clink of dishes, Kummler's curt direction an obsequious, "Zu befehl, Herr Kapi

She hastened to lift out the dress i box. It was a ball gown of filmy white sort for a jeune fille, full-skirted with a blue sash, and on the breast a touch of rosebuds and forget-me-nots. She won if he had chosen it in mockery or sentim perhaps he meant to send it later to a d ter or a young sister!

Her slenderness gave the dress grace she was lovely in it. Above its soft whit her face looked back at her in actual be It was incredible, she thought, the cal of that face of hers. All this was incre

She brushed her dark hair into a pompadour, remade her mouth—tha the accent this whiteness needed—and on the silk stockings and garters and the slippers which were too large—definite creation was destined for some Fräulei took one last look into the gray eyes, looked back unflinchingly.

She swept into the room, making trance. Kummler was alone there no waiter gone. A fire burned brightly

(Continued on Page 98)

The ideal which the wife and mother makes herself, the manner in which she understands duty and life, contain the fate of the community. Her faith becomes the star of the conjugal ship, and her love the animating principle that fashions the future of all belonging to her. Woman is the salvation or the destruction of her family.

—AMIEL: The Golden Treasury of the World's Wit and Wisdom.

MRS. GEORGE MURPHY—
delightful wife of the debonair screen star.

"Entrancing!"

says Mrs. George Murphy

"No wonder the smartest lips in Hollywood are cheering for TANGEE RED-RED!"

Tangee Red-Red is not only a favorite in hard-to-please Hollywood—it's the world's most popular lipstick shade. This rich, rare red is both exciting and inviting—both alluring and enduring...because Tangee's exclusive Satin-Finish means lips not too dry, not too moist...lipstick that stays on for many extra hours.

AT LAST...

A PERFECT CAKE MAKE-UP!

The perfect cake make-up is here! Some cake make-ups pleased you in one way...some in another...but the new Tangee Petal-Finish Cake Make-Up is ideal in every way! It's easy to apply—stays on for extra hours—is designed to protect your skin—and does not make you look as if you were wearing a mask.

CONSTANCE LUFT HUHN,
Head of the House of Tangee and creator of the world famous Tangee Red-Red Lipstick and Petal-Finish Cake Make-Up.

Use Tangee...

and see how beautiful you can be

VELVETY ICE CREAM

Made with no extra sugar!

EAGLE BRAND IS THE SECRET OF THIS MAGIC RECIPE!

QUICK! EASY! EXTRA CREAMY!

VANILLA ICE CREAM
(Automatic Refrigerator Method)

⅔ cup Eagle Brand
⅓ cup water
1½ teaspoons vanilla
1 cup chilled cream or evaporated milk

Set refrigerator control at coldest point. Mix Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk, water, and vanilla. Chill. Add cream or evaporated milk. Mix well. Freeze rapidly in freezing unit of refrigerator until half frozen. Scrape from freezing tray into chilled bowl. Beat until smooth but not melted. Replace in freezing unit. Before mixture is completely frozen, beat again until smooth. Finish freezing. Serves 5.

FOOLPROOF RECIPE!

GET THE ORIGINAL Sweetened Condensed Milk, Borden's EAGLE BRAND. Then you're sure of Borden's high quality! EAGLE BRAND is a big time-saver; the blending of fresh, whole milk and sugar is done for you! Foolproof recipes for wonderful ice creams, candies, cookies, in the Book of Magic Recipes. FREE! Send post card to Borden's, 350 Madison Ave., Dept. LH-56, New York 17, N. Y. ©Borden Co.

(Continued from Page 96)

hearth, for the April air was chill. The door to the balcony had been closed, the curtains drawn.

"But you have taste, my captain!" she cried admiringly. "I congratulate myself upon your taste."

In spite of that intimate "My captain," there was a touch of formality about her, an air of expecting nothing but good manners, and she counted, desperately, upon his "correctness." She hoped he would not want to discredit the social standards of the German army, even with a lady about to be hanged the next morning.

He looked very pleased with himself and with her appearance; he made her revolve before him while he surveyed her. He squeezed her narrow waist and planted a heavy kiss on the nape of her neck. But this is no worse, she thought, than if I were a girl given to some strange husband. Women have always had to endure this. Even queens. Especially queens. I must think of myself as some far away princess of France. She was growing fanciful, she thought then. Hunger was making her faint.

The food was waiting, and Kummler turned from her neck to the table. It was a rich dinner: soup, meat, potatoes, white bread and butter, cauliflower —— Oh, how faraway that night at home when the cauliflower had been cooking and Pierre was waiting! If she had listened to him then—if she had not turned to André ——

She must not think of that. Only of the moment. She must talk. What did you talk about to a German who sat across the table from you? A German who intended to go to bed with you. Food. How good the food. And the wonderful champagne.

She remembered a scene in a farce she had seen, an old dated farce but funny, where there had been a table like this, in a man's room, and two people in evening dress. That was the seduction scene. She heard herself telling Kummler about the farce, how she and some other girls had run away from school to go to it.

He told her, "You French girls are badly educated."

Her eyes laughed at him. "But you find us attractive?"

He said, "For an evening. An experience."

Mlle. Clement, her teacher, had been severe about that escapade. Mlle. Clement, to whom she had gone to find a room for André. Mademoiselle lived in a small lodging now, taking in dressmaking to eke out the remains of her savings. She had resigned from teaching after the Occupation, for fear she would be asked to teach something repugnant.

SHE had told André that, she remembered with sudden apprehension. She had told André that if ever he had to escape by the roofs, he should follow them to the corner, then follow along that street till he came to a taller house and scramble down to the nearest balcony. That belonged to Mlle. Clement. She was patriotic and would take in a refugee Frenchman. André had asked what this patriot looked like and when she told him, "Fortyish and plump," he had laughed and said he would stay on the roofs—he was particular about the Juliet to whom he played Romeo on balconies.

But he had repeated the name carefully. Mlle. Clement was another to investigate. No mouse too small for them to trap. But Marte would be the next. But tonight he was away. Kummler had said he was away. Marte was safe for tonight.

"This food is an experience," she said brightly, making a joke of Kummler's brutal words. "I had almost forgotten what such food is like."

He was curious about conditions in Paris, and her tongue ran on about them; she told humorous stories of the ordeal of queueing and he listened amusedly. He was interested in French psychology and asked questions which she answered readily but carefully. When she told him how they fled from Paris in the first days he gave a lecture on the folly of that and the g sense of collaborating.

She gave back lightly, "You cannot s am not collaborating now!"

"But too late," he said pointedly.

A LITTLE difficult to be gay, with that minder, she thought wryly. Yet she c not seem to believe in the words. In her death. Perhaps it was like that up to the moment. Until they put that rope a your neck. She shuddered then. He sa glanced at the fire which was burning brig then at her bare arms and throat. He go and put the crimson velvet robe about "More good taste, hein?" he said ch fully. He kissed the back of her neck aga his mouth was greasy—and for a fearful ment she thought the kiss would lea others, but he went back to his food. thing at a time. "Now you look gay," he her. "Red becomes you. I have dressed up, my little mistress for the night. And took my silk stockings after all." He lau uproariously at that.

She laughed with him. "I was ter afraid of you that day," she lied. "D show it?"

"Not when you went off with your he the air. Like this." He stuck his sh head in the air and pulled his features i mock-haughty look. "But when our A began to protect you from me"—he laug "What a little fool he made of you!"

"That one!" She made a delicate gri of distaste. "But he is a good actor. T must have been many like me."

"One hundred," he her again. "He is a nomenon. A natural. the women he never There was a widow. sent him off 'to sa with her own boy. walked into our arm told you, did I not, he would not be back tomorrow night? He a us to take picture should have a pictu you tonight, like this. will make him furious."

"I can imagine. What a night this is this—this elegance—this food ——"

"We should have music with it."

There was a phonograph on a side t and he put on a record.

"The love music from Tristan and Iso he announced. He listened attentively he ate. At the conclusion he said admiri "Ah, that is music. Now another love Of today." He put on Lili Marlene, the the German soldiers sang. The sweet song of a girl who waited for a boy wh marched away. His eyes grew sentime "So many at home are waiting like t He scraped up the last of his dessert, a tard with a thick sauce. He poured champagne. "But your glass is not emp

Jeanne-Marie was being careful wit champagne. She was hoping that he heavy drinker, one who grew somnolent wine, but though he drank thirstily seemed only enlivened. When he pushed his chair again she, too, rose quickly.

"Those pictures," she said. "By the nograph. Might I see them?"

She went to the table, carrying her gl her hand. She put it down behind the p graph and took up the photographs in heavy silver frames. One could strike these, she thought. If he were off g But how could she get away? Down there was singing and the low rumb talk. Servants were in the halls.

He was beside her, explaining the pic That was his wife. He had not seen h two years. This was Ernst, the five-yea And this Greta, who was three. Erns a sturdy, serious face. Greta had blond Kummler picked up a smaller snap "This is the baby, Elsa. Taken at t months. She is fifteen months old I have never seen her." He sighed an down the picture. "This is a cruel wa

(Continued on Page 100)

Little Willie rushed into the house and showed papa a new penknife he said he had found in the street.

"But are you sure it was lost?" asked papa.

"Of course it was lost," said Willie. "I saw the man looking for it."

—NEAL O'HARA: Take It From Me.

No color "come-on"

This plate holds good foods and good flavors, but something's missing—color.

More color-better eating

Add Niblets Brand whole kernel corn to the plate and you add color —but you also add a very special quality of flavor and tenderness.

Cheer-up color

See how such a simple change as adding the golden cheer of Niblets Brand whole kernel corn brightens up a meal.

d the golden color, the farm-fresh flavor "just pen" in Niblets Brand whole kernel corn? ! The answer is years of scientific experimen- ion and farming by the Green Giant. This produced an exclusive seed (D-138) from ich Niblets Brand Corn is grown. It's a ghter-eating kind of corn—so—"Look for the een Giant on the label."

Niblets whole kernel Corn

BRAND

Packed at the fleeting moment of perfect flavor

Packed only by Minnesota Valley Canning Company, headquarters, Le Sueur, Minnesota; and Fine Foods of Canada, Ltd., Tecumseh, Ontario. Also packers of the following brands: Green Giant Peas, Niblets Mexicorn whole kernel corn and peppers, Del Maiz Cream Style Corn and Niblets Asparagus.

"NIBLETS" BRAND REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. © MVCCo.

"No scolding now when we track up the floors!"

Tavern Non-Rub Wax saves work—and the lustre lasts longer! Socony-Vacuum puts a very special ingredient in its Tavern Non-Rub Floor Wax and its buffing waxes. It's the highest grade Carnauba wax—an extra hard, durable wax from the Brazilian palm tree. It helps make the lustre last longer on Tavern-waxed floors—gives a tough surface that sheds dirt—wears better, cleans easier . . . resists even water spots!

Just smooth Tavern Non-Rub Wax over linoleum, wood, rubber or asphalt tile floors. It dries to a lustrous finish in 20 minutes!

Tavern Paste and Liquid buffing waxes clean as they polish . . . bring out the beauty of wood floors . . . protect woodwork, windowsills, painted surfaces.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

3 KINDS OF WAX

NON-RUB PASTE LIQUID

Try these other Tavern Housekeeping Aids

Tavern Furniture Gloss
Tavern Paint Cleaner
Tavern Rug Cleaner
Tavern Parowax or Paraseal Wax
Tavern Dry Cleaner
Tavern Window Cleaner
Tavern Lustre Cloth
Tavern Electric Motor Oil
Tavern Leather Preserver

SOCONY-VACUUM

Typical symbol of hospitality—Mermaid Tavern, Rye, England

TAVERN HOME PRODUCTS

(Continued from Page 98)

It was a fantastic thing, to her, this German speaking of his family with such serious affection. Speaking to her, in this room, at this time. In a moment, she thought, he will be reading me their letters. Puzzled, she looked at him. He was actually sincere, lonely, full of sentiment.

She said, in a low voice, "Doesn't this make you sorry for those other children?" At his look of inquiry she said, "The Dutch—the Poles—the English."

Instantly his face was a hard face, closed and inaccessible. He said curtly, "Naturally I am sorry for children. But those people resisted us. What you do not seem to understand, mademoiselle, is that the race must pay for the crimes of its leaders."

Quickly she asked something about the little boy, but he was offended now, and a little tired of talking about his family—perhaps he found the domestic atmosphere made incongruous the approach to seduction. He put the pictures back on the table and picked up a small statue of a pagan goddess and set it on the dinner table beside the flowers.

"That is our goddess for the evening." He seemed trying for joviality, a little ill-at-ease with her good manners. "My Venus."

"She is lovely," said Jeanne-Marie sincerely. The small sculptured body was slender, yet rounded; the pose was provocative, but the face was almost austere and brooding. "Is it a replica?" she asked. "Something I should know?"

"No, it is an original. It is very good. Something I ——" He broke off and did not tell her how he had come by the statue. He said with heavy joviality, "We must drink a toast to her. To Venus."

She took the small glass of liqueur he handed her. "To Venus," she said gaily, and felt the brandy hot in her throat. Beneath the long velvet sleeve her left hand tensely made the V sign.

He emptied his glass and filled it again. Jeanne-Marie sipped cautiously, for the stuff was strong. He took a third glass, then went to the door and called an order, and a soldier waiter appeared promptly and began to carry out the dishes. Kummler said, "Heinrich, you stay at the door tonight. You understand?"

"Zu befehl, Herr Kapitan."

That must mean he was to guard the outer door, Jeanne-Marie thought. He looked stolid and stupid, but he hadn't a bad face, really. If she could steal away—plead with him —— That was nonsense. These fellows knew nothing but obedience.

KUMMLER hurried him about the clearing off. He found the champagne glass that Jeanne-Marie had set down behind the phonograph, and he handed that to Heinrich with a significant look at Jeanne-Marie that said he perfectly understood the uses of a broken champagne glass in the hands of a desperate woman.

Jeanne-Marie still held her glass of liqueur; he looked at it, but the glass was too squat and thick for breakage, and he did not take it. Heinrich had replaced the white cloth on the round table with an old-fashioned lace centerpiece, and Kummler placed the Venus very exactly in the middle of that. "So," he said with a satisfied air, and when Heinrich closed the door behind him he took off his Luger and with the same smiling knowingness put it on a tall chest of drawers, out of reach. He began unbuttoning his uniform.

FOOL

The basic meaning of this term is a bellows, a windbag, an inflated ball. In early use "fool" was a less contemptuous term than it is at present. During the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries in England it was used as a term of endearment.

In modern colloquial usage a fool seems to be a person who reigns supreme in the domain of intellectual speculation and spreads himself like a green bay tree in the various channels of moral activity. It was a fool who invented the steam engine, the telephone, printing and the submarine. He is from everlasting to everlasting.

He it is who, because he doesn't have enough sense to come in out of the rain, does not miss the world of loveliness we who keep snug and dry know nothing of.

—DAVID T. ARMSTRONG.

Jeanne-Marie said breathlessly, "One m favor. May we go out on the balcony a ment? I adore balconies. And I have a w to see a French garden—for the last tim

"It is too dark. And there is nothing to anyway. A few shrubs ——"

"Then let me look at the skies. You take your pistol if you'd feel safer," laughed.

"I don't need a pistol. But you go—like this." He opened the glass do then caught her wrists and held them bac her. His hands were like a vise.

She asked, over her shoulder, "Do think I came here to throw myself off a cony?"

He chuckled. "Perhaps you meant throw me off."

"Imbecile! What would happen to then? Besides, I want you to like me."

ONE ahead of the other they had m out between the doors to the balcony. put his arms about her now, holding close against him. She tried to make he feel nothing. Her body was unimport Nothing was important except fighting.

Her voice came tranquilly. "Look a stars."

It was a night of stars, and the sky light behind the and chimne Against its lumi pallor they see sketched in char Paris—was there anything so love the roofs of Paris looked down; th den was a pool of ness, with a dark dowed house be A small, enclosed den, she thought a high wall shutt off from the stree tried to remem there had been a in that wall bu could not reme and if there w would be locl they were so thor these Germans.

And there w way to get to th den. His arms hard about her. was no way t away, no way t herself now, e she wanted to herself to death

There was a den drone of planes overhead.

"Ours," said Kummler. "Coming from England." His voice held a huge faction. The April air blew cold on and he said, "Enough of stargazing."

There was a thickening urgency voice now. This had all been very ple very civilized, his voice said, and th played a pretty game that it would be ing to tell about, but he was reac something else. He pulled her back in room.

She had counted upon his falling But he was too astute for that, and l rose in the darkness and, since the elec was off at one, he flashed on an u electric torch that diffused a soft glow lamp, then pulled on a dressing gown a the chill of the room. The coals in th were dull embers. He went to the c drawers and reached for his Luge dropped it in a right-hand pocket. Fr bed Jeanne-Marie watched him in s questioning. He picked up the tele He called a number. Jeanne-Marie drawing the bedclothes up about her ders. While he waited for his connec looked toward her and with exaggerat ualness inquired:

"You will be ready for the car in hour?"

"The car?"

(Continued on Page 102)

Luxurious-looking, moderately priced, this charming, carved-effect carpet is Bigelow Beauvais 1764

Beauty by the yard—by Bigelow

For Sale: Imagination, inspiration, pleasure, beauty. From about $4 to $20 a square yard.

Yes, it's true. Shuttles filled with sturdy Lively Wool are flashing across Bigelow looms again . . . streaks of wonderful color.

They are the rugs and carpets of your dreams . . . bright flowers, bold modern patterns, lush carved effects, rough textures, soft velvets, new twist weaves . . . in colors to "go-with" or colors to give you the right, fresh start in decorating.

Every month more looms are working, more rugs and carpets are rolling out. Many are in the good department and furniture stores in your town now, marked by the blue-and-gold Bigelow label, your guide to floor coverings of lasting beauty.

Look at these rugs and carpets soon. New, exciting, they will give you happy bright ideas.

BIGELOW WEAVERS

Fine rugs and carpets since 1825

I SAW WORDS OF LOVE

in my boy's misty eyes

Mixed feelings of pride . . . love . . . and fear gripped my heart. Must Tommy's graduation be so wonderfully complete and yet so cruel? Had our lovable little boy suddenly outgrown his boyishness? Would his mother's tender kisses be set aside for the false pride of manhood?

Disturbing thoughts I might well have spared myself. For when Dad and I gave him his graduation gift . . . a marvelous new Moore Fingertip Pen . . . I saw Tommy was still our "boy". There in his eyes were words of love and appreciation that made our hearts sing with joy.

That look in his eyes made me feel more grateful than ever that we had used such care in selecting a gift he, himself, would prefer. I'm glad now we compared the leading pens and gave Tommy the finest . . . a Moore Fingertip Pen, of course.

MOORE *Finger tip PEN

AVAILABLE IN 8 HANDSOME COLORS. Lustre Black, Sunset Red, Vintage Wine, Starlight Blue, Woodsman Green, Eiderdown White, Autumn Pearl, Seaspray Pearl

EXCLUSIVE FLUSH-MOUNTED POINT WITH SHEATHED FEED-CHAMBER GIVES YOU:

1. Instant and continuous writing action without flooding.
2. Clog-free ink flow. No dust or dirt can get into ink feed.
3. No exposed feed surface to soil fingers or clothing.
4. Trouble-free writing with any standard ink.
5. Full selection of pen points to suit every individual writing requirement.
6. Easy cleaning after filling.

See the MOORE Finger tip PEN • $8.75 at better Department, Stationery and Jewelry stores

Matching Pen and Pencil Set, $12.50

Compare all 4 . . . and you'll give a MOORE

*TRADE MARK REG.

© 1946 MOORE PEN COMPANY, Boston, Mass.
Manufacturers of Fine Pens since 1900

(Continued from Page 100)

"To take you back. Have you forgotten your engagement for this morning?"

Of all the horrors this was the most incredible. That he should rise from embracing her, from his endearments—for he had been sentimental as well as sensual—and order her carted back to prison. She looked at him in unguarded terror. No chance. No chance for him to sleep, for her to steal away. She had endured this in vain.

He was eying her closely with a look that seemed to be licking up her emotion in greedy satisfaction. His face was a sadist's face, evil, cynical, ruthless.

He repeated, "In half an hour?"

"Yes." Her voice was faint. "May I—may I finish my liqueur?"

He nodded, beginning to speak into the phone.

She slipped out of bed, on the side away from him, murmured, "Cold," in a vague, child's voice, and drew on the red robe. She went to the table and picked up the tiny glass. She held it in her left hand. Her right had seized and withdrawn beneath the velvet folds the small bronze Venus.

Holding her glass, she moved toward him. She said, "One moment," in a beseeching voice.

He glanced at her, very pleased with his little surprise, then went on speaking. He finished his directions—the car and two guards in half an hour—and she waited till he had finished, till the receiver was back in its cradle. Then, before he could turn his head, she struck. The bronze Venus crashed against the base of his skull.

His knees buckled; he slumped forward. She sprang to the stand, to save the telephone from a fall, but his body had cleared it. She stood a moment, tense and listening, then bent over him. There was a little blood on the scalp, but no sign of much injury; he was breathing and seemed merely stunned. She did not know how long that stupor would last.

The conversation of women in society resembles the straw used in packing china: it is nothing, yet without it everything would be broken. MME. DE SALM.

She looked at his bulk and thought that she must get him to the balcony. A fall from the balcony might seem accidental, might account for the injury. It might prevent reprisals. He must not be found here. If he was found in the garden that would call attention from the room.

She did not know whether she was thinking sanely or not, but she had to act quickly. She drew out his Luger and laid it aside. She went to the French windows and set them ajar. Then she knelt by Kummler and put all her strength into getting his weight upon her back, drawing his arms forward over her shoulders and gripping them. The weight was almost more than she could bear. She staggered under it. The distance seemed interminable. She was terrified that Kummler would rouse.

She shouldered the doors open and stepped out on the balcony. It was dark now, the stars gone, the sky overcast. The blood was drumming in her ears, and now the drumming seemed all about her, outside her, roaring louder and louder—then she realized she was hearing a low-passing plane. Except for this there was silence. Utter silence. The men who had racketed below, who had come once to their door and pounded on it, must be sleeping. Everyone must be asleep, except that guard at the front door.

The balcony rail was low and she turned and backed against it, then straightened, letting the weight of Kummler slide over. She stood rigid, her back turned, listening. She had not known that the fall of a body made such a hideous rending sound, like the tearing of cloth. She wondered that no one wakened. But there were more planes overhead, back from England. Drunken sleepers did not distinguish sounds.

Tip to Women

Next to your Favorite Man you'll like MacDEES best

No buttons to break! No Ironing!

THEY'RE bound to please the man in your life—because they don't bind. Nor bunch. Nor creep. The Kut-Ups feature keeps the shirt snug, tucked in. And the Cantilever action built into the bottoms gives him that gentle, but oh, so important support! Helps a man to have that smoooth tailored look . . . helps his clothes become him.

You'll like MacDees, too. Because they're so easy to care for. The close-knit, fine-combed yarns wash in seconds—wear so long. Full elastic waistband . . . no buttons to break . . . no ironing. Today—ask for MacDees at your favorite department store.

SHIRTS: Athletic with Kut-Ups feature.

BOTTOMS: Briefs, Mid-Lengths.

Ask for Healthknit

MacDEES

Standard Knitting Mills, Inc. • Knoxville 3, Tenn.

by

THE GIRL IN THE SEAMPRUFE SLIP

YOUR SIGN IS TAURUS . . . you're deeply motional, yet business-like. You're uick to appreciate all fine things.

ND YOUR SLIP'S A SEAMPRUFE . . . trim and ailored; streamlined in rich Bur-Mil* ayons. This is your slip fashion . . . owever there's a Seamprufe for every-ne . . . every taste . . . every birthdate!

BIRTHDAY:
April 20—May 20

REMEMBER MOTHER'S DAY MAY 12

t better stores everywhere, $2 to $3

Seamprufe
TRADE MARK REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

18 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

She went back into the room, closing the French windows. In half an hour, he had said. She had no idea how much time had passed. That progress to the balcony seemed an eternity. She washed the Venus and set it on the table. She flung off her robe and pulled on her own clothes, except the coat, which she left lying there, and the shoes; these she wrapped with the white dress, the silk stockings and velvet robe. She dropped the Luger within her blouse. Then she wrapped a sheet about her, hiding the big bundle beneath its stiff folds. With the sheet over all but her bare legs she looked a creature covering nakedness.

She unbolted the door and stole down the stairs. One flight down. Snores rasped behind a closed door. Her heart jumped. Another flight. Ahead was the entrance door where Heinrich had been told to stay. Did he guard the occupants all night? Or was he waiting for that car?

Her eyes strained through the darkness and made out something more solidly dark sprawled in a chair by the door. As if nudged by the sixth sense which warns a man, the figure sat up. She breathed, "Heinrich," and pattered to him on her bare feet.

A LIGHT flashed on her, and she said, "Sh-h!" quickly and softly, then, clutching her sheet, she came nearer—he was on his feet now—and breathed, "Come quick—your captain—come to him quick!" She gasped, "He is drunk—crazy—he will destroy himself! Come—come quick!"

She turned, as if leading the way, and he came after, hurrying at the urgency of that "Come!" She stumbled in her sheet and he passed her on the stairs and she took another step and stumbled again, with a stifled moan of exasperation, and he hurried on. She had counted on that; she had hoped that a naked creature in a sheet, imploring him to go to his captain, would not seem someone to watch.

When he was ahead she cast off the sheet and fled down the stairs to the door; she dropped her bundle to struggle with the bolts, then, as the door opened, she caught up the bundle and slipped outside, shutting the door softly.

She ran a few steps down the street, but she knew that flight was hopeless, that at any instant soldiers would come tearing after her. An alarm would be sent out, the quarter surrounded. And any instant that car from the prison would roar down the street and pounce on her.

She stared at the houses beside her and chose the smallest and narrowest as least likely to be a German billet. She rang the bell and then knocked loudly. The SS always knocked like that and the occupants would not dare refuse to open to the SS. Still knocking, she unwound the velvet robe from the bundle and drew it over her—if that car came she might pretend to be a resident who had come to the door at some noise.

Someone was coming. Slow steps. A woman's voice, asking who was there. She knocked again. Oh, dear God, the car was coming. She could hear it.

The door opened cautiously and she thrust herself into the opening and shut the door behind her. She held the Luger ahead of her, straight toward a frightened old Frenchwoman with a candlestick in her hands.

"Don't make a sound!" said Jeanne-Marie fiercely. "I am hiding from the Boche."

The woman's jaw fell open. She was a bent old woman with a dark robe over a woolen nightdress and a knitted scarf about her head. Another woman was coming down the stairs, holding her candle high to see.

"Sister?" she quavered.

"Not a sound!" said Jeanne-Marie. "No one will hurt you if you are quiet. But come here."

Uncertainly the woman advanced. Jeanne-Marie gestured them together. They peered fearfully at her in the candlelight; she knew she made a mad figure, with her pistol, her disordered hair, her red robe over bare feet. She did not wonder their candles shook.

A few doors away the car had come to a stop. She heard the brakes screech. Her

(Continued on Page 105)

Pretty Penny Edwards, Conover cover-girl, adores the jasmin bouquet of Dulcinea

Fine American Perfume— 3.50 plus tax

Leigh Perfumes

Here's to the day...Have a Coke

...friendly refreshment adds to the fun

A surprise shower for the bride-to-be. A time just made for friends alone—for fun, laughter and good feeling all around. It's one of those gay occasions that wouldn't be quite the same without the sparkling refreshment of ice-cold Coca-Cola. The very invitation Have a Coke bubbles with the friendliness of Coca-Cola itself. It says I'm mighty glad you're here. That's why frosty bottles of Coca-Cola belong in your refrigerator, offering the friendly pause to brighten the most important part of home —the people in it.

Serve Coca-Cola at home

Coke = Coca-Cola

"Coca-Cola" and its abbreviatio "Coke" are the registered trad marks which distinguish the pro uct of The Coca-Cola Compan

COPYRIGHT 1946, THE COCA-COLA COMPANY

(Continued from Page 103)

mind saw the guards going into the house, meeting the confusion within.

"You are French—you must hide me," she said desperately. "I am out after curfew. I must hide till morning."

The older one's mouth moved a moment before she could find words. "Go away," she said mumblingly. "Go away."

The other spoke up, quavering but angry, "We have nothing to do with you! Go out of our house!"

Perhaps the pistol had been a mistake. She had frightened them to antagonism. But she could not trust to their mercy—these old souls did not look capable of generous risk.

SHE made her voice hard. "I tell you I am going to hide here. If you make a sound you will be sorry for it. I am quite desperate. But if you are quiet no harm will come to you. I will go when the curfew is off. No one will know."

"Madame?" A third figure appeared from the back of the house, carrying another candle.

"Be quiet. Come here," said Jeanne-Marie.

"She has a pistol," said one of the scared old voices.

The third woman was stout, middle-aged, with a peasant's broad face. She had taken time to dress, and over her dress she wore a knitted sack. She stared curiously at the revolver in Jeanne-Marie's hand and at Jeanne-Marie herself and crossed herself. The two others began to whisper to her, but Jeanne-Marie stopped that.

"Where is your telephone?" she asked suddenly. "Perhaps I could arrange ——"

When they said eagerly, "In there," she told them:

"No, we will not go near that telephone. You will not move."

The car had started again. Now steps passed the house. Heavy steps in cadence. Guards searching the streets. They would be looking for a girl in a black skirt and a gold blouse or in a red-velvet robe. She must not look like that girl.

It was cold in the hall. She had them sit down and she tucked her bare legs under her robe. The sisters pulled their wraps tighter. The maid folded her arms across her broad chest. She looked the most resourceful and Jeanne-Marie watched her carefully. Every half hour a clock deep in the house struck melodiously.

Jeanne-Marie was afraid the candles would burn out, so she extinguished two. They were short candles. One by one they burned out. Then it was growing light. There was a window on the stair landing, and it sent down a gray light.

The clock struck five.

"In half an hour I can go," said Jeanne-Marie. "But not like this. You must give me an old coat, a kerchief and a basket. For that I will give you this velvet robe. You can see it is valuable. It is worth more than an old coat, a kerchief and a basket."

They looked at her suspiciously. "It is a trap," the older one mumbled.

"No. And it is not stolen. It was a gift. But you had better not display it for some time. Sell it secretly."

They whispered together, then the younger one told the maid to fetch the things asked for. "To get this one out," she said, with bitterness.

Jeanne-Marie said, "No. We will all go. We keep together."

She got up and the sisters got up, stiffly, with groans, and the maid helped them. Then Jeanne-Marie herded them, like sullen sheep, up the stairs to the maid's room—where they selected a worn brown coat and a kerchief. Then down the back stairs to the kitchen. Reluctantly the maid handed over a market basket.

Jeanne-Marie put on the coat. It was big and shapeless. She dropped the Luger in the pocket. She put on her shoes, rubbing her chilblains. She parted her hair and pinned it in a bun, and tied the kerchief under her chin. She rolled the white dress tightly and crammed it in the market basket and covered it with a piece of paper she took from the kitchen.

"Remember—you have harbored me," she said. "They will never believe you innocent. Never. But you will come to no harm unless you talk." Then she looked at the maid. "It would be better if you walked a little way with me."

"No." The woman looked back at her with peasant finality. "I do not budge."

"I think you are right. Now please show me the service door."

In the street were already other women with market baskets like herself making their way to the shops in the Parisian's daily quest for food. Most of them were maids, for this was a well-to-do neighborhood.

Jeanne-Marie caught up to one and said, "Pardon me—I think you dropped some money. I heard a sound."

THEY began to search; then the woman counted her change and said she had lost nothing. Still, they looked a little longer, and when they went on they walked together. Two women with kerchiefed heads and baskets on their arms. The German soldiers glanced at them and let them pass.

The woman took her place before a shop and Jeanne-Marie walked on. Sometimes she stopped and joined a queue. Before it came her turn she went away. Where should she go? Not home. Not to Paul. Not to any of her friends. That would be death for them and death for her. The only safe place for her was with Mme. Chaffours. If she could reach that house she could be smuggled out by the Underground.

But she was not going to Mme. Chaffours. What she had done that night she had not done to save herself.

She walked toward Les Halles, a logical destination for a woman with a big market basket. She did not dare take the Metro, but trudged along the less frequented streets. The great markets, once so bustling, thronged with laden carts, were now almost deserted, only a few carts creaking in and those mobbed before they could come to a halt. Everywhere were the bent scavenger crea-

"Donald's asleep—now give me the story straight."

FRESH!
THIS FAMOUS
BRAND OF CREAM CHEESE IS GUARANTEED FRESH...BY KRAFT

Fresh idea for dessert

Just crackers and jelly, and a generous portion of this rich, fresh-tasting cream cheese! So easy—and the folks will love it!

But be sure to get genuine Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese. There's a difference in texture you'll notice at once. And such a difference in taste! Kraft makes this famous brand of cream cheese fresh every day—hurries it to food dealers under refrigeration. The cream cheese marked Philadelphia Brand on the package comes to you with Kraft's guarantee of freshness!

HUNGRY FOR CHEDDAR? Watch for these two famous Kraft cheddar varieties: "Old English" with the wonderfully sharp flavor, and medium-mellow Kraft American.

Copr. 1946 by Kraft Foods Company

The World's Favorite Cheeses are made by the Men and Women of KRAFT

WHY BE A KITCHEN CONTORTIONIST?

Why perform double-bends and twists to reach back-row foods?

Twice as Much Food to the Front

COMPARE a Crosley with any other refrigerator and notice the one important difference — the Crosley Shelvador* puts twice as much food to the front, within easy reach.

OPENING the Shelvador* is like opening the doors of two ordinary refrigerators — double convenience—only half the chance of tipping and spilling.

SAVES TIME, too, because there's 10 square feet of front row food exposed. Shelvador* is closed sooner—saving electricity.

Only Crosley SHELVADOR* doubles your convenient front-row space

OPENING the SHELVADOR* is like opening the doors of two conventional refrigerators—twice as much food in front, within easy reach.

Every modern improvement is embodied in the new better looking, better performing Crosley—plus the exclusive SHELVADOR* that saves so much food shuffling and back-row contortion work. Your nearby Crosley Dealer will gladly demonstrate it.

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

CROSLEY

THE CROSLEY CORPORATION, CINCINNATI 25, O.

REFRIGERATORS • HOME FREEZERS • KITCHEN SINKS AND CABINETS • RANGES • LAUNDRY EQUIPMENT • RADIOS RADIO PHONOGRAPHS • FM • TELEVISION • SHORT WAVE ELECTRONICS • RADAR

HOME OF WLW—"THE NATION'S STATION"

RANGES

HOME FREEZERS

LAUNDRY EQUIPMENT

KITCHEN SINKS AND CABINETS

RADIOS AND COMBINATIONS

tures, clutching at a wilted leaf in a gutter. Seeing her filled basket, women demanded if she had something to sell and reached to lift the paper. Uneasy at the interest, she wandered away.

In the Rue Montmartre she found a café that seemed all right—no Germans there. Two drivers and a French gendarme. The coffee was a bitter brew of acorns, but it was hot. Sipping it, she thought that at this time, if she had stayed in the cell, she would be dead. Her throat would not be swallowing. She had money in her blouse, money she had been allowed to keep in prison because she had not yet been sentenced, and got it out carefully so as not to show the color of the blouse—such little things seem important when you are hunted. She could not buy bread, for she had no bread coupons.

From the Rue Montmartre a lane led to the north portal of St. Eustache's. She went in the church and knelt in one of the chapels. She felt terribly tired. Her legs throbbed, her whole body ached, but her head felt light and airy as if at any moment it would float off from the heavy body the way soap bubbles had floated from her pipe when she was a child.

She rose from her knees and went out. She went on and on, toward the west now, taking the less important streets. She had a long distance to go. But she had time. She did not want to come to those streets where she might be recognized while it was still light.

Several times she went into churches to rest. Once she fell asleep, her head on her hands that were clasped on the back of the pew before her; she woke when she felt herself slipping to the floor. After that, she felt better.

But now she began to be teased by uncertainty as to whether Mlle. Clement would be in or not. If not, she must make another plan. She began to hurry. She counted the streets. Now she was at the building. Luckily there was no concierge to face. The stairs were empty. Five flights up. Those above five flights were allowed to use the elevator to ascend, but not descend. The Boche were watchful of that current.

Halfway up a man came out a door and Jeanne-Marie flattened herself humbly against a wall as he passed. She went on up. The fifth-floor landing was too dim to see the name on the little card over the bell, but she had counted the flights and rang. The door opened on a chain.

"WHO is it?" Mlle. Clement's voice revealed the apprehension all French knew at sudden callers.

"It is I—Jeanne-Marie Fontaine."

The door closed, then opened. "But enter—enter!" said Mlle. Clement cordially.

Jeanne-Marie stepped in and closed the door. "You are alone?"

"Yes, quite. I am so glad ——" The welcoming voice broke off and Mlle. Clement's round brown eyes fixed with some astonishment on the kerchiefed head and shapeless coat. Then they touched on the basket and glanced tactfully away. Jeanne-Marie knew the other thought it contained food from the country and that this odd costume was some country wear.

She was sorry to dispel the hope. She said painfully, "I must ask you for a little help."

"But come in. Let us come where we can talk." Mlle. Clement picked up the small lamp she had set down to open the door and carried it into a room off the entry. She sat down opposite the girl, a middle-aged woman with a look of great good sense. "Now what is all this about?" she asked, as if Jeanne-Marie were still one of those students. "Are you in some difficulty, my child?"

JEANNE-MARIE thought of the words that she could say. She thought how incongruous and melodramatic they would sound: "I was to have been hanged this morning. Last night I slept with a German who was to take pictures of my hanging. I threw him from a balcony and killed him." Instead she said merely, "Yes. It was not kind of me to come here. But I do not think I was seen. Only by an old man on the stairs. And he did not see my face. But if you are ever questioned, you must think of someone who delivered something to you today."

The face regarding her turned a little pale. "Is it—truly serious?"

"Yes. It is better you do not know about it. When I go away I shall try not to be seen. And I shall not stay long."

"I have only one bed—that couch you are sitting on," said Mlle. Clement practically, "but you are welcome to it."

"Oh, I shall not stay all night. But you are very good to offer."

"I am not very good. I am like all the rest, struggling to keep alive. But for a friend, courage is necessary." She was silent a moment. "Yes, then it is indeed necessary."

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Lines to a Little Girl

By Ruth Mary DuBois

Run—with your brown hair flying,
Glossy in the sun,
Run—like a young colt trying
Its legs for fun.

Be one with the warm sweet air,
Wear the gentle wind;
Take care, take care
Of every nimble hour
And every meadow flower.
Gather the world in your two slim arms
And hold it there.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

"I only want to stay till it is dark, and it is almost dark now. Then please leave me here. So you will know nothing. But don't lock the window. Only do not worry, if I do not come back. I may have gone—another way."

Mlle. Clement looked toward her window and little balcony, then at Jeanne-Marie. "But this does not make sense. If you are going away, why not down the stairs?"

"It has to be this way. Truly, it has to be."

There was finality in that tense voice. Mlle. Clement heard it; she saw the desperation in the girl's white face. She said, "I will make you some tea."

"If I could wash?"

When Jeanne-Marie came out of the bathroom the tea was ready. She drank it gratefully and ate the bread and the morsel of meat.

"I am ashamed," she said, lifting apologetic eyes. "But I have not eaten since last night. And I must confess that I have stolen three of your matches."

"It would be better if you would lie down. And put out of your head all this nonsense about clambering over roofs." That was the tone which used to say, "Whatever would madame your mother think of this escapade, Mademoiselle Fontaine?" and Jeanne-Marie smiled faintly.

"I must ask you to do one thing more. If I do not come back." She gave Paul's address and the address of Marte's ration board. "Please go to either of them and say, 'The Alsatian is a spy.' But do not telephone. I have not dared to telephone. They listen."

Now her two dear ones would be warned, she thought. But the warning would not save them if Marte had made any confidence. Nor save the others.

Then she got up. "Please leave the room a moment," but Mlle. Clement told her firmly, "If you are climbing those roofs you are going to put on my rubber-soled shoes—I have a pair. I was provident. And they are not too small for you." Mlle. Clement had always been proud of her small feet. "Here they are," she said. "Put them on." Jeanne-Marie put them on and tied them tightly.

(Continued on Page 108)

A DINNER PARTY —EVERY DAY

We're party people, Jim and I. And our Towle Sterling — with its rich luster and exquisite design — makes every dinner a party . . . a real occasion. We're glad we waited for Towle Sterling — it adds so much beauty to everyday living.

We're glad we waited for Towle Sterling for another reason, too — it brings an heritage of lasting beauty. We know our Towle service will be more lustrous, more beautiful than ever at our most important party — on our Golden Wedding Anniversary.

• • •

Towle Sterling is solid silver. Yet you will find your investment in a Towle service not at all expensive. See the exquisite patterns now at your jeweler's — and start your very own Towle Sterling service today!

For Gracious Living — new Towle book of Sterling silver — its selection and care, with modern table settings. Write to: TOWLE SILVERSMITHS, Dept. J-5, Newburyport, Mass.

YOU'RE NEAT...YOU'RE NIMBLE...

you're Twice as Smart with Vitality SHOES

Yes, Vitality Shoes are twice as smart. For lovely, feminine styles. And for that gentle, heel-gripping fit. What's more, Vitality quality proves itself in enduring beauty. At distinguished stores throughout America.

$6.95

Complete Range of Sizes and Widths
Vitality Open Road Shoes for Outdoor and Campus Wear, $5.50 and $6

Vitality Shoe Company, Division of International Shoe Company, St. Louis, Missouri

(Continued from Page 106)

The other continued, "And I am going to hold a chair for you. That is what I did for the neighbor's boy who went up after my little cat. If anyone sees us I shall say you are after the cat."

She took the lamp to the kitchen and closed the door, then placed a small chair on the balcony. It was dark now. She held the chair while Jeanne-Marie, who had taken off her brown coat, climbed to the top of it, then crawled up on the adjoining slope of roof. Then the older woman mounted and passed up the basket as Jeanne-Marie had asked.

She made one last objection. "Why do you cumber yourself with that basket?"

Jeanne-Marie said, "It is necessary."

It was very eerie, to be on the roofs in darkness. Jeanne-Marie had always felt insecure in high places. On the platform of the Eiffel Tower she had clung to her father. Now she clutched at chimneys and felt her way from one cluster of chimney pots to another, crouching, not to offer a silhouette to any who might be looking.

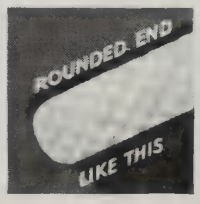
To make your way along the level top of old mansards is not difficult when eyes grow accustomed to the night. She reached the corner, then turned along the roofs of the adjoining street. This was the street where André lived. She was preoccupied by the fear she might not know the right house. It was the third house from the end.

She crept about, counting chimney stacks; she leaned over on her stomach to scan the outlines of the dormer windows below. She could not be mistaken, she reassured herself. It was the fifth dormer from that side. That house was narrow with only one window. To go down with the basket was difficult. She hesitated, took out the blue sash and tied the basket to her waist, in back. She thought, This is fantastic. But to back down those slopes with a basket was only a little more fantastic than to back down without one.

Now she was on the top of the dormer and cautiously she lowered herself down its side and crept about to the window. There was still a projection of roof between her and the eaves. The room was dark—but that might be because the curtains were drawn. The casements were fastened. Clutching at a projection, she put her weight against the center and the latch gave. The two casements parted and swung in, and she half pitched, half leaped inside, tangling with the curtains, putting a hand within her breast to draw out the Luger. But there was no sound in the room but the sound of her own breathing.

Slowly her heart quieted, but she held the pistol in her hand as she felt of the couch beside her—empty—then groped to the door—locked but not bolted. She put on the bolt. She went back to the window and closed it, and drew the curtains carefully. Then she began tiptoeing about the room, feeling for a candlestick—she moved lightly, not to disturb the occupants below, but she told herself that they would merely think the owner of the room was back.

It took one of her three matches to find the candlestick. The candle was short, but in its light she discovered an electric lantern, such as Kummler had lighted before he telephoned, with a transparent top to which the light could be switched so it shone like a mild lamp. They had good gadgets, these Boche. The electricity might be on here, but she did not pull the cord of the one bulb, for fear light might show under the door or through a crack in the curtains.



For a moment now she looked about her. This was the room she had found for André, the refugee, a man who had never existed. Here they had all been, the night of his little dinner, André so generous, so merry. She had sat on this couch and he had put cushions behind her; she had worn her red dress and a red flower in her hair and every time she looked up, he was looking at her with those intent eyes she had found exciting. They had been in high spirits. Paul had looked worried at their jokes. About the convenience of the roofs. Marte had made an omelet with the eggs they thought he had found in the black market. German plenty.

FIBS are so easy to use!

...so Comfortable and so Safe!

Whenever you buy tampons, remember that FIBS give you two features that are extremely important:

Rounded End. Yes, FIBS have smooth, gently rounded ends that are bound to make insertion easy—you can see at a glance. And your first experience with FIBS proves it's true!

Quilting. FIBS are "quilted" to keep them from fluffing up to an uncomfortable size, which might cause pressure, irritation, difficult removal.

This quilting also prevents cotton particles from clinging to delicate internal membranes—a feature fastidious women always appreciate!

*Next time you buy tampons be sure to ask for FIBS

*T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat.

Is yours an Allergic Skin?

In cosmetics, too, physicians know best. Ask your doctor about AR-EX Cosmetics. At leading drug stores. Write for FREE BOOKLET: "New Facts on Skin Care"

Rx AR-EX Cosmetics FOR SENSITIVE

AR-EX COSMETICS, INC., 1036-AE W. Van Buren St., Chicago

LETITIA FINE KNITTING YARNS

100% VIRGIN WOOL

SEND FOR FREE COLOR CARD

CHESTNUT HILL YARN CO., BOX 4027

CHESTNUT HILL, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

"Of course you know about Midol BUT HAVE YOU TRIED IT?"

Be fair with yourself! And this very month prove to yourself that the natural pain of the menstrual process can be relieved simply by taking Midol.

You see, Midol tablets are offered specifically to relieve functional periodic pain, and their action is both prompt and sure. Prompt because relief is generally obtained in a few minutes. Sure because three fast-acting ingredients work in these ways to bring welcome relief: Ease Cramps—Soothe Headache—Stimulate mildly when you're "Blue".

Let Midol keep you brighter. Take it confidently and see how comfortably you can go through those trying days. Ask for Midol at your drugstore.

MIDOL

PERSONAL SAMPLE—In plain envelope.
Write Dept. K-56, Room 1418, 41 East 42nd St., New York 17, N.Y.

CRAMPS - HEADACHE - "BLUES"

Scoldy Lox
BOB PINS
NEVER LET YOUR HAIR DOWN

• The pins with a lasting grip
• Smooth finish inside and out

The scene faded. The room was empty. Hurriedly she took off her skirt and blouse. There was a basin and cold water in a pitcher and she washed her grimed hands and legs and drew on the white dress. It was badly creased and she shook out the folds impatiently and arranged the blue sash. She drew on the silk stockings and tied on the white tennis shoes. They looked, she thought, a little like a ballerina's dancing shoes. She looked a little like a ballerina herself in that gauzy dress.

She brushed out her hair and swept it up into a pompadour. It hung in a dark cloud over her forehead. She made her mouth vivid. In the soft light there seemed no tiredness in her face, only feverish brilliance.

But if André should not come? He might not come for days. This place was merely for his character of refugee; he must have a very luxurious room somewhere like that of Kummler's. Perhaps he lived in the same house. But she thought not; she had a feeling that André would continue to use this room. He had established himself here; he would want to work quickly on Marte's distress. He would come.

She found a piece of paper and a pencil and put them on the table. She moved the light to the table's far side, then switched it off.

Now there was nothing to do but wait. She stretched out on the couch and her body rested, but her mind would not rest; it raced incessantly. It went over and over the things she had planned while she had knelt in those churches that day. So far she had had luck. But what was to come was going to be difficult. It might be folly to delay, to contrive that letter. But there were reprisals to think about. If there was any way to circumvent

---

The average man could accomplish twice as much in this world if he did not spend half his life in telling a woman how to do things.
—HELEN ROWLAND: This Married Life: (Robert M. McBride & Co.)

---

reprisals —— She could think of no other way. She would have to take the chance.

Now her thoughts strayed. That girl at the frontier—bitter anguish to think of her. She thought of the mother that Kummler had told her about, the mother who had trustingly sent André out toward freedom with her own son. Three ghosts out of a hundred dead. Dead through him. With the women he never fails. Kummler had said that. And now Marte. Sweet, unsuspecting Marte. She felt as if an iron claw was gripping her heart.

Somewhere in this world, she thought, there were safe, happy people, taking life and freedom for granted. But not in France. Not anywhere in Europe, Hitler's Europe.

Suddenly she remembered a scene of the past. She remembered it so vividly that she felt she smelled the strong scent of the raspberries, ripe and pungent on the laden bushes. She had gathered a skirtful and come running to her mother and father. This was in her grandmother's garden in the country.

Her mother had looked with dismay at the stained skirt. "Henri, will this little wild thing ever get any sense?"

Feet tramping under the window. A heavy rumbling of trucks. Memory leaped back to the dark roads, on that flight from Paris. She could feel her mother's hand gripping hers as they sat hour after hour in their car, stalled behind wrecked trucks, wedged in by other cars, frantic people on foot fighting their way forward. Her father had not wanted to leave Paris. But her mother had been terrified. "We must save this child of seventeen."

They had always wanted to save her from harm. Her mother and father. Paul. Pierre. Pierre Roget had wanted to take her to the country. He was probably there now. She had not been kind to Pierre. He had offered her a true love. And she had been beguiled.

She could not undo what she had done. She could not bring back the girl at the frontier. But from this bitter experience had come the chance to save others. To save

Only one soap gives your skin this exciting Bouquet

Discover what gives so many popular girls their fragrant appeal!

Do you long to stir his senses with your sweetness? Do you want your person to express "the fragrance men love?" Then learn this secret popular girls have followed for seventy-six romantic years. Bathe with Cashmere Bouquet Soap, the soap with the fragrance men love. This enticing scent comes from a secret wedding of rare perfumes, far more costly than you'd expect to find in any soap. Let dainty Cashmere Bouquet Soap make you more exciting. Bathe with it every day. Lovely for your complexion, too.

10¢
3 CAKES FOR 27¢

Cashmere Bouquet

ADORNS YOUR SKIN WITH THE FRAGRANCE MEN LOVE

CASHMERE BOUQUET

WITH BEST WISHES

FROM me TO myself

When you buy crystal for yourself, you will have something to share with family and friends . . . something to brighten your world wherever you are. For informal occasions, there is nothing nicer than Fostoria's charming antique patterns . . . American and Colony. Every piece is handmade by skilled craftsmen. They're amazingly inexpensive but lovely to live with.

Fostoria

FOSTORIA GLASS COMPANY
MOUNDSVILLE, WEST VA.

them for France. She must be quick and careful.

Now she heard steps coming up. Her heart began to hammer. They were coming up this last flight.

Paul had slept but a short time when he woke, in the nightmarish terror of the dream. It was always the same dream—the dead girl under a sheet, and he beside her, feeling a fearful guilt. The sense of horror and guilt stayed with him, though he knew he was awake, fully awake, and he examined it, with his physician's mind, wondering why he should feel guilt in the dream since he had felt none when the girl died, only distress that he had not been able to save her. He had not been to blame. She had come to him too late.

There had been something about that girl's death, some implication, which had haunted him. In the beginning it had associated itself with Jeanne-Marie—undoubtedly because he was worrying about that sudden rash love of hers. How mild that worry seemed now!

But the dream had nothing to do with Jeanne-Marie. He seemed quite definitely to know that. She was not the girl under the sheet. That girl was blond, with blue eyes like Marte.

Marte. Marte, who lay beside him, sleeping. But Marte was safe, alive. Yet it was for Marte he felt this terror, laden with heavy guilt. Guilt because of Guy? Yes, he felt that. He had never pretended to himself that he was not ashamed to the bone because of Guy. The prisoner husband. The absent friend. He knew that Marte was bitterly ashamed too. Neither of them had intended this unfaithfulness. Their anguish for Jeanne-Marie had broken down their guards.

Was it because he had swept Marte into this disloyalty that he felt guilty toward her? That was part of it. But there was something more. A gnawing worry. And now, suddenly, he knew what it was. The revelation exploded in his brain. Of course, he thought dazedly, of course. That was the fear, deep buried in his subconscious mind.

The thing was incredible. He, a physician, not to have given thought. This was the fifth night now. His fault was past belief. They had behaved like children. Like innocents. But they were not children. Not innocent. Only tongue-tied. Unwary. This would be the price, then. That he would have to destroy his child and hers. This would happen. This would be exacted.

But Marte would not die. He told himself that resolutely. She would not be like the dead girl, slinking to some quack. This terror was warning. He would speak frankly to her. Perhaps it was not too late.

And to the premonition of disaster was added another premonition—and this was utter certainty. When he and Marte talked of their relationship it would end. It had never been love for her, only loneliness and longing. They had tried to comfort each other. This was the end. This was the last time that she would lie beside him like this. He would have to go on, as best he could, pretending this had never been, both of them pretending.

Outside the house André's car stopped. André was asleep on the back seat. He sat up, looked at the luminous dial of his wrist watch. "Too late," he decided. He told the driver, "Go on."

If he went in now, he could cook up some story about being caught out late after curfew and ask Marte for refuge, but the thought of that role bored him. He was too sleepy. Marte could wait. Tomorrow night would do. It would not take long, now that she had begun to confide in him.

She had told him that he must not blame himself for Jeanne-Marie's arrest, that it could not have been caused by the man who forged the papers, for that man had not been arrested. She had just found out who the man was, she said, but she wouldn't say how she had found out or give the man's name. But she was very positive the man had not been caught. André had grinned to himself

May-time is
MUFFIN TIME

MAKE THEM WITH DUFF'S

Light, fluffy muffins will be as welcome as those gay May flowers! They're wonderful with crisp salads and light spring meals.

Quick!
Convenient!

JUST ADD WATER -that's all!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

A PRODUCT OF AMERICAN HOME FOODS, INC.

Vaculator

makes good meals better!

equipped with DUTCH CLOTHLESS FILTER

VACULATOR · CHICAGO, 6

PLEE-ZING
GROCERIES

BUY

Famous Foods and Household Products all under one name at your local grocer

Plee-Zing, Inc., Chicago 3, Ill.

lamburger Hint!

French's
'ORCESTERSHIRE
BEFORE AND
FTER COOKING

t adds flavor—not just bite!

dd French's Worcestershire to the ooked hamburger—but also, be-ore cooking, pour (and we mean hat literally) French's Worcester-hire Sauce over the raw patties. llow the sauce to sink well into he meat, then place on griddle nd cook as you would plain ham-urger. Delectable, *delicious!

-notch quality at HALF the PRICE

ESTROS OF THE SALAD BOWL

blespoon wine vin-r, 3 tablespoons npeian Olive Oil, ' and pepper to taste, h of Tarragon, dash chives. Blend ingre-nts thoroughly, chill ore serving.

ger Stearns the 1-2-3 Club

The headliners of stage, screen and dio and the "ultra" crowd flock to ger Stearns' 1-2-3 Club in New rk's smart "east fifties." They come hear Mr. Stearns at the piano and to vel in the fine food he supervises. Try his true French Dressing recipe. se Pompeian Olive Oil—the fine and re olive oil of delicate flavor, ravish-g aroma and clear golden color. It's HE olive oil to use, as so many fam-us chefs will tell you. Pompeian Olive il Corp., Baltimore 24, Maryland.

POMPEIAN
Great Name in Olive Oil

FEDERAL
Practical
HOUSEWARES

T'N PEPPER SETS

FRUIT JUICE SERVER

SYRUP SERVER

en though the demand is far greater than the pply . . . remember that stores are doing their best to intain a stock of these popular, practical items for you!
DERAL TOOL CORP., CHICAGO 12 ILLINOIS
T DEPARTMENT, HARDWARE, 5c to $1 STORES

at that. He knew perfectly well the man had not been caught—Gretchen had been hanging about L'Oiseau Noir for four or five days now with a copy of Mein Kampf in her hands and the man had not shown up. He must have other hangouts. It was quite possible that Marte knew other ways of finding him. It would be fun to catch him through Marte, before Gretchen got him.

He would tell Marte he needed papers for a fellow Alsatian. He had already talked of meeting a fellow refugee in Paris. Now he would say that the man had been captured and got away and was hiding in Paris. He needed new papers.

"Stop here," he told the driver. Always he got out several blocks from his lodging. A refugee does not drive up in a smart car with a Nazi emblem. He got out, carrying a small bag, and stood, lighting a cigarette, until the car drove off. No one was in sight. He walked toward the house.

Very interesting, that family he had been with. Very, very interesting. The brother had been a naval officer. He was certainly in touch with London. They were important people, people that London would trust. He smelled something about landings. That sister with the long eyelashes was in on it.

Such fools, these French. All this passion for la patrie and la victoire. You'd think they'd learn. The thing to do was to be on the winning side.

But these patriots kept life from being dull. This was a good life in Paris. Very amusing. Much more cheerful than the Russian front. Oh, much.

At the sound of the steps Jeanne-Marie slipped to the door and softly unbolted it. She flattened herself against the wall, hoid-

Who is happy? The one who lost his fears and kept his self-respect.
—GROVE PATTERSON:
Quoted in Capper's Weekly.

ing the Luger in her hand. She remembered to throw off the safety catch.

A key turned in the lock. The door opened and the light of an electric torch made a circle of brightness on the floor, then on the table. André walked in, shut the door and set down a small bag. He went to the table and switched on the lantern lamp there. The glow from the glass top sent out a soft light. He dropped his torch back in his pocket.

Jeanne-Marie made some movement. André turned like a cat, one hand at his hip.

"Hands up!" she said in a taut voice. "Stay there! Hands up!"

Slowly his hands went up in front of him. He looked at her, this sudden apparition in the astonishing white dress, pointing the Luger at him, and for the first time in their acquaintance she saw a flash of shock in his face. From the extreme surprise she knew that he had thought her dead. Hanged this morning. He had not telephoned, then, since his return. He knew nothing of last night.

Now he began, deliberately, to smile. He said, and he sounded genuinely amused, "What a ferocious little voice!"

"Captain Kummler would not like it if I had a warmer welcome," she said, with slow distinctness. "I promised him the reception would be extremely cool. Don't lower your hands or it will be short."

His hand stayed motionless. "Kummler?"

"Yes. He arranged this." Nazis would believe anything of each other. He could puzzle on that. She said harshly, "Your color is coming back. Did you think I was a ghost?"

"Did I turn pale? You must admit —— But I thought you a charming ghost, Jeanne-Marie. A very—elegant one."

"Your captain bought me this. He is clever, that one. You did not know why he sent you out of town, did you?"

He said nothing to that. But his eyes were narrowing thoughtfully.

"Walk over to that wall," she told him, "and turn your back to me. Put your hands

(Continued on Page 115)

Libby's is picked at PEAK FLAVOR

CHECKS that have come every year for 100 years

SINCE its founding 100 years ago, the Pennsylvania Railroad has paid to its employees, stockholders and bondholders approximately twelve and a half billion dollars.

Never once over that century has it failed to meet a financial obligation when due.

To its employees the Pennsylvania has paid in wages a sum exceeding ten billion dollars.

To stockholders, it has paid a cash return in every year since 1847—a total of a billion and a quarter dollars.

To bondholders—individuals, and insurance companies, savings banks, trust companies, representing the savings of many millions of individuals—it has paid in interest more than a billion dollars.

From the beginning, the Pennsylvania has been a railroad built by the people for the people. The money to construct it as the shortest route between East and West came from people of all walks of life in the form of subscriptions to shares of $50 each payable in ten $5 installments. Today, with 13,167,754 shares outstanding, the average holding is only 61¼ shares, and of the 214,995 stockholders of the railroad 106,139—or more than 49%—are women.

Thus, not only has the Pennsylvania Railroad served the American people through continually improving transportation at low cost—but through wages, dividends and interest (plus huge purchases of materials in the area served)—it has contributed vitally to the prosperity of communities and to the welfare and economic security of many thousands of American citizens.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD

1846 1946

ONE HUNDRED YEARS OF TRANSPORTATION PROG

5505
000
PENNSYLVANIA

"What you need is a trip to your Singer Sewing Center!"

Mother isn't fooling. Marjorie, in her mousy little misfits, needs help—but fast.

And there's no other spot in town like the Singer Sewing Center for solving any clothes crisis that comes along. Here is everything from frills to fitting lessons, from ready-made accessories to finish-up services.

Look over the items on this page, and remember—there are more, many more, where these came from.

Do things with scarves. Twist one into a new neckline, or knot one to make a belt. Singer has some beauties, in printed or plain material, in squares or ascots, from $1 up.

Notions and Accessories. Come here for all the makings for your Cordé bags. Or for yarns, needles, slide fasteners, threads, and dress shields. We're headquarters for all sewing notions.

Singer Sewing Lessons. An expert teacher guides you, and helps you make a dress while you learn. Home Dressmaking or Home Decorating Lessons, $1.50 each. Complete course, $10.

Made-to-Order Belts—or buttons, covered with your own material. We make buttonholes for you, too, in all sizes—picot, hemstitch, do all kinds of finish-up work, promptly and reasonably.

Hints for Mother's Day. Everybody loves our sewing buckets covered in gay materials. (Only $1.95 unfitted.) Or look at sachet-scented dress hangers at $1.98 a pair. Sachets, hankies, small gifts from 50¢ up.

Molded-to-you Singer Form. Yes, we can make an exact duplicate of your figure and save you from tedious dress fittings. Molding takes only 30 minutes. Form complete with adjustable stand, only $19.75.

Sewing Cabinet Beauty. Lovely Chippendale lines, lots of space, with two drawers and sliding spool tray. Comes in walnut or mahogany finish, fitted with sewing essentials, $19.95. Other styles from $15.95.

For your protection: Singer continues its policy of selling its machines only through Sewing Centers identified by the Red "S" on the window, and never through department stores or other outlets. (Check address of your local Singer Shop in phone book—Singer Sewing Machine Company.)

One big reason why Singer Machines have led the field for over 90 years is the watch-like precision that goes into making every part. Shown above is the Queen Anne, a handsome living room piece, and the finest sewing machine your money can buy.

SINGER SEWING MACHINE COMPANY

Copyright, U.S.A., 1945, 1946, by The Singer Manufacturing Co. All rights reserved for all countries.

(Continued from Page 111)

h over your head against the wall. Do ts, or I shall fire."
His look measured her. Then he obeyed, in a leisurely fashion.
She said, "Not close to the wall. Stand ay and lean forward. Press your palms inst the wall."
She held her arm rigidly ahead of her as walked toward him. She thrust the uth of the Luger against his spine before got close. She was very afraid of this
t. She knew that an agile man can spin out and wrest away a weapon pressed at side before the trigger can be pulled. The ators had shown her how it could be
e. But she did not think he could do it h his arms above him and the gun at his e. t was not easy to touch him. She felt a zy of repugnance. But she put her left d in his hip pocket and found the rever. It was small and light. She looked vn to make sure it was loaded, and flicked the safety catch.
"I suppose you have a knife, too," she d, "but I can shoot before you draw it
." She backed away. She felt safer at a tance.
"May I turn around?" he asked.
"Keep your hands clasped behind your
k. Move slowly. Sit down in that chair—re." She indicated one near the table hin glow of the
t. "Keep those ds up," she caued tensely. She down on the edge
he couch opposite
.
"This is the devil
an uncomfortable ition," he said in amused sort of mbling. "What a e-à-tête! You are a y difficult ghost, nne-Marie. But so
tty. Truly, I have er seen you more hanting. I hope have that thing safe. It has a hair-gger action."
"I know. It is not safe."
"It makes an innal noise. They will ot a hundred hostages if you touch me."
"It is always a hundred with you, isn't Kummler said you had betrayed a ndred."
"Kummler?" He seemed to weigh the ne consideringly. "What is all this about mmler?"
"We became great friends. I dined with last night. In his room. We had a beau-l dinner. And champagne. He bought me s dress. And a great velvet robe. And se." With one hand she lifted the white ds over her silk-clad legs. She was careful to look down. She said, "You remem—he began by offering to buy me silk ckings. We thought it a great joke."
"Well, well—so you are his petite amie, you?" The amusement in his voice nded a trifle forced. He was staring at dress appraisingly.

"YES," said Jeanne-Marie. "That is a asant name for it. And he finds me too asing to part with. So—since your prese would be a difficulty ——" The only ng he could feel would be the pang of being cked. Betrayal was all he understood. It med curiously important that this man uld suffer something in his mind.
But he was not an easy dupe. "No," he d, rejecting the explanation. "You got ay, somehow. He's a trusting dumbhead.
is probably biting his nails in fury, afraid own that he let you get away. I'll bet he nged someone else to cover up!" That was lip. His eyes laughed at it and asked her share the joke, as they had laughed and ed on that day in the street when he had yed his impertinent role against Kumm-
. Then his tongue ran on, falling into an almost caressing tone. "So you came where you knew you'd be appreciated, didn't you, Jeanne-Marie? You knew that in spite of all, I adored you—that it went against the grain ——"

It was not possible, she thought, that he should believe her vulnerable. It simply was not possible. "Go on," she said harshly. "It is very amusing to hear you making love to try to save your life."

"To save my life? Oh, come now, Jeanne-Marie, you could not kill a man."

But his eyes never left her. Behind their gaiety was a wariness that watched its chance. Yet he was not afraid. She saw, with curious astonishment, that he was not afraid. Death, his own death, was incredible to him.

"WHAT did you think you would do?" he went on in the same tone of cheerful raillery. "The scene from Tosca? Lay me out with candles? But I do not see that you brought any candles."

Now his eyes roved about the room. She thought, He is trying to distract me. Then make a spring. He was quick as a cat. She knew the way he moved, the strength of his young body. He could crush her, wrest the gun away.

He looked at her again. "Tell me," he said interestedly, "how did you get away?"

She thought, He thinks that if he can get me to talking, if he can distract me ——

"You could not have liked that one," he told her. "You were right to come here. You knew that I would hide you. You are angry and you want to scare me, but in your heart you know there is an explanation. We have different faiths, different loyalties—yes. And I was sent to trick you. I admit it. But I did not trick you. I fell in love with you. I did not inform about you. They had the goods on you. They had picked up that man, that man at L'Oiseau Noir, that man who made the papers, and he confessed. So they knew it all anyway. I had to go along with them."

She wanted to say, "There is no man at L'Oiseau Noir," but that would be folly, for he might be too quick for her. It was good to know they believed in that man she had created—she had felt sure they did, or they would have tortured her, but still it was good to hear. Now she must not waste more time.

"There is a paper and pencil on the table," she told him. "Stretch out one hand for them, very slowly. You are to write something. . . . Do not reach for that light."

The light was on the other side of the table. It was not so heavy as the small bronze Venus, but it was dangerous. She watched every move while he took the paper and put it on the flat arm of his chair and poised the pencil over it.

"Now write what I tell you." She had risen now and stood, looking down at him. She said, "Now write this. 'I cannot live without you, my captain.'"

He wrote, then looked up. "What is all this nonsense I am writing?"

"Write on. Say, 'I follow. Forgive me, Fuehrer,' then sign only 'André.'" He might add some other name, she thought, something that would show it false.

He gave her a sudden sharp look. There was awareness in him now—he saw the plan. Something had happened to Kummler. He saw that she had changed pistols, that it was his own she held in her right hand. He looked down, to hide awareness. He wrote. He would write anything to gain time. He must be thinking very intently of expedients.

He signed "André" slowly, then looked up. His face showed nothing but guarded attentiveness.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Ebb Tide

BY DORIS BRYANT

I have spent the morning
Where the shadows meet the sky,
Explaining to myself
How love can die.

I have spent the evening
Where the white surf meets the land,
Picking up my heart
And shaking out the sand.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

How to make your home-sewing look professional!

Amazing what a difference details make in the over-all impression of a dress! For instance, a "humpy" neckline closing can spoil the best cut lines—cheapen even the finest fabric. That's why a dainty Talon slide fastener in the neckline is such a smart idea! It's made specifically to follow the smooth, flattering fit of the fabric . . . to help give you that costly, "poured-into" look around neck and shoulders. And, of course, it makes your clothes a joy to get on and off! Complete, easy-to-follow instructions come with every Talon neckline fastener—in the distinctive orange package.

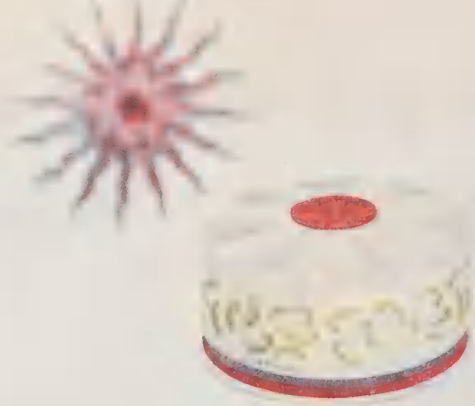
FOR DRESS PLACKETS . . . Buy the flexible Talon fastener with patented bridge top-stop. BLUE package.



FOR SKIRT PLACKETS . . . Look for the sturdy, self-locking Talon fastener. ROSE package.

"TALON" Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. Talon, Inc.

The Quality Slide Fastener

AT NOTION COUNTERS EVERYWHERE

BY APPOINTMENT
PERFUMERS TO
H. M. QUEEN MARY
YARDLEY, LONDON

summer's dream is she

. . . moving through the night in a magic shimmer. . . . Like pink-gold, her complexion glows—flawless, smooth and sparkling. . . . Lips jewel-bright, head proud-set. . . . Here, clearly, a new and shining presence—here, the lovely perfection that says she's learned to "Color-light"!

"color-light" with

YARDLEY

aids to beauty

"Color-light" your skin—blush-soft—with Yardley "English-Complexion" Powder, $1.

"Color-light" your lips—with singing, staying shades of Yardley Lipstick, $1.

"Color-light" loveliness starts with a flawless complexion. For it, Yardley brings you an array of exquisite beauty aids such as rich Yardley Night Cream, or Yardley Dry Skin Cleansing Cream. Both $1 and $2.

Prices plus tax

Yardley products for America are created in England and finished in the U. S. A. from the original English formulae, combining imported and domestic ingredients. Yardley of London, Inc., 620 Fifth Ave., Rockefeller Center, New York, N.Y.

ADV. N. W. AYER

"Put your right hand in the air," she told him. "Now, with your left, throw the paper on the floor. Toward me."

He did it, watching her as she watched him. There was no pretense in him now that this was an absurd game, done to indulge her whim. Danger was naked, acknowledged. She did not look down at the paper. Her eyes never left him. She was mortally afraid. But this letter had seemed necessary.

And it seemed necessary to say, "It is not for myself—it is for those others ——" But the tense, desperate voice never finished the words. He sprang, hurling himself against her, bearing her backward.

Afterward she did not know how long afterward—she became aware that she was lying on the floor. That was all she knew for a moment—she was on some floor—and her eyes lifted bewilderedly and fixed on the light of the lantern on the table above her. Then recognition came, and memory, and stabbing questions.

---

The sun is rising on another day. What can I wish that this day may bring to me? A few friends who understand me, and yet remain my friends. A work to do which has real value, without which the world would feel poorer . . . an understanding heart . . . a story of something beautiful the hand of man has made . . . a little leisure . . . and the patience to wait for the coming of these things, with the wisdom to know them when they come. —W. R. HUNT:
(Adapted) Quoted in The Scrapbook.

---

How long —— That noise. She seemed to remember a noise like a clap of thunder. Had she fired? Fired and missed? Was he gone? Were they coming?

She sat up. She could move then, some particle of her frantic mind recorded. She was not hurt. And he was not gone. He was there, before her. He lay, face down, sprawled across her feet. She drew them back. She got up, picking up the revolver from where it lay on the floor. She was trembling violently. She had fired, then, she thought. She had no recollection of firing, no recollection of anything—save that clap of thunderous noise—from the moment that swift body had launched itself at her.

Had it been only an instant ago or half an hour? Were people at this moment coming to the room, to discover the cause of that sound, or had they come and found the door locked and gone to give an alarm? There was no telephone in the house.

She stood tensed, listening. No sounds of commotion. Perhaps no one had come. People were not eager to run toward trouble in these times. They could persuade themselves that a sound was not a shot but the backfire of a car or a D.A.C. gun at a plane. Even if an alarm had been given she had a few moments.

She stooped over him. There was blood about the head. The floor was dark with it. She had meant to aim for the heart, but when he sprang his head had been down. There was the look of death about that slack, relaxed figure, but she had to make sure. She must look at that head. She must touch it, lift it—look at it. That face which had smiled at others' deaths.

She made herself look at it. She lowered the head and wiped her rigid fingers on her white skirt. Paul would never believe that she could see blood without growing faint. When she had tried to help him in some small surgery —— And now, twice in these terrible hours ——

She had laid down the revolver and now she picked it up and wiped off her prints and put it into his right hand, pressing the fingers about it. Then she pushed it a little away. Perhaps a man dropped a revolver when he died.

The paper was there, creased by their fall, but the writing was clear. She slipped it under the outflung left hand.

Then she peeled off her white dress and found her hair and neck were wet with blood.

It Becomes Part o
YOU!

Individually Your
by Dutchess

Dutchess Slimliner Slip has t
"Individually Yours" feel . . it mo itself to your every curve, "breathes w your body". It slenderizes, smooths waist and hips perfectly Enjoy its co fort for work, wear it under your sle est, most glamorous gown. And it' carefree travel companion . . . packs washes easily, needs no ironing.

Four-gored, full skirt that won't r up . . . molded bust line . . . adjusta straps. Soft, smooth, rayon jersey. Si 32-44. You'll like the price.

At all good stores, or write
DUTCHESS UNDERWEAR COR
Empire State Bldg., New York 1, N.

Dutchess SLIMLINE

The Complete
EODORANT

CHECKS
PERSPIRATION!
ALSO PREVENTS ODOR!
You get Long-Lasting Protection with Dependable
Nonspi

NONSPI
and 60¢ Plus Tax ★ At all cosmetic counters

The back of her head was bleeding. It must be badly cut though she felt no pain—she felt nothing but tense, trembling horror and the urgency of fear. She wiped her hands, pulled on her skirt and blouse, fastening them with flying fingers, and then remembered the Luger and found it on the floor where it had dropped from her left hand when she was flung down. She thrust it deep into her blouse again. She crammed the white dress into the basket, slipped the handles over her arms and parted the curtains carefully, not to let them brush against her bloodied head. She climbed through the window.

From the outside she could not close the casements, but they did not open far; they rested against the drawn curtains. There was no wind. No wind to blow away that paper. But it would not blow away, no matter what wind blew, for it lay beneath that hand.

Such a confession might save reprisals, might make the SS hush up the death. They would believe anything scandalous of one another. There were plenty of scandalous relationships. Goering flaunted them, coming into Maxim's with rouged and painted young officers.

She tied on the basket and edged about the dormer and began the struggle up the slanted roof. It was harder to go up than to descend, but she clutched at crevices and broken tiles and dug her toes into cracks, grateful for the rubber soles. Once she slipped badly, cutting her arms and knees on the sharp tiles, but she got a grip again and worked her way to the top of the slope.

Now one slope more, this one a much slighter angle. If she had courage enough, she told herself, she could walk up this easy slant, bending forward, but she was too terrified to try and crawled on to the level top.

It seemed nothing at all now to walk along it. She went almost to the corner, then paused by a cluster of chimneys to look back through the dark. It was too soon to feel safe. If an alarm had been given, the SS men at any moment might come out of trap doors and flash their lights about the roofs. But they would never catch her. She would throw herself off. But if she were connected with the death there would be cruel reprisals on Paul and Marte.

She was conscious now of pain in her head, and suddenly she remembered that there must have been blood on the floor where she had struck and she had forgotten to wipe it up. But it was close to that other blood, the pool about André's head. The SS would not find it strange. A man might jerk about, in dying.

Then she thought, Whatever happens, it is done. She had done what she had set herself to do. André was dead. Never again would he betray.

The realization brought a relief so intense that it was dizzying; she put a hand, steadyingly, against one of the chimneys. Never again. He would work no more evil. They were saved, those others whom he would certainly have destroyed. Their work for France, that he would have destroyed, was saved. France was free of him.

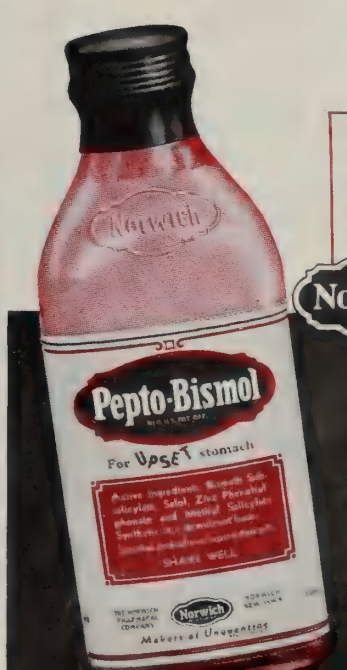
A profound exultation went through her. Everything she had endured seemed obliterated—it had not been in vain. She was free of the terrible tension of her fear, of her compulsion. Free—free ——

And free to live, herself, to go on to tomorrow. She had not thought she would have so much luck. Now only a little more strength.

She must not rest with Mlle. Clement. As soon as it was allowed for the French to be on the streets she must be out in that brown coat with kerchiefed head and market basket, making her way across Paris to Mme. Chaffours. Once there she would be safe, or what seemed safe.

She looked out over Paris. The dark roofs rose about her, wave after wave of a wide, motionless sea; Jeanne-Marie seemed to be looking into the depths of it, into all the suffering beneath those roofs. The needless, cruel suffering, the waiting, the despair. She looked down for some moments, her heart full. Then she looked up. Already the sky was brightening.

(THE END)



IT MUST HAVE BEEN somethin' I ET!

A familiar phrase for a familiar feeling.
It happens to us all. When you have that queasy, uneasy upset condition, be gentle with your stomach.
Take soothing, pleasant PEPTO-BISMOL.

NEVER UPSET
AN UPSET STOMACH

Don't aggravate an already irritated stomach with overdoses of antacids or harsh physics! Take soothing PEPTO-BISMOL. This pleasant-tasting preparation is neither an antacid nor a laxative. Its action is different. It spreads a soothing, protective coating on irritated stomach and intestinal walls . . . thus helping to calm and quiet common digestive upsets. Get a bottle today.

Three sizes at your druggist's—or by the dose at his fountain.

Take soothing PEPTO-BISMOL...to relieve* queasy, uneasy, upset stomach; distress after over-indulgence; nervous indigestion; heartburn...And to retard intestinal fermentation; gas formation; simple diarrhea. If you do not get prompt relief, see your physician.

Norwich A NORWICH PRODUCT

Pepto-Bismol
for UPSET stomach

What a Blend!

WHAT WONDERS they've accomplished in combining the delicious, sweet juice of Florida's tree-ripened oranges with the fresh fruity tang of Florida's finest grapefruit juice. Just you try Florida Orange-Grapefruit Juice in handy cans all ready to serve. What an appetizer! What a thirst quencher! What a refresher! WHAT A BLEND!

What a Helping Hand in saving

time and trouble and cash . . . and in fighting infections, colds, and fatigue . . . with abundant VITAMIN C

• In handy cans all ready to serve — you can buy the refreshing juice of Florida's luscious fruit most inexpensively. And all the squeezing and straining has been attended to. Just open the can and pour.

Here's a Helping Hand in preparing meals — in awaking good morning appetites. And best of all, this healthful juice — so rich in vitamin C — gives a Helping Hand in building health . . . in fighting infections, colds, and fatigue. It's a Helping Hand to reach for every single day!

Try ALL these delicious Florida Juices and Fruits!

Canned Grapefruit Juice

•

Canned Orange Juice

•

Canned Grapefruit Sections

• FLORIDA CITRUS COMMISSION • Lakeland, Florida

Canned

FLORIDA ORANGE-GRAPEFRUIT

BLENDED JUICE

LITTLE DUCK AND THE SHE-WOLF

(Continued from Page 23)

Hope looked up at her—quite far up it was. "Ben Fiddler?" she repeated.

"Now don't interrupt and I'll tell you about it. We'll go in my car, then I won't have to keep saying, 'Straight ahead, turn right.'" As she drove she told them about Ben Fiddler. For five years she had been trying to get him to sell. She herself offered him fifteen thousand cash not three years ago. Now suddenly he was off to Vermont to live with a son. And the house was on the market at—she laughed at the utterly absurd idea—"at eight thousand five hundred."

Hope looked up at Wayne. His eyes were on Tanagra so fixedly he didn't respond. "Well," he said, "that sounds pretty good. I guess we'd better look at it."

"You know—if it hadn't seemed too wacky, I would have had you over here last night at eleven o'clock with a kerosene lantern. I just wish we had made the appointment for nine-thirty." She drove the car a little faster.

"It's like that, is it?" Wayne asked.

"It certainly is," she said. "The last five houses I sold, my clients bought without looking at anything else. One man made his deposit with another broker bringing his client in the front door and a third phoning he was on the way over. It's like that. There is nothing to sell."

"But if a client buys the first house you show him, at least it saves you time—and trouble—and ——"

Hope was cut off. "If they do," Tanagra said. "Some decide to take just twenty-four hours to think it over and ——" She shrugged as though their fate were too awful for words.

She's wonderful, Hope said to herself. She could sell igloos to South Africans. A little obvious though.

"Tell us about it," she said. "How large is it, how much land?"

"Now look, Hoopy," Tanagra said sharply. "You have to let me do this. Naturally I'll tell you about the house, but I want you to understand the situation first. For your own protection."

"Of course," Wayne agreed. "We appreciate that."

"All right," Hope said meekly, "only please drop the 'Hoopy.' I haven't been called that since college."

Tanagra laughed a merry peal across at Wayne. "So sorry," she said with mock seriousness. "Well, this Fiddler house is quite a wreck, of course. No lights, no water in the house—good well, however—no heat." She slowed down. "This is the Manchester place. I sold it twice last year."

"Sold it twice?" Wayne asked.

"I sold it to the Hornbeams—the most attractive couple. Two months later, the Hornbeams were divorced and I sold it for Spike Hornbeam to a retired banker."

"Look, Tanagra, what's good about this house you're going to show us?"

TANAGRA looked at Wayne again and laughed. The cute impatient child, her look said. "Well, it's a small house, half very old, half—oh, Greek revival, I suppose you would call it. Nice detail on the windows and trim. It has the largest fireplace I think I ever saw."

Wayne came to life with a start. "Fireplace? Really?"

"In the living room. It used to be the old kitchen—oven and crane and that sort of thing. Another fireplace in a bedroom. The end of the house toward the river ——"

"You mean there's a river?"

"Oh, yes; didn't I say so? The house overlooks the Aponog. In summer you can't see the waterfall, but you hear it."

"Waterfall!"

"We skate just above it. Wonderful fishing. Swimming. Sin always found woodcock through those woods."

"You don't mean it!"

TANAGRA slowed again. "I sold the Kitchells this place last month. They got it for thirty-two five, which isn't bad. Did you know Ted Kitchell at Williams? He's a darling."

And what did Nancy or Susie or Whatever-her-name-was Kitchell think of the house Tanagra sold her darling Ted? I know I won't like this house, Hope thought. I'll hate it.

"Here's your house," Tanagra said.

Hope took one look and forgot all her annoyance at Tanagra. It was the darlingest little house she had ever seen. It sat not far from the road, but with a tremendous lilac hedge across the front. It was small but dignified, with a wide lawn on one side held in by the lilacs, and lots of room for a vegetable garden and a little orchard on the other. Of course it was shabby, but painted white—or pink!

"Oh, Tanagra!"

"Yes, darling, but you haven't seen anything. Come around to the back."

They walked around the corner and there down below was the river—a beautiful river with grassy edges and overhanging hemlocks. Up above, stretching from one wooded shore to the other, was a dam at least fifty feet wide, with water rushing over it madly. The air was filled with the music.

"Let's go inside," Tanagra said. "Remember, the house goes with it."

But Hope didn't need to go in. This was it, their home, and a thousand times more wonderful than she had ever dreamed.

The inside was dark and smelly and the rooms were small. "Take these two partitions out," Tanagra said, "and make this one big room—windows east, south and west. A big window overlooking the river."

Wayne wasn't listening, he was staring into the old fireplace. "Take five-foot logs," he said in an awed whisper.

"The gun cupboard is around the side of the chimney."

"Gun cupboard!"

They could hardly get him to go upstairs. If this partition was moved and the room with the fireplace made larger, then the other room could be a bathroom. This room would do for the baby—sunshine all day. That for the guest room. It laid itself out for them. Hope wandered into and out of the rooms, trying to imagine them painted white, trying to place their furniture, seeing wallpapers, chintzes.

"I want you to really see that waterfall," Tanagra said. "Do you want to come, too, Hope?"

For that she would go, but Wayne said no. The bank was steep and slippery and there were vines. She'd better wait right there in Fiddler's old chair.

Tanagra's laugh came up the hill again and again and then they disappeared. After hours they came back. Wayne helped Tanagra up the hill, talking hard. He didn't see

Green Remainder

BY MARJORIE LEDERER LEE

Who will pick the papers up
And set the pictures right?
Yesterday I might have cared;
But not tonight.

Yesterday I might have cleared
The cobwebs from this room.
(A kiss, far more than empty hands,
Can wield a broom.)

Tonight your parting hangs like moss
Upon the shaken door;
Who will sweep love's green remainder
From the mind's floor?

"ROYAL PUDDINGS TASTE MORE DELICIOUS!"

—say 8 out of every 10

Survey of 1,052 Royal users reveals why millions are "Reaching for Royal"

"Taste more delicious!" they said. Just try Royal Puddings and you'll say so, too! They're so smooth, rich-tasting, creamy-textured. And they're still made the famous Royal way . . . sweetened just right—no need to add sugar! You'll love Royal Gelatin Desserts, too. Such luscious, fruit-like flavors! Yes, always get Royal!

WHAT DEODORANT DO YOU USE?

Stop for a minute and think about your deodorant. Consider it a dull necessity? If so—it's high time for you to use the deodorant created by the beauty genius who won't abide dullness in anything!

Helena Rubinstein's

Apple Blossom Deodorant Cream

Helena Rubinstein was not satisfied to relax with an excellent deodorizing cream. Of course, she saw to it that hers did everything you've ever expected or ever hoped for in a deodorant! Surely. Safely. Scientifically checks perspiration odor. Promises you fresh underarms. Assures you that you need never suffer a moment's doubt about offensive and embarrassing body odors. Then, she packaged it in a great big generous jar to sell at a price all could afford.
But that was not enough for beauty-loving Helena Rubinstein.

THEN THE STROKE OF GENIUS

Into this fluffy cream, she infused America's most beloved fragrance—her original and unsurpassed Apple Blossom! Immediately—a dull necessity was transformed into a delight! So now you can entrust your loveliness to this joyous scent always—and all ways! For with it you may wear its Apple Blossom confederates to complete the all-over appeal of this famous fragrance.

APPLE BLOSSOM PERFUME, 7.50, 6.00, 3.75, purse size 1.00
APPLE BLOSSOM COLOGNE, 1.00
APPLE BLOSSOM EAU DE TOILETTE, 1.75
APPLE BLOSSOM BODY POWDER, .85, .50
APPLE BLOSSOM DEODORANT LOTION, if you prefer a liquid. .50
plus tax

At smart stores or write direct to

Helena Rubinstein

715 Fifth Avenue, New York 22

Hope there waiting. "Oh, hello, hon. Now, Tanagra, tell me again; where would you put the big window?" He and Tanagra walked around the corner and Hope followed slowly after them.

This was Tanagra and Wayne's house. She was just someone who was going to have a baby. She had wanted a house more than anything in the world, except the baby, and here it was before her, the darlingest house. She loved it; Wayne loved it—and she was on the brink of tears.

"I want you to meet John Peters," Tanagra said. "He's your nearest neighbor, his land abuts yours."

"Our abuttor," Wayne said. "Our aid and abuttor."

Tanagra laughed a peal of merry laughter and Wayne flushed with pleasure.

Tanagra had obviously had no chance to prepare John Peters for their coming, but he put on an A-1 act. He sat before his fire, a setter on one side, a spaniel on the other, a book on his knee, a drink beside him. He was tall and handsome, with a long British face and graying side locks, good cheekbones, the best Groton-Harvard accent.

The room was lined with books in worn calf, the furniture was blackened oak, the doors showed light only where the dogs had scratched through to the wood. The chintz was faded to dull plum and muddy brick. They bought it old, Hope decided. They never had anything new in their lives.

---

Under our present system, a youngster is taught practically everything on earth save the one thing requisite for a happy life—how to get along with other people. Every year sees new novelties added to the curriculum: tap dancing, flower arrangement, window trimming; endless devices for enriching one's personal store of information, and catching the elusive penny. But where will you find a class on that most indispensable of all human arts—how and when to keep your mouth shut? It is a safe bet that more careers have been crippled by ignorance on this subject than by all other handicaps put together.

—ELSIE ROBINSON: The Clearing House.

---

The other half of "they" did not appear. "She's driving the youngsters to a children's forum," John Peters explained and shoved his pipe back in halfway through the sentence. Anyone caught with his pipe out of his mouth is a rotten egg, Hope told herself as Wayne pulled out his pipe and lighted up. She was tired and hateful and she didn't care if she was.

"Isn't this perfect, Hope?" Wayne said, looking around the dark musty room. Hope could see him mentally measuring the fireplace and finding his own longer. Then Tanagra took him to see the barn and herb room.

John Peters turned to her with twinkling eyes. I get it, she thought. He works on the lady clients. I'm supposed to fall for him the way Wayne has fallen for Tanagra.

"I have given much thought to just who I would like to see in Ben Fiddler's house," John Peters said. "As you can see, it is something very special."

"Yes, it is," she had to agree. "It's a little duck."

"Exactly." He pointed his pipe at her as though she had hit the word he had sought for months. "A little duck. Exactly. So many people wouldn't get it at all. Tanagra has a genius for matching people and places."

That might well be. "There's a lot to be done to it."

He agreed. "That, to me, is the best part. To buy a house, unlock the door, move your traps in—a pretty dull program, don't you think? And as for a newly built house"—he shook his head sadly—"completely lacking in ——" He lifted his glass of port.

"Bouquet," she supplied.

He pointed his pipe at her again. "Exactly."

I'm as bad as Wayne, she thought. He opens the door and I walk in like a dumb bunny.

With Rayon Curtains like these . . . . . Washing's a Breeze!

This "Wat-a-set Lady" knows her "curtain washdays"—Yes ma'm—she KNOWS for sure that the improved Wat-a-set LASTING finish for rayon curtains gives longer, crisper curtain life and that the Wat-a-set finish STAYS on through numerous tubbings, protects the delicate marquisette weave and repels pesky silverfish bugs that eat rayon like moths eat wool.

Keep those rayon curtains of yours spanking-clean, crisply-new all of the time . . . with Wat-a-set's help.

You'll find the Wat-a-set finish on numerous popular brands of curtains at your retailer's.

If you live in one of America's 50 largest cities you can locate your Wat-a-set retailer by looking in the "Where to buy it" section of your local 'phone directory under "CURTAINS —Wat-a-set".

MT. HOPE FINISHING CO.
North Dighton, Massachusetts

DON'T TAKE CHANCES ON UNTRIED METHODS

Here's Safe PROVEN Way

to MOTH-PROOF

One spraying lasts a whole year!

Odorless—No wrapping or putting away

OTHER USES

Protect your Upholstered Furniture with Larvex

Moths will never eat clothes sprayed with Larvex

Don't take a chance on new products which haven't fully proved their worth. You can BE SURE moths will never eat your woolens if you use LARVEX.

For years LARVEX has been used by the big woolen mills. It's been proven the SAFE, SURE way. Just a few minutes spraying moth-proofs woolens for a whole year! Tests show moth worms actually commit suicide rather than eat anything treated with LARVEX.

LARVEX is odorless, stainless. Dry cleaning does not remove LARVEX protection. Washing does. BUT DRY CLEANING DOES NOT! Only 79¢ a pint. $1.19 a quart.

LARVEX

If he points that pipe at me again I'll say "bang-bang."

Going home, they drove slowly by the Fiddlers' house.

"John Peters and I named it Little Duck," she told Wayne and Tanagra.

Tanagra laughed. "Cute."

I guess when people give a house a name she knows it's sold. Maybe she'll relax now and let Wayne alone.

Tanagra's house was the antithesis of John Peters'. The fish that escaped his net got their gills fatally tangled in hers. There were wide bow windows letting in fifty square miles of sunny landscape. There were chintzes of chartreuse and light blue and scarlet at twenty-five dollars a yard, and organdy curtains with ruffles a foot wide, and white rugs. The furniture was pearwood and satinwood, and mirrors everywhere. The lamps, not tea canisters and coffee mills like John Peters', but priceless sang de boeuf vases. Tanagra's bathroom had a fireplace in it!

"Wayne and I are going out to the kennels," Tanagra called up the stairs. "Come on out, darling. Out beyond the garage."

She watched them from the window. If Wayne looked back she would go. He didn't. She stretched on the chaise longue and considered the whole horrid business. It would be like this from now on. Tanagra, only a mile away, would drop in and invite Wayne here and command him to go there. Wayne would of course offer to stay home with her and she would urge him to go. If he went she'd be hurt; if he stayed home, ashamed. If I weren't encumbered I wouldn't let her do it. I can hold my own against any old she-wolf, but she's got me while I'm down.

What Hope couldn't understand was why Tanagra was doing it. She had thought at first it was just to sell the house. Suddenly she understood. She stopped crying, aghast at the awfulness of it. There were no houses to sell—so Tanagra sold a house and then, if by any chance the couple that bought it should happen to get a divorce, she sold it over again. Like the Hornbeams.

"Hope." Wayne was under the window. "You all right, darling?"

"Oh, yes. I'm fine."

She brushed up her hair before Tanagra's triple-mirrored, two-yard-long dressing table. As if Tanagra could ever get Wayne to a point where he would let Hope get to a point where she would want a divorce. Nobody could separate them. And of course Tanagra wasn't that bad. She was a shocking, low-lived she-wolf, but not that bad. She went down the stairs all smiles. Tanagra and Wayne didn't hear her—partly because of the thickness of the white stair rug. Partly because Tanagra was playing on one of the pair of grand pianos and Wayne was staring at her, smiling.

I'm not going to buy Little Duck, she decided then and there. She knew it was silly about the divorce business, she knew Wayne didn't really care two cents about Tanagra, but she wasn't going to let any woman alive put that silly look on his face.

At lunch Wayne brought up a few practical questions, more as something that was expected of him than as though he really cared about the answer. "Do you know a good contractor?"

She nodded, smiling. Obviously she would know the best contractor in the state.

"I suppose the title is O.K."

"We have it searched. It costs three quarters of one per cent of the sales price."

Hope could see that Wayne was thinking about his fireplace and she was berating herself as a rat. He'd recover in time, she tried to tell herself. They'd find a house that would do—in New York State or somewhere.

After lunch Tanagra said, "Let's go into my office, Wayne. You can write out the check there. A hundred dollars will do it. This will serve as a legal binder until the contract is signed."

Hope gave herself a vicious push. "Check?" she asked naively. "What is Wayne writing a check for?"

Tanagra almost gave her up. "Look, darling," she said with terrific patience. "You

(Continued on Page 123)

Why not bring out the natural glossy highlights of your hair like Powers Models?

Miss Jane Gilbert, stunning Powers Girl, is thrilled the way beautifying Kreml Shampoo keeps her hair shining-bright and lustrous for days!

Positively never leaves any excess dull, soapy film. Men can't help admire shimmering highlights in a girl's hair. They like the soft, silky feel of it under their fingers.

So, girls — why not take a tip from gorgeous Powers Models who are famous for their naturally soft lustrous hair? Powers Girls use Kreml Shampoo to wash their hair! Kreml Shampoo is an arch conspirator for ensnaring your man. And here's why—

Silken-sheen beauty lasts for days. Kreml Shampoo not only thoroughly cleanses scalp and hair of dirt and loose dandruff but it actually brings out the natural sparkling highlights that lie concealed in the hair. Kreml Shampoo leaves hair so much softer, silkier, easier to set.

Wonderful to soften dry, brittle ends. Kreml Shampoo is so mild and gentle on your hair. It positively contains no harsh caustics or chemicals. Rather, it has a beneficial oil base which helps keep hair from becoming dry. It never leaves any excess soapy film that makes your hair so dull and lifeless looking. So be glamour-wise and always wash your hair with Kreml Shampoo — a trump card in any woman's bag of beauty tricks! All drug, department and 10¢ stores.

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY — Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — IF DEFECTIVE OR NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

KREML SHAMPOO

A product of R. B. Semler, Inc.

FOR SILKEN-SHEEN HAIR—EASIER TO ARRANGE MADE BY THE MAKERS OF THE FAMOUS KREML HAIR TONIC

How to fix the entrancing hair-do above

First wash hair with Kreml Shampoo so that your hair will sparkle with its natural lustre. Set pin curls in direction of arrows.

Follow directions of arrows for setting pin curls in front. Notice how Kreml Shampoo leaves hair so much easier to set.

Showing proper position of braid. Kreml Shampoo is marvelous for thick, long hair, because it thoroughly cleanses each tiny strand.

B-7-46 REFRIGERATOR

$179.95

. . including Federal Excise Tax, a 5-year protection plan and delivery to your home.

Every house needs Westinghouse

Maker of 30 MILLION Electric Home Appliances

WESTINGHOUSE ELECTRIC CORPORATION • PLANTS IN 25 CITIES • OFFICES EVERYWHERE • APPLIANCE DIVISION, MANSFIELD, OHIO

Tune In: John Charles Thomas, Sun. 2:30 EST., N.B.C. • Ted Malone, Mon. Through Fri., 11:45 A.M., EST., American Broadcasting Co. Network

(Continued from Page 121)

't expect Ben Fiddler to hold that place
t for your pretty blue eyes."

"You mean you thought we were buying t house? Why, Wayne, you didn't want buy that place, did you? I never dreamed were serious. It's rather cute, but I nk we ought to look at lots and lots of ises before we decide."

Wayne was counting ten. "Darling, Tana told us there aren't lots of houses to k at. And what there are cost more than can pay."

"Oh, I guess there will be others."

"But Hope—I thought you liked it. thought—I was sure ——" Then she him remembering his mother's warn-
. "Of course, darling, we'll do as you
—but ——"

Tanagra considered Hope's act suspiusly. "It's nothing to me whether you the Fiddler house or not. I have at least clients who will grab it so fast it will make ur hair curl."

She probably had. Darn her—darn men—and men—and love. Going home, yne asked her at least ten times if she felt right. She nodded, feeling in the utter-st depths of lousiness.

Finally he couldn't stand it any more. "Is our idea that you want to look for some-ng else? Of course you know Tanagra d she couldn't even show us a cellar hole der thirty-five thousand."

"There are other towns."

"But we both decided Wayover was where wanted to live."

"I know."

"Funny—I could have sworn you were zy about that house."

"It is funny, isn't it?" They went a mile rer to the crowded little apartment, a e farther from Little Duck, and then, Wayne"—she didn't know what she was ng to say, but she had to do more than her cheek against his sleeve—"Wayne, ve you—I mean even more than I thought lid—and I thought I loved you much re than you ever imagined."

He laughed and leaned over and kissed
.

MONDAY night Wayne came home looking though the canary had slipped down like oyster. After a few minutes of working to it he said, "By the way, Tanagra says has dug up another house and wants to w if we want to come out Sunday."

"Oh—did she phone you?"

"Yes, but she was in a phone booth and a waiting, so I met her at the Biltmore.
She was taking the five-fifty-six."

So, giving up Little Duck accomplished it! Instead of going skating and shooting d walking together—where she would at st see them go and return—they would et in the city secretly. Tanagra would ne running to town every few days with ouse she had "dug up." And Wayne would et her thinking they were real houses.

Hope sat on the couch pretending to read, t behind her book she had the plans she d been working on all day. The paper was smutty and nothing was in scale—the fireplace was larger than the kitchen—but she had decided where to put a window in the baby's room and where the linen closets would go. And she had a wonderful idea for the kitchen. Atlee Tower had an arrangement in the barn he made over—a sort of bar between the dining room and kitchen. They could copy that. Wayne would love it. She was dying to tell him about it, but what was the use? They couldn't build bars in someone else's house. One of Tanagra's clients undoubtedly bought it today.

"Don't you feel so good?" Wayne asked.

SHE listened back over her last few breaths. Had she groaned or sniffed or something? Then she saw that Wayne had a paper in his book too. He had added up $8500 and three fourths of 1 per cent of $8500. The darling! She had to do something. There might still be time to get the house if only she could think up an idea for protecting Wayne from Tanagra. All sorts of idiotic notions went through her head. Dyeing Wayne's hair a repulsive green. Pushing him down stairs so he broke a leg and couldn't skate or take walks. Pushing Tanagra downstairs so she broke two legs. In despair she looked down at the book she was reading, The Mother and the Preschool Child. And there it was! Just the idea she needed. If the child gets hold of something dangerous, like a carving knife, don't grab it away but substitute something just as bright.

Whom did she know who was as shiny as Wayne? She made a list of their good-looking friends and worked it down to one. As soon as Wayne left in the morning she phoned Cassie Throop. It was such ages since she had seen Cassie, how about lunch? Cassie had a date, but asked them over for the evening. Poor Wayne was so busy these nights—but she, Hope, would love to come.

The few friends jammed the apartment. Cassie said nice things about Hope's hat, called Tom to get her a drink and went to meet new arrivals.

Hope backed Tom into a corner—he was undoubtedly very handsome—and went to work. "I hear you are looking for a house in the country." A safe beginning these days.

He admitted they were being evicted. Who wasn't?

"I know the most wonderful girl in real estate. She's an absolute wizard. Why don't you go see her?"

"Sure. We will. . . . Darling, don't drink that stuff."

"Would this week end be all right? I'll phone and make an appointment. Saturday or Sunday?" She was breathless with her effort and he had dropped like ripe fruit.

"Saturday or Sunday. Fine idea. . . . Where did you say this girl operates?"

"Wayover, Connecticut—the prettiest town. You'll love it."

"Oh, no, not Wayover. That's too far out."

She grabbed his sleeve. "But it isn't. Only an hour—and club cars and—any day they'll have planes ——"

"Anyway, Cassie saw a place she liked on Long Island." He smiled down at her. "If

MARTINO WEILER

"I just want to see if it's comfortable to work in!"

Rid Your Kitchen of Insect Pests

with a twist of the wrist this amazing new way

K-M KNAPP-MONARCH

Magik Mist

SEEPS INTO CRACKS, CREVICES... SEEKS OUT AND DESTROYS BUGS IN THEIR HAUNTS

Here it is! A war-born miracle! So amazingly effective you can scarcely believe it! DDT and Pyrethrins—not one but two powerful insect killing agents combined—in an automatic Aerosol mist dispenser—to deliver a three-way knockout punch that slays bugs—seeps into cracks and crevices—kills them in their haunts. Insects which this almost invisible mist touches are sure to die! Not just a new insecticide—but a completely NEW WAY of ridding your house of insect pests. Get K-M Magik Mist today!

Copr. 1946, Knapp-Monarch Co.

Look! The Army Uses DDT this way! During the war K-M Aerosol Dispensers were used by our Armed Forces throughout Europe and in the jungles of the Pacific.

Look How Simple. Just releasing the K-M Magik Mist does the trick. Fully automatic. No pumping. No filling. No messy, greasy, smelly liquids to fool with.

Look! K-M Magik Mist Vanishes almost as soon as it hits the air. Yet its fine vapor reaches walls and ceilings with invisible, stainless mist deadly to most common household pests.

Look How K-M Magik Mist Roots Out Bugs. Directed behind baseboards, mouldings, it settles in their nests—reaches them in areas impractical to spray with ordinary spray gun.

Look What K-M Magik Mist Kills: Flies, mosquitoes, roaches, waterbugs, flying moths, silverfish, bedbugs, spiders, fleas, ants and similar insects if used as directed.

Look How Thrifty. One K-M Magik Mist Aerosol Dispenser will take care of an average size room 100 times. If used sparingly as directed, will last for months.

A PRODUCT OF KNAPP-MONARCH CO. • ST. LOUIS, MO.

Mfrs. also of K-M Electrical Appliances, Knapp Shavers, Jack Frost Fans, Thermo-Jugs, Sparklets.

NORTHERN TISSUE
made of "FLUFF"

* "FLUFF"—a registered trade-mark symbolizing the snow-white, cotton-soft pure cellulose of which Northern Tissue is made.

Copr. 1946, Northern Paper Mills, Green Bay, Wis.

you have a reason for drinking that stuff—good luck."

She put the tomato juice down. Her hand shook so she would spill it. Tanagra did it so easily. She would have acted bored with the whole thing, agreed that Wayover was miles out, and he would have rushed for a train to buy. Salesmen are born. She looked at the crowd. Surely someone, someone not too unattractive, wanted a house in Wayover.

"Did you say Wayover, Connecticut?" a voice behind her asked.

She swung around. "Oh, yes—do you know Wayover?"

He was old—over fifty probably—but tall and very erect, with a white mustache and a manner. He would do.

"I've heard of it. Rather suburban, isn't it?"

"Oh, no—it's way out. I mean—well, it depends ——"

"On whether you fly or walk." He had a great ho-ho laugh. "Well, I'm thinking of buying a farm—not anything too large. Seventy-five acres, maybe. Thought I'd try my hand at sheep."

"Wayover might be just the place." How could she be blasé with this handed to her! "We've just bought a little place out there. The girl who found it for us is so clever, if there were a place for you she might know."

"Well—why don't I drop her a line?" He pulled out a notebook. "What's her name?"

"She's terribly busy."

"Nonsense. No real-estate agent is ever too busy to take on a new client."

"There isn't much for sale out there."

"Well, it wouldn't do any harm to try."

It worked! Men were all the same. If they can't have it they want it. She was almost too excited to breathe. "It just happens I'm going out tomorrow, if you'd care to come."

"Why not? Let's phone her now, then she can be thinking over what I want. Where's a phone?" He had her by the arm, making a path through the crowd. Tanagra would love him.

They went around the corner to the hotel. He was Col. Archibald Reese, a bachelor. He had a little place in Florida and an apartment in the city. Used to have a villa at Cannes.

"He'd like just a small farm," she told Tanagra. "Not more than a hundred acres. And barns and stables and things. He has a something of ponies—string, is it? If it has a swimming pool, so much the better."

"If he'd asked for that last week," Tanagra said, "I would have laughed in his face. But it's the funniest thing. You might be describing the Mitchells' farm. Does he look good for a hundred thousand?"

Hope looked out of the booth. "Oh, yes. We'll take the ten-ten train, then. And Tanagra, has—is there any news of Little Duck? I mean is it sold?"

"Ben Fiddler's place? No, I haven't heard a thing. Bill Curtis was showing it to someone when I came by. Thanks for digging up the colonel, darling."

The colonel was charming all the way out in the train. He was so much better than Tom Throop would have been! And the fact that he was a bachelor soothed her conscience. She never had conspired against people before.

Tanagra came across the grass to meet them. "Hello, Hope. What fun." She looked at Hope. But she knew the colonel was there.

And did the colonel know she was there! His bright blue eyes were bugging out inches. She had made the appointment with Jean Mitchell for after lunch, Tanagra told him, laughing that wonderful laugh.

"Hope," she called upstairs, "I'm taking the colonel out to see the kennels. Come out, darling. Out beyond the garage."

Hope laughed. How different everything is when you have taken the carving knife out of the baby's hands and given it a nice safe rattle! Tanagra could take him out to see the kennels and over the fields and far away for all she cared. It was working wonderfully.

"Is Mrs. Tyler here?" the maid asked at the door. "Mrs. Mitchell on the phone."

Hope's hair rose a fraction. Could anything be wrong now? Oh, sweet heaven, no.

THE NAME THAT SIGNIFIES Quality AMONG DEODORANTS

D'SAPEER KILLS ODORS

Scientifically compounded of finest ingredients (no water, petroleum) D'SAPEER positively and instantly destroys cooking bathroom, sickroom and practically all obnoxious odors. Harmless to finest fabrics, a little sprayed on clothing or upholstery kills perspiration, medicine and pet odors. Economical. A little goes a long way.

Ask for D'SAPEER at department, drug, hardware stores and beauty shops, or order direct.

Prices (with atomizer) postpaid: 4 oz. bottle $1.25; 8 oz. bottle $1.65. Refills (without atomizer) 4 oz. bottle 60¢; 8 oz. bottle $1.00; Atomizer 65¢.

BAILEY, PRIHODA & CO., Mfrs.
303 W. Kalamazoo Ave., Kalamazoo 11, Mich.

The Aristocrat of Deodorants D'SAPEER

LUMINALL

The paint that changed the nation's painting hab

free Send for Decorator's Chart

Shows many different color schemes of rug draperies, upholstery, etc., for various roo and gives the right color of wall for ea scheme. Send your name and 10 cents f deluxe booklet, "Short Course in Interior De orating," with rooms shown in color.

NATIONAL CHEMICAL & MFG. C
3622 South May Street, Dept. E, Chicago 9

"There must be an easier way to kill Roaches"

There is! It's Peterman Roach Killer! Now comes with or without DDT! Roaches get into the best of homes. That's bad! But Peterman gets rid of 'em fast. That's good! Just sprinkle this odorless powder around drains, on floor. Works day and night. Must be good . . . America's best-liked roach destroyer.

PETERMAN
ROACH KILLER

MOST MODERN INVENTION FOR FOOT COMFORT IN YEARS. Their primary purpose is to level and alter the posture of the foot, give better body balance and protect the feet from over-riding the outside of the shoes, and whetting off heels, by raising the outer border, with soft, spongy air-cushions. AIR-FLOW ADJUSTABLE CUBOID FOOT LEVELERS are light and airy, made to fit any size shoe—interchangeable, they combine the latest modern features for adjusting the arches to the needs of the individual foot. Wear same size as shoes. Write Factory direct. Do it now. We pay postage if money accompanies order.

C. H. STEMMONS MFG. CO.
Dept. 12 Kansas City 2, Mo.

LEARN
MILLINERY
AT HOME

Design and make exclusive hats under personal direction of one of America's noted designers. Complete materials, blocks, etc., furnished. Every step illustrated. You make exclusive salable hats right from the start. We teach you how to start a profitable business in spare time. Low cost and easy terms. Expert milliners are in demand. Free National Placement Dept. Send for free catalog.

LOUIE MILLER SCHOOL OF MILLINERY
225 N. Wabash Ave., Dept. 35, Chicago 1, Ill.

It could. She ran and got Tanagra and Tanagra phoned Mrs. Mitchell. Then she came into the room and announced with superb self-control that the Mitchell place was sold. The three sat and said nothing. The colonel had lost a home, Tanagra had lost a whacking commission, but Hope thought it was hardest on her. It made such a fool of her! If Wayne knew what she had done! Of course there was just a chance, now the colonel and Tanagra had met, that it might continue.

"There isn't another thing in this town. Or any town around," Tanagra said bluntly.

The colonel was furious. He had planned to go look at a place in New Jersey today. Tanagra did not like men who got furious. "New Jersey!" She laughed. She linked it with the Utah badlands and the Black Hole of Calcutta. He pulled out a timetable to see when he could get a train.

Tanagra turned to Hope. "Wayne was asking me about an Afghan hound. I dropped him a line about one yesterday. I'll take him to see it this week end if he comes out."

She nodded numbly and followed Tanagra into the dining room. She couldn't eat, she was still holding a cocktail glass of her everlasting old tomato juice untouched. She turned to the maid beside her to shake her head and then gasped.

"Sweetbreads," she burst out. "Oh, I'm so sorry—but—I do like—sweetbreads," and she burst into tears.

"Nothing like hitting your guests' tastes," Tanagra said. "They aren't usually so uproarious about it—but glad you're pleased."

The colonel laughed and Tanagra laughed and Hope choked over every mouthful because now she knew, no matter how black it looked, everything would come out all right.

"Telephone, Mrs. Tyler."

---

If you don't claim too much intelligence, people will give you credit for more than you have.

—ANON.

---

"Take the message, Tillie." Tanagra gestured her despair to the colonel. "What's the use? Another fine fellow about to hate me because I can't find him a house."

He patted her hand. "Now, my dear Tanagra, you take it too much to heart. You give too much of yourself."

She got up. "Of course it might be a listing, Archie. A hundred-acre farm with a swimming pool and a squash court."

They didn't hear Tanagra answering. And she didn't come back. They waited and waited. Then Hope listened and hurried into Tanagra's office. There was Tanagra with her head in her arms, sobbing.

"Tanagra!"

She looked up. Her make-up was horribly streaked, her hair streaming down. "It's Sin. He's coming home—and he's going to sta-a-ay." She blubbered. Just like Hope. Just like anyone. "He's probably going to write a book. I'm such a fool about that guy—it's thrown me off my stride." She blew her nose. "Aren't we fools, Hope?"

Hope put her arms around her and they wept together over women—and men—and love.

"Tanagra, my dear," the colonel said when he got a chance, "if something should come on the market—large or small—not too far away, of course ——"

"I wouldn't know about it. I wouldn't know if the state of Connecticut came on the market tied up in blue ribbon. You'd better take that place in New Jersey. New Jersey's wonderful. God's country."

Wayne was awfully funny on the phone. He didn't know Hope had gone to Connecticut and he never heard of Archie and he couldn't remember who was called Little Duck. He just kept asking her if she felt all right. She laughed and laughed. It was so silly of his mother to tell him those stories about women getting queer notions. Such nonsense!

"I feel wonderful, darling. I'm just trying to tell you we've bought it—Little Duck—our house."

Pond's Make-up Pat

"Water-Colors"
Pond's new Make-up Pat washes gorgeously smooth, natural color over your face. Brings you radiance . . . glow!

"Camouflages"
Make-up Pat has a genius for hiding little blemishes and freckles. Gives your skin a young, "poreless" finish.

"De-Shines"
No more shiny nose! Make-up Pat gives your whole face a velvety, just-made-up look that lasts and lasts!

"Smooth... lasting... natural make-up— I love it!"

MISS EVELYN BYRD LAPRADE, beautiful society favorite, has glowing praise for Pond's Make-up Pat.

Pond's Make-up Pat protects skin against outside dust and weather. Wear it every day! 39¢ plus tax.

Pond's double-formula discovery makes *light shades fresher . . . . . dark shades richer

Now—a cake make-up with unfailingly lovely, natural shades—Pond's new Make-up Pat!

No single formula for cake make-up works equally well for all shades, Pond's discovered. So Pond's Make-up Pat has a double formula.

A featherweight formula for the lighter shades makes the color go on sheer, soft-toned. Never thick and chalky.

A richer formula for the darker shades brings deep, rosy radiance to brunette skin. Never that false, yellow-tan look.

And Make-up Pat is so wonderfully easy to apply! Just smooth it on sparingly with a moistened sponge or cotton. While still moist, blend smooth with your fingertips. Your complexion looks smooth . . . flawless . . . radiant!

on Millions of Lips...

On millions of lips you will find, each day, the tumbler "Park Avenue" by Federal. You have seen it! You have used it! It is the most famous tumbler ever made.

And, in millions of discriminating homes (including your own) you will always find Tumblers, Tableware, Kitchenware, Occasional Pieces, Beverage Sets and Ornamental Pieces fashioned by Federal.

So when you buy glassware, look for the Shield Ⓕ of Federal. It stands for fine design and craftsmanship in utility glassware continuously demonstrated during 46 years of quality manufacture.

Let the sparkling beauty of Federal-fashioned glassware give unusual distinction to your daily service.

THE FEDERAL GLASS COMPANY
COLUMBUS 7, OHIO

Ⓕ
UTILITY Glassware
Fashioned by Federal
ADDS DISTINCTION TO YOUR DAILY SERVICE

INTERNATIONAL

Charming Ilka Chase, like her Miss Tilli Bean, comes from Quaker stock.

was staying at the same house, but the little American girl held her own.

Like Tilli Bean, Ilka Chase comes direct from Quaker stock, and like Tilli, little Ilka used the "thee" of the Friends right through her childhood. But Tilli Bean went to Europe to live, and there the two figures, real and fictitious, part. Tilli Bean got herself a job in a high-class dressmaking establishment in Paris, and in due time became a famous dress designer with a line of beaux that were the pick of the international market. In fact, clothes and sex run a close race for interest in the story. We are betting on the clothes.

• • •

We know a teacher in high school who has two pupils in her classes who cannot read. Another teacher we know, in the second grade, says that she is obliged to promote children whether they can read or not, lest they get an inferiority complex. This may be extreme, but the fact remains that reading comes hard to millions of Americans. The majority of people read only if they are obliged to. Tabloids are the popular newspapers because in them people can look at pictures instead of words. At Columbia University, in New York, tests have been made in the reading habits of ordinary persons, and the revelations of illiteracy and semi-illiteracy are scandalous. And whose fault is it? Apparently it is the fault of those who do the writing. They use long words and long sentences and too many clauses, and the reader gets tired or bored.

But there's a book out now which could change all this. It is a book which every teacher and politician and clubwoman and research worker and clerk and minister and labor delegate and ad writer and lawyer and government official would do well to read. It is THE ART OF PLAIN TALK, by Rudolf Flesch, and it tells you "how to speak and write so that people understand what you mean"—just that.

It is a model of simplicity itself. The author has worked out a formula for clarity, and exercises for putting the formula into practice. Here are a few suggestions picked out at random: "Try to keep sentences under twenty words." (Tests have shown that the sentence of 8 words is very easy; of 11 words, easy; of 14 words, fairly easy; of 17 words, standard; of 21 words, fairly difficult; of 25 words, difficult; of 29 or more words, very difficult.) "Don't make the memo a sermon or prolonged lecture or a display of book learning. Make up a Gobbledygook Dictionary and make it unpopular to use any word on the list." ("Gobbledygook" means big foolish words and wasted words.) "Do not use rhetorical questions. Do not use metaphors without an explanation. Do not use irony." (Half the people won't get it.) As the author says, this is a book for everyone who has to speak or write to anyone outside his or her own family; the family will tell you soon enough if they don't understand.

UNDER-COVER STUFF

(Continued from Page 4)

Chips, the dog hero of the invasion of Sicily, was awarded the Silver Star. Now he is home with his family in Pleasantville, New York, but like so many of the men who went through the campaign with him, he is still unadjusted. "He doesn't seem to wag his tail as much as before going to war," his master says, "but I suppose he is suffering from battle fatigue." Chips was sired by a Husky and born of a part-collie and part-shepherd. Besides the Silver Star he was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross, but the War Department revoked the latter because of protests from persons who believed such medals should be reserved for human beings. During campaign days romance was not encouraged among the dogs, but Chips and Mena, a German shepherd, did have an affair, and although Mena suffered shell shock in the first North Africa landings, her nine pups were born healthy and normal. Four of them, Marquis, Gus, Butch and Runt, were sent home for basic training and later entered military service. Chips is one of the many characters from real life in John M. Behan's DOGS OF WAR.

INTERNATIONAL

Johnny hugs his "Chips," the only Silver Star war dog.

• • •

Fletcher Pratt, the author of THE NAVY'S WAR and FLEET AGAINST JAPAN, is a first-class historian and a man of parts in every way. He also has a very pretty wife. Not only pretty, but practical, and a valuable person to have about when you need a taxicab. She can whistle louder than any doorman in New York.

REPRINTED PERMISSION THE NEW YORKER
COPYRIGHT THE F.-R. PUBLISHING CORPORATION

"But you're mistaken, I assure you. I was whistling for a cab."

And speaking of whistling: Peggy Joyce, the much-married, once rented her house in New York to George Kaufman, the playwright. In the master-mistress bedroom was a gold whistle—18-carat, we're sure—Miss Joyce never felt safe in her bedroom, she told Mr. Kaufman, without it. Mrs. Pratt's whistle, incidentally, is of the lungs.

• • •

Kathleen Winsor, we learned from spending a week under the same roof with her, is a girl of character. The world knows how she went into seclusion for five years, immersed herself in the Restoration Period, and finally brought forth FOREVER AMBER. She entered the novitiate as a sophomore in college when she married another sophomore in college and began reading over his history notes. She ended it on the eve of her husband's departure for the Pacific. In fact, as we recall, the two of them put the manuscript in the mailbox on the night before Bob went away. But on the ranch where we met her last fall, she showed other—if lesser—marks of the strong-minded will-to-do. No one could pick up a pencil with her toes the way Kay Winsor could. In fact, she was called The Foot. It was an art she had worked on, and she was as nonchalant about picking up that pencil as most girls are with a cigarette. (As a matter of fact, Miss Winsor does not smoke, nor does she take a cocktail, nor does she—in spite of Amber's proclivities—swear.)

INTERNATIONAL

This is not Kathleen, but if she keeps practicing it could be.

Feet were quite a topic on the ranch. It seems that on the street Kay always wears high-heeled, open-toed and open-heeled shoes, especially made for her. The one winter that she spent in New York was one of our coldest and slushiest, but never an overshoe and never a pair of rubbers—never any compromise—for the author of F. A. Before the trip to the ranch, she had never been on a horse. But she persisted in daily riding long after 6′ 3″ Bob, her marine-hero All-American football husband, was wearied and lame and sore. She also took up table tennis for the first time.

While she was in New York she began studying the art market with a view to buying some pictures. (There's a wonderful liberty of choice when you've written a book like hers and sold it to the movies.) Miss Winsor now knows her Picassos and her Renoirs and her Georgiana O'Keefes and her Marins. When she and Bob planned the South American trip of this past winter-spring, she set herself the task of knowing Spanish. And we feel entirely confident that she now speaks Spanish and refuses a word of English to all the Latin Americans she comes across, though Bob, we feel quite as sure, sticks to English. But we have no confirmation of all this.

(Continued on Page 128)

Grand Colonial MOOD OF TRANQUILITY, A PICTURIZATION

Only WALL
STERL

...ember! Del Monte puts flavor first
In Growing
n Picking
, Packing Testing

If it matches pattern belong of our own Vir hospitality, simpl
exclusive third-d subtle facet of d
... you'll know

White Cream Style
Golden Cream Style
Golden Whole Kernel

3 Styles—for all around corn enjoyment

We RN

©1946 WALLACE SILVERSMITHS, WALLINGFORD,

...in Mohawk Foundation Colors

These BRADLEE EMBOSSED WILTONS

Mohawk Foundation Colors have been preharmonized with prevailing color trends in home decorating.

In the master bedroom—The Dusty Rose accents the beauty of the rose designs now so prevalent in patterned drapes and flatters blue paper and paints.

In a living room—The China Blue compliments the wines and greys now so widely used in allied house furnishings.

In the dining room—The Maple Tan harmonizes perfectly with and brings out the beauty of old and new wood finishes.

Bradlee Embossed Wilton has an all wool pile, carefully blended from many of the world's finest virgin carpet wools to give durability, resiliency, color purity and sparkling beauty. Bradlee may be had in the eight colors pictured below.

Bradlee Embossed Wilton is but one of the Mohawk family of distinguished carpets—from the only mill that makes all weaves of carpet.

MOHAWK RUGS and CARPETS

Beauty that endures

MOHAWK CARPET MILLS, Inc. ▪ AMSTERDAM, N.Y.

Mauve

Beige

Apple Green

Maple Tan

Dawn Grey

Spanish Wine

China Blue

Dusty Rose

CAN AMERICA BE PROSPEROUS IN A SEA OF HUMAN MISERY?

(Continued from Page 35)

Mrs. Roosevelt," she asked in her low, active voice, "do you think the women America—or any of America—really erstand the conditions overseas?"

No," said Mrs. Roosevelt, and she shook head. "None of us could understand how ble things are in Europe, without going actually seeing them. Even pictures of mbing remain only pictures to us, unless ave stood among the rubble and destruc- ourselves, as you and I have. That is those of us who have been in Europe Asia must try to stir the sympathetic ination of the rest, so that they will at understand with their hearts that the for help is desperate."

was significant that the mahogany cu- at Mrs. Roosevelt's elbow held no groan- lates of angel cake and crumpets today; was a plate of buttered brown-bread . There was a plate of small cookies. was all. On the tea table, a fine silver gian service stood against the cloth of ow linen, the blue-dragon teacups of a ern once carried in every five-and-ten- store. Behind Mrs. Roosevelt hung half en unpretentious water colors of Venice; to them is a set of rare and precious er sunsets. Across the room a fine ox- l Chinese vase stands a few feet from nch of jonquils and snapdragons in a glass holder. On a plain, green sofa, Malvina Thompson sat and knitted a 's pink woollies; at her elbow was Na- on's elegant, rococo chocolate set in a display case. Overstuffed chairs, with ght splash of flowers on their slip covers, ed a standing mahogany bridge lamp, h a Park Avenue decorator would im- ately junk.

is is a room in which a busy woman can her friends at ease; it was never meant ate functions or elbow-length kid gloves rties at which "medals will be worn." , such a formal world seems as obsolete muel Insull.

The devastated world must be rebuilt," ated Mrs. Roosevelt. "And I think we'd r face the fact that either we will take ead in building it, or Russia will. Cer- y Great Britain cannot do it. She will, nk, rehabilitate herself, and do it very but there will be no margin left over for ng on the bigger job. So if we Ameri- don't restore the ruined countries, who Russia will?"

w Mrs. Roosevelt, the hostess, leaned from the dainty ritual of the teacups became Eleanor Roosevelt, spokesman he hungry and oppressed. Her gestures me more ample and precise. She was a haired Portia, entering her earnest and dered plea:

Ve Americans," she said softly, "cannot t to live on a little island of prosperity sea of human misery. If we try to, thing frightful will happen to us, and we be swamped too.

Ve cannot make our political system, view of life, seem appealing to other es, if we are withholding friendly help them in the way of food. That would y make them our enemies, drive them the arms of a Russia which appears to more sympathy for their troubles."

RE was a little silence, broken by a taxi horn outside in the square. Mrs. evelt spoke intensely, her eyes never ng those of her listeners.

Mind you," she said, "I am not saying ing disagreeable about Russia; if it had been for the Russian war effort, there t be no Europe left today. We must re- ber that. And maybe"—her mind spec- d for a moment—"maybe it would be d thing for Russia to do the rebuilding But if we don't want her to, if we think we ourselves have something better to ribute to the world, why, then we had r make sure that we do contribute it, n a way that shows our essential friend- s to other people when they are in le.

"Make no mistake. The world is in deep trouble today. Europe has disintegrated. The social structure, the underpinnings of all life are gone."

Mr. Gould set down his blue-and-white cup. "And it is unlikely that people who are faced with conditions as desperate as that will remain static in their political beliefs?"

Mrs. Roosevelt nodded. The pearl fleur-de-lis on her black crepe dress caught the light from the shaded lamp. She moved her hands (innocent of nail polish) in a platform-speaker's gesture of assent.

"Remember that the hard core of the Resistance movement in Europe was often the Communists, who were well trained and well disciplined. The Russians have really all they can do now, in winning security and more prosperity for their own people; but if we refuse to help the others, Europe may go Communist by default."

My Mother Loved Her Roses

By Jenny Lind Porter

My mother loved her roses. Each young bud
Was like a person to her: a small child
Who first looks out on life, o'er which the flood
Of hours is yet impending, and the wild,
Wild torrent of the years is yet to break.
My mother knew the Infinite could make
Far lovelier things, but still she ever flew Unto her secret thought: "God loved these too!"

My father loved the stars—and he could see
Beyond their baffling web of mystery.
He walked among them, like a saint apart,
And something of their splendor lit his heart;
My father loved ▪ Master's plan unfurled,
But mother loved the roses of the world!

"These are big matters, Mrs. Roosevelt," said Mrs. Gould. "Matters of state, and interesting to all of us as citizens. But is there nothing—nothing that we American women can do to help the Europeans more directly?"

Mrs. Roosevelt turned attentive eyes.

"Yes," she said. "That is one of the things I wanted to tell you about. I have a plan by which we can, each of us, do something to show friendship to a single European family in need. It is for a voluntary stream of offerings from individual American homes. I myself am now able to furnish lists of European families who stand in desperate need of food packages. I can give the names of schools in Europe to schools here, if a group of our children should wish to send their candy bars abroad. The kind heart of the individual American can do a great deal to show the individual European that we feel for them all as neighbors. Do you think the American women would like the idea?"

"I am sure they would," said Mrs. Gould.

The telephone in the hall rang and Miss Thompson moved to answer it. Washington wanted Mrs. Roosevelt? Washington must wait; this was a woman who has learned the art of one thing at a time.

"Little things mean so much," she went on. "I sent a box of candy to Princess Juliana in Holland, and I had the most thrilling letter back from her. It was the first candy her children had had since they left America. They live on exactly the same diet as the other Dutch children, you know; and, in Europe, that isn't much. The food allowance, in all the countries on the Continent, is only fifteen hundred calories a day; in Italy, I am shocked to hear, even that little may soon be cut in half."

"ARE there women's organizations on the Continent, as there are in England, who could help arrange for these food packages?" Mrs. Gould was very intent in her questioning; she, too, has visited Europe: in 1942 and again in 1945, just before the war's end, after the bad bombings had occurred. She has seen the pinched faces of the undernourished children.

"Yes, indeed," Mrs. Roosevelt nodded. "In Holland, for instance, there was a women's organization which attempted to feed the neediest during the war; twice it was suppressed by the Germans and forced to go underground. But it is operating today. This group has lists of children, of old people, of invalids—of all kinds of Hollanders to whom a food package from America might mean life itself.

"On the Continent, you know, nearly all the common articles of life have been destroyed. Besides the scarcity of food, there is a lack of paper and pencils for school children, pins and needles and thread and hairpins for adults. Such articles would be received with warm gratitude if American families chose to send them."

For a moment Mrs. Roosevelt was silent over the tragedy of a Europe reduced to rubble. But her resiliency returned. The widow of the late President gave her head a little shake and returned to a question of the type that always interests her most: What can be done about it? What is the course of action indicated for today, tomorrow—no later, surely, than next week?

"Some Americans still think we have done all we can for Europe already," put in Mrs. Gould. "They believe that our UNRRA contribution of food is all we need to meet."

The President's widow sat up straighter in her chair. (She is no lounger and she does not fidget as she talks. Mrs. Roosevelt, who is 61, belongs to the tradition that says a lady never raises her hand to her head in public, to the generation which learned posture by carrying a dictionary on its head.)

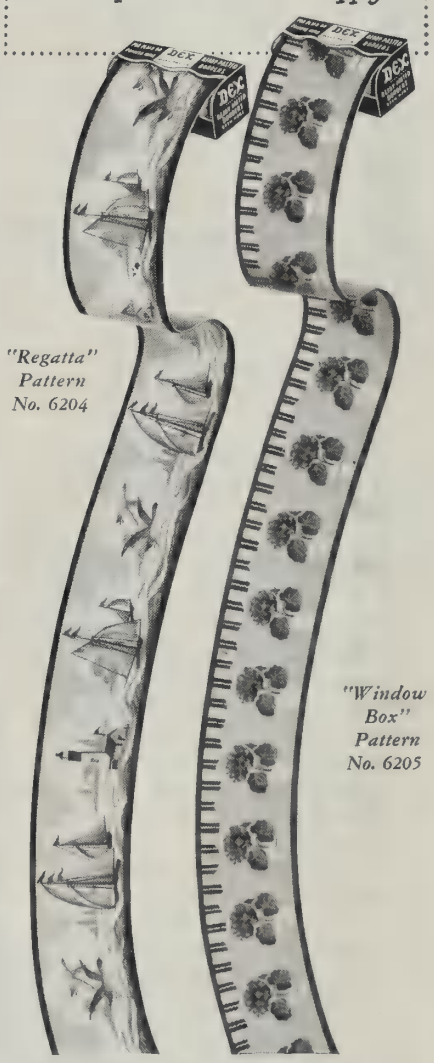
"We Americans are not doing all that we could do, for we are still a pioneer nation, a very wasteful nation. If we are willing to try, we can learn a greater economy in our use of food than we have ever practiced. And I do not think that such a change would even mean a serious sacrifice. We need give only a little more care and thought, as a gift to the desperately needy people overseas.

"Suppose that we decide that things—all the things we own—must be used to the greatest possible advantage. Do you see? That would entail going through our clothes closets and taking out the garments that are never worn, having them repaired, if necessary, and sending them abroad. No woman can feel that it is a great loss if she gives away the dress and coat she hasn't worn for the past twelve months; yet such a gift may mean a lot in Europe.

"And in the way of food," she went on, "all of us can learn to be far better housekeepers. It isn't really necessary that we eat three or four courses at a meal; most of us would just as lief eat two things for lunch as four things. And if we did, European lives might be saved—at a very minor sacrifice on our part.

"I should like to see slim meals become fashionable in America, as they are in Europe among the few families over there who

Make plain rooms "sing" with this touch of Spring



DEX MARK

Ready-Pasted Borders

FOR PLAIN, PAINTED OR PAPERED WALLS

Just Dip in Water... and Apply!

"Regatta" Pattern No. 6204

"Window Box" Pattern No. 6205

- Add a gay touch of color to walls, furniture, cabinets—around doors, windows, mirrors, too!
- 36 beautiful patterns for kitchen, bath, nursery, bed, dining and living rooms.
- Washable, fadeproof, guaranteed to stick.
- Cost as little as 15c per 12-ft. roll.
- At hardware, chain, drug, department and wallpaper stores everywhere.

Another Product of

UNITED WALLPAPER, INC.

Chicago 54, Illinois

COPYRIGHT 1946, UNITED WALLPAPER, INC.

"SOAPING" dulls hair—
Halo glorifies it!

Here's why your very first Halo Shampoo will leave your hair aglow with natural luster!

1. Halo reveals the true natural beauty of your hair the very first time you use it . . . leaves it shimmering with glorious highlights. 2. Even finest soaps leave dingy soap-film on hair. But Halo contains no soap. Made with a new patented ingredient it cannot leave soap-film! 3. Needs no lemon or vinegar after-rinse. Halo rinses away, quickly and completely! 4. Makes oceans of rich, fragrant lather, in hardest water. Leaves hair sweet, naturally radiant! 5. Carries away unsightly loose dandruff like magic! 6. Lets hair dry soft and manageable, easy to curl! 10¢ or larger sizes.

Reveals the Hidden Beauty of your Hair!

Cool off Feet with an Ice-Mint treat

Every day, people who suffer from tired, burning feet are enjoying quick, thrilling comfort by using Ice-Mint. Under the touch of this frosty-white medicinal cream, you actually feel tired muscles relax, as your feet respond almost instantly to its refreshing coolness.

Grand, too, to help soften corns and callouses. Get foot-happy today the easy Ice-Mint way. At drug and department stores. Or, send for FREE sample. Write Ice-Mint, Suite 45 P.O. Box 155, Buffalo, N. Y.

could, if they wished, eat more than their share. Nowhere in England did I get more than three courses—no, not even at the table of the King of England!"

Mr. Gould leaned forward. The marble clock on the mantelpiece chimed six. There was darkness over the park now, and the pool of light from the table lamp showed a deeper glow of gold.

"Is it your feeling," he asked, "that Americans owe these small sacrifices to the rest of the world because of our common humanity? Or do you feel that sending supplies to Europe is an act of enlightened selfishness—a sort of insurance, taken out to protect our own political future?"

"My feeling," said Mrs. Roosevelt—and she spoke quickly, eagerly, as if she had thought of the matter many times before—"my feeling is that we might, possibly, ignore Europe's needs and get along pretty well by ourselves for the next few years if we wished to be selfish and shortsighted to that degree. But that is because Americans today have a backlog of savings, which they are eager to spend for new consumers' goods. And this demand will keep our factories humming only until the savings accounts have been spent and the buying spree is ended.

"And then what? Suppose that we have allowed Europe to become, politically and economically, even more prostrate and helpless than she is today; what will happen when our own people no longer have the money to buy the goods we produce? Under such conditions we will have, in America, the dreary cycle of closing factories, falling values, unemployment, wholesale misery."

A moment's silence fell over the quiet, twilit little room. A child's voice crying "Com-ing" sounded from the street. The black Scotch terrier—the beloved Fala, fully recovered from his wounds—stretched himself and sank back at his mistress' feet.

"It is very simple, really," she continued, thinking out her sentences carefully as she spoke. "People who are not working cannot buy. We must help Europe to start to work again, perhaps even to train her industrially, so they can be our customers. We will have to do this thing through many methods, some of them governmental, for our own long-term benefit. But there is no conflict between the government-activated plans and the one we were discussing—the little human contributions of food and clothes and other needed articles from an individual American family to a grateful family in any of the devastated regions abroad."

"Now that war is over, is there still actual suffering in England?" asked Mrs. Gould, out of a memory of her trip to that country a year ago.

"Oh, yes," said Mrs. Roosevelt. "Life in England is very drab. Food is even harder to obtain than it was during the war, than you and I remember it, and the only differences peace has brought are the disappearance of the bombs and the blackout and the fact that the men are beginning to come home. I felt that some of the Englishwomen who have stood up so magnificently, so patiently, throughout the war, are beginning to say to themselves, 'Now I deserve a rest.' And that attitude makes it even harder for them to go on doing the necessary things. England still needs our help.

"But I would like to impress one thing on you," she said, and she chose her words very slowly and precisely, as if she were reading them off an invisible manuscript. "That is the fact that we have obligations to Russia, too; she must rebuild devastated regions of her own. Russia has never brought up this matter, but we cannot forget her people's suffering, just because they do not complain. Back of much that is hard to understand in the Russian foreign policy, I believe, is this dreadful hardship of her citizens."

Mr. Gould interrupted: "You do not regard it, as so many do, as appeasement to yield to the necessities of a nation like Russia?"

Mrs. Roosevelt's gestures were emphat ample, precise. "I do not regard as appea ment anything which is fair, or which i recognition of the legitimate aspiration of a nation. But"—there was a moment of st ness, of suspense—"I regard as equally i portant our own obligation to stand up what we think are the rights of human bein to defend the principles we believe to essential for civilization and progress."

Mr. Gould smiled. "And that was why spoke up against the Russian delegate, Vishinsky, in favor of the political minorit the displaced persons who did not wish to sent back into Russian-dominated areas

Mrs. Roosevelt nodded. "That was motive. And the Russians seemed willing respect my criticism because they knew was sincere, and that I was not attack them out of mere dislike for them as Russia

"I believe," she went on—and she again very earnest; her eyes shifted rapi from face to face, as if to gauge the respo to what she had to say—"I believe that Russians have very great tenacity and mendous powers of concentration. None their delegates to London ever misse session, none of them ever left early or rived late. They were serious about all matters in debate, and ardent in their be that their solution was the right one. I th they expect to wear other people down believing harder in their way of life than imagine any of us do in ours. They are prised to find someone from a liberal cou like ours ready to plead for his belie warmly as a Communist defends his own this happens, the Russians are puzzled, fail to understand why we consider principle at stake so portant, but they do spect honesty and will ness to work for convictions, whatever may be."

> We are not so sensible of the greatest health, as of the least sickness.
> —B. FRANKLIN.

The front door b open and a young ma a very tall young ma invaded the room. "Hello, mummy," called. "Cookies left?" It was John Ro velt. He swooped toward the fragile cur picked up a handful of cakes and was o another room. Mrs. Roosevelt followed smiling, with her eyes.

"The Russians are very different in s other ways," she said. "When their me off to war, all contact with the families c to an end; there is no regular mail ser for the Russian army. American par would hardly stand for that. And ima what our men would say if they drew Army pay for four full years, as happene the Russians."

"They weren't paid for four years?" a Mr. Gould.

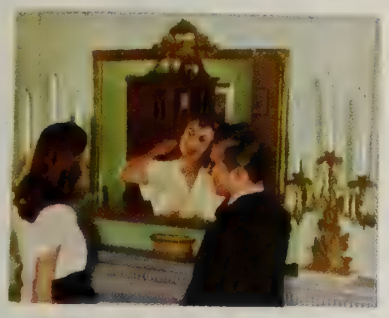
Mrs. Roosevelt shook her head.

"But, you know, they are awfully sim to us, in other ways," she said, and her returned to the chatty tones of the ho talking over a neighbor's little crot among friends. "Look at the dele Russia sent to UNO. Twenty-five ago, I dare say, most of these men were servants or clerks. Some of them may worked with their hands. Now, such can feel at home with us Americans, bec ours is a country where the same changes of position constantly occur. when the Russians come up against British, with their tradition of states ship and of public service running in fam they are not so much at ease.



"The British, after all, sometimes ma feel as if they were looking down their at us. I think they tend to have the effect upon the Russians. All three na will have to work together for a long before we can understand how the d ences in background and type of civiliz have brought about our separate viewp and our points of conflict."

"Will UNO make this easier?" a Mrs. Gould. "Did you feel, in London, the Assembly was bringing about an crease of understanding between the sonalities who disagreed? Or did you

(Continued on Page 134)

WANT TO WAKE UP YOUR HOME?

A little extra GLASS means a lot of extra charm!

A FRAMED PLATE GLASS MIRROR over your mantel gives charm and color to the living room. Makes it seem bigger, brighter and more modern. Lots of styles to choose from.

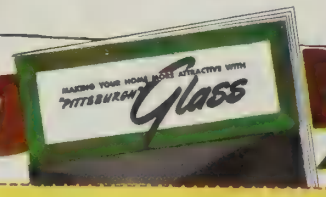
A FULL-LENGTH DOOR MIRROR of Pittsburgh Plate Glass is the best way to find out how you really look from head to toe. (Even for a man of 16 with his first dinner jacket!)

A SMART WALL MIRROR over a dainty-skirted vanity . . . and a lovely vanity top of mirrored Plate Glass: there's a recipe guaranteed to wake up the drowsiest bedroom!

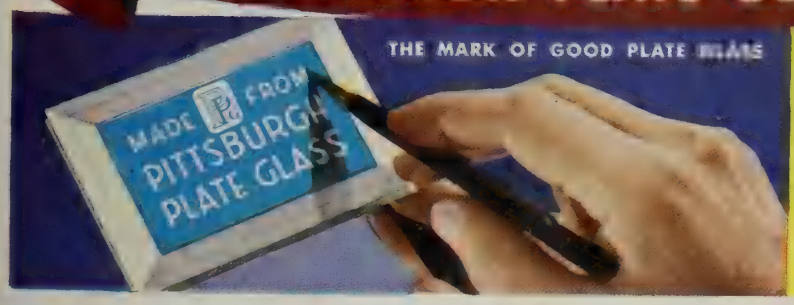
PLATE GLASS FURNITURE TOPS do double duty in your home. They protect the fine finish of your furniture from the burns left by neglected cigarettes, the stains of spilled cosmetics, the white rings caused by damp tumblers. And they also add a note of decorative smartness to your rooms with their polished brightness.

PLANNING TO BUILD?

NOW—BIG WINDOWS without chilly downdrafts and high heating costs. The double-glazed insulating unit—Twindow—insulates windows, adds to comfort the year round.



WALLS OR WAINSCOT of Carrara Glass creates a bathroom or kitchen that's exceptionally beautiful, extremely practical. Easy to clean. Permanently bright. Ten colors available.



PC GLASS BLOCKS. They transmit light, preserve privacy, insulate and beautify. You'll find them especially attractive around your front door, where they'll help to light your hall as well as glamorize the entrance.

You can get these items at your favorite department or furniture store.

PITTSBURGH PLATE GLASS COMPANY

Free Booklet

Scores of practical suggestions for beautifying your present home . . . for building greater beauty and usefulness into your new home . . . with mirrors and Plate Glass. Send the coupon for your free copy. Crammed with ideas. Dozens of full-color illustrations.

Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company
2116-6 Grant Building, Pittsburgh 19, Pa.

Please send me, without obligation, your new, free booklet entitled "Making Your Home More Attractive with Pittsburgh Glass."

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

"PITTSBURGH" stands for Quality Glass and Paint

MRS. ANTHONY J. DREXEL, III, one of America's most beautiful society leaders. She dramatizes the exquisite planes of her face with the flawless color flattery of Pond's new "sheer-gauge" powder. "I love the way it goes on," Mrs. Drexel says. "The color looks so excitingly soft and fresh!"

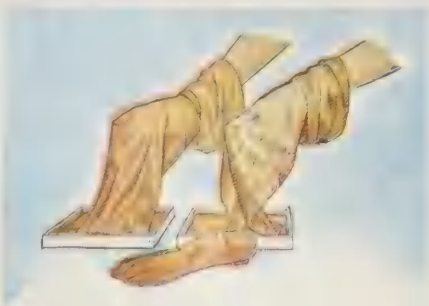
Why does Pond's powder have such gorgeous, extra-smooth color "ON"?



Pond's powder is "Sheer-gauge"!

All face powders are not alike! And similar shades "in the box" can look quite different on your skin. That's why society beauties are careful to choose a powder that's "sheer-gauge." Like Mrs. Anthony J. Drexel, III, they've found that Pond's "sheer-gauge" powder gives smoother, lovelier color on the face. No clots of thick color . . . no graininess. Just sheer, clinging, fine-textured color flattery! Now every one of Pond's luscious Dreamflower shades goes on "sheer-gauge." Choose yours today!

Special!
Pond's Make-up Trio

A lovely big box of Pond's Dreamflower Powder, with matching Pond's "Lips" and Pond's "Cheeks." It's a $1 value for only 79¢, plus tax. Wonderful for prizes . . . for gifts and for *you!

"Sheer-gauge" means more glamorous color "on"!

Two stockings—same shade in the box—but so different "on"! Pond's Dreamflower Powder shades look lovelier "on" because they're so "sheer-gauge"!

Pond's Dreamflower Powder

—made "sheer-gauge" by experts in beauty!

THE PREREQUISITE FOR PEACE

(Continued from Page 6)

primarily, not on peace as an end in itself, but on its condition: the creation of enforceable international law. And we should discount the UNO, in its present form and structure, as a means of creating, interpreting, adjudicating, and enforcing, a law of nations.

We must get clear in our minds, first, the inexorable necessity of creating a law of nations; second, the minimum requirements of such law, and the minimum adherents necessary to its creation and enforcement; third, the minimum institutions required for creating, upholding and enforcing that law; and, fourth, the obstacles in its way, and the means of overcoming or circumventing them.

Whether we ever find the right answers to anything depends on whether we ask the right questions in the first place. It takes more than good will; it takes serious, methodical thought to construct, even in one's own imagination, an international order of peace which is more than a series of transient capitulations from one side or the other, and ephemeral truces.

Disarming any nation before there are other instruments for its protection is not an advance in peace, but invitation to open or veiled aggression. No negative policies are sufficient to avert war or protect civilization.

It takes heroic intellectual and moral effort, and the answer to our correspondents cannot, therefore, be contained in a single editorial such as this one. We shall return to it, we humbly hope, logically and constructively, again and again and again.

SERGEANT MICKEY AND GENERAL IKE

(Continued from Page 26)

room and kitchen. On Sundays the general would get into old uniform trousers and a khaki shirt and the commander would put on slacks and a white shirt and canvas golf jacket and they would knock golf balls around in the big yard. Sometimes the three of us would play catch. The general liked that. He used to play a lot of baseball and for a while, I've heard, played semipro ball. He has a couple of crooked fingers that I'm told go back to those days.

At Telegraph Cottage we got Telek. Telek was—Telek still is—a black Scottie, given to the boss by his staff. Telek was quite a pup; his father must have been a dead-end kid. He could think of more things to do than any dog I ever ran into. Like taking the logs out of the fireplace after I had laid the fire, and spreading them all over the living room.

All that summer and into the fall we knew, of course, that we were getting ready to go somewhere. We didn't know where. I mean, naturally, that I didn't know where. The boss did and, of course, Butch did. It was a summer of conferences for the boss—in London at headquarters, in the Dorchester at lunches and dinners, and sometimes at Telegraph Cottage.

A few things stick out in memory. There was the time that the boss went to Chequers to visit Prime Minister Churchill and I packed for him and forgot to include his pajamas. When the Prime Minister's man unpacked, he couldn't find any pajamas, naturally enough, so he gave the boss one of the P.M.'s nightshirts. It didn't fit very well. About two o'clock that morning the general woke out of a terrible dream about somebody strangling him. Something was—the Churchill nightgown had worked up until it was around his neck, and he was all tangled up in it, choking. He got it off and slept the rest of the night in the raw.

I heard about this from the boss, and from other people who were along, when they got back. The boss thought it was funny by that time, but he said that when he woke up with that big nightgown choking him all he wanted was to get his hands on Mickey McKeogh.

New type DEODORANT ENDS PERSPIRATION WORRIES

1. A new type fluffy-light cream that stops underarm odor, checks perspiration safely.

2. Easier to use—goes on quicker—disappears in a jiffy. Leaves no sticky film.

3. Will not harm your clothing. Antiseptic and soothing to use in underarm areas.

4. Economical—gives more for your money than other leading brands. Buy Etiquet today at a toilet goods counter.

10¢ AND 39¢ plus tax

it's Etiquet

Formula Patented
No other like it

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

We left England the morning of November 1, flying from Bournemouth in a convoy of B-17's and starting in the rain. Fifteen hours later we came down at Gibraltar.

The general went to Africa with Commander Butcher on November 23. The next day I went with the office staff and the rest. We stopped at Oran to pick up fighter escort for our C-47 and then went on into Algiers. We got there about five o'clock in the evening, landing at Maison Blanche field. We drove into Algiers and there were plenty of signs of fighting—burned-out trucks and tanks, rubble in the streets, big holes. We got to headquarters in the St. George Hotel. It had been a nice hotel once. Now it looked as headquarters always looks—hurried and busy and with telegraph wires looped all around, fastened to whatever the Signal Corps boys found handiest.

The general was in his office. He looked worn and tired and he looked angry. He told me to get his stuff, which had come in the truck, up to the house and to try to get things fixed up enough so he could spend the night there.

The house was a big villa and turned out to be a beautiful place, although the boss never really liked it. He thought it was too big. There were a library, living room, music room, parlor, dining room, kitchen, seven bedrooms and two bathrooms, and quarters in the basement for some of the staff.

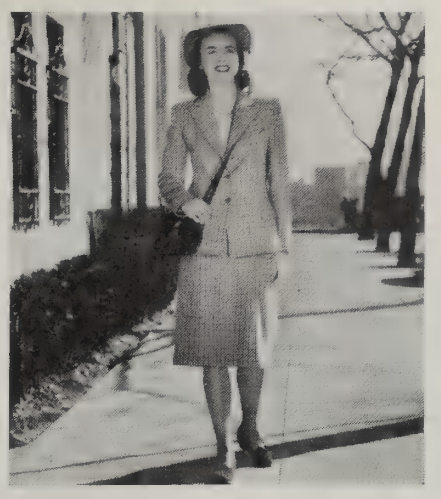
I slept in a kind of cloakroom at first on a makeshift bed. Telek slept there, too; actually it was more Telek's room and he let me share it.

About midnight all hell broke loose. It was a real raid, concentrated on the dock area, and it was more noise than I'd ever heard before in my life.

The general looked almost as tired in the morning as he had the night before. When I asked he said he hadn't had much sleep; he said how could he, with all that noise? That was about all he ever said about air raids. Sometimes a raid would come while he was eating dinner and the guests would all get up and go look out. He didn't usually. He'd say he'd be damned if he was going to let the Germans interfere with his dinner.

He didn't actually say just "damn." I suppose everybody knows he uses a good deal of profanity, because there have been items about it in the newspapers. He does, although it isn't the kind of talk a good many men use in the Army. His profanity is pretty clean.

But there were references to it in newspapers, and one nice lady out in Texas wrote him a letter about it. She said he ought to pray instead of cursing. The general was sort of annoyed by that, and hurt too. He said, "Damn it"—but he didn't really say just "damn it"—"I don't curse. I just use some words as adjectives." That was true, but I don't suppose the lady in Texas would have understood that it made a difference.



I used to write Mrs. Eisenhower every couple weeks, telling her how the boss was and sometimes asking her to send little things I knew he needed—like clothing and a kind of dehydrated noodle soup we all liked, and more Western stories. It was sort of funny, considering the amount of shooting we were getting most nights, that he still wanted stories full of six-shooters and barroom brawls, but he did. He didn't insist on that sort of thing in movies. He liked comedies. Abbott and Costello, Frank Morgan, Bing Crosby and Betty Hutton are favorites of his. He never liked war pictures, and he didn't like tear-jerkers or pictures with too much love in them.

In the music room every couple of weeks we would have movies and everybody would go: the guests who happened to be there, the other generals who were around—Spaatz,

Work hard and save your money, and when you are old, you can have the things that only the young can enjoy.

—The Public Speaker Treasure Chest. (Harper).

WHY DO AMERICAN GIRLS RATE FIRST FOR CHARM?

Take-it-easy clothes. Skylarking comfort—that's for you! Easy-shouldered suits, good-to-walk-in shoes. And comfort-insurance for "difficult" days. So, the smart gals choose the sanitary napkin that's first for softness—Modess! 3 out of 4 voted it softer to the touch, in a nation poll.

Social Security. Poise? You've plenty! Growing up with boys, dancing lessons, have taught you how to forget yourself, have fun! Poise-polisher—the napkin that's first for safety! Hospital-tested Modess, which 209 nurses found less likely to strike through than leading layer-type napkins.

That scrubbed look. Scads of soap-and-water—every day! You're spring-breeze dainty in every detail! So again it's Modess for you. First napkin to bring you this priceless daintiness aid—a unique, triple-proved deodorant sealed right in.

Those artful extras. You're a smoothie with the powder puff, lipstick brush—all the "pluses" of super-grooming. And when it comes to comfort-extras, at no extra cost—Modess gives them to you. And does it first! No wonder more and more girls are saying, 'I'll take Modess!" Box of 12, full-size or Junior size, only 22¢.

First for softness
MODESS

Smith and Davis usually—Admiral Cunningham and his aide, the whole office staff and the chauffeurs and boys who worked in the house, everybody. Sometimes there would be somebody who was good at the piano and everybody would sing—West Point songs and the Artillery Song and sometimes Western songs. It was along then sometime that the general got to singing the song about roses—"Get me one dozen roses, put my heart in beside them"—and he sang it for weeks, usually when he was taking a bath.

Incidentally, he isn't bald, as you'd sometimes think from his pictures. His hair is light in color and not very thick, but it's there. It's not so much there that he has to use a comb; a brush will do. But it's there.

He made me a tech sergeant on January 21, after he returned from the Casablanca conference. A few days later, General Marshall came to visit us. The boss moved out of his room so the Chief of Staff could have it. As always when we had a very high-ranking guest, I was detailed to act as his personal orderly. When he arrived I got his baggage up to the boss's room, very snappy. Then I waited and after a few minutes I heard the two generals coming with Telek behind them. They came in with Telek and I stood as stiff as I could and looked straight ahead.

"General," the boss said, "this is my sergeant, Mickey."

I stood there and didn't know quite what to say or do, because this was the top man in the whole Army, and it's unusual for a G. I. to meet the top man in any army. He was very pleasant and said he was glad to know me and hoped I was taking good care of the general.

Out of the corner of my eye I saw Telek sniffing around the way dogs do, and I got a little uneasy. He seemed particularly interested in the bed, which had a nice red satin cover on it. Then, when he decided the boss wasn't looking, he jumped up on the bed. I moved—but not quite fast enough. I made a grab at him and threw him out and everything was pretty confusing, with Telek—he was less than a year old, but he knew bet because we had told him often enough—y ping his head off.

The boss looked at Telek and then he sa "Mickey, when he does things like that, h your dog."

Then General Marshall started to lau I guess he knows dogs. He said obviou Telek didn't like the idea of his master bei put out of his own room and was just showi what he thought of the whole business.

The next thing that happened was Pear It's difficult to tell about first meeting Pear All I can be sure of is that a car came w some visiting firemen and I went down help, as I always did, and there was Pear

She was a Wac with an overseas cap do over one eye a little and she was very sm behind the wheel of a big car. She was t prettiest girl I'd seen for a long time, with bluest eyes. She was very military-look as far as her uniform went. But her e weren't military at all.

I went around to her side of the car a said, "Hello."

"Hello, sergeant," she said. Her voice v just as nice as the rest of her.

Maybe I would have said something e but then I had to help take the luggage up the house. By the time I got back, the and the Wac weren't there any more. N day I went down to the headquarters of and kept my eyes open and sure enough, new Wac was there. I found her and sa "Hello," and she said, "Hello, sergeant Her eyes were still blue. She was a little I'm not very tall myself and she was about the right size. So I asked her for a next Sunday, and she said all right.

I met her the next Sunday about ten eleven in the morning. There wasn't muc do in Algiers. We walked around and I sho her things I knew about—old buildings things that were different in Algiers from way they were at home. I found out she Pearlie Hargrave and that she came fro

(Continued on Page 140)

When MINUTES Count

Old Dutch Cleanser CAN SAVE YOU REAL TIME AND WORK

DISSOLVES GREASE QUICKLY

MINUTES ALWAYS COUNT in cleaning! And from that last-minute bathroom job to daily kitchen tasks—see how many minutes, how much actual rubbing you can save with Old Dutch Cleanser!

Seismotite Made it Fastest, Easiest!

SCIENTIFIC TESTS were made on soiled, greasy porcelain because dirt-holding grease is a daily cleaning problem. And Old Dutch cleaned sparkling bright fastest and easiest of cleansers well-known all over the U. S. and Canada.

HERE'S WHY: Old Dutch not only dissolved grease—Seismotite removed dirt with astonishing speed. And didn't scratch in special tests for gentleness. It's easy on your hands, too. So get a can today!

© 1946, The Cudahy Packing Co.

AMERICA'S FAVORITE CLEANSER
Cleaned Fastest, Easiest, Safest

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

A CUDAHY Plus Product

Summer Sweaters

WEAR them with skirts and blouses, wear them with summer dresses, wear them with slacks or shorts! And some are especially designed to wear with long full skirts on festive evenings. Choose yours now from the JOURNAL patterns listed below and start your knitting needles clicking.

JOURNAL REFERENCE LIBRAR

SWEATERS WITH SHORT SLEEVES

2198. SLEEVELESS CARDIGAN IN FISHNET PATTERN. (Pictured). Knit this with a bright-colored fishnet pattern on a white ground and wear it with a white shirt. 5c.
2204. SLEEVELESS CARDIGAN. This one has vertical stripes. 5c.
2189. BOW SWEATER. Sleeveless slip-over with a front slit opening tied with a taffeta ribbon bow. 5c.
2196. SIMPLE PULL-OVER. With round neck and cap sleeves. Wear this one with a gay novelty belt. 5c.
2188. WESKIT CARDIGAN. Knit in heavy yarn with set-in cap sleeves of a contrasting color. Silver buttons. 5c.
2238. SQUARE NECK SLIP-OVER. With tiny sleeves. Pattern has a decorative horizontal stripe on a white ground. 5c.
2245. STRIPED SLIP-OVER. With low square neck and cap sleeves. 5c.
2244. PULL-OVER WITH CONTRASTING STRIPED YOKE. Round neck and short sleeves. 5c.
2247. BUTTON-IN-THE-BACK SWEATER with cap sle Two-color pattern stitch. 5c.
2248. V-NECK, CAP-SLEEVED PULL-OVER. Kn in a popcorn stitch. 5c.
2252. SHORT CARDIGAN WITH V-NECK AND SLEEVES. Pattern of fancy horizo stripes. 5c.
2240. CAP-SLEEVED PULL-OVER. With a deep-poi yoke in a contrasting color and a drawst waist. 5c.
2124. CAP-SLEEVED AFTERNOON SWEATER. T crocheted. A pull-over which can be trim with sequins. 5c.
2192. PARTY SWEATER. Waist-length, off-the-shou basque. 5c.
2241. MIDRIFF EVENING SWEATER. Off-the-shot model with drawstrings top and bottom.
2243. OFF-SHOULDER PARTY SWEATER. With a ru neckline and short sleeves. 5c.
2126. EVENING SWEATER. With a low, round neck short sleeves; neckline can be jeweled. 5

SWEATERS WITH LONG SLEEVES

2194. PIERRETTE CARDIGAN. Glamorous jeweled ruff neckline and cuffs. Sweater is knitted, ruff crocheted. 5c.
2195. SLIP-OVER. This has a new shoulder and a novelty sleeve striped in two colors. 5c.
2197. AFTERNOON PULL-OVER. With trimmed belt, tight cuffs and necklace neckline. 5c.
2199. HOOD SWEATER FOR EVENINGS. The button-front sweater is knitted; the mesh hood is crocheted and trimmed with star sequins. 5c.
2237. SHORT CARDIGAN IN PATTERN STITCH. This has a fitted waist and dolman sleeves fastens with silver buttons. 5c.
2239. HIGH-NECKED PULL-OVER. A tailored swe in two colors which join with a bold diag line across the front and back of this pull-over. 5c.
2250. STRIPED-FRONT CARDIGAN. Make the back sleeves of this one white. It ties at the with matching yarn. 5c.

We will gladly send any of these patterns if you'll order by name and number. They will be mailed anywhere i United States and Canada upon receipt of stamps, cash, check or money order. Do not send stamped, addresse velopes or Savings Stamps. Readers in all foreign countries should send International Reply Coupons, purchas their post office. Please address all requests to the Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia 5, Pe

YOU'LL WANT REFRIGERATION'S GREATEST ADVANCE

Freez'r Locker

Gibson

FREEZ'R SHELF REFRIGERATORS • KOOKALL ELECTRIC RANGES

Here it is . . . a big frozen food storage locker built right into the new Gibson Freez'r Shelf Refrigerator! It reaches clear across—from side to side, from front to back—without obstructions. It's roomy! It's handy! It's efficient! It will keep man-sized quantities of frozen foods farm-fresh for months!

This Gibson innovation—the Freez'r Locker—is just one reason why you'll want this truly modern refrigerator. Other Gibson advantages include faster freezing, wall-to-wall shelves, greater ice cube capacity—and a spacious Moist Chiller for keeping even the most delicate salads deliciously crisp and tasty.

SEE YOUR GIBSON DEALER

GIBSON REFRIGERATOR COMPANY
GREENVILLE, MICHIGAN

Export Department, 201 N. Wells St., Chicago, Ill. • Canadian Distributor, Rogers Majestic, Ltd., Toronto

GIBSON Kookall ELECTRIC RANGE
Automatic—turns itself on and off! Saves by cooking with stored-up heat. Higher, handier broiler—larger, banquet-size oven. And wait until you see the UPS-A-DAISY—today's secret—tomorrow's sensation!

NEW HOME FREEZER
The NEWEST thing in freezers! Upright—handy—space saving. Wall-to-wall, glass door shelves keep food in easy reach—open view. No more diving! Freezes faster—more economically.

THE SOUND OF BELLS
echoing over the hills
... gentle symphony from the hearts of those who've said farewell to one so dear ... and now departed.

Is it any wonder that in this hour so many choose the Clark Metal Grave Vault ... the finest tribute
in their power to bestow
... the most trusted
protection through the years!
For the stately, beautiful Clark is armored against the elements. All-metal.
Nonporous. Noncracking.
Designed to use
the pressure of trapped air in the dome to hold out water in the ground.
An enduring custodian.
A sanctuary worthy of those you would honor with the finest.

The finest tribute ...
the most trusted protection

CLARK GRAVE VAULTS

When an inverted tumbler is submerged in water, the pressure of trapped air in the glass prevents water from rising inside. Placed over the casket, the Clark Grave Vault is designed to exclude water by this same scientific principle.

Copyrighted 1946. The Clark Grave Vault Co., Columbus, O.

(Continued from Page 138)

little town in Minnesota called Pillager. She told me something about Pillager, but not that she had taught school there for a couple of years. She didn't tell me that until later. She had been in the Army almost a year and liked it, and was excited about being in North Africa.

The boss was a four-star general by that time. Another Navy officer came up to Commander Butcher and asked the commander to convey his congratulations to the general "on his new rank." Commander Butcher looked surprised, and the other officer told him he had just heard the news on the BBC. So Commander Butcher went to the boss and said he wanted to be one of the first to congratulate him. The boss said, "On what?" Commander Butcher told him, and then the boss really did swear. He said several things, ending up with, "Why the hell doesn't somebody tell me these things?" He was really annoyed, but after a while he accepted Commander Butcher's congratulations.

That same day, I think it was, he called in all the boys in the household and promoted each of them a grade.

The general had caught a cold which he couldn't seem to shake off, and the doctor ordered him to bed. Of course he kept on transacting the business of the war from his room. One afternoon an officer was there and the boss decided, after talking a while, that he wanted a cup of tea. I went down to the kitchen. Williams, the waiter, was there and he and I made a cup of tea and I took it up. I handed it to the general and he took one sip and made an awful face and spat it out. He was indignant; he said it was full of salt.

I apologized and took the cup back and told Williams what had happened. We investigated and, sure enough, a can of salt standing on the stove had tipped over into the kettle we heated the water in. We cleaned the kettle and made some more tea and I took it back and gave it to the boss, along with the sugar bowl. He put sugar in the tea, took another sip and, believe it or not, made the same face again.

"Damn it all," the general said—or something like that—"there's still salt in it!"

I apologized again, getting pretty red, and took the tray back downstairs. I couldn't see how it could have happened twice, because I knew we'd cleaned out the kettle. Then I got an idea and tasted the sugar. Sure enough, somebody—I never found out who, and, believe me, I tried to—had put salt in the sugar bowl.

Well, Williams and I went through it all again, fixing another cup of tea, and I took it up to the boss. He looked at it, and then he looked at me. I moved a little and got behind the officer. The boss shook his head.

"GET out in the open, Mickey," he said, and I never did know whether he was fooling. "Get out in the open, because if there's anything wrong with this cup I'm going to throw it at you, and I want a good, clear shot."

I moved and he took a sip of the tea and I waited. He took one sip and then paused a minute and then took another. After the third sip or so he said this was all right. So I went back behind the other officer where, of course, I belonged.

The boss didn't like a fuss made over him, and didn't like to wear a helmet. He almost never did. But he did once because he had to. That was in the middle of March after things had begun to go better. We drove to LeCeif, so the boss could pin three stars on General Patton's shoulder. We got there the morning of the seventeenth, St. Patrick's Day, and the boss pinned the stars on. The boss didn't have a helmet and I didn't.

After the ceremony, while I was standing by, General Patton called me over. He asked if I had twenty-five dollars to throw away. I said I didn't, naturally. He said in that case I'd better get a helmet. He said the fine for being without a helmet in his area was twenty-five dollars. I got a helmet and, as soon as I got a chance, I told the boss about it. He sort of nodded, and then he said I'd better get him one too. He said he didn't have twenty-five dollars to throw away either. The boss wore the helmet the rest of the time he was in General Patton's area.

IN Africa there wasn't much more war. It was over on May 12, and we all went to Tunis, living in a command post near Mateur. The weather was warm again, and from our house you could see the Mediterranean. For a while it wasn't just something we had to cross to get to Europe; it was a beautiful stretch of water with beaches. It was a place we could go swimming. Everybody did when he had time, including the general.

I gave him a pair of swimming trunks and some poor G. I. saw them hanging on the line and appropriated them. You have to be an awfully unlucky G. I. to steal the swimming trunks of a four-star general when you might as well steal the trunks of a—oh, of a second lieutenant, say.

This G. I. had just tucked them away in his helmet and the MP's found them. But, for such an unlucky guy, this G. I. was really pretty lucky, because if you are going to steal a general's pants, General Eisenhower is the general to steal them from. Maybe he thought the scare the man had when he found whose trunks he had stolen was enough punishment. Anyway, he didn't press charges. It might have been rather serious if he had, because the G. I. was on guard duty when he lifted the trunks; he was supposed to guard the clotheslines, not swipe things off them.

December 18 the general and his staff flew to Naples and I went with them, and some of the office staff. And Pearlie. The next day we started a rather complete tour of Southern Italy.

The day before Christmas the general decided to go to Capri to inspect a rest camp for the Air Force, and he took Pearlie and me along. We got to Capri about noon and left at five in the evening and it was a very fine day. The general said he thought it would be a good idea if I spent the rest of Christmas Eve with Pearlie. We went to midnight Mass. And that evening we heard the big news.

The boss was going to be the supreme commander of the Allied Expeditionary Force. He was going to lead us into France.

We got back to London and found it hadn't changed much. At headquarters all the top-ranking generals of the Allied armies were in and out—Patton, Bradley, Simpson, Spaatz,

Last Days of Camp

THE HIKE

By Virginia Brasier

It wasn't the long trip he remembered best
Of the mountain summer. That, too, had been good,
Despite the blisters, for it was a test.
And he had passed it, as he hoped he would,
But feared he wouldn't. No, it was a climb
One evening when four others and himself
Went on a clan hike after supper-time,
On a brown deer track narrow as a shelf.

He led and suddenly around a bend
They faced a well-grown fawn who stopped! They, too,
Stood breathless still and, waiting, tried to send Their good will toward it. But it turned and flew
In little bird leaps blending with the sun.
And then they breathed again.
"Oh, gee!" said one.

The Refreshing way to clean!

Bathtub ring vanishes in a flash when you clean with Sergeant's Disinfectant.

Removes dirt, disinfects, deodorizes, kills many germs.

Leaves a refreshing scent of pine.

Easy on the hands.

Use for cleaning kitchen, bathroom, floors, woodwork — all around the house.

At drug or department stores.

Sergeant's DISINFECTANT
It's fragrant of PINE

FIXES BROKEN CHINA
. . . also glassware, luggage, toys and furniture. It's transparent and waterproof. Makes models, too.

DUCO CEMENT
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

DOES YOUR DOG ITCH? SCRATCH?
DON'T BLAME FLEAS
. . . MANGE . . . DIET
If your dog or cat itches scratches continually, it's probably not due to fleas, mange or diet. 2 to 1, it's FUNGITCH, grass-borne fungus infection long a puzzle to science. It starts as an itch followed by dandruff-like scales or brownish-edged sores with mouldy odor. May start in ears, on paws, underbody, tail or eyes. Can have serious results—costly care—even total loss. Now noted specialist's discovery—Dr. Merrick's SULFADENE—applied externally, stops itching in minutes . . . clears up scales and sores in a few days. Only $1.00 in stores or order direct. Money back guarantee. Address:
SULFADENE, BOX E-166, BROOKFIELD, ILLINOIS
Dr. MERRICK'S SULFADENE

Doolittle, Quesada, Marshal Tedder, Montgomery and Dempsey; and Navy people of our own and the British. You could feel things building up. You could feel that the time was getting short.

On the first of June, 1944, we moved to the command post at Portsmouth. The long-range preparations were all done. Now all that the general had built for was coming up.

Although our armies were in France, the command post stayed in Portsmouth for a few weeks. That didn't mean the boss stayed all the time, of course. He would fly to France, inspecting, conferring with our generals and directing them, and then fly back for conferences in England.

It was on the seventh of August that we moved to France; or rather, it was on the seventh that I moved. Our new command post was in an apple orchard—what had been an apple orchard—at Lomalay. It was about twenty miles from the British front lines and all the time you could hear the artillery hammering away. From there the general could make his inspection trips by car—and did.

He began to worry when we got to France that he was getting fat. He'd say he would have to cut down on his food and get more exercise. I don't think he did get fat, but some of his clothes shrank, the shirts particularly. If I walked the way the general does, I'd think I got enough exercise. He takes very long strides and takes them fast. If you're supposed to keep up with him he just about wears you out. And he used to insist that you keep up with him. He hated to have people trailing along behind.

He has a bad knee, which I don't think is generally known. He got it somehow when he was much younger—playing football, some said. Most of the time it didn't seem to bother him—but now and then it would slip or something and was evidently painful.

Things were going very well then—early in the fall of 1944. The Army at the front was moving faster and that meant headquarters was moving up faster too. Late in September we began preparations to set up a new command post at Reims. The post was set up early in October.

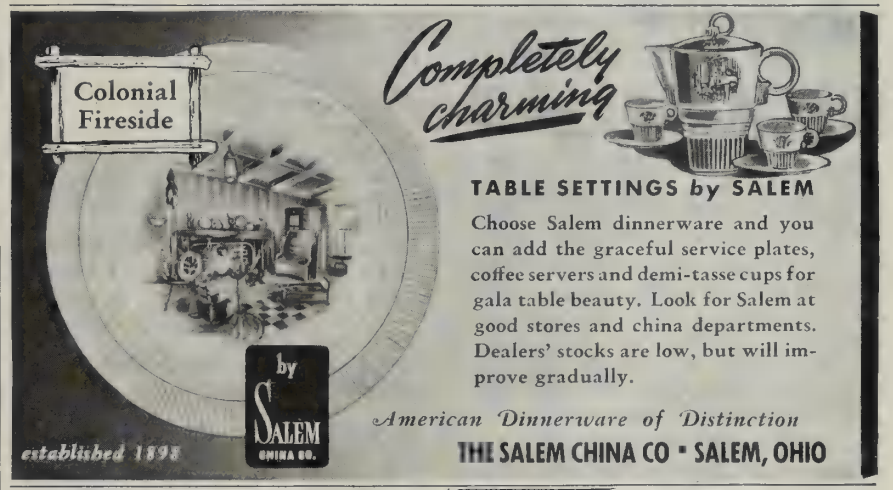
Pearlie and I had been talking for a long time about getting married, although we knew what it would mean. There was a rule against married personnel serving in the same theater of war. One of us—and it would be Pearlie—would have to go someplace else. Still, we wanted to get married and not wait until the end of the war.

I went to the boss and asked his permission. He listened and then he smiled and after a moment nodded. He said he was certain Pearlie and I were not rushing into something we would be sorry about afterward. He said he thought we were really in love.

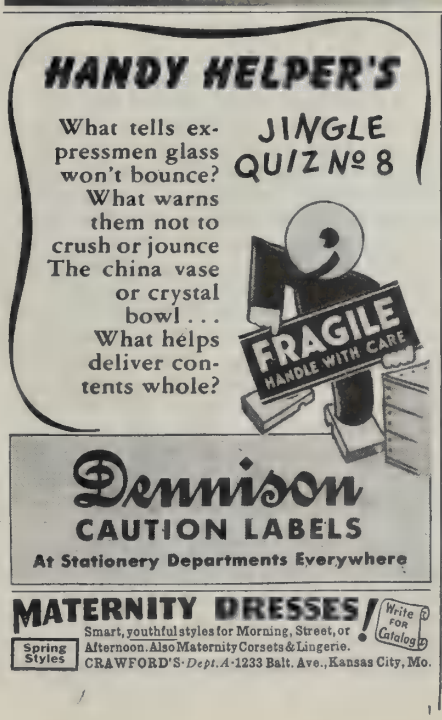
So we went ahead and made the arrangements, and everybody helped, including the general. And Special Service made a wedding gown. They had one of the dressmakers in Paris make it for the WAC, but for this time the WAC meant Pearlie. After the ceremony it went back to Special Service and other Wacs used it when they got married. But it was made for Pearlie.

We were married on December 16 in Marie Antoinette's chapel in the palace at Versailles. The boss came to the wedding. We were married by Father John Keegan, Catholic chaplain of the headquarters company. Colonel Lee gave Pearlie away and Sergeant Margaret Chick was her bridesmaid. Sergeant Farr was best man. Afterward the general gave us a reception. He couldn't stay long; he was very busy that day.

The boss gave us a hundred-dollar War Bond and we got a good many other presents. And we had important guests—General Smith, Major General Everett Hughes, Brigadier General Davis and a good many other officers. And Captain Butcher, who was going away on a trip, gave us his apartment in Paris. Pearlie and I had a week in Paris. Then she went back to the States by air and I went back to the boss.



We stayed in Reims the rest of the winter. The general made most of his trips by plane



PAINT RIGHT OVER WALLPAPER

$2.98* PER GAL.
PASTE FORM
DOES AVERAGE ROOM

*Slightly higher in Rocky Mt. Area

WHAT'S the most popular wall finish in America? Kem-Tone! What keeps it so popular? Constant research in the world's biggest paint laboratories! Today, a better scientific blend of pigments, resins and oils makes Kem-Tone a more remarkable finish than ever before. Its durability has been increased, its hiding power is now even greater. Yes, the Kem-Tone you buy today is the best Kem-Tone ever! There's no finer finish for your rooms, regardless of price!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

THERE'S A KEM-TONE DEALER NEAR YOU!

$1 RIDS YOUR LAWN OF UGLY WEEDS!

Weed-No-More kills dandelion, plantain, other weeds. Won't harm lawn grasses or soil. Just spray on! 8-oz. pkg. treats 1600 sq. ft.

At Paint, Hardware, Garden Supplies, Department and Drug Stores.

WEED-NO-MORE
MAGIC WEED KILLER

Made by the makers of Kem-Tone

from Reims because the front was moving faster. He would leave in the morning and come back the same evening and almost always he came back in fine spirits.

The evening of the sixth of May he came home about six o'clock with Captain Butcher and Colonel Gault. After dinner they sat and talked and played cards and didn't seem to want to go to bed. I went to my room and went to bed, but I was still awake when the bell rang at one-thirty. I ran downstairs buttoning my shirt and with my tie in my hand.

"Get the car out, Mickey," the boss said. "We're going to headquarters." He had the happiest grin on his face I'd seen in all the time I'd known him.

I ran for the car and brought it around. The boss was ready and we went in the dark to headquarters. I let the boss out, parked the car and went in. All the lights were on and the corridors were jammed with brass and newspapermen and photographers. Everybody was excited.

I'd been there a couple of minutes when some officers came out of a room down the corridor. General Strong was leading and there were three Germans and a couple of Russians. They went into the War Room and we all waited. After a few minutes they came out and this time General Smith was leading. The two Russians were beaming. They were certainly a couple of happy-looking men.

It had happened. The Germans had signed, and General Smith had signed in behalf of the boss, and the Russians had signed. It was over. The whole thing was over.

We got to Washington on June 18. I got the boss's stuff to the Wardman Park and then I went to the Statler and got ready to have dinner at the White House. And, of course, I called Pearlie. She was out in Minnesota, visiting her folks.

I went to the White House and was ushered right in. My boss was standing with the President, and introduced us. The President held out his hand and I took it while the boss said, "Mr. President, this is my sergeant, Mickey. He's been with me a long time."

The President smiled and said, "Let's shake on that again," and we did.

I met General Marshall and talked to him a minute, and some other people. Then we went in to dinner. I sat next to General Handy, and Sergeant Charles Kiley, a reporter on Stars and Stripes, sat on the other side. It's a funny thing, but I have forgotten what we had to eat. I think it was lamb, but I don't really remember.

The next day we went to New York by plane. And it was something to ride down the streets of my home town, and hear everybody cheering my boss. I will say for New York, it appreciated General Eisenhower and wasn't afraid to show how it felt.

The next morning we flew to West P where the boss reviewed the corps, and next day we flew to Kansas City, where t was another parade and big reception— where the boss met his mother and the re the family. That night we went to Abilen a special train.

I was supposed to leave the genera Abilene, but he asked me to stay on a l longer.

We got back to Washington July Two days later I went out to the airport the general and then I said good-by to I had a lot of things ready to say, but wh came time I found I couldn't get the w out. I did tell him I didn't want to say g by; that I'd just say "So long." He sm and got into the plane and it taxied off ac the field and went into the air. He was o way back to Germany.

I went to the War Department and ported in and got my orders. They were g orders—report to Fort Dix for discharg went home and then I went out to Minne to get Pearlie. I stayed there three we seeing her people and the little town she l in—and Pearlie. Then we flew back to York.

On September 12 I went to Fort Dix got discharged and went back to Queens Pearlie. Two days after I got out of the Ar Pearlie and I had a little daughter. We na her Mary Ann.

BUTTON, BUTTON—

(Continued from Page 29)

could stay in the sunroom and sleep on the couch.

"I will even put up your picture that I took down out of the guest room," she said, "and the lace boudoir pillows she's given me for the last five Christmases. That should make Magdalene happy."

Father had given up. He thought Mr. Pemberton ought to sleep in the sunroom but he gave up. He went out of the house and didn't come back till late.

At breakfast the next morning he said, "I got Little Theatre tickets for Marjorie and me. I suppose you and Mr. Pemberton will stay home and play button-button."

"I believe we will," mother said quiet-like. "You had better leave me the car. I told Mr. Pemberton you would pick him up at six, but since that is too much to expect I shall do so myself."

Father quit eating his breakfast and slammed down his coffee cup. "I suppose Marjorie can come out in a cab?" father said.

"I should think so," mother said. "She ought to know the way."

Father slammed the door and went over to the car line.

Mother was banging things around fixing up the sunroom for Aunt Magdalene. She put the picture of father when he was confirmed at the foot of the couch.

"There," mother said, "she will see him the first thing when she wakes up."

"Does she want to?" I asked her.

"Yes," mother said, "she does. That is a picture of your father when Magdalene knew him before I did. She has never stopped being sorry that I ever met him. I'd like to see her keeping house and scrubbing and cleaning and cooking like I do. Not her! She might have married your father if she hadn't been afraid of housework. I'll bet that is what kept her from it. I'll bet it is. She's willing enough to let other people work for her though. Coming through every trip home—every vacation—every year—all this time. I'm sick of it. And now with Mr. Pemberton coming. She'll make fun of button collecting, too, you'll see." Mother threw a pillow onto the couch. It seemed like a pretty long answer for such a little question.

Mother had everything ready for dinner and was all dressed up. Pud and me were going to stay home alone for the little time it would take her to pick up Mr. Pemberton. She stood in the door telling us what to do. She had her coat and hat on and the car keys.

"Stay right in the living room," she said, "and look at your books. I won't be long. Don't mess anything up."

Just then a taxi turned into our drive.

"Darling Magdalene!" mother said through her teeth. "Right on time!"

But a man was getting out of the taxicab. He was helping a woman out. The woman was Aunt Magdalene. Pud and I went running out yelling, "Aunt Magdalene! Aunt Magdalene!" She really doesn't care if we call her that. She thinks it's funny. She hugged us and gave us our presents. Mother was talking to the man. A nice-looking man with a gray coat and hat and a suitcase.

"This is Mr. Pemberton," she told us.

Mr. Pemberton was very nice. He was nice to us. He was nice to father. He was nice to mother and he was very nice to Aunt Magdalene. Father was not very nice to Mr. Pemberton though. Oh, he was polite. You wouldn't dare to not be polite.

If only every woman would ask herself why any man should marry her at all, there would be less discontent among women, more happiness among men, and many more successful marriages. When a man marries he gives up everything. . . . The woman gains everything. We all know this, if we bother to think of it, but so many women forget it. —ANON.

"Will you have some of this?" he would say—or some of that. He was trying to show him that he was welcome at his table. He was trying to show him that his guest was king. That's what he's always telling us. "Show your guest he's king," he says. "Give him the best you have. Give him anything he wants." So he gave Mr. Pemberton more and more roast beef and browned potatoes and stuff. He even offered him an extra piece of pie. But he didn't talk to him much. He talked to Aunt Magdalene.

They talked about the olden days. Aunt Magdalene and father were alive together in the olden days. They went to school together. They went skating together. They went hayriding together. They went dancing together. They went to college together. Their families knew each other. It's special when your families know each other. It's special when you went to school together. You know things that no one else kn You know songs with different words tha one else knows. And it makes other pe mad that you know things they don't k Especially mother.

It must be fun to know things other pe don't know. I hope I go to college with s one that knows my family. Then I will them come and visit me when I am ma and I will do like father does. I will "How is old Fred Wilson?" and my fr that knows my family will say, "Oh I him in Cleveland last summer, didn't I you? Same old Fred. You still want to l when you see him." . . . "Do you remen the time he blew up everything in chemi lab and old Doc West ——" I will say laugh and laugh like father did. Aunt M dalene laughed too. So will my friend will laugh and laugh and no one will k what we are laughing at. Just like Pud I didn't. Just like mother and Mr. Pembe didn't. They tried to laugh a little too isn't polite not to laugh when other pe do. If you can. I didn't try becau couldn't.

Something was wrong with mother couldn't think what. She looked just like time when we had a dinner party and s thing was wrong with the food. They c hardly cut the meat. She looked like t Like there were so many tears behind eyes fighting to get out that they pushe eyes way out. But the roast beef was wo ful. I didn't know what was the matte "Have you picked up anything inte ing since I saw you?" Mr. Pemberton a mother.

"Not much," mother said. "I'm pr much tied to my home. If I could get out look——"

Then they sat and looked at father Aunt Magdalene. They smiled a little and then.

"Have you picked up anything interes since I saw you?" mother asked Mr. P berton.

"Well—ah," Mr. Pemberton said. "U yes, yes, I have."

"Mr. Pemberton collects buttons t father said like he was talking about a li boy. He smiled at Mr. Pemberton.

"Oh, does he?" Aunt Magdalene said

"He rode all the way from the Coast the train with you and didn't talk about buttons?" father said.

"Well, I don't believe he did," Aunt M dalene said.

(Continued on Page 144)

Behind their backs — or to their faces

(IT'S A SAD, SAD STORY!)

"HM-M-M, PUTTING ON A LITTLE WEIGHT?"

1. Well, actually, our fine little friend hasn't gained an ounce. It's her dress that's lost—inches! Such a sad case of shrinkage shouldn't happen to any girl these days. Look for a dress tagged "Sanforized"—and be sure it'll keep on fitting, keep on looking smart!

"WEARING BIG SISTER'S DRESS TODAY?"

2. Looks that way, doesn't it? This silly girl bought a dress too big—to allow for shrinkage. What a pity! A smart shopper buys a dress tagged "Sanforized" in the size that fits, a dress that'll never shrink its good looks away, tub it as much as you will!

"Spending $2 or spending $20?" There are "Sanforized" dresses in any price range, lucky you! So always remember . . . look for the "Sanforized" label on all washable cottons, so shrinkage will never steal their charms away!

TO KEEP ON LOOKING SMART, IT'S GOT TO KEEP ON FITTING! LOOK FOR THIS LABEL

•SANFORIZED•
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
Fabric Shrinkage less than 1% by the Government's Standard Test

•SANFORIZED• REG. U.S. PAT. OFF. . . . checked standard of shrinkage. The "Sanforized" trade-mark is used on compressive pre-shrunk fabrics only when tests for residual shrinkage are regularly checked, through the service of the owners of the trade-mark, to insure maintenance of its established standard by users of the mark.

Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc.

BESTFORM

Girdles Brassieres All-in-ones

BRASSIERES 79¢ to $1.50

FOUNDATIONS $2.50 to $6.50

(Continued from Page 142)

"Everyone," mother said, "does not show an interest. I doubt if Magdalene has seen even my buttons."

"Oh yes, I did—once," Aunt Magdalene said. "Very pretty. Very pretty."

Mother looked at Mr. Pemberton. "Pretty," she said, like she thought Mr. Pemberton would understand.

But Mr. Pemberton was looking at Aunt Magdalene. "Very pretty," he said. He was talking about Aunt Magdalene.

She was pretty too. She was excited about something. Maybe about the olden days. But she kept trying not to talk just to father. She kept trying to talk to Mr. Pemberton. I had a feeling that she knew something with Mr. Pemberton too that nobody else knew. Maybe her family knew Mr. Pemberton's too. Maybe they went to a different college together. There was something they knew.

Aunt Magdalene was wonderful. She laughed and talked and joked with father. At the same time she was bright and gay and interesting to Mr. Pemberton. Only mother was left out. Poor mother! That was what was the matter. Nobody talked to her. I wished I could talk to mother but I couldn't think of anything to say. I was afraid mother would start to cry if she started to talk.

At last we were through with dinner. Mother hadn't eaten much. We got up from the table. They all went in the living room. Mother had Manda to help so she didn't have to do the dishes. They sat down by the fire.

Pretty soon father said, "Well, I'm sorry to leave you two, but you'll have your buttons. Marjorie and I are taking in a show. We'll have to get going."

"I'll get my buttons," mother said. It sounded like when Bob comes over to play with Pud and Pud keeps getting more and more things out because Bob wants to go home because Pud is so much younger and Pud thinks maybe Bob will stay because he's got such swell things.

Mother went upstairs. "I'll help you," I said. I ran after her. I patted her on the shoulder. She looked around and squeezed me hard. She blew her nose and wiped her eyes. We each took a box of buttons down. They were all standing in the living room. Aunt Magdalene had her coat on. A new coat, gray curly fur. It makes her look like a queen or something.

"You look wonderful, Aunt Magdalene," I told her.

"Thank you," she said.

"I don't get it," Mr. Pemberton said. "Magdalene? Marjorie? What is your name?"

"Well, both," she said. "Marjorie is my real name. Magdalene is my sort of pen name—it's my collector's name."

Something happened to Mr. Pemberton. Before that he looked like their families knew each other, his and Aunt Magdalene's, and he looked like they had gone to school together and they knew something no one else knew but it wasn't quite all there like it was now. Now he looked like he and Aunt Magdalene could sing songs no one else knew too.

"You collect?" he said and he sounded awful glad. "You're a collector too?"

"Yup," father answered. "She's everything."

The three of them stood in a circle near the hall door. Mother was standing in back of them with her buttons.

"What do you collect?" Mr. Pemberton beamed at Aunt Magdalene.

"Handkerchiefs," Aunt Magdalene said.

"You must show them to me sometime," Mr. Pemberton said.

"I'd love to," said Aunt Magdalene.

"We'd better get going," father said.

"I brought my buttons," mother offered.

"Oh—uh," Mr. Pemberton said. "Oh yes." He turned politely to the buttons for a

Ability will enable a man to get to the top, but character is the only thing that will keep him from falling off. —ANON.

KEEP YOUR BATHROOM fresh and sweet

BANISH TOILET ODORS with

- Cleans toilet bowls quickly
- Removes a major source of toilet odors
- Leaves fresh minty aroma

Used as directed

- Bleaches porcelain
- Harmless to septic tanks

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

ON SALE AT YOUR GROCER

JUDSON DUNAWAY CORPORATION
(formerly Expello Corporation)
Dover, N. H.

don't scatter dust!

DUST THE NEW EASIER WAY

DUSORB absorbs dust

- For dust cloths and mops
- Non-greasy or oily
- Doesn't streak or spot

Just saturate any cloth or mop with Dusorb, let dry and dust everything easier and better. Dusorb treated cloth or mop leaves surface immaculate—no dust particles in the air. Directions on package.

50c and $1

At leading dept., drug, grocery and hardware stores. If not yet obtainable, order direct

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

FRANCO-AMERICAN HYGIENIC CO.
Chicago 10, Illinois

EXTRA MONEY QUICK

SELL $1 NAME IMPRINTED STATIONERY — FREE SAMPLES

ODD GREETING CARDS 2½c UP

Up to 100% profit taking easy orders from friends, fellow worker others. Send for free samples of our new fa selling $1.00 line of Personal Stationer Everybody uses. Also large line of popular Everyd greeting card assortments 35c up. Special featu 14 card $1.00. All Occasion assortment. Extra Bon

NEW ENGLAND ART PUBLISHERS, North Abington, Mass

Kills Garden Insects

Use Red Arrow Garden Spray on flowers, shrubs, vegetables, lawns. Kills most common garden insects, yet safe to humans, birds and pets when sprayed. 35c bottle makes several gallons. Buy Red Arrow Spray where you buy garden supplies.

FREE For free chart, "How to Fight Garden Insects," send postal to McCormick & Co., Inc., Baltimore 2, Md.

Make your vacation hand-knits in SEA-COOL COLORS

Fashion Tip: hand-knits in sea-cool colors work magic in giving you that band-box look.

Knitting Tip: make 'em out of Bear-Brand Quali-Tested Yarns. They look better, wear better, tub better.

Bear Brand QUALI-TESTED Yarns

A Bucilla Product famous for over 75 years

Send 25c for Vol. 76 for instructions for this and other sweaters. 230 Fifth Avenue, New York 1. Dept. JY-5.

Don't be a RUBBIT!

Don't rub and scrub at scorchy, crusty pots and pans with a limp, gooey dishrag! Let Brillo whisk 'em shiny in a jiffy! Brillo works fast!

BRILLO sparkles 'em fast!

Brillo's spunky, square metal-fiber pads and special-formula polishing soap make scorchy pans gleam! Neat! Easy! Fast! Brillo Soap Pads —red box; or Brillo Cleanser, pads and soap separate—the green box.

Keeps aluminum brilliant

Sutherland PAPERWARE FOR THE MODERN HOSTESS

It's sensible good taste to use clean, festive Sutherland Paperware for picnics, buffet lunches, bridge potlucks, late snacks, and children's parties. Guests will admire your selection of smart new Sutherland matched designs. Ask for them at your grocery, variety, hardware, or dime store.

SUTHERLAND PAPERWARE FOR PICNICS PARTIES KITCHEN USE

ALSO PLATES CUPS, FORKS SPOONS TABLE COVERS NAPKINS

SUTHERLAND PAPER CO. KALAMAZOO 13D, MICHIGAN

SAVOGRAN REMOVER & BLEACHER Renews Floors!

AND STORES WRITE FOR CIRCULAR K

SAVOGRAN CO., BOSTON 10, MASS.

EXTRA MONEY EASILY EARNED

SHOW FRIENDS EXCLUSIVE GREETING CARD ASSORTMENTS

Up to 100% profit for you. Request new 1946 exclusive 14 card All Occasion $1.00 assortment on approval. Many other year 'round money makers—Plays, Gift Wrappings, Social Notes. Write for box on approval and new selling plan.

FREE SAMPLE PERSONALIZED STATIONERY

AS TERRY STUDIOS, 107 Union Ave., Westfield, Mass.

minute. "What play are you seeing?" he asked father then.

Mother was left in the back with her buttons, all alone again.

"Kiss and Tell," father said.

"Would you mind very much if I came too?" Mr. Pemberton asked. Then he thought of mother and her buttons. "Wouldn't you like to go to the play?" he asked her. "We could look at the buttons tomorrow, perhaps?"

"No," mother said. "No, I don't believe I would. But you go ahead. I have rather a headache."

Father didn't say a word to mother. "We'd better get going," he said to the others.

"Reminds me of Don," Aunt Magdalene said.

"Yeah," father said. "The three of us. But it was fun." That was something else no one else knew about.

They went out and drove away. Mother put the buttons down on the coffee table. I put my boxful down too.

"Will you show them to me?" I said.

"You go ahead and look," mother said. She put her chin in her hands and sat looking into the fire. All of a sudden she began to cry. "Bad word that woman anyway," she said. "Bad word that woman." She got up in a minute. "Well, I guess the old plow horse, the cook, the chambermaid will go to bed."

Somebody was at the door. It was father. He came in and hung up his coat.

"Aren't you going to the play?" mother said.

"No, thank goodness," father said. He sat down and put his feet up.

"I thought you wanted to see it."

"With a gabby woman like that?" father said. "Not on your life. Sitting through a meal does me in. I pretended I couldn't get another ticket. Maybe I couldn't. I was glad he took her off my hands."

"I guess he was glad to," mother said. "I thought he seemed smitten. Imagine Magdalene picking him up on the train!"

"Oh, Marjorie was always a fast worker," father said. "Maybe this time she can make it last."

Mother looked at him. "How would you like to go the movies?" she asked. "Manda's here to stay with the boys." Father loves the movies. It's mother who doesn't much care to go.

Father put his feet up on the stool and stretched. "It seems so nice here," he said, "just us. Do you know what I'd really like? I'd like to have you show me your buttons."

"MANNERS MAKYTH MAN"

(Continued from Page 6)

they are also one of the cornerstones of democracy, which is the most civilized form of government yet invented.

Democracy is based upon the assumption that most men are men of good will, and if left alone to govern as much as possible, each himself will behave, on the whole, in a fair, just and amicable fashion toward his fellows.

Far from being merely polish, actual manners, then, are as fundamental as the earth, as sensible as bread, and as necessary as the air we breathe. They are a man himself. What he is. His attitude toward himself and other men. His attitude toward life in general. They are charity, fair play, the ability to put yourself in the other fellow's place. They are the phrase "fifty-fifty" and the sentence "Live and let live!" They are awareness of your surroundings, and the appreciation of relative values. In short, morally and philosophically, they are the simplest application of the Golden Rule; of the injunction to treat your neighbor as you yourself would be treated; and, like all goodness, they are also good, hard common sense.

On the lowest level they make for good nerves, good humor, general good health and personal success or failure. The successful man is frequently rude, but he wasn't so in the beginning. His present state of mind is merely childish self indulgence and inability to handle power properly. Really large men and women are never rude, most

Goodbye Dandruff

You'll be Delighted with the rich, creamy lather of Fitch's Dandruff Remover Shampoo . . . but you'll be even more pleased when you see how COMPLETELY Fitch Shampoo removes dandruff with the first application. In fact, Fitch Shampoo is the only shampoo made whose guarantee to remove dandruff the first time you use it is backed by one of the world's largest insurance firms.

RESULTS ARE DIFFERENT—BECAUSE FITCH SHAMPOO IS DIFFERENT

Even the method of application is different . . . Fitch Shampoo is applied directly to the DRY hair and scalp. The antiseptic qualities of Fitch penetrate and cleanse the thousands of tiny hair openings. Then when even the hardest water is added, Fitch Shampoo forms an abundant, creamy lather that carries away all dirt, dandruff and perspiration. No acid after-rinse is needed. Fitch Shampoo leaves all colors and textures of hair soft . . . lustrous . . . radiantly clean. It reconditions as it cleanses.

Fitch Shampoo is the largest selling shampoo in the United States and Canada. It's economical too! Use Fitch Shampoo regularly each week.

THE TRUTH ABOUT SOAP SHAMPOOS

This photograph shows germs and dandruff scattered, but not removed, by ordinary soap shampoo.

Soap Shampoo

All germs, dandruff and other foreign matter completely destroyed and removed by Fitch Shampoo.

Fitch Shampoo

After and between Fitch shampoos you can keep your hair shining and manageable by using a few drops of Fitch's Ideal Hair Tonic every day.

Fitch's TRADE MARK Dandruff Remover Shampoo

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF USED OR NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

THE F. W. FITCH COMPANY, Des Moines 6, Iowa • Bayonne, N. J. • Los Angeles 21, Calif. • Toronto 2, Canada

FEET HURT? IT MAY BE WEAK ARCHES!

Tired, aching feet, rheumatic-like foot and leg pains, fatigue, sore heels and callouses often are traceable to weak arches. Dr. Scholl's Arch Supports and exercise help relieve pain caused by strain of the muscles and ligaments. Give firm uplift. Are molded to the feet and adjustable as condition of arch improves. Expertly fitted and adjusted at Shoe, Dept. and Surgical Supply Stores everywhere. For FREE booklet write Dr. Scholl's, Inc., Chicago, Ill.

Dr Scholl's ARCH SUPPORTS

There is a Dr. Scholl Foot Comfort Appliance or Remedy for Every Common Foot Trouble

IDEAL GLOVE FOR ALL WET, HAND-SOILING JOBS

LOOK FOR THE FABRIC LINING

Swaggerettes

SOFT AS A KITTEN!

WATER-PROOF RUBBER outside — SOFT NAPPED FABRIC inside — a combination of hand comfort and protection for all cleaning jobs, dish washing, laundry, etc. Equally fine for gardening, outdoor work — SNAG-PROOF, DIRT-PROOF

EASY ON THE HANDS . . . NO RUBBER-TO-SKIN CONTACT

Edmont COSHOCTON, OHIO

Fabric-Lined RUBBER GLOVES

KEEP OUT INSECTS!

Fill cracks around drainboards, windows, doors with... Plastic Wood.

PLASTIC WOOD resists weather, grease and water.

At all hardware, Paint and 10¢ Stores

Tube or Can

DOES A PERMANENT JOB

PLASTIC WOOD

® CELLULOSE FIBRE FILLER

Do FALSE TEETH Rock, Slide or Slip?

FASTEETH, an improved powder to be sprinkled on upper or lower plates, holds false teeth more firmly in place. Do not slide, slip or rock. No gummy, gooey, pasty taste or feeling. FASTEETH is alkaline (non-acid). Does not sour. Checks "plate odor" (denture breath). Get FASTEETH at any drug store.

KILL INSECTS WITHOUT DUST OR SPRAY

Bait in the protective tube unfailingly kills roaches, silverfish, waterbugs, crickets. Sanitary—cannot be blown or tracked on food supplies, etc. Gives clean, long lasting protection. Sold by most drug, grocery and other stores. If yours has none send $1.00 for 3 packages postpaid. Money back guarantee. Over 20 million sold. De Soto Chemical Company, 5 Rose St., Arcadia, Florida.

Be beautiful in summer fashions

COVER-UP WHEREVER YOU SHOW

Your face

. . . in OVER-TONE . . . the "miracle" cake make-up foundation.
Never feels heavy or masky, but gives you dramatic coloring, covers up blemishes. Does not dry the skin, does not crack.
Nine shades. In a new plastic package. $1.50

Your neck, etcetera

. . . in NECK BLENDER . . . amazing new liquid make-up that does not rub off on clothes. Starts where your foundation ends.
Covers you in glamour wherever you show — arms, neck, midriff, back.
Wonderful for fun-time fashions. $1.50

all prices plus tax

FRANCES DENNEY

especially to the small and humble, for actual manners know no class, nor race, nor creed, nor pocketbook. They know only a common humanity. While as for the increase, or decrease, of public health and good humor, no one yet has figured out the amount of manpower, foot-poundage—call it what you will—wasted in one day because of bad manners, the resulting frazzled nerves, indigestion, heart trouble, loss of adrenalin extract and distraction from the business on hand.

A good man may have bad manners, and some good men have, but in so far as a man's manners are bad, just so far does he show that he is unaware of what ultimate goodness is. A bad man cannot have actually good manners, no matter what his surface courtesy may be, for manners, basically, are the result of a sense of proportion; and evil, basically, is the result of an entire lack of it.

But manners are also scientific. They have to do with physics, the primary science.

With the first man aware of the fact that the human body had three dimensions—height, breadth and thickness—and that, therefore, when two human bodies approached each other, both had to give way a little, manners began. Manners are a means of avoiding collision: mental, spiritual and actual. If it were not for good manners, no one could walk down a crowded sidewalk, and our highways would be impassable as a result of wrecks. Traffic experts agree that selfishness—bad manners—is the cause of most traffic accidents. Every experienced driver can tell in an instant what a man is like by the way he handles his car; and this with no need to see his face.

So much, then, for manners morally, philosophically, scientifically and psychologically. They are equally important any way you care to look at them. Since they are the basis of civilization, of necessity they are also the basis of law, as no less a person than Niccolò Machiavelli has pointed out. When manners break down, anarchy begins; and anarchy always ends eventually in force and tyranny of some kind. The Dark Ages were the result of a total breakdown of manners; that is, of consideration, justice and humanity. Fascism and Nazism are modern examples. Yet no one is more "polished" than a German Junker.

It is upon a breakdown of manners, civic and personal, that all the dangerous people in this country, the marplots, the demagogues, the haters of democracy, are banking in their search for personal power. The surest weapons to destroy these enemies are patience, courtesy, tolerance, decency and fair play. The rude man, no matter who he is, and no matter how unconscious he may be of his rudeness, is an anarchist and an antidemocrat, adding his mite to potential future disorder.

William of Wykeham (1324–1404), English bishop and statesman, founder of the English boys' school, Winchester, and New College, Oxford—still called "New" although it is now 566 years old—presented the latter with its famous motto, "Manners Maketh Man"; and ever since, men have been arguing as to just what he meant, or else misinterpreting him—the latter group, numerous Winchester and New College graduates. William of Wykeham, being a forthright and learned man, probably meant exactly what he said. He meant that manners "make" the man show what he is, as has been said. And they also "make" him actually. His place in the world, in the esteem of his fellow men.

> A quarter of an ounce of patience will provide sufficiently for inconveniences.
> —MONTAIGNE.

Americans have always been noted for their natural good manners. That is because most Americans are men and women of kindness, co-operation, justice and good will. Most Americans, furthermore, are democrats. But war is a dislocating business. People are hurried, crowded, overworked, each with his private worry. For while manners, like everything else, get along as best they can. But peace is different. Peace is civilization and the return to democracy.

Justice, tolerance and good manners mean America. Forget them, and we'll lose what Americans have fought for, hoped for, been born to. Remember them, and the future is ours. The dream. And the greatness.

Back Views, Sizes and Prices of Hollywood Patterns on Pages 42 and 43

1679. Skirts (plain version not shown), sizes 24 to 32 waist. 25c.
1810. Jacket, sizes 12 to 42. 15c.
1812. Two-piece suit dress, 10 to 18. 25c.
1841. Blouse, bra and skirt, 10 to 18. 25c.
1843. Blouses and shorts, 12 to 20. 25c.

Back Views, Sizes and Prices of Hollywood Patterns on Page 44

1779. One-piece dress, 10 to 18. 25c.
1789. Blouses, sizes 12 to 20. 15c.
1801. One-piece dress, 10 to 18. 25c.
1818. Two-piece bolero suit and blouse, sizes 10 to 18. 25c.
1840. One-piece dress in two lengths, sizes 10 to 18. 25c.
1844. Two-piece suit dress, 10 to 18. 25c.

*PROVEN MOTH ROTECTION

for all woolens with new, lasting HEX!

en it costs so little, it pays rotect all woolens with HEX

OROUGH! Hex liquid mothproofing netrates right into every wool fiber. ientific tests prove that moths abso-ely will not harm fabrics treated with x!

ICK! Just one quick and easy spray-i of Hex on woolens gives them last-, proven moth-protection. No unpleas-odor! No storing away necessary!

ONOMICAL! One bottle of Hex pro-ts hundreds of dollars' worth of olens. Buy the pint, quart, or gallon at your hardware, variety, drug department store today!

A KOPPERS PRODUCT

BACK TRACK TO LOVE

(Continued from Page 33)

a moment she sat down on its companion at the other side of the fireplace. He lit a cigarette. She saw in his face bent to the flame the lean modeling of jaw and cheek, the touching whorl of dark hair above his left ear. As she had remembered.

She clasped her hands tight and the thin platinum wedding ring bit into her fingers. "I've lived and prayed for this moment," she said. But it came out strangely, brittle and almost mocking.

He glanced up at her, and away. "So have I, Red." The yellow fog pressed down thicker. Suddenly he flung his cigarette into the fireplace and stood up. "Look, sweet, let's call up that hotel where we spent our—our honeymoon. This is a swell place, but I—I feel like an intruder. And it has a suggestion"— he paused, his eyes went to hers with irony, with apology—"I don't feel married here."

Heat rushed through her face. She sprang up, pulling the telephone and the directory from behind their lucite shield. "I'm afraid—perhaps—you see the hotel situation's awfully bad, everything jammed. Last Saturday Dick Johnson—my boss, you know—tried to find a place for a client, and we called up twenty-nine hotels."

Phil looked confident. "Oh, the manager of the Brownstone's an old pal. I designed a shore cottage for him once."

But the Brownstone's manager had left a year ago, and the Brownstone was unyieldingly full. And the Wickley, and all the rest.

Phil drew a pad and pencil to him, ticked them off with increasing grimness. "Hospitable town," he remarked, "if I am a native." And while he dialed yet one more number he executed an intricate architectural doodle.

---

Families with babies and without babies are sorry for each other.

—E. W. HOWE: Quoted in Post Biographies of Famous Journalists: Drewry (Univ. of Ga. Press.)

---

Gale had been leaning against the desk, watching. Her expression fixed to interest, while inside was blankness. A numb, plodding blankness. Then astonishment struck through it. "Why, you're left-handed, Phil!"

He put the receiver on its cradle, pushed away the pad and pencil. "I am, my sweet. Do you disapprove of southpaws?"

"Heavens, no! But imagine not knowing a thing like that about one's husband."

Phil stood up again and said slowly, "I guess there are a good many discoveries for each of us to make. Let's go out and get some food, Red."

She swallowed, nodding quick acquiescence. She replaced the daring black hat, adjusting it before the mantel mirror. She picked up her bag and gloves, and the phone rang. It was Dick Johnson asking her if she'd have dinner with him and go over copy on the Denton account.

"But Phil's home! I told you, Dick."

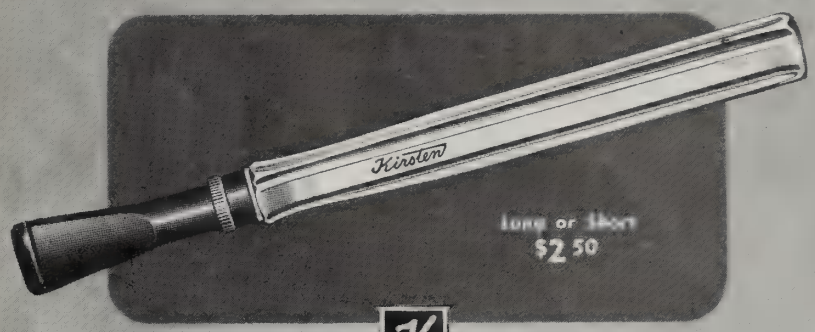
"Oh, of course. Sorry, old girl. Didn't mean to butt in on the reunion. But when the raptures die down a bit, let me know. I need your help on that account."

"I won't promise anything," she said violently, and slammed down the receiver.

Phil was staring out the window at rooftops.

"My boss," Gale said. "He's a slave driver."

"Do you dine with him often?" Phil's tone expressed nothing but polite interest.



"Just sometimes, when we're working on something together. I wrote you all about him, Phil. Don't you remember?"

"Certainly." He smiled at her, picked up his own hat. "All set?"

They hadn't wanted to go to Guglielmo's—the little restaurant where they had met, where Cheryl Fenton's crowd hung out. They tried several places, but they were jam-packed, lines to the sidewalk.

"You've got to have pull at this hour," murmured Gale. "I'm afraid ——"

CLEAN · COOL · SMART

THE Kirsten
AMERICA'S MOST DISTINGUISHED CIGARETTE HOLDER

The KIRSTEN looks different, feels different, is different. From the first puff you'll sense new full-flavored enjoyment from your favorite cigarette. Throat-irritating tars and oils are condensed and trapped in the smoke-cooling radiator of your KIRSTEN Cigarette Holder . . . choice of "smart" smokers everywhere.

KIRSTEN PIPE COMPANY, Dept. 251, Seattle 1, Washington

A GIRL NEEDS AN ESCORT WHEN SHE STEPS OUT

Carry your mad money in the handy outside change purse . . . hide bills in the secret panel . . . put pictures, cards, license in the 8 identification windows . . . snap it closed . . . and you've a perfect billfold! In hand-picked red, blue, black, and brown leathers, Wilson's "Escort" is a gift inspiration for any occasion. $7.50.

"THE ESCORT"

Wilson

NO FINER LABEL ON LEATHERS

Every room needs . . . a Living Picture

for sparkle color and life

To add radiant light, lustrous beauty, warm, glowing color, spaciousness, charm and cheer—there's nothing like a LIVING PICTURE to work sparkling wonders in your home. See the distinctive, scientifically silvered, plate glass NURRE Mirrors at your dealer's today.

Living Genuine NURRE Mirrors Pictures

FREE BOOK!

"How Famous Decorators Would Use Mirrors in Your Home." Illustrates the sparkling wonders you can achieve with Living Pictures.

THE NURRE COMPANIES, INC.
Dept. LHJ Bloomington, Ind.
Please send me FREE mirror book.
Name
Address
City State

Color makes things spring to LIFE

Color and life come quickly to old things with a coat of Kyanize. Lustaquik is the quick-drying enamel in smart colors for all furniture and woodwork. Self-smoothing . . . its glossy finish is washable.

BOSTON VARNISH COMPANY
Boston · Chicago · Los Angeles · Montreal

Self-Smoothing Kyanize
PAINTS · VARNISHES · ENAMELS
THE LIFE OF THE SURFACE

SAVE THE NATION FROM INFLATION
Use it up. Wear it out.
Make it do or do without.

Phil lit a cigarette, stamped it out at once on the pavement. "I've forgotten how to behave out with a lovely lady," he said. They walked along Fifty-second Street. "How about Guglielmo's?" he added. "Maybe old Luigi will remember me—or you."

She answered the implied question casually, "Oh, no, Phil, I haven't been there since that night." How could he think she had gone there—to their place, the shared bright island of meeting, of memory?

Luigi did not remember. "Mr. Delafield—yes-s, yes-s—no table now, perhaps a leettle later," the indifferent harassed eyes sliding over them toward the door.

Then there was a whoop and a shout from the back of the room. "Phil—Phil Delafield! For the love of Mike, it's the bride and groom!" Cheryl Fenton waving and beckoning, other faces curious, welcoming.

They went to the back table and joined the party. Cheryl, sleek and glamorous as always in a beige cocktail suit, two amiable young Navy officers still in uniform, and another auburn-haired girl, Jean Stratton.

"Phil—it can't be, but it is!" she cried breathlessly, as they all sat down. "I couldn't believe it when I heard Cheryl call your name! My, but it's nice to have you back." Jean's blue eyes shone up at Phil, delighted, caressing. Her eyes moved to Gale's face. "But did Cheryl say 'bride and groom'? Is this Mrs. Delafield?"

"Indeed yes," said Phil. "We're old married folks. Two years almost."

Jean pouted prettily, shaking her dark auburn curls. She leaned toward Gale. "He always was partial to redheads, but after seeing you I don't wonder I couldn't compete." She sighed, made a charming little face. "My heart's broken," she announced earnestly to them all. "I had him first. Why, we practically grew up together. Get me another Scotch, somebody, I'm shattered."

EVERYONE laughed. The two Navy officers swarmed near with mock comfort.

She's cute, thought Gale, terribly pretty. She hadn't looked at Phil, but she did now. He, too, was watching Jean, indulgently, with amusement—with something else?

"Oh, Phil," cried Jean softly, "do you remember the time you took me to the Yale game, and Peters made that touchdown, and I got so excited I fell right down on top of that old man on the lower ramp?"

"And was he furious, until he got a good look at you, and then he was all for cutting me out!"

Phil was laughing. I've never heard him laugh like that, thought Gale.

"A toast to the returned hero, to the reunited lovebirds. To Gale and Phil!" said Cheryl, lifting her glass.

"Of course," said Jean. "The best of everything. You must forgive our reminiscing, Mrs. Delafield. But we did used to have fun."

"Of course," said Gale, and knew that her smile was almost right—gay and understanding.

They finished their dinner. Nobody made a move to go. Gale talked to one of the Navy officers and Cheryl. Jean entertained the other two men.

It was Cheryl who broke up the party. There was a little flurry of good-bys and good wishes, vague plans for meeting soon. Just as they separated on Guglielmo's doorstep, Jean held her lips up quite naturally to Phil. He did not move his head, but gave her an affectionate little shake instead.

"Get along with you, Jeannie," he said. "You never could stand but one drink."

Gale saw a darkening in the blue eyes. There was an instant of silence. Then Jean ran off to the others. "But I'll be seeing you both!" she called gaily.

Phil and Gale started walking down Fifth Avenue. Gale said what she had not meant to say: "Phil, were you two ever engaged?"

"Just boy-and-girl stuff; it didn't mean much."

They walked on another block. "You never mentioned her."

"No reason to. All over ages ago."

The bitter pain rose sharp and strong in Gale's throat. "Or have there been so many

SEE with your own eyes..

SEE WHAT

CIRCLE TREAD

OZITE

Rug Cushion

DOES FOR YOUR RU

- Makes it look lovel
- Makes it feel softer
- Makes it wear longe

If you laid only half your rug over OZITE—you soon would see a difference that would make you rub your eyes. OZITE cushions the pounding of hard feet that otherwise crushes down the rug pile and dulls its color and beauty. It's soft, soft, soft and your rug lasts and lasts and lasts.

LOOK FOR THE CIRCLE TRE DESIGN THAT TELLS YOU GENUINE OZITE

Insist on genuine CIRCLE TREAD OZITE. Incomparably the finest rug cushion quality. Stays springy all your life. Permanently Mothproofed. Odorless because Ozonized. Guaranteed.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

CLINTON CARPET COMPANY
Merchandise Mart, Chicago 54

Please send me Free Booklet 810, on Care of Rugs.

Name
Address
City Zone State

HERE IS THE WAY TO BE "Queen of the May"

Right! Whether you are serving indoors or out—a spur-of-the-moment snack or a planned buffet—whether there are several guests or just a few—you'll "reign supreme" as a smart hostess with Hasko Serving and Lap Trays.

Standard Hasko Trays, beautifully gift-packaged, are now available at your Jewelry, Gift and Department stores. Whether you need one tray or several sets . . . you will find Hasko styling and design everything you could hope for in fine tray ware. Why not start building a Hasko service now—or add to those you already have. Ask to see them on your next shopping trip.

HASKELITE MANUFACTURING CORP.
DEPT. 143, 135 S. LA SALLE ST., CHICAGO 3, ILL.

HASKO Trays AND ACCESSORIES

Haskelite Corporation also makes
LYMETL · PLYWOOD · PHEMALOID
3 Famous Products for Industry redheads that one more or less doesn't count?"

"Don't, Gale," he said sharply. "You're my wife."

Wife, she repeated to herself. We're strangers. Hostile strangers.

They reached the little apartment, and a black panic swept over her. He looked into her face, and his own hardened to the same bleakness.

"You go to sleep, my dear," he said. "I'm going out for a long walk."

She did not sleep. She lay face down on the day bed, among the feminine little pillows. Her eyes were dry now and burning as they looked into darkness. Phil, Phil, what's happened to us? What are you thinking? What are you really? It was all a mistake, wasn't it! War marriage—a moment of violent attraction, hysteria, passion, separation, fear—big wrenching emotions. All gone now.

Toward dawn she heard him come in very quietly. She did not move. He settled himself in the chair by the fireplace. The gray dawn light seeped gradually through her smart taffeta draperies.

At six he went into the kitchenette. She heard the tiny clatter of the percolator parts, the clink of a spoon. She jumped up, ran a comb through her hair, sluiced her face with cold water, walked into the kitchenette.

"Oh, Phil—I'll get breakfast. Please sit down."

His tired mouth curved briefly. "It's almost made. I'm used to it."

Are you? she thought. Where—when? The coffee was bubbling up in the percolator, the orange juice strained, toast buttered.

"You're very efficient," she said.

"I always got my own breakfasts, those years I lived in New York."

---

There is no young man or grown man living who cannot do more than he thinks he can.

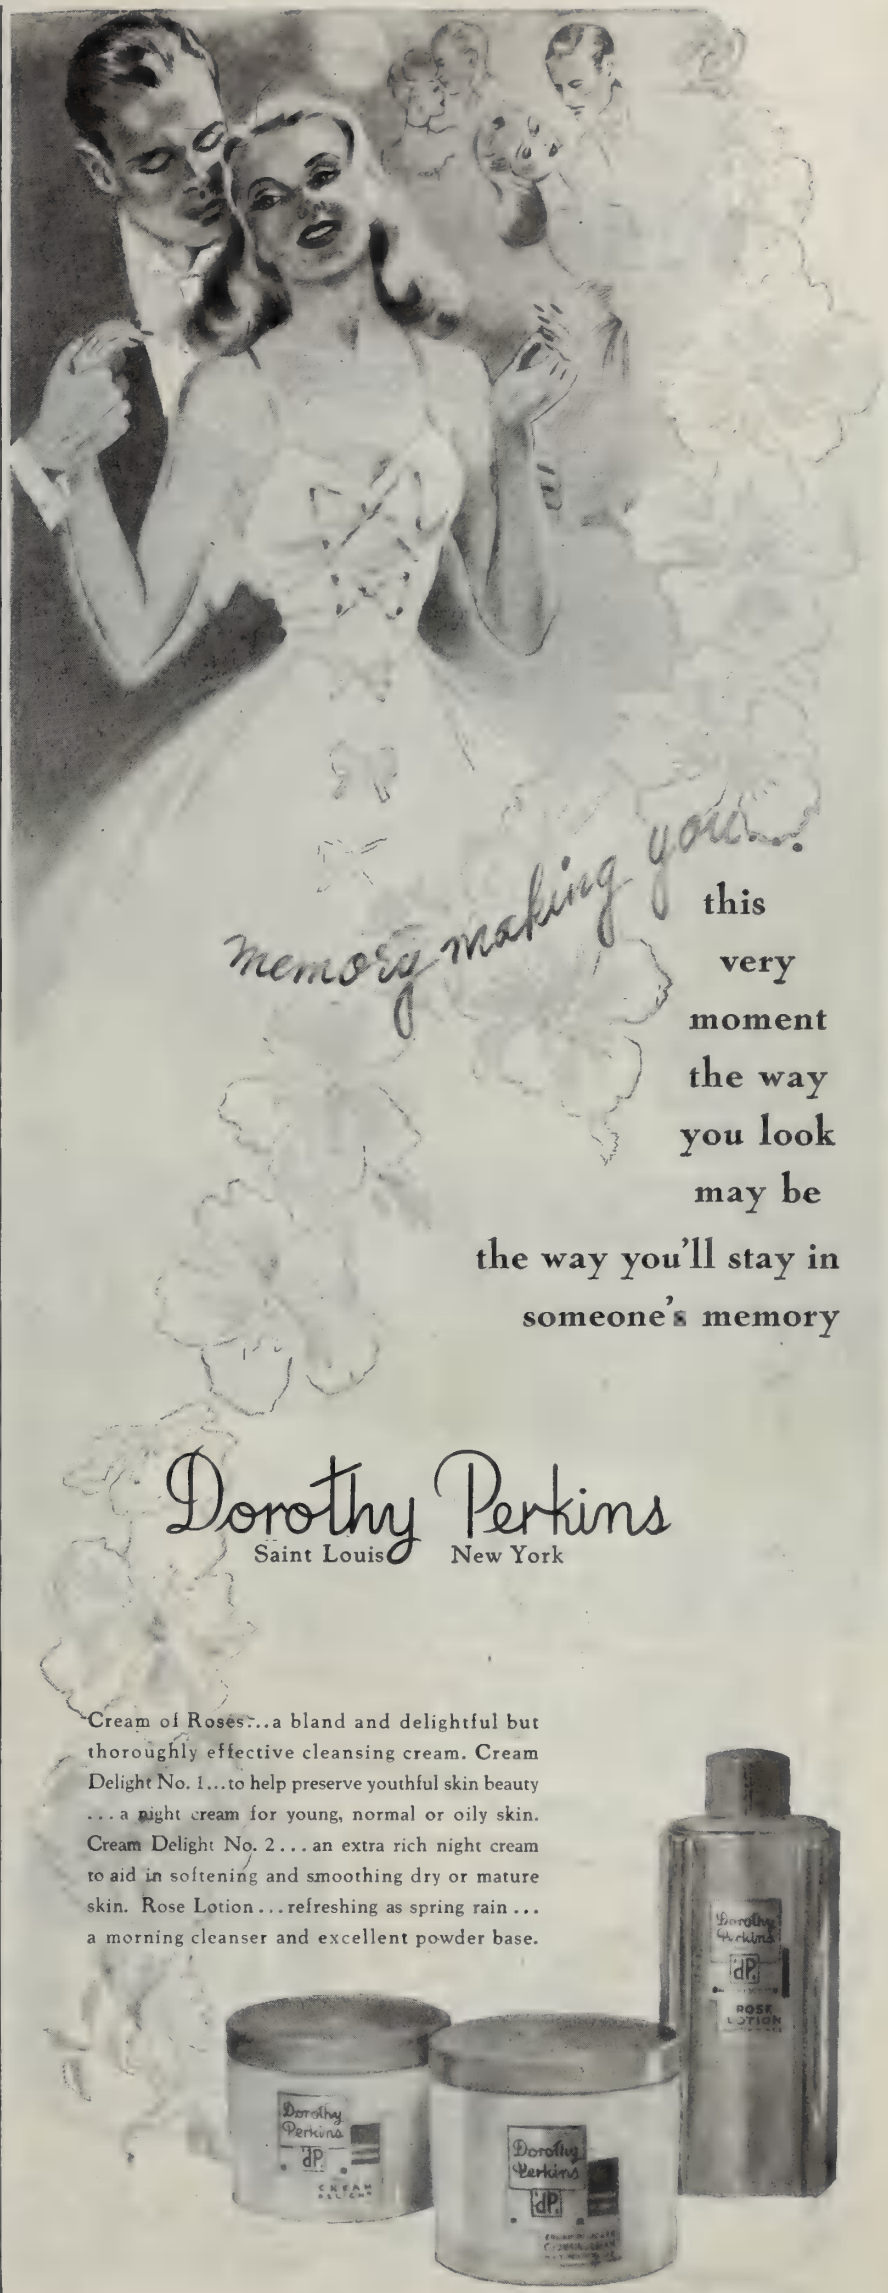
—HENRY FORD.
Quoted in Capper's Weekly.

---

"Oh, of course."

She set the tiny table. They sat down side by side. They were very polite. He admired the pattern of her imported peasant china. She had bought it at auction on Third Avenue. They talked about auctions.

After they had washed the dishes he said, "Had you made plans for today, Gale?"



Her heart turned over. Plans for today! Plans made for months in joy, in a rapture of anticipation. "Why, I had." Her voice was dry and detached. "I rented a car. I thought we might drive up to Winfield and see mother. She's anxious to meet you—naturally. But if you'd rather not ——"

She turned her back, reaching up to the china shelf, stacking the saucers exactly, replacing the lid on the sugar bowl. Say it! she thought. Get it over with. What's the use of going to see mother? What's the use of pretending? She thought of the small white cottage in Winfield. Of her mother, the gray percale house dress a little too tight, the chintz apron, the felt slippers she wore because of her swollen feet. Her mother, famous for apple pie and the management of church suppers, who made a little pin money from the crocheting of intricate doilies.

"That sounds like a good plan," said Phil. "I'd love to see your mother—I've never stopped missing my own."

"I know," said Gale after a moment. For an instant something had broken through. That had been in the letters. References to the beautiful mother who had died ten years ago. She had been the Mrs. Howard Delafield. Cheryl had shown Gale a clipping. Society beauty, famous hostess, most popular young matron in the Long Island set.

Gale set her lips. She changed in the bathroom, emerged in an old blue tweed suit, sensible calf walking shoes. She had planned on an entirely different outfit for this day, an expensive, spectator sport suit. She knew that the old blue tweed made her look schoolgirlish, a little dowdy. Phil gave her a quick startled look. What did it matter?

Popular Powers model
DONALD DEVLIN
says "This is the way Mom makes milk a super treat!"

DONALD DEVLIN, model for John Robert Powers. Also, stage and screen actor.

Don's another eager young rooter for Bosco! He's learned that delicious chocolate-flavored Bosco makes milk taste "super". And Don's always ready for Bosco-and-milk—for such a busy boy craves good nourishment! Your children, too, will smack their lips over milk—thanks to treat-making Bosco! Get Bosco soon —a delightful surprise for them!

Bosco adds Iron and Vitamin D, too!

Mothers! Bosco is more than a chocolate-flavored syrup to make milk taste delicious! Just four teaspoons in the "daily quart" supply both the Iron and Vitamin D a normal child must get every day. Because Bosco is a syrup, it stirs right in . . . blends smoothly with milk. And Bosco is so economical! Ask your grocer for a jar. Your child will be thrilled!

Today's Bosco Is the same high quality product as ever. You may not find it at your grocer's at all times due to sugar shortage, but when you do—what a satisfaction to know you're getting the best!

It was a beautiful spring morning. Along the parkways the maples and the willows showed a tender new green, enriched now and again by the delicate gold of forsythia. Phil drove expertly. The rented car had a radio and they listened to that for a while. They discussed the news. Past New Haven, as they plunged on into the gentle Connecticut countryside, they both fell silent.

They reached Winfield, exactly like a hundred other New England towns, with its prim rows of old houses painted white, its wine-glass elms along the village green, its shabby little Main Street. They passed the Congregational church, its high spire upflung against the blue sky.

"I was baptized in that church," said Gale, because the silence must be broken, "by Doctor Miller. There he is on the step."

Phil slowed down instantly. They both looked at the church. "Would you like to stop?" asked Phil.

"No. I haven't been to church in ages, or seen Doctor Miller."

Phil hesitated before he slipped the car into gear, and in that instant a new pain shot through her. Once she had used to dream of being married in that church.

"Mother's house is just around that corner to the left," she said.

They drew up before the little cottage. Mrs. Davis opened the door. Her face was flushed from the oven, her eyeglasses were crooked, she wore the gray percale house dress, the shapeless felt slippers. There was a floury smooch across her forehead.

Gale felt a great wave of defensive love. She flung her arms around her mother's neck.

"Well—dear," said Mrs. Davis quietly, kissing her. Her wise eyes examined Gale's face, turned to the still man on the doorstep. "Philip," she said in the same quiet tone, "you're very welcome."

Gale, amazed, saw her mother reach out a work-worn hand, and ■ quick incredulous response in Phil's face.

"You must be starved," said Mrs. Davis. "Lunch is most ready. You can go right up to the spare room. I fixed it for you."

A quick flush stained Gale's cheeks. "I don't believe I'll go up right now." Phil turned without a word and went upstairs.

The two women moved into the cluttered old kitchen.

"What is it, child?" Mrs. Davis smoothed the wind-ruffled red hair.

Gale shut her eyes, leaning against the solid comforting shoulder. "Everything," she whispered. "Everything. We're strangers."

In the silence, a coal fell in the grate of the old-fashioned stove. The dish-faced wall clock ticked loudly.

"How does he feel?" said Mrs. Davis.

"I don't know." Gale bit her lips against the note of hysteria. She moved from mother to the sink, turned on the faucet. "I don't know anything about him," she said in a cold dead tone. "I thought I did. It was a horrible mistake. I don't understand him." She dried her hands on the roller towel.

"I think I do," said Mrs. Davis.

GALE'S hands dropped. "You couldn't, mother. He's not like us. His whole life—his background—utterly different."

"You're talking rubbish, baby." Mrs. Davis moved briskly to the stove. "He's a man, and he's been to war. He loved you, and I believe he still does. That's enough."

Gale shook her head. "You don't know."

Mrs. Davis pulled ■ golden bubbling pie from the oven, set it on the table. "I was married during the last war, Gale," she sai quietly. "Timing gets out of whack in wa time. Timing's mighty important. In cook ing, in life, in love. If the timing goes wron you've got to start over. Do it right."

"You're a wise woman, Mrs. Davis." was Phil's voice from the doorway.

Both women started and looked at hi Phil looked different. Younger, more boyis He had taken off his tie and coat, his shi was open on a brown muscled neck.

They ate little of Mrs. Davis' deliciou food, but she didn't seem to notice. S talked a great deal, more than Gale ever r membered. About the church supper ne week. The county fair.

GALE watched Phil. If he smiled—if h condescended —— But he did not. He aske questions. He seemed genuinely interested And somehow there was comfort and pr tection growing in the shabby old kitch from her mother's chatter. She felt it warm ing her, relaxing the cold tightness in h chest.

"Now scat, you two," said Mrs. Davi rising with decision. "Go out and take walk. Down by the river to the old mill, should think. But mind you get her back b five o'clock, Philip. don't like Gale o after dusk. She has delicate throat."

"Mother!" pr tested Gale. It was ridiculous. Treatin them as though th weren't marrie Treating them actly as she used treat the boys w called long ago: "( down by the riv Be back by five Ridiculous—but w it? For the sensati of comfort and pr tection had sudden deepened.

And Phil did n smile. He sai "Right. I'll have h back on the dot five."

They started down Elm Street.

"How do we g 'Down by the C Mill Stream'?" ask Phil, singing it soft She caught her brea and pointed, not trusting herself to spea They scrambled down the short cut hind Reed's barn, and he took her hand. T warm grip was shy and young, almost ten tive. And a delicious shyness seized her t They tumbled down the last sharp slope the river path, and stood laughing a breathless.

There was another couple on the path. boy and a girl, perched on the overhangi branch of a willow, near the river. Gale a Phil glanced at the two heads, heard the s excited murmurs from the oblivious coup Their own hands met again and stayed gether. Her heart began to beat, not w fear, not with passion, nor with any emoti she had ever known with Phil. It beat wit sweet and tender anticipation like the v beginning of young love.

They rounded a bend and came upon old mill, long disused, its machinery rust the trysting place for generations of Winfi lovers.

"Look," said Phil, pointing to the mo fallen beams. They were lavishly carved both expert and bungling fingers. "J.G. lo W.E. 1850." . . . "Tom and Nellie. '7 Entwined initials in hearts, in rings, in p sies. "Courtship," said Phil, and he said little Victorian word softly, thoughtfully. looked down at Gale, and suddenly at l she knew. She met his troubled look from her own steady eyes the hurt and uncertainty vanished forever.

"Yes," she said. "We by-passed all t didn't we, Phil? All the sweetness,

(Continued on Page 152)

Child in Spring

By Sara Van Alstyne Allen

You and the spring are young together.
You are the bud of the enchanted flower
Released from winter's web of sleep,
Opening slowly in the morning hour.
Not marring the grass with your light feet,
You run laughing while the sky
Is shaped to listen, to reply.
The blue winds answer to your cry.
Your hair, like sun, shadows your cheek
And April are the words you speak.

MEET THE AUSTINS...

two generations raised on Clapp's!

"I guess Clapp's must hear plenty of stories about babies thriving on its baby foods," says Mrs. John Austin, of Rochester, N. Y. "But I wonder how often you hear about a family like ours—with two generations raised on Clapp's." And she continues . . .

"We have a baby, John, Jr., 15½ months old —and husky as they come! Johnny weighed 7 lbs. 10 oz. when he was born. And sometimes I wonder if he'll ever stop growing!

"The doctor started Johnny on solid food quite early. When I asked the doctor what brand of baby foods to get, he said, 'Clapp's!' And that didn't surprise me one bit . . .

For my mother and my husband's mother ad told me Clapp's was what we'd been raised n—when Clapp's introduced baby foods 25 ears ago.

"So, naturally, I was pleased that Clapp's are still my doctor's choice. What Clapp's has done for Johnny, you can see from these pictures! At 6 months, he was sitting in a high chair . . .

"By 9 months, he was feeding himself, saying 'Da-da,' and pounding on the piano good and hard! And does that baby love eating! I've never had a moment's trouble in feeding him since he started Clapp's. See why I'm so grateful for those fine baby foods?"

Why your baby will thrive on Clapp's:

- Ever since Clapp's originated baby foods 25 years ago, we've made all our foods to fill doctors' requirements.
- We've constantly improved our formulas, added new foods, according to doctors' suggestions. Now we offer "the world's largest baby menu."
- We make every test we can, because we want to.
- We discard many fruits and vegetables that would be perfectly acceptable for adults, but not, in our judgment, for Clapp-fed babies.
- All our foods are pressure-cooked—to help retain vitamins and minerals, fresh color and flavor.
- We have seen two generations of babies raised on Clapp's. Our business, we believe, is the most important business in the world. It is our sole business, not a side line.

- Perhaps this is why so many doctors prescribe Clapp's regularly.

This is the 25th Anniversary of

CLAPP'S BABY FOODS

—the first baby foods

PRODUCTS OF AMERICAN HOME FOODS, INC.

When Baby's crankiness means "Childhood Constipation"

...give Fletcher's Castoria!

"It's the laxative made especially for infants and children."

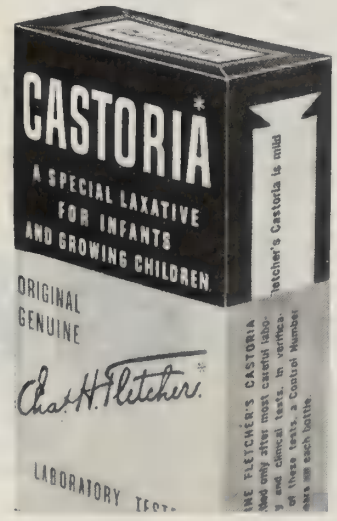
WHEN your child is cross and cranky, and that crankiness comes from "Childhood Constipation"... the wise thing to do is this:



Give him Fletcher's Castoria. It's so gentle and safe, yet it works thoroughly and effectively. It won't upset his sensitive digestive system.

Unlike adult laxatives — which may be too harsh—Fletcher's Castoria is especially made for children. It contains no harsh drugs, and will not cause griping or discomfort.

And Fletcher's Castoria has such a pleasing taste that children really love it. They take it gladly, without forcing.

Get Fletcher's Castoria at your drug-store today. Look for the green band and laboratory control number on the package.

Always take a laxative only as directed on the package or by your physician.

Chas. H. Fletcher

CASTORIA

The original and genuine

(Continued from Page 150)

beginnings, the little sentimental things. Because we had to. But I didn't think you—I didn't think a man ——"

She saw the light come into his face. He put his arm around her very gently, drew her down beside him on the fallen beam. "It's continuity, Gale," he said, frowning a little, groping for words. "You get a lot of time to think out there. You want the old values, the true ones, the ones our parents and grandparents had. You want things rooted, slow-growing—certain. Your mother's right, darling. Timing gets out of whack in wartime. We couldn't help it then. But we can now." He turned to her, putting his hands on her shoulders, searching her face. "Do you understand ——" and he added the love name, the one he had called her in the letters. She raised her lips to his.

And this kiss was as though the others had never been. They whispered "I love you," and it was like the first time for them both.

They went back along the river path and up the hill to town. They reached the little white cottage as the church clock struck five. They stood hand in hand on the step as Mrs. Davis opened the door.

"I got her back on the dot," said Phil.

Mrs. Davis stood a moment looking at them, and her eyes slowly lit with an answering smile.

They moved together into the front room, and Phil put his arm around Gale's waist. "Mrs. Davis, I love your daughter. May I have your permission to marry her?"

Mrs. Davis sat down slowly in the old rocker. "I believe you'll make a happy couple," she said. She took off her spectacles and wiped them on her apron. "I asked Doctor Miller would he step around tonight. I thought maybe you'd like to make arrangements." She put on her glasses, looked up at the two faces above her. "Real wedding in the church. Isn't that what you mean, children?"

COCKER OF THE WALK

(Continued from Page 20)

had seen. I won't describe her, because she is the most famous spaniel in the United States and you have probably seen a million pictures of her. It is enough to say that when she turned to look at me, a bolt of lightning started at the top of my skull and jingle-jangled all the way down to my feet.

I didn't say a word, because I couldn't, but Flyaway Queen is very smart, and after a moment she said, "Fresh! When did they let you out of the whelping box? You can't be more than six months old—beat it."

"I'll grow," I said hopefully, but she sniffed and turned her head away.

"All right," Bill Wainwright was saying to Christy, "that's a date. And I promise not to pester you about selling Pepper. Did I tell you you're beautiful?"

When he drove away, Christy stood looking after the car, smiling. She bent down to fondle my ears, and said in a voice that sounded a little strange, "Pepper, I like him. He's quite special. But conceited."

"The two of them," I said, but I didn't expect an answer, because I spoke in Spaniel, which is understood only by spaniels.

A little dashed, I went back to the kennels with Christy, and dreamed all night about Flyaway Queen. In the morning, mamma asked me if I felt wormy, because I had circles under my eyes—that's mothers for you. However, I was very young, and in a few days I had almost, but not quite, forgotten Flyaway Queen.

Christy and Bill Wainwright had a good many dates, and one day, a couple of months later, mamma said to me, "I believe they're falling in love. It would be very nice for all of us if they married, since he's a millionaire; and he won't have to go away to war, because he's been." So we watched the developing romance with a great deal of interest.

Of course they had a few lively arguments now and then, because Bill wasn't able to keep his promise not to pester Christy about me. He used to come and stand over me,

COAST TO COAST
AMERICA'S FINEST STORES ARE FEATURING LITTLE YANKEE SHOES!

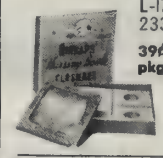
This great line of children's and infants' shoe is well on its way to national leadership. Proud product of skilled New England craftsmen, Little Yankees are scientifically designe for correct fit and ample growing room, an built of top-quality materials for long wea $4.00 and up, depending on size. At bette dealers or write The Yankee Shoemaker Division of the Sam Smith Shoe Company Newmarket, N. H.



LITTLE YANKEE
"GREAT SHOES FOR LITTLE AMERICANS"

QUICAP COLLAR & CELLOPHANE COVER
SEAL BABY'S BOTTLE
EASILY—QUICKLY—SAFELY

NO scalds, broken nails, rubber to boil! JUST—5 seconds for a germproof seal. And, Quicaps are disposable! Get Quicaps at dime, drug, dept. stores. For FREE sample pkg., write Dept. L-17, The Quicap Co., Inc., 233 Broadway, N. Y. 7.

39¢ pkg.

DISPOSABLE
QUICAPS
NURSING BOTTLE CLOSURE

Heir Minded
MATERNITY DRESSES
From Janne OF HOLLYWOOD

The newest in smart Maternity Dresses for home and street wear. Darling frocks for comfort and concealing lines. All surprisingly low prices. A dress for every occasio

FREE from HOLLYWOO
New catalog sent upon request in pl wrapper, free. Write today.
JANNE OF HOLLYWOOD, Dept. 133, 5071 Hollywo Blvd., Hollywood, California.

GROW Beautiful ROSES
USE TRI-OGEN
Controls Blackspot, Mildew and insects. Available in dust and spray at dealers or direct. Folder Free.
ROSE MFG. COMPANY
206 OGEN BLDG., BEACON, N.Y.

KVP Heavy WAXED PAPE

Babies Nurse Better with Evenflo, say Nurses

Evenflo valve relieves vacuum

Many letters are received from nurses telling how the modern Evenflo Nurser improves baby feeding. They observe that this scientific nurser enables both normal and subnormal babies to finish their bottles better and get more benefit from their food.

Mothers frequently write us complimentary letters on Evenflo. They say its handy nipple, bottle, cap in one self-contained unit saves time and simplifies feeding at home or while visiting or traveling. Complete Evenflo Nursers are 25c at baby shops, drug and dept. stores.

Evenflo
America's Most Popular Nurser

THOMASTON
Sheets
SINCE 1899 THEY HAVE MET THE TEST OF TIME

'EM SWIM!
S SAFE—IT'S FUN
H STAY-A-FLOAT
d with soft Kapok six times buoyant than cork, can't e or puncture, no air to leak Adjustable straps (patented re) hold Stay-A-Float se- in place—it can't slip up or . This sensational life pre- and swim vest makes swim- easy and safe for everyone. At tment, sporting goods or ma- tores—for children or adults.

EE Expert swimming instructions, how to teach beginners, how to master speed strokes. Write today
ICAN PAD & TEXTILE CO. Dept. 4, GREENFIELD, OHIO

Y DON'T YOU WRITE?
g short stories, articles on homemaking, business, n interest stories, local and club activities, etc., will you to earn extra money. In your own home, on your me, the New York Copy Desk Method teaches you how te—the way newspaper women learn, by writing. Our "Writing Aptitude Test" tells whether you possess ndamental qualities essential to successful writing. enjoy this test. Write for it, without cost or obligation.
WSPAPER INSTITUTE OF AMERICA
575-E, One Park Avenue New York 16, N. Y.

EASY, EXTRA MONEY PLAN
SHOW FRIENDS NEW 1946 GREETING CARD ASSORTMENTS
Up to 100% Profit. Take easy orders from friends, fellow workers. 10 big money making assortments. Sell for $1.00 each—cost you 50c up. Extra bonus. Special Offer. Write for lending $1.00 All Occasion box on approval and free correspondence notes samples.
REQUEST $1 ALL OCCASION ASSORTMENT ON APPROVAL
RY DOEHLA CO., Dept. L-10, FITCHBURG, MASS.

muttering under his breath, "Golly, how I want you, you wonderful little dog, you!" and then he'd go and try to wheedle Christy, and after a while they'd both blow up.

"What's the earthly difference?" he'd shout. "He'd be shown at the Garden as Morgan's Black Pepper, with your father down as breeder. Who cares whether you own him or I own him? I should think you'd sell him to me in simple justice to the poor dog; with an awful greenhorn like you falling all over him in the ring, he's a dead pigeon!"

Mamma said she could see the difference. Christy wanted me to win while I was still a Morgan Kennels dog, shown by Jack Morgan's daughter. Besides, mamma said human love is a very confused thing, and Christy, who is proud and hot-tempered, would feel better about loving Bill if she could give him one good shellacking in the show ring. That I don't understand, but no doubt mamma is right.

Anyway, that was how things were, with a bottle of red ink on the office desk right next to the ledger, and Christy, between love and bills, very edgy, until the big event that ripped everything completely.

Christy had a slight cold, so she had sent the kennelman, George, with Trotter, one of the parti-colors, to a small Connecticut show where Trotter had been entered. Now mamma has not very much use for Trotter, either personally or as a show dog. "Always a reserve winner, never a champ," she says of him, which is nervy, as mamma has only three points to her own name and everybody knows the judge had had too many old-fashioneds the day she got those three points. But none of us cares particularly for Trotter; he is a great groaner and complainer.

So when he got home from the show that night, we listened unwillingly, yawning and scratching with boredom, while he explained that the dog that was put up over him was high in the rear and swung like a gate when he walked, and the judge was crazy.

Would that the race of women had never existed—except for me alone!

"The judge is always crazy," mamma said sarcastically. "If you lose, that is."

Trotter is no gentleman. "Listen to her," he said. "The only judge that ever gave her a point was so pie-eyed they had to wheel him into the ring." He shoved his nose out as far as he could and glared at her venomously. "By the way, I've got some news. That old baggage George won't be showing up tomorrow. He's gone to another kennel. A place where they pay money, I understand."

We stopped scratching and yawning suddenly. This was news. Good kennelmen were rare as pearls in oysters nowadays, and Christy would never be able to get another.

"What kennel?" mamma said. I suppose the same thing had struck her that had struck me. "It wasn't Bill Wainwright that stole George, was it?"

"Sirup," Trotter said. "It might have been, and it might not. You may ask till your pedigree curls—if you've got a pedigree." I heard him turning around in his kennel and lying down.

Mamma said a few words, and then she added threateningly, "We'll get you in the yard tomorrow and bite it out of you."

"Sticks and stones," he said, with a yawn.

Well, that was what ruined things between Christy and Bill. Because an apologetic note from George turned up the next morning, but George did not, and the very same thing occurred to Christy that had occurred to mamma. I heard her talking to Martha about it, while Christy walked me up and down the road to improve my gait.

"You know very well who did this to me, Martha," she said, panting with exertion and temper. "That Bill Wainwright! He was at the show, too, and he'd do anything to get this little dog. He figures that without a kennelman I'd have to give up. Well, I won't!"

(Continued on Page 155)

Merry, Merry Carter Crew

We dress so fast . . . mother has time to make merry, too. Look at our Carter's and you'll see why. Those→Nevabind* underarms with Jiffon* shoulders save all fumble and fuss. No binding. No chafing. Carter's know our tender spots . . . use only the baby-softest fabrics. And are they sturdy? Most Carter's are outgrown before they're outworn. *Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Right from birth, say Carter's
JIFFON-NEVABINDS . . . Please

GOOD-BYE DROOPY DRAWERS

See Carter's New Tyke Pant.† It's shorter . . . trimmer . . . has more action room. Here's why. Crotch-section "give" is up-and-down as the body bends. Side sections give around the body. Buttons on Tyke Top.

† Pat. Applied for

Write for Carter's BABY FACTS booklet.
The William Carter Company
Needham Heights 94, Massachusetts

P-s-s-t . . . Carter's Make Fine Underwear for all the Family!

Your baby's skin is thinner than yours

that's why the softness of the new Scottissue is important

That "rose petal" skin really is thinner and more fragile than an adult's . . . That's why you have to keep him dry, why you have to rinse every trace of soap out of his diapers, why you have to watch out for chafing.

And it's why you should be extra careful in choosing his bathroom tissue.

WHAT TO LOOK FOR

In selecting his tissue you will want to avoid even the slightest harshness. You will look for "old linen" softness, for high absorbency, and sufficient strength to prevent tearing and shredding.

More mothers are finding this ideal combination of tissue qualities in Scott than in any other tissue.

ScotTissue is perfectly balanced for use. Soft enough for comfort . . . strong enough for thorough cleansing. Your baby will appreciate your providing ScotTissue for his daily comfort. You will find it an important aid in training him when he is a little older. And in the big 1000-sheet roll, it is an economical tissue for the whole family.

Order ScotTissue from your grocer today. More ScotTissue is being made than ever before . . . and it's softer than ever!

New Scottissue is softer than ever

Trade Mark "ScotTissue" Reg. U. S. Pat. Off

(Continued from Page 153)

Now, Mis' Christy," Martha said mildly. hat note from George don't say whut ken- he go to. Mistuh Bill don't strike me the kind of guy who do a trick like that."

Oh, doesn't he?" Christy said.

couple of weeks went by when we didn't from Bill except for a flock of cheery s from out West, telling Christy how he was doing at the big shows there. se blithe telegrams did little to smooth isty, who wasn't doing well at anything. nd then one cold snowy evening in Feb- y, a week before my debut at the Garden, ething woke me. I could smell the snow ing against the outside door of my ken- and the wind was moaning like a pack of . "Ow-uff," I yawned, and was just curl- up again, when I heard mamma's voice.

You Pepper," she said irritably. "I thought d been chloroformed. What goes on in office?"

didn't care, but there would have been nore sleep for me that night if I hadn't what mamma wanted, so I went to the of my kennel and looked out.

he fire in the stove had burned low, and sty was asleep in the chair beside it. Wainwright was standing over her, and ust have just come in, because the snow powdered him like sugar hadn't started elt. He stood there looking at her, smil- a little, then he leaned over, kissed her k very gently so as not to waken her, and and sat down in the other chair.

Well, what?" mamma said impatiently. st then that fool Trotter came to and d, "Help! Help! Burglars!" and the e kennel began to bugle. Naturally, sty woke, got out of her chair and banged he wall to quiet us. When she turned nd she saw Bill. "Oh!" she said.

Hello, beautiful. I missed you."

That's big of you," she said.

screwed his eyebrows down, a trick he when puzzled. "What causes the sharp in here, h'm-m?"

ISTY sat on the edge of the grooming and looked at him; I was glad I wasn't e other end of that look. "You wouldn't , son?"

No, I wouldn't." Bill isn't the sort to quiet very long under rough treatment. ess you're worked to a cranky frazzle ut your kennelman. By the way— you're not in a social mood, let's just it business. When I heard about George ng you, I wondered if you wouldn't be ested." He took a slip of green paper out pocket. "A check for twenty-five thou- dollars, if you'll sell me your whole el—including, of course, Black Pepper."

f course," Christy said. She took the from his hand and sat staring at it.

"I thought it was you. I'm glad to be sure." She lifted the stove lid and dropped the check on the pink coals. "I don't want your filthy check."

"Would you mind explaining what you mean by these cryptic remarks?" His voice was fuzzy with rising temper.

"As though you didn't know darned well," she said. "You stole my kennelman."

He stared at her. "Don't make me mad," he said. He got up out of the chair and started to put on his overcoat.

"Bill, you know I hate a cheat!" she said violently, her eyes angry. Then, after a deep breath, she took a few more stunning cracks and hard swipes at him, nicely mixed with glancing blows. Mamma said it was the finest dressing down she ever had heard.

BILL said nothing, but his ears slowly reddened while he buttoned the buttons of his overcoat. "When you're ready to apologize, you can call me up. Until then, that's all."

"Don't wait by the phone," Christy said. The door closed behind him with a slam of wind and snow, and then the kennels got very quiet and tense.

"Heavens," mamma said soberly, "now we are all in a very desperate predicament."

Christy went back to the chair, and after a moment she put her head down on her hands, and her bright hair flowed like gold all over the green blotter on the desk.

Mamma, who was listening intently, looked over at me. "She's undoubtedly a silly little fool, but even so—baby, do your stuff. A spaniel is better than nothing."

So I whined and whined, and in a few minutes Christy came back to my kennel and took me up in her arms. "Oh, Pepper," she said, "poor little fellow, now we're all alone."

"And whose fault is that, I'd like to know?" mamma said, but of course Christy did not understand her.

She went on talking to me in a husky voice thick with tears. "You've got to win at the Garden. You've got to beat his dogs—you've got to go way up. You've got to!"

At last she put me down again in my kennel, turned out the lights and went back to the house.

"You heard her, Pepper," mamma said. "If you go way up at the Garden, it will make the kennels. She can get big prices for the puppies and dogs, big stud fees; and since we're not going to marry money, we'll certainly need it. If you go way up."

"What's all the iffing?" I said.

"Have you ever been in the Garden? With all those thousands of dogs and tens of thousands of people staring and roaring at you?"

"No, and neither have you, mamma," I said. "I think you exaggerate."

"I'll take care of you in the morning," she said stiffly. "By the way ——" She hollered

LITTLE GUY

"How could there be anything but peace after they smoked 'em?"

joy shoemakers, inc. st. louis, mo.

AT LEADING DEPARTMENT STORES EVERYWHERE . . WRITE US, WE'LL TELL YOU WHERE

ALL WET?.. THAT'S MY SECRET-AND ARCHER'S!

"I slip Mom a fast wink when lap-cuddlers squeal 'the darling—she's so good.' We know it's wonderful waterproof Archer Baby Pants that keep me socially secure! Archer's our choice for comfort, flexibility, duck-to-water washability, too!"

In Clear Plastic (or Opaque), or Nainsook, at Chain and Department Stores, or your favorite Mail Order House. Look for Archer Waterproof Crib Sheets, too!

ARCHER RUBBER COMPANY ROYAL ARCHER BABY PANTS

A PRODUCT OF ARCHER RUBBER COMPANY
MILFORD, MASS.
QUALITY RUBBERIZED GOODS SINCE 1907

E-Z UNDERWEAR FOR INFANTS

E-Z—a short, quick name to remember when you buy underwear for your baby. E-Z means quality in fit and fabric—is an assurance of comfort for your child.

Remember, too, that weight as well as age is important in buying the correct size of infant's underwear. Send for our free booklet 'Don't Let the Scales Scare You' with weight-size chart.

E-Z Mills, Inc., 57 Worth St., New York 13

More protection for Baby's skin!

New LOTION proves extra-effective!

Hospital-tested! Cuts irritation-danger! New Johnson's Baby Lotion gives your baby's skin proved protection! In hospital tests on thousands of infants, this smooth, white, antiseptic Lotion was used daily for allover skin care. Figures proved far fewer cases of impetigo, diaper rash, prickly heat!

So pleasant! Leaves baby sweet, touchable! Let Johnson's Baby Lotion show you new pleasure in caring for baby's skin! It's snow-white, creamy, delightful to use. Contains lanolin. Leaves baby's skin soft, clean, protected! Smooth it on baby's skin after baths, at every diaper change. Let Johnson's Baby Lotion—the modern way—be your way!

Johnson's Baby Lotion
ANTISEPTIC
Johnson & Johnson

along the row of noisy kennels, "Trotter, dear, will you tell us yet who stole George?"

"Don't bother me," Trotter said.

We had cornered him several times in the yard, but Christy had always rushed out and broken it up.

"Tomorrow," mamma said silkily, "Christy will be too upset to save you, I'm thinking."

Well, we got him in the morning, although mamma forced me to stay on the side lines, since the Garden was only a week away, and she wanted no fight marks on me. I heard Trotter yelling from the bottom of the heap:

"All right, all right! I'll tell. It was some geezle from the Wacky-Cocky Kennels in Massachusetts."

"I don't see what earthly good it does us, mamma," I said when peace was restored.

"I wanted to know for my own satisfaction," she said gloomily. "For heaven's sake, get your big feet out of that wet snow! If you got a cold, we'd be ruined."

That was the way it went on for the next week. If I had been an emotional dog, Christy and mamma between them would have made a nervous wreck of me. If it wasn't Christy, grooming me, walking me, working me on the show lead, it was mamma, taking me aside and telling me how to behave at the Garden.

"Now, mamma, how in the world could I lose?" I said.

"Well, if they gave blue ribbons for conceit, you'd surely corner the market," she said, nipping me crossly but with care, so as not to damage me.

No, no other dog in the world ever went to Madison Square Garden with greater assurance.

But at the Garden, I sang a different tune—with a multitude of dogs talking and cursing and howling around me, crowds of loud-mouthed human beings milling and shoving, and strong, alarming smells assaulting my sensitive nose.

Christy spread a soft rug on my own bench, and chained me. I sat and shuddered. It is terrible to want your mamma that hard, and know she is fifty miles away. I wanted my familiar old kennel too.

As Christy began combing me nervously, she said, "Scared, b-baby? There's nothing to be scared of."

Oh, no? I felt as though I were in the bottom of a pit, with all bedlam shoved in on top of me.

Frog-voiced, the loud-speaker boomed suddenly: "Puppies, dogs, Ring Number Five."

Christy's hand shook on me. "Oh, Pepper," she said huskily, "that's us!" She took the chain off me again, and picked me up in her arms. I heard her sigh; I could feel her heart drumming against my side—she was as scared as I was. When she set me down, limp as lettuce, on the pale green carpet of Ring Number Five, I felt as green as the carpet. "Spunk up," she said anxiously, patting me with a hand that jumped like an electric vibrator, as she wheeled me into line with the other dogs.

I guess my rivals were a nice bunch of pups. A few of them were bat-eared with excitement, and a few had show-ring shakes like me. One who was more self-possessed licked my face and expressed pleasure at meeting me, as his mother had taught him.

In the Puppy Class, the judge makes allowances, and a very good thing it is too. Because I cannot say that Christy and I showed well. She dropped my lead once, and I went wandering around the ring for a few moments, crying, "Mamma, mamma," and then when the judge had her move me, she turned too short on a corner and almost fell on me. But nobody laughed.

In fact, after a while I began to realize that all those staring faces outside the ring liked us, because there would be a loud rustle of applause whenever the judge stepped near me. Mamma says I am the most appalling show-off in the world, and I guess it is true, because suddenly I felt a great deal better about things.

I began to look around and take notice, and the first noticeable thing I saw was Bill Wainwright. He was standing just outside

GIVE THIS FAMOUS BABY BOOK
The GIFT
New Mothers Love!

"OUR BABY'S FIRST SEVEN YEARS"

A PRICELESS RECORD of a child's growth, and a beautiful gift—with valuable scientific records and guides for child care. Filled with charming illustrations in full colors—just the gift for new mothers! In pink or blue cloth. ONLY $2.50
Now in 16th Edition · Over 450,000 Copies Sold

If Your Dealer Cannot Supply You—Order Direct From—MOTHERS' AID—CHICAGO LYING-IN HOSPITAL
5845 MARYLAND AVE. · CHICAGO, ILL.

HAVING A BABY?
Start right with this improved, easy-to-clean, H geia nursing unit. Fewer parts—just nipple, bott and cap. Prepare full day's formula at one tim Only necessary to remove cap when feeding. C keeps nipples germ-fr Handy for out-of-ho feeding. Useful as c tainer for baby's ot foods. Famous brea shaped nipple has p ented airvent to red "windsucking." Sold your druggist's co plete as illustrated parts separately.

Hygeia
NURSING BOTTLES NIPPLES WITH CAP
CONSULT YOUR DOCTOR REGULARL

Sweep Easier and Faster wit a WAGNER Carpet Sweepe

● Years ahead i cleaning efficiency. See your dealer . . insist on a Wagner. Write for literature
WAGNER Komb-Kleaned Sweeper
Better, Easier "PICK-UP"
E. R. WAGNER MFG. CO., Dept. J, Milwaukee 9, W

It's the darndest feeling

I don't know just how to explain it, Boss, but having worms makes a guy feel blue and see red. He's so run-down he's ready for almost any disease.

But, Boss, we can massacre the menaces with a dose of Sergeant's SURE SHOT Capsules. Easy to give, they kill worms . . . and, incidentally, Sergeant's Puppy Capsules do a thorough worm clean-out for puppies, too.

Sergeant's worm medicines, and other Sergeant's products, are at your nearest drug or pet store. Stop in today.

Learn how to detect worms in your dog. The new Sergeant's Dog Book outlines the symptoms for 3 different kinds of worms. Get it FREE at your drug or pet store. Or write Sergeant's, Richmond 20, Va.

Sergeant's
WORM MEDICINES

No more worms for me - Caesar

FOR SPRINGTIME CHEER THROUGHOUT THE YEAR—

Give a Canary!

For birthdays or anniversaries, one of these silver-throated songsters makes a perfect gift. It's the only pet that sings, and its brilliant colors and happy trills will not only keep Spring alive but will also be a daily reminder of your thoughtfulness.

America's Largest Selling Bird Diet →

CONTAINING THE TESTED TWELVE INGREDIENTS

HAVE YOUR OWN MONEY MAKING BUSINESS — SELLING GREETING CARDS TO FRIENDS

Fascinating year 'round income building plan. Take easy orders for 10 fast selling greeting card assortments. Sell for $1.00 each—cost you 50¢ up. Extra bonus. Experience unnecessary. Request foremost $1.00 All Occasion assortment on approval, free Correspondence Notes samples. Special Offer. BLUEBIRD STUDIOS, Dept. L-1, FITCHBURG, MASS.

REQUEST SAMPLE $1 ALL OCCASION ASSORTMENT ON APPROVAL

REE SAMPLES RESPONSIBILITY NOTES

Plants Grow "Like Magic"

ants have no boarding house reach. Reach the roots with Y-GRO—13-26-13. Dissolve in water. Pour on. Plants t food at once. Amazing results. Ideal starter ution and all-season fertilizer. Ask your dealer HY-GRO—in 25c and $1 jars. For folder write: cCormick & Co., Inc., Baltimore 2, Md.

HY-GRO SOLUBLE PLANT FOOD

the ring, and staring at Christy the way mamma stares at a beef bone when she is very hungry. It was not surprising, because Christy is a tall blond dream anyway, and now she was lighted up and very excited. I suppose that was because she sensed what was coming.

I must say I hadn't, as it had seemed to me that the judge hadn't paid much attention to us. So nobody was more agreeably amazed than I when the judge stooped down, gave me a firm tap on the head, and said, "First." Then they handed Christy a glossy blue ribbon. A loud noise of applause rushed like a wind around the ring, and Christy smiled and smiled at the judge as though she would like to kiss him, and was only just managing to hold herself in check.

How can I describe how I felt? Now I knew I was a show dog. When Christy carried me down to the bench, I went yelling at the top of my lungs, "I won the blue! Hear ye! Hear ye! I won the blue!"

Of course, I understood there were a few hurdles still in front of me before I could be Best in Show. I would have to go Winners Dogs, Best of Winners, Best of Variety and top the Sporting Group before I even got into the Best in Show group. But when did I, in a normal state of mind, underestimate my chances?

After Christy had got back to the bench and chained me, she took a thumbtack and prepared to stick my ribbon to the boards at the rear of the bench.

"Way up high, chum," I said, "where everybody can see it."

Suddenly a beautiful dark head squeezed around the corner of the bench. "My, how you have grown!" she said admiringly.

---

A friend may be known in adversity, a hero in battle, an honest man in a loan, a wife when riches are spent, and a relation in trouble.

---

I had known Flyaway Queen would be at the Garden, but I had never expected her to be benched right next to me. I was pleasantly surprised. Now that I was grown up, I could see that she was old enough to be my mother, but she certainly was the most beautiful female in all the world.

I rolled my eyes and said, "Hello, lovely. Did you hear I'd won the blue?"

"Well, if I didn't, it certainly wasn't your fault," she said in that dry way of hers. "Won't it be grand if you go right through to the Specials? Then we'll be rivals—but I'm almost afraid you'd beat me!"

"I sure will," I said cheerfully, and she jerked her head back as though I'd bitten her. Since Flyaway Queen won her championship, she has never been topped by any other spaniel, but mamma had always told me to take no guff from anybody.

I was just sitting down to worship my blue ribbon in peace and quiet when Bill Wainwright's voice said:

"Hello, Christy. I'm awfully glad you won. How about just one little apology, so we can be friends again? Just one little lick of the boot?"

Christy looked up at him. "Apology for what?" she said coldly, but her hand had closed hard on one of my ears, and I don't think that she felt cold. "I see you're benched right next to me. Your bright idea, of course?"

"If I'd ever had an idea like that, I wouldn't have thought it bright." His face skimmed over with ice, like a pool on a November morning. "By the way, for Pepper's sake, do try to do a better job next time you go up."

She turned her back on him then, and after a bit of thick silence he got up and went away. As mamma says, it is indeed odd that human beings have got to their position of prominence in this world, when you consider how stupid they are. Because Christy was suddenly unhappy. She sat there in a listless slump, staring at the unopened catalogue on her knee, and I had an idea she would have loved to punch herself.

Say little

1850 FRIEND

You're really dressed up for company . . . Beruffled, befrilled, beyutiful . . .

But Baby look at me now!

Just see my beautiful Vanta clothes. Feel 'em, too—mmm, soft as a bunny's tail! We modern babies have picture-book-pretty styles, solid snug comfort, and — real birthday-suit-freedom for exercise and play in our Vanta garments.

Lots of adVANTAges for Mummy, too. Even with the rough 'n tumble workout I give them, my Vanta garments last and last, and they're so easy to launder — dry soft and fluffy like new without ironing.

Mothers today don't have to worry about our clothes. They just look for the salesperson who wears the Mothercraft emblem — :she's a Vanta-trained expert who knows the perfect Vanta garments for all of our needs.

Yes, you're a beautiful baby. But — Baby look at me now! Don't you agree that the Vanta-Dressed Baby is the Best-Dressed Baby in History.

Valuable Book. "Baby's Outfit," 80 pages, covers 55 subjects of vital interest to expectant mothers. 500 name suggestions. Send 10 cents to The Vanta Company, Dept. J-5, Newton 58, Mass. (In Canada, J. R. Moodie Co., Ltd., Hamilton, Ont., are Licensees.)

Cinderella's
"MAGIC TOUCH"

. . . works wonders for children's dresses!

Cinderella's "Magic Touch" has worked sheer magic this time! These young queens are beautifully gowned in Swiss-Dot Sheer, a fabric that washes like a dream. Always remember — ask by name for Cinderella Frocks — the most popular of all children's dresses.

Smart Style Detail!
Authentic originality every time—with Cinderella.

Finer Workmanship!
You can't make or buy a better dress at the price.

Colorful, Washable Fabrics!
Gay sparkling material that launders and irons beautifully.

Cinderella
FROCKS FOR GIRLS

CINDERELLA'S COACH "the sign of smart frocks for girls"

© Rosenau Bros. Inc., Philadelphia

ABOUT $3.00 IN LEADING STORES . . . SIZES 3 TO 14

My next class was Winners Dogs, in which I competed against the winners of the Novice, American-Bred, Limit and Open classes. As the American-Bred and Open send up winners with all the stuff in the world, even I did not expect a cakewalk. But it was a cinch, and they gave me the purple for Winners Dogs.

By this time the cocker fancy in the Garden were aware that a new champion was being born, and the ringside was so jammed a dachshund couldn't have wriggled through. I only wished that my dear mamma could have been there, to see what that intelligent crowd thought of her son; they applauded till my feathers rattled. Winning this class gave me my first points toward my championship, and made me eligible to compete with the winning female when she came up through the same merry-go-round on the distaff side.

Christy had her lunch with me down on the bench, because I guess she was afraid my jam of admirers might take me apart for souvenirs. Trying not to look smug, as mamma had instructed me, I listened to the snatches of conversation that went on over me: "—— best little spaniel in twenty years. He'll beat the Winners Bitch. But he couldn't beat Flyaway Queen—it's never been done." The voice added in a whisper that Christy couldn't hear, "Especially the awful way that gal is showing him." What with having her mind pinned on Bill Wainwright and not knowing much about the dog business anyway, Christy as a handler was a downright scandal.

However, in spite of all Christy could do to the contrary, late in the afternoon I beat the Winners Bitch. She was a sweet little bit, and the judge had to take a few minutes more than he usually needed before he said "Best of Winners," and thrust a blue-and-white rosette at Christy. That made me eligible for the Specials, and as they were coming on immediately, I stayed in the ring while they were brought in. This was the class in which Bill Wainwright was showing his wonderful, "unbeatable" Flyaway Queen.

I looked the Specials over carefully as they went strolling by me. They were six of the finest black spaniels I ever had seen, and of course they were all champions. They didn't seem to be pleased at having a graduate of the Puppy Class come up against them, because they certainly said things when they saw me, mostly unprintable.

Flyaway Queen said nothing at all, but I don't think she was pleased either. She just walked by like a great shining star, pride in every wonderful line. She was so really terrific that she gave me to think. Bill Wainwright was at the other end of her show lead, and he was ignoring Christy just as carefully as she was ignoring him.

And then it happened; never ask me how. Christy stepped back quickly so she wouldn't be too close to Bill, and I heard a short snapping sound, like the report of a tiny popgun, and my feet flew out from under me. When I pulled myself together, I saw Christy lying on one elbow on the green carpet; her face was white with shock. "I can't get up," she said to the startled steward who was bending over her. "Something's wrong—my ankle ——" Christy has beautiful ankles, but one of them now was swelling so fast, even as I looked, that it scared me.

THERE was a sudden deep hush, and someone at the ringside groaned. I might have groaned myself. Poor dear mamma, I thought. Because how could Christy show me, lying on one elbow like that? Then a beehive of activity buzzed up about me. There was Bill Wainwright, looking very frightened, and a doctor who came down out of the mezzanine, and about twenty women who had studied first aid and had come down with him to advise him.

They got Christy to a chair at the ringside somehow, and after a few moments the doctor said, "I'm sure it's only a nasty sprain. But you can't show that dog. Someone get me tape, please, and I'll tape this ankle."

Then Bill Wainwright leaned over Christy. He was holding me in his arms, which was kind of him, as I had been very much afraid of being stepped on in the confusion.

"Chris," Bill said, "this is no time to be uppity. I'll show little Pepper for you."

"Never!" And have you deliberately ruin his chances—I know you." She stared at the steward, who was eying his watch. "Can't someone get a handler for me—anybody will do!"

"Anything at all except me, eh?" Bill said, and then he beckoned to a man standing near us, handed him my lead, and walked away.

WELL, never ask me how this happened either. All I know is that I certainly started into the ring with the strange handler on the other end of my lead. However, when I looked up again, sensing something with my usual alertness, I found that Bill Wainwright was now leading me, and the handler had shifted to Flyaway Queen. I was very much surprised, naturally, and Christy at the ringside was very much surprised, too; she was so white, between pain and rage, that I didn't know her for a moment.

I won't deny I thought I was ruined myself. It is too much to ask any man who has been kicked around very hard by a pigheaded girl to show that girl's dog so well that his own famous unbeaten champion might lose.

But it wasn't long before I changed my mind. Heaven knows why, Bill wanted me to win. His heart was really in it. "Come on, little boy, steady now," he said. "Don't you want that nice silver cup? Win it, boy; we're out to show that bad-tempered gal I love."

Bill has grand hands; I like them. He worked me as though he'd made a life's study of me. I let him pose me with those firm, hard hands as though I'd been chiseled out of black marble—oh, it was a nerve cure, after that Christy.

> He has got one horseshoe—now all he needs are three more horseshoes and a horse.
> RUMANIAN PROVERB.

Very soon that group of wonderful champions had simmered down to just Flyaway Queen and me. "Don't get up your hopes, sonny," she said, with an anxious gleam in her eye when the judge waved us side by side. "He's only giving the crowd its money's worth."

It was getting its money's worth. The ringside was thickly silent as a heavy summer day before a thunderstorm, while the rows of faces swiveled this way and that, studying me and that wonderful Flyaway Queen, studying the perplexed judge. No man ever worked harder. I don't know how many times he had Bill and the handler move up, nor how many times he returned again to that silent, absorbed examination.

I got rather bored with it after a while. I knew how it was going to end, of course, the way it always did. So when at last the judge ran a combing hand through his hair with a gesture of finality, and I knew he had made up his mind, I yawned—it would be very nice to show mamma that big silver cup.

Poor mamma. Poor me. Because the judge breathed out a tired sigh, stooped above us and tapped Flyaway Queen on her glossy black brow. "She gets it," he said.

Bill just stood there, his face turning the pink of a very pink brick. He opened his mouth wide to say something, but then shut it again with a click, because you don't argue with a judge's decision. In a few moments he was stalking out of the ring, with Queen's silver cup for Best of Variety, and Queen's envelope of prize money. I will draw the curtain on how I felt. I knew I was nobody again. I knew I wasn't going Best in Show. I was a nice little black spaniel, that's all.

Bill was muttering under his breath as he prodded his dejected way through the crowd toward Christy. I had never heard such staccato-studded language in my life; I had never believed it possible there were that many things you could call a judge. Bill was very mad.

"Chris," he said, when we got to her, "the blooming cup, this prize money, they ought to be yours. You've got the better dog." And then he turned away from her, so she couldn't see his eyes. "I'm so awfully sorry."

...EALTHY

...! Every mother wants her baby to be ... of diaper rashes! The famous CHIX ...vn-Weve Gauze diapers help prevent ... discomfort, because the open weave ...hes and rinses really clean—and then ...s fresh and sweet-smelling in a jiffy.

...APPY

...sh diapers may irritate your baby. CHIX ...light and soft and get even softer when ...hed. This is due to CHIX unique weave, ...ch combines finest surgical-type gauze ... the "air-cushioned" bird's-eye pattern.

...OMFORTABLE

...X diapers are extra-absorbent. In addi..., the special weave slows down the ...ead of "wet," keeps baby more comfy ... his clothes drier. These are economical ...bers, too, because one size can be folded ...t the growing baby.

...end for Free "Common Sense" Book... on Dressing and Training Baby.

Chix

...OWN-WEVE GAUZE
DIAPERS

...COPEE ...DUCTS

Chicopee Sales Corporation
47 Worth St., New York 13, N. Y.

OTHER CHICOPEE PRODUCTS

...ISPOSIES—Throw-away inserts of pat... ...nted cotton Masslinn and cellulose, used ...ith waterproof holder.

...HUX—Complete diaper, completely dis... ...osable. Excellent for travel, busy times, ...acations, emergencies.

"Bill, I want to talk to you," Christy said. "Not here. Let's find some quiet place."

"What for?" he said. "Anyway, there is no quiet place in this blankety-blank Garden." But he helped her up, and in a few minutes we were back in one of the cool, dimly lighted corridors, and he had scrounged a camp chair for her to sit on. "All right," he said gloomily, "begin."

"Begin what? I lick your boots in shame. You never stole my kennelman." She reached up and took his hands. "And nobody ever tried harder to put a dog over. It wasn't your fault."

I got out of Bill's way only just in time, because he was suddenly down there in front of her, with his hands on her waist, and his eyes very funny. "You know I love you, Chris," he said.

And then there was a long, boring interval, very dull to me, before she said, "Darling, I'm almost glad Pepper lost, because if he hadn't, I'd always have thought you married me just to get him."

"Well, that enters in," he said, and she laughed, and he kissed her several times, to the amusement of the few passers-by. At last he opened his eyes a bit as though coming out of a fog, and said happily, "Next year will be another story. Pepper's still a little young. Next year he'll have more substance, a better coat—he'll have had more ring experience. You know what he's going to do when Mr. and Mrs. Wainwright bring him back to the Garden next year?"

"I know," Christy said, looking dreamy. "He's going all the way. Next year, he's going Best in Show."

I did too. And if you come up to our kennels sometime, mamma will bore you to tears with all the ribbons and medals and cups, because mamma is very proud of me.

THE WILLAPAWAMPUS

(Continued from Page 24)

For a while his mother had tried to coax him into talking, and once she hid and jumped out and scared him. He remembered that. Afterward she'd cried and cried and held him on her lap in the rocker and rocked back and forth with him and said over and over that she was sorry. And she hadn't tried any more. She prayed a lot about it, though. And every night she rubbed olive oil into the burn scar on his arm.

Frank took Jody's hand to show his mother, without having to say it, that he wouldn't let anything happen. "If he don't behave," he said, "I'll get the Willapawampus after him."

Jody could hear the hall clock going tick-tick-ticka-ticka-tick, eating up the seconds. Eating them right up. Fast as they came. Without missing a one.

"Well," his mother said, "I guess you'd better be going." She smoothed Jody's jersey across his shoulder. "Have a good time." She followed them out onto the porch. "Have a real good time," she said.

At the corner they turned and looked back. She was still standing there. She fluttered her apron at them.

"Wave," Frank said to Jody. "Wave so she can see."

Jody waved. He hopped up and down and waved as hard as he could. He could feel his milk and soup sloshing around inside him. He wondered, fleetingly, if they were mixed up, or if they stayed separate or got in layers, and if the beans floated or if they sank.

Ordinarily, Jody relished the jouncing luxury of the trolley. He loved the slick feel of the straw seats and the pleasant "woggly" sensation that came and went if he made himself limber. And the way things whished by. However, as they rode along and the streetcar, already filled with passengers, became packed solid, the mounting excitement in him crowded aside all else. When, his cheek pressed against the metal bars guarding the open window, he caught his first glimpse of the flying pennants atop the gigantic tents, it was very nearly more than his pounding impatience could endure.

The circus! The circus!

Real Boys and Girls Pre-Test Poll-Parrots in Actual Wear

WHEN we develop a new insole for Poll-Parrots, we first build it into at least a hundred sample pairs of shoes. Then scores of lively youngsters Pre-Test these shoes in actual wear.

We check carefully, note how the insole molds to the foot, holds its shape, resists perspiration and cracking. Only after it has passed all tests successfully do we put it into Poll-Parrots for your children.

Every new development has undergone this intensive Poll-Parrot Pre-Testing for the past 18 years.

That's why Poll-Parrots have extra reinforcements at vital points, 10-way built-in fit, and other features that give your child advantages no other shoes can hope to equal.

ROBERTS, JOHNSON & RAND, ST. LOUIS, MO.
Division of International Shoe Company

For nearest Poll-Parrot dealer, see Classified Phone Directory, or write us.

EVERY IMPROVEMENT PRE-TESTED!

Poll-Parrot
& STAR BRAND SHOES
with BUILT-IN FIT for Boys and Girls

...PUBLIC LIBRARY ...Calif.

Mother...which do you vote for?

It's a close contest between these lovely aluminum vehicles, but THAYER gets all the votes! For THAYER builds two distinctive strollers in gleaming aluminum! In the sleek IMPERIAL, baby rides facing mother; in the luxurious ZEPHYR, he faces forward and twinkles at passers-by. Both are built of aluminum for beauty, lightness and strength; both have self-oiling, squeak-proof wheel bearings and handles that fold compactly for storage or travel. The IMPERIAL has built-up leaf springs and two-tone grey upholstery; the ZEPHYR has the natural springiness of bent aluminum tubing and maroon upholstery. See them at your favorite store . . . and write for your free "PRIMER FOR PARENTS" to Thayer Co., Dept. LH-63, Gardner, Massachusetts.

BY THE MAKERS OF THE FAMOUS THAYER FOLDING COACH

Alighting, he held tightly to Frank's hand. They were swept into and became one with the throng streaming toward the entrances. Past the popcorn and peanut hawkers, the balloon venders holding whole enormous bunches of multicolored balloons tugging at their strings, the hoarse-voiced men selling sparkly canes with looped silken cords and golden tassels, and toy monkeys, and painted wooden clowns on sticks, and imitation birds that whistled around in a circle with their tails twirling red and blue and green-yellow; and there were even live lizards with froggy toes and little silver chains around their mottled green necks.

Inside the circus grounds, an intoxicating smell assailed Jody's nostrils. It was, he thought, the best smell he had ever smelled. It was better even than jelly beans when you put your nose in the bag. And cooking chili sauce. And rain-barrel smell. It was better than all three of them in a lump.

He couldn't look fast enough. Or hard enough. Or long enough. At anything.

There were the red wagons with gilt wheels. There was the spun-sugar candy like great fluffy puffs of pink-and-white cotton. There were the booths filled with lamps, and Kewpie dolls, and glittering knives, and vases, and plaster figures, and china dishes. There were the tremendous canvas pictures stretching high above the side show, and the side-show people themselves who came outside and stood on the platform—one by one—every once in a while so that, if you stayed, you got to see them all. Free!

Jody liked the fat lady the most. She was a big soft dumpling of a fat lady and she looked happy and as if it'd be nice to sit on her lap and lean back. The human skeleton wasn't a skeleton at all, but was more on the order of Mr. Gilhooley, who'd died. The tattooed man could make his skin jump and he was a purplish red-cabbage color, sort of. The midgets Jody liked the least. They had sharp bright eyes.

After a while, there was the main tent. It was tremendous. Through its vaulting-away hollowness seeped a dusty daylight that made pale milky blurs of the faces lining the immense oval ring. Men in white jackets with baskets on their arms ran up and down the plank aisles selling cold drinks, ice cream, peanuts and souvenirs. Above, like a sloping sky skewered in position by slim lofty poles, the tarpaulin moved gently as if fanned by invisible wings. Below, beneath the planks, was a dizzy no man's land of empty space.

The smell was thicker in here. It was, Jody thought, the most wonderful smell in the whole world. He practiced letting his feet hang while his eyes—wide and round—explored the meanings of the dangling ropes, the aerial scaffoldings, the co-ordinated movements of the men in the loose red coats who were building a circular cage in the center ring. No matter how much you looked, he thought, you couldn't look yourself out. Ever.

"Some punkins," Frank said.

Jody nodded, his eyes shining.

Frank pointed to the nearly completed cage. "Lions and tigers."

A shivery chill of anticipation ran on quick mice feet down Jody's backbone as he recalled the terrible tigers that had taken away Little Black Sambo's red coat and blue trousers, and purple shoes with crimson soles and crimson linings, and his green umbrella.

---

Suppose your wife suddenly disappeared and you decided to advertise for someone to do her job. Your classified announcement would read something like this: Woman Wanted: To help in house. Eighteen-hour day, seven-day week. Sleep in. Must have knowledge of cooking, sewing, medicine, law, child welfare, elementary electricity, bookkeeping and men. Must be strong and willing. One who can help in garden preferred. No wage, but all found. —World's Press News.

---

Real toilet bowl cleanliness is easy when Sani-Flush does the work. A clean toilet bowl has no odor. Sani-Flush cleans away discolorations and germ-laden, invisible film. Its chemical, disinfecting action saves messy scrubbing—ensures a clean, fresh toilet bowl. Millions like Sani-Flush because it's quick, easy, sanitary.

Sani-Flush is safe in septic tanks—effective in hard and soft water. Sold everywhere—two handy sizes.

Sani-Flush

USE IT REGULARLY

SAFE FOR SEPTIC TANKS

Sani-Flush won't harm your septic tank. This has been proved by a nationally-prominent research laboratory. Your copy of its scientific report is free. Write for it. Address The Hygienic Products Co., Dept. 101, Canton 2, Ohio.

3-IN-ONE Oil

He sat bolt upright as, with a crashing blare, the circus poured into the tent. Tingles of ecstasy raced through him. His lips parted and his eyes—blue incredulous mirrors—fastened with rapt unswerving attention on the flood of colorful pageantry that transported him into an enchanted fairyland. He absorbed it through his pores and his skin, and drank it in through the roots of his innermost being. He breathed it. Lived it. Was it.

He was the horns and the drums and the prancing horses. He was the clowns with their flour-white faces and domino eyes and false noses and floppy shoes, somersaulting, playing jokes on one another, making sad-funny grimaces. He was the ponies, and the monkeys, and the cracking whips. He was the little dogs in fancy costumes walking on their hind legs, and the bejeweled elephants, and the beautiful ladies dressed in spangles that winked and glistened like gold and silver stars. He was the plumes and the tinkling bells and it was he, Jody Murphy, who, in a padded vest, flaring breeches and polished boots, won the roaring acclaim of the multitude by wrestling with the rippling, tawny-maned lion.

He put the tigers and the polar bears through their paces and made the black panther jump through a flaming hoop. It was he who swung through the air from the highest trapeze to whirl breath-takingly at the last possible instant while a sigh went up from everywhere at once. He minced across the gleaming skein of wire balancing a long slender wand of a pole, and carrying a pink-and-white-and-gold lady on his shoulders. He juggled a rainbow of balls, and plates and butcher knives and, as a stirring climax, torches of fire. He rode a dappled horse bareback—standing up—and flipped over it and under it and changed into a clown who made the echoes shout with laughter as he wobbled and slipped and almost-not-quite fell from his lolloping perch and, then, got thinner and thinner as he peeled off his ill-fitting clothes and tossed them away.

Time—as time—ceased to exist. Time was a beautiful lady in tossing ruffles, high in the air, twisting over and over and over her own taut arm while the drums rolled louder and louder. Time was the tatarrrrrra . . . ta . . . ta of a flashing trumpet. Time was the grand finale of the circus parade with the elephants holding tails, the majestic swaying camels, the rollicking clowns, the calliope, the dazzling magnificence of the animal wagons——

His heart gave a sickening lurch. There, in one of the wagons, was the Willapawampus! He recognized it immediately. It was just as he'd known it would be. The gray hulking body, the short squatty legs, the little pig ears and eyes. The cavernous mouth!

I see you up there, Jody Murphy, the Willapawampus said. Don't think I don't.

I'm not ascairt of you, Jody said, without conviction.

"Lookit!" Frank said, nudging Jody. "The hippopotamus."

That's my brother, Jody said to the Willapawampus. He's not ascairt of you either.

I could swallow you up without even chewing, Jody Murphy, the Willapawampus said. And him too. I could just crunch once and that'd be the end of you both.

"The blood-sweating hippopotamus," Frank said. "Golly. Lookit it."

Do you really sweat blood? Jody asked the Willapawampus.

I sweat it by the bucket, the Willapawampus said. That's that smell you've been smelling. Willapawampus perspiration.

How do you do it? Jody asked.

That's for me to know and you to find out, the Willapawampus said. And you'll find out all right some one of these days. Don't think you won't. I know all about who it was filled his squirt gun at the holy-water fount when he thought nobody was looking. And who it was got into the tar wagon when it went up to Feighan's alley. And who put the fever worms in Nellie Haggerty's packing-box playhouse. You'd better mind out, Jody Murphy. And don't think you hadn't. I'm on to you.

My mother'll chase you with a broom, Jody said.

Like heck she will, the Willapawampus said. She won't be there. When she comes home

(Continued on Page 163)

"Come on, mother, give the kid a break!"

MOTHER: You stay out of this, William. I know what's best for Jimmy.

WILLIAM: Listen, Mom—all you have to do is get him canvas shoes with "P-F".

MOTHER: "P-F" . . . what in heaven's name is that?

WILLIAM: The coach at school told us all about it. "P-F" means Posture Foundation. It's a special built-in feature. Keeps the bones of the feet in normal position. Guards against flat feet and strained leg muscles.

MOTHER: Well, it certainly sounds like a wonderful idea.

WILLIAM: Look, here are my new basketball shoes. They've got "P-F" in 'em, and boy, it sure does make a difference in the way your feet feel.

HERE'S WHY "P-F" PROTECTS FEET

1 This orthopedically correct, rigid wedge keeps the bones of the foot in their natural, normal position.

2 This sponge rubber cushion protects the sensitive area of the foot.

WILLIAM: One thing more, Mom. "P-F" is a Patented Feature. The coach says only canvas shoes made by B. F. Goodrich or Hood Rubber Company have it

"P-F" means Posture Foundation

—a Patented Feature found only in canvas shoes made by

B. F. Goodrich or HOOD RUBBER CO.

THIS IS A GANGER

By Munro Leaf

THIS disagreeable person is a Ganger, and the thing it likes to do most of all is to spoil other people's friendships and make them miserable. Gangers are always telling people nasty things about others and saying let's play together and not let So-and-so play with us. Instead of helping everyone to have a good time together, a Ganger tries to make life miserable for somebody every time it can. Gangers are people we can certainly do without and all be better off.

WERE YOU A GANGER THIS MONTH?

Pictured: North Star "Nocturne" in Rose Dust, $8.95 . . . at fine stores everywhere

Settings and accessories by Lord & Taylor

Nothing's too good for Mother—on her birthday, Mother's Day or any day! And nothing's nicer for Mother's beauty sleep than a fleece-soft Nocturne, North Star's airy wisp of a blanket. Nocturne is made of fine-fibered virgin wool, woven to give warmth without weight. You'll treasure light-as-a-sheet Nocturnes, too, for their lovely soft colors and for their versatility . . . they're on the bed in varying numbers according to the temperature—not only in summer, but the whole year 'round!

FREE BOOKLET: "Decorate Your Dream Room" . . . . full of exciting, inexpensive ideas on bedroom color, furnishings, arrangement. Write North Star Woolen Mill Co., 283 So. 2nd Street, Minneapolis 1, Minn.

Your favorite June bride will bless you for this luxury gift—a pair of heirloom quality North Stars. And year by year her smoothly double-napped North Stars, made of springy, long-fibered virgin wool, will outwash and outwear any number of ordinary blankets.

A pocket edition of your own loved North Stars is baby's best friend—her snuggle-soft, fine-fleece North Star Baby Blanket. It's the perfect, always welcome gift for a mother-to-be or for baby's first birthday.

North Star
Beautymap
Blankets

100% VIRGIN WOOL BLANKETS

(Continued from Page 161)

re won't be anything left of you but maybe ittle bitty old smidgen-sized bite.

You wouldn't dast, Jody said.

Wouldn't I though? You just try me too far d see.

You do, Jody said, and I'll throw hot corn al on you. I'll get a whole big wash boiler l of it and dump it smack on you. And then l get some more and dump that on you! d I'll run upstairs and dump some more m up there! And I'll climb out on the roof d pull a string and the sky'll tip over and hot n meal'll just come squashing! It'll shrivel u up into a frizzle! That's what!

Ho, the Willapawampus said. Don't you k biggety, though!

A sea of laughter broke over Jody. He nked. The red wagon containing the Wilawampus was rolling onward. Behind it lown was leading a teeny-tiny Willapampus. Momentarily, Jody thought it was aby one. It came as a tearing shock when saw it had dog feet. They were making of the Willapawampus! The clown. The g. Everybody. ey were laughing the Willapawams!

His eyes darkened they followed the derous animal, its ssive snout lowed, its head bowed humiliation, and heart swelled with low, thick, curious otion that left him mbling.

They don't know, told it.

But the Willapampus was too amed to hear. ound the ring it nt in its red wagon, olate and suffer-

I take it back about corn meal, Jody d. I didn't mean it. uly I didn't. nest.

But the Willapampus was mute, squiggle of a tail p and disconso-

Please, Jody enated it. Oh, please, ease!

The red wagon nded the sawdust ul. Jody wrung his nds.

I'm ascairt of you, called to it. I am, e ascairt!

A split second before the horses pulled the gon into the lane that led to the oblivion he yawning exit, the animal lifted its ugly id.

I love you, Jody Murphy, the Willapampus said.

"What's the matter?" Frank asked. ody. What's the matter?" His gaze still the rapidly vanishing circus, he bent and his mouth close to Jody's ear. "You got go to the bathroom?"

Jody shook his head. He wiped his nose h his sleeve. A splattering wave of apuse went up as the last of the parade appeared from view.

"You sure?" Frank questioned.

Jody nodded.

"Well, here," Frank said. He gave Jody handkerchief. "Blow your nose."

Dutifully, Jody blew his nose.

They joined the crowd surging down the les and the planks, across the sawdust and ough the tent flaps into the late-afternoon slight.

It was suppertime when they reached me. The kitchen table was set, and from e stove came the sizzle of frying sausage. hile they ate, Jody listened to Frank tell mother of the wonders they had seen: of the tumblers, and of the seal with a ribbon around its neck who had played a tune; of the trapeze artists in silken tights who, plummeting downward, had landed in the net to bounce and land again; of the huge wrinkled elephants rearing up all together; of the dancing horses and the butterfly ladies who swung by their teeth; of the crazy antics of the clowns when the lopsided house had caught fire.

"THE best one of all," Frank said, "was the lion tamer. He walked right up to them and made them do what they were supposed to."

The best one of all was the Willapawampus, Jody said. The best one of all was the Willapawampus!

Frank stabbed a slice of bread with his fork. "He had a chair and ——"

"You just put that piece of bread back," his mother interrupted. "Circus or no circus, that's no way to get a piece of bread."

Sheepishly, Frank obeyed. His mother passed him the plate of bread.

"And don't you forget it," she said to him. "Jody, eat your crusts. How do you expect to ——" She paused, to look searchingly at her younger son.

Jody put down his spoon and concentrated on the pale wash of milk coating the inside of his half-empty glass. His throat worked convulsively. He could feel the words pushing, pushing, all crowded up together, trying to get past his swallow: The . . . best . . . one . . . of . . . all . . . was . . . the . . . Willapawampus . . . THE BEST ONE OF ALL WAS THE WILLAPAWAMPUS . . . THE BEST ONE OF ALL WAS THE WILLAPAWAMPUS.

"What is it, Jody?"

Desperately Jody strove to rid himself of the words. They were alive now. Big beautiful red alive words, like the ones on the billboard. If he could get them up and into his mouth they would jump out and say themselves. They would fill the whole room, and they would ——

"Jody!" his mother said. "Look at me!" She scraped back her chair.

Jody pulled his gaze from his milky glass and fastened it on her. Her expression frightened him. The words gave a violent retching leap and dissolved into nothingness. There was nothing left. Nothing. Except an ache where they had been and a dragging heaviness and a little strangled sound that came from nowhere and lost itself quickly in a terrifying silence. Such a funny little ragged sound. Like it had been torn. Like it was a pulled-off part of something.

And then he knew it had been his sound—that he, Jody Murphy, had made it all by himself—because, all at once, his mother's face came to pieces the way it had the time Frank had come home walking springy. Only, somehow, the way it came to pieces was different. And Frank was shouting and doing a jig and the dishes and knives and forks and spoons were rattling, and the stove lids and the breadbox, and the gas money was jingling in the jar on the shelf and, even though his mother was crying, his insides didn't feel a bit leaky.

They felt the way Willapawampus perspiration smelled. Just exactly!

♥ ♥ ♥ ♥ ♥ ♥ ♥ ♥ ♥

Modern Love Song

By Harold Applebaum

Now when the world is turning inside out
With progress, when the weeks are bright with gold,
When days flash by like lightning and the doubt
Of what to do, the fear of growing old
Are far from mind, now is the time: the time
To treasure what the treasure is;
to hold
Your love as shield against the changing rhyme,
To keep one warmth against the planet's cold.

The things of spirit are erosion-free
And love is ageless as the sky.
Machines
Grow hungry, orbits insecure, time's fee
May pyramid or sunburst intervene—
But where you walk a radiance will last,
Though you are shadow and the age is past!

♥ ♥ ♥ ♥ ♥ ♥ ♥ ♥ ♥

The Gear twins, Catherine and Barbara, are 7 years old and in the 2nd grade. They live in a suburb of New York City and are "good little helpers" around the house. They love to roller-skate and play house.

Mrs. Lawrence Gear

"A MOTHER OF TWINS REALLY NEEDS RINSO'S TWIN ADVANTAGES"

GETS WHITES
RIN-SO WHITE

KEEPS WASHABLE COLORS
RIN-SO BRIGHT

"We love Amos 'n' Andy—they're so funny! We listen to them every Tuesday night!"

"The twins always help on washday. But the biggest help of all is soapy-rich Rinso!"

RINSO IS ANTI-SNEEZE

(PATENTED PROCESS)

—the only granulated soap 98% free of irritating sneezy soap-dust

Made specially for Baby!

That's why Gerber's cereals are rich in added iron and B complex vitamins

Yes, Gerber's Cereal Food and Gerber's Strained Oatmeal are made to suit the special needs of baby as starting cereals, and right through babyhood.

You see, baby is born with a supply of iron gathered through the prenatal period. Doctors have discovered that this supply of precious iron often runs low some months after birth, so baby must get his iron from what he eats.

For this reason both Gerber's Cereals are rich in added iron, and as a further aid to baby's well-being both have generous amounts of B complex vitamins derived from natural sources.

Both cereals are pre-cooked—simply add milk or formula (hot or cold) and serve.

Avoid monotony and help baby's appetite by serving Cereal Food at one feeding, and Strained Oatmeal at the next. Baby likes variety, too!

Be sure to get Gerber's Cereals with "America's Best-Known Baby" on every package!

NATIONAL BABY WEEK, April 27 to May 4.
"Give your baby the right start in life."

Gerber's
FREMONT, MICH. OAKLAND, CAL.
Baby Foods
Cereals Strained Foods Chopped Foods © 1946, G. P. C.

Free sample .....

Address: Gerber Products Co., Dept. 85-6, Fremont, Michigan

My baby is now ..... months old. Please send me samples of Gerber's Strained Oatmeal and Gerber's Cereal Food.

Name .....

Address ..... City and State .....

H. ARMSTRONG ROBERTS

Good posture can mean fun as well as health. Make your exercises into family games and play them every day.

Stand Straight for Good Health!

BY DR. HERMAN N. BUNDESEN

President, Chicago Board of Health

ALL children are entitled to the benefits of good posture. Only when children have correct habits of sitting, standing and walking can their bodies function as they should and develop properly. Poor posture ultimately always means poor health.

Through carelessness or lack of knowledge, many parents who can give their children the best of everything permit faulty posture. It injures health and interferes with good performance in school and at play. Fortunately, most posture faults can be overcome once parents have learned the importance of "standing straight and tall." When mothers know what to look for and what to do, and especially what to avoid, their children can easily be assured of good posture and all that it means in terms of health and growth.

A simple way to test posture is to hold a straight rod or stick alongside the child, or drop a weighted string from a point opposite the child's ear—the "plumb-line" test. If posture is perfect, the midpoints of the shoulder, hip and knee will all be in alignment with the rod or string. The extent to which the axes of head, trunk and legs zigzag away from this straight line measures the degree of postural fault.

While there are many different kinds of bad posture, and almost as many variations as there are children, the three main types that mothers should watch for are well defined and easy to recognize. The most common type is the so-called "fatigue posture": outthrust head; round, sagging shoulders; flat or hollow chest; protruding abdomen—all contributing to a pronounced zigzag when tested by the plumb-line method. Second, a variation of fatigue posture, is the humped-back type, in which the spine is curved so that the hollow at the small of the back is eliminated. The third type of bad posture that is commonly seen is the bantam type, with the chest pushed forward and the buttocks out in an exaggerated overcorrection of the fatigue slouch, often caused by improper teaching or by nagging at the child until he is self-conscious about his posture.

Mothers who learn how to analyze the various faults will quickly understand how they hamper good bodily functioning and thus interfere with health and growth. In example, in fatigue posture the shoulders sag forward and down, flattening and cramping the chest so that the lungs are crowded and full, and free breathing is impossible. The forward droop of the head puts an unnatural strain on the muscles of the neck a GRATEFUL young mothers from Maine to California tell us that Doctor Bundesen's baby booklets have been of the greatest help to them in caring for their own babies. The first eight booklets cover your baby's first eight months. They sell for 50 cents. The second series of booklets covers the baby's health from nine months to two years—seven booklets for 50 cents. The booklets will be sent monthly; be sure to tell us when you want the first booklet. A complete book on the care of the baby, a necessary supplement to the monthly booklets, OUR BABIES, No. 1345, is 25 cents. A booklet on breast feeding, A DOCTOR'S FIRST DUTY TO THE MOTHER, No. 1346, sells for 6 cents. Address all requests to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania.

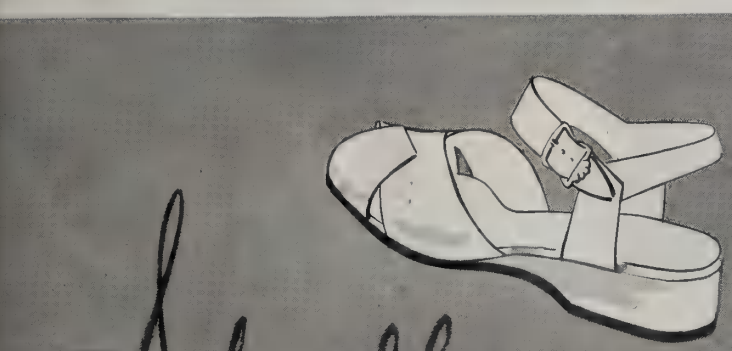
oper spine. The protruding abdomen allows ie internal organs to fall forward from their ormal position; in time, these organs lose rength and tone. Thus good digestion and imination, so necessary to normal growth, e sacrificed to the greedy requirements of ad posture.

Similarly, other posture faults make unasonable demands on organs and muscles at were designed to function in a body that straight and firm. A humped back pulls ie whole structure out of alignment, resulting chiefly in stress on the spinal muscles and ie abdominal organs. On the other hand, ie youngster who sits and stands erect and ll has the poised, alert look that goes with od health and good performance.

The first step in correcting poor posture is ie removal of conditions, her than plain carelessess, which may be contribing factors. In young ildren, for example, imoper or poorly fitting othing may be an imporint cause. Shoes that are o short or too tight amp the muscles of the feet and legs and ake good, easy standing and walking difficult. To compensate, other muscles are called to play unnaturally—setting up a whole ain of wrong habits. Overalls and leggings ith suspenders must not be too heavy or too nall, or the shoulders will be pulled forward d the chest flattened. For the same reason, spender garments must carry the weight ose to the neck, not out near the tips of the oulders.



Another factor that must be investigated the furniture. School desks that are too all may make a humped-over position abitual; a bed that sags badly may encourge unhealthy spinal curves. Too, physical asons for peculiar posture may be found. child with poor vision may strain his head rward in a constant effort to see better; a youngster with unsuspected hearing fficulty may develop an odd tilt to the head and shoulders. A general physical examination is always in order as the means of correcting bad posture are sought.

But a far greater number of children need training more than anything else. Exercises may be needed to overcome specific habits, and children must be shown the right ways to sit, stand and walk. Yet most children dislike taking posture exercises almost as much as they dislike having their parents fussing at them to "stand up straight!"

The best answer is to make good posture a game for the whole family. To overcome a slouch or curved back, a good exercise is to have the child get down on all fours, then "make like a camel" by humping the back up and drawing the abdomen in—and holding this position for minutes at a time. The "elephant walk," with the trunk bent way over and the head and arms dangling loosely toward the floor, is another good corrective exercise that children will enjoy doing together. Mother and father can join in these exercises—with benefit to themselves as well as to the children! Other good exercise-games are touching the small of the back to the wall and keeping it there; carrying a book on the head while walking about the room, or up and down stairs; getting into and out of chairs with back straight and feet in close to the chair, bending only at the hips and knees; "army drills," with one child leading and shouting orders: "Shoulders back! Head up! Belly in!"; and deep breathing or push-up exercises done in unison by the group.

All these will help develop strength in the right places for good, straight, alert posture. To encourage the right habits, mother should urge the child to imitate his favorite movie star, whose posture is invariably excellent. Most important of all, she and father must be careful that their own appearance sets the right example!

No one can be mean and happy any more than an orange can be sour and sweet.
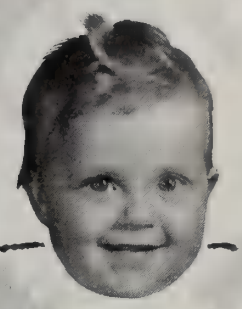
—ANON.

Adorables — for Little girls' fluffy dresses



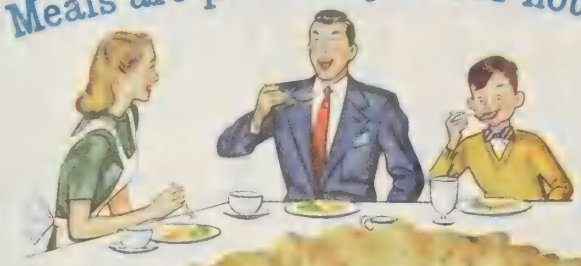
Bracelet sandals of white elkskin, precisely what style-minded little girls want and need with their pretty, frilly dresses. Charming, too, in black patent or brown leathers. All leather. Sizes 8½ to 11½ and 12 to 3.

FOOT-KIND

SHOE COMPANY • ST. LOUIS • NEW YORK • CHICAGO • LOS ANGELES

"WATCH MY WHITNEY CARRIAGE TURN THIS CORNER!"

"Pretty special turn, isn't it? All four wheels on the ground. 'Cause Whitney's Steer-O-Matic Wheels* turn corners automatically. Mummy doesn't lift and shove. I don't get tipped up, then down. No sir — Steer-O-Matic Wheels glide in any direction with just finger-tip guidance . . . Now watch me go over that uneven pavement. See how the Center-Suspension Springs* absorb vibration before it reaches my carriage. I'm hardly jolted at all. Smooth going, I call it . . . And isn't my Whitney Folding Coach a beauty? All the smart streamlining of an English coach. The Concealed Folding Gear replaces the old exposed gear which was so homely and apt to tear or spot Mother's pretty clothes." . . . Better get a Whitney Folding Coach for your baby. You'll find it at your favorite store. You can get a free copy of a descriptive booklet by writing to Department L-5.



F. A. WHITNEY CARRIAGE COMPANY, Leominster, Mass.

*Pat. and pats. applied for under the Jonkhoff System.

Pats. applied for.

Meals are perkin' up at our house!

Mom's made a discovery for Cakes, Pies, Fried Foods...

Crisco improves all 3

1. Hooray! Crisco gives FLAKY PIE CRUST EVERY TIME!

CRISCO FAMILY STYLE CHICKEN PIE

4 tbsps. Crisco
6 tbsps. flour
3½ cups milk or chicken broth
Salt and pepper
3 cups diced cooked chicken
1 cup cooked carrots
1 cup cooked peas
2 tbsps. chopped pimiento
Single-crust recipe Crisco pastry

Melt Crisco; blend in flour. Add milk or broth; season to taste. Cook until thickened. Stir in chicken and remaining ingredients. Pour into casserole or baking dish. Top with savory Crisco Pastry. (Yes'm—it's flaky, tender pastry every single time when you use Crisco and follow the easy, sure-fire Pastry Method on the Crisco label. And here's a flavor tip for chicken or meat pies—add one teaspoon poultry seasoning to the flour when making Crisco pie crust. Mmm . . . delicious!) Bake in hot oven (425°F.) 25-30 minutes. All Measurements Level. Serves 4 to 6.

2. Look! It's Crisco for LIGHT, DIGESTIBLE FRIED FOODS!

CRISCO SKILLET EGG SUPPER (Serves 4)

1 tbsp. chopped onion
2 cooked medium-size potatoes, chopped fine
3 tbsps. Crisco
1½ cups drained stewed tomatoes
½ cup finely chopped yellow cheese
1 tsp. salt
½ tsp. pepper
4 eggs

Fry onion and potatoes till brown in hot Crisco. (No need to fear upset digestions! Foods fried crisp and light in pure, all-vegetable Crisco not only taste better—they're so digestible even children may eat 'em!) Add tomatoes, cheese and seasonings. When well-blended and hot, break eggs whole onto mixture and let them poach till white is set (about 20 minutes). Serve from skillet. All Measurements Level.

CRISCO COOK BOOK—Send 10¢ in coin and a Crisco label (any size) to Crisco, Dept. HJ Box 837, Cincinnati 1, Ohio, for the 64-page Crisco cook book, "Recipes for Good Eating." Offer good in U. S., including Hawaii.

3. Hey, Mom! Crisco makes LIGHTER, RICHER CAKES!

CRISCO CHOCOLATE CROWN CAKE

New Crisco cakes are better on every count—lighter—richer—moister—tenderer! But note that this new-method recipe is designed for cake flour—should not be used with emergency flour.

Measure into mixing bowl:

1½ cups cake flour (sifted before measuring)
1¼ cups sugar • ½ cup Crisco • 1 tsp. salt
1 tsp. soda • 2 squares melted bitter chocolate • ½ cup milk

Stir vigorously by hand or with mixer (medium speed) 2 minutes. Now stir in (yes, all by itself):

¾ tsp. baking powder

Add: ½ cup milk • 2 eggs (unbeaten) • 1 tsp. vanilla

Blend by hand or in mixer (medium speed) for 2 minutes. Pour into two 9" layer pans (1½" deep) which have been rubbed with Crisco and lined with waxed paper. Bake in moderate oven (350°F.) 25-30 minutes. (Crisco has a baking secret. It makes cakes lighter than the most expensive shortening. With Crisco—only with Crisco—we promise you a better cake all 'round from this recipe!) Frost with your favorite boiled icing, piling it high around top rim of cake, crown-fashion. All Measurements Level.

CRISCO is America's Largest-Selling Vegetable Shortening—IT'S DIGESTIBLE!

MUNKACSI

Life without father was no life at all for the Anderson family.

THE HOUSEWIFE'S DILEMMA

BY DOROTHY CAMERON DISNEY

"Like thousands of other women" began a letter which Martha Anderson wrote to Ladies' Home Journal last October, "I am trying to run a home with my husband away in the Army. My budget never balances, my house is always upset, and the children are never clean. There is never a time when at least one isn't bellowing at the top of his lungs, and I always look like something the tide washed into shore. I am twenty-four, and feel at least forty-four.

"I have three baby boys, Buddy, aged three, Petey, aged sixteen months and Richard, eight weeks old. Since my husband was drafted, life has been one round of washing diapers and floors, making beds and formulas, and giving baths and scoldings. There never is a day long enough to get everything done.

"Here is my schedule. I get up at 7:30, gather kindling and start a fire in the furnace. At 8:00 I make the beds, put the baby's wet bedclothes to soak, bathe and dress the two older boys. At 8:30 we eat breakfast, after which I put Petey in the play pen to keep him out of trouble and get Buddy off to play.

"At 9:00 I feed the chickens. At 9:30 I gather up Petey's and the baby's bottles, sterilize them and make the formula. Between then and starting to get lunch at 11:30 I straighten and vacuum the downstairs, make the grocery list, bathe the baby, dry his crib again and tidy his room. While lunch is cooking, I straighten the upstairs.

"We eat at 12:00. At 12:30 I wash Buddy and Petey, put Petey to bed and give Buddy something to amuse himself. I then wash the dishes, and go out to water the chickens and carry them scraps. If it's marketing day, I get all three kids dressed and ready to start off at 2:00, and we don't get back from the store till 3:30 or 4:00. At 4:30 I start supper, and we eat at 5:00. At 5:30 I dry the baby's crib and clothes, putting the wet things to soak again, and get him up for a bit before bedtime.

"At 6:30 I do the day's laundry—Buddy's and Petey's play clothes, and baby's bedclothes and diapers. This takes an hour. At 7:30 I play with the two older boys and read to them; at 8:00 I give them baths and put them to bed. At 8:30 I clean the bathroom, wash and disinfect diaper pails.

"At 9:00 I start my weekly task for the day. On Monday I wash linens, my clothes, children's good clothes for Sunday. Tuesday I do the week's mending. Wednesday the ironing. Thursday I clean and polish living room and bedroom furniture. Friday I clean the Venetian blinds. Saturday I do leftover ironing

10 per cent of American families have incomes of between $2500 and $3000 a year.

When Tom was drafted, Martha tried to make two hands do work of four. "But tending furnace, grounds and chickens in addition to washing diapers and floors, making beds and formulas, giving baths and scoldings got me down. There were times when I went for two days without a chance to wash my face."

★ HOW AMERICA LIVES ★

and bake for the week end. On Sunday, I read the week's daily papers and glance at magazines.

"You will recognize that I have not allowed any time for mowing the lawn, scrubbing the floors, washing walls and woodwork, carrying out the ashes, cleaning basement, washing windows, painting and making minor repairs, canning, etc.

"Also all day long I have to run in and out every ten minutes to check on Bud and get him out of difficulties. I never have a minute to rest. I am always tired out, usually on the verge of tears, or actually ill; I have lost twelve pounds due to overwork. Right now it is 11:30 and the supper dishes are still in the sink and I haven't written my nightly letter to Tom, so I'll close.

"Yours from the other part of America,

MARTHA ANDERSON.

"P.S. As you may have noticed, my schedule doesn't leave much time for beauty culture."

MARTHA ANDERSON had a picture of how she and the children would look, what they would do and say, when Tom got back from the Army. When it happened, when one evening not long ago Pvt. Tom Anderson walked unannounced into his cheerful little home in the suburbs of Chicago, he found Martha collapsed in tears on the living-room sofa. Her life was a mess. Too much to do and no one to help.

To be sure, the house was reasonably neat, and the three little Anderson boys were bathed and fed and tucked away cleanly and peacefully in bed. But Martha's face wasn't washed, her lovely dark hair was uncombed, her hands were innocent of nail polish. Her slacks—she gave up wearing her attractive house dresses just as she gave up nail polish a week after Tom went in the Army—were covered with soot and coal dust. Five times since morning, Martha had built a new fire in the furnace. Now the monster had gone out again.

Next day's tasks and responsibilities paraded through Martha's tired mind. Weeping, she considered the pile of laundry heaped high beside the fifteen-year-old washing machine in the basement, Petey's broken bed that must be replaced by dipping into the rapidly shrinking emergency fund in the bank, the major shopping for staples that must somehow be done at the grocery store, a two-mile journey from the house. Because of the three babies, two in the carriage and one toddler on foot, that necessary trip was a weekly horror.

It was just at this point that the door opened and Pvt. Tom Anderson, complete with discharge, walked in. They laugh about that homecoming now, these two young people who are deeply in love and who from the beginning have shared their responsibilities, their work and their dreams.

"Without Tom," confesses Martha, "I was a flop."

"You were carrying two people's load," says he, "and you did fine."

"Tom certainly readjusted in a hurry," Martha interrupts with a giggle. "His first civilian job was to walk straight downstairs and fix the furnace. His second was to do the week's marketing next day and look after the boys long enough for me to visit a beauty parlor."

"I wouldn't have had it different," declares Tom. "A man likes to know that he's been missed."

Then the young Andersons look at each other and smile again. The kind of smile that makes you feel good about them and about marriage.

Most men fresh out of the Army feel entitled to at least a short vacation. Tom skipped the vacation. He and Martha live in Harvey, Illinois, a busy manufacturing community, some eighteen miles outside of Chicago. At the Sherwin-Williams plant, Tom's old job was waiting for him. It didn't wait long. Within twenty-four hours after his return, he was out of uniform and back at the factory working the shift from midnight until eight A.M. That first evening he and Martha talked it over and decided to save his mustering-out pay and the last allotment check.

"I'd rather work than loaf any day," explains Tom. "I guess that's my nature. Besides, Martha and I have plans for our money."

"We've always had plans," says Martha.

Perhaps that is their secret. From the beginning they have had a carefully thought-out plan of life. From the first they knew what they wanted and together they have struggled to get it for themselves and for each other.

They met nearly eight years ago at a young people's meeting held in the basement of a Chicago Methodist church. Martha lived with her family near by. She had finished high school the previous spring and gone to work as a file clerk. Tom was a newcomer to the neighborhood, and, according to Martha, a source of much interest to the young ladies of the congregation, particularly the minister's several daughters. According to Tom, he took one look at seventeen-year-old Martha Davis and instantly decided that she was "the cutest little joker" he had ever seen.

The course of their courtship didn't always run smoothly. Martha was paying board at home, but her parents were strict, and she had to be in every night, except Saturday, at half past ten on the dot. Church parties not excepted! On the 17th of September, 1938, she and Tom had their first date; they went to the Apollo movie theater to see Alexander's Ragtime Band, had trouble catching a bus and barely made the curfew hour. If they didn't fall in love on that wonderful night, it happened a few months later on a most

"As a housekeeper, I'm a putter-offer," Martha says. "But I know what ought to come before what." Pet peeves are washing, sweeping, dusting—above all, ironing, which she leaves till baskets overflow.

Martha Anderson is a good mother, a poor disciplinarian. Chief regret in Tom's absence was lack of time to play with children. On his own, Bud got lost, turned on gas, painted himself red—all in two days.

MUNKACSI

uring five months Tom was with infantry, he never got home once. If he had, I wouldn't have let him go back," says Martha. Income and penses refused to jibe and zero hour financially came when $120 d to pay $140 worth of bills. Sale of chickens, a refund on coal, impier menus managed to keep family triumphantly in the black.

A full-time mother is a good thing, an overtime mother too much of it. Children had to be wherever Martha was—on two-mile trips to market, cellar sessions with furnace, turns with livestock. "It wasn't fun."

MUNKACSI

Tom learned to cook in the CCC, taught Martha the ins-and-outs of simple male menus. Family's favorite food is French fried potatoes, which turn up regularly three times a week.

HAPPY DAYS ARE HERE AGAIN

"Even the dull chores seem to go faster when two people share them." Now that Tom's home, Martha has time to get to beauty parlor, give the house a real "Sunday polish," laugh with the children. Every day includes an hour off for resting, reading or just plain dreaming about the wonderful future of the Anderson family.

unwonderful day. One sunny March morning th set out on a hike, got hopelessly lost and hours la found themselves miles outside of Chicago in midst of torrents of freezing rain. Tom decided th a girl who could honestly enjoy such a disastrous d was the girl for him. Martha had decided alrea

They would have married straight off, except Martha's mother. They could probably have talk her father around. Mrs. Davis, however, thou that at seventeen her daughter was too young, a held firmly to that opinion.

"So we had to wait till I was eighteen," Mar explains placidly.

To the skeptical eye of a middle-aged adult, might seem that Tom Anderson at twenty-one h little to offer a wife except nebulous qualities l health and drive and ambition. Born in Kentuc and with the lean, gaunt good looks of the mo taineer, Tom grew up in a mining community Southern Illinois. When he finished high school—farmed twenty-five rented acres his last two years put himself through—he was desperately eager to on to college. His great ambition was to be a teach College was out of the question. Lack of funds a lack of jobs too—these were the dark days of national depression—sent him into the Civil Conservation Corps. Tom is grateful today for th two years he spent in the CCC. They taught hi great deal.

"For one thing," he says, "I learned how to har money."

What Tom learned in the CCC was as simple the classic discovery of Mr. Micawber that an anr income of twenty pounds with annual expenses nineteen pounds six results in happiness; an anr income of twenty pounds with annual expenses twenty pounds six results in misery. In the C payment was made once a month. Tom discove that if he spent sparingly the first three weeks of month, he was comfortably well off and able to his bills every day of the month.

"It's easy," says he, "once you've got the t
Don't buy what you can afford when you've m in your pocket, and some of your money will sti

It is more than possible that Tom's mind was pared for this financial revelation by his turbul up-and-down childhood. With his family, as many families supported by the mines, it was alv feast or famine. Tom explains that his mother, handled the pay checks, was not a good manager wasn't unusual for her miner husband to ear much as $100 a week for eight or nine months a y
She had only the one child to feed and clothe. Ne theless, the family spent every fat winter payin installments and debts acquired during the summer months when the mines were closed.
Anderson simply couldn't see ahead. Tom can' member a time when the household was even the game, or free of the worry of debt. And he re

Tom steers clear of routine housework but likes to go to market, take with children. Is also family economy wizard, pays bills, "carries budg his head," once proudly made it stretch to buy Martha $200 fur ly the inevitable fate of his twenty-five-cent-a- allowance. It was his small-boy custom to d five cents a week on the movies and put by the As soon as he accumulated five dollars his er would promptly borrow the sum to meet particularly pressing obligation.

None of that installment stuff for Martha and Tom says today. "When we buy, we pay cash." Ve save to do it," says Martha, and adds, "It's o save together for something you both want. aved first for our furniture." Then an amused lights her face and she points proudly to the t blue sofa. "Maybe you don't know it, but e sitting on a piece of my engagement ring."

gether they explain. Tom had saved up $75 to the engagement ring. Martha thought an en- nent ring wasn't necessary; all she wanted was dding ring. So the $75 was put in the bank to what they called their furniture pool.

at was five years ago. Tom and Martha began married life in a pint-sized rented room. The n was earning one hundred dollars a month in a go freight-handling office. An eventual career eacher was still in his mind, and he was going llege at night. With marriage Tom was obliged get the career at least temporarily and give up asses.

at Martha gave up, and gladly, was her $16-a- job. Tom is the kind of man who feels strongly supporting his own wife; and besides, the rsons hoped for a family as quickly as possible. babies before thirty was the particular dream eighteen-year-old bride.

ere wasn't much housekeeping at first. But a kept busy. For one thing, she learned how to Although she had grown up in a houseful of that feature of her education had been neg- . Martha learned how to cook from her hus- schooled on Boy Scout camping trips and in CC—a simple, plain, masculine cookery, frills. A meat and potatoes and vegetables ew salads and a little baking.

pint-size room cost $4.50 a week, and the g was taught and learned on a two-burner The newlyweds went in for every possible econ- They were thinking about that furniture. Well, ot it. In exactly eight months, these two people in a big city on an income of $100 a month ed the remarkable feat of saving $325. With m, plus the $75 that didn't buy an engagement hey triumphantly bought their furniture and l out of the single room and into their own nent.

was a wonderful time," Martha remembers, bit of it. Even movies are better when you o often. Or haven't you noticed?"

r the move to the $33-a-month apartment, und a new and better job with the firm where ow employed. He left the freight-handling

Tom has ideas of his own about fashion, put Martha back in skirts again instead of her duration slacks. He likes to string along when she shops, thinks own attire requires solo foraging. "I bought him a necktie—once," says Martha. Since that episode she has let him face the clothing problem stag.

PHOTOS BY MUNKACSI

wing the Army, Tom reports, he still couldn't do "right 'er arms." But as headman in Martha's life, he's five- aterial. A handy man with a can of paint, his inside-out brushwork increased value of house by several hundred dollars, provided special art effects for kids' room. Couple believe in "time off together," romping with boys or home-style ball.

As parents, the Andersons "back each other up" with Tom being somewhat on the stricter side. Since home-coming, Bud has been a jealousy problem, finds it hard to realize that Petey and the baby have a share, too, in the fun with "MY daddy."

A frontiersman at heart, Tom likes to do the impossible. At present he merely plans to keep his job, go to college, run a farm in his spare time. "We'll have lots more leisure that way," he explains, "and a real stake in each other's future."

PHOTOS BY MUNKACSI

How the Andersons Spend Their Money

| | |
|---|---|
| Payments on Farm | $785.00 |
| Insurance | 228.00 |
| Food | 1020.00 |
| Clothing | 120.00 |
| Car Expenses | 192.00 |
| Medical Care | 60.00 |
| Recreation | 120.00 |
| Papers and Books | 36.00 |
| Miscellaneous | 19.00 |
| Income Tax | 240.00 |
| Savings | 180.00 |
| | $3000.00 |

Mrs. Anderson explains: "We did not make a profit on the sale of our house but received $2500 in cash which we used for down payment on the farm. Tom's discharge pay was $200, and we now have about $400 working capital. Enough fuel oil went with the house to heat us this last winter. Savings will probably be spent in improving the house."

office and went to work for Sherwin-Williams in suburban Harvey. His business was to check the complex valves and gauges in the chemical neutralizing branch of the factory; a procedure that usually took a novice several months to learn, Tom mastered in three weeks. His commencing salary was $28 a week.

To the couple's mutual surprise and disappointment, they celebrated their first anniversary with no signs of that hoped-for family. It was then that Martha persuaded Tom to agree she could go back to work. The furniture project was safely behind them. They now had their eye on a car, a beautiful secondhand Hudson. Her earnings would help. Almost immediately after Martha started back to work—so tricky and capricious is life—young Thomas Anderson, Jr., familiarly known as Buddy, also started.

Martha quit the moment she knew. The secondhand Hudson was at once forgotten. A baby was more important than any car. "That old Hud as Tom puts it, "would have been worn out by But our boy, Buddy, why, he is just beginnin

They were determined not to bring their born back from the hospital to a rented apartr Once again they had a definite objective. What wanted and vigorously went after was a hor their own. It was 1942. War workers were po into Harvey, the competition for housing was Together they combed the vicinity. Finally n far from his plant Tom spotted a brand-new ho development just going up, and took Martha to have a look.

They settled on a four-room house with an ished attic. The house wasn't painted yet and was considerable undone work inside, but M liked the big yard and the shining, modern e ment already in place in the kitchen. The blea of the site, the dust and the mud, didn't troubl

(Continued on Page 187)

For looks...features...dependability here's your best buy in today's refrigerators

If you want a new refrigerator in your kitchen today . . .

If you want the finest that's now available, ready for delivery . . .

Be sure to see the new 1946 G-E De Luxe!

No other refrigerator has the styling of this beautiful G-E. No other refrigerator has all its convenience features.

And no other refrigerator has a mechanism with the proved performance record of the famous G-E "sealed-in-steel" unit.

The most important thing to consider

When buying a refrigerator, keep uppermost in your mind that you're buying "refrigeration." And that what gives you refrigeration is the unseen mechanism inside the refrigerator.

In the G-E, this mechanism is the famous "sealed-in-steel" unit—a unit so perfectly designed and built that it is permanently sealed up in an air-tight, oil-tight steel case. Dust can't get in, oil can't leak out—to cause troublesome wear and the need for attention.

General Electric pioneered this type of unit for home refrigerators—the most reliable ever known for giving the day-in-day-out, year-in-year-out performance you expect of a refrigerator. After 20 years, many original G-E units are still giving attention-free service. A million have been in use 10 years or longer. This record cannot be matched by any other refrigerating unit!

And today's "sealed-in-steel" unit is vastly improved. G-E engineering has more than doubled the unit's capacity, cut current consumption by more than half, and increased the ice-freezing rate by almost 5 times!

See the De Luxe Model at your retailer's

Notice all the modern features it offers you—features like the big freezer for holding plenty of frozen foods . . . and the exclusive butter-conditioner that keeps butter at just the softness you want it!

We think you'll agree that G-E is your best buy in today's refrigerators. General Electric Company, Bridgeport, Conn.

Exclusive Butter-Conditioner!

■ One of the many great convenience features of this 1946 G-E is the exclusive butter-conditioner—a special compartment built right into the refrigerator wall. It keeps butter at exactly the degree of spreading softness you want! Holds a full pound.

OTHER FEATURES — Large freezer for frozen foods • Stainless steel shelves • Chiller Tray and separate large meat drawer Two vegetable drawers • Thermometer ▪ Full-length, chrome plated door hinge ▪ Decorative stainless steel base grill.

G-E Home Freezers are built around the same famous "sealed-in-steel" freezing unit, holding temperature at 0°F. Cabinets are so perfectly insulated, so precisely fitted, that food stays frozen several days with power shut off, under ordinary conditions. 4-cu.-ft. model holds 140 pounds of food.

G-E Refrigerators

A MILLION IN SERVICE 10 YEARS OR LONGER

GENERAL ELECTRIC

We could be wrong!

A great many women agree that Fels-Naptha is an extra fine laundry soap. They tell us it makes washing easier. That it turns out whiter, sweeter-smelling clothes. That it's the best laundry soap they ever used.

Naturally, we think Fels-Naptha Soap should be used in every home—but we could be wrong.

You might find that the Fels combination of good mild soap and gentle, dirt-loosening naptha doesn't give you the extra washing help other women have discovered.

You might want to tell us why.

But before you make up your mind—won't you give Fels-Naptha Soap a trial?

Fels-Naptha Soap

BANISHES "TATTLE-TALE GRAY"

How to Prepare Your Daughter for a Divorce

BY MARCELENE COX

WHAT a pity some mothers cannot follow the example of the female cuckoo, who avoids parental responsibility by laying her eggs in the nest of another bird. I really think that's very clever of the cuckoo. The eggs are clever, too, for the first thing they do, after hatching, is to oust the fledglings of the foster parent from the nest. Then they settle back to enjoy their adopted penthouse without a regret or care in the world. This is the kind of co-operation between parent and child that's hard to get in most families.

But no human cuckoo should be discouraged over the fact that she cannot, like the bird, start evading responsibility before her child is born (as yet science has not managed to produce a baby without several months' assistance from the mother); she can still get in a thorough job of spoiling by beginning the day she and the infant, both smelling of antiseptic oil, arrive home from the hospital. It isn't a difficult job, either. In fact, it can be accomplished so smoothly, honorably and coated with so much sentiment that instead of daughter blaming mother for the eventual failure in her life, she will end by sending her Mother's Day cards versed in silly platitudes. It's being done all the time.

(I branched off above and used the word "daughter" instead of "child" or "son," because my own statistics, purely intuitional, tell me that the next generation of homes would be better and stronger if mothers concentrated on daughter raising. It's a poor husband, indeed, who doesn't fall in line with a wife whose early environment and training have shown her the value of love, affection and honor in a home.)

Now if that's enough of an introduction, here are a few examples which, if followed, will assure your daughter the unstable future of living out her life as a divorcee—provided she can get a husband. (None of these techniques of daughter raising is guaranteed to get your daughter a husband, only to get her an ex-husband.)

I

MARY is the daughter of a woman as like the female cuckoo in spirit as two yeast cakes. The nicest thing she ever did for her daughter was to name her Mary. She has never seemed to realize that children need to feel security while they are young and dependent. From the start she has done a thorough job of shedding parenthood (even without the aid of the G. I.'s baby bottle holder or the university professor's baby tender) by turning Mary over to maids, housekeepers, relatives (mostly unwilling), teachers, club leaders and preachers. (All necessary "goods" in the world up to the point where they are utilized in the extreme. For example, clubs are a fine thing until they wean the child from home by making the outside world too attractive, or become a dumping ground for parents shirking responsibility. One exception is the 4-H Club, whose work program permits the child to achieve his triumphs through the home.)

It doesn't take long for a bundle of babyhood to sense that it is being handed from one pair of arms to another; that there is no one who is really interested in its awakening personality and physical achievements.

Once a mother whose baby at the age of ten months had never spent any time out of the nursery except for a brief daily airing was asked if the baby could crawl. "I don't know," she answered. "I'll have to ask the nurse."

The whole house belongs to the baby from the first: the nursery in the morning sun, the center of mother's bed at odd intervals, the living room in the twilight, a "pallet" on the floor the moment he is ready for it—ev before. And always surrounded by frien voices and friendly arms.

In an attempt to wrest somehow the sa faction she misses by striking out for att tion, usually through undesirable behav the course of Mary's development is likely be from problem child to one of those ado cents the newspapers are filled with tod Because no one, in her earliest years, l time to answer her questions or lead her terests into the right channels, she will pr ably spend her adolescence reading ch literature and going to every movie she c whether or not it is suitable for her ye Her conception of life will undoubtedly b kind of pink illusion that love solves things. She certainly will not be prepa for the discovery that marriage is a lot other things besides romance.

We probably should give a bigger shar our sympathy to Mary than to her mot But somehow I feel more sorry for mother; think what she has missed by turn her child over to others and the world w she could have had those baby years.

Perhaps it would help the human cuc to comprehend the young child's sense of security by repeating daily those lines fr Housman:

I, a stranger and afraid
In a world I never made.

II

MIRIAM is being raised on the philoso that it is more beautiful to be unselfish t to be selfish, except as regards the thi which one wants. As soon as she could und stand the word "pretty," Miriam was t there never had been such a lovely child. the beginning she was not trained to dr herself or hang up her clothes. Today sh not being taught to assist with the work the household, or learn any skills, such cooking, sewing, child care (by letting look after the neighbor's children). She given deference in most situations. Her ture is pictured as a glittering career with reference to the biological function of moth hood. The theme of her raising is "Frail thy name is woman."

Now in her teens, Miriam has excuses all her faults. When she is late for cl runs out of gas (she calls the family car " car"), misses a road sign, it is never beca of any fault of her own, such as carelessn poor habits of organization, daydreami but always is caused by a lack or mistak some other person.

Miriam will probably marry—because does have a pretty face—but she is likely turn out to be the worst of all wives selfish one.

However, no matter how great her fail as a wife may be, Miriam will always exp to be admired, treated tenderly and cons ered, in some vague way, much finer a nobler than she is.

Miriam's mother should know that it is right to give a daughter every advantage admiration, affection, music and dancing l sons if at the same time you stress to her t necessity and joy of work and a comm sense evaluation of her own charms.

III

HARRIET'S mother is a "perfect" hou keeper; her goal is not 90 per cent perf tion, but 150 per cent. She is bringing H riet up to have an exaggerated idea of t importance of house in a woman's life. Wh ever happens in this family, such as cigare ashes spilled on the rug, mustard dripp n a hot dog, father coming in late, is ated as a tragedy. Harriet is not being ght to say (and smile while saying it), veryone makes mistakes at times"; or ear old dad has to have a little fun"; or ccidents happen in the best of families." at anyone "feels" in this family is not portant at all, only what he "does." And t can be little. Sit cautiously! Walk efully! (Step from rug to rug and avoid hardwood floors.) Eat meticulously! eir family life isn't fun at all. Harriet is ng trained in smile resistance and an over- d attention to trifles. I shudder to think at will happen the first time Harriet's band rests his feet on the davenport. If does it a second time, or hangs his coat on air back, or leaves the top off the tooth- te tube, Harriet will probably look upon as a monster. When he resents her nag- g (nagging mothers nearly always have ging daughters), the marriage will prob- y end in divorce. But don't let's feel too ry for Harriet; she can always get sym- hy from mother, who will understand what the "poor r'" has gone through iving with a man o doesn't appreciate good" wife when he one.

Once a woman gets en by the house- ping bug, she is rare- cured. So there is e that can be done n Harriet's mother. will put house first t's the last thing does. And it will She won't think dying unless it's urday night and the k is all done up.

IV

NE of the surest ways repare your daugh- for a divorce is to one yourself. So my t example is about ouple who didn't eve that a home h two parents is t for a child. t took Charlotte's ents only a few rs to decide that ng apart, if not bet- for Charlotte, would east be more pleas- for themselves. either one had been ned in self-control; were oversensitive praise and blame, er demanding or nting most of the e. As children, their mistakes had al- s been discussed and corrected in front thers.)

The judge who awarded the divorce di- ed Charlotte into two parts: six months to mother, six months to her father. But he ldn't divide Charlotte's spirit; it goes on nging to both parents. (Every night she ys, "Please, God, make mother and ldy love each other again.")

When Charlotte marries she will probably handicapped by a skepticism of marriage ich may prevent her making a success of own marriage. Above all, she is very ly to imitate her mother's quick temper, ring never been taught by example that a nt woman is a beautiful woman.

Couples about to get a divorce should lize that the main thing in marriage is not feeling parents have for each other, but operation in raising their children.

V

HEN Alice was a little girl her father ght an automobile and made the mistake teaching her mother to drive. Mother er traveled on foot after that. Her main a was to get through the housework any way, pack the kids in the car and start . If mother wasn't going places she was having folks in. When gas and food rationing came along there probably wasn't a more miserable woman in the country than Alice's mother. But now that gas and tires are back, she's out on the highway again—except when Alice has the car. And there seems to be a battle on most of the time over which of the two gets it first.

It is probably too late to tell Alice's mother that it's natural enough to enjoy excitement, but ruinous to raise children on it. Our real concern, however, is Alice. Just imagine what will happen if the man she marries turns out to be a homebody!

VI

SARAH belongs to a family that always spends before it earns. Can anything worse be imagined? What money this family has is usually carried loose in its trouser pockets. Economic disaster is most of the time just around the corner, if not coming up the walk. Once Sarah earned some money which she hid away in her piggy bank. Her mother discovered it and used the amount to buy herself some silk underwear. Sarah has never wanted to earn or save since.

Since lack of integrity in money matters usually goes hand in hand with lack of integrity in other things, Sarah is not receiving any training in punctuality, keeping her word, or even in being honest with her own self.

No matter what kind of man Sarah may marry, there's bound to be trouble, especially if he happens to be one who still has the first nickel he ever earned. For in marriage, birds of different feathers, as well as like plumage, may use the same checking account.

VII

PRISCILLA'S mother has always guarded her against learning anything about sex. She's the "hush-nice-children - don't - talk-about-such-things" kind of mother. She never permits Priscilla to go into the bathroom when her younger brother is taking a bath. An air of secrecy surrounds the subject of babies. Even though it is almost unbelievable in this day and age, this type of mother still exists. (I've noticed that women of this type are often religious fanatics too.)

Priscilla is bound to do a lot of private thinking or investigating, and it will be very strange if she does not turn into the pre-adolescent child other mothers have to guard their children against. But even if she does get through this period and her adolescent years without mishap, her adult emotions are likely to be dwarfed.

Some mothers do have difficulty in frankly discussing the facts of life with their children. Perhaps one reason is that they do not begin soon enough.

A child should never remember when he first learned about birth or how the male differs from the female. If mothers begin in time, they can talk about the reproductive system as frankly as if discussing the new electric dishwasher.

Even though it sounds like a contradiction, it still holds water to say that later conventional attitudes toward sex are acquired through early unconventional attitudes. And no girl will make the right kind of wife and mother who enters marriage with other than

(Continued on Page 216)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Brother

By Eleanor Alletta Chaffee

I stood and watched him as his plow's thin blade
Rolled the brown furrows true
as his steady gaze.
I was a stranger, and my shyness made
A barrier between us. Something stays
All speech at such a time. But suddenly
I saw the untouched circle of the grass Left in the center of his field, where he Had turned the horse, let lifted plow blade pass.
A startled meadow lark climbed, spiraled high
On rungs of light above her hidden nest;
Her song was spun against the evening sky,
The sun laid crimson on her tiny breast.

His eyes and mine met then: he was my brother;
Without speech we were knit each to the other.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

What would St. Marys think of that fleece?"

Ophelia, lambie, watch that fleece, or your barber will never dare suggest it as fine enough for a St. Marys Blanket. No inferior fleece ever goes into those famous miracles of warmth and loveliness. Only choice white wools, live and buoyant take the lovely St. Marys' colors . . . wear the deep satin-sash bindings and the label known to all the world for quality.

St. Marys Wool Blankets snow white, tender pastels, dark tones in full sizes, "tuck-in" length.

St. Marys—isn't it a pretty name . . . and so easy to remember!

ST. MARYS BLANKETS ▪ ST. MARYS, OHIO

MR. AND MRS. . . . TOGETHER AGAIN

By Ruth Mary Packard

PHOTOGRAPHS BY PHILIPPE HALSMAN

New hair-do, new dress: Martha sees the double value in a black sunback rayon-linen that she can wear shopping with its button-on piqué shoulder-bolero.

Cotton and rayon-linen are cool, easy to keep; two-piece plaid and plain, nice enough for town.

White coat of fleecy wool for summer nights, the style that goes over everything, lasts for years.

Cotton play suit for morning work at home; skirt buttons on for marketing or a call to the door.

Print for a date to the movies with Tom, or for a party at home. This year's peplum style.

Martha Anderson, who fell into the shorts-and-slacks habit while Tom was away at camp, has the best of all reasons for some new clothes now that he's home again. He likes her in suits . . . and she needs one for Sunday-best and trips to Chicago . . . a pretty print for the movies, a sunback dress with a jacket for hot weather, shopping and holidays. To these she may add a coat and more cottons. Wives blossom out when husbands muster out.

Gray flannel slacks, tweed jacket, bright bow tie—Tom turns college man after hours.

Gabardine topcoat doubles for a raincoat; standard choice, nation wide, at prices for every budget.

Sleeveless pull-over sweater, year-round extra for flannel slacks, good buy in any man's language.

e sports jacket processed for rain or —for spring or fall, work in the garden.

Free and easy sports shirt—relief after regulation clothes—to wear at home or holidays.

Tom Anderson is one of the young men who thoroughly enjoy getting out of uniform into civilian clothes. After 100 per cent Army woolens, number one quality and workmanship, he is learning new standards in clothes. After some shopping around, he was able to assemble an entire new wardrobe, from office suit to sports shirts and sweaters . . . clothes which combine business sense and a liking for the comfortable and casual.

Mr. and Mrs. Anderson go shopping together to buy a new suit and build a wardrobe around it. Hers a black rayon, around $25; his a pin-striped wool, $38.50.

For the dearest Mother in all the world

Roll-Wave brush and comb in ruby, sapphire, or crystal . . . . . $4.50

Brush and comb in ruby, sapphire, or crystal . . . . . $2.50

Hair brush in ruby, sapphire, or crystal . . . . . $1.75

PRECIOUS Jewelite

BY PRO-PHY-LAC-TIC

You want the best for Mother. Naturally! Then give her Jewelite...the jewel among plastics! A gay gift with a flattering touch of glamour! Intimate, personal, yet practical, too. Sparkling, flawlessly beautiful combs, brushes, and mirrors . . . smartly packed in an attractive case with transparent "showcase" lid. It's a gift she will use and enjoy every day of the year! And because it's Jewelite it will last for years and years and years! (Finest plastic made, finest Prolon bristles.) You can get these lovely gifts at any good brush department. But be sure it's genuine Jewelite. Look for the name "Jewelite" on the package.

PRO-PHY-LAC-TIC BRUSH CO., Florence, Mass.

Waist Space

PHOTO BY STUART

SKETCHES BY MURY

n your knees, girls! Martha Anderson crawls on all urs to improve her waistline. *Back straight, keep omach pulled in. No old-time scrubwoman slump!

BY LOUISE PAINE BENJAMIN
Beauty Editor of the Journal

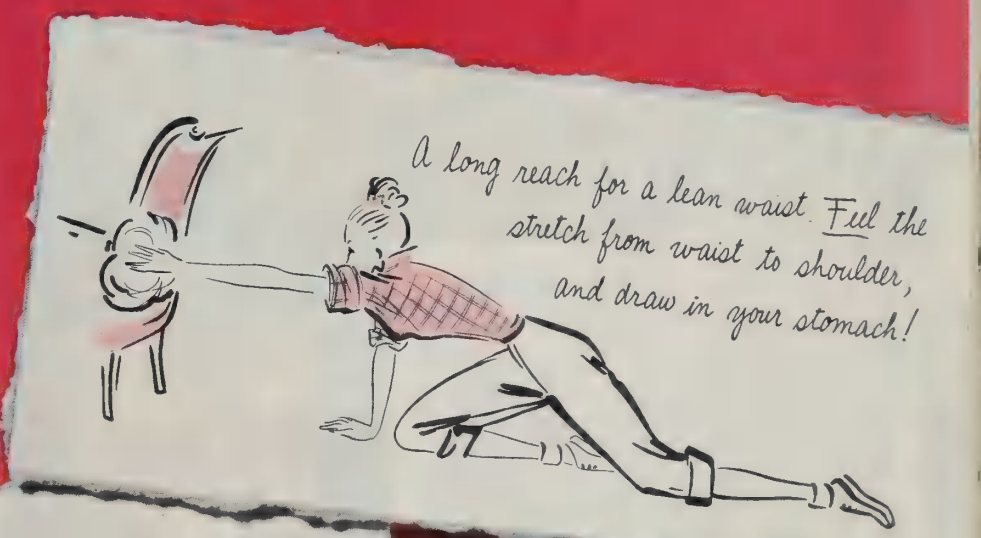
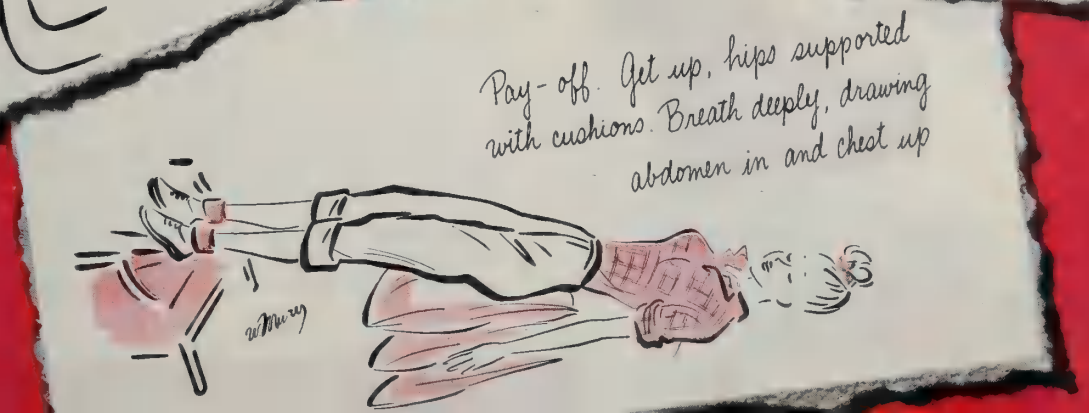
WHEN Martha Anderson consulted a famous exercise authority about her relaxed waistline and was told the best possible treatment was to get down on her knees and scrub, she couldn't believe her ears. It sounded as though the clock had turned backward and the homemaker was about to be demoted to her old position on the kitchen floor, when hand scrubbing was the only satisfactory way to tackle coarse-grained wood. Martha was particularly dismayed because scrubbing is one of the jobs that has tired her most. But when she learned there could be a beauty angle to the task—and that it didn't really have to be scrubbing, but could be dusting or picking up toys—well, that's different. She also learned that the beauty way of working might vary considerably from her previous routine!



Here is the whole story. Martha Anderson isn't fat, but three babies in prompt succession have stretched her abdominal muscles slightly, and softened her waistline, so that now there is just a hint of roundness that could develop into a middle-age spread if it didn't get squelched right at the start. Martha is all for taking immediate action.



With plenty of housework and the care of three young children, she doesn't need any extra exercise. It was more important to discover how the effort she was already making could be made to produce beauty results. Fortunately, the answer is simple. For some time physicians have been giving new mothers exercises which involved getting down on all fours and drawing in the abdominal muscles as the best means of restoring a flat stomach after childbirth. Now a leading salon has devised a series of housework exercises that enable an ambitious homemaker to toil, and tighten her figure at the same time. She can dust, scrub and work on her waist space all in one operation!

Party cakes...party cakes...made of Bran

Cupcakes

NABISCO BRAN TEA CAKES

1 cup Nabisco 100% Bran
1 cup milk
¼ cup shortening
¼ cup orange marmalade
2 eggs
3 tsp. baking powder
1 cup sifted all-purpose flour
½ tsp. salt

Soak Nabisco 100% Bran in milk 5 min. Cream shortening and marmalade. Add eggs, one at a time, beating after each. Add Bran mixture. Sift together flour, baking powder and salt. Add to first mixture; stir only until well mixed. Fill small-size muffin pans ⅔ full. Bake in hot oven (425°F.) 15 min. Frost and add to each a colored candy. You'll have 24 to 28 gay tea cakes — dainty and fine as cupcakes! That's because they're made with Nabisco 100% Bran—finer-milled to make bran particles smaller — your tea cakes perfect! (Furnish important diet-bulk, too.)

a jolly good breakfast for a man

Cereals "he" likes

NABISCO BRAN BANANA FAVORITE

Yes, ma'am. This is it! Man's favorite way to eat taste-tempting Nabisco 100% Bran — with banana slices, a dash of sugar, cream or milk! You get the important iron, phosphorus and Vitamin $B_1$ that Nabisco Bran contains! Best of all — you get Nabisco Bran's diet-bulk to help relieve constipation due to insufficient bulk in your food. Finer-milled — Nabisco 100% Bran's mild and gentle in action. Really "easy-on-you!" Of highest quality because Nabisco uses only the best grade bran, produced in its own flour mills.

Eat Nabisco 100% Bran regularly. If your constipation does not improve soon, see your physician.

Favorite for Flavor... this finer-milled Bran

One of the many fine foods baked by Nabisco NAtional BIScuit
COmpany

PHOTOS BY STUART

Buddy's only three, but he's as fond of pie as his dad is.

Peas and Pears OR Pies and Pancakes

By Louella G. Shouer

PETEY ANDERSON, at eighteen months old, eats about everyth but popcorn. He'd eat that, too, if Martha would let him. Bud now three, still won't eat near the variety of foods his youn brother does. He's harder to interest in vegetables, for one thing.

Petey's precocious appetite takes in French fried potatoes, and b children have a particular yen for pancakes and pies. So does their d As long as it doesn't seem to hurt the youngsters any, Martha indul this pie taste to the extent of letting them have pies made with frui the pudding filling they would normally have anyway. The good- them foods come first with this young mother.

VEGETABLES TO A CHILD'S TASTE

The way vegetables are prepared or served to him may have a great deal to do with a child's reaction to a certain vegetable.

Children haven't the taste for salt we grownups have. Season on the scant side with salt. Make it taste good to him rather than to you.

Cook vegetables until just tender—not mushy. You aim to do this anyway, but children are particularly sensitive to overcooked vegetables. The brighter the color as a result of quick cooking, the more chance you have to win.

For children who are still at the mashed-vegetable stage, you might add some of the cooking water for extra flavor—and vitamins. Don't make slushy, though, that a child can't g up with a spoon. Surplus cooking li can be combined in soups.

Cut vegetables into large-eno pieces so your tot can recognize the that is, when he's graduated to this st

Serve tiny beets and young car whole—half inch for cubing should about right.

Juices, of course, are the easiest to get a child used to the taste of a v table if he won't eat it in its real fo One of those whizzer mixers will g up vegetables and fruits into won ful soup bases and drinks.

A leaf of lettuce is easier for s children to eat than shredded lett ainer-stage young folks, as well as brothers and sisters, like their vegs in soups. Make them thicker you would for yourself—"many a you know.

nove the skin before cooking toma-serving them raw. I like tomatoes peeled myself; don't you?

you haven't always done so, rethe little pointed scales from as-us and use only the tender part.
asparagus stalks where they snap
t. If you cut them, you may be g some of the tough fibry portion.

s on cabbage. Getting youngsters ish the stronger-flavored vegeta-the hardest stile to get over. They on't like them at first. They like mild and bland, and the thing to o soft-pedal the flavor and odor of vegetables as much as possible.
ry-school experts say that children radually grow to like cabbage, oli and cauliflower if you cook them ge amounts of water, even though u read about vegetables says "cook ttle water as possible to save vitand minerals." You just can't have thing. By keeping these vegeta-ild-flavored and not overcooking so they lose their natural color, nay be able to add these to his list"—then it's time enough grad-to get the water question and vis back to normal.

ldren will even eat onions after a ials, the experts say, if you cook in three waters—well, anyway, night give it a whirl. You don't him to be one of those people who lts refuse any food seasoned with
s. And heaven knows—a good cook ardly get along without using an now and then.

etables that just won't go over at y win if you grind them and add ws and meat loaves.

over-two-year-olds adore eatgetables raw, particularly carrots.
repertoire may even go beyond Remember how you used to like of raw potato when your own r was peeling a panful for supper?

raw vegetables into eatable pieces ildren. Serve them relish-tray nations and salads little fingers ndle.

A good introduction to the first "raws": grate a little carrot or chop some celery and put it between slices of buttered bread—that is, if he's old enough to chew.

AN APPLE A DAY?

Fruits are not the stumbling block that vegetables are, for children usually like fruit. They've been used to orange juice, puréed prunes, apricots and applesauce from their baby days. A first meeting with raw fruits other than orange juice should begin with the bland fruits like ripe peaches and bananas and, later, apples. Isn't it wonderful to have bananas again? Children love them so.

If by any chance your young pride and joy hasn't taken to these fruits, it might possibly be that the peach wasn't ripe, the apple too tart. Continue cooking these two and he'll come around to them in his own way.

Some mothers add a little raw fruit to orange juice, a stewed fruit or canned one. This makes the acquaintance of a new food less of a shock.

Chopped apple can make its debut in this way—later the apple itself can do the same honors. And don't forget about apple snow. They'll love it if you haven't yet slipped it in on the bill of fare.

Custard sauce is a favorite with most youngsters, and most fruits do taste wonderful with it. It's still one of my favorite desserts.

Just how much sugar to use in sweetening fruits is up to you, but about half as much sweetening as you would like yourself seems to appeal to most young palates.

A soda-fountain sundae concoction of fruit and ice cream or sherbet intrigues a child. His first strawberry? Now's the season to try it.

Already friendly toward cereals, children might relish more fruits even more if you were to combine them with this good stand-by of their menus.

CLEAN PLATES

Children are really pretty co-operative little human beings. If you play fair with them—not scorch their soup, oversalt their vegetables, serve them fruits that are puckery sour, or serve too much of a food too new to them too soon, or in too large amounts for a first taste—you'll never have to worry about pushed-away plates. And that reminds me—don't mention it to a soul in his hearing if your child should pass up food you've fixed to perfection. He might get the idea he really doesn't like it, and then you might as well forget it for a while. Try again when you think he's forgotten all about it. Change the form of serving this bugaboo food so that it will look new and special. Some fine day his curiosity will get the best of him. You never can tell. It might turn out to be a favorite.

Guess what little Petey's favorite food is? French fried potatoes! "Horrors!" you might say. But this sturdy little fellow eats everything—has never been sick a day of his life—has never had a tummy ache.

Flavor! Nutrition! Econom-e-e! Blue Bonnet Margarine gives "ALL 3"

Flavor—delicious flavor! The fussiest eater in your family will go for BLUE BONNET. It's so fresh, delicate-tasting, country-sweet!

Nutrition—proved nutrition! BLUE BONNET is rich in Food-Energy, rich in Vitamin A. Yes, 15,000 units of Vitamin A in every delicious pound!

BLUE BONNET comes white—color for table use.

Economy—yes, BLUE BONNET saves you real money! Costs so little you can spread it on twice as thick!

A PRODUCT OF THE MAKERS OF FLEISCHMANN'S YEAST

"Scrubadubdub, fewer clothes in the wash tub" was her theory about floors.

One day Martha really saw her weary, grimy face in the mirror she had polished so faithfully. Then, bing! She wrote that letter.

It was June when Tom went, and of course they forgot furnace instructions.

"IF I HAD IT ALL TO DO OVER"

By Judy Barry

"Madam," wrote Martha Anderson; and, as we read, we could almost hear her pen sputtering with indignation! You've seen on the preceding pages what followed that mad-clear-through "Madam!" But by the time we went to visit her, and talk things over in her pleasant little blue-walled living room, she had cooled down. Life was again worth living, the sun shone on her world—in other words, her husband was back home!

Not that the work wasn't still there to do, and her schedule pretty heavy, but her approach to it was all very different. Unwittingly, in setting all her activities down on paper just to blow off steam, she had made the first step toward organizing them. Even as she read the letter over before mailing it, she told us later, she could see, as she couldn't when she was just "doing" frantically, without thinking, how her snarls and tangles had happened. Some jobs were taking her far longer than they were worth, some could be cut out or dovetailed with others. But until then, it just hadn't occurred to her to make a survey on paper, and to proceed from the survey to a plan. (If any of you have read our words before, we're afraid we sound like a broken record or a radio commercial on that score. But it is so important that we're shameless about repeating it . . . plan, plan, PLAN!)

Martha didn't have the advantage, you see, of having to help with the housework and cooking when she was a girl growing up. That may sound strange, but "advantage" is exactly what we mean. Martha and her sisters were expected to spend all their time, when not actually in the schoolroom, studying and preparing lessons, rather than helping to bake or to sew a fine seam. Their mother preferred to struggle with her considerable work alone, if only her daughters would present her with report cards of straight A's. And so, with the kindliest intentions in the world, her mother unconsciously made Martha's adult job in life, that of homemaker, exceedingly difficult for her.

Her first bout with managing a home was, accordingly, pretty unsuccessful, in a small, dark, cluttered furnished apartment, which didn't arouse her interest at all. But by the time they had achieved their present home, Martha's pride in it, the instinctive desire that's in every woman to make home beautiful for her husband and children, made her long to manage it well and care for it lovingly. Naturally, since she didn't have the slightest knowledge of how to go about it skillfully, she was slow, and bungled many tasks considerably. Too much to do, learning how too late, trying to catch up on years in a minute, and then—Tom, her prop and mainstay, taken away. After he went, she seemed to be drawn (Continued on Page 185)

PHOTOS BY STUART

Nowadays, when living-room vacuuming is done, the playroom "gate" goes up

The whole family shared Martha's relief on the day she turned the bookkeeping back to Tom

Bud's coveralls are folded rough-dry now instead of ironed. Bud's just as happy

Exciting new kitchen! Surprising low price!

What a cheerful, pleasant room! And your kitchen can be just as attractive, just as easy to work in, when you replace your old-fashioned cabinets and sink with spotless white enameled steel Youngstown units. This time-saving equipment will fit your kitchen perfectly. Installation takes only a few hours, and the cost for a modern kitchen like the one above will be about $12 a month on F.H.A. terms.

-thirds of your kitchen work is done at or near the n. You can do it much easier with this well planned ngstown "Kitchenaider." The twin-bowl sink with rcelain enamel top simplifies dishwashing, the handy rd is a great convenience, and there is ample storspace. Installed for as little as $3.75 a month.

Add wall and floor cabinets within reach of the "Kitchenaider," and you have the beginning of a good-looking, work-saving kitchen. These well made cabinets come in many sizes and styles for any kitchen plan. The arrangement shown above, for a $6500 to $7500 home, can be purchased with all accessories for less than $8 a month.

JUST THINK how wonderful it would be to have a beautiful kitchen like this, right in your own home!

You can have it, now, without doing any expensive remodeling. It will be a Youngstown kitchen of gleaming white enameled steel, with a modern cabinet sink, plenty of space to work on, and large storage cabinets arranged so that every kitchen task is easier.

Top quality Youngstown units are made in many sizes to fit your kitchen perfectly, and the entire cost will be far less than you thought you'd have to pay.

Look at the prices given here for the finest kitchen equipment you can buy! How can Youngstown offer it for so little? Only because Youngstown cabinet sinks and cabinets are produced in quantity, in the traditional American way.

Like everything else you buy for your home, your purchase of Youngstown equipment helps maintain national prosperity by keeping men and dollars at work.

You'll have a grand time planning your exciting new kitchen with Youngstown equipment! We have just printed a colorful, practical 20-page booklet, full of ideas and suggestions that show you how to do it. You also get 46 miniature cut-outs of cabinet sinks and cabinets.

Just mail the coupon with 25c in cash (no stamps please) and find out how easy and inexpensive it is to have a convenient and attractive kitchen.

MULLINS MANUFACTURING CORPORATION
Warren, Ohio
Porcelain Enameled Products, Large Pressed Metal Parts, Design Engineering Service

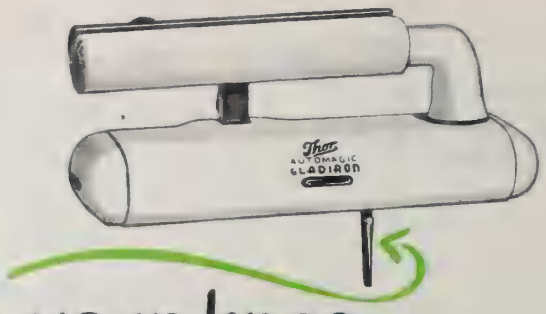
Youngstown Kitchens, Mullins Mfg. Corp.
Dept. L-546, Warren, Ohio

Send me your book on Youngstown Kitchens and the 46 miniature cut-outs. I enclose 25c in cash.

☐ I plan to remodel ☐ build

NAME (PLEASE PRINT)



ADDRESS

CITY ZONE

COUNTY STATE

Youngstown Kitchens
BY MULLINS

Touch ONE lever with your knee ...and you're GLADIRONing!

Your new Thor Gladiron is automagic...operates with a single knee lever...irons so easily and sweetly you'll wonder why you ever slaved over an ironing board.

Oh happy day, Gladirons are back . . . more of a blessing than ever. You iron sitting down AND you iron automagically . . . just by touching a single, cleverly placed lever with your knee. Instead of wearing yourself out pushing a heavy iron back and forth, you only guide clothes through the Gladiron. Trickiest pieces come out looking simply elegant . . . the Gladiron roll was made to fit inside sleeves, making ironing of shirts unbelievably easy and quick.

See the Thor Automagic Gladiron at your dealer's now—see how it irons, how it folds and tucks away in a closet, how easily it wheels wherever you want it. You'll want to take it straight home—and soon you can!

It's Glad, Gladironing

You'll sit and iron with your knee—use a single lever to open and close, start and stop the Gladiron —at a touch.

It's sing a song of shirts

You'll sit and iron a shirt in 4½ minutes. The Gladiron roll slips inside sleeves, makes ironing shirts (and all kinds of tricky pieces!) amazingly easy.

It's bye-bye Gladiron

You'll sit and iron wherever it's coolest or sunniest . . . then FOLD your Gladiron and wheel it away. It's closet size when folded —easy to tuck away yet always close at hand.

Here's a Glimpse of That Unbelievable Thor Automagic Washer

Your eyes will pop when you see how easily this streamlined machine can be changed from Automagic Clothes Washer to Automagic Dishwasher . . . with a simple change of tubs. Don't miss it!

HURLEY MACHINE DIVISION
Electric Household Utilities Corporation
Chicago 50, Illinois
Thor-Canadian Company, Ltd., Toronto, Canada

(Continued from Page 182)

n deeper and deeper into her own par-ar slough of despond.
seemed to Martha that she had hit om on the day she wrote to us. Her unwashed for three days because she dn't find time to think about it, looked at her from the mirror which she dog-y polished every day. The mirror shone sparkled—her face was dust-laden, dull, ouraged. Personally, we wouldn't blame girl if she had reached up and put a fist ugh the mirror! But we're glad she 't—we're glad she sat down and howled t of her system.
om that black moment on, Martha beto pull herself up. Actually, she had n her climb even before Tom came home nd his strength and encouragement.
nd just to prove the truth of the old saw t what happens to those who help themes, soon she acquired a washing machine!
ner aged and shaky to be sure, but still shing machine, with plenty of life left n it was coaxed and oiled. You can gine how much this helped, psychologias well as actually.
ext she parted with their chickens and its, facing the fact that the time and they required were all out of proportion e value received from them.
ttle by little, each day, the mysteries of furnace became revealed, if only by a ess of trial and error. With each heavy elful, Martha muttered, "Oh, if I had all to do over—I'd learn, I'd know about is business!"
way, then, went her glass-topped coffee , into temporary retirement except for al occasions. Wisely ecided that, sticky and r-marked, it was no of beauty, but twenty ings a day wouldn't it otherwise just now,
ren being children,
'em! The fateful mirror
ft up, but she learned to speed its shining a spray and a cloth in each hand.
No ironing for your play clothes from on, my lads," she informed the wide-Pete and Buddy, who didn't flicker an sh on hearing of this mild household ution. The next reform, banishment to playroom after the living room had ved its weekly vacuuming, they didn't so lightly at first, for Martha used to daily, and give them free run. But re good little fellows, reasonable and ent, so a day or two of firmness got new order pretty well established.
us, step by step, Martha is learning.
had it all to do over, I would have that way. I'd know what to let go, what to do to make things straighten aster, short cuts that would give me time to enjoy the children."
at is her dream: to be friends with as well as care for them; have time d and visit with her husband; yet to ner house so that Tom and the chilwhen they're old enough, may always anyone home with them and be of it.
e, then, for Martha, and for every n who has a great deal to do, are some and means to consider in making your nd your energy come out even:

UPS AND DOWNS

down all purely decorative objects that st dust catchers. By this we certainly mean that you should banish the grace-er candelabra that gives you a thrill time you look at it. Things like that rth a certain amount of work and care, lift and pleasure they bring you. But everyone has unloved, unlovely ob-round, though they serve no functional etic purpose. Away with such!

own once a week, and plan your meals whole week ahead. You've no idea time and money saver this is.

p this worthy practice with another ually considerate of your busyness and . Make your marketing list then der staple foods once a week only.

Cut down your meal-preparation time by scrubbing vegetables well and cooking them without peeling. Hope you'll all have pressure saucepans soon—they're such timesavers.

Keep up your high standard of table setting, no matter how rushed you are. The extra minute or two it takes to arrange china and silver attractively is well worth it to the family's morale, and gay well-mated dishes don't take a bit longer to wash than dreary unrelated ones. But washable place mats, paper napkins, sectioned plates are time and work savers that you needn't hesitate to use, for they're so attractive in their own informal way. Don't forget big trays to save steps in clearing and setting the table.

Pour down scalding water on your freshly washed dishes and let them air-dry.

Jot down household needs, food ideas, errands to be done when you think of them—use a blackboard in your kitchen or a memo sheet. This helpful habit cuts down extra trips to market or downtown amazingly.

Dress down your children rather than dressing them up! Nothing is more futile than spending hours ironing ruffles and pastel fragilities for them. Notice that the best shops show clothes of utter simplicity for small fry. Martha dresses Bud, her oldest boy, in sturdy little denim coveralls, well suited to his back-yard activities. But the hours she used to spend ironing them, until she realized how unnecessary it was! At present Pete and Richard just wear diapers for their at-home costumes, even on the coldest days, for Martha has a theory that keeping her house at a tropical 85° prevents the children from taking cold. We confess we don't agree, but none of the children has ever had a cold, she tells us, and they're certainly handsome little huskies to look at.

They are never alone that are accompanied with noble thoughts.

—SIR PHILIP SIDNEY.

Shave down ironing time by using bath towels, dish towels, underwear, children's play clothes, and so on, just as they come from the line. Hang them carefully, fold them neatly, and you won't mind it a bit.

Keep down the amount of pressing needed by giving everyone room to hang clothes neatly, and enough hangers so they can rest in good shape. Children should have hooks within reach, hangers scaled to fit their clothes.

Double up by darning and mending while listening to your favorite news commentator. Ironing, too, is a good double-up job. Enjoy relaxing to radio's sweet music, hear the children's lessons, or make this their bedtime-story time, if you iron in the evenings.

TOOLS OF THE TRADE

How many "tools of your trade" have you? And how good is their performance? Treat yourself to the very best you can get, but remember that the best isn't necessarily the most expensive. Sometimes a simple little dime-store gadget can be a tremendous help and comfort—a can opener that races round the can speedily, or one of those little shaver things that scrape carrots in a jiffy.

Think of the time and energy Mrs. Anderson could save if she used a wet mop with a wringer attachment for her bathroom and kitchen floors, rather than down-on-the-knees scrubbing. She feels that such scrubbing keeps her floors cleaner, and thus keeps the children's clothes from getting grubby. We still hope that she'll take our mop advice and save all that wear and tear on herself.

More than almost anything else, working in a good light makes a vast difference in the way you'll look and feel at day's end, to say nothing of being an important safety precaution.

HOW'S YOUR RHYTHM?

Do you like to dance? If you do, you know how you can go on for hours happily, feeling

(Continued on Page 187)

LESS CARE

...Yet, My Floors Stay Beautiful Longer!

Housewives everywhere find Self-Polishing Simoniz a wonderful work-saver. Just minutes to apply with a cloth or mop applicator . . . no rubbing, no buffing. Now floors clean up sparkling with a damp cloth.

And always, lovely finishes "show through" radiantly beautiful . . . because Self-Polishing Simoniz on floors is crystal-clear. It's the same longer lasting beauty that makes Simoniz so famous for cars.

Try Self-Polishing Simoniz today.

Self-Polishing SIMONIZ FOR FLOORS

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Self-Polishing Simoniz is sold by grocery, hardware, drug, paint, 5 cents to $1, auto accessory and department stores.

THE SIMONIZ COMPANY, CHICAGO 16, ILLINOIS

Recognized for over thirty years as authorities on preservation of fine finishes

FOR LINOLEUM, ASPHALT AND RUBBER TILE, AND FINISHED WOOD FLOORS

© C. P.

Sweet Mystery of "Baker" Street . . .

EXHIBIT A: One beautiful loaf of bread, fresh and fragrant, with firm, even texture and appetizing "bloom" and crust.

THE MYSTERY: The baker put dextrose sugar in the "mix" before baking . . . but there's only a mere trace of dextrose in the finished loaf . . . where did it go?

THE CLUE: Sugar is put in bread dough to "feed" the yeast . . . yeast cells thrive especially well on dextrose sugar.

THE SOLUTION: In developing a superior loaf of bread, the dextrose disappears but its goodness remains . . . which explains why American bakers use millions of pounds of dextrose every day.

CONCLUSION: When a bread wrapper reads "baked with dextrose" it means Quality . . . with a capital Q. You may buy this bread with confidence in its wholesome goodness . . . at no extra cost.

Look for mention of dextrose on the labels of jams and jellies, canned fruits and juices, cereals, soft drinks, candy and other foods to which Dextrose gives better flavor, texture and appearance as well as genuine food-energy value.

dextrose

FOOD-ENERGY SUG

CORN PRODUCTS REFINING COMPANY • One of the producers of dextrose • ARGO, ILLINOIS

(Continued from Page 185)

the slightest fatigue (that is, if your ner, too, has rhythm!). When you're king around the house, you're on your , and free to have your sense of rhythm g you through a long busy day, if you'll relax and let it. Work to music as much ossible. Try sweeping and dusting and making with long graceful motions at an tempo. Work rhythmically as you iron, oping over large flat pieces as if you were g the "skater's waltz"!

ABOVE AND BEYOND ALL THE REST

But best of all things as a homemaker's help is her spirit. Do you remember the story of the placid colored lady who lived to a happy, healthy, useful old age of 100 or thereabouts? Her secret, she confided to inquirers, was that she had early learned to "co-operate with the inevitable." The more you think about this, the more you'll realize that hers was a philosophy full of happiness and wisdom.

When there's a house to clean, three meals a day to cook, babies to feed and amuse, a certain amount of work, physical, mental and spiritual, is involved. That is the housewife's inevitable. Yet you have what every woman in the world is born wanting—husband, home, children. You have what songs are sung about—what makes the world go round. If you don't taste and savor every drop of joy that's in it—because there's work too—you're not the girl we think you are.

But we think you are.

THE HOUSEWIFE'S DILEMMA

(Continued from Page 172)

y could plant. The monthly payments of 53 on the $5400 house seemed all right. the down payment of $600 was a nper. (Buddy's arrival and Martha's ital expenses would be covered by insur- Tom carried at the plant, and so weren't rry.)

n the bank, set aside for their house, the pective home owners and parents had tly $450. Martha and Tom anxiously ulted. Their money wouldn't stretch. e was pressing. If they dallied, they nt lose the place. Eventually Tom found nswer, made a deal with the contractor solved the $600 down-payment dilemma. agreed to take over the house in its de- dly incomplete state, and was allowed ) for doing all his own painting and in- finishing and decorating. With the down ment reduced to $390, they were left with lance of $60 to cover something vaguely d "charges." These charges, they were rmed, would be "around fifty dollars." ist as they were ready to take possession, as Buddy had given strong indication he was about ready to enter the world, blow fell. The "charges" amounted to 5. What did they do? Let Tom tell it.

"For the first and last time in my life," he soberly, "I went to a loan company and owed. I borrowed $50 and gave the com- y a mortgage on our furniture."

he loan went through just in the nick of e. The day after they signed the last ers and got their title, Buddy was born. dy's proud father didn't pass around rs. Exactly two weeks later he paid back loan with an added dollar for interest. way he saved the $51 was by doing his moving, after work and after visiting wife and young son in the hospital. He onally transferred the Anderson house- possessions the eighteen miles from the tment to their home in a borrowed auto- ile. It took a good many trips. He can recall certain difficulties with the beds the sofa.

"That $50 wasn't too hard to pay back," Tom. "Not nearly so hard as thinking he loan company showing up to haul off furniture."

"The point is," says Martha, "we got our e."

hese are among the bonds and the mem- that tie Martha and Tom together. se and their first day at home with dy. And the books 've read in the eve- s, and the friends 've entertained at sional inexpensive et suppers. Even cabinet radio that ds near the sofa has ory: it was a com- al purchase. Mar- short-lived job ided half of the Tom paid the half. Numbered eir memories, too, ng an important , is their only va- n trip—a highly nventional jour- It happened when dy was six months They wanted to off the first grand- to Tom's parents down in Southern Illinois. They couldn't afford to pay for first-class tickets. And they couldn't squeeze aboard Chicago's crowded day coaches or busses. So they took to the road, baby and baggage and all, and thumbed their way for 200 miles. For them, it was fun.

Working together, dividing their tasks, Martha and Tom draw strength from each other. Of course, as times improved, the financial struggle grew easier. Tom's weekly wages rose gradually but steadily. Their second son, Petey, who put in his appearance before Buddy was two years old, met a cordial welcome. Two babies were little more trouble than one. When the parents went out they simply took both kids along; if they dropped into a movie, well, they had two laps. Usually in those days they could even manage church, although their church is several miles from the house and the Sunday bus schedule is bad. That pleasant sense of freedom, both admit, has temporarily vanished now that Baby Richard's arrival has increased the Anderson small fry to three. No parents have more than two laps!

Richard was born last August during the time when Tom served in the Army. It was then, if she hadn't known before, that Martha found out that one member of a team couldn't possibly do the work of two, particularly when the absent member was as efficient as Tom.

She had depended on him for so much—for all major decisions. Tom very definitely is the head and boss of his own family, and both of them want it that way. It was Tom who paid the bills, and because he paid the bills it seemed natural that he should do most of the major shopping for food as well as for household articles, with Martha, of course, always consulted. The truth is that Tom enjoys bargaining and shopping, and is a wiser buyer than she is.

He helps a great deal with the youngsters because he loves the company of his three baby boys, and his nighttime work makes possible daytime fun and teaching the young idea how to sprout. Buddy and Petey are healthy, attractive, unusually bright children, who seem to realize that their parents expect a good deal of them and that it is up to them to deliver. Buddy at three promptly returns Petey's toys to Petey on request, fully grasping the difference between "mine" and "thine." Both little boys put their own toys away; each has a battered cardboard carton to serve as his own individual storage place. Martha says serenely that, except for occasional accidents, she expects her children to be toilet trained at fourteen months, and isn't surprised that both Buddy and Petey have obliged her.

Petey, of a more exploratory nature than his elder brother, started simultaneously to walk and to get into things some time back. While Tom was away, Martha, in sheer self-defense, was compelled to keep him confined to his play pen for much longer periods than she or Petey liked. Now that Tom is home Petey can trail around with Buddy in those glorious afternoon hours when daddy isn't sleeping or working at the factory. Tom handles the pair with expertness and ease and firm but warmhearted discipline.

With the two older youngsters off her hands, Martha now has at least two blissfully free hours every afternoon. And she doesn't use that time to catch up with her mending, unless she happens to feel like it. She puts Baby Richard in his crib right after lunch and lies down for a rest herself, or picks up a magazine and reads. Or maybe she takes a long, leisurely bath. It isn't necessary now, as she insists happened on one memorable occasion during Tom's absence, for her to go three whole days without finding the time to wash her own face! With a husband on the premises, she can get away easily for a weekly visit to the beauty parlor.

Tom's return has made Martha's life easier in so many ways. Just the marketing alone, what with the supermarket so far from the house, used to eat up hours of her energy each week. Also when Tom buys the food, Martha points out, there is an extra advantage in that the meals are automatically planned. Sometimes she gives him a list, but often she doesn't. Tom knows what they all like to eat, and is generally in touch with the state of the kitchen supplies.

Martha never was able to learn how to manage the temperamental furnace, which meant the fire was forever demanding attention or going out. The furnace is no mystery to Tom. He handles that job when he gets home from work each morning in five or ten minutes, even though usually he has an interested audience of two. Usually, also, he has the company of two little boys on his shopping expeditions.

Baby Richard is mostly Martha's department. The routine housework is strictly her department. Tom doesn't help with the dishes, the dusting, the cleaning, the laundry, except perhaps for hanging out the heavy things. Routine housework bores him. In his own youth as an only child, there was too much of that.

But Martha promptly handed back to Tom all the household bookkeeping. Keeping track of the bills, making out and mailing checks on the proper date, doesn't sound like much, says Martha ruefully, until you try to do it. Her talents don't run to mathematics. She can

"She'll never develop grace and poise."

"5 minutes too late! The Chief also heard she has a jar of

Peanut Crunch

BRAND

PEANUT BUTTER!"

Enjoy this delightfully different peanut butter that has such a deliciously fresh, peanut-rich flavor! Notice the appetizingly fresh aroma when you open the jar!

Peanut Crunch is prepared in a special way to protect its fresh flavor . . . and made only from the best part of the best peanuts Crisp, "chewy" bits of fresh roasted peanuts all thru it add to the delicious flavor of Peanut Crunch. Ask for a jar at your food store.

Once you try it -- you'll always buy it!

Packed only by

HOLSUM PRODUCTS

Brooklyn-Cleveland-Kansas City

Milwaukee Albany, Ga.

OUR GUESTS WERE DELIGHTED WITH THESE

Time Savers

George Rector
Food Consultant to Wilson & Co.

MOR Salad Plate

Slice MOR and arrange around your favorite vegetable salad.

Glazed MOR Roast and Sweet Potatoes

Place two cans of MOR close together in a shallow baking pan, score in diamond shapes and stud with cloves. Garnish edge with mashed sweet potatoes put through a pastry tube. Glaze and bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., about 25 minutes. Serve with glazed sweet potatoes. Serves 8.

It's Different!

"Easy does it" when there's a can of Wilson's delicious MOR on your "quickie" shelf. Besides being just right for sandwiches and cold snacks, MOR—when baked, fried or broiled—becomes a hearty, stick-to-the-ribs dinner meat.

You'll appreciate MOR's wholesomeness. Every slice has all the important proteins, vitamins and minerals of the good pork meat your dealer cuts for you.

Remember that MOR is different. Proof of this is its rare, distinctive flavor—its master's touch of seasoning.

WILSON'S "QUICKIE" SHELF. With a handy line like this, you're never out on a limb, come dinner time. Devote one shelf to these quality meat products—Wilson's MOR, Corned Beef Hash, Chili, Tamales, Deviled Ham and America's favorite meat flavor, Wilson's B-V, all seasoned the Wilson Way.

The Wilson label protects your table

count on Tom for those emergencies which arise in every house and with every family. When he was gone, just taking down the window screens and putting them away for the winter became a real problem until finally she was able to borrow the services of a neighbor's husband. If Petey breaks his bed, Tom is there to fix it. He planes down the doors that stick, replaces a dangerously worn-out step on the porch, or decides on his own accord that the woodwork needs touching up.

Minor repairs of all kinds strike Tom as sheer recreation. He is an excellent carpenter. In the three years the Andersons have owned their home, Tom has practically built it over, until now the spanking white place is the prettiest and best kept in the whole development.

Out of the vacant space in the attic two new rooms have come into being, with nursery decorations for Buddy accomplished by the hand of his father. Long ago—three whole years ago—the exterior painting was done, also by Tom. Martha assisted on the inside, and it was her idea that all the walls be covered by a glossy hard-wearing paint that would defy the marks of small, grimy hands. It was Tom who planted the fruit trees that haven't yet borne and enclosed the whole yard in a neat picket fence so the youngsters couldn't stray. It was he who built the unoccupied garage and the back-yard chicken houses and runs, where before the Army called he kept four hundred chickens to increase his income and beat the meat shortage.

During his absence Martha was obliged to sell most of the chickens, partly because she lacked the time to look after them and partly because she had no time at all to locate and buy scarce chicken feed. Toward the last, says Martha, the wretched chickens became ravenously hungry; when she appeared with her scraps, they flew in the air and pecked her fingers till they bled. Tom feeds the few survivors of his flock, and is vastly amused by the tale of why the others were sold.

You might get the idea that Martha and Tom think and worry most of the time about economy and thrift, about the serious business of keeping alive. You would be wrong. They figure closely because it is necessary. But Martha has a personal allowance of five dollars a week which she spends as she pleases. Tom never asks where it goes. Says Martha with one of her giggles, "And I never know either!"

Pretty Martha likes clothes. She is crazy about the two-hundred-dollar fur coat Tom bought her two years ago, and expects to like it just as well for several years more. Usually she persuades him to help her select her dresses, but she lets him choose his own suits unassisted, because in masculine attire it seems that their tastes differ. For instance, she frankly hates most of his neckties. But one time she bought him a necktie she fancied herself, and observed that after a tactful interval he passed it on to her father.

The Andersons love swimming and hiking and all outdoor sports, and expect to resume that kind of fun when their boys are a little older. Whenever they can get someone to stay with the youngsters, two or three times a month, they go into Chicago and take in a movie and stage show. They like dancing and don't need to go out for that. Many an evening they turn on the radio and dance in the living room with each other to the music of Guy Lombardo.

Both of them enjoy reading. They belong to a book club, and Martha prefers best-selling novels. Tom's special interest is history. The study of men and men's lives and doings in the past has always fascinated him. History was his major subject when he was attending college classes at night.

At this moment Tom is back from the Army, back with his wife and boys, safely back at his old job with Sherwin-Williams. His weekly income now, counting in a night-time bonus of 7½¢ an hour, amounts to $56.40. This more than meets the Andersons' expenses; they can save as they like to save; they have their present existence happily figured out. You might think, then, that Martha and Tom would be satisfied to stop awhile and draw a long, easy breath.

You would be wrong. The Andersons are contemplating a radical change. Tom's job pays well enough, but they can't see that it leads anywhere, to any eventual and lasting satisfaction. They want something better out of life for themselves and their sons. They haven't forgotten, either of them, Tom's longing to finish his college education and to teach.

Now they are planning to sell their house. Not without some regrets and some wonderful memories, Martha says. But they have a bigger plan—with a future. Tom has found the small farm of his dreams, complete with the inevitable chickens, a team of horses and a heifer. Tom and Martha can realize enough from the sale of their house—Tom's handmade improvements plus the payments they've made on the mortgage have increased their original money investment—to make a substantial down payment on the farm. The balance can be financed through a bank.

Tom is realistic about farming. He's kept up with modern methods since his high school farming days, and he realizes the vital importance of laborsaving machinery. "We plan to use a team of horses to cultivate the land the first year," he explains, but before many crops are brought in he expects to buy some new equipment.

Farming is only part of the Anderson plan. Tom is ready at last to make his college dream come true when they move to the farm. He will attend daytime classes at Thornton Junior College—tuition will be covered under the G. I. plan—while he keeps on working at his present job from midnight until eight in the morning. He guesses he'll work in the farm chores on his "spare" time. Tom isn't frightened at the prospect of figuring his twenty-four-hour day so closely. He likes to keep busy.

But both Tom and Martha feel they will be figuring their two-hundred-and-thirty-dollar-a-month income more closely than their usual policy. They've worked out their future budget this way: Payment on the farm, $65; payment on a new car (this will be an absolute essential when they move), $45; food and milk, $85; insurance, $19; all other expenses, $16. There's not much room to move around in money-wise, but both Tom and Martha say, "We want the farm badly enough to forgo all of our little luxuries for a year or so."

"I suppose," Martha says hesitantly, "this all sounds like an impossible dream to you." But then she turns to Tom—and you can see that these two know their dreams will come true. They have made each plan a reality before, by working hard for each other and with each other. They know it will happen again.

IT'S just like a thermometer rising in the sun. Harold E. Stassen's life, we mean. At twenty-three, he was county attorney. At thirty-one, he was governor of Minnesota. His people liked him—he broke political probabilities by holding that job three times. People also liked his background; good simple family farm life produced a man for politics and for war service in the Navy. Now, at thirty-nine, with the thermometer temporarily stopped by reconversion, he joins millions of other civilians in getting back to his old law job. But, he's called presidential timber for the Republican Party.

Meet the Stassens

How America Lives

IN THE JUNE JOURNAL

Worth reaching for!

THE QUALITY RICE
IN THE
BLUE AND YELLOW PACKAGE

What a pleasant surprise to see that wonderful quality WondeRice again! And what a delight to open the handy spout and see those plump, sparkling clean, whole grains come pouring forth. But remember, WondeRice standards are high, and housewives who appreciate quality quickly exhaust grocers' supplies. So look for WondeRice —it's worth reaching for.

WALTON RICE MILL, INC., STUTTGART, ARK.

WALTON'S WonderRice

The Receipt in Person

Beat 2 egg yolks slightly. Add 1 cup of milk and 2 cups of cream. Cook over hot water until as thick as heavy cream, or when it coats the spoon. Remove from the heat and pour into a bowl. Soften 2 teaspoons of plain, unflavored gelatin in 3 tablespoons of cold water and add to the custard. Stir until dissolved. Cool. Add ¾ cup of sugar to ⅓ cup of water. Boil a minute. Beat 2 egg whites with a little salt until stiff. Add the sugar-and-water sirup to the whites in a fine stream, beating constantly with a wire whip as you add the sirup. Fold into the cooled custard. Add 1 teaspoon of vanilla and 1 cup of dry grated fresh frozen coconut. (If you use a frozen coconut which is packed with the milk, drain it very thoroughly before you use it. The coconut milk may become part of the milk in the custard. Anyway, drain and drain it.) You may use the dry packaged coconut if you can get some. Some have it, some don't. Pour the custard into a freezing tray. Freeze until about ¼ inch around the edge is firm. Beat up light in a chilled bowl with a chilled beater. Then pour into small individual molds. Return to the freezing trays and freeze until firm.

Turn out the coconut-ice-cream molds. Slice the jelly roll thin. Put a coconut-ice-cream mold on each slice of the jelly roll. A frill of whipped cream is a pretty nice job—if you like it.

You will undoubtedly want to keep the millinery theme throughout, so here are directions for making the little bonnet mints.

BONNET MINTS

Make an uncooked fondant as follows: Heat ¼ cup milk. Melt 4 teaspoons of butter or margarine in the milk. Add 3½ cups confectioners' sugar. Mix thoroughly and add 2 or 3 drops of oil of peppermint. Knead the fondant several minutes with your hands. The mints may be plain white or you may divide the fondant and add vegetable coloring. Those in the picture were divided into three parts; one part plain white, one part pink and one part pale green, tinted with coloring. Keep the separate portions of fondant in a damp (not wet) towel to prevent it from becoming dry and crusty.

To make the little hats, pinch off a small piece of the fondant, roll into a smooth ball, flatten out into flat round disks (about 1½ inches in diameter) on wax paper. This is the brim. For the crown pinch off about half as much as you used for the brim and mold with the fingers to a small drum-shaped piece. Lay this in the center of the brim. When all the mints are shaped, decorate them with ornamental icing, using the smallest round tube of the pastry-decorating set, and make a ribbon band and bow around the crown. Color the ornamental frosting to contrast with the color of the hat. Tiny flowers may be simulated by using the icing and the smallest rosette tube.

To make the ornamental frosting for the "trimming," put 2 egg whites in a bowl and add 2 tablespoons of confectioners' sugar. Using an electric mixer or a rotary beater, beat 2 or 3 minutes until fluffy. Repeat until 1 cup of sugar has been added, adding 2 teaspoons of lemon juice a few drops at a time as the mixture thickens. Now continue adding confectioners' sugar a spoonful at a time, beating it in with a spoon, until the mixture will hold its shape. Take out portions of the icing and color as desired. Keep a damp cloth over the icing bowls as you work, to prevent drying. And I might add that if the sugar is at all lumpy better sift it first, as the smallest lump will stop up your pastry tube and spoil your designs.

Finish the finale. The luncheon is over The young people have gone. Stirring the leaves in the dogwood, the bluebird builds her nest. Through the open windows drifts the ineffable fragrance of lilacs, and the patio is filled with the delicate odor of the rose trees and sweet violets.

You grow up the day you have your first real laugh—at yourself.
—ETHEL BARRYMORE.

Pabst-ett's
cheddar cheese flavor answers menu problems!

No question about it. Pabst-ett's richly satisfying, mellow cheddar cheese flavor will please young and old. It's a cheese food you can serve 100 ways... in tasty sandwiches, salads, sauces and appetizers. Pabst-ett melts, spreads, slices, toasts to perfection. It's highly nourishing . . . easily digested by children. Have Pabst-ett handy for all occasions. Phenix Pabst-ett Co., Chicago.

OTHER PHENIX PRODUCTS
Phenix Bouillon Cubes
Phenix Processed Cheeses
Phenix Cream Spreads (7 varieties)

PABST-ETT . . . the delicious cheddar cheese food!

Too tubby for your hubby? Better reduce the Ry-Krisp way!

Oh, happy day . . . when you get the Ry-Krisp plan, and find you can enjoy reducing! Just choose meals you like from long lists of low-calorie foods (in quantities given), have Ry-Krisp as bread, and watch fat disappear, as other normal overweights have done.

Ry-Krisp is a delicious bread! Crisp, golden-brown, wafer-thin. Has hearty whole-rye flavor that makes all foods taste extra-good. Has vitamin $B_1$ and regulating minerals to help you gain sparkle. Only 23 calories per double-square wafer.

FREE! "DESIGN FOR REDUCING" GIVES REDUCING PLANS FOR MEN AND WOMEN. WRITE RY-KRISP, 10 CHECKERBOARD SQUARE, ST. LOUIS 2, MISSOURI.

You'll be enchanted with the velvet blend you get when you use super-smooth Carnation Milk. Everyday soups, sauces, salad dressings, frozen desserts, and beverages—all milk-rich dishes—are transformed, as if by magic. Here's a wonderful recipe to prove it . . . and, incidentally, to lead you to the exciting discovery that economical Carnation Milk whips, beautifully!

VELVET TOMATO SOUP with WHIPPED CARNATION

Easy to make and "out of this world" to taste!

1 can condensed tomato soup
1 tall can Carnation Milk
½ cup Carnation for whipping
Dash of salt

Heat milk and soup separately—slowly to prevent scorching. When hot (not boiling) blend soup into milk. Don't pour milk into soup, as this will cause curdling. Season to taste. Serve immediately, plain or with whipped Carnation. Serves 4.

Whipped Carnation: Chill to ice-crystal stage; whip rapidly in cold bowl with cold beater. Whipping triples bulk. 1 tablespoon lemon juice gives a stiffer whip. For soups, add dash of salt if desired.

WHEREVER MILK OR CREAM IS CALLED FOR, USE CARNATION, THE WORLD'S LARGEST-SELLING BRAND OF EVAPORATED MILK.

"From Contented Cows"

© CARNATION CO.

FOR MUSIC with a velvet blend—the new "Contented Hour," Monday evenings. For daytime drama—"Lone Journey," Mon. thru Fri. See newspapers for NBC stations.

FOR BABY, ask your doctor about a formula prepared with safe, nourishing, digestible Carnation Milk, fortified with vitamin D—universally approved for babies and children.

NEVER A DULL MEAL

By Sheila Hibben

GENE FENN
Sheila Hibben

IN writing these menus for other people to live by, I have misgivings. I have never eaten according to somebody else's formulas and I can't imagine somebody's taking a fancy to mine. Happily, a feeling of too great responsibility is lightened by the certainty that nobody will eat by them in the strictest sense. What makes a successful menu depends upon many imponderables. No compiler of gastronomic charts can guess the day on which tired bodies need to be eased with extra-comforting simplicity, or the gaiety of what moment should be reflected in the food. The most these schedules for eating can do is to open up a new train of thought. If the dishes I have set down start you thinking about new harmonies of flavor and remembering old ones, if they prod you gently into a realization of your powers, then they have indeed done a good work.

Menus

★ ★ ★ MONDAY ★ ★ ★

Breakfast

Orange Juice
Bacon and Broiled Tomatoes
Buttered Toast  Strawberry Jam
Coffee

Lunch

Eggs Gratiné with Mushrooms*
Leek Salad*
(In all cases the luncheon salad is to be served with the main dish.)
French Bread
Iced Tea* or Iced Coffee

Dinner

Broiled Beefsteak
String Beans in Mustard Dressing*
(If you feel like making this a more hearty meal, add fried hominy strips.)
French Rolls
Apple-Meringue Squares with Whipped Cream*

★ ★ ★ TUESDAY ★ ★ ★

Breakfast

Orange Juice
Egg Timbales with Tomato Sauce*
Buttered English Muffins  Strained Honey
Coffee

Lunch

Fish Salad*
Rye Bread spread with Herb Butter*
Rich Rennet Dessert with Raspberry Sirup and Cream*
Iced Tea or Iced Coffee

Dinner

Cold Beet Soup*
Stuffed Pancakes Baked in Cream*
Green Peas
Fresh Fruits topped with Pineapple Sherbet*

★ ★ ★ WEDNESDAY ★ ★ ★

Breakfast

Orange Juice
Deviled Lambs' Kidneys
Toast  Orange Marmalade
Coffee

Lunch

French Omelet with Tuna-Fish Filling*
Spinach Salad on Garden Lettuce*
French Bread
Iced Tea or Iced Coffee

Dinner

Boiled Corned Beef
Young Cabbage in Sour Cream*
Corn-Meal Muffins
Strawberry Bavarian

★ ★ ★ THURSDAY ★ ★ ★

Breakfast

Orange Juice
Broiled Bloater with Lemon Butter and Chives
Dry Toast  Marmalade
Coffee

Lunch

Soft Eggs on Mound of Vegetable Salad
Buttered Pumpernickel
Iced Tea or Iced Coffee

Dinner
(with two guests)

Cold Spanish Soup*
Steamed Chicken in Egg Sauce*
Sautéed Zucchinis*
French Rolls
Cheese Pie*

PROBABLY an awful lot of you know Sheila Hibben and all her work. She does food stuff for such publications as Vogue and the w.k. New Yorker. She is the mouth-waterer who wrote the National Cook Book and newer Kitchen Manual.

One thing I like about her is that she goes in for fish balls, baked beans and Colonial architecture. She has the right slant about all three.

And now, quote, Given the materials America has, there should not only be extraordinarily good cooking; there should not be any bad cooking. Unquote.

That's telling them, Sheila.

Ann Batchelder

★ ★ ★ FRIDAY ★ ★ ★

Breakfast

Orange Juice
Fried Eggs with Brown Butter
Bacon Muffins Coffee

Lunch

Gnocchi* (made with yesterday's chicken)
Buttered and Toasted Swedish Milk Wafers
Iced Tea or Iced Coffee

Dinner

Baked Fillets of Flounder*
Swedish Cucumber Salad
French Bread
Meringued Baked Custard*

★ ★ ★ SATURDAY ★ ★ ★

Breakfast

Orange Juice
Corned-Beef Hash
(from Wednesday's dinner)
Buttered Toast Raspberry Jam
Coffee

Lunch

Spaghetti with Scallions*
Sliced Tomatoes Sprinkled with Fresh Herbs
Iced Tea or Iced Coffee

Dinner

Armenian Lamb-and-Squash Stew* Rice
French Rolls
Stewed Peaches with Half-Frozen Cream
(Substitute strawberries if peaches are not in season.)

★ ★ ★ SUNDAY ★ ★ ★

Late Breakfast

Strawberries with Their Caps On Finnan Haddie Baked in Milk
Hot Rolls Honey in Comb
Coffee

Tea

(around four o'clock)

Buttered Toasted and Buttered Rolls (left over from breakfast) with a Dab of Mushrooms Mixed in Sour Cream on Each.
Delicate Laminated Smoked Salmon Wrapped Around Short Lengths of Italian Bread Sticks
Tea (hot or iced, depending on the weather).

Late Supper

(Depending upon the weather)

Minestrone*
French Bread with Garlic Butter or
A Salad of white beans, tomatoes, radishes, green pepper, scallions, shredded raw carrots and water cress mixed with French dressing.
Pumpernickel

EGGS GRATINÉ WITH MUSHROOMS

(for two)

Wash, peel and slice ¼ pound mushrooms and sauté in 3 tablespoons butter or margarine until tender; add 2 thin slices onion, minced, and cook until it begins to color. Stir in 3 tablespoons flour and, when well blended, pour in 1½ cups chicken broth. Add 2 teaspoons finely chopped parsley, 1 tablespoon chopped celery and ¼ cup cream. Season with salt and pepper; let simmer ten minutes. Turn into a shallow baking dish. Break 4 eggs and slide, one by one, from a saucer into the mushroom mixture; sprinkle the whites with salt and pepper. Sprinkle grated Parmesan cheese over all and moisten with melted butter or margarine. Bake in moderate oven (350° F.) for fifteen minutes, or until whites are set firm and cheese is a delicate brown.

LEEK SALAD

Allow 4 leeks to a person. Cut off the green tops of leeks to within two inches of the white part. Cut down to within an inch of root end, so that all grit can be washed away in running water. Tie together with a piece of cotton string to prevent falling to pieces in cooking. Cook in a large amount of salted water with a few grains of baking soda for twenty minutes, or until tender. Drain well, remove string and, when cool, chill thoroughly in refrigerator. Serve very cold with French dressing on chilled plates.

ICED TEA

To vary iced tea, add carbonated water, fresh limes and plenty of ice cubes to freshly made strong tea.

STRING BEANS WITH MUSTARD DRESSING

(for two)

Break off both ends of ½ pound string beans and cut in two, lengthwise. Wash, drain and plunge in boiling salted water to cover. Cook, uncovered, twenty-five minutes. Drain. Bring ⅓ cup milk to a boil. Beat together 1 egg yolk, ½ teaspoon dry

Easy "Fancy-Dress" Tricks for 2 Everyday Dishes

DO AS famous New Orleans cooks do! Give everyday dishes a special twist that turns them into thrilling new treats. Just use the same fine Wesson Oil those good cooks use—and learn some of the easy tricks, like the two below. Light, delicate-flavored Wesson Oil is so delicious for salads, so convenient for cooking... you'll find it's the most helpful food in your kitchen!

HASH GOURMET—A REAL DELICACY!

COMBINE 2 cups chopped cooked meat, 3 cups chopped boiled potatoes and 1 small onion, chopped. Season with salt and pepper; moisten with gravy or cream (about ½ cup). Brown both sides in just enough Wesson Oil to cover bottom of pan. (Note how delicately Wesson browns the hash. Wesson is easily digestible—ideal for frying!) Roll small portions of hash in paper-thin pancakes; serve at once.

1 cup sifted flour
1¼ teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
1 egg, well beaten
1 cup milk
1 tablespoon Wesson Oil

Sift flour, baking powder, and salt. Mix egg, milk, and Wesson Oil; stir into dry ingredients, making a smooth batter. Make thin pancakes on hot, well-oiled griddle, turning only once. Add more oil to griddle occasionally, as needed. Serves 4. (Whenever any recipe calls for melted shortening—use pure, sparkling Wesson Oil. Such a time-saver... just pour to measure, pour to mix!)

COOL, "MINTY" ORANGE JULEP SALAD

Add chilled orange sections to your tossed green salad. Serve with deliciously different Wesson Mint Dressing.

WESSON MINT DRESSING

1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon sugar
¼ teaspoon pepper
½ teaspoon dry mustard
½ teaspoon paprika
¼ cup vinegar
¾ cup Wesson Oil
1 teaspoon finely chopped mint leaves

Mix and shake in a jar. Then taste for yourself why more American women use Wesson than any other brand of salad oil! Wesson Oil is so light, so delicate, it lets the savory blend of your seasonings stand out, clear and full-flavored... never drowns them under a heavy, oily taste.

ASK YOUR GROCER FOR PURE, DELICIOUS WESSON OIL TODAY!

Wesson Oil

FOR SALADS & COOKING

NEW ORLEANS

mustard and 2 teaspoons butter or margarine. Pour in the hot milk. Cook in a double boiler until thick, stirring constantly. Add 2 teaspoons vinegar, salt to taste and the string beans. Let all cook together three minutes. The sauce will be slightly curdled, which is as it should be.

APPLE-MERINGUE SQUARES
(for two)

Lay 4 slices of pound cake, or any plain butter cake (spongecake won't do), on a flat ovenproof dish that has been well greased. Spread a generous quantity of unstrained, sweetened applesauce over the slices and dust lightly with cinnamon. Make a stiff meringue and spread over the apples. Strew with blanched almonds, cut in two lengthwise, and bake in a slow oven (250° F.) until the meringue is firm and a delicate brown. Serve slightly warm with sweetened whipped cream flavored with vanilla.

EGG TIMBALES WITH TOMATO SAUCE
(for two)

Beat 3 eggs, add ½ cup cream, a slight scraping of onion juice, ½ teaspoon finely chopped parsley, ¼ teaspoon salt and dash of Tabasco. Turn into greased custard cups. Place the cups in a pan of hot water and bake in a moderate oven (350° F.) until firm. Turn out onto a hot platter and surround with unstrained tomato sauce.

FISH SALAD

Cook bass, scrod or sea trout in a highly seasoned court bouillon. Let the fish cool in the liquid in which it has boiled, then take out and discard skin and bones. Break up the fish a little with a fork and bind with a well-seasoned mayonnaise. Add ¼ cup of chopped celery, the white part of 1 scallion (chopped) and ½ teaspoonful of capers to every cupful of fish. If there are any string beans in mustard dressing left from Monday's dinner, they will make a good addition. Season generously with coarsely ground black pepper and with salt; form into a mound on a chilled platter garnished with hearts of garden lettuce, and surround the fish mound with cold sliced boiled beets.

HERB-FLAVORED BUTTER

Chop chives, fresh tarragon and summer savory (the dried won't do) and mix thoroughly with unsalted butter. Spread on thinly sliced rye bread and serve with salad.

RICH RENNET DESSERT WITH RASPBERRY SIRUP

Make a rennet dessert according to directions on package, substituting ⅓ cream for the quantity of milk called for, and flavoring with vanilla. Let set in a glass compote dish and chill in refrigerator until very cold. Mix ½ cup of sugar with 1 cup of fresh raspberries, bring slowly to the boiling point, remove from heat, cool and chill in refrigerator. Just before serving, strain the raspberry juice over the dessert. Serve with cream.

COLD BEET SOUP
(for two or three)

Add the chopped white part of 3 scallions, 1 tablespoon chopped parsley and 3 tablespoons chopped celery to 2½ cups strong chicken broth. Grate in 1 peeled raw beet and ⅓ small peeled cucumber, cover and let stand in the refrigerator for three hours. Boil 3 medium-sized potatoes, drain and press through a very fine sieve. Add ⅓ cup cream and chill thoroughly. Strain the broth mixture and combine with potatoes and cream. Add a squeeze of lime juice and season with salt and pepper. Pour into chilled soup plates and sprinkle with chopped chives.

STUFFED PANCAKES IN CREAM
(for two or three)

Braise the tail and other leftover bits of Monday's beefsteak with seasoning vegetables (onion, carrot, celery, parsley) until perfectly tender. Discard all fat and gristle and chop moderately fine (do not grind). Make a well-seasoned moist hash of meat,

NOW-more ScotTowels than ever before!

MORE BEING MADE . . . and larger quantities now going to dealers—that's today's happy news about ScotTowels!

These are those towels you don't have to wash! Marvelous "Thirsty Fibre" towels, clean and fresh, that you use once —then throw away.

ScotTowels help safeguard health . . . cut down laundering . . . and make a dozen daily kitchen chores easier for only a penny a day.

150 absorbent ScotTowels to a roll. Sealed against dust and handling. Scott Paper Company, Chester, Pa.

SAVE WASHING! A ScotTowel for a bib protects your baby's clothes from cod-liver oil and fruit stains—and you just throw the ScotTowel away after use.

SAVE HEALTH! Fresh, individual towels help to keep colds and other infections from spreading through the whole family —help to protect health.

Made Strong to Work Hard!

Trade Marks "ScotTowels" and "Thirsty Fibre" Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

SOON! SOON! SOON!

Soon you'll be enjoying this superb, zestful flavor again. Look for it on your grocer's shelves.

THE SANDWICH SPREAD OF THE NATION
Branded with the devil . . . but fit for the gods!

Pays For Itself! Gets ½ More Juice - Extra Vitamin

■ Bid goodbye to huff-&-puff, tug-&-pull juic ing! Flick ■ switch—glasses fill with juice i half the time! So much more juice it's like ge ting 4 free oranges in every dozen!

More healthful juice, too—because the Do meyer Roto-Spin strainer passes those tin flavor-filled, vitamin-filled particles! Reall like drinking a whole sun-ripened orange!

A joy to care for, too! Simply lift off top- rinse under faucet to clean instantly. The merely replace—it's ready for re-use. Whi enameled case—wipes sparkling clean. Super motor — pressure can't stop it. 110-volt, 60-cycle. $13.50 DENVER, WEST $14.50

DORMEYER CORPORATIO
4300 N. Kilpatrick Ave., Chico

eking it out with ¼ pound of chopped cooked mushrooms. Make a very thin French pancake batter and let stand several hours. Fry the cakes, one at a time, in a lightly buttered skillet, making them about three and a half inches in diameter and almost paper-thin. Put a spoonful of the beefsteak hash in the middle of each pancake and roll up into cylinders. Arrange in a shallow greased baking dish and pour a thin white sauce over them. Sprinkle with grated Parmesan cheese and bake in a moderate oven (350° F.) until the cheese is lightly browned.

FRESH FRUITS TOPPED WITH SHERBET

Peel and slice peaches, and wash and cap strawberries. Sprinkle with sugar and let stand at room temperature until the sugar melts. Mix carefully with a fork, turn into a glass compote dish, and put in refrigerator to chill. Make a fresh pineapple or orange sherbet in freezing unit of refrigerator. Just before serving, pile the sherbet over the fruit. Serve on dessert plates which have been well chilled.

How people love money, and how they abuse other people for loving it!
—E. W. HOWE: Country Town Sayings (Crane & Co., Topeka, Kansas).

TUNA-FISH OMELET
(for two or three)

Drain all oil from a small can of tuna; break up the fish with a fork and add ½ cup of cream, a dash of Tabasco, salt to taste, and 1 teaspoonful of chives. Heat over a low fire and keep just below the boiling point while you make the omelet.

Make a French omelet, taking care to keep it "runny." When the bottom side is delicately browned, spread the tuna mixture over half the omelet, fold over the other half and slide onto a warm platter. Serve at once.

SPINACH SALAD

Boil spinach in the usual way, adding a clove of garlic cut in two. Discard the garlic, drain the spinach thoroughly, and serve icy cold on garden lettuce with a garlic-flavored French dressing.

CABBAGE IN SOUR CREAM
(for two)

Shred a rather small firm cabbage and wash well. Plunge into a saucepan containing a large amount of boiling water, add a very small pinch of baking soda, and boil briskly for three minutes. Drain, put back in saucepan with more boiling water and boil, uncovered, ten minutes. Drain thoroughly. Put over heat with ½ cup of sour cream, 1½ teaspoons of sugar, salt to taste, and a dash of Tabasco. Cook until the cream is thick and smooth.

SOFT EGGS ON VEGETABLE SALAD

Pour boiling water over eggs, cover and simmer for four and a half minutes. Drain, crack the shells slightly and let stand in very cold water for ten minutes to make shelling easy. Shell and chill in refrigerator. Make a vegetable salad of boiled corn cut from the ear or canned whole-kernel corn, celery, scallions, slivers of raw carrot and cooked green peas or string beans. Bind with a highly seasoned mayonnaise and form into a mound with a flattened top on a chilled platter. Arrange the eggs on top of the salad and dust them with paprika; border the mound with thinly sliced boiled beets and garnish with water cress.

COLD SPANISH SOUP
(for four)

Mix 3 cups strong soup stock, ¾ cup tomato juice and 1 small onion, chopped, together and let stand in the refrigerator for two hours. Strain; add 1 cucumber, peeled and grated; 1 large tomato, peeled and chopped; ½ small green pepper, chopped

(Continued on Page 197)

Nut Chocolate Pudding that's My-T-Fine

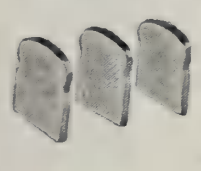
Easy recipe for Chocolate "Sugar-Cookie" Pudding: Prepare My-T-Fine Nut Chocolate Pudding according to simple directions on the package. Arrange three sugar cookies of any preferred flavor in shallow sherbet, spoon in pudding so that cookies remain upright. Top with whipped cream before serving.

delicious My-T-Fine Desserts
Nut Chocolate
Vanilla
Butterscotch
Chocolate
Lemon Pie Filling

Derby Barbecue Sauce is a man's flavor that wise wives use to make good food better, ordinary food exciting! If you're a good cook now, Derby Barbecue Sauce will make you a genius. Send for Free Recipe Book.

GLASER Derby Barbecue Sauce

Steak Sauce... Barbecue Sauce... Hot Sauce
Worcestershire Sauce... Chop Suey Sauce
GLASER, CRANDELL CO., Chicago 8, Dept. BS

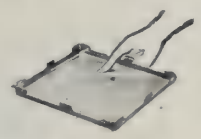


FIRST AID FOR CLEVER COOKS

Toast to your taste every time!

3 SPECIAL FEATURES OF NEW G-E AUTOMATIC TOASTER

1. New control makes every slice exactly "as ordered."



You just set the knob to light, dark, or medium—and you get light, dark, or medium—as ordered. Makes no difference how many slices you make. Makes no difference how often you change the order. A new G-E control device makes every slice as you want it.

2. Pops up your toast OR keeps it Warm!

Just set the knob to "Pops Up" or "Keeps Warm" and this G-E wonder obeys. Just like having a little warming oven built into your toaster. Toast as you want—when you want it!

3. Snap-In Crumb Tray makes Cleaning Easy!

The G-E Toaster has the handiest snap-in cleaning tray you ever saw! No more stale crumbs inside the toaster. No more acrobatics to get them out. Quick and easy to clean.

See this modern household helper soon at your nearest Dealer's.
General Electric Co., Bridgeport, Conn.

G-E Automatic Toaster

GENERAL ELECTRIC

Garden-fresh Vitamin-rich vegetables

BUY AT MODERN MARKETS WHERE GARDEN-FRESHNESS AND ESSENTIAL VITAMINS ARE CONSTANTLY PROTECTED WITH

Ice

You know that there is all the difference in the world between really fresh vegetables and the kind you get all too frequently in the stores. Really fresh vegetables are crisp, appetizing to look at, flavorful and delicious to eat. They are also rich in the vitamins so essential to health.

VEGETABLES LOSE THEIR ESSENTIAL VITAMINS QUICKLY!

It has recently been established by extensive scientific tests that as vegetables lose their crispness and color they also lose many of their essential vitamins. Laboratory tests prove that some of our favorite vegetables lose vitamins at an alarming rate during the first few hours in the store—unless they are constantly protected with ICE.

Progressive markets guard against the loss of freshness and loss of vitamins by bedding their vegetables in pure, sparkling crushed ICE. Thus protected they are crisp, delicious, garden-fresh, vitamin-rich!

HOW ABOUT YOUR MARKET?

Perhaps your own grocer does not realize the importance of icing his vegetables. A hint from you may be all that is needed. His ice company will gladly give him all the facts—show him that he need not buy expensive equipment to give you and your family this modern health protecting service.

* * *

Write for your FREE copy of "Nature's Treasury of Health". It will help you plan vitamin-rich meals.

FOR BETTER LIVING USE PURE, CRYSTAL-CLEAR ICE IN YOUR HOME

BE SURE TO SEE THE NEW ICE REFRIGERATORS

Just as ICE guards the garden-freshness and vitamin-richness of vegetables in up-to-date stores, so ice—in a modern air-conditioned ICE refrigerator—gives them and all other foods complete, scientific protection in the home. Be sure to investigate all its advantages.

HAVE YOU SEEN THE HANDY, INEXPENSIVE ICE CHESTS?

Mighty useful for relieving crowded refrigerators, keeping ice for beverage use and cooling bottled drinks quickly. Great for parties! Cost very little. Ask your ice company about this modern convenience.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF ICE INDUSTRIES, 1706 L STREET, N. W., WASHINGTON 6, D. C.

(Continued from Page 195)

fine; 2 tablespoons salad oil; 2 teaspoons fresh lime juice; 1 large soda cracker, rolled; 1 tablespoon sugar. Season highly with salt and Tabasco. Just before serving, put in a close-fitting jar and shake until the oil becomes blended with other ingredients. Serve very cold in chilled soup plates.

STEAMED CHICKEN WITH YELLOW SAUCE

Heat 2 tablespoons butter or margarine in deep soup kettle and in it lightly brown 1 roasting chicken, which has been rubbed with salt and pepper and trussed as for roasting. Add 1 large sliced onion and 1 carrot. When the onion begins to color, pour in 2 cups boiling water. Add 1 stalk of celery, 2 sprigs parsley and ¼ bay leaf; cover and simmer until the chicken is tender.

Sauté 3 finely chopped scallions in butter or margarine, add 1 scant tablespoon flour and cook over very low heat until the scallions are tender but not brown. Strain in 1½ cups of the broth in which the chicken has cooked (from which all grease has been skimmed), add 1 tablespoon chopped celery and simmer ten minutes. Beat 2 egg yolks with 2 tablespoons cream; add 6 tablespoons cream to the sauce and bring to the boiling point. Add the egg-yolk mixture, beating hard while the sauce thickens for a minute or two. Add salt and pepper to taste, remove from the heat and add 1 tablespoon lemon juice. Carve the chicken entirely away from the carcass, arrange on a hot platter, and strain the sauce over all.

Respect the child. Be not too much his parent.
—EMERSON.

SAUTÉED ZUCCHINIS

Peel zucchinis, slice fairly thin, and soak in cold water for five minutes. Drain and sauté in butter or salad oil and chopped onion (allowing ¼ small onion to each zucchini). When lightly browned, pour in enough strong soup stock to cover, season with salt and pepper, and simmer until the zucchinis are soft and the stock entirely cooked away.

CHEESE PIE

Combine 1 pint creamed cottage cheese and ⅓ cup cream, drop in 2 eggs, one by one, and beat hard. Add 1 tablespoon melted butter or margarine, ¼ cup sugar and 3 tablespoons blanched almonds, coarsely chopped. Mix well. Turn into a layer-cake tin lined with pie paste, and bake in hot oven (450° F.) ten minutes; lower heat to 350° F. and continue baking thirty minutes. While still hot, sprinkle generously with cinnamon and powdered sugar. Let stand about forty minutes before serving.

PASTRY FOR CHEESE PIE

Sift together 1 cup flour, ⅓ teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon baking powder (scant), and 1 tablespoon sugar (scant). Work in 3 tablespoons butter or margarine and stir in 1 beaten egg and just enough milk to make a workable dough. Roll out to ¼ inch thickness and then fold over on itself, making three layers. Repeat twice. Chill in refrigerator one hour. Roll out to ⅛ inch thickness and line a layer-cake pan with the pastry.

GNOCCHI
(for two)

Bring 2 cups of milk to a boil, add ½ teaspoon of salt, and dribble in ⅓ cup of quick-cooking farina. Cook in a double boiler for twenty minutes. Remove from heat, add yolk of an egg, and beat well. Spread on a large platter, let cool, and cut into squares like fudge. Grease a shallow baking dish, lay in half the quantity of squares (leaving an empty space in the middle), sprinkle generously with grated Parmesan cheese and dot with butter; lay on remaining squares and add more cheese and butter. Cover with a thin white sauce and bake in a moderate oven (350° F.) until a delicate brown.

Make a creamed-chicken hash of the remains of yesterday's chicken and, when the gnocchi is done, turn the hash into the empty space in the middle of the baking dish. Serve at once in dish in which cooked.

BAKED FILLETS OF FLOUNDER

Wash 6 fillets of flounder, dry thoroughly and rub with salt and pepper. Lay in a long shallow baking dish which has been well greased. Heat 2 tablespoons butter or margarine in a saucepan, sauté lightly 2 scallions, chopped, add 2 tablespoons flour and cook until the scallions just begin to color. Pour in 1½ cups chicken broth gradually. Add 1 tablespoon finely chopped celery, 2 teaspoons finely chopped parsley and 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce. Simmer gently for ten minutes; add ½ cup cream and 1 teaspoon chopped chives. Season with salt and pepper and bring just to the boiling point. Pour the sauce over the fillets, and bake at 400° F. twenty-five minutes.

MERINGUED BAKED CUSTARD

Make a baked custard by any standard recipe, and line a greased baking dish with caramel before turning in the custard mixture. Bake until firm. Set in refrigerator to chill thoroughly. On a greased cooky sheet spread meringue mixture the size of the opening of the dish in which the custard is baked, strew with blanched slivered almonds, and bake in very slow oven (225° F.) for fifty minutes. Remove from pan with a spatula, cool and, just before serving, place on top of the baked custard. The meringue is baked separately because the custard is improved by being chilled, which would toughen the meringue.

SPAGHETTI WITH SCALLIONS

Boil very fine spaghetti the usual way. Drain and let cold water run through it. Heat a generous quantity of butter or margarine in a saucepan and add to it five coarsely chopped scallions (green part as well as white). Do not let the scallions fry in the fat, but merely wilt; add spaghetti and let reheat in the fat. Add an extravagant grinding of black pepper, and salt to taste. Serve with grated Parmesan cheese.

ARMENIAN LAMB-AND-SQUASH STEW
(for two)

Have the butcher cut 1 pound shoulder of lamb in medium-sized pieces. Rub them with salt and pepper and sauté in 1 tablespoon salad oil with 2 medium-sized onions, sliced, until a light brown. Add 1 clove garlic, chopped fine, and continue cooking for two minutes. Pour in 2 cups boiling water and add 3 tablespoons chopped parsley, ¼ cup sliced okra and ¼ teaspoon thyme. Simmer, covered, for one hour. Peel 2 small summer squash and quarter them, lengthwise. Parboil in salted water for four minutes. Drain and add to the stew, continuing the cooking until the squash are very soft. Five minutes before serving, skim off the fat from the stew, mix a teaspoonful of it with 1 teaspoon flour and return to the stew. Season to taste with salt and pepper and turn onto a hot serving dish.

MINESTRONE
(for six)

Wash 1 cup dried white beans thoroughly in several waters and soak overnight in 6 cups of cold water. Put to simmer in water in which soaked, and cook, covered, two to three hours, or until tender. Fry 2 onions, minced, 1 clove garlic, minced, and ½ green pepper, minced, in 2 tablespoons bacon fat until tender but not brown. Pour in the liquid in which beans have cooked and half of the beans; the remaining half add after running through a sieve. Add ⅓ cup chopped celery; ⅓ cup chopped parsley; 2 carrots; 1 small summer squash; 2 tomatoes, peeled and chopped; 1 small white turnip, diced; ½ bay leaf; ¼ teaspoon thyme. Season with salt and pepper and simmer one hour, adding more water if soup becomes too thick. Throw in 1 cup shredded cabbage and cook for another hour. Just before serving, fish out carrots and squash, mash them through a sieve and return to soup pot. Add 1 cup cooked spaghetti, let boil one minute, and serve with grated Parmesan cheese.

PICNIC RECIPES at home or afield

BESIDE A BABBLING BROOK... or in your own home... picnic foods are fun for the whole family. For something new and exciting any time—anywhere—try these special lemon recipes:

COTTAGE DRESSING—for Potato Salad... The dressing is the "top secret" of a good potato salad. This dressing is new and delicious... a real salad oil saver. Combine 1 cup cottage cheese, 1 beaten egg, ¼ cup salad oil, ¼ cup fresh lemon juice, salt and pepper. If cottage cheese is dry, add a bit of milk. Blend with your favorite potato salad ingredients to serve six.

BARBECUE SAUCE... Often the simplest sauce is the tastiest. Here's one you can stir up in a hurry: ½ cup chili sauce, ¼ cup lemon juice, 2 teaspoons prepared mustard, 1 teaspoon grated onion. Use liberally on hot dogs, hamburgers, and other barbecued meats.

LEMON SHERBET... Frozen desserts are a picnic tradition. This one is easy, smooth and refreshing. Mix 1 scant cup sugar, 2 cups milk and 2 egg yolks with ⅓ cup lemon juice and 1 tablespoon grated lemon peel. Freeze quite firm – about 1 hour in refrigerator tray. Beat 2 egg whites stiff, gradually adding 2 tablespoons sugar. Combine 1 cup whipped top milk with egg whites. Beat semi-frozen ingredients until fluffy and fold in egg white mixture. Freeze until firm. Perfect for hand freezer, too.

LEMONADE... No picnic or summer meal is complete without lemonade, so better have enough for seconds. But lemonade is more than a refreshing drink... it provides health values your family needs. Lemons are an excellent source of vitamins C and "P", a good source of $B_1$. They aid digestion, alkalinize. Sunkist's famous Lemon Recipe Book has over 100 lemon recipes. It's free. Write Sunkist, Sec. 205, Los Angeles 55, California.

Sunkist Lemons in trademarked tissue wrappers are the finest from 14,500 cooperating California and Arizona citrus growers.

FOR GOOD HEALTH AND GOOD FLAVOR

Sunkist
California Lemons

CONVERSATION PIECE

Honey sherbet is a springtime dessert that will get rave notices right on through summer. It's also the answer to a dwindling sugar supply.

PHOTOS BY STUART

By Ruth Mills Teague

WHATEVER artistic instincts we own are apt to lift up their heads in May—it is the time one feels an urge to go all out for beauty. So why not a meal to dazzle the eye—beautiful flowers, a beautiful table, beautiful food? The food especially—food that simply can't help being handsome. Of course, the "can't help" is the essential point. I'm suggesting no nonsense about fancy decorations, doodads and such. It's intrinsic beauty we're seeking, in cooking as in any other art, and "good as it is beautiful" must be our motto.

All right? Then here's our menu.

The hors d'oeuvres can be a little on the elaborate side this time, since we'll omit a first course. An assortment of ribbon and pin-wheel sandwiches, olives, bite-size pieces of stuffed celery and cradles of deviled egg will make a delicious and exciting prelude.

For the pièce de résistance, Pâtés de Jambon with Orange Sauce Amandine for them to swim in. Good? Beautiful? Both. And with it a gorgeous salad of peas, carrots, crisp cucumber slices and a delicious sour-cream dressing. Golden-brown toast sticks, rubbed with a little garlic, if you share my feeling about garlic, will complete the main course.

The dessert will be honey-fruit sherbet, made in the refrigerator, and with it we'll serve chewy date bars.

(Continued on Page 200)

Beautiful flowers, a beautiful table, beautiful food—what more welcome trio for your first spring party. Easy for the hostess to do, too.

For the pièce de résistance try ha pâtés in orange sauce. And if yo think only the French can achie it—this recipe will surprise yo

THIS IS FOR KEEPS

He and she—they and theirs—one plus one equals one—this is "you-me"... for keeps!

For keeps, too, through a radiant lifetime, you'll delight in your Community. There's serene good breeding, dateless distinction, in every line of this famous silverware . . . good proportion, good contour, in every balanced knife and fork and spoon. At hard-wear points, too, there's that thoughtful Community "extra"—an overlay of solid silver. Let your jeweler show you a handsome chest of Community flatware (if it's Community, it's correct!). Now available in a distinguished fifty-piece service for eight places.

Community

THE FINEST SILVERPLATE

*CORONATION

*LADY HAMILTON

*MILADY

ADE MARK COPYRIGHT 1946 ONEIDA, LTD.

CONVERSATION PIECE

(Continued from Page 198)

That's quite a flock of recipes, so here we go. We'll plan this as a sit-down or buffet dinner for eight.

PIN-WHEEL SANDWICHES

Combine ½ pound liverwurst or liver pâté, 6 small sweet pickles, finely minced, 2 tablespoons grated onion and enough mayonnaise to make a thick, smooth paste. Remove crusts from ¾ loaf of bread and slice very thinly the long way. Spread each slice generously with liver paste, roll tightly and wrap each roll in oiled paper. Make rolls the day before, store in refrigerator and slice as nearly the last minute as possible. Each roll should make five or six sandwiches.

RIBBON SANDWICHES

Put ¾ pound Polish sausage through the finest blade of meat chopper three times. Add 3 tablespoons chili sauce and a little mayonnaise and work into a paste. That makes one paste. For the other, cream ½ pound cream cheese with a little cream or evaporated milk until smooth, add 5 or 6 tablespoons chopped green pepper, 1 tablespoon lemon juice and ¼ teaspoon red or Nepaul pepper. Slice bread very thin and cut off crusts. Now make three-decker sandwiches of these two mixtures (be generous with the spreads), wrap each sandwich in oiled paper and store in refrigerator. Do this the day before and slice in finger-width strips at last minute.

STUFFED CELERY

Blend cream cheese, grated onion, a few drops lemon juice and a little cream. Stuff slender celery stalks with this mixture and top with a little red caviar. Cut into bite-size pieces. The cheese mixture can be made the day before, but don't stuff celery until the afternoon of the day it's to be used.

DEVILED EGGS

Cut 4 or 5 hard-cooked eggs the long way into fourths. Devil yolks, basic recipe, stuff whites carefully with deviled mixture and garnish with capers or pimientos.

To serve canapés, arrange all four on a tray and add olives here and there. The olives may be stuffed, ripe or both.

PÂTÉS DE JAMBON

If you use a center cut of smoked ham, a 4-pound slice should be enough. If it's to be another cut, let the butcher tell you how much weight to allow for bones so that you will have the equivalent of a 4-pound steak. Soak the meat for half an hour in cold water, then boil it gently for two hours in water to which 3 bay leaves, 2 onions, 2 celery stalks, 6 cloves and 1 teaspoon whole pepper have been added.

When the ham has cooled in the broth in which it was cooked, remove bone and fat and grind four times through the finest blade of your food chopper. If you have enough energy for a fifth grinding, so much the better, for it should be very finely minced.

Make a cream sauce, using 3 tablespoons butter or margarine, 4 tablespoons flour and 2½ cups milk, and season with ½ teaspoon saffron, ½ teaspoon dry mustard, 2 tablespoons tomato paste (not purée) and ¼ teaspoon red pepper. When sauce is cool, beat into it 4 egg yolks and add to meat, together with 4 unbeaten egg whites.

Remove crust from 4 slices of bread and soak slices in milk. When thoroughly saturated, squeeze out most of the milk and add bread to meat. Stir until thoroughly mixed and taste for seasoning. You may need to add salt and a little more pepper. Now beat the mixture vigorously for three or four minutes and set in refrigerator. All this may be done early in the day or the day before.

Just before baking, fold in the stiffly-beaten whites of 4 eggs and spoon the pâté into well-oiled custard cups, filling them almost to the top. Pack very firmly and insert a silver knife here and there in the cups to avoid air bubbles. Place the molds in a pan of hot water and bake for one hour in a 325° F. oven. When the cooking time is up, turn off the oven, open the door and let the pâtés remain in the oven until you are ready to serve.

ORANGE SAUCE AMANDINE

Boil together for five minutes 1 cup orange juice, 1 cup consommé, the juice of 2 lemons, ½ teaspoon dry mustard, 1 teaspoon salt, 1½ tablespoons brown sugar, 1½ tablespoons grated orange rind and 5 cloves. Melt 4 tablespoons butter or margarine, stir in 2½ tablespoons flour until smooth and add the hot liquid slowly. Cook until it boils, stirring constantly, and remove the 5 cloves.

Slice 5 navel oranges into sections, removing all skin and white membrane. Cut ½ pound blanched almonds into long slivers and fry them in deep fat until light brown. Drain thoroughly on paper towels.

The sauce can be made ahead of time. When you reheat it, add the orange sections and about three quarters of the almond slivers. If you like the flavor of sherry, add 4 tablespoons at this time.

To serve, empty the pâtés upside down onto a large platter, spacing them evenly, and spoon the sauce around them. Let a little of the sauce dribble over each pâté and sprinkle the whole thing with the remaining almond slivers.

SALAD

Prepare everything the day before. In separate pans cook about 3 cups peas and 3 cups thinly sliced carrots until barely

"We've got what she asked for. What do I do now?"

From CLAIRE TREVOR RKO Radio Picture Star

Serve Hoenshel Brandied Fruit Cake as your Groom's Cake and for year 'round enjoyment. A wealth of glace fruits and nuts, rich with aged brandies and wines. If your store can't supply you, write to us. And ask about the new Wedding Package that contains 24 individual guest boxes of the Groom's Cake.

HOENSHEL FINE FOODS, INC.
Sandusky, Ohio

Largest Individual Makers of Fruit Cake in the U. S.

Fruit Cakes sent postpaid: 1 lb., $1.05; 1½ lbs., $1.55; 3 lbs., $2.88. West of Rocky Mts. add 25¢ postage.

HOENSHEL
Brandied Fruit Cake
"KNOWS NO SEASON"

Plum, Fig, and Fig-Date Pudding. Brandied Hard Sauce.

A·1 SAUCE

if you know Beans

—you know that men like food with a Taste to it.

A dash of A·1 Sauce does wonders for baked beans as well as steaks, chops, fish, and cheese dishes.

Write for recipe booklet

G. F. Heublein & Bro., Inc.
Hartford 1, Conn.

The DASH that makes the DISH

HANG IT UP...
PIN IT UP WITH
MOORE
PUSH-PINS · PUSH-LESS HANGERS
At stationery, department and hardware stores.
MOORE PUSH-PIN CO. PHILADELPHIA, PA.

done. Drain, put in separate bowls, and when partly cool pour a little jar French dressing over each vegetable. Toss lightly with a fork and place in refrigerator to marinate overnight. Peel 2 fine cucumbers, score lengthwise with the prongs of a fork, slice, cover with ice water and store overnight in refrigerator.

To serve, line a salad bowl or platter with lettuce leaves and give your artistic talents a field day. The cucumber slices, tucked in to stand on their sides, make a gorgeous border for alternate lines or groups of peas and carrots. Or how about a center of peas, a border of carrots and a final border of cucumbers? You can't miss so long as you arrange with an eye to color. And don't spoil your effect by masking the salad with the dressing. Serve that in a separate bowl.

JAR FRENCH DRESSING

Into a glass jar put 1½ cups salad oil, ¼ cup vinegar, ¼ cup lemon juice, 1½ teaspoons salt, 1 teaspoon dry mustard, 5 tablespoons sugar, 1 teaspoon paprika, 2 tablespoons Worcestershire sauce, ⅓ cup catchup and 2 cloves garlic. Put on lid, shake well and store in refrigerator. This dressing will keep for weeks, but remove garlic after about five days.

SOUR-CREAM DRESSING

Season 1½ cups sour cream with 2 tablespoons lemon juice, 2 tablespoons grated onion, 1 tablespoon horse-radish, ½ teaspoon salt, 1½ tablespoons sugar and ⅛ teaspoon red pepper. Serve very cold.

HONEY-FRUIT SHERBET

Have mixing bowl, rotary beater and all ingredients icy cold. Beat together ¾ cup honey, ¾ cup canned pineapple juice, ¾ cup apricot pulp pressed through a sieve, ⅛ teaspoon salt and the juice of 1 lemon. Stir in, but don't beat, ¾ cup peeled canned apricots cut into small pieces, ¾ cup orange sections, peeled and cut into small pieces, 1½ cups whole milk and ¾ cup cream. Transfer to freezing tray, set the freezing control of your refrigerator to very cold and freeze until the mixture becomes firm at the outside edges of tray. Remove and stir well with a fork, scraping sides and bottom of tray until frozen and unfrozen parts are thoroughly blended. Freeze for an hour and repeat the stirring. Freeze for another hour and again repeat the stirring. That's three times stirring in all—very important if the sherbet is to be creamy. After the third stirring one more hour of freezing is required.

DATE BARS

Combine 1½ cups chopped dates, 1 cup chopped nuts, 5 graham crackers rolled to a dust, 1½ teaspoons baking powder, ½ teaspoon salt, ¾ cup light brown sugar, ½ cup corn flakes, 2 well-beaten eggs and 1 teaspoon vanilla. Spread the batter evenly in a well-buttered oblong baking pan and bake in a slow oven, about 325° F., for half an hour. Cut into small oblongs while still warm.

Service. Any good food is a pleasant sight, but this food just happens to be nothing short of beautiful. And it's natural beauty too—nothing made up about it. Think how it will look! Think, and then plan your service so that everyone has a chance to look.

If this is to be a buffet party, the service problems are few and easily solved; but if it's to be a sit-down dinner for eight, plans must be made with thoughtful care. We'll not discuss formal service—it's impossible without adequate help, and with adequate help you don't need mine. But I'll make a couple of suggestions for smooth informality. Have a small serving table beside you, another beside your husband, and let him serve the pâtés while you serve the salad. Or arrange the pâtés, salad and plates on a long serving table or sideboard and let your husband do all the serving. Either method will work beautifully—if you make your plans in advance. And, speaking of plans, this meal most certainly calls for list and schedule making. Work out the timing for your pâtés and sherbet, write it down and then follow it.

But don't worry. The pâtés will not fall, the sherbet will not be icy—the two calamities that might befall you if the recipes were not tried and true. Have fun!

A lunch-time favorite—soup and crisp crackers spread with delicious Parkay

"Spread-time" favorite of millions —and still unmatched for flavor!

Fresh, sweet Parkay Margarine flavor! That's the flavor millions of American families prefer—because Parkay tastes so good on breakfast toast, hot dinner rolls, crisp crackers and those golden-brown waffles you serve for Sunday night supper. And what wonderful nourishment goes along with this flavor that's so hard to match! Four of the good things you eat each day are skillfully blended in Parkay Margarine: (1) Vegetable oils from America's farms, refined to bland sweetness, (2) Pasteurized skim milk, cultured for flavor, (3) Table salt for seasoning, (4) Important Vitamin A.

Guaranteed food values—at an economy price! Parkay Margarine is equal in food energy to any spread you can buy! And it's also an excellent source of Vitamin A—guaranteed to have 15,000 (U.S.P. XII) units in every pound. Try this Kraft-quality spread soon. It'll be your family's favorite spread, too. Parkay is a pure natural white. To make it a rich, appetizing yellow, simply add the certified coloring you get with each package.

KRAFT FOODS COMPANY · Chicago 90, Illinois

Parkay—the favorite of millions!

We're Sorry! Due to acute shortages Parkay is not always available. We'll produce all possible and distribute fairly.

02

FOR KITCHEN EFFICIENCY
Cook, Serve, Store and See with McKEE

the McKee Glasbake Casserole nationwide favorite of housewives

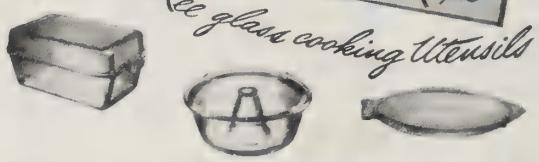
A superb dish for baking a wide variety of foods... and so easy to clean.



Here is another outstanding product by the makers of the most complete line of glass cooking ware in the world.

SEND FOR OUR RECIPE BOOKLET

A few McKee glass cooking utensils

LOOK FOR AND INSIST ON

McKEE GLASBAKE OVEN WARE

McKEE RANGE-TEC TOP OF STOVE WARE

By McKEE, JEANNETTE, PA.
QUALITY GLASSWARE SINCE 1853

So You Want to Live Long

By George Lawton, Ph.D.
Director and Psychologist, Old Age Counselling Center, New York City

IF you wish to live long, you must be willing to grow old. Most of us, however, accept old age grudgingly and are far more interested in a secret "formula" for longevity. But ask octogenarians for their "recipe," and you'll hear such conflicting statements as: "I've had my six cups of coffee a day all my life." . . . "I never touched tea or coffee." . . . "I eat meat twice a day." . . . "I've lived solely on vegetables and sour milk." . . . "I walk two miles a day." . . . "I never exercise."

There is no magic formula for living long, as far as I know. But I have noticed that most recommendations for prolonging your life make it only seem longer by making your daily program duller, more restricted, through negative cautions: "Don't do this; avoid that; rest; give up this or that."

Rather than make the horizons of older people narrower, I want to see them expanded. The negations and limitations we all suffer as we grow older must be offset by constructive activities and positive goals. An older person's daily schedule should be so full that later maturity seems shorter. Our lives add up to this important fact: it is not how long we have lived, but how well. We achieve more when we add not "years to our life but life to our years."

How? First we must recapture an attitude we knew in childhood: enjoy what we are doing while we are doing it. In later maturity, this technique is called "flexible patterning." We plan ahead and work toward goals, and enjoy it in the here and now.

If the acceptance of reality is more important at one age epoch than another, later maturity is the time. Human beings have a right to be old and old people still have a right to be human beings. Each period of life has its own unique beauty and usefulness, its own value in the scheme of things, but the proper utilization of old age requires even more intelligence and effort than is required for the earlier life periods.

> When you think little of a person, then say as little as you think.
> —Drogheda Independent.

Second, then, don't pity the so-called "old." The person who from childhood has fallen back on excuses to cover his inability or his unwillingness to develop his abilities to the maximum will continue to excuse himself to the end of his days. "You know, at my age you can't ——" He forgets that life is always a struggle, and more of one in later maturity. That is no time to tire and withdraw. If one does—well, the dead are not always buried at once.

We must not settle for pity, and the object of this type of affection is unwise to accept it if it is forced upon him in place of love or approval. Once he is seduced by it, he must accept a passive role in all his relationships, both in the home and the community. Then, as the appeasement policy reaches its logical conclusion, he is rejected completely: institutionalized, for example, when he doesn't need to be.

There is, of course, a great need for more and improved facilities for older people: nursing homes, chronic-disease hospitals, residence clubs, old-age communities within a larger community, and so on. But our goals should not be bigger and better institutions, but bigger and better lives. We must raise for older people not so much the standard of living, as the standard of their human relationships.

Third, and tremendously important, we must reject the "grow old gracefully" motto. "Graceful" in my vocabulary means "diplomatic," "mouselike," "fearful of being oneself." It should be replaced by "GROW OLD AGGRESSIVELY, CREATIVELY, SOCIAL-MINDEDLY." Growing old is growing in wisdom and usefulness, and that kind of growing is never a graceful process; certainly it is one seldom achieved without outside aid. "I'm eighty-one, so what?" is an attitude not arrived at without effort.

Proposing an aggressive role for older people and telling them they have a right to live and die in a style which suits them best can be carried to an extreme, and then it has its repercussions. It is a doctrine which must be qualified by the stipulation that the older person must be mentally and physically able to carry the responsibility of self-determination and must not damage or exploit other lives in his quest for self-expression.

A "problem child" of eighty-seven, a Russian ex-general residing in one of the most luxurious of old-age homes, insisted on smoking in bed. The home authorities could have dismissed the general, of course, but I suggested to someone who asked my opinion that a "Prebedtime Smokers Club" be formed, with a gentleman's agreement that any smoking was "out" once they left the "clubrooms" for the evening. In the meantime, the home was to check its fire-prevention equipment. I noticed in a newspaper item a few days later that my suggestion had come too late. I still believe, however, that my principle is correct.

The fourth step in adding life to our years is not to try to outwit old age, but to utilize it; not to dread it as a blight, but to welcome it as a potentially fruitful period. It may not be our most glamorous and exciting one, but it can be interesting and rewarding.

It is true that of those over sixty-five, two thirds are financially dependent on others and approximately the same number suffer from one chronic ailment or another. But we must not regard the mental and emotional troubles of older people as due solely to the number of years lived. The kind of person who has grown old and the environment in which he then lives play an even more important part. The enemy is not Age, but lifelong personality maladjustments, the way our society treats aging and, finally, the almost total lack of facilities and resources for utilizing what older people have to offer. Some of the happiest old people I have known are not well; others were dreadfully poor. On the other hand, among the unhappiest old people I know are those who have both extraordinary physical health and ample means.

Losses and limitations come with age, yes, but the way we greet these losses depends not upon our advanced years or upon our current troubles, but upon the kind of person we've always been. The handicaps may be forced upon us, but no one can force us to accept confusion and dismay. The very fact that the later years may have an increasing amount of disablement and moments of low ebb means that we must plan in advance to make old age rich in other terms, and build up so habitual a program of interests and relationships that they will carry us through the "tunnel" moments. There are many pleasures available even to the bedridden or the feeble.

Financial security and good health are important. But emotional security and personal integrity, the ability to give of oneself to the community and to utilize its offerings—these are even more essential. The most tragic aspect of old age is not its poverty, its illness, but its futility.

This takes us to the fifth step in putting life into our years: recognize what is a "normal" older person. The normal older person, whether rich or poor, well or sick, respects

(Continued on Page 205)

M-m-m-mm COMPANY HAM

WITH THAT FRENCH'S FLAVOR!

EASY! Wrap a tender smoked ham loosely in wrapping paper, place fat side up on rack in uncovered roaster. Add no water. Bake ham in moderate oven (325° F.), allowing 3½ to 4 hours for 10 to 12 lb. ham.

After baking ham, remove paper and skin. Score fat surface in squares. Spread with 4 tablespoons French's Mustard. Cover surface with 1 cup brown sugar mixed with 2 tablespoons flour. Stud squares with whole cloves. Bake in moderately hot oven of 400° F. 15 minutes or until golden brown. Serve with pineapple slices browned in ham liquor.

SMOOTHER CREAMIER

A blend of the finest spices and mustard seed money can buy

No wonder French's is the nation's favorite prepared mustard—it has just the right combination of zesty flavor and smoothness. It brings out all the good meat flavor—doesn't cover it up as cheap harsh mustards do. Serve French's Mustard with cold meats, too—use it in salad dressings and sandwich fillings. French's is so creamy it blends perfectly.

Largest selling prepared mustard in U. S. A. today
Also made in Canada

Ham Patties . . .
Chop leftover ham, combine with equal amount cold chopped boiled potatoes and shape into patties. Brown over low flame in 2 tablespoons of melted fat mixed with 1½ teaspoons of French's Mustard.

FREE!
NEW RECIPE BOOK

Send for new recipe booklet in full color, "Mealtime Magic"... Twenty-four pages of practical suggestions to make food go further, meals taste more delicious!

Write to The R. T. French Company, 1264 Mustard St., Rochester 9, N. Y., and booklet will be sent you FREE.

*Name*_____
(Please print)

*Address*_____

Here's your new Magic Chef

For Easier - Better Cooking

MORE WOMEN COOK ON Magic Chef THAN ON ANY OTHER RANGE*

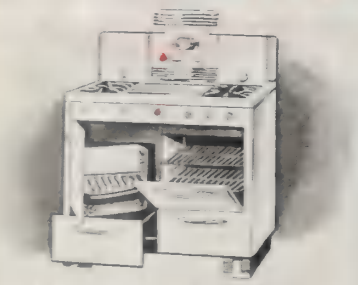
✓ Check THESE 6 PROOFS OF MAGIC CHEF SUPERIORITY



Check SUPERIOR TOP COOKING. Any heat you want—instantly, automatically with this famous Hi-Lo, non-clog burner. Scientifically efficient, completely flexible. Ideal for waterless cooking.
Check here ☐

Check SUPERIOR OVEN COOKING. No guesswork with famous Red Wheel Oven Heat Regulator and Handy Timer. High-speed oven air-conditioned, twice insulated. Can maintain constant low heat.
Check here ☐

Check SUPERIOR BROILING. New, high-level "Swing-Out" Broiler is an exclusive Magic Chef feature. No stooping, no smoke. Best ever for broiling, barbecuing, and food warming. Easy to clean.
Check here ☐

Check SUPERIOR CONSTRUCTION. Smartly streamlined to fit any kitchen. Engineered with reinforced construction to last for years of heavy usage with greatest convenience and safety.
Check here ☐

Check SUPERIOR CLEANLINESS. Smooth, all-porcelain finish inside and out makes cleaning a cinch. No rough edges to cut hands or clothes. Most-used parts may be removed and washed like dishes.
Check here ☐

Check SUPERIOR DEPENDABILITY. Tested and approved by Magic Chef Research Laboratory. Backed by world's largest producer of gas ranges with 66 years of manufacturing "know-how."
Check here ☐

THE wonderful thing about this new Magic Chef is that you'll find it just right—not in a few ways like ordinary ranges—but in every way.

You'll be delighted with its magic results in top cooking, baking and broiling. You'll admire the shining beauty of its streamlined design. You'll revel in its many conveniences—its cleaning ease— its sturdy construction —the new kitchen freedom it brings you. You'll cherish it with lasting pride of ownership.

There are 48 advantages in the new Magic Chef. Learn all about them today at your Gas Company or Magic Chef Dealer's store.

*Proved by recent surveys.

Enjoy Magic Chef Cooking Wherever You Are!

Even if you live beyond the gas mains, you can have a new Magic Chef. Investigate "Pyrofax" Gas in Eastern or Central States; other "LP" (bottled or tank) gases elsewhere.

AMERICAN STOVE COMPANY
Dept. L-3 • St. Louis 2, Mo.

Magic Chef

THE GAS RANGE WITH THE FAMOUS RED WHEEL

(Continued from Page 202)

self, has an ever-expanding horizon of in-sts, activities and human relationships, ot entirely dependent on others for emo-al support or for mental stimulation, is re-centered, not past-centered and is will-o do his best as the problems of life assail uch a "normal" old age was described eloquently by Senator Arthur Capper uly, 1945, when from Washington he med up eighty years of living by sending radio birthday greeting to his friends in Kansas: "Live and let live and lift a e more than your share! I've enjoyed and I'm still enjoying it. I try so to live day that I like to live with myself and that tomorrow I still will like to live myself. After eighty years, I hope I still e curiosity, tolerance and good will. I ld hate to think I have become set in my s, in my thinking, in my reactions."

any older persons carefully plan for a e and garden, off in isolation, to which first will go at sixty-five, expecting that will provide the complete answer to what should do with their later years. It is that the "dream" cottage and the per-climate do exist, separately and in com-tion, but such an ambition is seldom to pproved, because no genuine peace can btained through escape. Not retire-t, but participation is what the normal person needs.

order to avoid mental and emotional ne—"real old age"—everyone needs to an active part in the civic and cultural f the community, and of the world in h he lives—not only for mental and ional self-preservation but to repay his to society in the wisdom and experience h only the older person can contribute.

pecially important in ng more out of life the we get is to plan a am of re-education. ust face the fact that frequent barrenness nhappiness of old age specific causes either environment or in ourselves, and the may have a long history. We must e, for example, that the ways in which e so comfortably "sot" are not all nec-ly sacred, a kind of legislation from immemorial.

st of all, if we want a more satisfying e, we must be willing to gamble a little e outcome of any program of re-tion. Perhaps what is unconsciously ed is that rehabilitation, if successful, lead to anything: to standing on one's to relinquishing certain unjustified ies, to developing a new point of view, anging self-respect for self-pity. If so, choice between accepting change and ing a very frustrating existence.

n too old to change!" is a slogan which not from a calm and objective ap-of the actual difficulties in acquiring titudes and information, or from the of the years, but from the emotional nce to change, the fear of what will if we abandon any of our behavior is or daily routines. When an older says, "I'm too old to change," the ould be, "You're not too old to try." longer we live, the more like ourselves ome. Aging is like applying a magni-lass to the personality. To become ke ourselves can be a dire fate—for Part of any emotional re-education y schedule for multiplying the con-older people with life around them, eme for increasing interesting occu-l and avocational activities, is de-o help reduce the pressure being exerted younger member of the family by a ed, out-of-date, rapidly declining per-ether the latter is forty or seventy. As Martin said in The Home in a acy: "It is the duty of society to adults fit for children to live with." ust realize that aging means merely es with age" and that these changes losses and deteriorations or they may s and pleasures unknown to earlier in life. Rarely do we explore the "plus" possibilities of later maturity to see how we can make the most of the opportunities old age offers. Later maturity, examined scientifically, can be creative, productive, happy. Even in old age life can be well led.

Whenever we try to evaluate the opportunities of the second half of life, we must recognize our own prejudice and hostility toward old people and our own fear of old age. Even for one who tries to be an objective student of the subject, it is hard to steer a middle road between glossing over old age with a sentimental patina or projecting onto it one's own private pain and unfriendliness.

A design for living in later maturity, one which aims not at a longer life but more of it, is just like a plan for a house or ship that is yet to be built. It is useless unless the older person makes the blueprint take on form and dimension and makes it function productively and satisfyingly in a real world.

This article is from Doctor Lawton's forthcoming book, Aging Successfully. He is also the author of an earlier book, New Goals for Old Age.

The most completely lost of all days is the one on which we have not laughed.
—CHAMFORT.

TEN HINTS ON AGING SUCCESSFULLY

1. Admit that you are growing older.

2. Remember that aging brings "plus" changes as well as minus ones.

3. Answer "Too old!" with "Too old for what?" Not too old to modify an attitude or habit, acquire a minor skill, render a service, keep up-to-date, create something beautiful or say to a new idea: "I'll try it; not every new idea is bad; nor every change a revolution."

4. A long life is its own reward. Do not expect homage only because you have survived many winters, or suffered and seen much. Past deeds do not exempt you from present achievement. Your life history is important—to you; but so is your listener's—to him. Conversation is a sharing of present needs, unless you mistake old age for "anecdotage."

5. As opportunities for self-expression in your work or family lessen, realize that human imagination does not grow old, and find creative outlets in hobbies, the arts and community activities.

6. Pity cannot replace love and approval. Pity leads to overprotection, and then to rejection. More essential than a home of one's own is a life of one's own, without dependence on children or relatives for entertainment, companionship or emotional support. True security or emotional independence is a feeling of inner competence and "belongingness" that comes from earning recognition and affection through what we now contribute to our families and our community.

7. Learning is a form of living. The older man or woman should acquire some new knowledge each year. Unchanging is the desire to explore new experience, but the experience changes. Our adventures are not in the field of physical and emotional sensation, but in that of human understanding and relationships. As bodily pleasures diminish, we must cultivate more the pleasures of the mind and other inner resources.

8. Realize that later maturity is most valued for the knowledge of strategy, not for strength or speed. Look at the older doctor or lawyer, the craftsman, the political leader, the artist in living.

9. As replacements for old friends, continually make new ones. The most devoted couple does not know when one, carrying on alone, will need friends.

10. There is only one ultimate peace. Until then, there is no escaping the struggle or the responsibilities of maturity. We retire to, not from. Always we need a "tomorrow"; goals to strive for and present activities that go on. Seventeen centuries ago, Galen, a Greek philosopher, wrote: "Employment is nature's best physician and essential to human happiness." Ever necessary is: "A plan, a task—and freedom."

LIN-X
Self Polishing
WAX

IS ANTI-SLIP EVEN WHEN WET

HERE'S the wax you've been waiting for . . . LIN-X Self-Polishing WAX — it's anti-slip, even when water is spilled on it—proved by Underwriters' Laboratories!

And all you do is just wipe it on! It dries in 20 minutes to a hard, lustrous, real-wax finish that's a joy to behold. It protects and it beautifies. Your home is brighter—your work is lighter with Lin-x Self-Polishing Wax.

Get some today at your dealer's.

Only 59c PT. 98c QT.

LIN-X CREAM POLISH

POLISHES BONE-DRY!

So easy to use. Cleans as it polishes. Lin-x Cream Polish restores beauty to fine furniture without tiresome rubbing. It's non-oily—resists finger marks—polishes to a hard, waxy, gleaming surface. The modern easy way to protect and beautify your furniture.

ONLY 69c PT.

LIN-X CLEAR-GLOSS

RESISTS BOILING WATER!

For linoleum and all wood surfaces. Resists boiling water, sizzling grease, fruit juices, perfume, even alcohol. Gives a sparkling luster that wears and wears. Flows on smooth. Easy to use. Easy to clean. "Just brush it on!"

ONLY 95c PT. $1.70 QT.

TODAY! GET THESE GREAT Lin-x REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.
Home Brighteners
Made by the Makers of Kem-Tone

Nothing but Zinnias

BY RICHARD PRATT

GARDEN AND PHOTOGRAPH BY THE AUTHOR

AS windows get higher, wider, handsomer and modern decoration indoors includes a close-up of the world outside, a little garden through the glass is like a living picture on the wall. Here the frame is filled with one of the oldest favorites among the annual flowers, which range in size from tiny to tall, and as far as color is concerned practically take over the spectrum. Banked up from a semi-circular tank, they add a bright new dimension to the room within and break the view of the screened sitting terrace just beyond. Zinnias, this way, are a treat from early summer until frost; easy, dependable, various and brilliant, and always in sight. Cutting helps to keep up their steady stream of colorful bloom and supplies the house with color too. And for a house-plant contrast on the window ledge, you can't do better than caladiums.

AUERBACH'S brings to Mother 'n' Daughter

PAULA GARRISON'S

"TY-TOO"

A new all-in-one Panty-Dress in an exclusive Cotton Print by Bates Sleep Jam . . . Play Frock . . . Sun Dress . . . Beach Tog . . . Porch Sunner . . . The panties are part of the garment! Into the dress . . . down between the legs . . . pull up the front, and "Ty-Too"! That's all there is to it! It's "self-help" for the youngsters! It's the year's prettiest "young mother" innovation! And it washes like a ribbon and irons in one flat piece! "Ty-Too" is made in Bates' wonderful Sanforized combed cotton; and the big 'n' little print is Paula's new "Kitten Willing". Send for it now, love it all summer. Have it in blue, pink or yellow.

Mother's sizes, Small (30-32), Med. (34-36), Large (38-40), $4.95
Big Sister sizes, 7 to 14, $4.50
Little Sister sizes, 3 to 6X, $3.50

Daughters' sizes by Love

TEAR HERE TO ORDER BY MAIL

AUERBACH'S
SALT LAKE CITY 10, UTAH

Please send me the following "Ty-Too" Panty-Dresses:
CHECK ☐ MONEY ORDER ☐ C.O.D. ☐

| | Quantity | Size | Color | Choice 2nd Color |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Mother "Ty-Too" Panty-Dresses @ 4.95. Sm. (30-32), Med. (34-36), Lge. (38-40). | | | | |
| Big Sister "Ty-Too" Panty-Dresses Sizes 7 to 14. @ 4.50. | | | | |
| Little Sister "Ty-Too" Panty-Dresses Sizes 3 to 6X. @ 3.50. | | | | |

NAME_____

ADDRESS_____

CITY_____

Please add 10c for mailing.

Cotton FABRICS

Auerbach's

SALT LAKE CITY 10, UTAH

"Let's keep Our Love Exciting"

"No woman was ever loved as I love you," you said. "Keep your hands soft, dearest." I'm so glad I used Jergens Lotion. . . . Preferred hand care with the loveliest women. Hollywood Stars use Jergens Lotion, 7 to 1.

Now more effective than ever. Thanks to new wartime knowledge of skin-care, Jergens scientists now make Jergens Lotion even finer. "My hands feel even smoother, softer;" "Protects longer;" women said after testing.

"Fun—making a home together." Her hands still so friendly-soft. Those 2 ingredients many doctors use for skin-softening are included in this postwar Jergens Lotion. In the stores today—same bottle—still 10¢ to $1.00 (plus tax). Never sticky; no oiliness.

For the Softest, Adorable Hands, use

JERGENS LOTION

Now more Effective than ever—thanks to Wartime Research

WOMEN WITH A BROOM

(Continued from Page 34)

closed, they had helped to unlock the machines, examine the exposed totals, fill out required papers and escort the tally sheets to the Criminal Court Building.

Never had so many New Orleans women served at the polls. Almost a third of the 1310 commissioners had been women. A few of them were Maestri partisans, but the Regulars preferred men as commissioners, the same ones year after year. By far the majority of the women commissioners were working, praying and, in some cases, literally fighting for Morrison.

In the 1930's, when New Orleans polling places were scenes of drunkenness, shootings and camera smashings, reform candidates had discovered that women commissioners made for a relatively orderly election. They had been urging more and more women to take over the jobs. The Old Regulars, oriented to the strong arm as an election-day arbiter, were at a loss when it came to women. The January 22 primary was probably the city's quietest of all time.

Not that the women had everything their own way. In a few places, especially where they controlled four of the five commissioners, the Old Regulars ran things as of yore. They entered voting machines with scores of voters to "assist" them on the flimsiest pretexts of blindness, illiteracy or physical disability—a favorite trick to destroy secrecy of the ballot. They went into the machines to "instruct" voters in their use on the slightest excuse. One woman who had started voting asked for some simple instructions from within the machine. Instead of replying verbally, an Old Regular parted the curtains to go into the machine. The Morrison commissioner, a woman, saw the voter fling herself backward, arms outstretched, across the voting panel in a futile attempt to hide her choices of candidates. One Morrison woman commissioner was manhandled so severely that buttons on her coat were torn off. Another charged an Old Regular commissioner with repeatedly spitting in her face until she put a stop to it by slapping him. Both women stuck to their posts, thus defeating the primary purpose of the rough stuff. But in past elections these would have been considered minor disorders. More typical in 1946 were the peaceful incidents: the woman who stopped one man from voting with another man's registration papers, and the woman who successfully insisted that a voter who had failed to register as blind obtain a doctor's certificate before getting assistance.

It had been a fight in the face of defeat. As usual all the signs had pointed to another machine victory. As usual there had been no straw vote. The Old Regulars, confidently predicting a 20,000-vote majority, regarded a straw poll as superfluous. Morrison and company, supported by all three of the city's newspapers, had no doubt a straw poll would do them more harm than good. Thousands of dollars had been bet on Maestri at odds as high as five to one. The city district attorney, running for the office he had held by the governor's temporary appointment, had rejected endorsement by the independent citizen's committee in favor of the historically potent Old Regular blessing.

And Morrison himself was a last-minute choice of the committee made in mid-campaign when they suddenly found their ticket leaderless. Their original candidate was Joachim O. Fernandez, a former Congressman whom the Old Regulars had ditched some years before for another man. Fernandez pulled out of the race just seven weeks before election day, switching his support to the city machine he had been denouncing, and admonishing reporters that "if you can't beat 'em, join 'em."

Morrison's hat, then an overseas cap with a full colonel's eagle on it, sailed into the ring from Camp Shelby, Miss., several hours before his discharge became final. It was a gesture the cynics called foolhardy and the hopeful called gallant. Even "Chep"

Potpourri

D WORLD FRAGRANCE
NEW AS TOMORROW

ers and spice and everything nice
. that's what Potpourri Cologne ade of. And it's meant to be worn the woman who is as sweet—as smart—as the fragrance itself.

full line of Bath Luxuries . . .
ourri Cologne, 1.00* and 2.00*
Oil, 1.25* Dusting Powder, 1.00*
(box of 3), 1.00 Talc Mitt, 1.00*
*Plus tax

Since Matchabelli

711 FIFTH AVENUE, N. Y.

Morrison's pretty, blond wife tried to persuade him against it until she saw how serious he was. Then she pitched in to help.

Foolhardy or gallant, it crystallized matters. The women's organization—and independent voters in general—had been uncertain about supporting Fernandez. When Morrison stepped into the gap the independents cheered. Member of a prominent Louisiana family, he had been a lawyer and a state legislator responsible for authoring several progressive bills. He entered active duty a reserve first lieutenant and came back a colonel, decorated with the Legion of Merit for service in Europe with the Transportation Corps. He entered the campaign swinging. Promising to halve the high city sales tax and effect other reforms, he pommeled Maestri's one-man rule, handling of municipal funds, and pointed to the city's uncollected garbage, pitted streets and flourishing rackets. Maestri asked voters to "look at the record," a suggestion the newspapers pounced on with glee.

But Morrison's offensive, however energetic, struck much the same note as that of candidates the machine had been snowing under since 1920. Nobody thought this time would be different. On election night, just after the polls closed, the independents already were tasting the old sour grapes; the Old Regulars were poised smilingly cup to lip, the election of Maestri was a foregone conclusion—when Chep Morrison sauntered in with the mayor's chair tucked under his arm.

It happened at 10:30. The impossible became a fact. Out of 132,000 votes, returns gave Morrison 67,000. He had a 5000 lead over Maestri and—the miracle—a 2000 majority over Maestri and five other candidates combined. For the first election night in a quarter of a century the silence at City Hall was so heavy you could hear the heads drop.

The writers against religion, whilst they oppose every system, are wisely careful never to set up any of their own. —EDMUND BURKE.

Morrison himself cheerfully admitted, "I'm the most astonished and happy mayor this city ever had." His surprised wife tried to let it soak in: "I can't believe it." And, later, "Well, if I'm the youngest (24) first lady this city ever had, it's also the first time this ever happened to me." Many exhausted women workers had gone to bed early, unwilling to face the bad news they felt sure was coming over the radio. Next morning Morrison's name sprang at them from the headlines like a giant jack-in-the-box. New Orleans was astounded.

When the political post-mortems set in, spotlights played in turn on the Old Regular ward heelers, who had shown signs of unusual apathy during the campaign; on the New Orleans branch of Governor Jimmy Davis's state machine, which had worked for Morrison while Davis himself maintained a cautious silence; on labor, which had split about three to one for Morrison; on the new civil-service laws, an achievement of the state legislature; and on Morrison's war-veteran supporters. But the bulk of the bouquets went to the women.

Out of anger, out of disgust, out of conviction and experience dating back to Huey Long and the Louisiana scandals, they had organized and fought under the name of the Women's Independent Organization. They had knocked on doors and talked to voters. There seemed little doubt they had tapped the latent integrity of the city, certainly to the extent of several thousand more votes than the 2000 which gave New Orleans a new mayor. "I've been at the polls fifteen years," one male commissioner said, "and I've never seen so many women voting."

Chep Morrison took off his hat and bowed low: "The women developed tremendous enthusiasm." A picture taken on election night showed Morrison and his mother exchanging happy grins while the young soldier

Beauty and the Bath

There's deep, sensuous enjoyment to the ritual of the bath.

Foaming bubbles. Creamy suds. The fragrant talc.

And of course — the enveloping luxury of a big Martex towel, finest to be had!

Yours again at all fine department and linen stores.

The one shown here: a diamond-patterned Kimberley.

Martex

A PRODUCT OF THE WEST POINT MFG. CO.

A perfect love of a perfume . . . joyously fresh and as sparkling as a pretty smile . . . and oh, so lasting! So captivating, too . . . you'll want to wear Frolic always and always.

Perfume, $6.50; 3.50; debutante size, 1.10. Toilet Water, 1.75. Dusting Powder, 1.00. Talcum Powder, 50¢. (Plus tax) was no time to find workers in areas which had not produced volunteers, canvassers went on spot assignments outside their own territory in order to do some work in every section of the city. At least one girl worker pressed her dates into service and took them canvassing at night. Women who had never canvassed before often started out skeptical and returned enthusiastic.

(Continued from Page 210)

Mrs. D., who had claimed she was "too old for politics" and wasn't interested anyway, was shamed by a friend into a canvassing job one morning with another worker. She was instructed to quit at noon, but, after a hasty lunch, she kept on going until six.

"We were having such a good time," she confessed, "we went ahead and finished up our street. We met some of the nicest people. Why, half of them would say, 'Yes indeed, come in, I want to know something about Morrison,' and you know, I believe they really appreciated having people come talk to them who were doing it just because they thought it was right. One woman told us, 'I just don't take any part in politics,' but we talked to her anyway and before we left she had decided she wanted to be a worker!"

The canvassers also served another purpose. They brought back a picture of what the voters, especially the women, were thinking. They found the women impressed by Morrison's youth, clean looks and open grin, by his war record, by the simple courage of his quick decision to challenge Maestri, and by the earnestness of the people working for him. Time after time they sensed a close connection in women's minds between World War II and the mayoralty campaign. Wives and mothers who had stayed at home wanted to do something for the city, to assert the freedom their men had fought for, to use their weapon—the vote—in a spirit of gratitude. It seemed almost as if the battle front and the home front had been pretty close together after all.

Canvassing organized, the women tackled the et ceteras. They wore out telephone lines giving notices of rallies and special radio speeches, promoting the "march of brooms." On election day they sent a women's army to the polls. In addition to the commissioners, hundreds of women acted as official watchers inside the poll barriers, additional hundreds stood outside in a chill wind to hand out sample ballots, and scores more formed brigades to supply sandwiches and coffee to poll workers. Women chauffeured voters to the polls. Besides the drivers on duty in specific precincts, women manned five special motor pools set up for emergencies.

"Most of our women made a holiday of the election," Mrs. Waters said. "They had their husbands and older children all working at the polls. It was a sort of family observance of democracy."

It was Mrs. Waters who had the satisfaction of an unusual convert. A male worker for Morrison who for years previous had been an Old Regular stalwart was asked why he had switched.

"It was that boy's mother," he said, pointing to Mrs. Waters' son. "When people like that came out and worked, without thinking of getting anything for it, I thought there must be something to it."

Mrs. K., a precinct captain, echoed the gentleman's sentiment a few days after the election. There was something to it. Mrs. K was analyzing vote results in her ward, especially "improvements," a figure obtained by adding the Old Regulars' loss and the independents' gain. Mrs. K.'s precinct, with a total vote of 632, had "improved" 135 votes since the last election.

"You know," she said, "it's up to independent women to clean up politics." She pointed to her card file, copied from official registration rolls, listing every voter in her precinct. "No man's going to work like this unless he has a political job. In general the precincts without women captains showed the least improvement in this election.

"In the Huey Long days we acted so silly. We sat outside the polls and talked to each other. You've got to get inside. Government by the people means not just voting, but being commissioners, knowing the mechanics. To run a precinct you've got to have a poll book to check off the voters, a card file, and you've got to canvass the voters and know them. It's entertaining knowing so many people. I telephoned my ward leader the time to make sure he was sending me some sample ballots to mail to them. You see, I consider them my people." Mrs. K. smiled. "Nobody can take my precinct away from me until I die. It's mine."

She may well have been speaking for the entire women's organization. Ten years ago New Orleans belonged to the politicians, but today the women have a feeling New Orleans belongs to its citizens and they mean to see that nobody takes it away. Morrison is not assured of a three out of four majority on the commission council, but to the Women's Independent Organization that is an incident albeit a glorious one. Some of the precinct workers were canvassing again after election. They were asking the qualified citizens who had not voted how come. The women were looking for likely candidates to back for vacancies in the state legislature and planning to organize city precincts that still have no independent women leaders.

They have been heartened by what they found in soldiers' homes, the feeling of unity with the firing line, the translation of the world struggle for freedom into the community struggle for freedom. They hope to spread this awareness that democracy is not foolproof, not automatic; it gets out of whack when neglected, but it's worth fighting for, election after election; it can be fought for and won, sorry politicians thrown out, good ones kept on their toes. Witness New Orleans.

The crusaders in skirts have won the toughest battle, but they're keeping the weapons. Attached to Morrison or any other candidate by principles only, they see themselves as a permanent pressure group with a bright new ax to grind: good government.

OUR READERS WRITE US

(Continued from Page 13)

tent furnished little protection from the incessant winds which sweep down off the Bering Sea.

"Bring them inside, Alexei," I told him, motioning toward our round, tin-roofed Russian domik.

Alexei Ivanovich was delighted. "Spacibo, spacibo," he thanked me.

Soon our domik was filled with the loud wailing of Grisha, swaddled in baby clothes so you could hardly find him.

"What's the matter?" I asked Anna anxiously.

"Nichevo, nichevo" (nothing, nothing), she said. "All Russian babies cry when they are little. It shows they're healthy." (Grisha was her fourth.)

Well, I had read baby books before Susan came, and I knew better. "When did you feed him?"

"Just a minute ago, in the tent," she said.

"Nichevo, nichevo," she said again, when I suggested tiny Grisha might have indigestion. Anyhow, she let me hold him. I put him to my shoulder and patted his back gently.

"Burrrrp. Burrrp." And up came some of Grisha's milk, all over my parka. Then as a smile of amazement came over his mother's stolid, Slavic features, little Grisha stopped crying and cooed. I chucked him under the chin, as we used to do to Susan, and sure enough, Grisha smiled.

"Shtota koye?" asked Grisha's mother, which means, "What goes on, anyway?"

I told her that in the United States we always "burped" babies after they finished feeding.

"And does your baby never cry after feeding?" she asked.

"Never," I answered (somewhat guiltily, remembering an occasional howl).

"How do you do it again?"

I put Grisha in the burping position, over my shoulder.

"You are a good father," she said. "We will try it."

It was the nicest thing said to me since I came to Russia—a land where everybody says nice things about you—and I swelled with pride.

Next day another officer and I thought up an excuse for a trip to town, and along went Alexei Ivanovich and his family. As Anna climbed into the jeep, her tiny baby asleep in his swaddling clothes, she called to me and smiled.

"Boorp," she said. Love,

FRED.

"Austerity" for Dorothy

The Duke's Cottage
Rudgwick, England

My dear Bruce and Beatrice: As you know, daughter Mary is going to have another baby. We still have trouble with the first one which, being an Airborne Officer's baby, will step off into space with a horrid trustfulness. Nor do bumps and abrasions seem to teach it anything. I am busy at the moment cutting up Airforce Officer's shirts (Mary's) to make into summer frocks for her.

Old England has been swept by every sort of storm and flood, with folks taking trips on tables, and sitting on top of their cars awaiting rescue. This cut off our fish supply all last week, which seems peculiar. You'd have thought they could have swum right up to the door. Standing high, we were not troubled, except that, running into some sort of a puddle the other day on my way back from London, my train was jolly nearly involved in one of those nasty accidents we read so much about. The truth is, everything is wearing out, and wants replacing, and can't be. I went one afternoon to my dressmaker, who was showing clothes to bring the tears to any woman's eyes. All embroideries and frills and flounces, and crinolines and bows. We haven't seen such things in years—but: "These models, Madam, are for export only." Next week there will be a nice little show of all we can have. Jolly utility models, with no pleats and only five buttons, and no embroidery at all! Mostly made in those sad shades which appear to be related by marriage to the war loaf of bread.

Love to you all,

DOROTHY BLACK.

Help the Children

New York, New York

To the Editors: I went recently to deliver the first consignment of AWVS Friendship Boxes, from American children to their brothers and sisters overseas.

The attitude of children in Guernsey, who were lovingly cared for in their English exile, was in sharp contrast to another group in England—nameless children from concentration camps. Their parents are gone; even their nationality is a mystery. Nourished on terror and very little else, they are still like little animals. When food is given they grab for it. They do not hesitate to steal from one another. And yet they cling to each other for companionship and protection. If one child leaves the room the others are manifestly uneasy until he returns.

Their plight is desperate but not hopeless. They are under the care of carefully trained refugee teachers, directed by Dr. Anna Freud, brilliant daughter of Sigmund Freud. Dr. Freud feels that in time it will be possible to teach them discipline, order and friendliness.

It is not merely humanitarian to help these children. "One World" will be nothing but a phrase of shame and mockery if half our children are allowed to become a warped generation. We must do what we can to heal them. We must see to it that they can laugh again.

Sincerely,

ALVA B. GIMBEL,
Vice-President, AWVS.

If you want to help, write Save the Children Federation, Inc., 1 Madison Avenue, New York 10, New York. See also agencies listed, page 134. ED.

Nay, Lady, Nay!

This is the Way

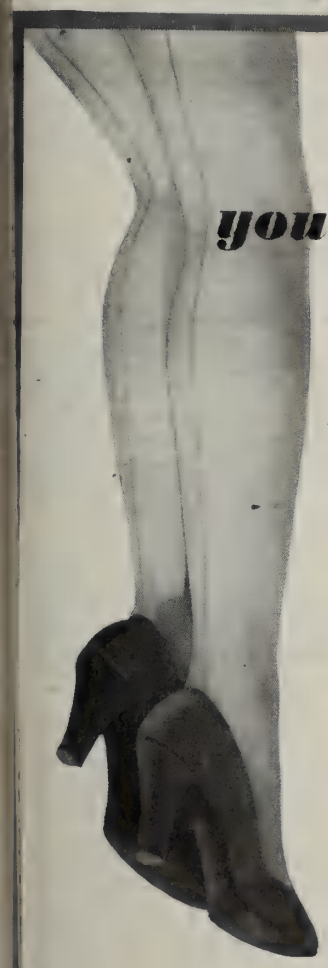
...THE CLEAN, EASY WAY TO OPEN CLOGGED DRAINS

Yes, indeed—Drāno can quickly open a clogged drain. Even a drain so stopped up that no water can trickle through.

Drāno also clears out dangerous sewer germs that breed in every drain—only 2 inches from where you wash dishes and food.

So play safe! Use Drāno regularly to keep your drains free-running, and free of sewer germs.

Never over 25¢ at drug, grocery, and hardware stores.



Drāno

T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. by The Drackett Co.

OPENS CLOGGED DRAINS
CLEARS OUT SEWER GERMS

Harmless to septic tanks: makes them work better—cuts down odors you love Nylons...

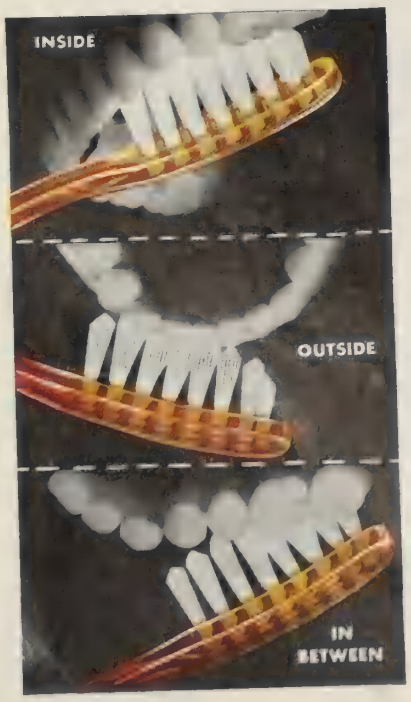
nylons love
IMRA

BEAUTIFUL NYLONS DESERVE
BEAUTIFUL HAIR-FREE LEGS

Now you need IMRA* more than ever! For IMRA is the odorless, painless depilatory that keeps your legs smooth and hair-free under the sheerest of hose. Just smooth it on—then rinse it off, together with all that unsightly fuzz. No bad smell, no razor knicks, no ugly bristles. One application does the trick!

2½-oz. jar — 65¢
(plus Fed. Tax)

At better cosmetic counters



ARTRA Cosmetics, Inc., Bloomfield, N. J.

*REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. U. S. PAT. NO. 2352524

Fits your mouth precisely to clean your teeth better

● CORRECT DESIGN in a toothbrush is the secret of really clean teeth.

See from the photographs here how completely and easily Miracle-Tuft reaches every surface of every tooth—inside, outside, in between and on top. It has the famous double convex design—curves two ways. Fits your mouth precisely.

And in no other toothbrush will you find so many other quality features. Springy "Exton" brand bristling waterproofed to stay efficient longer. The extra protection of a sealed in glass container. A full year's guarantee. Isn't it wise then to use a Dr. West's Miracle-Tuft—the best toothbrush money can buy?

Copr. 1946 by Weco Products Company

HOW TO PREPARE YOUR DAUGHTER FOR A DIVORCE

(Continued from Page 175)

a healthy attitude about this most fundamental human instinct.

Mothers like Priscilla's might find it helpful to break the ice by taking their daughters to the zoo. Here they can hunt up a stork and say, "Darling, this is what does not bring babies."

VIII

ELLEN is the youngest of five children. When she reached the age of two and no other babies had shown up she said, "It looks like my inning." From that day she has ruled the roost.

Ellen is about grown up now and as spoiled as a girl can be. If she happens to marry into a family which believes in fair and equal representation, not only for its members but for "foreigners" too (just to show that it really is a broad-minded family), Ellen may have to stoop to martyrdom or playing sick to get the attention she had without effort at home.

The difficulty about adopting the role of invalid is that a husband may discover his wife sometime right after she has just washed her face, and he is bound to be disillusioned when he sees her healthy color.

The only advice to give mothers of Ellens, who have gone to the trouble of having five children, is not to have a last child.

IX

WHEN Ruth was a little girl she early displayed a measuring-cup attitude; always watching carefully to see that she got her share. Instead of nipping this unpleasant characteristic in the bud, her mother catered to Ruth's demands for extra affection, always handling her with gloves.

The green-eyed monster became Ruth's chief companion, not only at home but at school and in play, causing more than one misunderstanding and smashup of a friendship.

The monster will be sure to accompany Ruth up the aisle of the church—if she gets married. It is easy to visualize her peeking out from under the edge of her veil to see if the bridegroom is smiling at any of the bridesmaids.

Marriage will not improve Ruth, no more than clothes give a woman a figure: they simply display the figure she already has. The first thing Ruth will probably do, after she takes off the wedding veil, is to dismiss her husband's present secretary and hire another, one she has interviewed. Ruth's mother should have taught Ruth that a treasure is never truly yours until you can let loose of it.

There are thousands of minor examples showing how to guarantee that your daughter will make some husband a good divorcee: how to be sad or happy without apparent cause; when to be careless of others' feelings; how not to practice self-control, and so on.

Let us hope mothers speeding their daughters toward the goal of divorce will find some helpful hints in the above. But the subject How to Prepare Your Daughter for Marriage (one that will last) fascinates me more. I feel sure my husband would agree that after we have paid the trousseau bill for the last of our three daughters we do not want any of them back on our hands. At least, not before we take that trip to Niagara Falls we postponed in 1929.

The kind of mother who prepares her daughter for marriage, instead of divorce, must herself be emotionally mature.

She must welcome each child, love and cherish all equally and have respect for individual personalities.

She must put home first and outside interests second, remembering that "at home" isn't just a phrase used during the honeymoon.

She must not overlook the force of religion in bringing unity and happiness to her family.

DRAPERIES of Distinction

. . . patterns that adapt themselves to every type of interior decoration . . . that deftly blend in perfect color harmony . . . such are the drapery materials created by Fincastle. Fabrics of distinction, yet so reasonably priced. At good stores everywhere.

Fincastle FABRICS

LOUISVILLE TEXTILES, INC. LOUISVILLE, KY.

Now Hear Better

Beltone Mono-Pac is such a sensational advance that already tens of thousands of hard-of-hearing people have been delighted with how splendidly they hear with this tiny but powerful device. No clumsy, separate battery pack or wire!

Send Post Card Today for

FREE BOOKLET

with valuable information for hearing problems.

BELTONE HEARING AID CO., Dept. L-5

1450 W. 19th Street ▪ Chicago 8, Illinois

STOP under arm PERSPIRATION and ODOR WORRIES

FASTER! LONGER! SAFELY!

PAT ODOR AWAY IN 2-SECONDS! New 5 DAY under arm pads give 1 to 7 days protection.*

BETTER—5 DAY under arm pads are moist with an amazingly effective perspiration stopper.

KINDER to clothing and normal skin.

FASTER-NEATER—Just pat under arms and discard. Dries in seconds. No mess.

*You and the weather determine how long.

At drug and dept. stores

For Fashion . . . and Comfort, too!

● No more shoes over bare feet! Comfort, coolness, cleanliness, daintiness demand FOOTLETS when you go barelegged. Protect your feet, shoes, stockings. Perfect fit. Newest styles. Ask for genuine FOOTLETS.

J. W. LANDENBERGER & CO.
Mfrs. of Randolph Knit Anklets
Phila. 24, Pa. *Trade Mark

classic black on white magies your ankle captures his glances

Open-toe spectator in white suede with tan, blue, red calf or black patent leather tip and fox. $7.95—$8.95.

Paradise Shoes

BRAUER BROS. SHOE CO.
ST. LOUIS 8, MISSOURI

INER STORES • SORRY, NO MAIL ORDERS

VEECO
INSECT SPRAY CONTAINING DDT
FOR QUICK KNOCKDOWN,
SURE KNOCK-OUT ACTION!
Kills Flies, Mosquitoes, Roaches, Bedbugs, Waterbugs, Ants, Gnats, Silverfish, etc.

Now available for safe home use! This powerfully effective, new D.D.T. insecticide, especially prepared for home sanitation is on sale at your nearby store.

Veeco Insect Spray containing 5% D.D.T. is economically priced in 6-oz., pint and quart sizes.

If your dealer does not have it, ask him to get it for you.

THE AMERICAN PRODUCTS CO.
Manufacturing Chemists
Dept. J Cincinnati 25, Ohio

She must make use of literature, games and the dining room in keeping her family under one roof.

No room which brings a family together without cramping its freedom can be called an "economic waste." Eating in corners—kitchen, alcove, end of living room—encourages the speed and haste of present-day life by hurrying the family out of the house in the quickest possible time. If extra space, as represented by the dining room, cannot be afforded, then, instead of using a corner of the living room for the dining room, a corner of the dining room should be used for the living room.

This mother must teach the children that work is a necessary and satisfying part of life, and furnish them with full opportunities for using their particular capabilities, all the way from emptying the garbage to painting pictures.

She must encourage affection and companionship among the members of her family, at the same time expecting the harmony to be tempered with a normal amount of friction. (Friction, if controlled, is like the grain of sand in an oyster which eventually produces the pearl.)

As her goal, she must know that if it can be said of her children, "They come from a good and happy home," she has furnished them with the best of all possible credentials for marriage.

---

He's a fool that makes his doctor his heir.
He that complains has too much.
No man is ever any better than he wants to be.

—ELBERT HUBBARD: From Selected Writings of Elbert Hubbard. (W. H. Wise & Co.)

---

Since those three daughters of mine are, still, each in one stage or another and none through all, I do not think it will sound like testifying to grace in an old-fashioned prayer meeting if I list a few of the things which, by some future date, I hope to have taught them:

1. A wedding ring should slip on more easily than it slides off.
2. To love another person carries obligations, just as owning land requires the owner to replenish the soil regularly and pay the taxes yearly.
3. A sense of humor in marriage is like a fuse in an electric circuit: ties it together and prevents overloading.
4. No man enjoys sketchy housekeeping: a line here, a dash there. Once "Home, Sweet Home," in this country, was embroidered in needle-point by women who really worked to make a success of family life.
5. Marriage is not a fifty-fifty proposition, but a sixty-forty setup in favor of the man. Early acceptance of this fact would make many wives happy.
6. Unselfish love delights in the happiness of the person loved without making excessive demands upon his life.
7. Marriage means living with the whole person. All men (and women) are difficult at times.
8. A woman, young or old, who is sweetened with a little humility, even when she goes forth to cast her vote, is nice to have around.
9. The ideal woman is the wise, gentle and firm mother.
10. Most restrictions in marriage are imposed in order to keep husbands and wives happy with each other, not to interfere with happiness.
11. Conventional attitudes toward religion, sex and drinking are best.
12. Marriage deals with facts, courtship with fancies.

And I hope to teach my daughters a feeling for the mystery and beauty of marriage, a feeling for what it is like to be in a husband's working shoes (as well as his house slippers) and a keen desire to enjoy family life, and make the most of what they have.

Take a bow in

Leading Lady Red

Gay, new excitement for lips, cheeks and fingertips.

Avon's Leading Lady Red is a clear, brilliant red—perfect with the frosty pastels and gay freedom colors of this Spring.

Your Avon Representative will bring it to you.

Welcome her when she calls. Be a hostess to loveliness.

Avon cosmetics
AT RADIO CITY, NEW YORK

A HOUSE TO FIT THE FAMILY

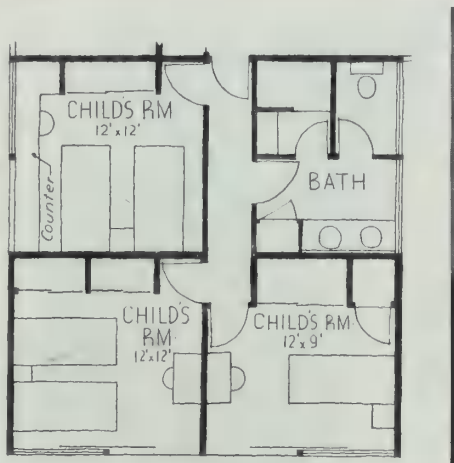
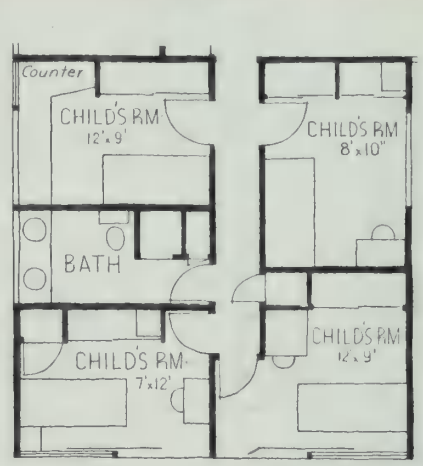
SOME floor plans are practically human. You look at one like this and you can almost see the people. And you can tell that in this case life is pretty pleasant for them all. It doesn't matter, within reason, how many children. The house would handle four or five quite easily, and could manage more. And every place is planned so that parents and children can be together when they want, yet can have their privacy when they prefer to be apart. Take the living room, where the space has been so adroitly manipulated that grownups and youngsters can have the fun of sharing the room while enjoying themselves in two different groups—one quiet, one gay; as fine a formula for happy family life as it is for a successful party, where music and dancing can go along with conversation. And because plain space by itself can be the least expensive ingredient in the house of tomorrow, the architect has shown here how without being wasteful it is possible to widen what would otherwise be a narrow passageway and make it a sunny pleasant place for play or lounging on rainy or winter days. Thus a hall becomes a solarium that connects all the parts of the house; at one end the living wing, at the other the sleeping quarters, and in between the kitchen, laundry and dining or study—not one part interfering even slightly with another. Translated into daily living, this skillful arrangement of rooms makes caring for a considerable household a matter of great convenience for all concerned.



The children's-bedroom section gives us a chance to look behind the scenes and take in the wide variety of arrangements it is possible to get in a modern design where the layout is entirely for living and a house is planned for people only, and not at all to fit the pattern of a period style. With nothing to consider but livability, the architect here shows four of many ways to tailor the space to fit four or five children of various ages; the most unusual arrangement being that on the complete floor plan across the page, where the children share a large room that can be divided at will by a folding partition, and where two anterooms are provided for dressing and study. Note, too, the cleverly divided double-duty bath, which can take prompt care of little people getting ready in a hurry.

The same original planning carries through the parents' room, which contains a couch for resting and reading—a cozy retiring spot for a mother to know she can be completely alone when she's in the mood. And in the kitchen-laundry room the task of preparing a main family meal while giving the youngest children their supper is made so convenient that what might otherwise be quite an undertaking becomes a really simple operation.



In other words, throughout the house, the whole purpose is to shelter and fit a family, be comfortable, convenient and pleasant. That's why the house looks the way it does—simple, honest, direct and finely shaped, adding up to the best kind of beauty I know.

THREE FURTHER WAYS TO FIT THE CHILDREN'S WING TO VARIOUS AGES, SEXES, NUMBERS.

Two doubles and one single for a family with five children, and a bath that can handle all.

Each of four children can have his own room in this arrangement—own closets, own desks.

Own rooms for two children; two younger ones in a large room with folding partition.

A house like this can be fun to live in

You come in from the street under the protection of the car port to an entry that leads both to living room and kitchen; or in through kitchen garden to laundry. The plan tells what you do after that.

NK, ARCHITECT; HOUSE MODEL BY RAYMOND BARGER STUDIOS; SETTING AND PHOTOGRAPH BY PRATT.

d fun to live out from too. BY RICHARD PRATT

Clara Dudley says:

"You've never bought so much for so little"

Mrs. T. Gilbert Sharpe
SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS

"Clara Dudley's statement about the low cost of soft, warm rugs in every room is certainly borne out when you go to the store and price Alexander Smith Floor-Plan Rugs. I am sure that every floor in the average home can be covered, without missing a bedroom, for less than $400."

All of us look forward to the time when the hush of soft, soundless rugs or carpet will replace the clatter of heels on bare floors. We promise ourselves that in every room piquant color shall play its proper role, right down to the floor.

But have you ever figured out how easily you can afford to realize this dream of luxuriously covered floors, from reception hall to bedrooms?

You can buy Alexander Smith Floor-Plan Rugs on a budget basis, just as you buy a car. See the new Alexander Smith colors and designs at the store. You'll be surprised to find that you can bring this restful refinement to your home for as little as 50¢ a foot.

For your copy of Clara Dudley's free booklet, "It's Fun To Do Over With Color," write to Alexander Smith & Sons, Dept. A-6, 285 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

CARPET MAKES IT HOME

ALEXANDER SMITH
FLOOR-PLAN RUGS • BROADLOOM CARPETS

PERHAPS YOU'LL SEE, SOMEDAY

(Continued from Page 30)

Into Baxter's office and into the picture came Laura Sibley, quiet, ladylike, twenty-six. To explode a bombshell. "I am the daughter," she said, "of Gavin Blayr. I can prove it."

What began as a case concerning the claims of two women became a duel between Baxter Denning and Hugh Rohn, a duel which caught the public fancy, which headlined the morning news and packed the courtroom with eager spectators day after day.

Baxter Denning knew exactly when it was that it became clear to him he must defeat Hugh Rohn, no matter what the effort. It was the day he'd seen Stephanie in the courtroom with a group of her friends and had watched her absorbed interest in Hugh Rohn's brilliant cross-examination of a witness. When she had come in she had smiled at him, but now with a grave intentness she was leaning forward, hanging on every word the other man was speaking. It was then he knew he had to wrest this victory from Rohn before all of them; if he lost he was losing Stephanie.

A woman writer assigned to cover the case typed the two men. Rohn: alert, cat-quick, sharp as a rapier. Baxter Denning: the dangerous strength of a heavy sword. The courtier and the knight opposed.

And no one knowing that it was hate that lit the flame of Baxter's eloquence.

He was merciless in his attack upon Naida Blayr. Before an absorbed jury he made her twist and hedge and rage. He caught her in lies and tripped her on facts; he made out Gavin Blayr a sick old man, helpless against the designs of a scheming woman and her youthful lover. And he was oblivious of the hate that blazed at him from her dark eyes.

The days passed, each wringing him dry of effort. But at last came the tenseness of the closing drama. Seeing the jury forward in their seats, glances locked to his; seeing the white-faced rigidity of Naida Blayr, a fortune slipping from her grasp—a fortune that meant the first real love she had ever dared permit herself; seeing Hugh Rohn with sweat beading his forehead. And driving home his advantage, word by word.

THE victory was a dynamic thing. Never afterward would Baxter forget the hushed courtroom, the filing in of the jury, the verdict—in favor of Laura Sibley.

He was aware of the drained look on Hugh Rohn's face, of the cameo of Stephanie's profile and, as part of the picture though unimportant, Naida Blayr's slow rising from her seat, her burning gaze upon him. He heard her cry something, but he was thinking of victory; he did not see the gun until too late. There was a blinding flash, then oblivion.

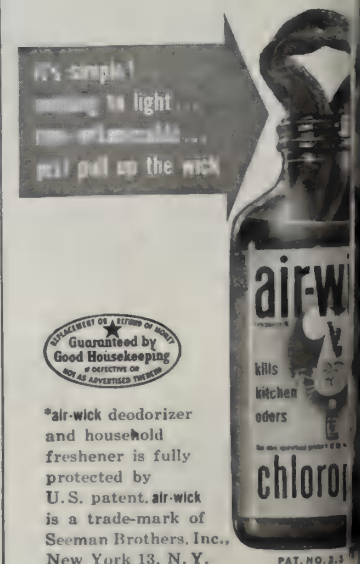
He awakened to pain, to blackness, to whispers; to the pressure of a hand holding his own. To Stephanie's voice, "It's all right, Bax; I'm here, right here."

He floated timelessly in a half-world. He had no awareness of days, but slowly he began to grow conscious of unchanging darkness.

The day the doctor told him the truth he wished that he might die. The bullet sped by Naida Blayr's hate had blinded him.

It was too terrible to grasp all at once. Shocked beyond speech, he lay there. Then, as a wave heard far off rolls nearer, nearer, in an ever-increasing crescendo, the realization swept in upon him. Hugh Rohn was the victor after all.

Stephanie came so quietly that he was aware of her more through the scent of her perfume than through sound. She kissed him and her lips were warm and gentle against his own.



Stephanie spoke first. "The doctor has told you, Bax."

He nodded silently. Her fingers curled around his own, warm, pliant, yet somehow strong. He gave no answering pressure, but held himself rigid, still.

why risk offending?..

air-wick

kills cooking odo smoking odo bathroom odors... freshens stuffy close nurseries, sick rooms.
makes indoor air "country-fres

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

*air-wick deodorizer and household freshener is fully protected by U.S. patent. air-wick is a trade-mark of Seeman Brothers, Inc., New York 13, N. Y.

PAT. NO. 2,3 ighten Your Home with NYSTIC

FOAM
Modern Cleaner for HOLSTERY, RUGS
ND FINE FABRICS

r Auto
ry, Too

ready to use. No muss, fuss or dust.
won't burn or explode, non-poisonous.
n 30 minutes—can't leave rings. Has r and leaves none. Used by airlines, ds and famous hotels. Don't confuse Foam with products having similar e or with "something you once tried."
r department, hardware, paint or y store doesn't have Mystic Foam, t it for you—or, send us his name dress.

STIC FOAM CORP.
veland 14, Ohio

Try Mystic Foam's
Kid Sister . . .
MYSTIC ZIP
leans walls, woodwork, tian blinds, etc. No mix-
. . no rinsing . . . no drying.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
ADVERTISED IN AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION PUBLICATIONS
GUARANTEED BY PARENTS' MAGAZINE

STIC FOAM
o Well So Easily . . . and Far So Little

"I wanted him to let me tell you, Bax, but"—she paused, and his ears, already grown keen, caught a tinge of bitterness in her tone—"he thought I shouldn't. But I wanted to be the one to tell you, Bax."

He brought the words out levelly by an effort of will. "You knew from the first, of course."

"Yes. I thought they should not be so long in telling you. I wanted you to know that between us we shall make it so that it will not matter."

"There is no hope, then?"

She said quietly, "I shall never stop hoping, for your sake; for mine it will make no difference."

A hard tremor shook him in his effort to keep from clinging to her hands. He heard the whisper of starched skirts, the soft hiss of the air brake on the door.

Stephanie said, "Yes—yes, I'm going, nurse." He felt her breath on his face, her kiss on his lips. "As soon as they will let me I shall be back, darling."

His mouth framed the word "good-by." He listened for the sound of the door. He said, "She's gone."

Before the nurse could answer, the shivering commenced through him. It seized his body, shook it beyond his control. Cold was creeping over him like a rising tide. He thought, If I can die now ——

Fingers touched his wrist. He heard activity in the room, felt the frigid wetness of an alcohol swab that presaged the plunge of a hypodermic needle; he struck out blindly against succor he did not want. He lost. He felt the jab of the needle. He began to sob, wildly, terribly, crying out things, the awful things of fear and agony he had vowed would never pass his lips.

There are very few sounds in the natural world that are harsh. Even the massive rolling of thunder has about it something of solemn beauty. In anthems the sea rolls on the beach; and in the sunny shallows there are water harps forever making melodies. The wind is a chorister. Many a wild bird can warble like an aerial rivulet. The world is really a melodious place, full of soft sounds and harmony. Man makes it riotous and blatant.

—ARCHIBALD RUTLEDGE:
Little Things That Linger.

Death sought, drew back. The process of living faced Baxter Denning. To all appearances he accepted that. But at the very center of his consciousness was a slowly hardening core of determination. Never would he hold Stephanie slave through pity to the needs, the demands of his blindness. Losing her, which once had seemed the epitome of all that was terrifying, was less now than the unendurable knowledge that she might be held against her will. He had long days and longer nights to formulate his plan carefully.

The bullet wound in his head was healed. This was the day of his hospital departure. He waited in a frenzy of impatience for Stephanie. When she came she was gay, laughing.

"Isn't it wonderful, darling, that today you're going home?"

They went into the corridor together. She did not seem to be guiding him, yet her light touch assured his direction. The elevator took them down; they emerged at last into the warm sunlight.

"I'm parked over here," Stephanie said. "Doesn't everything smell good?"

The movement of the car seemed strange: feeling the surge of starting, the pressure of turns; hearing things rush by.

But soon now they'd be in the house in Matthias Wood. So long in his mind he'd gone over the location of things; it seemed that automatically he could execute his plan. The relationship of the garage to the house; the operation of the doors. Not soon enough

(Continued on Page 223)

NOW Sealy OFFERS YOU YOUR CHOICE...
...either the Innerspring

The results of constant research and 65 years of "Know How" give luxurious comfort to these new innerspring mattresses by Sealy

...or the AIR-WOVEN Tuftless

The choice of over 3 generations of users who appreciate the body cradling comfort of this truly different mattress

SEE THEM BOTH
TRY THEM BOTH
Your Sealy Dealer Will Be Pleased to Help You Pick the One Best Suited to Your Sleeping Requirements.

"Sleeping on a Sealy is like Sleeping on a Cloud"

SEALY INC. 666 LAKE SHORE DRIVE — CHICAGO 11, ILLINOIS

"GRANDMA, YOU'VE GOT EVERYTHING!"

With equipment such as this, Grandma surely has "what it takes" to please everyone—with fancy ice creams or with just plain taste-tempting foods, properly preserved. Contributing to the abundant measure of satisfaction that comes from owning a Norge is the world-famous Rollator "cold-maker"; the sealed freezer and frozen-food storage unit; the Hydrovoir; the Coldpack; the Handefroster; the Lazilatch door handle. Norge dealers are listed under "REFRIGERATORS" in the classified section of your phone book . . . visit one of them and get all the interesting facts about the new Rollator refrigerators and the other Norge products of experience: home and farm freezers, electric ranges, gas ranges, home heaters and Ro-ta-tor washers. Norge has good news—Norge IS good news—for those who understand the real economy of investing in home appliances of highest quality.

Norge discovered and developed the famous Rollator—the amazing principle of better refrigeration with only three moving parts, permanently sealed and operating in a bath of oil. The result is less current consumption, longer life, greater economy. A roller rolls, and there's ice!

A BORG-WARNER INDUSTRY

Norge is the trade-mark of Norge Division, Borg-Warner Corporation, Detroit 26, Michigan
In Canada: Addison Industries, Limited, Toronto, Ontario

SEE NORGE BEFORE YOU BUY

(Continued from Page 221)

e suspicion, but soon he would exese things, learn to move quietly. His iliarity with the house would make laxed a little. It was as if, looking e height of his intention toward the ion of a plan, the present took on ng of the quality of a dream. He go of fear in a dream, dare to be him-said, "It does smell good." He had embered that streets smelled like ey were driving slowly, but still it ng a long time. Without sight, how udge one was of distance.

anie kept up conversation and his at-was caught as his quickened senses p tension in her tone. "We're almost ax."
aced himself for the sharp left turn paved driveway of his home. But had turned right and was spraying Then it came to a stop. He smelled lossoms, heavily sweet. He sat up , his heart pounding in his chest.
re are we, Steph-

e home. This is w, Bax. I rented place; we didn't re are we?" His mbled.

and covered his,
fingers were un-
"In the Valley," him. "I found this ax; I loved it on
's an acre. The back from the ong the orange
you smell them? e are three huge

he said. "No, you have. I've got here I am, where when I want to
und. I've got to,
."
—her voice strove him—"I'm here,
'll be with you."
t bring you down
ome dinky little
."
autiful," she said
I was sure we appy here."
t to know——"
ow you every-
. You'll see it ny eyes." Her on his arm.
out, let's go in."
the thudding of d here comes Clancy. Bax, we've Boxer pup."

ays passed Baxter developed a uld once have scorned to possess.
e asked Stephanie she was will-ger to show him.
see, now. I do all right in the t you think?"
doing marvelously, Bax. Really, ard you come out. I was sitting sun——"
what, Stephanie?"
t sitting. Thinking, I suppose."
. It went through him, that inking—about what?"
ed. "Oh, I don't know. Wonders, if petunias would look better there than verbenas."
up! He knew. He could play the gh, until the time came. "Petu-. Rosy Morn with an edging of hites."
'd be beautiful."
der them. Now—if I turn here I he garage, don't I?"
No, darling—about six steps
the turn. Want to walk out?
s are getting ripe. Our one tree."
've got to get the hang of things know. I'm likely to be making a to that apricot tree. I——"

"Oh, Bax, I'm sorry! That was a stupid place to put that pot. I did it because Clancy always took a short cut across the lobelia."

"Didn't hurt myself. Was going too fast, I guess." He forced a laugh. "Anyway, by the time Clancy comes back from the training school he'll have learned to walk on paths."

Stephanie laughed. "Poor Clancy. I never dreamed his affection for you, Bax, would be so—so overwhelming."

INSTANTLY that first day, upon meeting Clancy, Baxter had decided that the dog must be dispensed with until —— He couldn't have a dog spoiling his plans, his deep intention. And Clancy, six months old, would not permit Baxter out of his sight. But his joyous affection had made it difficult for Baxter to move about in safety. The first time Clancy had tripped him it had been accidental; the next time he permitted himself to be thrown off balance, though he had heard the approaching paws.

Stephanie, frightened, had acceded so willingly to the suggestion that the dog be sent away for several weeks' training.

"Oh, you're right, Bax; we can't have him leaping up, running in front of you. It's my fault, but I never had a dog before and I'm afraid I don't know how to train him. But I like Clancy, Bax; he kept me from getting too lonely while you were in the hospital."

"Let's get on out by the garage, shall we?" he said now. "You have me hankering after that apricot tree."

Twelve steps, turn right . . . fifteen more.

"There, Bax! The door pull is right in front of you."

He took it, raised the counterbalanced door. His voice when he spoke sounded strange in his own ears.

"How about the windows in here? You keep them shut?"

"Why, I haven't, Bax." There was inquiry in her tone.

"Should," he said. "Shut tight. Black widows get in. They multiply fast. It's hard to see them; if you touch that tough web they're often savage."

"They'll bite?"

"If they're protecting eggs they'll attack," he told her.

"Oh, Bax, I'll close every window! And you get right out of here until I can examine the whole place."

"You're not to worry about me." He closed his hand over the warm one that impulsively grasped his own. For a crazy instant something was between them, something intangible, but it made his heart lunge.

Then the imperative summons of a car horn sounded in the driveway. "Oh! Wait, I'll see." Stephanie was gone. He heard her calling, then she returned to him. "It's Mary Arbruster." She did not sound pleased.

She guided him back along the way they had come, but her fingers on his arm were tense. At the patio he said, feeling for his chair, "I'm all right now."

"I know she won't stay long." Stephanie's quick steps moved away from him again.

Mary Arbruster's had always been a clear carrying voice. It came to him now across the lawn. "Darling! Where have you been keeping yourself? We've missed you so. Steffie, you've got so thin. You look as if you'd been drawn through a knothole and ——"

He knew, if he couldn't see, that the voice ceased abruptly because of Stephanie's warning hush. Then it took up again, gay, nonsensical, as the visitor came toward him.

Corner Table

By Ethel Jacobson

The corner table
Was ours that day.
The music was faint
And far away,
The lights were dim
And flattering pink . . .
And we had flamingo
mousse,
I think,
And stars whipped up
In a sapphire bowl,
And a sunrise cloud
En casserole,
And sugared rose leaves,
And hyacinth dew
In a pearl-rimmed beaker—
With straws for two.

How long we sat
In that rosy glow
And smiled, and sipped,
I'll never know,
For the corner table
Was heaven that day
And everything else
Was worlds away.

■ Life in the kitchen is happier when you cook the Revere "waterless" way. You use the very lowest heat, save fuel costs, keep your kitchen cooler. You preserve the flavor and health values of your food. You cut down spoilage and shrinkage. After use, the pot-and-pan-cleaning is unbelievably easy. No wonder millions of women (nearly a million more just this year) will use nothing but the original Revere Ware. The thick copper bottom is bonded to the stainless steel by a unique, patented process. It can never come off. That's why, no matter what your budget, Revere copper-clad stainless steel ware is the economical buy. There is no replacement cost. So be sure always to look for the Revere trade-mark on the bottom.

Revere COPPER-CLAD STAINLESS STEEL Ware

REVERE COPPER AND BRASS INCORPORATED
Rome Manufacturing Company Division
Rome, New York

Listen to Exploring the Unknown on the Mutual Network every Sunday evening, 9:00 to 9:30 p.m., EDST.

TAPPAN... key to Kitchen Freedom

SO BEAUTIFUL— streamlined, sparkling, easy to clean and keep clean . . . a Tappan transforms a kitchen into a bright and pleasant place!

SO CONVENIENT—

TAPPAN'S VISUALITE OVEN lets you see entire baking process without opening the oven door! Reflection from the sparkling chrome-plated oven lining speeds and circulates heat, imparts uniform brownness to food.

TAPPAN'S FAMOUS DIVIDED-TOP permits use of all 4 burners without crowding . . . provides plenty of cool work space in center . . . makes it easy to reach utensils on rear burners in comfort and safety.

TAPPAN'S SIMMERSET BURNERS make low-cost meats taste like "high-priced-choice"... coax out tenderness and flavor... grand, too, for waterless cooking.

. . . and you can have a Tappan wherever you live!
There are specially engineered Tappans for L.P. Gas users out beyond the gas mains!
Build your New Freedom Gas Kitchen around a modern TAPPAN . . . you'll always be delighted that you did!
The Tappan Stove Company, Department J, Mansfield, Ohio.

TAPPAN
Gas Ranges
Established 1881

WHEN GOOD COOKS GET TOGETHER...TAPPAN'S THE TOPIC

He rose, smiling a greeting. Mary took his outstretched hand, dropped it uncertainly. Then she exploded into superlatives. "Baxter, how simply marvelous you look. And Stephanie too. This place must be absolutely perfect for you. It's adorable!"

That night Stephanie said, "I'm afraid today has tired you, Bax. Mary buzzes so. But she's really devoted."

He was glad to get to bed, but for hours he lay there, listening to Stephanie's breathing, while all that had gone to make up the day surged back and forth through his thought. For that single crazy moment out there by the garage it had seemed —— Then Mary's shocked words to Stephanie churned over and over in his mind, over and over.

He drove himself after that. He insisted, with an invincible patience, on finding his way alone about the house, the grounds. Under guise of visiting the apricot tree he practiced that walk to the garage a hundred times, until he knew where even a twig projected into the path.

The days slipped by, the heaven of them and the hurt of them bound up together. He loved Stephanie so much, and that made it hard to leave her; but he loved her too greatly to cripple her future.

There were long hours in the sun when he and Stephanie talked together and he tried to interpret every nuance of meaning in the inflections of her voice; hours sometimes when—because it was near the end—he played a game with himself and pretended life was all that it appeared to be on the surface.

"Bax," Stephanie said one evening, "remember once you told me that when you were younger you felt you might someday be able to write? Only you pushed it aside for your law."

"I remember. It's an idea everyone has, I suppose."

"I don't believe that. You've an aptness of expression, Bax; a clarity. Wouldn't it be fun to try? We could ——"

"We?"

"I'd take it down for you. Not very fast, but I could learn."

He felt a hot fullness in his throat. "There is nothing you wouldn't do for me, is there, Stephanie?"

"Nothing, Bax."

"I'm your husband, eh?"

She said it after him slowly, "You're my husband."

He caught her to him then. His kiss was savage, bitter.

It was next morning that Stephanie turned from the telephone, her voice excited. "It was the trainer; Clancy can come home. Oh, Bax, I've been lonesome for Clancy. When? Tomorrow—about three."

THEN later that day, coming in, letting the screen door close noiselessly on its air check, Baxter heard Stephanie again telephoning. Her voice was low, distressed.

"No, Hugh, not out here." Then, after a minute, "There is nothing I can do, right now."

Baxter turned away, feeling ahead of him as when he had first become blind. His senses swam, but in his consciousness one thing stood clear. Tonight.

He waited for evening with a sort of eagerness, for suddenly he was tired, too tired to go on any longer. He would not attempt to leave a note; words could never convey what Stephanie meant to him. The obvious interpretation was best: a man who did not desire to live, denied his sight.

Never had he been more conscious of Stephanie than as they sat together after dinner and he carefully visioned in his mind each detail of her beauty.

It was she who said at last, "It's late, Bax. Time to call it a day, don't you think?"

Time to call it a day. He had risen at her touch on his arm and gone with her. He did not need her guidance; he knew his way, every step of it.

For a long while after they had gone he listened to her breathing, heard it at last the slow rhythm of deep sleep. Cautiously he sat up, eased himself fr bed, drew up the covers bulkily to g illusion of occupancy.

His finger tips seemed vibrant as his way, their touch sure and infor Into the hall, out through the fron across the patio, around to the pa moved slowly, carefully, silently as a s His heart gave a crazy jerk when at touched the handle of the garage doo rise, lightly balanced, to his touch. H in and closed it behind him, move the side of the car, opened the door

Beside him Stephanie spoke, he shaken. "I have the key, Bax."

The shock of it jerked through hir he cried savagely, "Give it to me! to me! What right have you ——" T horror of it stopped him.

HER voice was deep, almost emo "What right have I to stop your your life? The right to keep on figh what I want—even if I never get it

"I—I don't know what you mean

"No, Bax, you've never known blind now, but you were blind w could see."

"Stephanie ——"

"Too blind to see that I love you, always loved you. You've looked at what did you see? The woman w you? No, you saw my face. There times I've hated you for it. It's wh one has seen always—my face," she "It's stood between me and every wo thing I've ever wanted."

"But, Ste you're beau you're ——"

"Yes, I'm bea a child I couldn rough-and-tumb other children might get dirty get hurt. Whe up my mother told me, 'A man you for your beauty.' It was a m commodity. I was never allowed it. Only, somehow, I thought yo me, the real me. But you've never that me. I've been someone you g to, things and more things. You've s me with things."

"But, Stephanie ——"

"Be quiet and let me say it. Yo me nothing of yourself, only th hated every other man who look They were nothing to me, for the blind as you. Only Hugh Rohn thing else. He said once, 'Steph lieve you have a soul.' For a whil I could love him because of th couldn't; he knew I couldn't. H friend, though, a good friend. H be—ours."

"Stephanie, how was I to know

She continued as if he had n "When they told me you would grieved for you, Bax, but not for thought that now you'd learn to the real me. I thought I loved yo make up for everything. I thou circumvent this. You see, I knew at the hospital you made clear tion. Every moment I've wa There've been nights I've never been afraid to. All the time I' thinking that you'd come to Suddenly her voice broke. "Oh— ish and you're stupid and you're felt her body sag beside him and ing as if her heart were broken.

He was unaware of the mo which he took her in his arms. time there were no words, he coul When they came he knew thei adequacy. He said, "No, I'm not any more. I'll never be blind ag

A blind man, talking incongru dark. But she found nothing s She said, with a little gulped sob hausted child, "Oh, Bax—Bax, y

He answered with complete "Yes, I see."

It's a funny thing that a man always has to tell a woman he loves her, while everyone else knows without being told. —ANON.

long-lasting beauty...yours for the waxing!

ke his luggage (and yours!) honeymoon-bright with genuine ison's Wax. You'll find the wax gives it a lovely lustre, and pre-s it from getting badly scuffed or marred. There are more than extra uses for Johnson's Wax in your home—for venetian blinds, low sills, picture frames, etc.

Mac's scratchy nails and muddy paws don't faze the floors you keep gleaming-clean with Johnson's Wax. Cleaning waxed floors is so easy... a light dusting and they shine like mirrors! And their lustrous beauty increases with each application.

Junior miss will be a better homemaker for learning that beautiful furniture is more beautiful with a shining coat of Johnson's Wax. The wax brings out the lovely grain of the wood as nothing else does... actually preserves its beauty by protecting it from wear and dirt. Your favorite Johnson's Wax makes housework easier... your home more enviable.

Remember! Tuesday night is the big night on the radio! Tune in Fibber McGee and Molly, NBC.

Look for WAX-O-NAMEL
Trademark Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.
on the Equipment You Buy

The Johnson's Wax laboratories have successfully blended high-quality enamel with wax. The result, WAX-O-NAMEL, a patented product, is a superior finish used by manufacturers to give new household equipment richer beauty, extra protection, and make cleaning easier.

e Famous Johnson Polishes: Paste Wax, Liquid Wax
rm Wax, Self-Polishing Glo-Coat, Carnu for Cars

S. C. Johnson & Son, Inc., Racine, Wisconsin, 1946

What to do...
IF YOU NEED A NEW MATTRESS

1. The best thing to do . . . is to wait until Beautyrest is back!

For, remember, a mattress is one of the most important purchases you ever make. It's an investment in rest . . . in comfort . . . in well-being. So it pays to buy wisely!

And what could be wiser than waiting a while longer . . . when that waiting will bring you at least ten glorious years of "luxury comfort"—with Beautyrest!

2. "Inside Story" comparison! On the outside, mattresses look pretty much alike. It's what's inside that counts! In the ordinary inner-spring mattress, coil springs are tied together, go down together, forming hollows.

But Beautyrest's 837 coil springs are not tied together, act independently. Each separately cushions your hips, shoulders, legs . . . gives you gloriously buoyant comfort! Isn't it wiser to wait for this?

3. Comfort you can count on! After a few years, some mattresses lose their "looks" and "let you down." But not Beautyrest. It does not sag, get lumpy or out of shape. Its patented "sag-proof" border stays neat, firm, resilient. (That's why Beautyrest needs turning no more than 4 or 5 times a year.)

Eight special side ventilators keep it fresh and sanitary, too. Isn't it wiser to wait for a mattress like this?

4. "Million Dollar" luxury—1¢ a night! It's seldom y get a bargain when you buy a luxury—but Beau rest is both!

Over its 10 guaranteed years of luxurious comfor yes, 10 guaranteed years—all it costs is about 1¢ night.

How little to pay for the world's most comforta mattress! More reason why it's so much wiser to wa and invest in a Beautyrest!

It's wiser to wait for BEAUTYREST*—The World's Most Comfortable Mattress!

Made by SIMMONS COMPANY
("MAKER OF THE ELECTRONIC BLANKET")

*REG. U.S. PATENT OFFICE

A Roomful of Ideas

PHOTO BY ANDRE KERTESZ

PENNY-EASY, BEAUTY-WISE! THERE'S NOTHING LIKE THE MAGIC OF GAY SLIP COVERING AND THE CLEAN BRIGHT LOOK OF NEW-PAINTED WALLS TO CHANGE A ROOM'S PERSONALITY. THIS ONE HAS ITSELF A FRESH SPRING WARDROBE—IT MIGHT AS WELL BE YOURS. By H. T. Williams

IN the transformation of this room the color idea came first, and you can see for yourself how the simple recipe of pink and blue-green succeeded. Further effort to get a really fresh effect included the minor operation of replacing an awkward heavy chimney piece with the clean-cut facing that now frames the fireplace. And to create new architectural character in the window wall, which had that familiar and difficult dead-end appearance, a pair of clear-pine louvered screens was used to flank the wide window and build up at the same time an interesting background for the whole room. These were the basic ideas that set the room's new personality. But the rest were definitely more than mere details. The color of the extra-wide armless chairs, upholstered in sailcloth, was carried over to the sofa by means of a slip cover in the same material, and the color of the wall, which is flat white with vermilion to taste, finds effective repetition in cushions, lamp shade and accessories. The off-white inexpensive cotton rug, which comes in three-foot squares to be sewed together for the size you want, is an idea for texture and also for a neutral base to set off the mottled-lacquer tea table with its moistureproof finish. An idea that adds to the new inviting quality of the room is the grouping for games or writing by the window—the Biedermeier fruitwood table, the officers' chairs with their wall-pink leather seats, and the little leather-cushioned kibitzer's bench. Ideas that complete the room are still important in the general scheme. One collector's item can make itself felt—in this case the antique gilt barometer above the fireplace. And remember that a room is finished only when there are books and magazines and flowers.

THOSE CHERISHED HOURS... Recordio KEEPS forever yours

Recordio captures forever the lilt of a child's voice, a husband's tenor, a mother's song . . . or reproduces the immortal haunting beauty of a brilliant overture played across the world . . . recorded from either radio or microphone with an exquisite beauty and magical fidelity never heard before.

Distinguished performance of the RECORDIO radio and phonograph gives deep, increasing pleasure . . . but the recorder adds significance and priceless wealth to living . . . for, at fingertip touch of a single control, it captures forever precious colorful fragments from the tapestry of your life and reproduces them at your wish.

The RECORDIO dealer in your city offers you a gift. He invites you to stop in and make your own recording, to capture forever a few minutes of your life today for a wonderful memory tomorrow.

WORLD'S FINEST HOME RECORDING INSTRUMENT

Recordio

TRADE MARK REGISTERED

by WILCOX-GAY CORPORATION
CHARLOTTE • MICHIGAN

For Highest Fidelity Recording...Use RECORDIO DISCS, RECORDIOPOINT Cutting and Playback Needl

WHAT MUSIC ARE YOU LIKE?*

BY MARGUERITE BARZE

YOU have heard of the person who has "rings on her fingers and bells on her toes, and she shall make music wherever she goes." Nothing is said about the kind of music, except that it is made with bells. But isn't it true that everyone makes some sort of music for others to hear? One person seems like a symphony, another is reminiscent of a carol. What type of music does your personality make? Is it that of a rhythmic waltz or more like an old-fashioned ballad?

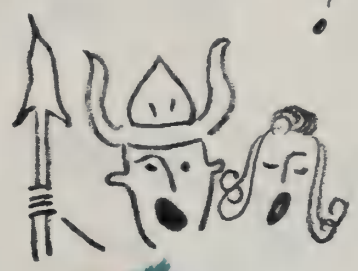
To find out what music you are most like, check the following chart. Read the first word in each line—there are seventeen—and without much ado check one of the three words that follow it. Check the one that seems to you to fit most naturally with the first word. Don't ponder too long—do it quickly. Further instructions follow the chart.

| | A | B | C |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1. APPLE | peel | red | tree |
| 2. BABY | bottle | cuddle | cry |
| 3. CAKE | bake | party | candles |
| 4. FRIEND | deed | need | trust |
| 5. GARDEN | seeds | flowers | weeds |
| 6. GRAPES | jelly | purple | arbor |
| 7. HOUSE | build | family | shelter |
| 8. IRON | clothes | burn | metal |
| 9. LETTER | mail | write | postage |
| 10. LIFE | work | love | knowledge |
| 11. MUSIC | practice | melody | technique |
| 12. ORANGE | grove | blossoms | juice |
| 13. PASTIME | tinker | visit | read |
| 14. SCHOOL | study | teacher | books |
| 15. TWILIGHT | weary | lonely | dream |
| 16. WAR | fight | enemy | death |
| 17. WOODS | walk | picnic | freedom |

Now find out how many words you have checked in each column. If you have as many as 9 in any one column, you are in that group and no other. If you do not have as many as 9, you are in those groups in which you have as many as 5 check marks. For example: 10 in A, 2 in B and 5 in C would make a person an A; while 4 in A, 6 in B and 7 in C would make a person a BC.

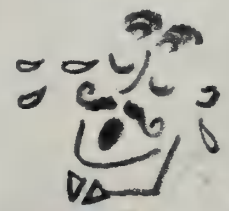
A

You are like the BLUES, the name we have chosen to represent popular music that is down-to-earth and alive to the present. Your primary purpose is to convey common thought and feeling, by workaday magic, by obvious or primeval symbols. Sometimes your boisterous, bittersweet rhythm is earthy enough to curl one's hair. Don't let your insistence on a practical, tangible outlook turn your music into a racket.



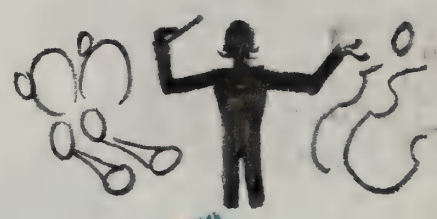
AB

You are like a CAROL, a lyrical song of holiday gladness or solemn devotion. Youthful and simple in spirit, you refuse to let any of the intricacies of theory or technique bother you. Like children who have been let out of school at recess, your music has a springlike, out-of-doors feeling and is hale and buoyant no matter whose tender grass it may trample. But don't go too far with your wide-eyed, childlike approach to life, for if you do it will turn into an act.



AC

You are like a WALTZ, that reflective unsung music, energetic yet soothing, that whispers of mystery and grace. But the personal intimacy of your composition may not touch the heart, so that too many people are only scenery to you, or audience. Now old-fashioned and stately, now gay and rippling, you are an intriguing alternation of serious playfulness and playful seriousness. In fun the variety is delightful, but watch out—you might give the impression of being trivial if you push the constant-nymph role too far.



ABC

You are like the OPERA, a complex recitative whose many-sided personality gives dramatic power. But your impassioned expression, its force and vigor, may seem to some like hysterical frenzy, as if you were drunk with the wine of life, or ego. Now comic and full of charming horseplay, now genuine art, intense and tragic, you have a tonic effect upon others. It's all right to be dramatic, but don't be overpowering.

B

You are like a BALLAD, a melodic, poetic music that is sympathetic and understanding. Now mirroring humor, now warm with sentiment, your theme goes straight to the heart with its human, homelike appeal. Some miss the fire and fury in a music so tranquil, so uninvolved as yours. But your flowing, nostalgic motif, in which feeling supersedes form, is an insistent, conquering force in its power to weld hearts and emotions. Yours is the essence of feminine charm if you avoid becoming a perennial glad girl.

BC

You are like a SYMPHONY, music of color and light, whose galaxy of sound achieves harmonious blending. Impressive with counterpoint and balance, you are high-spirited and temperamental, ever searching for romance. You have a magnetic quality, but one senses the struggle of your intricate thoughts and emotions even as the instruments cry out to one another.

C

You are like a SPIRITUAL, that moanin' low that is the cry of what some call "divine discontent," others a sulky disposition. Smoke gets in your eyes, for you fancy yourself a stubborn idealist playing at realism. Now made up of weird, now mocking tones where the notes trip in on their own sweet will, your music reflects a psychic, headstrong make-up. Subdue the minor keys and amplify the major chords of affection and action for full-toned harmony of living, or you will find yourself alone with your moods.

*Blues, Carol, Waltz, Opera, Ballad, Symphony, Spiritual.

Handsome is . . . and handsome does! Yes, The Cory not only beautifies your table, it brews the richest, most delicious coffee ever! . . . That's because the Cory filters coffee only through coffee, touching nothing but taste-free glass. There are no cloth, metal, or paper filter parts . . . and remember, it can be used on any type kitchen range.

Only The Cory comes complete with patented Cory glass filter rod, hinged decanter cover, safety stand for upper glass, accurate coffee measure. $3.75 to $5.25. Cory 2-heat electric stove extra. Prices slightly higher in Canada. Cory Glass Coffee Brewer Co., Chicago 1, Illinois.

CORY

the only All-Glass coffee brewer

The Cory Glass Filter Rod fits all standard glass coffee makers. You can buy it separately. The pitcher here...

May is almost a perfect month. Flowers can come in the house again, and tulips plus Esmé add up to something really nice.

Diary of Domesticity

By Gladys Taber

IT must be a fine thing to budget your time. The articles about organizing your days always impress me tremendously. They make housekeeping sound as neat as a new slip cover with a zipper. But I never have known any women who live by plan. Except possibly the Martins. The Martins lived around the block from us when I was a child, in one of those large angular Victorian houses so common to little Midwestern towns. The kitchen was as big as a tennis court and gave as much exercise. Getting food to the dining room was practically a safari. Mrs. Martin's sister lived with the Martins. The sisters were slight vigorous women with an entirely deceptive look of delicacy.

Now the Martin women ran their house by plan. They rose around five-thirty or six and they kept that giant of a house cleaner than a falling snowflake. They also baked and canned and washed and ironed and did church work and attended the literary club. And by eight-thirty or nine in the morning, they could be seen on the wide front porch, sitting side by side in freshly painted Boston rockers. Mamma and I would be dashing madly by on the way to the grocery store. "I don't see how they do it," mamma would say, in despair. "They even have the washing on the line!"

I was thinking about the Martin women yesterday. Jill had laid out a full day for Stillmeadow—planting and painting the kennels and so on.

In a moment of extreme optimism, she made out a schedule for me too. But when I woke up, the May sun was simply winnowing the air into gold and there was one of those light tender breezes blowing. "I think I'll just run a washing through," I said. "It is so lovely—and you know, it might rain on wash day!"

"I never saw anybody who liked to wash the way you do," said Jill. "Why can't you wait till Monday?"

So I had the tub full in half an hour. Then I had to change the beds, since all the sheets were being washed. I crawled into the linen closet (ours being too low to stand up in) and looked for two pink percale sheets for the bed in the pink room. The shelves were full of sheets, but not matched. I found one sheet, one brown, one pale green and dark blue ones we got at a sale. I piles of white sheets and laid them floor in the adjoining bedroom. I back in and came out with seven matched pillowcases.

Forty minutes later, Jill came up I had fainted. "Oh my goodness," "what are you doing?"

The whole floor was deep with sheets and pillowcases and bedspr was on the floor, too, madly sortin cleaning the linen closet," I explaine look in there, it's a shambles."

Jill disappeared, backing in like a heard thumping sounds. Then she "Esmé has been digging holes in t did you know it?" She came out, two old suitcases with her. "I'll ha the vacuum cleaner," she said. "It's the floor."

After we finished the linen closet, a look at the girls' closet. "I think make up a box of their clothes and g away," said Jill. "I don't feel I can b Dorothy go around in those jeans summer. She can't even sit down any more."

Don's closet yielded coils of old ro must have been a relic of his cowb collection of leaky rubbers, a brok racket, a pile of stones and a stack o

We had a brief lunch at noon, began to put things away in bureau which led naturally to my doing t linen chest in the taproom and Ji the empty boxes in the attic which for mailing everything the childr when they leave home.

After supper we sat down, rub aching backs.

"Well," I said, "it's nice we g closets and bureaus cleaned. By how did we get started?"

Jill gave me a look. "Because hunting a pink sheet," she said.

Nothing like this could have ha the Martin women.

May is almost a perfect month ways. One is that now flowers ca e again. And no matter how involved be with the garden, the dogs, the here will always be time to arrange And bouquets will be happy in glass s, wooden mixing bowls, old sugar an pots. I have an antique knife box, black and stenciled with an old colo- gn. Inside it go tin cans, cut down to s lovely with pale misty-gold for- nd massed jonquils. I use the for- or the line of height and keep the low, toward the edge of the box. this one Siamese cat, batting the around with a brown velvet glove, have something really nice.

op of an old parlor stove, turned up- n, is good for flowering branches. I le blossoms, even though the petals st. The whole house smells of apple- s as long as they last.

come the iris, colored like the gold or like pale amethyst. We have also he yellow-brown ones that somehow ne of small leopards in color. They east pretty of all the iris, but massed oper bowl, they are elegant. Iris rrange very easily, being spiked and t if you cut the stems in varying use some buds and some half open and mass some dark full ones at the nd low part of the bouquet, you will ised at how graceful the effect is. is much to do in the country in e main bulk of the planting must be ost planting begins when the maples id. The only way we get peas at all is them early enough to mature before s arrives. We raise only the edible peas which are lelicious and do to be shelled. ler yet crisp pods erful. And all you ook them is to em in one-inch nd drop them in a ng salted water and let them cook pods are easily pierced by a fork. gus and rhubarb come in heavily, means the putting-up season is on We freeze both. We used to can re we had the freezer, but they are zen because they keep their crisp- taste like freshly picked products. the rhubarb in inch lengths and round freezer containers with sugar he layers. The asparagus we plunge water for three minutes, then in ice then pack it in flat pint or quart e secret of successful freezing is to ch and pack as fast as possible and container tight. If air gets in, the s drawn out and what is called rn results.

put down asparagus soup, which rom leftover stems. I follow the recipe for asparagus soup but al- a little minced onion for a pickup Ve put the soup in the round quart nderful in January to have fresh d fresh asparagus with drawn but-rs are busy too. A large fawn- bit has lived all winter under the erhouse. He is a thoughtful rab- es to come out at dusk and go pety down the garden rows, eat- er has poked up through the soft cockers see him as he emerges use, and they fly after him, simply to be real hunters. There is a rs, a scrabble of paws, and Mel- feminine barking. Silver and sail in like motorized yachts. And over, Mr. Rabbit slips under the as his evening snack. The cockers ey have saved the hearth and from the invader, and none of all cast down because they never bbit.

been much concerned with the happiness these past years. Con- unthinking happiness of a rabbit id me on the subject again. I be- ould let our minds have a little litate. But there should be a clear pool in the course at intervals. Just time to think about love and friends and our childhood and the meaning of all things that are. And time to realize the wideness of the world and the infinite variety in it.

What is a happy person? And what is happiness? If we never stop to think, how shall we discover what we know? What makes a good life? There are many questions we might ask ourselves as we sit in the spring sun for a while and give our minds leisure.

I like what Rupert Brooke wrote to his friend: "I know what things are good: friendship, and work and conversation. These I shall have." I always think if his life had not been shortened by the first war, he would have come to add love to his list of the good.

But he loved life. The Great Lover is evidence of his happy passion for the delights of living. "These I have loved: . . . Rainbows, and the blue bitter smoke of wood." And "the little dulling edge of foam, that browns and dwindles as the wave goes home." This poem is a favorite tonic of mine for what the Southerners call "a low-hanging mood."

One thing I have decided about happiness is that it is not something external which you have or have not. To me it is a quality of the spirit, of being able to realize completely whatever joy you may have and to do this at the moment. Happiness is a thing of now.

I AM sure New England is happy in May. The very softness of the air expresses it, and the whole earth with the sweet spread of flowers and greening fields is happy. Tiny silvery minnows flash in the amber brook, and the birds sing in the apple trees.

Even the cows have a dreamy pleasant look as they wander in the pasture. I wonder if they forget in winter that there is a season of succulent grass and warm sun? Or does a mother cow ever communicate to a winter calf that when he gets old enough, he will be surprised at what will happen?

Most folks are naturally kind, only some of them haven't found it out.

—ANON: Esar's Joke Dictionary. (Harvest House).

The May evenings are filled with tender light. After supper, everyone dashes outdoors for a last hour. Honey likes to help me dig dandelion greens. I usually sit down with a basket at my side, and a sharp knife to cut the plants out. Then Honey rolls over and leans against my neck, kisses my ear and offers assistance. Her nose is probably already brown with dirt from the tulip bed, and she undoubtedly has been sitting in the violets. If I can persuade her to lie down by the basket, I go on digging. But when Melody and Silver find out where I am, the game is up. Nobody can dig dandelion greens with two cockers on the back of her neck.

Dandelion greens are a nuisance to get ready, but they are worth it. They are easier to clean if you soak them half an hour in a large pan of cold water, then lift them out and wash them with running water, and then give them a final rinse with very hot water before cooking. They should be cooked with salt pork or bacon bits in the water, and served with a little butter. Their bitter rich flavor is one of spring's best treats. And I often think how eagerly our forefathers must have greeted them after a winter of potatoes, dried squash and pumpkin and cabbage!

One spring we tried fiddle-neck ferns, but evidently did not pick them at the right time, for they tasted slightly furry and musty. They are supposed to be a real delicacy.

So are cowslips, but we have only a few of them at the lower edge of the brook and the golden cups look like sunshine itself, spilled over from the sky. We never pick them, because they look so lovely.

Now it is warm enough, on these May evenings, to sit in the back yard while the stars come slowly out in the eternal depth of the sky. The radio is on in the house, and the music comes out through the open door, even sweeter when it is blended with dusk. The cockers settle down on the terrace, paws folded in and ears limp at last.

The May moon is white as foam. And the May night is sweet as first love. And the heart is lifted up by the happiness which is springtime!

Toss that Salad

The art of mixing a perfect "tossed" salad is easily learned. First make sure your bowl is large enough . . . not more than half full of well-washed and carefully dried greens. Add dressing. Now with a fork and spoon gently lift, lower, turn this way and that till every morsel glistens with the rich savor of oil and mellow Heinz Vinegar (see recipes below).

Vary the dressing—

Basic French Dressing

Recipe—Combine ½ tsp. salt, 1 tsp. sugar, ¼ tsp. paprika. Add ¼ cup Heinz Vinegar and ½ cup olive oil. Beat thoroughly. Yields nearly ¾ cup.

Ketchup Dressing

Recipe—Place ¼ cup sugar, 1 tsp. salt, dash paprika in quart jar. Add ½ cup Heinz Vinegar, 5 tbs. Heinz Chili Sauce or Tomato Ketchup, ¾ cup oil, 3 tbs. grated onion. Cover jar and shake thoroughly until well blended. Yields 1½ cups.

Chefs Special Dressing

Recipe—To recipe for Basic French Dressing add ¼ cup Heinz Tomato Ketchup, ¼ cup finely chopped celery, ¼ cup chopped green pepper and 2 tsp. grated onion. Yields 1 cup.

The VINEGAR makes the dressing

Heinz Vinegar

Sparkling Clear
Mellowed in Wood
Uniform in Strength

Here are good examples of fine Victorian silver. The tureen and the tea caddy are repoussé, often a hand process. The tea set and tray show the luxurious shape and lavish ornament which distinguish the finer pieces, while the water kettle shows the Georgian influence.

PHOTOS BY

A water pitcher, a footed dish, a swan and a cake basket, all in solid silver. . . . The bowl and candelabra below are good examples of the larger pieces usable both as decoration and for family service today.

VICTORIAN SILVER

BY HENRIETTA MURDOCK

Interior Decoration Editor of the Journal

BRING your grandmother's silver water cooler down from the attic, polish it to satiny whiteness and use it to hold flowers in your living room. For Victorian silver has suddenly become fashionable and, as it is fairly plentiful and widely distributed, you should have the time of your life hunting pieces you can actually use in your home every day. Pick up all the good pieces you can find and put them in condition, for you will enjoy using them more than you know.

Some years back we must have become embarrassed over the lavish taste of our Victorian ancestors, for we cut up their sideboards, took down their chandeliers and mirrors and hid their silver. Now we know that many Victorian furnishings were quite beautiful, and are both usable and charming in our homes today.

WHAT VICTORIAN SILVER PLATE IS: All Victorian silver dates from 1840 to 1900. The electroplating process was perfected in 1842, increasing the output of plate and lowering the cost of production, so that quantities of beautiful pieces were available from that time on.

In case you are wondering where Sheffield leaves off and Victorian plate begins, here are a few notes to set you straight. Sheffield plate was made for a full century prior to 1840, mostly in Sheffield and Birmingham, England. Silver was hand-rolled onto a copper shell and, after shaping, borders and ornaments were applied by hand. It is antique, expensive and, of course, rare.

The silver you are looking for now is to be found in your own community, especially if it was settled more than a half century ago. It will be more or less plentiful, but "undiscovered" until you spot it.

(Continued on Page 234)

These pieces are a cruet stand, an English breakfast dish and a biscuit box that opens into halves. Serving pieces like those illustrated are good quality, useful.

An egg warmer—no less—useful today for hot sauces, and so on, a water kettle and a fine server. . . . Below, typical candlesticks and a magnificent tureen.

Choice pieces, all usable today: a plate or server, a vegetable dish and a fine cruet stand. The urn makes an exquisite container for fresh flowers or greens.

These are the pieces you are most likely to find locally. Top shelf, a spoon holder, a biscuit box and a cup with handles. Next, an odd goblet, a "presentation" urn, and a small teapot; then a covered dish and a repoussé pitcher. At the bottom, candlesticks flank a footed tureen on a simple server. Such quality pieces are inexpensive and plentiful.

Isn't hand-made crystal lovely?

There was a time when you could get fine hand-made crystal like this Canterbury vase only in Europe. Now some of the loveliest glassware is being made right in this country at Washington in Pennsylvania, by Duncan, the maker of the famous Three Face pattern and other glass collectors' items.

Is your glassware hand-made? Let us send you the small folder on Duncan Canterbury, which pictures the stemware, flatware and decorative pieces that match this vase.

THE DUNCAN & MILLER GLASS CO., WASHINGTON, PA.

Duncan "The loveliest glassware in America"

(Continued from Page 232)

Victorian silver plate has a cast foundation of either nickel silver—an alloy of nickel, copper or zinc—or just copper. Onto this base a silver shell or coating is electrically applied. In the case of the best pieces, it is heavy and wears indefinitely. Most of these pieces have the words "Triple Plate," "Quadruple Plate," "Silver Soldered" or "A-1 Plate" stamped on the bottom. It is quite usual to find also these markings: "E. P. N. S.," meaning electroplated on nickel silver, indicating top quality; "E. P. C.," meaning electroplated on copper.

In America the silver industry centered in Rhode Island and Connecticut. In addition to the quality marks just described, the name of the maker or the company and the town quite often appeared on the underside of a piece.

Victorian silver often copied English designs, was bought by rich and well-to-do Americans everywhere, for gifts, decoration or as an adjunct to gracious living usual in this prosperous era. Of course, some Victorian silver is solid or sterling, although the designation was not generally used until after the Victorian era. So do not doubt the quality of a solid piece if it is not marked "Sterling."

What pieces to look for: Early Victorian plate naturally looked like Sheffield or the solid pieces of a still earlier day. It may even resemble the simple designs of Queen Anne, with fluted bowls and delicate pedestals, graceful handles and sculptured finials.

Remember that at first England set the styles for America, and eating fashions abroad were responsible for much of the styling. English breakfasts were, and often still are, self-service from a sideboard. This accounts for the variety and beauty of covered dishes with hot-water compartments or spirit lamps to keep food warm. Porridge, bacon, eggs, sausage and hot breads reposed in handsome silver dishes with liners and revolving covers to keep them warm.

In America we had covered dishes for baking, cruets, trays, biscuit boxes, water pitchers, hot-water urns and tea services for gala occasions. All these things may still be found after more than half a century, and often in good condition. Here is a list of articles you may expect to find almost any place:

Tea and coffee pots, often with legs; spoon holders, cream and sugars, cruet stands and crystal relish jars fitted into a stand. Bread trays, cake baskets, water pitchers and single goblets or sets. Biscuit boxes of several kinds, and egg warmers; round covered dishes with liners, urns, hot-water kettles, trays and ice-water coolers with insulated compartments. Trays are often round with grape-leaf or shell borders, sometimes footed; tureens in great variety, sirup pitchers, fruit and nut bowls; big spoons and forks, candelabra, picture and mirror frames and even clocks. Also such whimseys as strawberry plates, with leaves, flowers and fruit in design; silver-leaf dishes for pickles, and conserve jars.

Rarer and more expensive pieces, usually English, found locally or in dealers' shops, are: English breakfast dishes with revolving tops; well-and-tree platters with domed lids; entree dishes in great variety; tea caddies; punch bowls; trays of all kinds; urns and, of course, candlesticks and candelabra; tea services; dessert sets; goblets, and soup tureens of huge proportions.

Victorian designs: One's personal taste must be his guide in judging Victorian design. The variety is almost too great to be classified. The craft lends itself to both simplicity and elaboration, and both are good so long as they are beautiful and well done. Plainer pieces are usually the oldest. They resemble eighteenth-century designs, so are often rare and expensive. Fruit and flower designs are good, perhaps the most beautiful, and many collectors place the highest value on them. Sometimes the flowers are repoussé, and will be roses, ferns, lilies of the valley, clover or other simple favorites of a romantic era. Ivy leaves were popular also—very handsome, choice. The composition and rendering of repoussé pieces put them in the exquisite class. Strawberries, raspberries and other small fruits with their foliage were often dispersed among the flowers. Vintage borders were popular, often showing grape and foliage in strong relief, contrasting the plain center areas.

Slightly less attractive were the engraved flower sprays on frosted backgrounds and the geometrical designs. In general you won't be so pleased with the angular, Egyptian looking designs and shapes of the late Victorian period, influenced by a vogue for the Egyptian at the time of the opening of the Suez Canal. Conventional designs did not suit the craft or the era, and some of these have awkward legs and handles, and little graceful ness in their ornament.

At one time, stag heads, small animals and birds were used as finials. If you like them, rest of the piece, don't allow these to bother you. The whimsey is part of the craft and gives your pieces individuality. With Victorian, your taste must be liberal; and remember that appreciation of design, especially intricate design, is the highest development of artistic taste, either cultivated or natural. It is a rather common mistake to believe that good taste must invariably be expressed in plain, unadorned surfaces. Many plain articles are very poor taste, because their forms are unrefined. You can develop your own taste by looking for good composition of motifs, grace in drawing and fine techniques, all without setting up rigid rules and standards to inhibit you. The more fine silver you see, the more you will enjoy and appreciate its ornament as well as the simple grace of line.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Sonnet for a Happy Ex-Warrior

By Georgie Starbuck Galbraith

It seems improbable that more surprise
Assailed Aladdin when he rubbed the lamp,
Beholding then the ghostly genii rise,
Than grips you now, Dame Fortune's favored scamp.
Had Ponce de Leon achieved his bourn,
The Fount of Youth, and gone canoeing in it,
There's little likelihood the guy had worn
A bigger grin than you display this minute.
Or when before his unsuspecting gaze
First shone the vistas of the blue Pacific,
I doubt Balboa stood with more amaze
Or knew a thrill more stirringly terrific
Than you, my hero, finding this windfall loot,
A dollar, in your old civilian suit!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

What to pay: Until a few months ago most Victorian pieces were almost given aways. Butter dishes, spoon holders and other small pieces had no market at all. Then shortages caused dealers to condition their and other pieces and price them according to the times.

Away from the big cities you can still find good bargains. Of course you will be look

(Continued on Page 236)

CAMELLIA. Below
ht: NOCTURNE, STRASBOURG.
NGLISH GADROON, GREENBRIER, CHANTILLY, BUTTERCUP.
EDWARD, FAIRFAX.

Silver in the Spring

Gorham Sterling offers you a choice of about 12 favorite patterns in basic six-piece place-settings comprising luncheon knife and fork, teaspoon, individual salad fork, cream soup spoon, butter spreader, averaging about $23*; plus enough serving pieces to begin. When you buy Gorham Sterling, you buy solid silver with a great tradition, the aristocrat of American dinner-tables for over a hundred years.

Gorham
STERLING

America's Leading Silversmiths since 1831

PROVIDENCE 7, RHODE ISLAND

*Incl. Fed. Tax. © 1946 The Gorham Company

Don't be that kind of a Cover Girl!

You can't cover up underarm odor—but you can guard against it with Mum

YOU SIMPLY can't resist perfume. That added dash of fragrance makes you feel so feminine. So alluring.

But you're only fooling yourself. For even the loveliest of perfumes won't cover up underarm odor.

Your bath washes away past perspiration, but you still need protection against risk of future underarm odor. And Mum's the word for that.

So take 30 seconds to smooth on Mum after every bath, before every date. Snowy-white Mum keeps you sweet—nice to be near all day or evening.

Creamy, gentle Mum won't irritate your skin or injure fabrics. Quick, sure—and so safe you can use Mum even after dressing. Won't dry out in the jar or form irritating crystals. Ask for Mum today.

▪ ▪ ▪

For Sanitary Napkins — Mum is gentle, safe, dependable . . . ideal for this use, too.

Product of Bristol-Myers

Mum

TAKES THE ODOR OUT OF PERSPIRATION

(Continued from Page 234)

for the tarnished castoff pieces, if you really want a challenge, rather than those already conditioned and exhibited. These you may buy for little. Don't be bothered by monograms or engraving such as you find on presentation urns. If the plating is heavy, you can have them removed. If the monogram is pretty or the sentiment interesting, leave it on.

You should be able to buy almost any average unconditioned piece for under ten dollars; away from the big cities, small pieces for considerably less. Once a reconditioned piece arrives in a shopwindow, the prices soar.

How to use your Victorian Silver: Half the charm of using your silver comes from finding the right place and function for it. If you have many pieces, by all means build a cabinet in your dining room to display it. Larger pieces will adorn your sideboard; bread trays, cruets and other items you will use every day, as part of your family service.

All the urns, loving cups and coolers make wonderful containers for laurel and other greens or dramatic floral arrangements when you give a party. The taller sugar bowls make good candy jars for the living room, glove and handkerchief boxes are good for cigarettes. Candlesticks and candelabra—look up the pronunciation, by the way—trays and tureens you will use in the dining room as serving pieces. Arrange them with drama, keep them in condition with routine once-overs.

Use an odd goblet for violets and set a tiny pot of ivy into an odd sugar bowl. Footed fruit dishes and nut bowls are luxury touches in the living room. For a gala affair, set your old stemmed fruit dish onto a tray and fill both the tray and dish with short-stemmed flowers and trailing greens. Float blossoms in your trays, give a buffet supper and put chicken à la king in your English breakfast dish, a casserole in your round, double-compartment baking dish, olives on your leaf dishes and slivers of celery in your spoon holder. Think of new things to do with these precious old things. It adds personality to your entertaining and great glamour to your decorations.

How to clean and condi... Silver: If the silver is really... make it look better, but not c... self. Take off the first layer w... soapsuds, then use your fav... ish. Next, get a long brush ... whiting or a generous am... rouge and work at it vigoro... us...

But it really pays to have bi... pieces burnished. Any jewelr... tell you if there is anyone in y... can do this. Most larger place... trial burnishers, for they als... make other fine metal repairs.

Burnishing, which is not ex... off all the tarnish and leaves y... when you behold your treasure... any bride's newest gift and lo... dred times as precious as befor... of coffeepots and pitchers will h... too. Dents can be taken out... and finials soldered on. It pa... only if the piece is attractive ... you especially treasure.

Unfortunately, thin plating ... as thick when the job is just do... you know a reputable dealer, ... not pay. Except in pieces whi... long and continued service, the ... already on old pieces will still ... It is not amiss to allow the co... through in well-worn pieces, if ... polished.

Silver you use and wash alo... dishes will remain bright with... every two weeks. Other pieces ... occasionally should be lacquer... with a polishing cloth every few...

Lacquering will stand many ... you can do a fair job yourself ... fingernail lacquer and a bit of... all means lacquer intricate piec... or nut dishes with stems and le... and repoussé frames and box... room use. Cover every part, ... inch brush. Remove it when ... with polish remover such as you... nails. The outside of almost an... be lacquered. Don't lacquer re... vegetable dishes, coffeepot inside...

Victorian silver is popular fo... days. Have it reconditioned an... with all its original charm a... glamour.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Ask Any Woman

BY MARCELENE COX

THERE'S no doubt about it; during a certain period in raising children, a parent needs only the understanding of a true animal trainer.

Experience: knowing how far you can go in washing a child's face before he starts to yell.

One of the things I'm going to keep in mind, when the daughters start bringing their "dates" home, is that the worst fellow I ever went with was the one my parents liked the best.

My husband's attic is his coat pocket.

Family life is always changing. Scarcely before the parent has time to react the child shakes the kaleidoscope and there's a new pattern.

One example a mother should set her daughter is a good table.

A number of soldier fathers are probably learning that there is no more difficult "campaign" than preparing a child for bed and getting him there.

One mother wants to know what to answer when a four-year-old looks you straight in the eye and asks, "Well, who made God in the first place?"

A boy who washes his neck w... told should be the subject of a ... vestigation.

Parental persuasion is better t... authority—though not nearly s...

Perhaps one of the reasons ... vorces in our grandparents' da... couple furnished a home before m...

Building good habits is like w... stock market; no stock moves ... steady line, but follows an uneve... advance.

A parent should be utterly hon... child—even if it means admittin... cism or doubt.

In child rearing, Sentiment ... equal Security.

Little girl, breathless from schoo... hurry and sew more buttons on ... can marry a rich man."

Persons who lack excitement ... might hunt up a small child to fo...

I wish it were possible to charge... ters' clothes with electricity so th... of them reached for a sweater, n... she would get a thorough shock.

Print...

LADIES' HOME

THE MAGAZINE WOMEN BELIEVE IN ★ JUNE, 1948

25¢

JOURNAL

BERNARDINE KIELTY (SCHERMAN) is the JOURNAL Associate Ed who writes, monthly, Under-Cover Stuff. She says, "I was born and brought up a Massachusetts Yankee, but fell in love with New York on my first visit. I married a Philadelphian also visiting New York, and we've lived and worked there ever since. I have two children, two jobs, and a dog and a cat. My work is reading and writing for both the editorial department of the Book of the Month Club and the JOURNAL. As a result, I have to save newspapers for Saturday mornings, and magazines for vacations. I love opera, concerts and theater—plus 14th Street, Fifth Avenue and the subway. The first thing I ever wrote was a book called The Sidewalks of New York."

LOUIS PAUL (That's How it Is) writes: "I live and work in a little old wooden house in Manhattan which might be called a landmark in the worst sense of the word. My only genuine hobby is observing people and making up stories about them—so my wife and I travel, make friends, and poke into the odd crannies of cities and villages. My first story, some ten years ago, won the O. Henry Award, after which I answered the call of Hollywood at the MGM Studios. At present, I conduct a workshop course in writing at Columbia, and work on my new novel."

FLORENCE CUMMINGS, author of Long and With Curls, says: "I was born in New York in 1907, and attended public schools, and Columbia Extension at night—meanwhile working as fur model, stenographer, copy writer, stagehand, radio-script writer, wife, mother, cook, laundress, cleaning woman and gardener (not in the order of their importance) before turning to fiction. I have two children and one husband, and we live in the suburbs with a boxer named Brownie whose main interest lies in the neighbors' garbage cans. Ourselves—we prefer steak rubbed with garlic!"

JOURNAL

Contents

JUNE, 1946

PAGE

NOVEL CONDENSATION COMPLETE IN THIS ISSUE

THE PURSUIT OF LOVE . . . . . Nancy Mitford 17

FICTION

LONG AND WITH CURLS . . . . . Florence Cummings 18
NOT BEAUTIFUL . . . . . Margaret Weymouth Jackson 20
KING GUS . . . . . Nancy Shores 22
THE MAJOR MINDS THE MINOR . . . . . Elsie Lee 26
A SLIGHT CASE OF EXASPERATION! . . . . . Paul Ernst 30
THE DARK WOOD (Fourth part of five) . . . . . Christine Weston 44
THAT'S HOW IT IS . . . . . Louis Paul 48

SPECIAL FEATURES

ARE YOU TOO EDUCATED TO BE A MOTHER? . . . . . 6
THE "ONE WORLD" DELUSION . . . . . Dorothy Thompson 6
NEW IDEAS ON OLD PROBLEMS . . . . . J. C. Furnas 24
IF YOU ASK ME . . . . . Eleanor Roosevelt 28
SUDDEN DEATH IN THE HOME . . . . . J. C. Furnas 29
THE MEANING OF THE NUREMBERG TRIAL . . . . Walter Lippmann 32
STILL PROUD TO BE A TEACHER . . . . . Mary Eleanore Grant 150
A MINISTER'S WIFE SPEAKS OUT . . . . . Agnes Fulton Longley 153
HOW AMERICA LIVES: OUT OF THE WEST . . . . . J. C. Furnas 157
DDT WILL GET 'EM, BUT —— . . Jerome Feiner and Eleanor Resnick 176
MOTHERS—TEACH YOUR CHILD TO SWIM WHEN YOUNG Victor E. Lawson 193
IT'S A MYSTERY TO ME . . . . . Constance J. Foster 194
THE FACTS ABOUT LEFT-HANDEDNESS . . . . . Roy E. Hoke 200
HERE COMES THE BRIDE . . . . . Iris Wilken 221

GENERAL FEATURES

UNDER-COVER STUFF . . . . . Bernardine Kielty 4
TAKE A NUMBER (The Sub-Deb) . . . . . Maureen Daly 8
OUR READERS WRITE US . . . . . 10
FIFTY YEARS AGO . . . JOURNAL ABOUT TOWN . . . . . 15
REFERENCE LIBRARY . . . . . 124
THE NOTION COUNTER . . . . . Elizabeth Metcalf 147
ASK ANY WOMAN . . . . . Marcelene Cox 185
THIS IS A CAN'T-TAKE-IT . . . . . Munro Leaf 191
PNEUMONIA . . . . . Dr. Herman N. Bundesen 196
DIARY OF DOMESTICITY . . . . . Gladys Taber 206

FASHIONS AND BEAUTY

HAVE A LOVELY SUMMER . . . . . 33
A TIME AND A PLACE FOR GLAMOUR . . . . . Wilhela Cushman 34
A PRETTY GIRL IS LIKE A BUTTERFLY . . . . . Wilhela Cushman 36
HEAVENLY PASTELS . . . . . Ruth Mary Packard 38
SUMMERTIME GIRL MAKES HER OWN . . . . . Nora O'Leary 40
EVERY SUMMER SUB-DEB KNOWS . . . . . Dawn Crowell 42
MOTHER AND DAUGHTER PLAY DOUBLES . . . . Ruth Mary Packard 165
THE GIRL I WOULD LIKE TO PROPOSE TO . . Louise Paine Benjamin 179

INTERIOR DECORATION AND ARCHITECTURE

HOLIDAY HOUSE . . . . . Richard Pratt 46
A LIVING ROOM ON VACATION . . . . . H. T. Williams 47
ACCENT ON ARRANGEMENT . . . . . Henrietta Murdock 168

FOOD AND HOMEMAKING

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD . . . . . Ann Batchelder 50
LINE A DAY . . . . . Ann Batchelder 52
SHE PLANNED IT THAT WAY . . . . . Judy Barry 167
IT'S THE AMERICAN WAY . . . . . Louella G. Shouer 171
QUICK AND EASYS FOR TWO . . . . . Charlotte Adams 180
REPORT TO THE HOUSEWIFE . . . . . Judy Barry 186
CONVERSATION PIECE . . . . . Ruth Mills Teague 210
NEVER A DULL MEAL . . . . . Clementine Paddleford 214

POETRY

RESTORATIVE, Georgie Starbuck Galbraith, 54 ▪ COLLECTOR'S ITEM, Lenore Eversole Fisher, 70 • CHILD ON A MERRY-GO-ROUND, Eunice Mildred Lon Coske, 85 ▪ LADY BEWARE, May Richstone, 94 ▪ HABITUAL RITUAL, Ethel Jacobson, 100 ▪ THERE'S NO PLACE, Berton Braley, 108 ▪ FEAR, C. E. Stummer, 113 ▪ WHAT ARE YOU, TIME?, Bianca Bradbury, 118 • MY MOTHER WAS A GYPSY, Alma Robison Higbee, 126 ▪ OH, LET ME DREAM, Joan Story Wright, 136 ▪ ELEGY, Elizabeth Travers, 140 ▪ RETURN, Stella Weston Tuttle, 145 ▪ LOVE DAWNS, Eleanor Alletta Chaffee, 174 I SAW A DREAM, Janet Weinberger, 201 ▪ MAGIC, Kingsley Tufts, 221

Cover Design by Al Parker

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL (The Home Journal) is published ▬ last Friday of month preceding its date.

The ▬▬ of all characters in all Journal fiction ▬ fictitious. Any resemblance to actual persons, living or dead, is ▪ coincidence.

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL PRICES

U. S. and Possessions, Canada, Newfoundland, Labrador, Costa Rica, Cuba, Nicaragua, Dominican Republic, Guatamala, Haiti, Mexico, Panama, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America except the Guianas, 1 yr., $3; 2 yrs., $5; 3 yrs., $7; 4 yrs., $9. Other Countries, 1 year, $4.

Remit by Money Order or by Draft on ▪ bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. Funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must ▬ paid for in advance.

UNCONDITIONAL GUARANTY—We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, The Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

The title of the Ladies' Home Journal is registered in the U. S. Patent Office and in Foreign Countries. The entire contents are copyright, 1946 (Trade Mark Registered), by The Curtis Publishing Company in United States and Great Britain. London, 6, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W. C. All rights reserved. ENTERED AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER MAY 6, 1911, AT THE POST OFFICE AT PHILADELPHIA, PENNA., UNDER ACT OF MARCH 3, 1879.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

Send change of address (naming publication) or other communications to

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY
Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

Change must reach ▬ ▪ least five weeks before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect. Send old address with your new, enclosing if possible your address label. Duplicate copies cannot be sent. The Post Office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage.

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER'S
LION'S ROAR
Published in this space every month
The greatest star of the screen!

Last month, we said "The Green Years" was a wonderful motion picture.

★ ★ ★ ★

We said it with a lot of enthusiasm.

★ ★ ★ ★

We used such words as "magnificent" about the M-G-M picturization of A. J. Cronin's brilliant new book. (Mr. Cronin, you will remember, also authored "The Citadel" and "The Keys of the Kingdom".)

★ ★ ★ ★

We roared applause for Charles Coburn's fine characterization. We raved about Tom Drake's winning performance. We glowed over lovely young Beverly Tyler's beautifully acted role.

★ ★ ★ ★

And, if we were the crowing kind, this month we'd be saying: "We told you so!"

★ ★ ★ ★

Because our claims have been confirmed by the most show-wise audiences you could possibly get together anywhere.

★ ★ ★ ★

Kate Smith says "The Green Years" is a wonderful motion picture. Frank Sinatra says so. Judy Garland says so. Louella Parsons says so.

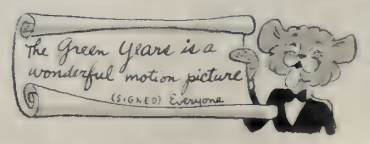
★ ★ ★ ★

And Jack Benny says so. Jimmy Durante says so. Greer Garson says so. Eddie Cantor says so. Hedda Hopper says so. Ed Sullivan says so.

★ ★ ★ ★

And June Allyson says so. Gregory Peck says so. Rudy Vallee says so. Dinah Shore says so. Louis Sobol says so. But why go on? The names would fill the column. Everyone says so!

★ ★ ★ ★



And we must reserve a line or two for congratulations to Director Victor Saville and Producer Leon Gordon.

★ ★ ★ ★

And we must felicitate that perfectly chosen supporting cast: Hume Cronyn, Gladys Cooper, Dean Stockwell, Richard Haydn, Selena Royle and Jessica Tandy. And those fine screenplay writers, Robert Ardrey and Sonya Levien.

★ ★ ★ ★

They all contributed so much toward making "The Green Years" what it is:

Next month, we'll tell you all about "Easy To Wed". If we may go into our role of oracle again, it's great—and we're telling you so. How could it miss with Van Johnson (singing and dancing!), lovely Esther Williams, gorgeous Lucille Ball, and uproarious Keenan Wynn? Technicolor, too. Mmmmm!

—Leo

If your husband qrowls

BECAUSE HIS SHIRTS WASH GRAY LIKE THIS . . .

INSTEAD OF WHITE LIKE THIS . . .

HERE'S HOW TO WASH 'EM SPARKLING . .

White Without Bleaching

To see clothes come so sparkling clean they're White Without Bleaching, get Oxydol—the laundry soap that masters even the biggest, grimiest wash!

For Oxydol's "Hustle-Bubble" suds are so lively they simply lift dirt out. And bring clothes cleaner and whiter than wrong washing with less-active soaps can ever hope to get them.

With Oxydol, all your white things—except for out-and-out stains—come White Without Bleaching. Yet Oxydol is grand and safe for wash colors and dainty rayons, too.

So ask your dealer for Oxydol in the orange-and-blue bull's-eye package today—and be proud of a wash that's White Without Bleaching.

OXYDOL WASHES CLOTHES SO CLEAN THEY'RE

WHITE WITHOUT BLEACHING

★ Be Patriotic! Avoid Soap Waste!

UNDER-COVER STUFF

By Bernardine Kielty

REPRINTED COURTESY THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"I understand she's his inspiration."

AN internationally known figure, and one of the great beauties of Europe's happier days, is Alma Mahler-Werfel, widow of Gustav Mahler, the famous Viennese conductor and composer, who several years after Mahler's death married Franz Werfel.

Alma Schindler married the great Mahler when he had already reached his fame, and while she was still but a very young girl. It was not easy to be the wife of a highly temperamental artist. For one thing, the young Alma, who was a musician in her own right and just starting to compose, had to promise, when she married him, not to write another note of music. And she never did—although Mahler depended on her critical judgment in all his own musical work, and had her go over with him every note of his compositions. He insisted on absolute silence around him while he worked, which was not easy with a baby in the house. And, temperamentally unable to cope with accounts, he came into his marriage burdened with debts which the young wife, by scrimping and saving, eventually paid off. Sometimes she could not accept invitations, because she had no hat to wear, but Mahler went alone.

But the book which Alma Mahler has now written, GUSTAV MAHLER: MEMORIES AND LETTERS, is by no means recrimination. We have mentioned details which she herself has not emphasized, because they are so suggestive of her own faithful outgiving personality. Actually her book is a tribute to greatness, a fascinating document for those who are interested in Vienna before the first war, and particularly for lovers of music. It is likewise a passionate love story.

There is no question that Alma Mahler was her husband's inspiration, as she was later to be the inspiration of Franz Werfel. She gave to both that which every genius needs for his fullest development: the love and understanding, comfort and good life only the woman he adores can give. That she could meet both these men on their own ground intellectually puts her in a very special niche.

• • •

For a woman who likes to range, Rosita Forbes—glamour-girl traveler and explorer—has certainly picked herself a confined and circumscribed spot in which

(Continued on Page 129)

Rosita Forbes.

Just One Cake of Camay Brings Softer, Smoother Skin !

MRS. RUSSELL FLAGG GREER
the former Gloria Harpe of Coral Gables, Fla.
Bridal portrait painted by MAWICKE

Like a dream come true, your complexion is clearer, fresher—with your very first cake of Camay! Yes, new loveliness can be yours when you change from careless cleansing to the Camay Mild-Soap Diet. Doctors tested Camay's daring beauty promise under exact clinical conditions—on scores of complexions. And these doctors reported that woman after woman—using just one cake of Camay—had a softer, smoother, even younger-looking complexion!

Cherish Camay—use the slivers in bath mitts. Precious materials still go into making soap!

NOTES ON THE ROMANCE OF THE GREERS

Shell-hunting on the golden Florida sands, Russ wooed and won the gorgeous Gloria. Her complexion's as fair as the skies that smiled down on their romance! "Camay is my standby for skin care," Gloria discloses, "since my very first cake of Camay brought a softer, smoother, lovelier look to my complexion."

Gloria's skin grew lovelier day by day on the Camay Mild-Soap Diet—as she dressed for her daily dates with Russ. Yours can, too. Pat Camay's lather on your face—massage gently. Rinse. Dash cold water on oily skin. Repeat morning and night. Doctors proved just one cake of Camay—so mild it cleanses without irritation—can mean softer, smoother skin.

Gay goings-on at the Greers'! And the fresh young beauty of this charming hostess rates applause. "Russ often compliments my complexion—and I love it!" So Gloria promises "to keep my skin winning praises, I'm staying on the Camay Mild-Soap Diet."

LADIES' HOME Journal

Bruce Gould and Beatrice Blackmar Gould, EDITORS

MARY BASS, Executive Editor LAURA LOU BROOKMAN, Managing Editor

Associate Editors: HUGH MAC NAIR KAHLER • JOHN SCOTT MABON ▪ BERNARDINE KIELTY ▪ ANN BATCHELDER WILHELA CUSHMAN ▪ FRANK ELTONHEAD ▪ ALICE BLINN • LOUISE PAINE BENJAMIN ▪ RICHARD PRATT HENRIETTA MURDOCK • LOUELLA G. SHOUER ▪ MARY LEA PAGE ▪ MAUREEN DALY • DAWN CROWELL

Assistant Editors: JOHN WERNER ▪ CHARLOTTE JOHNSON ▪ ROBERT ATHERTON ▪ DONALD STUART • RUTH MARY PACKARD ▪ RUTH MATTHEWS ▪ NORA O'LEARY ▪ ALICE CONKLING ▪ MILDRED ARNOLD ▪ JUDY BARRY ▪ NOËL SMYTHE BUTCHER ▪ JUNE TORREY ELEANOR COLE • MARJORIE LEDERER LEE ▪ JUNE CUNNINGHAM • EVELYN SAGER

Editorial Assistants: BETTY NILES GRAY ▪ KATHERINE WEST MILLER ▪ SELMA RUTHERFORD BURGESS ▪ ALICE KASTBERG ▪ ANNE EINSELEN • DOROTHY VOORHEES • LILY GLENDINNING • FRANCES RODMAN • DOROTHY COUNSELMAN SELBY ▪ JAN WEYL EMILY M. ELMORE ▪ JOSEPH DI PIETRO ▪ MARGARET WINSLOW O'NEILL ▪ JOSETTE DALY LUTZ

Are You Too Educated to be a Mother?

THE Census Bureau recently completed a five-year survey and published these findings: A woman who has gone to college is likely—on a national average—to have a fraction more than one child; the likelihood that she will have even one child is growing slimmer. If she is a high-school graduate, chances are she will have two children. But the woman who left school in the fourth grade is almost certain to have at least four.

This difference in birth rates is probably a direct result of use or nonuse of birth control. In one representative community it was found that 80 per cent of the "well-to-do" women practiced birth control. Only 30 per cent among the "very poor" used contraceptives. Birth control, however, is merely a means of expressing the desire for a small or limited family. Desire for fewer children can be traced to the high cost of education, insistence on a high standard of material living and competing interests outside the home.

The make-up of our future population is frightening to some students of the rise and fall of civilizations. At the present rates of reproduction, within three generations the woman with a bachelor degree will have one grandchild. Her contemporary with less than a grammar-school diploma will have nine grandchildren. Geneticists state flatly that "there is danger of outright decline in the physical and mental make-up of our population. We are not reproducing the best of ourselves."

In the geneticist's dictionary, "the best" is not a term of social snobbery, but a matter of scientific evidence—evidence that children of college-educated parents have a higher average intelligence than children born into non-educated homes. Thus, our educated women, potentially mothers of children with greater native ability, are guilty of squandering their genetic inheritance. Unthinkingly they are lowering the standards of future generations.

The first ominous signs are now appearing in our public schools. In one large Eastern city, the standard I.Q. test has been arbitrarily scaled down to meet the declining quality of the students. A child who would have rated only 90 on the test ten or fifteen years ago is now graded at 100. Thus the schools are hiding unpleasant facts from wide circulation.

There may be a negative comfort in knowing that other important nations are facing the same problem. There is positive encouragement in Sweden, where the unfavorable birth ratio has been reversed. Women in Sweden's upper education and income brackets are now scoring the highest birth rates, while women of less education and financial resources are bearing fewer children. Sweden produced this turnabout by a two-fold program. The cost of bearing and rearing children has been reduced, through free obstetrical services, nursery schools, dental clinics for school children. For those who do not want children at any cost, birth control is available on a nation-wide basis.

Sweden wisely realized that state aids alone—no matter how generous—would not bring about any great increase in births unless there was a psychological upgrading of the value of children in family life. In our own country this change of mind would be a major factor in adjusting the downward population spiral—if we should decide to do anything about the situation. Even as a nation of avowed individualists we will have to take the future into account as well as the whim of the moment. We must learn to take our babies more seriously and less sentimentally. We must learn that our educational opportunities are not an outright gift, to be prodigally misspent. We must learn that we are not too educated to be parents; we must learn that we are too educated not to be!

THE "ONE WORLD" DELUSION

By Dorothy Thompson

THE greatest danger to our civilization is the extent to which slogans are supplanting reason. The greatest slogan of the moment is "One World or No World," which gives the title to a book compiled of the views of prominent atomic scientists and publicists.

Now, the exact scientists, when they talk about politics, are often extremely unscientific. They are accustomed to deal with exactly calculable elements, that under certain circumstances always behave the same way, and they carry that mentality and experience into other thought. But politics is not, and cannot be, an exact science. It deals with human beings, who are not calculable quantities.

There is today a popular syllogism that might be phrased:

One world under one government would prevent war.

The prevention of war is desirable.

Therefore, one world under one government is desirable.

This is a form of logic that leaves out both existing facts and a thousand imponderables, and can always be answered with other syllogisms—for instance, this one:

Human civilizations, being the products of geography, climate, race, religion, folklore and history, are deeply differentiated and can be reduced to uniformity only under one government by force.

Force, as an instrument of politics, is not desirable.

Therefore, uniformity is not desirable.

The advantage of the second syllogism is that it starts with a statement of fact, whereas the first starts with an assumption. It is a pure assumption that one world under one government would prevent war. The United States, composed of people speaking one language and deriving from the same or kindred cultural inheritances, became one government in 1788, and less than three generations later fought one of the bloodiest wars in history to decide whether that one government should be maintained. The United Kingdom, after consolidating England, Scotland and Ireland through a whole series of wars, had to fight in our own times against the secession of Ireland, and lost the fight to 90 per cent. Ireland is not under the British government, and only precariously in the British Commonwealth. The attempt to put Canada, New Zealand or Australia under the British government would certainly lead to wars of rebellion.

As the British prepare to withdraw from India, the paramount question is whether "India," as a unity, will survive being freed. For Moslem India does not want to live under one government in which the Hindus would have a majority, and its leaders, backed by a majority of Moslems, are demanding "Pakistan"—an independent Moslem state and government—and if an attempt is made to force them, they might make a civil war, backed by the whole Near Eastern Moslem world.

The attempt of Rome to put the nearer world under one government succeeded initially, but involved innumerable wars and brought about the final disintegration of the Roman Empire in chaos.

So the assumption that one world under one government would prevent war has no foundation in history. The syllogism fails by reason of the dubiety of its first assumption.

That the world consists of deeply varying civilizations is, on the other hand, a fact. The closest civilization to our own, in language, government forms and cultural contact, is the British. Our two civilizations began together. To this day we read the same books, see the same plays and movies, and embody the same principles in our laws. But Americans do not think that Britain is the same as

(Continued on Page 190)

Give That They May Live:

AT this very moment one out of every four persons in the world is facing death from starvation. Children all over the world are hungry. You can help starving peoples now—directly and personally—by contributing to UNRRA's Emergency Food Collection. Give—

1. Actual cans of food
2. Money to buy food

The greatest need is for milk (condensed, evaporated, dried), meat, fish and peanut butter. Next on the list are baby foods, baked beans, stews, soups, honey, fruits, juices and vegetables. Contributed food must be in cans.

There is a food-collection depot in your community.

Cash contributions (check or money order) should be made to your local committee or to the national headquarters of the Emergency Food Collection, 100 Maiden Lane, New York 7, N. Y.

WHY BE A KITCHEN JUGGLER? . . . Why juggle many foods . . . to get at a few?

Twice the front shelf storage space!

Only Crosley Shelvador has it!*

EVERY REFRIGERATOR does all of its business through its door—the many times a day you put things in—or take them out. The exclusive Crosley SHELVADOR* doubles the ease and speed of all these through-the-door transactions.

Today's SHELVADOR* is better and more attractive than ever. It has every modern engineering improvement—new and better materials combined with new skills to new quality standards.

All this plus the practical SHELVADOR* that makes food "juggling" old-fashioned.

Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.*

Twice as much food to the front

IT'S EASY to see that the Crosley SHELVADOR* makes twice as much food get-at-able in front row space. That means only half the shuffling of foods.

SHELVADOR avoids much of the food shuffling and chances of tipping and spilling because it puts the foods most often needed in front row space—at your finger tips.

THIS ELIMINATES many a clean-up job occasioned by tipped-over foods. Every clean-up costs time and money plus the loss of cold air through the open door.

RANGES

HOME FREEZERS

LAUNDRY EQUIPMENT

KITCHEN SINKS AND CABINETS

RADIOS AND COMBINATIONS

CROSLEY

THE CROSLEY CORPORATION, CINCINNATI 25, OHIO

REFRIGERATORS : HOME FREEZERS : KITCHEN SINKS AND CABINETS : RANGES : LAUNDRY EQUIPMENT RADIOS : RADIO PHONOGRAPHS : FM : TELEVISION SHORT WAVE : ELECTRONICS : RADAR HOME OF WLW—"THE NATION'S STATION"

TAKE A NUMBER!

ONE TO TEN

Pick out any ten casual high-school characters, fellows and girls with whom you've gone to school. Take the girl who catches the bus at your corner every morning, the one who looks shy and carries so many books under her arm during school season; take the tall blond fellow who sat next to you in chemistry last year; or take the girl who lent you some tennis balls the other day when you forgot yours; or the boy from your street who works in the corner drugstore during summer vacation. You can make your own list. Just any ten guys or gals about your own age, give yourselves just one interest in common (well, you're all in high school, aren't you?) and with a little co-operation on both sides—you've got ten new friends!

More friends means more fun, and especially in high school. And the word "friend" doesn't always mean a heart-to-heart buddy or gal pal whom you see seven days a week, either. Simply someone to whom you can say "hello" and "how are you" and make with the big smile. Turn your own feelings inside out for a minute, and realize how good it makes you feel when someone is friendly to you—well, why not reverse the routine?

ADD IT UP

Most high-school guys and gals want to be popular—and the quickest way for you to jump to the top of the Hit Parade with the rest of your class is make them feel popular too! Sell yourself on the idea that "people are interesting." And that word "people" means everyone.

Say that you're sixteen years old now. Well, according to the insurance companies, you've got about forty-eight more years to go! And the more people you can genuinely like during that time—the more fun the time between birthdays will be for you too. Don't choose a boy friend by the number of reindeer sweaters he has in his closet, the kind of car he drives (or are we walking to the movies tonight?) or the amount of jingling money he has in his pockets when he asks you for a Friday-night date. And don't pick your party lists from gal characters who get weekly allowances with a decimal point followed by two zeros, spend their summers at the beach and have a wardrobe of sweaters, suits and play clothes that set them apart as Mrs. Harrison Williams, j.g. It doesn't take a king-sized genius to figure out that to make a friend, and keep one, you must simply like and trust someone else—no matter what his name is, where he lives and whether or not his father plays eighteen holes of golf every Saturday morning at the right country club on the right side of town!

WHAT DO YOU HAVE?

Of course, since you're an average young character with a lot of interests all your own, you won't want to spend time, hold hands or even exchange your more important ideas with every Tom, Dick and Mary Ann whom you happen to meet across a drugstore table. There will be some special boys for whom you want to save your dances, your affections and your Friday nights; and there are some girls with whom you want to share most of your fun, your secrets and your more private conversations. But don't limit your interests and date doings by running around in just one small social circle!

For instance, Sally may be your best gal pal—she's always there with a couple of the other girls when you want to get together for a Friday-night movie, you feel a special affection for her 'cause she knows you like Johnny and she's willing to look wide-eyed while you rave about him, and you even belong to the same Sub-Deb club. And then there's Johnny—he's been around your life since 'way back last September. At first it was just a date for an after-school football dance, and gradually it developed into a steady two-nights-a-week habit. And now things have warmed up to a point where you know you could even have his class ring if you wanted it. Of course, you like the boy—who wouldn't enjoy having a smooth, good-natured and attentive character near at hand every time a free evening came up? But because Johnny is so handy, you've forgotten all about other fellows. The old "a boy in the hand is worth two who are dating other gals" theory has sold you on the idea of going steady. It's not that you're honestly in love—but it's just easier this way!

So you've limited the number of people in your life to your family, your teachers, your best gal friend and boy friend and a few other interested characters. They make up your whole list. And how about all the other people you're letting slip by?

AND THAT'S THE ANSWER

A good guy or gal will learn to break away from the snob mob early, for any sharp character knows, by the time he's in second year high school, that there's no real fun—or reason—for cliquing. Granted that you can't have everyone on your "come to my party" list, do give everyone a chance by getting to know them—or letting them get to know you—before you cross them off that list! Too many high-school guys and gals clique together just for social security—it's the same gang that gives the parties, double-dates for the dances, runs the class elections and winds up giving one another presents at graduation time. Maybe they don't mean to be snobbish, self-centered or selfish, but they are—or at least they seem that way to all the fellows and gals on the outside looking in.

Maybe you're one of those long-haired gals, neatly stacked, with poise, personality and a collection of class rings that would cover the fingers of both hands. Life is going your way, so you just don't bother talking to or thinking about some of the other gals in your class—those who don't get around as much as you do. But why not? Are you selfish, shy, scared of the competition—or just a little bit shallow? What are you saving yourself for—just the smoother fellows and gals? And how will you know what people are smooth and what people are interesting—if you don't get to know them to find out? Or maybe you're one of the girls who don't feel popular just because they aren't always the center of attraction. Well, you might be guilty of a kind of snobbishness too! You think you're shy—but how do you know everyone else doesn't think you just want to be alone?

Be a smart gal—perk up and speak up. The quickest way to start any friendship is simply to say "Hello!"

CAN YOU READ THIS?

Well, slip on your glasses for another look—and how do you look? Specs can be added attraction, so send 5c for the new booklet, GLAMOUR FOR GLASSES, No. 2268, to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania.

Be Good To It ...

FOR the health of your scalp and the looks of your hair e continually on guard against fectious dandruff.

It is widespread, easy-to-catch d hard-to-get-rid-of. Its dis-essing flakes, scales and itch-g can really raise hob with ur appearance.

Do as thousands of fastidious omen do . . . make Listerine ntiseptic and massage a regu-r part of your home shampoo. sist on it at your beauty shop.

Listerine Antiseptic is a won-rful precaution because it kills e stubborn "bottle bacillus" ityrosporum ovale) which any dermatologists say is a usative agent of this obnox-ius infection. So, at the first gn of flakes, scales or itching, art at once with Listerine Anti-ptic and massage twice daily the treatment that has helped many . . . it may help you.

ISTERINE ANTISEPTIC
and MASSAGE for
IFECTIOUS DANDRUFF

e "BOTTLE BACILLUS"
(PITYROSPORUM OVALE)

This is the stubborn germ t so many dermatologists call causative agent of infectious ndruff. Listerine Antiseptic ls it readily. Remember, Lis-rine Antiseptic is the same ntiseptic that has been famous r over 60 years in the field of al hygiene. Lambert Pharma-l Co., St. Louis, Mo.

what to look for on a man!

Surprising how often you can tell what's in a man by looking at what's on him! ■ Look at his hat, for instance . . . does it tell you a tale of good taste, good manners and a flair for gracious living? ■ It surely does—if it's a smart hat that shapes up to his personality . . . a hat that's up to the minute. It doesn't take much more than a minute to make a man smartly dressed by making him properly hatted . . . if that minute is spent at a Recognized Hatter's. ■ That's where he'll get the right hat—the right shade, the right shape, the right style for his clothes and his personality.

RECOGNIZED Hat Research Foundation HATTER

This Plaque Identifies a Recognized Hatter

The store that displays it is staffed with experts trained to fit you with the right shape, the right shade, and the right style hat for your personality.

the right hat on the right man helps you look smarter

Our Readers Write Us

Likes Leoni

Honolulu, T. H.

Dear Editors: Who does the Never Underestimate the Power of a Woman drawings? Surely they deserve more than anonymity. Herewith, at any rate, a deep bow of appreciation. Very truly yours,

DOROTHY M. McCOY.

We certainly never underestimate the power of Leonard Leoni, who has been drawing powerful women for the JOURNAL since Feb., 1941. ED.

Gosh!

Pennsylvania Railroad.

Dear Editors: A program of retraining has been initiated among the dining-car employees of the Pennsylvania Railroad. Every steward, chef, cook and waiter is being put through intensive refresher courses. All crews are being given lectures stressing courtesy, tact, deference and alacrity.

During the war the most that the number of dining cars could be increased was 14 per cent, while patronage rose to 500 per cent of prewar.

Overpressure cannot be relieved immediately. However, eventually we expect to attain higher standards of service than ever before. J. F. FINNEGAN,

Gen. Supt.

Your Money's Worth!

West Palm Beach, Florida.

Dear Journal Editors: I've always suspected you have that "something extra" and now I know I'm right.

Oh, lucky, lucky advertisers who use your pages, for their product is most certainly glorified and this time you have outjournaled the JOURNAL! I'm enclosing a page which has received unusually realistic treatment. I glanced at it—took a second look—then brushed my finger across to see if I was right. You're truly wonderful.

Sincerely,

MARION NYE.

The only explanation we could give Reader Nye (whose Crisco ad arrived sprinkled with flour—it really did) is that gremlins must have been baking in the pressroom. ED.

Navy Accused of Waste

Seattle, Washington.

Dear Editors: Can't something be done to force the Army and Navy officers to turn over their huge stock piles of food and clothes, particularly for civilian use?

Here in Seattle there hasn't been enough of anything during all the war, due to our greatly increased population; we wouldn't mind so much if these stock piles were finding their way to the starving folks of Europe and China. But to sit here and watch them burned and dumped in Puget Sound—well, it is more than human forbearance can take.

We have no butter; have had, will have no butter; yet the Navy repeatedly burns and throws away tons of it. We can't buy clothes; we can't buy cotton goods; yet the Navy burns up good clothing. We are a port of debarkation for millions of troops. They come back from the Pacific with the same stories—waste, spoilage, utter disregard for the fundamental principles of good sense and economy. We have a nephew still "rotting at Subic Bay" as he puts it. He is coming back bitter and disillusioned at twenty-one. How can anyone tell all the thousands like him that the way to a good successful life is through hard work and thrift?

Sincerely yours,

MORDA C. SLAUSON.

Food for America First!

Albany, New York.

Dear Editors: Just where does Katherine Newlin Burt find the "enormous overloading of everyone's plate"? We don't find it here. Many people are hungry right in the U.S. We have given plenty of money, food, and clothing for European relief! Most sincerely,

Name withheld by request.

The Best American Tradition

Winchester, Massachusetts.

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Gould: Your latest issue touches on subjects that are extremely vital in our day: marriage, the position of women, childbearing and our high divorce rate.

I am a woman of thirty-three, happily married thirteen years, and have three lovely children. I have found out through the years that working at a marriage and bringing up children properly is a full-time proposition and that the results are extremely satisfying and heart-warming. I find it a full-time job to keep a nice home (my husband's income is well above average, but by preference I have only a cleaning woman) and bring up three children well—which means devoting time and sharing fun with the children (I play baseball, skate, swim and ride with them); reading enough good books and magazines to be able to discuss intelligently articles of interest with my husband, keeping up my piano playing, listening to good music, being a good friend and neighbor to those who need help—and still be able to look as attractive as the next woman when my husband comes home. I still find it fun to flirt with my husband when he comes home, or even occasionally put on my nicest hostess gown to surprise him! He loves it too! Is there anything more gratifying than having your husband brag about you, or beam when guests rave about your homemade bread?

I am never bored just being a homemaker. I find life and people too interesting. And I do think we women should try to regain some of the old lovely standards that women stood for, and men looked up to. To stress the importance of adult thinking toward marriage and children, as well as going back (part way, anyhow) to the old-fashioned attitude of "being a lady," and a homemaker, is a real job for any woman today.

Thank you both for giving us one of the finest all-around magazines of the day.

Sincerely,

Name withheld by request.

Scared of the Future

Memphis, Tennessee.

Dear Editors: I am nineteen and have a long life ahead, but I am really frightened out of my wits at the picture the future gives. Our country expects miracles from the young, but we cannot do it all.

Sincerely,

BETTY VAN DRESSER.

We still have a chance, though it may be our last, to live and work together in one world. The young can always do more than the old think. ED.

Not Sorry She's Fat

Cedar Falls, Washington.

Dear Editor: The "war on overweight women" is a subject very near to my heart and my size 42 bust. Mrs. Ross forgot to mention that a great many women are large due to a glandular disturbance. Perhaps she was intimidated by some publicity-seeking dope who has been reporting that people are fat only because they overeat. My Aunt Mathilda's mustache!

There seems to have been a move in the past few years to do away with women's shapes. They are now called figures, and anything resembling a breast, hip or stomach is so revolting to the fashion designers that they haven't made any allowance for these parts of the anatomy.

Why doesn't someone write a love story entitled "Fat Girls Marry Too" and start a trend to glamorize the large girls? What we need is a leader with the courage to design some fashions for us size 40's and up. AND PLEASE, PLEASE DON'T CALL THEM STYLISH STOUTS! Even the old girls might like to buy a frock with a little umph in it.

MRS. RODNEY BLAIN.

This is What You Can Do

Valley Stream, New York.

Dear Editors: The writers of "We Live in the Atomic Age" warn us and terrify

(Continued on Page 13)

Free to new members of the Book-of-the-Month Club

Kristin Lavransdatter

BY SIGRID UNDSET

in Three Volumes • Boxed

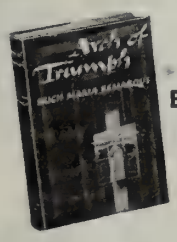
Retail Price $7.50



—a great historical novel which won for its author the Nobel Prize for Literature and which seems to be the most deeply enjoyed of all the books distributed by the Club in twenty years

"HERE ARE THE VIKINGS in their homes as well as upon the seas — barbarians becoming Christians; and here is a winsome child amongst them, such as you might delight in and be proud of as her knightly father was of little Kristin. This is how she grew up and loved madly and sinned, and broke her father's heart, though he would not say so; and how she quarreled with and loved again her charming, irresponsible husband, and how she bore many children to him and what happened to them. The folk-ways of the time are here as background to a story as modern and as ancient as the passions of humankind. People grow old and die in this book; little girls become harried mothers, puling infants become brawling warriors. Long years pass, and do their work. This is a book, in short, that leaves you rich in memories, as Time itself does. That, surely, is the supreme test of a work of fiction."

—From Book-of-the-Month Club News.

THE KIND OF BOOKS CHOSEN BY THE CLUB'S FIVE JUDGES

Begin your subscription WITH ANY ONE OF THEM...ALL BEST SELLERS

ARCH OF TRIUMPH
By Erich Maria Remarque
Price to members
$2.75

MAN-EATERS OF KUMAON
By Jim Corbett
and
THE SNAKE PIT
By Mary Jane Ward
(double selection)
Combined price to members
$3.00

BRIDESHEAD REVISITED
By Evelyn Waugh
$2.50

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF
WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE
Price to members
$3.00

TO JOIN THE BOOK-OF-THE-MONTH CLUB

SIGNING and mailing the coupon enrolls you. You pay no fixed sum as a member of the Book-of-the-Month Club and obligate yourself for no fixed term. You pay for each book as you receive it, no more than the publisher's retail price, and frequently much less. (A small charge is added to cover postage and other mailing expenses.)

As a member you receive a careful prepublication report about each book-of-the-month (and at the same time reports about all other important new books). If you want the book-of-the-month, you let it come. If not, you specify some other book you want, or simply write, "Send me nothing."

With every two books-of-the-month you buy, you receive, free, a valuable book-dividend. Last year the retail value of books given to Club members was over $9,000,000.

Your only obligation as a member is to buy no fewer than four books-of-the-month in any twelve-month period, and you can cancel your subscription any time after doing so. (Prices are slightly higher in Canada.)

BOOK-OF-THE-MONTH CLUB A166
385 Madison Avenue, New York 17, N. Y.

Please enroll me as a member. I am to receive free the three-volume edition of KRISTIN LAVRANSDATTER, boxed. For every two books-of-the-month I purchase from the Club I am to receive, free, the current book-dividend then being distributed. I agree to purchase at least four books-of-the-month from the Club each full year I am a member, and I may cancel my subscription any time after purchasing four such books from the Club.

Name .....
Please Print Plainly

Address .....

City ..... Postal Zone No. (if any) ..... State .....

Begin My Subscription With .....
(choose one of the selections shown above)

Book prices are slightly higher in Canada but the Club ships to Canadian members without any extra charge for duty through Book-of-the-Month Club (Canada), Limited.

Sir Archie sizes up the AMERICAN GIRL

"Ripping country, America! Everything's simply ripping—even the frock on that pretty young thing boarding the tram. Haw! But I mean to say, frightfully snug, eh? Don't these clev ah American girls know that they should always look for the 'Sanforized' label? A 'Sanforized' frock would nevah have diminished in that ghastly fashion!

"Oh, I say. That's an int'ristin' sight! She must be attending a mahsquerade as Mother Hubbard. Allowing for shrinkage? Utterly absurd! Jove, I thought the women of America jolly well knew that a 'Sanforized' frock retains its original fit; makes it absolutely unnecess'ry to allow for shrinkage!

"Positively extrawd'n'ry! Such beauty of line! Reminds me, m'deah—that charmin' frock enhances your own architecture. It's been tubbed a million times, you say? Quaint exaggeration, of course. Still, with an amazin' 'Sanforized' frock like that, you could tub it a million times, and it would keep that truly mahvelous fit!"

To keep on looking smart
—it's got to keep on FITTING!

·SANFORIZED·
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
Fabric Shrinkage less than 1% by the Government's Standard Test

"Sanforized"... checked standard of shrinkage. The "Sanforized" trade-mark is used on compressive pre-shrunk fabrics only when tests for residual shrinkage are regularly checked, through the service of the owners of the trade-mark, to insure maintenance of its established standard by users of the mark.

Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc.

(Continued from Page 10)

us and try to shake us out of the complacency which I doubt that many of us feel—but, just as in so many other articles, do not tell us what we are expected to do. Sincerely yours,

Name withheld by request.

Public opinion will ultimately determine the permanence or dissolution of U.N. Individuals can, when discussing U.N. with their friends and acquaintances, uphold its principles. They can write their Congressmen and their delegates to let these representatives know who's backing them. ED.

No Place Like Home—If We Had One!

Marseilles, Illinois.

Dear Editor: I want to register a protest on the housing situation for veterans. Many were forced to give up their homes; now they are returning—to what? My husband, 3-year-old daughter and I are living in one room eleven feet square. We own a home site and want to build as soon as possible. But building bricks cost $40.00 per thousand as compared to $11.00 per thousand before the war.

I worked for fourteen hours a day, seven days a week, saving every penny, and kept going by the dream of a home and babies in the not-too-distant future. And now—unless a miracle happens, the three of us will be here for several years.

Sincerely yours,
VIRGINIA SHARP.

There is no question about the need for millions of new, low-cost homes. What the public can do is to support, vocally and in writing, the men who are trying to house the homeless cheaply and well. ED.

We are Tempted

Quebec, Canada.

Dear Editors: I like to see and read more of our Editors. Why not a How an Editor Lives and photos? I think it was Mrs. Gould's hat that I fell for—that black veiling creation.

Sincerely yours,
MRS. RAYMOND ANDERSON.

So did she. ED.

Hot Lunches for Kids

Templeton, Mass.

Dear Editor: We'd like to see some more articles on the school lunch program under which some 6,000,000 school children are being fed their noon-day meal.

Your article in October, 1944, was very helpful in starting our own program. The school has a population of about 155, and about 100 meals are served daily.

We serve the Type A lunch—½ pint of whole pasteurized cow's milk, bread and oleo, 2 ounces of meat or its equivalent, and ¾ cup of fruit and/or vegetable for 15¢ plus an allowance of 9¢ which comes from the Federal Government. We employ a paid cook and helper. Some volunteer help is given by mothers.

Health and attendance records are better at our school since March, 1945, when we started.

How about spreading the word to women all over the country so that they may help themselves and their children?

Yours very truly,
Name withheld by request.

Federal aid for the school lunch program, which has been operating for more than ten years on a "temporary" basis, was recently doubled by the Senate, and the program is to reach eventually 30,000,000 children in public and private schools. ED.

Cleanliness Next to Impossible

Paris, France.

Dear Editors: I simply must tell you how glad we are to receive the JOURNAL after five long years.

For us who have been and are still living a life of privations it is wonderful to read about all the luxury and abundance in your country—not only the food—but the clothes, soap—well, everything.

Before the war I often wondered about the reality of the sentence "Give us this day our daily bread." We took it for granted, but during the years of occupation I realized the bitter meaning of it. I often have prayed it with desperation. My brother who lives in England now sends me some tea regularly and every afternoon it is still a pleasure to be able to drink a cup of tea—and not be afraid it will be the end of the provision. In 1940 I had a little package that lasted me all these years. It was only when one of us was really ill that I made a cup of tea.

Food, heating and clothing conditions are still very bad but we are emerging slowly—oh, so slowly—out of the misery, ugliness and dreadfulness of those dark years of occupation.

Reading your JOURNAL again is one of the lights on our horizon.

Sincerely yours,
M. RADEMAKER.

You Will Still Buy it at About Cost to Us

Glenside, Pennsylvania.

Dear Editors: May I congratulate you on the very fine magazine you publish each month? The novels are of the highest caliber, the editorials and articles interesting and informative, the "bits of wisdom" found on the back pages inspiring and true.

Your magazine is the biggest 15 cent value that I know of. Each time I read it I marvel anew at the low cost.

Sincerely,
CARMELLA PARENTI.

Because paper and printing costs have risen drastically, along with practically everything else, including our own wages, the JOURNAL will be 25 cents an issue hereafter. ED.

Just in Time Too

Tampico, Mexico.

Dear Editors: For some time I have been reading the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, supplied to me by a friend.

Considering that the said magazine is very interesting, I have decided to enter a four-year subscription.

Sincerely yours,
CARMEN L. OJEDA DE RAMIREZ.

By subscribing at the old rate she saved herself many a centavo. ED.

Here's What's Left

Pullman, Washington.

Dear Editors: The political terms "center," "right," "left" are derived from continental European parliamentary practice followed since the days of the French Revolution.

In the continental parliaments, there are represented at least a dozen political parties. The members are seated in a semicircular arrangement according to their political sentiments: conservatives, on the right; moderates, in the center; liberals and radicals, on the left.

Sincerely,
ELAINE E. THORSON.

Right! ED.

Notice of Change of Address

Franklin, Pennsylvania.

Editor Ladies' Home Journal: This is my first "Dear Editor" in the forty years since I first began reading the JOURNAL. I wish to express my appreciation of the high standard your magazine has always had.

It is my husband's favorite joke that I took a copy of the JOURNAL as chaperon on our honeymoon, and I suspect in the next world my first words will be:

"Has the JOURNAL come?"

Sincerely,
REBA P. KINGSLEY.

If the JOURNAL comes, can the editors be far behind? ED.

Feed Him Milk

Decatur, Illinois.

Dear Editor: Does a boy choose a girl to be his wife because she has an economics major, is good-looking, neat or can dance?

Not in my opinion. He can only be counted on to accept what happens to be

(Continued on Page 148)

First o' the month helps

FOR CANNY HOME MANAGERS

When mailing coins, stick 'em to your letter with "Scotch" Cellulose Tape. They will never bounce around inside the envelope and maybe drop out!

DOUBLE SEAL envelopes with "Scotch" Brand Tape, too.

"SCOTCH" TAPE'S a swell money-mender for torn money or damaged checks.

A STRIP of "Scotch" Tape's just the thing to bind bank statements to cancelled checks. Better get a roll of "Scotch" Tape right away. You'll find scads of mending and holding chores for it to do around the house. Your favorite dealer may have it now in the gay new plaid dispenser—25¢ complete.

SEALS WITHOUT MOISTENING

IMPORTANT
For your protection, insist on "SCOTCH" Brand transparent tape. Always look for the name "SCOTCH" and the Scotch plaid design. © 1946 3M CO.

SCOTCH Cellulose TAPE
BRAND

© 1946 3M CO.

"SCOTCH" is the registered trade-mark for the more than 100 varieties of adhesive tapes made in U. S. A. by MINNESOTA MINING & MFG. CO. Saint Paul 6, Minn.
THE 3M COMPANY

Also makers of "3M" Brand abrasives, adhesives, and a wide variety of other products for home and industry

Prize your purchase when you can tuck Armour Star Bacon in your shopping bag! It's naturally hardest to get during this time of scarcity!

How to fry bacon right! You enjoy all the mild, delicious flavor of Armour Star Bacon when you fry it this easy way: Place strips in cold frying pan over low heat and cook slowly, 7 to 8 minutes, turning often. Pour off fat as it accumulates. Perfectly-fried bacon is crisp, but not brittle, evenly cooked and only slightly curled.

Hand Picked

Sugar Cured

Tender Smoked

© ARMOUR AND COMPANY 1946

Listen to Hedda Hopper's Hollywood every Monday night over NBC (Blue) Network. See local papers for time and station.

America's Luxury Bacon

FIFTY YEARS AGO IN THE JOURNAL

IN June, 1896, the Prince of Wales' horse won the Derby, George M. Cohan wrote a tune called Hot Tamale Alley, and William McKinley became the Republican presidential candidate. Only 3 were saved, 250 lost, from the Drummond Castle, wrecked off Brittany, and rural free delivery began.

The fashionable Fifth Avenue Hotel in New York had 500 servants for its 500 guests, reveals the JOURNAL of June, 1896. "The chambermaids do not have a hard time and are well paid for their work. They receive wages of twelve dollars a month; and their hours begin at six in the morning and end at six at night."

"Belle: A young girl in deep mourning could not, with propriety, wear a silver belt buckle."

"Mrs. R.C.T.: A bathing dress for a girl of twelve is made with a yoke, sailor collar, long sleeves, and short skirt reaching the knees. Knickerbockers are worn under it, and stockings and shoes if the beach is pebbly."

Writes Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney on what she calls "the monstrosities" of high style: "Witness the rapid development of the insanity of the sleeve. Would you put a rose in a vase with a cabbage leaf on each side? Do you really wish to look like that?"

"Let them give the women the vote if they will," remarks antifeminist Lilian Bell flippantly. "I shall want at least three men to go with me to the polls—one to hold my purse, one to hold my gloves, and the third to show me how to cast my vote."

Fashion note: "Poke bonnets, tied under the chin with wide ribbon, are trimmed with velvet pansies, Valenciennes lace and osprey feathers."

"From the ages of ten to fifteen years, children should not bathe more than twice a week," writes Dr. Cyrus Edson, adding that a sponge bath should be taken every day. "One tub bath a week is sufficient for cleanliness."

GOSSIP ABOUT PEOPLE YOU KNOW, EDITORS YOU LIKE AND WHAT GOES ON IN NEW YORK

Journal About Town

FEININGER

Happy days are here again as river boats ply the Hudson.

AT any time of the year there is, of course, plenty to see, but right about now the view from the Goulds' windows in the Workshop, and from Mary Bass' and Wilhela Cushman's too, makes these offices particularly attractive. For the big white Hudson River boats have begun again for the summer, and twice every morning you can see them pull out from their piers, curve back into midstream and start grandly off, appearing and reappearing from behind the buildings between here and them. The biggest of them all—in fact, the biggest river boat in the world—is the Hendrick Hudson; and on a midsummer morning its palatial whiteness from here is striped with four dark bands, which are people packed on the four big decks, more excited, we'd say—for we've been one of them—than passengers bound in the other direction for Europe on the Queen Mary. And as on their way to West Point and Poughkeepsie they pass the Queen Mary at her pier, they can say that their boat, when full, carries almost twice as many people as any other ship in the world—except for war. But let's not bring that up this June.

When Al Parker went over to Philadelphia recently to speak before the Art Directors' Club, and it was time for his talk, he couldn't be found. But our art editor, Frank Eltonhead, who heard the sound of traps upstairs being expertly played, and knew Al's weakness, told the chairman where he'd find the missing artist—who's a wizard with the drums the way he's a wizard with the mother-and-daughter covers and illustrations that millions admire in the JOURNAL.

CARICATURE BY BILL BAILEY

The Parker trap technique.

Somebody here has figured out that if you'd bought the 38 books that have been published from Journal fiction in the past three years, they'd have cost you well over $100, as against $4 for three years of the magazine, with all that went with it. What the 14 Journal stories bought by the movies in the same period would cost to see is where our man stopped figuring.

For the company up in the Bronx which Alice Blinn has been telling us about, the old phrase, "carrying coals to Newcastle," probably seems a pretty worn-out cliché. Because they send sand to the desert of Sahara. Of course, it's a very special grade of sand, which they also sent to help win the war in the Pacific. But the reason Miss B. brought it up was on account of the company's president, C. Exner Hannig, who runs the firm like magic, and whose power should not be underestimated. . . . Seems that C. Exner Hannig is a woman.

Charles Jackson, who wrote The Lost Weekend, had his last drink ten years ago. . . . Of all professional men, ministers enjoy the longest lives, doctors the shortest. . . . "Everything happens in the evening, or else on Saturdays," Elizabeth Janeway complains about the stories women write. That's why she devotes so much space to workaday Washington in her novel, Daisy Kenyon. . . . Last year, 39 Philadelphians were bitten by other human beings in the City of Brotherly Love. . . . If a lot of Jon Whitcomb's drawings look like Susan Hayward, that's because she was once his favorite model. . . . Multimillionaire Charlie Chaplin won't allow his guests new tennis balls unless he's playing with them. . . . A scene had to be retaken in Bette Davis' Stolen Life because a foghorn sounded just like a famous soap commercial.

The other morning Maureen Daly received some statistics that showed how after every war there were always more boy babies born than girls, and in the same mail she got an item on the fact that so many Hollywood glamour mothers seem to go in exclusively for daughters. At least, Betty Grable, Maureen O'Hara, Maria Montez, Rita Hayworth, Veronica Lake, Lana Turner, Judy Garland, Deanna Durbin, Ingrid leaves your hair so lustrous,

No other shampoo
yet so easy to manage

♥ Cupid finds it difficult to resist the girl with Drene-lovely hair!
When you Drene your hair, it gleams with all its natural lustre . . .
all its enchanting highlights revealed.

"The best way to catch a camera or a man's e says glamorous Cover Girl Penny Edward "is to look your loveliest with shining-smooth

Here, Penny, golden-haired Drene Girl, shows these easy-to-fix hair styles you can try at ho or ask your beauty shop to do.

Your hair is far silkier, smoother and easier to manage when you use today's imp
Drene Shampoo with Hair Conditioning acti
No other shampoo leaves your hair so lustro
yet so easy to manage.

hen you wear these romantic air," says Penny, "matches the moments." Drene reveals far soap shampoo: . . actually as nce Drene is not a soap sham-n on hair as all soaps do. See becoming height to her face.

Hand Picked
Sugar Cured
Tender Smoke

ten to Hedda Hopper's Hollywood every Monday
ABC (Blue) Network. See local papers for time and ♥ LOVE-NEST SHOPPING finds you smoothly groomed...your shining-clean hair swept over to one side in this sleek style. "Do you know," asks Penny, "that Drene completely removes unsightly dandruff the very first time you use it?" Don't let ugly dandruff spoil the beauty of your hair. Follow Penny's advice and be a Drene Girl.

♥ HONEYMOON TENNIS is indee love game when you braid your in these beguiling pigtails. "It's so easy t any hair-do," Penny reveals, "when you Drene Girl." Note how Drene with Conditioning action leaves Penny's beautifully behaved right after shampoo
...how she ties her pigtails with colored b

THE JOURNAL'S COMPLETE-IN-ONE-ISSUE NOVEL

THE PURSUIT OF LOVE

BY NANCY MITFORD

ILLUSTRATED BY COBY WHITMORE

Long ago Linda's family had adjusted themselves to the fact that wherever Linda was—there trouble was also.

THERE is a photograph in existence of Aunt Sadie and her six children sitting round the tea table at Alconleigh. The table is situated, as it was, is now, and ever shall be, in the hall, in front of a huge open fire of logs. Over the chimney piece hangs an entrenching tool with which, in 1915, Uncle Matthew whacked to death eight Germans one by one as they crawled out of a dugout—an object of fascination to us as children. In the photograph Aunt Sadie's face, always beautiful, appears strangely round, her hair strangely fluffy, and her clothes strangely dowdy, but it is unmistakably she who sits there with Robin, in oceans of lace, lolling on her knee. The other children, between Louisa's eleven and Matt's two years, sit round the table in party dresses or frilly bibs, holding cups or mugs according to age, all of them gazing at the camera with large eyes opened wide by the flash, and all looking as if butter would not melt in their round pursed-up mouths. I often think there is nothing quite so poignantly sad as old family groups.

When a child I spent Christmas holidays at Alconleigh, and, while some of them slipped by with nothing much to remember, others were distinguished by violent occurrences. There was the time, for example, when the servants' wing caught fire, the time when my pony lay on me in the brook and nearly drowned me (not very nearly; he was soon (Continued on Page 74)

★ ★ Copyright, 1945, by Nancy Mitford. This is a condensation of the novel soon to be published by Random House, Inc. ★ ★

It was more like measuring time than anything else. Each year we were older, and bigger and nearer to love.

"Baby," he said, still laughing, "will you do this to every man who says you're pretty?"

Lipstand with

Ever since she had been a baby, Margery had somehow known that although daddy loved her, he would have loved her more if things had been different. ★ By Florence Cummings

LATE on a Saturday afternoon in spring of the year she was nine, Margery Dilling stood at the door of her room, trembling like a thief. She listened intently. In the bathroom the shower hissed and Felice sang of love denied in the smoky alto voice she was presently cultivating. Downstairs her mother talked from time to time, and her father answered only in monosyllables, which meant he was trying to read. The upstairs maid was off for the afternoon, and cook was busy with the dinner.

Quick and silent as a rabbit, Margery darted across the hall into Felice's room, and was back in an instant, breathless and perspiring, her fist clenched over the object of her desire. She closed her door all but a crack, so that she would be able to hear when her sister got out of the shower, and hurried to her dresser.

The sight of herself in the mirror made her feel suddenly that the whole idea was just silly. She surveyed herself with distaste. Her straight, dark hair, cut short to eliminate barrettes or bobby pins, jutted out like an upside-down pineapple. There was a smear of mud from under her snub nose down to her jaw, and her blouse and jumper looked bedraggled.

Five minutes before, she had tramped in from the street, slammed the front door so hard the lamps all shook, performed a spectacular handstand in the front hall, and then bounded up the stairs two at a time, whistling defiantly. But at the door of her sister's room she had stopped, transfixed, her eyes on the floor. She made herself walk on then, but the temptation had been too unexpected, too acute. She went back.

And now she faced her grimy image in the mirror, and saw that she looked exactly as usual, and that she was quite obviously not a person for hair bows.

She fingered the stolen piece of ribbon. It was a red candy-box ribbon, the kind used by expensive confectioners. Cupped in her hand, shining and soft, its brilliant color glowing, every curve and fold of it tempted and bewitched her. With an impulsive movement she raised it to her face and rubbed its silkiness against her cheek. Then she raised her head and listened again. The shower was still going.

With clumsy, inexperienced fingers, she gathered up a handful of her hair on one side, and began to tie on the ribbon. But the short strands were elusive, and none of them were left inside the knot by the time the bow was half made. She tried again. She struggled for a long time, but at last, with tongue poked tensely out between tight lips and brows arching and contracting spasmodically, she finished the bow, and when she took her hands away it perched on her head, though precariously. Only then did she release her breath and examine herself in the mirror.

It looked neither good nor bad. It just looked queer. It was too long for a bow, and the surplus ends hung down lamely. She pushed at it, trying to tuck in the ends, trying to make it look more natural. It came away and fell to the floor. She snatched it up and glared at it angrily, and then, with tears starting into her eyes, threw it down and was about to step on it, when she heard the bathroom door open. Blind instinct made her pick it up quickly and thrust it into her top drawer, and when Felice came by, swathed in her ostrich-trimmed robe, Margery was taking out a handkerchief.

"Hello, scarecrow," said Felice, pushing the door open. "What's new among the juvenile delinquents?"

"Who wants to know?" Margery closed the drawer and began to clean her nose with elaborate unconcern.

The older sister stood watching her, eyebrows raised superciliously. The personality of this tomboy kid simply didn't make sense to Felice, who, at twenty, was pretty and blond, and had been getting prettier and blonder for several years under her mother's devoted guidance. Felice understood the patterns of behavior that produce the good things of life for women, and she could see clearly that this younger sister was a frightful misfit. She felt vaguely sorry for the queer little duck, but then it was not an easy life, even for a carefully preserved blond virgin of twenty. For the available men who had both money and some vestige of youth, the competition was simply harrowing. And it didn't make things easier, when men were calling, to know that at any moment a dirty scarecrow of a kid might come zooming in, destroying in one stroke the laboriously constructed charm of her home background. In fact, Marge had done exactly that with one very promising contact, and, although it turned out he was on his way to South America anyway, Felice had never quite forgiven Marge for the incident.

She watched the child now with her usual mixture of irritation and contempt. When Margery had finished with her nose, she folded her arms and eyed Felice defiantly. After a moment Felice shrugged and turned back to her room. Immediately Margery closed her own door.

Now what! She had planned to drop the ribbon back on the floor near the basket the moment the water was turned off in the shower. Now it was too late. She could only hope Felice wouldn't notice it was missing. In her mind's eye she could see her sister's lips part in astonishment. "Why, little scarecrow!" her sister would exclaim. "Why, who would guess the little scarecrow was so vain? A hair ribbon, no less! Well, who knows? Maybe it will change her into a raving beauty!" And then Felice's laughter would bubble out to taunt her. Margery felt she would rather die and be buried than let Felice know she had the slightest interest in her own appearance.

She took the ribbon from the drawer, went to her closet and poked it way back on a shelf behind a box of marbles. If Felice accused her, she would not deny it. She would say she wanted to make a beanbag out of it. Then she thought of Felice eying her knowingly. "A beanbag, eh? Out of such thin stuff?"

She took the ribbon out again, opened the neck of her blouse and dropped it down inside. She would ride a few (Continued on Page 140)

ILLUSTRATED BY PERRY PETERSON

NOT BEAUTIFUL

Walter was haunted by two photographs. One was the snapshot he carried tucked in his billfold—the other was of another man's wife.

BY MARGARET WEYMOUTH JACKSON

ILLUSTRATED BY ALEX ROSS

HE walked home in the dusk, and his footsteps lagged as he drew nearer to his own small house. No, it was true, he did not have the nerve to ask it of her! Now, especially, when she was going to have a baby and she was so happy about it. She would be wanting things. She had waited so long, and now he could not ask her to deny herself the little luxuries and pretty things she'd want. She had been such a good girl, he thought, smiling a little. It wasn't much of a compliment, he supposed, to say that about a grown woman, but the phrase suited her. She had been willing to postpone the baby, when he thought it best. And now she wasn't young like most of these girls wagging their small fry about. She needed every comfort!

Five years! Five years gone. Not that he regretted it. His years were no more important than any other man's. But he was at an age now where he should take advantage of a chance like this. He had long dreamed of owning all or part of a good drugstore. It had been such a long, difficult time for him to get his schooling as a pharmacist. Then, after his discharge from the Navy, he had to go back to school again to take a refresher course in pharmacy. There were so many new drugs, new methods. He had learned a lot in the Navy, but he had received much benefit from the additional training.

Now he was back here at home, in the Hayes and Linton Drugstore, and Ilene was to have her baby soon. The hours of his work were long, but he liked merchandising, he enjoyed the methodical drug department with its clean jars and bottles. Ike Linton paid him well enough. He and Ilene could go on now indefinitely. But Mr. Hayes, the older partner, had died not long ago, and today Mrs. Hayes and Mr. Linton had called him into the office and offered him Hayes' share in the store. His heart throbbed painfully when he stood talking to them. He didn't have enough money.

"You can borrow under the G. I. Bill of Rights," said Mr. Linton, "under which you went back to school. Your pay will continue and each year you'll have your share of the profits to put back. Better think about it, Walter. Talk to Ilene."

He went out in the afternoon and went to the bank. Yes, Mr. Nelson said, he could borrow the money. He was entitled to it in every way. Of course he would have to pay it back, but prudent management should make that possible.

But that was what he didn't want to do—manage prudently. Not now. He didn't want to ask any more of Ilene. She had been through too much. She had kept the house going and made the payments to the building-and-loan. She had rented a room to two schoolteachers, and kept her own job as well. She had gone through all that bad business of her mother's illness and death with no one to hold her hand, to keep up her courage. And now he would certainly have his nerve to ask her—just when they were getting going again—he would have his nerve to ask her to give up a good part of their income, so he could buy into the store.

It was an old dream. It was his chance. But he couldn't, that was all.

He stood a moment before the house and looked toward the west where the sky was crimson with the promise of another fine day. He knew, now, that he was not in love with her, as some men loved their wives. But he was fond of her, and he did appreciate all that she had done. He valued her, he thought a little bleakly. And if he did not quite love her as she loved him, if he did not feel the quickening pulse, the leap of the heart he knew now that others felt, it was not her fault. It increased his obligation to her. It was not that he loved anyone else, or that he ever had. He had just somehow missed the great romantic adventure that men instinctively sought all their lives—that many found. She was a good girl. He wanted her to be happy.

He came into the house. It was a modest little house, but it had a beauty of its own. It was immaculately clean. The floors shone with wax, the furniture was polished, the slip covers fresh and stiff with starch, the curtains white as snow. Every windowpane gleamed, and every doorknob was clean and polished. The house showed the care and love that Ilene gave it. In the living room the lamp was lighted beside his chair, and the evening paper waited for him. In the small dining room a white cloth was laid on the table and pretty dishes sparkled there. There was the smell of good food.

"Walter?" Ilene asked quickly, eagerly. He hung up his coat and went out into the kitchen at once, and kissed her. She was smiling at him, with a certain shyness that still came to her at times. "I didn't know whether to go ahead with the dinner, or wait a little longer," she said.

"It was so pleasant out-of-doors I dallied," he told her. "My, what's that? Corned-beef hash? It smells wonderful!"

"And hot biscuits," she said, opening the oven.

He helped her carry things in to the table and he filled the water glasses. She moved quickly and lightly, her slender strong feet carrying her somewhat distorted body without effort. She stood straight and looked quite well, considering that her baby was due in a matter of weeks. She was not very large. She was, usually, on the thin side, but she was always so neat and smooth and clean, with her shining glasses and her brushed and shining hair, that one didn't really think about whether she was thin or fat.

They ate their dinner and enjoyed it. Walter felt a certain relief that he had decided not to tell her about the store. Let her be happy now, let her be a little extravagant, if she liked. But somehow he found that he was telling her. Whom had he seen today? Well, this one and that—and finally, Mrs. Hayes. She said she had heard that Mrs. Hayes was going to sell her partnership in the store. Had he heard about that? Mrs. Wilson told Ilene in the grocery that morning. Would it make any difference to them? He was a little astonished at her questioning. As though she already knew! Well, perhaps she did.

He dried the dishes for her and slowly, reluctantly, he told her about the offer they had made to him that day to buy into the store. "Ike insists that I think about it," he said, "but I have already made up my mind not to try to do it. It's too much money to borrow, right now, with the baby coming and all."

Ilene hung her dishpan away and washed her hands. She was smiling with a bright look, like the reflection of a strong light. She said, "You'll think I'm crazy, but I forgot to tell you."

"Forgot to tell me what?" he said.

"I'll show you," she said. "I've been so excited since you got home, and since the baby is coming and all. I've thought of it dozens of times, when you weren't here—and then forgot it again."

"What are you talking about Ilene?" he asked. He had hoped, he supposed, that she would urge him to go ahead and borrow the money. But evidently she had already forgotten about that. He followed her into the dining room and she went to her small desk and opened a drawer and took out and gave him a bankbook with a rubber band around it.

"You don't need to borrow the money," she said. "We've got it—or nearly enough. I saved all the time you were gone. Every cent you allotted to me and what you sent home besides, and some of my earnings. I worked, you know, and rented the guest room, and it didn't take much to keep me going. Mother had enough to pay the expenses of her illness and death. You may have to borrow a little, but not much."

She spoke modestly, almost bashfully. He took the little green stiff-backed book and opened it slowly and turned the pages and looked at the total on the last page, the entry made about the time he came home and she quit her job. He was deeply shaken. It wasn't the money! He could have managed the money himself, but it was as though the scales fell from his eyes as he looked at her. She had forgotten

(Continued on Page 198)

No wonder Preston wanted to show off a picture of such a wife. Walter thought enviously. Any man would jump at the chance.

KING GUS

THERE was the park, and there was his street and the cab was turning into it. He was coming home, but he wanted to put it off for a little while. He stopped the cab and paid off the driver and walked over to a bench in the park and sat down. The truth was, he didn't want to be home at all.

He looked at the labels on the bag. Paris and London and Vienna. Prague. Milan. Moscow. Silly habit, pasting stickers on luggage. Buenos Aires. He took a long breath. Counting the stickers of tired hotels in tired cities, while Joss waited for him, up in that incredibly beautiful, incredibly neat flat—he was being pretty stupid.

Mr. and Mrs. Francis de la Mater Forrest. Apartment by Keene and Frost, interior decorators to the very rich, the very correct people who lived their life in pretty patterns. New York and Southampton and Florida and the coast of Southern Europe. Now it would all start over again. Joss Forrest, the beautiful Joss. Not a hair out of place, not an expression on her face, not a wrinkle on her soul.

France Forrest cocked an eye at the sky where a Baker two-nine was sailing majestically, and heaved his six-foot length up on its feet and strode across the grass. He was home, and he felt as if he were going to prison. True, the prison was pale satin and Lalique and deep carpeting and cool color, but there wasn't a place where a man could lean back and put up his feet and let his spine unlax.

Queer how a man's mind worked: all he'd thought about for six months was Joss, with her black hair knotted at the nape of her white neck by day or wreathed around her head in one huge braid by night—or the length of it streaming down the white satin of her gown at midnight. She was such a lovely creature, slim and tall—almost as tall as he was, almost even with him in high heels, measured mouth to mouth. That was what he'd thought about—him and Joss.

And it hit him with a queer hard shock that Joss was Jocelyn Forrest—Mrs. Francis Forrest, with the perfect apartment, the perfect life, the perfect way of living. He went into the lobby and sat down on the little hard bench by the elevator, panting a little with the weight of the Gladstone and the change in altitude, and thought about how much he didn't want to go upstairs.

He didn't want to go upstairs—that was for sure. And he was going to be in town for four weeks for the airways planning, and that was for sure too. And he remembered with a sick ache that upstairs was perfection, the perfection that always surrounded Joss.

He got up, finally, and pushed the automatic button and got himself inside the elevator and it went up like always, slow floor by floor, and finally it was the penthouse and that was where they lived.

He took the key out of his pocket—the key that had been his talisman—and he opened the door and stepped into the small lovely foyer with its dark green walls and white baroque plaster and yellow calla lilies. It was just the same, and involuntarily he closed his eyes. Just the same. He grinned wryly. The trouble with him was that he wanted a corned-beef-and-cabbage wife and he got a gal hung with yellow calla lilies.

He went on into the living room, with its remembered pale tufted satin furniture and the sweet twilight blue on the panes. Every chair stood in its correct place, rather like good little girls at catechism class. France went on into their room, with its wide bed and huge mirrors. He let the bag drop with a thud—nothing in it he wanted. He wanted the feel of a hot stinging shower and his electric shaver and clean linen and the heavy, comfortable touch of old tweeds. His dressing room was just as it had always been, the wide lavatory bordered with ancient black glass bottles of lotion and pine oil and a flacon of fern-scented cologne. He knew without looking that every one had been replenished.

With the needles of hot water biting into his flesh, he wondered where Joss was. It was teatime. Where were the people who customarily infested the Forrest abode? Where was Elinor, the slim, rather tragic wench with the poisonous tongue and the entourage of fatuous uniforms? Where was Ben, who spoke of politics as some housewives speak of recipes, lovingly, and often? Where was Jeremy, the medium-sized heel who knew which side he was buttered on? Where was Joss? He dragged a huge towel from its heated rod and wrapped it around his lean waist, wincing a little.

Where was Joss? Where was the lady who loved her home? Where was the gal who ran her hand lovingly over the gloss of a table, the hang of a drape, the pouf at the foot of her bed?

He shook himself irritatedly and pulled his sarong tighter. He was hungry. That was it. Where were those worry warts, the servants? He'd go out to the kitchen himself.

The kitchen was like a great many kitchens in New York, an afterthought on the part of the architect. It was a darksome hole, and France went out there muttering. The results were ambiguous: either nobody was living here or the provender was poor. No cold roast chicken, no web bag full of chilled lettuce, no racks of ginger ale and mixers. France turned on the ceiling light and looked again.

It must have been a signal. Immediately a something thrust its head through the window, gave him a dirty look and propelled itself through. It was—at first glance—a cat. And what a cat! It was a sort of gray-and-white beast, with its markings in dissonance, completely unassorted, and it had a cobbled ear. Somebody or some cat had made a cauliflower out of what nature had intended for an ear—distended, swollen, mismarked.

France stared at the apparition, fascinated. He said, "Look, chum, you look like I feel. Come on in, fellow."

Here was a bloke fresh from the wars. France looked away. Maybe he'd resent—well, hey now, this was a cat, and he didn't read the papers. But, boy, he must have been a romper in his day! Gad, look at that ear! France put out his hand in an awkward tribute. The cat, lashing his tail, gave him a salute of a raking claw, and France drew back. A fighter, huh?

(Continued on Page 120)

Once in a girl's life the woman is there for the asking. It happened to Joss just as Gus stepped into her kitchen. ★ By Nancy Shores

ILLUSTRATED BY JON WHITCOMB

It was the moment France had been dreaming of—only the girl was different.

New Ideas on Old Problems

MUST AMERICA BE CRIPPLED BY STRIKES? "NO," SAYS MINNESOTA'S FORMER GOVERNOR, WHO, WITH JOURNAL EDITORS, CHARTS A CURE FOR OUR INDUSTRIAL DISSENSION. ★ BY J. C. FURNAS

STUART

Peace at home is a basic condition for leadership in world security, declares former Governor Harold Stassen to Bruce and Beatrice Blackmar Gould.

"BUT isn't it possible," Mrs. Gould wanted to know, "for management and labor to get together without the dissensions we've been having for the past six months?" As an opening question in the breakfast interview between the youngish editors of the JOURNAL and the youngest potential candidate for the 1948 G.O.P. presidential nomination, this poser by Mrs. Gould seemed to go to the heart of perhaps the most troublesome problem plaguing our domestic scene today. The time was nine o'clock of a rainy morning. The place, a suite in the Waldorf-Astoria in New York City.

That same question asked by Mrs. Gould is being asked all over the nation by all kinds of people, in busses, sitting rooms, bars and bull sessions. Strikes—the open, destructive phase of economic warfare—have been rampant.

A sharp ear in this room could pick up the rumble of the subway which, a few weeks ago, had barely been rescued from strangulation by strike. A tugboat strike had also threatened the hotel's heat and power. The bacon on Mrs. Gould's plate—Beatrice Blackmar Gould likes it crisp—came from a great packing plant strikebound not long since. For weeks the mills that made the very steel of which the hotel was built had been struck.

Bruce Gould lit a post-toast-and-jam cigarette, dropped the match into his saucer and studied his host through the smoke, unaware that the hovering waiter had slid an ash tray under his elbow. No former reporter—both he and his wife had been newspaper reporters in their courting and young-married days—can hear such a question put to a public figure without press-conference sensations as he watches for the blink of the public figure's eyes bracing himself to be circumspect—to be assertively noncommittal in the best politician style.

This public figure, for all his likelihood of being a first-flight aspirant for the next Republican presidential nomination, didn't blink worth a cent.

"Certainly it is possible," said Harold E. Stassen easily. "The major cause of this wave of strikes was lack of clear postwar policy on prices and wages. A number of leading economists saw that was necessary. Yet the President's Labor-Management Conference last year didn't even have wages and prices on its program." Stassen's long, clean-white hands came up in an expository gesture, with just a hint of wonder that so grave an omission could actually have been made.

"The conference made no effort whatever to touch this key question. By now a level of wage increases seems to be developing, but the whole thing has been improvised. It should have been worked out intelligently in advance, without a huge cost in major stoppages and dislocations."

A good close-to-baritone voice reinforced steady talk. Being mostly masked by the hotel's top-grade tablecloth, the Stassen scale of body was not apparent just then. But Bruce Gould, six feet one and a half himself, had found himself overtopped by Stassen's six feet three when shaking hands with his host half an hour before. The firmness of the handshake combined with the size of the shaker to add up to the solid validity of a farm-bred youngster who had kept his stamina in law school and after.

"Should working out such policies be Government's job?" Mrs. Gould continued her questions, refreshed apparently by the way this three-times-elected Governor of Minnesota had walked cheerfully up to political dynamite in exactly the same easy manner he had previously discussed whether the Goulds might prefer griddlecakes to bacon and eggs. They took eggs. "Or labor's? Or management's?"

"Government must take part," said Harold Stassen forcefully. "But you also need leadership from both management and labor on a bipartisan basis. That is practical, even in very involved matters. Look at the way the American attitude toward international co-operation was worked out a while back. In the Ball-Burton-Hatch-Hill Senate resolution two Republicans and two Democrats teamed up to recommend foreign-policy commitments"—both the Goulds recalled that Senator Joseph H. Ball originally got into the Senate as a Stassen appointee—"then the State Department carried things farther in a bipartisan conference; and then the San Francisco Conference delegates were appointed on a bipartisan basis, three Republicans and five Democrats. I wish that useful parallel had been followed—all the way—in preparation for this wage-and-price crisis."

THE ex-governor—or captain, though this man was obviously not the type to carry into civilian life the four-stripe rank he reached in the Navy during the war—was one of those Republican delegates himself. It would have been worth while to see him out in San Francisco internationalizing with reportedly great success. This redheaded, articulate young American who knew where he was going, and thought the United States should, must have contrasted dramatically with his stocky Russian, swarthy Latin-American and drawly English colleagues in committee rooms.

Bruce Gould, thinking out loud, said, "The ultimate objective, I gather, would be to take labor-management troubles out of politics?"

Mr. Stassen made it swiftly clear that, in his opinion, the ultimate objective was to prevent destructive partisan fights—political or any other kind—over such issues.

"To make a reasonable wage-and-price policy effective," he said, "you need more than maybe fifty-two per cent of the people supporting it. You need ninety per cent. And that you cannot get when bitter feelings linger after a prolonged struggle, as they usually do."

"Now would that mean 'fact-finding boards'?" asked Beatrice Gould. "Or a permanent Government body with more scope than merely handling a given dispute in a given industry?"

"Whatever you call the thing," said Mr. Stassen, speaking up quickly, "the main point should be reasonableness. As things stand, there is a growing impression that wages should be increased universally by fifteen to twenty per cent. That is too rigid.

"Reasonable policy would rather adjust increases to the conditions of the given industry, not to an arbitrary percentage. Without some such approach, you get labor asking a fixed per cent here, there and everywhere, and management reluctant to negotiate. Both sides get set in extreme positions and stay there too long. It is this habit of taking extreme positions that has stalled production and delayed reconversion all this time."

Beatrice Gould mentioned the curious fact that, while the country was strike-ridden, the industrially important state of Minnesota had only 230 workers all told out on strike. She recalled briefly Stassen's role in Minnesota's labor history—how, taking over a state with a bad history of strikes and labor violence, he had fathered the Minnesota "count-ten" law to which went much of the credit for the state's relative freedom from strikes in 1946. Very trim in her tailored suit, smiling a little as if slightly in apology for a personal note, she asked:

"I've heard a great deal about your own experience in preventing labor troubles. Isn't this idea of a 'cooling-off period' now included in some bills before Congress somehow derived from Minnesota legislation?"

"Well," said the ex-governor, "there is nothing now before Congress exactly like the Minnesota law. But the cooling-off idea has been important in Minnesota and does seem to be getting national attention. It is simple: union leaders are required to wait ten days between filing intention to strike and the actual strike call. If the governor feels the strike especially involves public interest, he can require a thirty-day wait. The purpose is not so much actual cooling off, however, as it is to give the state conciliator time and the right atmosphere for getting the best bargaining offers from both sides out into the light before the men walk out." He punched out those last words like a stamp press.

"If you wait to get the best offers until after picket lines are formed, the atmosphere is already bad and getting worse and settlement is much more difficult. But, if you give the workers themselves a chance at a democratic decision on the best offer resulting (Continued on Page 172)

STATESMAN ON TRIAL

Stassen cleared political hurdles early, took governor's oath of office at 31.

SPOKESMAN FOR VICTORY

At Pearl Harbor Commander Stassen briefs correspondents on hopes for peace.

ONE-WORLD CITIZEN

International amity marks Stassen's chat with Russia's Molotoff at San Francisco.

LABOR-PEACE ARCHITECT

For Stassen, labor is not a commodity, but people to be met on a human basis.

The Major Minds the Minor

MAJOR LEWIS FIVES surveyed the bleak desolation of his room and reminded himself for the one thousand and eighty-ninth time (a) that it was nothing short of a miracle to have found a room for single occupancy in the ever-present Washington housing shortage; (b) that it was a palatial abode compared with that last foxhole in New Guinea; and (c) that he would infinitely prefer the foxhole. The reminder brought him no comfort.

Shifting his big frame in a cautious curve about the spring which was poking its way through the electric-blue plush upholstery of his armchair, he gave himself up to sardonic amusement.

Was it for this I crawled around trenches and provided target practice for the Japs? he wondered. Why couldn't I keep my mouth shut about that construction program? I could have been home by now. But no! I have to be a little Rollo with the suggestions and get myself classed as indispensable.

Despondently his eye roved about the room, noting the scrofulous condition of paint and paper, the upholstered horrors and rickety bureau, the faded couch cover on the hard sofa bed. Light was thrown on the scene by a central fixture furnished recklessly with a forty-watt bulb. Two cheap lamps with dirty paper shades stood on bed table and bureau, but as there were no wall outlets in the room, these served no useful purpose that Lewis could see.

A perfect example of Early Rooming-House Renaissance, he told himself conversationally. A little home from home. Somewhere a radio blared loudly. A haven of rest and sweet peace, he chanted. A little nook in which the troubled spirit may convalesce and feast on beauty, noting the revolting china swan out of whose back grew a snake plant.

He slid dispiritedly down into his chair and uttered a bad word as the spring poked him sharply. His pipe had gone out.

What does one do in a cheerless Gehenna like this? Solitaire? Tell my own fortune every evening? Take up yoga and spend the evenings contemplating my toes? Shades of Cerberus and Pluto, let me out of here!

Hurriedly he sprang to his feet, grabbed cap and coat and was out of the room in a flash. The odor of cabbage and onions assailed his nostrils as he ran down the creaking stairs and out into the comparative freshness of the air.

Phew! he said as he walked aimlessly along. What a place to spend the holiday season.

He had no plan, no specific place to go. He knew only two people in Washington—his superior officer and a married fraternity brother. He liked the fraternity brother, but not to the point of going to call every evening. Besides, it wasn't really companionship he craved, but someplace neat and clean and restful, with a good reading light and perhaps a radio. He was suddenly overwhelmingly homesick as he tramped along. Looking at the lighted windows of the little houses lining the street, the wreaths left from Christmas hanging on the doors and the little strings of gay-colored lights on the clumps of shrubs and little pines, he thought of his home—the studio house he had built for himself out West. He had had so little time in which to enjoy it before the war came. He had enlisted at once, for surely architects could be of some use, and a healthy man of thirty with no dependents had a duty to his country. The Army had agreed heartily, taken him immediately to its bosom and in due course he had gone overseas.

Coming home with more than sufficient points for his discharge, Major Fives had been dismayed to find himself classed as indispensable.

"It's a dirty trick, Fives," Colonel Davis had said, almost pleadingly, "but you've got the knowledge to do this job. I don't think it will take long—a few months in Washington—and it's not as though you had a wife and family waiting for you."

"True," Lewis remarked sadly, "but is that any reason for tying me down so I can't remedy the error?"

Colonel Davis looked at him in astonishment, "Er—I always thought you were just as well pleased," he said tentatively. "Weren't you the chap who said war marriages were a mistake—change was inevitable, and who could promise to like the same girl when he hadn't seen her in four years, and so forth?"

"So I did," Lewis agreed glumly, "and I was right. Change is inevitable—look at me! Four years ago I was glad to be single, but when I see Burnett and Claflin and the others coming home to something settled, I'm not so sure. It strikes me that at the rate I'm going, I won't be able to get the right girl and raise a family before I'm seventy. It's very disheartening."

COLONEL DAVIS looked at his junior officer and cleared his throat. Behind the ovine amiability of his face an idea struggled for birth. "Well," he said with heavy brightness, "how about coming over this evening? We have Mrs. Davis' younger sister staying with us. Make a little holiday party, eh?"

Oh, no, you don't, thought Lewis with an inward shudder at the memory of Mrs. Davis' younger sister. I'm not that anxious to get married, thanks, and hastily excused himself with what grace he could.

The job was absorbing, but the problem of what to do with his leisure time was becoming alarming. There were still some USO lounges and canteens, but they seemed designed more for the younger men. There were only two other officers in his department, both fond of jitterbugging and young enough to call him "sir" as a matter of course. Officers' clubs were full of married couples absorbed in their homes and children. Worse still, every married couple seemed to know at least one nubile woman whom Major Fives simply must meet; and for all his words to Colonel Davis, Lewis had no intention of being rushed.

What had he done with his free time before the war? he wondered. Well, of course, he had been home then, among relatives and old friends—and he had had his own house in which to read and (Continued on Page 131)

When Major Fives answered the harmless-looking ad on the drugstore bulletin board he had no way of knowing it was to be his most important assignment. ★ By Elsie Lee

Sometimes he had a guilty feeling about taking money for this job.

ILLUSTRATED BY PRUETT CARTER

If You Ask Me

By Eleanor Roosevelt

We have had many discussions as to which ring should be placed on the finger first—the wedding ring or engagement ring. Will you please settle this for us?

I had no idea what the correct answer to this question was. I have always worn my wedding ring with my engagement ring as a guard for the wedding ring, but I have done a little research and find that the engagement ring is a variation of the "keeper ring," a diamond hoop of our own Colonial period and somewhat similar to today's wedding ring. It was given for betrothal and also mentioned as the "hoop ring," and was worn next to the wide wedding band, so that the latter could not be lost. It was later known as the "guard ring." Women considered it bad luck to lose their wedding rings, once placed on the finger by the clergyman or magistrate. The ring was never taken off during life.

I have followed the custom without knowing it. I have never taken my wedding ring off and I have always worn my engagement ring as a guard ring, though it happens to have a diamond in it, and I really should wear a guard ring to keep it from dropping off!

Is it necessary for a woman to risk her life for a pair of hose, already in a bag and waiting for her, after spending two hours in a line? I am sure the majority of women would be glad to have them rationed to insure equal distribution, not only of the precious nylons but also the baggy rayons. How scarce do they have to get before someone with authority will take over?

I thought that the public had made it clear that it does not want any more regulation than is absolutely necessary. I heard a good deal of complaint about the possibility of rationing any clothes. It might be possible, if you have a charge account, to put in your order for what you want and ask the shop to fill it when they are able to do so.

Do you think that women will always be subservient to men?

I do not think that women have to be subservient to anybody. It depends entirely on their own characters.

Every time I listen to those silly jingles on the radio or to some man shouting at me to buy this product or that, my blood boils. I realize that, if a company has a new product, it should tell the public about it, but what can be done about the nauseating advertising on the radio?

I do not know what you can do about it except to write in and tell the sponsors that you object to their commercials. Perhaps they can make them more interesting from your point of view.

REPRINTED PERMISSION THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

Would you be willing to act as an official U. S. representative to Moscow on a mission to foster better understanding between Russia and our country?

I hardly think that I would be suited to such a mission. I do not speak Russian and I have no background for any political mission. There are innumerable people who could be far more useful officially than it would be possible for me to be.

I hope someday to go to Russia as a writer and to have the opportunity to see some of their achievements and some of their hardships, which must exist in a country developing as rapidly as Russia has developed in the past few years. At the same time I would hope that I might be able to help the Russian people to understand our own way of life and our own point of view better than they have in the past. If we are going to live and develop peacefully side by side, we shall have differences, but we must understand each other.

Someone told me that you said recently in your column that the American people do not know how to govern themselves and need to be told. What exactly did you say?

I have absolutely no idea what I could have said in my column which gave such a peculiar impression. The only thing that I have said at various times is that, when the American people become apathetic and do not keep the control of their government in their own hands, it is bound to slip into the hands of those who make politics a profession. Therefore, because of their indifference, the American people may sometimes find themselves slaves to representatives who do not really represent them.

In recent months I have heard people talking about the "next war" as if it were inevitable. What is your opinion of people who talk like that?

I think they are very foolish people who really have no conception of what the next war would bring. We have been exceptionally fortunate in not having war on our own doorsteps. Our men have gone out to fight in faraway places and we have known anxiety and loss, but we have not known what bombs dropped on our own soil would mean, and perhaps that is why certain people feel free to talk about the next war. Even without the atomic bomb, destruction with our modern means of warfare is far too great to contemplate another war with equanimity. War can no longer be considered civilized.

I should like to send packages of food and clothing to friends in England, but prefer not to send anything on which duty must be paid. To whom should I write for information? Is used clothing duty-free?

You can write to the Red Cross for information, or go to your post office and find out. Used clothing is duty-free, and nearly all foodstuffs that can be shipped are duty-free.

I am a girl of 13½. An only child, I get lonely. I want a dog. My mother won't give her consent. She doesn't like dogs. Can you tell me what to do?

I am afraid I cannot give you a formula for persuasion. Judging from my own experience as a mother, however, I am sure that if you try to please your mother in every way and prove to her that you are reliable and responsible, your mother will someday feel that she can trust you to look after a dog and not to allow it to become a burden on her.

What, as you see it, is woman's function in society after middle age, when the years of childbearing are over?

If a woman is blessed with good health, she is freer after middle age to do things outside her home as her children grow up. If she has a home, however, and a husband to look after, and has been fortunate in having a number of children, she will find her freedom from family cares is purely a myth. They are different, but they are still fairly time-consuming.

Nevertheless, the most rewarding activity for any woman, young or old, is to meet the needs of those who are nearest and dearest to her. She will not meet these adequately, however, if she has no interests and occupations of her own, since it is important that young families should never have the feeling that the older members of the family are languishing for their constant companionship. This makes the time they spend together less enjoyable and makes a duty out of something which should be a pleasure.

Don't you feel that the American people were misled in accepting the Four Freedoms as ideals to fight for, and don't you think our boys who died for them died in vain?

No. I do not think the American people were misled any more than they were misled by our forefathers who wrote the Constitution and the Bill of Rights. We haven't yet achieved everything that was set down in the Constitution as our ultimate objective, but it did not hurt us any to have it set down, and it gives us something to strive for, and many people have died for these aims. Every time that we get a step nearer to the great conception that our forefathers had, we justify the faith of those who died, and this is true of a belief in the Four Freedoms and in the hope of their ultimate realization.

What do you think is the greatest single cause of misunderstanding between the nations of the world, both great and small?

Fear.

How can the New York Social Register exist when there is no class distinction in the U.S.A.?

Being listed in the New York Social Register does not mean anything in the way of class distinction really. Many of the most distinguished people whom I know never were in the Social Register and never wanted to be. The Social Register grew up many years ago in New York City and in other cities, when there were just a few families who knew each other rather well and who constituted the social life of rather small towns. The make-up of the Social Register is probably done according to some pattern, and, though I know some people who attach great importance to being included because they think it has some social meaning, I do not think most people really know whether their friends are in it or not. I find it easier to handle than the telephone book when I want an address or telephone number, but it does not yield the addresses and telephone numbers I want on many occasions!

Would you please give me your opinion of the frightful waste reported as going on in our Government services? Food, clothing and equipment that are being dumped from our boats, according to returning G. I.'s?

I cannot imagine that waste of the kind you suggest has been going on. Things that are no longer usable or that have gone bad might be dumped from our ships, but certainly nothing which is of value and can be used would be dumped at the present time when the need is so great.

---

Letters should be addressed to Mrs. Roosevelt, c/o the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL. It should be understood that Mrs. Roosevelt's answers reflect only her own opinions, and are not necessarily the opinions of the Editors of the JOURNAL.

SUDDEN DEATH in the Home

AS he took out his key, he noticed that Olive had taken down the big Christmas wreath that hung outside the door all during the holidays. The nail was still there, waiting for next Christmas. The baby's nap came this time of afternoon, so the house was quiet. Very quiet. Olive usually appeared, as soon as she heard the click of the door latch, to say a very affectionate hello. He called softly and got no answer, then, sensing trouble, ran upstairs. The baby woke up and began to wail, but seemed all right otherwise. With that fretful protest in his ears, he ran back downstairs, checked dining room and kitchen and then, seeing the cellar door open, clattered down cellar.

The place looked as if it had been vandalized by a Christmas-hating maniac. The floor was littered with burst-open cardboard boxes and artificial window wreaths and tinseled stars and gaudy glass balls and the somewhat battered little Santa Clauses that Olive had carefully cherished all during the war when it had been impossible to buy more Christmas ornaments of the gay old school. Many of the paper-thin bubbles of giddy color had shattered on the concrete floor. And there among their fragile bits lay Olive, dead of a fractured skull and a broken neck. Blood had seeped out of her nose and ears and dried stickily. Upstairs the baby went on wailing.

The story was easy to piece together. Early that afternoon she had taken down all the Christmas doings, repacked them in their boxes, stacked them and started for their usual storage spot in the cellar. She had to rest her chin on the stack to steady it, and to grope for the knob of the cellar door. Since she could not see where she was going, that was dangerous enough. But she had also left—and forgotten—an empty pail on the top step to be taken down next trip. Her first step was her last. It must have been a split second of choking horror as she dived through empty space and then smashed into unconsciousness as her head struck the concrete blocks of the far wall. As ways of dying go, this was quick and relatively painless. But she had a husband she was in love with and a flourishing baby and would very much have preferred to live.

That was one of over 30,000 deaths from home accidents that year. This year promises to go well above 35,000.

To leave a pail on the top step of a darkish cellar stair is a very foolish thing to do, as most sane people know when they stop to think. Yet an astounding proportion of those expected 35,000 deaths—and of the yearly millions of more or less severe home accidents—come from just such bits of foolishness, easily preventable by just a little more information, imagination and common sense—mostly the last.

Priming fires with kerosene—or, as one lady, who died from it, did a while back, with paint thinner—is just asking for a visit from the Foolkiller. So are leaving ice on walks and steps in winter; oven canning, which can mean a blasting explosion of boiling liquid and shattered glass when the door is opened; smoking in bed alone; and turning lights off and on when in the bathtub. But well this side of such suicidal disregard lie plenty of shattered bodies and broken homes and excruciating pain.

"Don't stand on chairs to reach things—use an approved set of household steps" is something practically everybody knows. Yet:

A neighbor woman glimpsed faint smoke drifting out of Mrs. Arleen Callahan's kitchen window and went right over to see what went on. As she opened the outside door, she smelled meat burning and concluded that Arleen—which, naturally, is not her real name—had forgotten a roast in the oven and now it was burned—a shame with meat so short and all. In another breath she was kneeling over Arleen's prostrate body and realizing sickly that the smoke came from Arleen's new green house dress, and the odor —— As she lifted away the electric iron that was still searing its way into the girl's side, skin and flesh came away with it, leaving a grimly charred and oozy area over the ribs.

Arleen had wanted a fresh cake of beeswax for her ironing and got on a chair to reach it down from the top shelf. The chair, an elderly affair relegated to the kitchen, broke down as she reached. In falling, she knocked herself out and upset the ironing board; and the iron, still turned on, fell on her and bit in with all the savagery of its incessantly teeming heat.

True, she should have had a better engineered ironing board that would not have been knocked over so easily, and a wall bracket to hang the iron on safely. But the crux of it was the chair. Now she knows about chairs. For all her pretty figure and white skin, she cannot wear a modern bared-middle bathing suit. Only a very expensive plastic operation, which she cannot conceivably afford, would take away the red, ropy, shriveled scar that remains on her right side just above the waistline. And she was lucky at that. Her dress might eventually have burst into flame, instead of merely smoldering, and burned her to death before she regained consciousness.

The neighbor lady described that afternoon as her entry in an American Women's Volunteer Services contest about home accidents and won a $100 War Bond with it. She would all too cheerfully surrender the bond for the privilege of forgetting what it was like when she lifted the iron away.

NOT long before, a spiritual sister of Arleen's in another town had wanted a good look at the hang of a new skirt hem and got up on her living-room coffee table to reach the right level in a wall mirror. The thin top of the table gave way and she crashed through, nails and ragged splinters ripping her legs from ankle to knee as viciously as if she had been trampling on wildcats. Bleeding badly, she crawled to the telephone and reached a doctor, and the hospital where he immediately sent her got things cleaned up well and quickly enough to head off blood poisoning. But there is very little chance that the scars will ever disappear so she can wear sheer stockings again—and no chance whatever that she

(Continued on Page 203)

Your house can be the death of you. ★ By J. C. Furnas

A Slight Case

Time was definitely out of mind, when Martin Vorhees found himself staring deep into Mag Kellsey's beautiful eyes and could see only the end of the world.

BY PAUL ERNST

Exasperation!

THESE were words that Prof. Martin Vorhees had never thought to hear applied to him. Since he'd been twenty and old Tom Conan had put in for him as personal laboratory assistant, people had gone out of their way to get his services. Martin wondered if that time were forever gone.

"You're of no use to us here," Dean Blenham repeated. "You're of no use to anyone, Martin, as you are now."

"As Martin was now" looked fairly normal to the eye. He looked as all his pictures in the papers looked: a thin, tall man of thirty-eight with eyes back under heavy brows, straight brown hair a little mussed, and a nose that had earned him many gibes when he was young—a big, thin, impatient-looking nose with a bony arch in its middle. He looked as millions had seen him look in the pictures captioned, "Scientist Discusses Future of Atomic Energy" or "Professor Vorhees Instructs Congressmen on Nuclear Fission"; or more recently, "Professor Vorhees Disagrees with Professor Kellsey on Duration of Radioactivity."

But inside him things weren't normal. He kept seeing bits of earth turned into glass, a great cup in solid ground formed, not by explosion but by sheer, incredible pressure. He kept seeing pictures with the gelatin of the film burned at ten miles' distance. He kept seeing ——

"So," continued Dean Blenham equably, "why not take a rest? Afraid Professor Kellsey will get ahead of you?"

That was a kick in the groin. That was an unfair blow that brought Martin's mussed head up sharply. Anger burned hard in him as, these days, it could burn at any little thing.

Blenham waved his hand at the look in Martin's deep, dark eyes. It was a capable hand, if too well manicured, just as Blenham's gaze was a sharp one even if coming from a face too bland.

"Forget it, Martin. I know the rivalry between you and Miss Kellsey is purely scientific. Joke. Ha-ha. Take a vacation and knit up 'ravell'd sleave.' You've never been to my place on Sugarbowl Road, you say?"

"No, and I have no wish to go," snapped Martin, with the name of Professor Kellsey flaming in his frayed brain. A purely scientific rivalry.

"You'll probably find no place else. There's a housing shortage on, or hadn't you heard? Try if you like, but Sugarbowl Road awaits, and the wife of my caretaker there can really cook."

"If I can't find another place," snapped Martin, "I may go there. But I won't like it."

He got up, tall and lean and with his shoulders held too straight. That was because Professor Kellsey had kidded him about the professorial stoop. He didn't bother to say good-by to Dean Blenham; he just turned and walked out, a lank bird of a man with a great, thin nose arching impatiently ahead of him.

He packed. From outside came calls of summer students. Three tennis courts backed up near his window and each must have held eight players, judging by the racket. But he packed. No matter where you go you have to pack first, don't you?

At least he knew one place he would not go to. That was Tarreytown, a hundred and forty miles northeast in Ohio, where Prof. Maggilone Kellsey laid her important head between trips to Seattle, Washington, and Oak Ridge, with photographers and writers buzzing constantly around. The woman whose equation helped make possible the atomic bomb had interesting views to give and not unattractive pictures to bestow.

"Cheesecake," snarled Martin. A silly thing. How could a woman scientist at thirty-five look like a girl of twenty with her thick dark hair in a tumble and her blue eyes soft and shiny, especially as they'd been that afternoon on the Potomac ——

Martin cursed that afternoon on the Potomac. Served him right for stealing an afternoon in times like these to go canoeing. Canoeing! Him! One of the authors of primeval destruction who should have had no waking moment not devoted to its chaining. The idiotic but final quarrel with Mag had also served him right. Beneficial, too; it had opened his eyes to the kind of woman she was.

So Martin packed and threw his grip into his old car and roared out of the college town of Coldfort as noisily as any sophomore in a huff. Yet this was no huff. Disillusion with Mag Kellsey was a minor thing. The burden that rode his shoulders, that took the savor from his food and kept him sleepless through the night, was the enormous one of the split atom, with all its sinister potentials. His work had helped greatly to forward the moment when a knot of men stood on the New Mexico desert facing destiny, with some of them praying wildly that it would arrive as scheduled and some praying wildly that it wouldn't. Now he was trying to awaken the nonscientific mind to its great danger, thundering his jeremiad in the nation's Capitol, raging at the soft walls of indifference—and getting nowhere.

A truck driver yelled at him as he cut in too sharply. Martin yelled back and would have liked to stop and argue physically with the man; he'd done all right with boxing at M.I.T. Then he flushed, shamed in his own eyes. His sole reaction these days to any disagreement was a repressed yell, eyes flaming and throat choked up with passion. Have to get a grip on himself. Blenham was right. He was no use to anyone.

He didn't try for a place other than Sugarbowl Road. The thought of visiting hotel after hotel, resort after resort, and begging for a room as a shifty-eyed man on Main Street might beg for a cup of coffee, was too much. He went west all through the afternoon, arrived at nine at night in the Southern Indiana town of Wesleyville, and received instructions on how to find the road and Blenham's country place on it.

The road was unpaved but smooth. It was beautiful, with wood lots alternating with kempt fields and with a half-moon riding over all. It was quiet and peaceful, and Blenham's house—where he had been born, he'd once told Martin, and which he still kept up—was also nice. It was white clapboard and looked old and solid, two and a half lean stories, like a high boot used for years but still good to keep out the damp and the elements.

It was beautiful, and Martin used up the time on the drive in calculations. Six and a half miles from Wesleyville. If the village were struck by an atomic bomb, would this house go too? With the increased power of the new bombs, Martin thought it might. However, the hills between might save the house.

The front door opened onto the stilted porch and a round little old woman looked out. "Come in. You're earlier than we thought you'd be, professor. Come in, come in."

She was sixty-five, probably, five feet high and four wide, though you could not tell how much of this width was cloth; you got the impression of many garments underneath. Her eyes were faded gray, placid, not too brilliant. You've seen ten thousand of her.

"I'm Mrs. Bleeker," she said, as Martin hefted his bag in through the doorway. "This is Mister."

Martin turned. Coming from the kitchen end of the hall was a little round old man. He nodded pleasantly but with reserve, and carried Martin's bag up the stairs. Nice people, thoroughly commonplace, unaware of the volcano over which they lived.

The hills, Martin decided, would not save the house from the blast effect of the bomb in Wesleyville.

Mr. Bleeker set the suitcase down inside the doorway of the front bedroom. He nodded good night to Martin and went down the hall to the back room, looking like a pink-jowled bit of the earth he no doubt tilled in daytime. He had a protuberance of some sort under his ear, which didn't look so bad as it sounds; it just looked as if it belonged on the neck of Mr. Bleeker.

Mrs. Bleeker lingered. An apple dumpling of a woman with obviously no room for thoughts higher than of tomorrow's wash, she said, "Professor Blenham wrote that you were tired and were coming here for (Continued on Page 116) you trying to neck me?" Mag asked. "This year the word is 'smooteh,'" Martin told her. "And I'm not trying to, I'm doing it."

ILLUSTRATED BY ANDREW LOOMIS

The Meaning of the Nuremberg Trial

UNLESS you have spent a good deal of time studying it, you are likely to think of the Nuremberg trial as a spectacular but complicated and long-drawn-out way of getting rid of a collection of very bad men. You have probably wondered whether it would not have been simpler and better to have arrested them, identified them and condemned them quickly. Or if you approve of the trial, it is probably because you have been persuaded that it is a good thing to publish and prove the whole record of the Nazi evil so that no one will ever in the future be able to say that Hitler et al. were the victims of Allied propaganda.

But if you look closely into the Nuremberg trial, and into the long debates and negotiations which preceded it, you will come upon a startling discovery. It is that the ulterior purpose of this trial is not the punishment of these villains, but to establish a precedent by which international law can in fact be enforced. This is why the Nuremberg trial is being conducted the way it is being conducted.

A NEW LANDMARK IN WORLD ORDER

This is why everyone who is sincerely interested in the organization of peace must fix his mind and main attention, not so much on the recital of the horrors at Nuremberg, but on the principles of the trial itself. The principles which are being established may in the eyes of our descendants come to be regarded as the most important event of modern times. For my own part, I do not think it rash to prophesy that the principles of this trial will come to be regarded as ranking with the Magna Charta, the habeas corpus and the Bill of Rights as landmarks in the development of law. The Nuremberg principle goes deeper into the problem of peace, and its effects may prove to be more far-reaching, than anything else that has yet been agreed to by the peoples of the world. It goes deeper than the Covenant of the first League of Nations, deeper than the Charter of the United Nations. For it contains that very thing which is lacking in the United Nations Charter: a rule of law which binds every human being on earth, a rule of law which no government, however big, can now veto or now disavow.

These are very big statements. I realize how big they are. But I have no doubt that they are true and that they can be proved. That is why I believe that we are witnessing at Nuremberg not a spectacular show, but an event of enormous historic importance, an event which may be remembered longer than any other comparable event of our era. For it marks the true beginning of what is destined someday to be the first world state.

How, you will ask, has anything as big as all that come out of the trial and punishment of the Nazi leaders? It is a remarkable story, one in which Americans can take a justifiable pride and interest. For it was the inspired effort of Mr. Justice Jackson that has made what would otherwise have been no more than an act of retribution into an epoch-making advance in the development of law and the organization of mankind.

CONVICTED BY THEIR OWN EVIDENCE

From the early days of the war, long before Robert Jackson had anything to do with what are called "war crimes," the Allied statesmen had been shouting from the housetops that they were going to punish Hitler and his confederates for the unspeakable crimes they were committing. Everyone agreed they should be punished.

When at last the Allies had won the war, they caught most, but not all, of the archcriminals alive. Hitler, Himmler, Goebbels, and some others, preferred to kill themselves. But a good collection of their chief assistants were arrested and locked up. There was an easy way to deal with them. In Germany we captured unanswerable documentary proof on which practically all the defendants at Nuremberg could have been convicted of murdering, enslaving and robbing innocent people in a dozen different countries. We captured their own orders, their own reports, their own photographs and motion pictures, which prove beyond the shadow of a doubt that deliberately they had violated the laws of war and the criminal law of every state, including the German state, on the face of the earth. The quick, sure and easy way to deal with them was to select a few specific simple crimes out of countless crimes of the same sort, and then convict and condemn them.

This was what most of the lawyers and officials in the Allied countries expected would be done. It was here that Mr. Justice Jackson, who had been appointed by the President to be Representative and Chief of Counsel for the United States, took his stand. He said, in effect, that these men had committed a great many crimes; but that justice would not be done if we punished them only for these crimes. For they had committed the much greater crime of planning a war of aggression against all their neighbors. The atrocities were the incidents and the consequence of this greater crime. We cannot, of course, hang any of these master criminals more than once. But if we hang them, we should hang them not only for their incidental crimes—horrible as they were—but for their greater crimes also.

Mr. Justice Jackson may have been thinking of some of the American gangsters, who had killed and robbed and terrorized cities, and were then convicted and locked up by the Federal Government only for cheating on the income-tax returns. That was better than letting them go scot-free. But no American, thinking of Al Capone in prison for violating the income-tax law, ever felt that justice had been done or the public interest fully vindicated. In similar fashion Mr. Justice Jackson

A TRIAL BECOMES MORE SIGNIFICANT THAN THE PUNISHMENT OF THOSE ON TRIAL.

BY WALTER LIPPMANN

argued that the civilized world was entitled to try these men for their supreme crime, which has very nearly wrecked European civilization, and not only because in the course of their aggression they had violated the rules of war by shooting hostages or killing prisoners of war, or exterminating unarmed civilians in gas chambers.

THE EX POST FACTO ARGUMENT

But here Mr. Justice Jackson came up against the international lawyers. They had no wish to spare these Nazis. But most of them told him that it was not a crime under international law to wage a war of aggression, and that if Mr. Justice Jackson insisted on trying the Nazis on this charge, he would himself be violating the law. He would be applying what our own Constitution and all civilized legal systems prohibit—a retroactive or ex post facto law. The lawyers—many of them, at any rate—held that it was not a crime for which anyone could legally be punished, to plan, prepare, initiate and then wage a war in violation of international treaties which outlawed wars of aggression. Mr. Justice Jackson's critics argued that he would be trying these men in 1945-1946 for a crime which was not a crime in 1939 when they committed it, for example, against Poland, or in 1940 when they committed it, for example, against Norway.

Mr. Justice Jackson, who is after all a very considerable lawyer in his own right, did not accept this view. He argued—and when we understand his argument we must, I think, agree he has proved—that his critics, eminent and learned though many of them are, have been talking about the law as it was before the First World War, and have overlooked the epoch-making development of international law during the past twenty-five years

PROVISIONS OF THE PACT OF PARIS

The critics are talking about international law as it was in 1914 and not as it was in 1939. In 1914 it was lawful for any sovereign state to declare war against any other state, and no matter what the reasons or purpose of that war—however unprovoked or aggressive—the rulers of the state were within their legal rights. They could be criticized. Their armies could be resisted. Their country could be defeated and compelled to cede territory and pay reparations. But the rulers of the aggressor states could not be charged with a punishable crime. That was indeed international law in 1914. But it was no longer the law in 1939. The law had been changed radically. It had been changed by a series of treaties, openly negotiated, legally and solemnly ratified by governments which had the full legal power to change international law.

The most important of these treaties, but by no means the only one, is called officially the Pact of Paris, and is popularly known as the Kellogg-Briand Pact. It was signed on August 27, 1928. Germany, and all the countries that Germany attacked, ratified this pact. In it they renounced war "as an instrument of national policy"—that is to say, as an instrument for getting what they wanted or thought they ought to have.

This general treaty did not stand alone. Germany made additional, specific, treaties with each of the neighboring countries not to attack them—with Czechoslovakia, Belgium, Poland in 1925; with the Netherlands in 1926; again with Poland in 1934; with Austria in 1935. Germany also gave solemn assurances to Czechoslovakia in 1938, to Norway, Luxemburg, Denmark and Jugoslavia in 1939.

Now what was the legal meaning of all these treaties? Mr. Justice Jackson's critics take the view that Hitler, Goering, Goebbels, et al., who deliberately violated them, did not commit a crime for which they could be legally tried and punished. The lawyers say the German nation could be punished. But no individual German could be singled out, put on trial and confronted with documentary proof that he, as a responsible official, deliberately used his power to make Germany commit the crime of attacking an innocent neighboring nation. The critics said that nowhere in the Pact of Paris or the other treaties does it say in black and white that the ruler of a state has committed a crime if he decides to violate that treaty by waging aggressive war.

So, if Mr. Justice Jackson's critics read the law correctly, the law is as follows: The German nation is guilty. All Germans—men, women and children, responsible and irresponsible, Nazi and anti-Nazi, the living and the unborn—may be punished. They may lose German territory. They may be compelled to pay reparations. For generations they may be reduced to inferiority in the world. But the rulers of Germany, Hitler and his confederates, the men who deliberately planned and directed the whole monstrous crime, are legally no more accountable than is a German baby born ten years hence, or than an inmate of one of the concentration camps. To insist, as Mr. Justice Jackson does insist, that these treaties do bind especially the archcriminals who violated them, is—so the critics argue—to invoke ex post facto law and to bring the idea of law into disrepute. If the lawyers who criticize Mr. Justice Jackson are right, then for Hitler et al. all these treaties outlawing aggressive war have no legal consequences.

LEGALISTIC WORD-TWISTING

Mr. Justice Jackson has not said so, but I think we may say with Mr. Bumble in Oliver Twist that "if the law supposes that, the law is a ass, a idiot." To argue that these treaties can justify the punishment of all Germans, the innocent as well as the guilty ones, but that the treaties do not justify the punishment of those German Nazis who are most peculiarly guilty, is to make the law a mockery of common sense and of elementary justice.

(Continued on Page 188)

HAVE A LOVELY SUMMER . . .

A TIME AND A PLACE FOR GLAMOUR

A PRETTY GIRL IS LIKE A BUTTERFLY

HEAVENLY PASTELS

SUMMERTIME GIRL . . . MAKES HER OWN

EVERY SUMMER SUB-DEB KNOWS . . .

IGLIDAY COAT . . . SHORT AND CASUAL

FRINGE AROUND A BATHING SUIT

SEA SPRITE IN SPRAY-WHITE SATIN

BRIEF AND BARE

ELASTICIZED WHITE SATIN BATHING SUIT BY MABS; OTHER BEACH FASHIONS BY JOSET WALKER

A TIME AND A PLACE FOR GLAMOUR

Gala Turkish pajamas in parasol-printed rayon jersey in brilliant colors glorify the fashion for sun-tanned midriffs and bare legs.

Hand-painted crepe pajamas with trousers flaring like a skirt, designed by Clare Potter. Brilliant south-of-the-border colors—still more color added in coral and turquoise bracelets, a tasseled sombrero. Bernardo's barefoot sandals laced with leather.

Slender slacks of pastel sharkskin with a hand-painted crepe blouse, butterfly design, by Clare Potter for lovely lazy afternoons.

In the sunbeam—awning-striped cotton skirt with fullness all around, by John Frederics, worn with a strapless bright jersey bra.

Bare shoulders, exotic pajamas, riotous color, golden barefoot sandals. This summer provides more fashions for enchantment than for many seasons. Your own cool living room after five . . . your own or a friend's garden or patio at sunset—the time and place for hand-painted pajamas . . . country afternoons or vacation spots for bare-top dresses, with your skin a golden tan . . . beach or countryside for colorful skirts and halters. Glamour takes cover-up forms as well: long-sleeved shirtwaists with pastel slacks; gay basque-and-skirt combinations—at home anywhere under the sun. ★ ★ BY WILHELA CUSHMAN

Fashion Editor of the Journal

Bare-shouldered girl with an even tan and a beautiful ivory-white sharkskin dress by Clare Potter. Important accessories: thong-laced sandals, Phelps suntan leather belt.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY CUSHMAN-O'LEARY

Gay gingham skirt and basque and a flower in her hair—fashion million girls will love. Ceil Chapman version in red and blue.

a pretty girl

BLACK BUTTERFLY. Sheer black is the fashion again, magic in a man's eyes. This dress and cape is of nylon marquisette.

WHITE ORGANDY over crinoline with the timeless glamour of dropped shoulders, bouffant skirt and taffeta sash; by Ceil Chapman

...is like a Butterfly

There'll be music and dancing this summer—a million pretty girls, dressing for a million men. Butterflies have become a symbol: hand-painted on a crepe evening dress, worn as a jewel at the neckline; embodied in the fashion of winglike capes, gauzy fabrics, jeweled prints and eyelet organdies. Sheer black and frosty white make dramatic patterns on the dance floor; bare shoulders catch the light; billowing bouffant skirts mingle with wisp-slim princesses and Directoire silhouettes. ★ ★

BY WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

PHOTOGRAPHS BY FONSSAGRIVES

HANDKERCHIEF LINEN by Ceil Chapman—Empire silhouette, very low heart neckline, the fresh-as-a-flower look.

A CAPELET DRESS in three-toned chambray; Ben Reig original by Omar Kiam; opal butterfly.

PAINTED BUTTERFLIES on crepe by Clare Potter, cool and beautiful bare-back fashion, in or out of town.

SHEER BLACK—the Irene Castle dance dress with bare shoulders, and floating scarf.

HEAVENLY PASTELS . . .

BY RUTH MARY PACKARD

BLUE CHAMBRAY with wing shoulders by Adele Simpson, with John Frederics' raffia-trimmed straw.

LIME-COOL chartreuse sheer drawstring dress by Joset Walker; John Frederics' straight Spanish sailor, short black cotton gloves.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY CUSHMAN-O'LEARY

SHOCK-BRIGHT GOLD crepe dress by Clar[illegible] hatless for country; with black or navy accessories

A pastel dress does a lovely thing for a woman. It makes her prettier, younger, cooler, more feminine than almost anything else she can wear.

Usually the setting for a pastel costume has been a country-club veranda, or a Sunday afternoon at home. This summer the fashion extends itself enormously, includes the most sophisticated new linen tunic coat or a shantung suit, worn with vastly important hats for luncheon or afternoon in town. Chambray, heavenly cool, fresh and young, is for city or country—according to its accessories. Pastel linen comes into its own again, and has great elegance. Pink is top color, but every woman will have a chance to wear her favorite—from flax blue and pale gray to deep turquoise and shock-bright gold.

SHANTUNG SUIT dressed for a luncheon; Jose Walker design with John Frederics' huge bonnet-cloche

NK LINEN tunic coat by Hattie Carnegie, definitely the city; with slim black dress, toyo-and-taffeta hat.

IOKE-GRAY chambray, by Adele Simpson—petty cotton dress that goes anywhere this summer.

PALE-BLUE CASUAL in rayon crepe with the new squared-off look; John Frederics' beaded crocheted cap.

DUSTY PINK silk-and-rayon shantung dress summer holidays, city afternoons; by Rose Barra

SUMMERTIME GIRL . . MAKES

© HOLLYWOOD

Beach or play coat to make in bright cotton twill or linen, goes over shorts suit below; 1822, 12 to 20, 25c.

Piqué shorts and halter, slimly cut and comfortable for tennis, bathing, sitting in the sun; 1822.

Sunback halter dress, new wide midriff, skirt fullness; 1825, 10 to 18, 25c.

Ballerina halter and bloomer shorts tak beaches by storm; in poplin; 183

Halter dress pattern, 1825, includes bolero. Wool jersey, leather belt; for afternoon, in favorite color crepe.

ER OWN

Today's nearest approach to Aladdin's lamp is a sewing machine and a paper pattern. The technique is not quite the same, but the wish comes true. You want a gay play suit for the week end, a bare back to improve your sun tan, a beach coat, a pretty print in your pet color. You can make anything and everything—in the style you want, the color you love—and make it fit to the fraction of an inch. Summer is the time to begin or continue to make your clothes: because they're easy and quick and fun to do; because you need more, want to spend less and save for your vacation! All these are from Hollywood Patterns. ★ ★ BY NORA O'LEARY

PHOTOGRAPHS BY GENE FENN

erina halter also wears its ruffle this way, adds skirt. The same pattern, 1837, 10 to 18, 25c.

Bow dress with side pockets is pretty in plain or striped shantung or cotton; 1823, 10 to 18, 25c.

Capelet dress with slim waist, slight fullness; 1845, perfect pattern for your pet print. 12 to 20, 25c.

Sleeveless yoke dress is cool, easy to make. Striped jersey won't mind the heat; 1839, 12 to 42, 25c.

Buy Hollywood Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order them by mail, postage prepaid, from Hollywood Pattern Service, Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Conn., or 2 Duke Street, Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

Back views are on page 204

Every Summer Sub-Deb Knows

When all the world is young. Emily Wilkens makes a romantic summer dance dress—full pink rayon-linen skirt with a wrapped-to-the-rib waistline, and romantic pink-and-white dotted-Swiss blouse.

Parasol, play dress and play shoes to match! Crisp piqué printed in black and pink stripes.

That a washable dress can go to a party as well as a picnic! A billowy summer evening skirt can look like a dream with its own sheer blouse—but doesn't have to go steady with it! That a bloomer bathing suit is the best on the beach; and worn with a matching candy-striped skirt it becomes a three-piece play suit that leads a lot of lives. Summer Sub-Debs know that boys like their girls to be "the prettiest one there"—no matter where! They choose bright colors for the beach, pastels for parties. Gingham suits with full skirts, and parasols to match a play dress. And they know that each one must have that fresh-from-the-laundry look! ★ BY DAWN CROWELL

PHOTOGRAPHS BY CUSHMAN-O'LEARY

Cabaña-striped beach coat ties snugly at waist. Wear over bathing suit, shorts, slacks. Emily Wilkens' design. Ankle-strap play shoes in red.

Delicious dress in blue-and-white cand striped sheer; sleeveless, ruffle neckli

To town, to the movies! Two-piece chan bray with striped skirt. Madeleine desig

Gayest gingham for a pretty plaid suit. Waist-length jacket; cool wide sleeves. By Madeleine.

Bloomer girl. Bathing suit has matching striped skirt and beach hat, fabric-trimmed.

PLAY CLOTHES DESIGNED BY EMILY WILKENS

"Keep your own yesterdays," Stella told him. "But give our tomorrow a try, Mark."

XXIII

DESPITE his friendliness when he asked her to visit him, Stella thought she detected a touch of reserve in Mark's manner. Could it be that he feared, as she did, that such a meeting might force their separate worlds into a conventional mold, and so expose them to all its hazards? An instinct that was part jealousy and part superstition prevented her from confiding in her friends and seeking their advice. Even in the midst of chaos the world she knew managed, somehow, to cling to the formal and the exacting; it still preserved its fatal aptitude for obedience, the enemy of love. So far, her companionship with Mark had had all the enchantment of the thing concealed, the half-real; she knew that the intrusion of others even of those who were indispensable to both of them must sooner or later alter their relationship. She thought of Neddy. Would he resemble his father? Though she had seen him, she had not yet had a chance to examine him for any resemblance, and in a strange way she was more troubled by the fact of the child's existence than by Regan's. Yet she knew that there was no avoiding the encounter. She had come into their lives, she had given them her house, yet she knew she was herself the real tenant, and her lease a tenuous one.

Dressing one day to go to Mark's apartment, she was interrupted by Miriam on the telephone. "Where have you been? Not a word from you for three weeks! Dick and I were considering putting the police on your trail."

Stella sat on the edge of the bed with the receiver in her hand, and smiled at her reflection in the mirror across the room. She took a mischievous pleasure from her friend's reproachful tone.

"What have you been up to? We've missed you. I was afraid you must be ill, but your maid assured me she had never seen you in better health. She said you were hardly ever home these days. When are we going to see you?"

"When? Oh, I don't know—soon, I hope, Miriam." The light, coming through Venetian blinds, divided her body into bars of dark and crystal; her hair was still wet from the shower and shed cold drops on her skin, making her shiver slightly as if she'd been unexpectedly kissed.

"Are you alone?" Miriam demanded suddenly. "I mean now, this minute?"

"Of course I'm alone."

"You sound queer. Listen, Stella. Will you come to a party Friday evening? We've managed to rope in a few people who are still alive in this Godforsaken city. The Smiths and Willingdons and William Symes. You remember Symes? Say you'll come. There's so much to talk about."

"Of course I'll come. Friday evening? Thanks, Miriam dear."

She hung up and sat for a moment, pondering. The world of the Sparrows and their friends seemed far away, a genial disturbance on the periphery of her own world, yet sooner or later the others must learn of her friendship with Mark and of her plans about Jarley. Sooner or later the dike which she had built must give way and admit the rough and perhaps treacherous tides.

It was late afternoon and she decided that she would walk to Mark's. Intricate, immense, the city's life thundered round her, breathed furiously against her ears, the breath of Minotaur: "I am the world, fiery, mechanical, merciless! Ignore me, for whether you remember or forget can make no difference to you or to me."

She thought of Mark and of their last evening together. His face materialized before her, and his voice stilled the voice of Minotaur. In a few minutes she would see Mark, touch him, hear his voice. She walked with quickened step, wondering whether he would be at home. Touched by the fear lest he put her off, she had not telephoned to say she was coming. If he was out she would do some errands, then come back in the hope of finding him. But her ring was answered and she climbed the flight of stairs with a fast-beating heart.

Octavia Evans opened the door. "Mrs. Harmon? Colonel Bycroft thought you might call. He asked that you wait for him. He'll be right back."

"Is Neddy at home?"

"They went together, but they won't be long. Will you take a seat?"

Words and manner were conventional, but they seemed scarcely to conceal a peculiar hostility, and Stella glanced at the woman in surprise.

Octavia said, "I'll just remove all those catalogues so you can find a place to sit."

"Catalogues?" Then she saw them, glossy and fat, piled on the chairs.

"Colonel Bycroft brought them home this morning, and he and Neddy have done nothing but look at them. Seems they're getting ready to go live in the country." Octavia's voice rose on a harsh note. "They been chattering about the country just like two birds!"

"They're going to live in my house, as I suppose Colonel Bycroft has told you?"

"He told me. He seemed to think it was true."

"Why wouldn't it be true?"

Octavia looked at Stella. "It would be a shame," she told her, "it would be a crime if this wasn't true."

The Dark Wood

BY CHRISTINE WESTON

ILLUSTRATED BY COBY WHITMORE

To Stella everything about the woman was dark, a rampart of black skin upon which her own understanding beat without avail. In a voice intended to be disarming, she said, "It would be a shame if they were disappointed, but I can't see why they should be."

Octavia picked up a catalogue and carried it to the bookcase. Stella watched her, thinking, She's probably jealous or angry because Mark is leaving and perhaps she cannot go too.

"Do you care for the country?" she inquired conversationally.

"All I care is that decent people shouldn't be cheated."

"Yes, of course. But we're all free to choose for ourselves, and if Colonel Bycroft ——" How on earth had she got into such a conversation with this colored servant?

"Free?" Octavia turned and Stella wondered what could have lent her eyes such depth, such a gloss of tears. "Free to choose for ourselves?" She lifted her hand and let it fall to her side, as if some weight it supported proved too much for her. "The strong may be, yes. But what chance has the innocent?"

"I don't know what in the world you're trying to say," Stella protested. "Colonel Bycroft and I are friends, and I'm very happy that he and Neddy should want my house."

Octavia looked for a moment as if she would speak again, but no words came. Resignation settled on her features and seemed to descend in a visible mantle to her feet. She gave Stella an impenetrable glance and left the room. Stella gazed about her, trying to find Mark in these unfamiliar surroundings. The whole impact of his unknown life came home to her now. Here was a privacy which no one, not even a friend, might share; here was that barrier of a previous intimacy which a fresh passion might never transcend. The past holds us, she thought despairingly, and not our past alone, but the past of others. She moved round the room, examining books and portraits, pausing a long time before a photograph of Mark in uniform. Why had he smiled? He gazed directly at her, and it seemed to Stella as if the room suddenly expanded and the inanimate objects in it grew to enormous proportions, like things seen in delirium. They had the frightful meaning of witnesses arrayed against her. She turned to escape, but the windows became fiery caverns, the doors cross-barred against retreat. She turned back to the photograph, fastening all her attention upon it. Alec, she cried, though the cry did not pass her lips. Alec, Alec!

There were footsteps in the hall, and she replaced the photograph as the doorknob rattled and Mark came in.

"Stella! How good of you to come. This is Neddy."

The boy had followed him into the room and stood quietly regarding her. He came forward and shook hands with inarticulate politeness. Seen close, he did not resemble Mark, and the discovery restored, little by little, Stella's faltering self-control.

Mark was looking at her narrowly. "Are you all right? You seem awfully pale. Come and sit down." He led her to the couch. "Stella, I've done nothing but think about Jarley. Do you think I'm fooling myself? Is this going to make a difference?" He went on quickly: "I've felt so happy ever since I saw you last. I'm trying to get used to the idea of my life as something personal, composed, durable." He tilted his head back on the sofa and gazed at the painting on the wall above him. "Like that picture! That has a life of its own. It's a complete thing. You and I can't add to it or take away from it without its ceasing to exist. It's man's achievement, yet it has nothing to do with man. But what about us—about you and me and Neddy?"

She looked at the child who lay at their feet turning the colored pages of a catalogue, his thin legs stretched behind him like a hound puppy.

Mark took her hand. "Do you believe we can recapture ideas and values now, at this stage of the game?" He seemed strangely wrought up. "Do you, Stella?"

"Yes, if they'll let us."

"They?"

Octavia emerged from the bedroom and crossed the floor toward the pantry. Stella gazed after her, and when the door had closed upon that slender, indefinably hostile figure, she said, "Your colored woman doesn't seem to believe in Jarley!"

"Octavia? Of course she believes in Jarley. I told her we were going."

"Will you take her?"

"If she wants to come—and if we go."

"If? But you just said ——"

His fingers crushed hers. "I've got into the habit of thinking in terms of 'if.' All through the war I kept saying to myself, 'If I don't get bumped off—if this and if that.' It's the same way with Octavia, I guess. But the whole thing is really up to you and me, isn't it?"

She looked at him mutely. His eyes were furious, intent.

"Stella, tell me something."

She turned, expecting the kiss her whole body craved for.

"Tell me something, Stella."

"What can I tell you? You know."

"I don't know. Everything is if—if ——" He let go her hand with a brusque, almost a brutal gesture. "Never mind. We'll go to Jarley, you and I and Neddy. Maybe, there ——" She waited for him to finish, but instead he rose and stood for a moment looking at her. "We might as well be happy, Stella. It's such a simple matter. All you have to do is look through a catalogue and pick out what you want."

Neddy twisted round on the rug and cried, "I could make a boat if I just had some of these things!"

Mark dropped on his knees beside the boy and they began to argue about lathes and hack saws. Stella watched them, passion and uncertainty pouring through her. Why should Mark refuse to kiss her when he had been on the verge of doing so? Why this abrupt change from friendliness to hostility? What was there in this house, in this room, that generated disquiet like a poison? She remembered their evening together, the walk under the moonlit trees in Washington Square, the restrained tenderness with which he had bidden her good night.

"Mark," she whispered in anguish.

He turned and glanced at her, then came back to the sofa. "Let's talk," he said softly. "Let's talk about Jarley." His mood changed once more. "You haven't told me whether there is some sort of landing for a boat. You see, I intend to take this house on a long lease. Of course, there is still time for you to change your mind if the idea scares you."

"It doesn't scare me."

"Then shall we say a lease of fifty years? That'll make me eighty-three. What do you say, Neddy?"

Neddy made no reply. He was absorbed in a page of gigantic sunflowers.

XXIV

"Well," said Miriam Sparrow sternly, "where have you been and what have you to say for yourself?"

Stella, seated at the dressing table, carefully dabbed her nose with powder. She felt Miriam's gaze, the gaze of a small pink hawk. Beyond the closed doors of the bedroom the cocktail party was in full swing. Stella had arrived late, hoping to find her hosts and their guests pleasantly and incuriously drunk and thus to evade the inquisition she dreaded, but Miriam had seized her at once and led her to the bedroom, ostensibly to repair the ravages of a twenty-minute taxi ride through the city.

"It's been ages since we set eyes on you," Miriam went on, "and now you appear, looking different." She stared intently at the face in the mirror. "Absolutely different."

"Not really, Miriam."

"Don't think you can get out of it by a show of innocence. It's obvious that (Continued on Page 54)

Holiday House

A HOUSE for holiday living goes in for gay colors and can wear shorts if it wants; it's meant principally for play and it doesn't have to dress for dinner, so to speak. What happens is that a really well-considered vacation house, such as this, provides a pleasant change of architectural clothing, does everything possible to promote a leisurely life, and creates a carefree style to make relaxing even more attractive than it is anyhow. And the way this house accomplishes all these things couldn't be simpler, and couldn't be more economical, everything considered.

In striking contrast to the customary vacation cottage, cabin or shack, which pays little attention to privacy, convenience or looks, this house, by means of skillful planning plus considerable taste, while keeping a careful eye on cost, shows what a holiday place can be when properly designed. For instance, the main section by itself, with its built-in beds that double as daytime sofas, could take care of a couple, and could even sleep one or two weekend guests on cots curtained off at night in the same large room where there's space to spare. And together with the little annex, with its two double-decker bunkrooms and extra bath, there would be accommodations for as many as eight in all.

Notice that you can come in to either bath from the covered porch without traipsing through the main room or the sleeping quarters. And while the kitchen is purposely compact, it is light, cool and easily managed; pleasantly apart from yet convenient to wherever the dining is done, whether in the main room or on the covered porch.

Both deck and covered porch are floored with slightly separated slats for long life and easy maintenance. The part just forward of the covered section is screened top and sides; louvred boards above cut the sun, and a striped canvas curtain can be drawn for late-afternoon shade. The large glass panels which flood the main room with light are both fixed and sliding, while the glass transoms above swing open for ventilation when the sliding panels are closed. Stored beneath the deck are the solid-board storm panels that cover and protect all windows and glass panels when the holiday house is going to be left unoccupied for any length of time.

It is a house that would fit into any vacation locale—North, South, East, West; seaside, lake shore, mountains, woods or open country; and it could have color schemes to suit. Standing, as it does, on posts or piling, it would take any type of terrain in its stride—hilly, flat, sandy, rocky, whatever; and without any grading. It would be easy to build with any kind of fairly competent help, and the materials, under normal conditions, would be plentiful anywhere, and cheap. Now's the time to find a place to put it. The time to build it is when we've put the housing crisis behind us.

Steps lead up to the covered porch which separates the little annex from the larger part with the main room that is illustrated on the facing page.

DESIGNED BY H. T. WILLIAMS, ARCHITECT; SCALE MODEL BY RAYMOND BARGER STUDIOS; PHOTOGRAPH BY STUART

COLORFUL! . . . AND ALL MODERN HOUSES CAN BE COLORFUL TOO

By Richard Pratt

PHOTOGRAPH BY ANDRÉ KERTÉSZ

ROOM BY H. T. WILLIAMS

A room that invites a summer evening's breeze—cool as its colors and designed for easy living.

A LIVING ROOM ON VACATION

By H. T. Williams

FLOODED with light, air and leisure—according to careful plan—the main room of Holiday House reflects the blues and greens of water, sky and verdure from floor to ceiling, no matter what it looks out upon. Its color scheme and skillful informality set a mood of cool and quiet recreation in connection with lounging, dining, sleeping, play—for all of which it is fully prepared. Let's see how so much relaxed yet trim attractiveness is accomplished. You start off, of course, with a structure that makes a beautiful virtue of its simplicity, outside as well as in, as you can see on the page opposite. Here in this principal many-purpose room the walls of V-jointed vertical white-pine boards, and the exposed roof rafters, too, are brushed with white oil paint, then lightly rubbed to let the grain come through. The undersheathing of the roof, which shows between the rafters, is painted turquoise green, like a cool mid-summer sky. And all the trim of doors and windows is painted with white outside oil paint that will stand up for years under the free circulation of fresh air which the room enjoys whenever it is thrown wide open. Then, over the rough boarding of the floor, inexpensive asphalt tile is laid in checkered squares of ink-blue and turquoise, waxed for long life and easy cleaning.

That is the room, as far as top, sides and bottom are concerned—an ideal background all around for the kind of living for which it has been furnished and arranged. Taking up the various items in no particular order, the day beds can either be fixed with loose cushions on natural hemp webbing as shown, which gives them adequate comfort for lounging and occasional sleeping, or they can be fitted with springs and mattresses if they are going to be used for sleeping nightly. The cushions are covered with a cool and serviceable pink crash, and are sparked up by tiny head bolsters in stripes. Thus the day beds, with heads up to the square table for flowers, foliage, reading matter and accessories, with a round brass-tray coffee table in front, and lit from behind by two adjustable gooseneck wall-mounted lamps, make a conversation corner on which the relaxed life of the room is centered.

Diagonally across the room, in the left foreground of the picture, and close to the passageway to the kitchen (for which see the floor plan on facing page) is the large round table that serves both for dining and for games. This table, with its scrubbed oak top, has a real vacation quality, as have the modern peasant chairs, webbed like the day beds in natural hemp. The rattan chairs, with their loose cushions of striped twill, being lightweight as well as comfortable, can be whisked out onto the open deck at will.

For extra coziness on a rainy day or chilly evening, there is the cast-iron, brass-trimmed, grate-type stove which burns either wood or coal. However, any type of heater—electric, oil or otherwise—might be used instead. A good space heater would keep the whole house warm enough for a winter week end, which is another aspect of this holiday room to be considered; for it would make a vacation comfortable and pleasant almost any time, almost anywhere.

That's how it is—

BY LOUIS PAUL

ILLUSTRATED BY MICHAEL

"IT'S just beautiful, papa," Lilla declared, looking around at the fourth-floor flat. The girl's dark eyes sparkled. Lilla was eighteen. Her English was strongly accented, but limpid and musical, as though she were caressing each syllable lovingly. "Oh, papa, simply beautiful it is!" Papa was a wise man who could make due allowances for differences of opinion. "Beautiful it may or may not be. But unexpensive, yes. And that is more important."

"'Inexpensive,' papa, pardon me, please," said Georg. Georg was a hard-muscled little boy of twelve.

Mr. Torvik laughed. "He corrects my grammar. Ho!" For years the history teacher and his family had made a practice of speaking English, anticipating this very event. "A genius in the family it is nice to have, no, Sada?"

How wonderful it was to hear Jan laugh, thought mamma. How good was laughter. "I think we can do nice things with it," she said, walking about the empty rooms of the flat.

"Listen," cried Lilla. The roar of an elevated train rose to a deafening pitch, then slowly died away. "Ai! I am excited almost to sickness. How was it the luck to find so marvelous a place to live in, papa? A wash sink with automatic water gushing out." She turned the tap and, sure enough, out came the water. "A gas-fire stove. Electric to read with at night. And now a railway line that runs on stilts right outside our window!"

Jan Torvik was only human. His heart expanded at these fulsome exclamations. "Easy, Lilla. I looked amongst the small print at the back of a newspaper, and there it was."

Georg nodded. "That's how it is in America," he observed gravely.

"How do you know, Graino?" asked Lilla. Georg despised this nickname, which came from "grain o' salt."

"Please, with respect," he said, "I ask you not to call me Graino, especially that we are now in the United States. I know because I studied in one of papa's books. America, it said, is the land of opportunity. But do not expect the streets to be paved with gold, it also said. That is fal—fal—something."

"Fallacious," said Mr. Torvik. "Ho! The shoe pinches the other foot. The father corrects the son."

"Just the same, father, I know the meaning of the word," Georg defended himself.

"Soon the mattresses will certainly arrive. The man promised they would come before nightfall," said Mr. Torvik.

Lilla opened a bundle and drew out a light blue gown with metal passementerie describing circular patterns about the skirt. It had been bought for her by her elder brother when she was fourteen. "Here," Carl had written, "is a dress that my little Lilla may have something pretty to wear when she becomes a woman." Only Lilla had never worn it. For the thugs came and turned all Europe into a concentration camp. Carl Torvik died fighting in the mountains of Jugoslavia. These were the years of starvation, the footsore years when, for the Torviks, hovels and haystacks were the only homes they knew.

"Always, first, Lilla takes care of the dress Carl sent her," said mamma, smiling. "Remember when we are hiding in Prague? How nice it was of Vaucelle to let us occupy the old ovens in his bakery. Only that time Lilla's gown was almost consumed when a fire was built against our knowledge."

was as though she had known him in some previous existence. But what ould her mother say to making a bargain with a strange young man?

"Me too," said Georg. "I myself was almost consumed that time. I was asleep in the oven."

"A fine loaf of bread you would have made, Graino," said papa, tousling his hair.

"Please, papa, please!"

Lilla shook out the wrinkled dress, anxiously examining it for holes or tears. Holding it up against her thin shoulders, she turned to Jan Torvik. "Papa, did I ever complain of our hardships?"

"No, Lilla. The feelings you kept inside, saying nothing."

"When the loneliness would be, I said, 'Someday it will happen that I can wear it,' and I was not so lonely. When we walked the hot roads, I felt it in my bundle, and it put off the tiredness. When we lay in some dark place at night and the tears would come, I would feel it under my head and I would say, 'Someday it will be freedom. Someday I will be a woman and wear my blue gown,' and the tears would always stop. Papa, now do you think it will be soon that I can wear it?"

"Yes," said Mr. Torvik, lowering his eyes to conceal the pain in them. "Have not all our dreams come true? Are we not here at last in blessed America?"

"Georg! Stop playing with that water," mamma cried out. "Do you want our Lord to frown on us for making wastage?"

"I was studying something, mamma. It is an engine here that I think will cause hot water to come if it is lit up. Look."

Mr. Torvik investigated the gas coil alongside the boiler in the kitchen. "Graino is right," he decided officially. "One puts a flame of gas alight that automatically manufactures hot water."

"And see this!" exclaimed Lilla. "This I myself have discovered."

There was a little trap door, and inside was a rope descending to the regions below. A discolored sticker on the door read: "For Waste Disposal Only. Do Not Throw Garbage Down Shaft. Riding the Dumb-waiter by Children is Strictly Forbidden."

Looking in amazement at one another, the four Torviks came together in a spontaneous embrace.

"Papa, it is a miracle, this place," said Lilla joyously. "Quickly we will make it to come beautiful. Graino and I will mix some plaster to fill in the broken walls. Somewhere we will find paint to paint it with."

A knock sounded on the door. "Torvik?"

Papa shivered. Then he remembered that he was in America. "Yes," he admitted fearlessly. "I am Jan Torvik."

"We got these here mattresses outside. Sign here." The brawny truckman thrust a metal-bound receipt book at Mr. Torvik. "They're all paid for."

"Thank you. Will you please place them in these two rooms?"

"Okay, mister." The truckman put them on the bedroom floors. He looked around at the apartment quizzically. "Ain't your furniture come yet?"

"Furniture? I'm afraid it still isn't any furniture with us at present."

"Papa!" said Lilla, drawing him aside. "I think it is the custom to give a little money, papa."

Mr. Torvik drew some coins from his trouser pocket and separated fifteen cents in change. "Forgive the smallness, please. It is offered with the right heart."

Still looking about the apartment in wonder, the truckman at first withheld his hand, but finally changed his mind. "All right, Mr. Torvik. Much obliged."

"Now we have beds to lie on," said mamma. "Somehow, when once it is settled where we are to sleep, a good feeling comes over me and I am content."

Mrs. Torvik undid an oilcloth wrapper and set out some cooking utensils. Lilla made coarse wheat meal in a contraption that resembled a coffee grinder, measuring out four handfuls of grain. They added water to this, and boiled it on the stove.

"Why is there a sadness in your eyes, Jan?" asked Mrs. Torvik when the meal was over.

"Is there a sadness in my eyes? I did not wish it to be there. Our Lord has brought us safely to this happy land, about which we dreamed for so long. But ——"

"But what, papa?" asked Lilla.

"A man," said Mr. Torvik, "a man and a father has pride inside him. Once we were gentlefolk. Once I was an honored history teacher. We lived in a stone house, with servants to make our dinner. A shame burns in me that I can provide nothing better than a handful of wheat to feed my family."

"PAPA, with respect, I ask you not to speak so," said Mrs. Torvik. "Do we not have this beautiful place to live in? We are healthy and alive. Remember to be grateful to the good Doctor Horla, who is our sponsor, who puts up his bond and vouches for us to be in this country. Gratitude, not shame, should burn in our hearts."

"Yes, Sada. Forgive me. Even a history teacher must have hidden abilities somewhere. Tomorrow I will go out ——"

Another knock came at the door. It was the man who had delivered the mattresses. "Well, I just happened to think of this here old table that's been layin' around not doin' anybody no good, so I thought —— It really isn't such a bad table if it was scraped off and painted up a little. You'll be doin' me a favor, takin' it off my hands."

Mr. Torvik could only lower his eyes with inarticulate gratitude.

"So long, Mr. Torvik—and best of luck."

Mrs. Torvik finally said, "He liked us, papa. The American liked us. At last I feel after all these years that we are home."

When darkness fell they stretched out gratefully on the secondhand mattresses.

"Are you all right, Lilla?" called mamma. There was no answer. "Lilla!" A soft sob came from across the hall. "Why are you crying, Lilla?"

"Only for happiness, mamma. It is too much to bear."

SEVERAL days went by. Much work was done to clean and renovate the flat, but Mr. Torvik had not been able to find employment. The few dollars that remained after their ship passage had been paid were dwindling, and Jan slept badly at night for worry. If the Torviks became a public charge their sponsor would forfeit his bond and they would be deported. Through each hour of those cruel war years, Jan Torvik had dreamed of America and freedom. Hunted, and without legal status because of his refusal to teach doctrinaire history, at last the moment came when a distinguished countryman, the surgeon Horla, had fulfilled his promise to be their sponsor. Now Mr. Torvik was terrified by the nightmare of deportation.

Then one evening he ran in, perspiration streaming down his forehead. "Employment I have found!" he cried. "At great wages. And with no help from anyone. Personally, all by myself, I achieved employment!"

"We never doubted," said mamma joyfully. "Come. Tell us. What is the work to be? We are all sick with excitement to know."

Jan Torvik shook his head. "Did I ever deliberately lie to you, mamma, even once?"

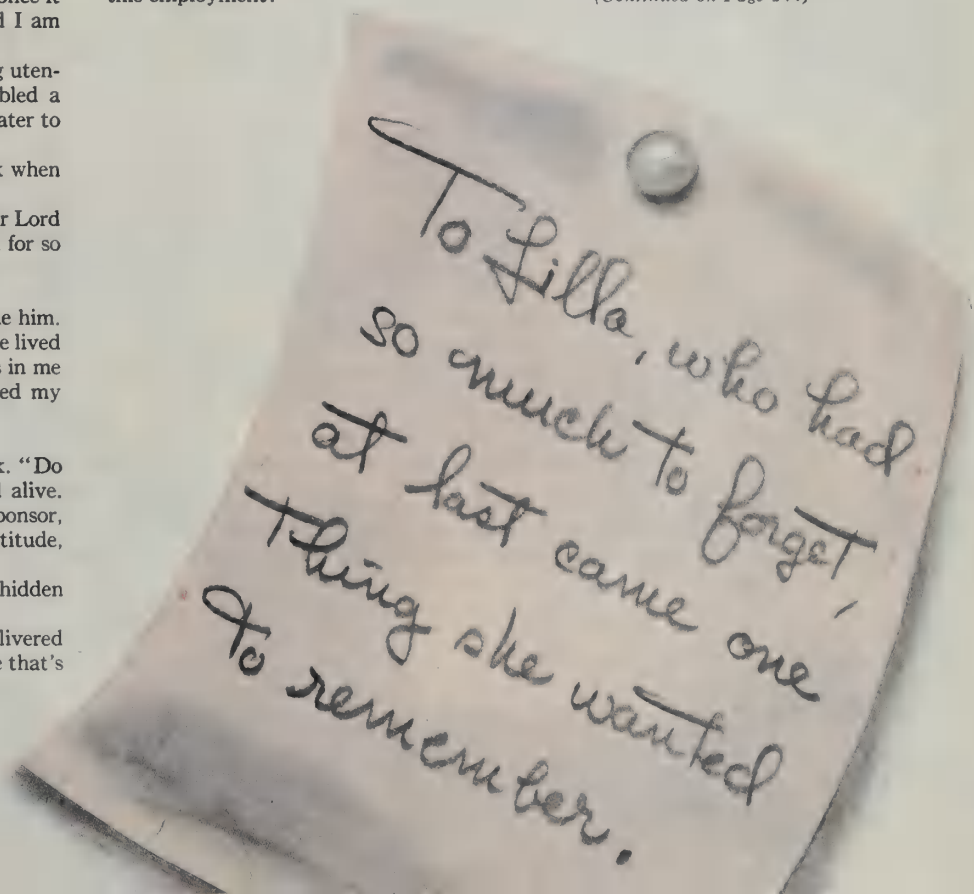
"Why do you ask such a thing, Jan?"

"Because this you will not believe. Yet it is the truth in the sight of our Saviour in heaven. On my person I have an official pink card to prove it. In a deep cavern I am hired to push people."

Lilla dabbed at her father's perspiring face with a handkerchief. "Between the heat, and maybe not enough solid food to eat ——"

"No, no. See the pink card! All morning long I practiced. They shrugged at me at first. They said I had not the strength. But oh, did I push. At the height of the evening rush hour the greatest pushing is required." Mr. Torvik, showing signs of exhaustion, slumped happily on the wooden bench Graino had built. "Permit me to boast just a little, mamma. At the height of the rush hour I was superb."

"Jan, you will make us crazy, talking this way," said Mrs. Torvik.



Young Georg, who had already taken upon himself the task of explaining to the family some of the complexities of American ways, spoke up. "I know. Papa has a job in the underground—I mean the subway."

"Is this a truth, papa?"

"Yes. And at magnificent wages. The trains come into the station, the crowds mill about madly to enter the doorways. As an official, I am appointed to push the passengers as hard as necessary so that the doors will close. Oh, I tell you, I pushed for dear life, and at last the head pusher said, 'Torvik, tomorrow report for work,' and there was respect in his voice. Sada, I told you a history teacher must also possess other talents."

"You make a nice joke of it, Jan. But is it possible that you can stand this employment?"

(Continued on Page 144)

BY ANN BATCHELDER

SPEAKING of weddings, probably I have told you about my hats. But, in case I have neglected to, I shall do it now. I own two hats. Have for years and years. One is black, one is white. Both are of that sort of modified or pseudo Homburg type that's supposed to "fit the head," and last for years, with maybe a new ribbon on it, that is occasionally, when Easter comes around and—well, yes, weddings.

The workdays of these two hats, one black, one white, are, as you can guess, divided between church—either will do for that, according to the season, for both are felt and no favorites are played. The black one goes then, for church, to rainy-day goings on when a hat is practically compulsory, and funerals. The white hat—for church (optional), miscellaneous doings and weddings. See how simple it is?

I am known among my associates as "One-Hat Annie." Among closer and family connections I am known by other and less euphonious names. They think me stingy, or "near," as they say in Vermont. But what I really want is peace of mind and time to do other and, to me, more important things than chasing hats. And, if Wilhela Cushman resents these few remarks, she and not I will take the consequences.

Weddings on the mind. I told you these little facts about my hats for a very good reason. I thought it such a good way to get me right into the swing of weddings, and weddings to many people mean, among other things, a new hat. As things are now, I shan't be needing a new ribbon on my white hat.

Changes even for weddings. Bids have fallen off tremendously. The boys and girls are tearing down to some dusty office or coercing some old judge to marry 'em in a hurry "in chambers." Wedding bells and Lohengrin seem to matter less than they used to. In case you've forgotten what weddings used to be like, the title of this piece, To Have and to Hold, should (Continued on Page 71)

To Have and to Hold

Line a Day

BY ANN BATCHELDER

1 One way to read a book is to start from about the middle or toward the end. That way you'll get the idea quickly, and one can always run forward or back. Also avoid all surprises.

2 Maybe there's little new about a melon, but try this: Cut off the top of a large casaba melon and scoop out the seeds with a silver spoon. Pour into the melon a good cup of raspberry or cherry sirup or liqueur. Fasten on the top and chill for several hours. Tilt and turn the melon once in a while to distribute the flavor throughout. Slice and serve.

3 Speaking of sandwiches (as we were not) and now that the chutneys are back again, take some chutney in a bowl, add a jar of Welsh rarebit and beat it well together. Spread this on long slices of bread. Chill and roll up like a jelly roll. Cut in thin slices.

4 And another, for if this isn't sandwich and picnic time, I don't know it when I see it. Make a spread of mashed hard-cooked eggs, chicken livers, cooked and chopped fine, a little lemon juice, salt and pepper and enough mayonnaise to moisten. Good on any bread, biscuit or canapé shell.

5 Herb note: Sesame and poppy together grow in many a plot of long ago. These are mysteries today. But crushed in a mortar and added to macaroni or spaghetti dishes, these pleasant seeds are never to be by-passed or forgotten.

6 All creamed dishes made of lobster, crab, chicken or oysters require special care that the sauce be smooth and perfectly seasoned. They should be served on crisp toast, salted crackers or with rice.

7 News item: Homemade Dundee cake in a pretty fine-and-dandy package. Grandma's was wrapped up in an old, old napkin. Remember?

8 'Nother piece of news—not gossip: Orange juice may now be whisked out of the purse or pocket, whenever you feel for it, wherever you are. Made into a hard candy. Grapefruit too. Nothing added, nothing lost—or so they say. And prunes, too, the old trail-alongs. The world—it moves!

9 Idea department—dumpling division: Into old-time dumplings for stews, and the fricasseed-chicken variety (those Sunday dumplings), mix chopped parsley or water cress. Sprinkle same on top and cook your dumplings as usual. These are delicious, give you my word. Nice large fluffy dumplings served with a highly spiced tomato-and-meat sauce and an acceptable green salad make a main luncheon course. Coffee—iced or hot.

10 Should you be needing an appetizer at once cool and full of pep, try this: serve icy-cold segments of grapefruit in catchup or chili sauce like shrimp cocktail.

11 From an old cookbook: "Crossing the ocean, do not be misled into taking great quantities of seasickness remedies or medicines with you. A supply of gingerbread, nuts and sugar comfits will insure you a pleasant voyage." Nuts to you, old sailor.

12 What to do with the holes in canned pineapple slices is pretty discouraging. I've found out, though, and it isn't cream cheese. Put the slice on a slice of the best of cakes (don't ask me which), cover the slice with ice cream, first filling the hole with chopped nuts.

13 I suppose I've told you this before. Don't you care, it's here again. Gingerbread, while hot, is spread with fresh applesauce, then with whipped cream or cream cheese thinned with cream. Cut in big squares and let it turn up at the table with cream and crystallized ginger. Or add the ginger to the applesauce.

14 Will the class come to order, please. Ready? Well, take a cup of cooked rice and one and a half cups of chopped cooked chicken. Mix together in a bowl. Season with salt and pepper.

TALES OF BELINDA

"Belinda, Belinda, will you tell me your dream?
For I heard you walking last night by the stream."
"Up from the churchyard I found my way,
And stopped for a moment a prayer to say.
But for a moment to breathe a prayer.
And to gaze at the violets. But were you there?"
"Belinda, Belinda, could you not wait?"
"Nay, lover, latched forever is the gate."

Then add about a cup of chicken broth. Perfume with sherry, if you wish. Taste. Stir in the well-beaten yolks of two eggs. Attend to seasoning. Chapter II. Fold in, with care, the stiff-beaten whites of the eggs—there are two—and bake in a moderate oven until a golden brown. And what a way to use leftovers!

15 Using the freezing trays these warm June days? Small bits of fruit such as pineapple, pears, bananas, peaches, cherries are partly frozen and immersed in soft sherbet—orange, lemon and raspberry are best, I think.

16 As the bride to the orange blossom, so is the tomato to the summer salad. A new "trend" is observed when you cut the tomato, peeled, in thin wedges not quite through. Put slices of cucumber in the cuts, fill the center with cream cheese and serve with French dressing. And have you tried the wedged tomato with an inset of a well seasoned deviled egg? Garnish this with water cress.

17 I'll tell you a secret: that crisp brown crust on hashed brown potatoes is achieved by low heat and no stirring. Just give the potatoes a chance to brown—and go easy on the heat under the pan. Simple?

18 What thrill is there in a dish of flaked fish cooked in a cream sauce? Add cheese? Yes. Add white wine? As you please. Add a dash of nutmeg? Why not? But add paper-thin cucumber slices and observe the reactions.

19 As we were. Let me tell you (from experience) that such fish dishes, particularly ones au gratin, ought to be flattered with a cup of sautéed mushrooms, and with a seasoning of some sharp sauce. But just a little.

20 When it's teatime on the shady patio, and the teapot is at its best, have a plate of orange and lemon slices touched with mint or wintergreen extract.

21 Haven't tried it yet, but I am told by tried and faithful friends that a dash of mint in pea soup is better than goldfish in the lily pool. And that it gives Hollywood come-hither to a lemon jelly such as never was.

22 Mushrooms baked in a rich cheese sauce sound all right to me—when I have that night off and can cook and cook.

23 In the cool of the evening, come down to the brookside grill and have a rarebit. One done with canned baked beans or that made with chutney and onions. Just nominate your candidate.

24 Here's one more summer dessert you ought to have. Arrange a large bowl of melon balls, cantaloupe, watermelon mixed. On these go balls of strawberry sherbet, surrounded with shavings of pineapple in sirup.

25 For the McCoy in desserts you mustn't forget vanilla ice cream with great black cherries in their sirup. Like a romantic secret whispered in the dark.

26 Tennyson's brook, and tomato surprises, will go on forever. Anyway, why not? Mask the little darlings inside with mayonnaise. Put a pickled walnut in each—"pickled" is the word—cover with a rosette of green mayonnaise.

27 Oh, yes, Therese, I will tell you about that. Make a good clear aspic jelly, and mold in a shallow dish with sliced eggs, cress and sliced ripe olives. When set, cut in dice and serve on lettuce.

28 A green-apple pie, flavored with cinnamon and nutmeg, topped off with meringue and sent in with a jug of cream and shaved maple sugar, is timely.

29 New peas and asparagus tips cooked together are as good as may be. Maybe better.

30 June hath thirty days. Look well to your roses. And take that blue ribbon. June comes only once a year, remember.

I COURTED AN ANGEL ... AND MARRIED A COOK

"That's What He Says! But I've Got Campbell's Soups to Thank for Helping Me Out"

"Sometimes I think I could write a book. About husbands, I mean. The way they get around a girl, for instance, with those smooth words—and all the time you're not fooled a bit and all the time you love it! And then—the way that man of mine can eat! Take soup. Most men like soup, of course. Tom sure does, and that's why I'm keen about Campbell's. They're so good and so nourishing, with all those wonderful meats and vegetables and things—and easy to fix, too. Why, Campbell's Soups just seem like 'one of the family'. And I've discovered this: He really sits up and takes notice when I include one of his favorite soups. And that's good!"

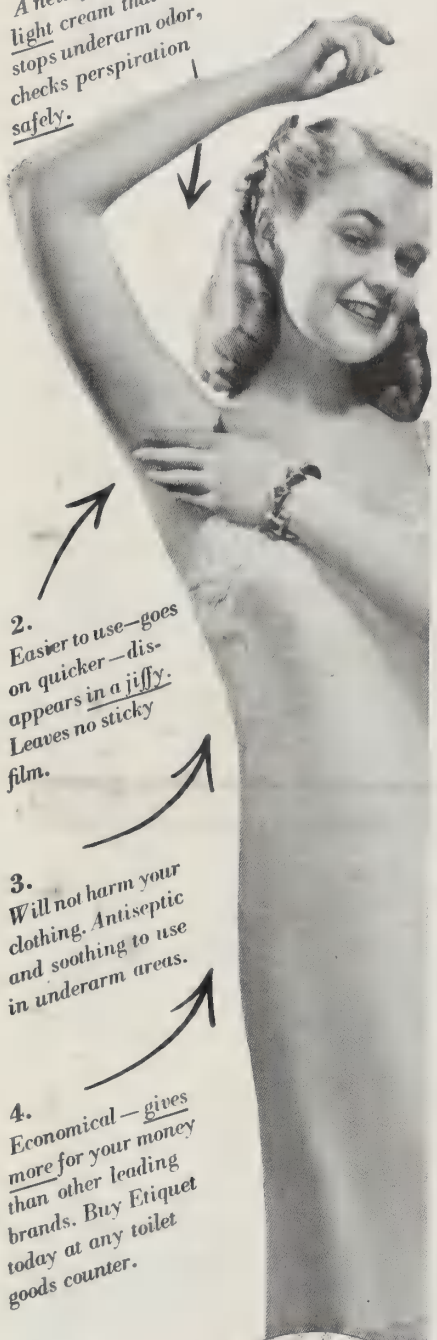
LOOK FOR THE RED-AND-WHITE LABEL

e—just as sure as you like chicken, you'll Campbell's Chicken Soup! Tender pieces of ken in a rich golden broth, with fine white rice.

Campbell's CHICKEN SOUP

"Almost a meal in itself" is what women everywhere call this hearty, homey soup, with its 15 different garden vegetables and good beef stock.

Campbell's VEGETABLE SOUP



Try this thick and hearty soup of tender whole beans. It's made extra-tempting with the tangy taste of fine bacon. You'll like it!

Campbell's BEAN with BACON SOUP

New deodorant puts a stop to PERSPIRATION WORRIES

1. A new type fluffy-light cream that stops underarm odor, checks perspiration safely.

2. Easier to use—goes on quicker—disappears in a jiffy. Leaves no sticky film.

3. Will not harm your clothing. Antiseptic and soothing to use in underarm areas.

4. Economical—gives more for your money than other leading brands. Buy Etiquet today at any toilet goods counter.

10¢ AND 39¢ plus tax

it's Etiquet

Formula patented
No other like it

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Copyright 1946, Lehn & Fink Products Corp.

THE DARK WOOD

(Continued from Page 45)

something has happened to you, and of course any fool can guess what it is."

"Well?"

"You've found someone to fall in love with, and you're being mysterious about it, instead of letting us rejoice with you." She settled down on a corner of the bed and wrapped her arms round the post. "Dick and I are your closest friends. Haven't we any right to know what happens to you?"

Stella thought, Should I tell her? Then she shrank from the thought as an old fear asserted itself, the fear which had dogged her since her first meeting with Mark, the fear that to name her love might expose it to danger, derision, skepticism. "What? Can the period of immolation be past? But you had led us to believe that your love was immortal, your grief never to be assuaged!" Oh, they must find it out sometime, but not yet and not through her.

"You can't keep a secret forever," Miriam warned her. "How silly, and how unfair to imagine that you could!"

"Unfair?"

"Well, don't you owe us anything? Since your return from Italy we've hoped something like this would happen. There's no use beating about the bush—something has happened. Dick noticed it when he saw you the other day, and I notice it now. Notice! It's written all over you."

"Well, I might as well tell you I am going back to Jarley."

They rose, confronting each other. A gale of celebration throbbed in the living room beyond the doors.

"You're going back to Jarley?" Miriam said. "Alone?"

Stella lied instinctively, defensively, "Yes, alone."

"When did you decide? I'm delighted, of course, but still puzzled! It's not like you to make these decisions."

"Miriam dear, don't ask any more questions. You've told me often enough that I should return to Jarley, and I am going. There is nothing more to say now. When there is, I shall say it. As you just reminded me, one cannot keep secrets forever."

Miriam flushed. "I'm not trying to pry! You seem happy. If you are really happy, I'm satisfied."

"Happy?" murmured Stella. "That has a dangerous sound, hasn't it?"

Miriam's natural generosity came to the rescue. "Oh, Stella, you used to be happy! You used to be the happiest person I knew." Impulsively she kissed her. "We better join the animals. Dick will come barging in here after us in a minute."

THE living room was crowded with people and the talk had reached a point familiar to Stella, the point where sense and nonsense become inextricably confused. She heard Dick's voice at its most trenchant:

"Given our national temperament of crass sentimentalism and deadly practicality, there is every reason why we should be detested by the rest of the world!"

"Oh, lay off," growled another voice. "They have always found our national temperament pretty useful when they got themselves into a mess."

"Well, believe me, boy, next time America the beautiful will pop like a great big bloated bedbug."

"Oh, dear," murmured Miriam. "They've started arguing. It's Pete Willingdon and Dick. I wish Dick would leave him alone. These idiotic discussions always ruin a good party."

Dick was shouting in a corner, "We're a breed of extremists, incapable even as individuals of elevating any relationship to a spiritual or artistic level! I tell you I'm an expert on human relationships. We pass from good-fellowship to bed fellowship at the drop of a hat." He paused and added thoughtfully, "And there are among us those who sometimes neglect to remove the hat."

"What's wrong with that for a national psychology?" demanded Mr. Willingdon. "It's a good one, if you ask me. It's made us what we are."

"And what are we? Tell me that. Just what are we?"

Miriam groaned. "Do go and break it up, Stella!"

Stella made her way through the crowd, and was immediately greeted as an ally by Dick.

"I'm trying to be earnest," he told her plaintively. "The only chance I have to be earnest is when I'm drunk, then bang go all my inhibitions."

"He's been telling me what he thinks of the Republican Party," said Mr. Willingdon, looking as if he had received a body blow.

"You'll admit I've been impartial. Drunk, I spare no one, not even my friends."

"And what then becomes of your professional discretion?" inquired Stella.

"Oh, professional discretion is in a class by itself. It operates on the same principle as the conditioned reflex."

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Restorative

By Georgie Starbuck Galbraith

When I'm depressed and my darkling mood
Will not give away to the wiles of food
Or a froufrou hat or a compliment
Tendered me by my favorite gent,
It's house-cleaning time. I sweep and dust
And scour with a dedicated lust,
And under the spell of mop and wax,
Little by little I relax.
Anon my psyche can chin itself
On the cobwebs hung from the pantry shelf,
While my mind and the draperies display
Alike a freedom from tattle-tale gray.
For never the woman with heart so glum
She could scowl at spotless linoleum
Or shutter the sunlight from her brain
When it shone through a polished windowpane!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Mr. Willingdon drifted elsewhere in search of sympathy, and Dick turned a penetrating eye on Stella.

"You look as if you had been in a far country, but it wasn't Italy this time."

"I've been talking to Miriam. I told her that I had decided to go back to Jarley."

"Jarley? Is that where you've been hiding?"

"No, I've been in town, but very busy getting my ideas sorted out."

"What's his name?"

She shook her head. "No, Dick. Don't go jumping to conclusions."

"I'm in an athletic mood. I've jumped all over Willingdon, now I want to try a few conclusions. And you look lovely. It's all so obvious even to my jaded eye. Why should you want to conceal it? Or is there some difficulty? Is he married, or something?"

Stella forced herself to meet the merry but merciless eyes. "Aren't you glad enough that I've decided to return to Jarley? You've always urged me to."

"Of course I'm glad. It's where you belong. I have a theory that certain people belong in certain places and should not be uprooted. You don't belong in New Yor though I can guess why you have chosen live here since Alec's death."

She waited, while round them the amia babble rose and fell.

Dick went on: "It was because you we homeless and New York is a city of the hom less. It's why Miriam and I live here. O roots don't go deep—they're the kind th draw their nourishment from just below t surface." He waved his glass at her genial "But if you had stayed on here mu longer ——"

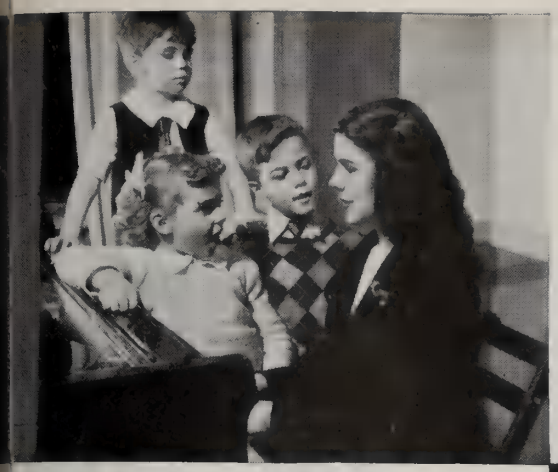
"Yes?" she prompted.

"You'd have dried up. You'd have becor old and withered like last year's geranium

She laughed, but he went on seriously:

"Just remember one thing: if there are d ficulties in the way of your happiness, I mig be able to help you. I'm a very clever gu you know. There's scarcely a person in th room who has not benefited from my adv at one time or another."

SHE reflected silently on Mark's dilemm and on the fact that hard-boiled professior characters like Dick Sparrow should called on to alleviate private woe. Mar refusal to submit to or to connive at an au matic version of justice appeared in her ey as something both right and pathetic. T thought of him brought a glow to her eyes, a William Symes, standing at a little distan studied her with increasing surprise. He h not recognized her at first, and recollection that airplane journey to Lisbon revi slowly as he listened to fragments of t conversation as he had listened to the which preceded it, between his host and Willingdon.



It was Symes' practice, on these occasio to convey the impression of convivial without becoming drunk, a practice wh had saved him from more than one disast He rarely missed anything that might pro to be of value to himself and to his prof sion, although, as a trained observer, he ga few people credit for subtlety, for he h heard too many men wittingly and unw tingly betray themselves, each other a their countries in the course of a single c versation, often under the stimulus of first drink. The instinct of mistrust, bred his childhood, had become a habit, and of his favorite pastimes was to speculate the integrity and patriotism of people knew.

But his speculations were not always such a sinister level. Discretion rather th integrity was more the order of ordin times. So it happened that this eveni while he doubted that Dick Sparrow wo let fall any inadvertent hint relative to h self and Regan, habit prompted him to lo within earshot of his host, and he tingle little at Dick's facetious reference to guests as persons who were actual or pot tial clients. It was an unwise thing to even in joke; he must speak to Dick abou

However, as the conversation proceed more or less harmlessly he dismissed his fe and fell instead to watching Stella Harm Queer that he should have put her so c pletely out of his mind and that, seeing again, she should appeal to him as be youthful and attractive. Then, remember the mission which had taken her to Italy, decided she must have undergone a me morphosis, and as he sipped his drink wondered about the nature of it, and its p sible agent. Had it been one of the go looking pilots of the American clipper, some robust young Italian, one who pedd consolation to rich foreigners among ruins and the graveyards? Perhaps e Dick Sparrow. Symes gazed with a sud renewal of interest at his friend the law Dick seemed ardent enough, though t might have been induced by liquor.

Someone took away Symes' half-em glass and gave him another. Voices lowed round him, argumentative, provc tive, amorous, incoherent. Stella

(Continued on Page 56)

She shall have music"—Mary has been majoring in music at college. During summer vacations she gives time to teaching piano to youngsters in a foster home. "They couldn't have lessons any other way," she says. People who play and sing are always needed. Can't you give away some of your music as Mary does?

Mary Margaret Topping to wed Navy Lieutenant

Daughter of the Hudson Robert Toppings of Peoria, Illinois, engaged to Lieutenant (j.g.) Edgar A. De Yoe, Jr., U.S.N.R. of Ramsey, New Jersey . . ."Topper," as Mary is called, is a senior at Connecticut College and met her fiancé when he was a Cadet at the Naval Training Station in New London.

Her ring—a dew-clear diamond in a perfectly plain white-gold setting.

he's Engaged ! She's Lovely ! She uses Pond's !

he looks like a teen-ager with her hair round her shoulders—like a sophisticated logue model in her evening "up-do," that so eautifully accentuates the fine contour of er face and clarity of her skin.

Another engaged girl with a Pond's-cared-or complexion, Mary says: "Pond's Cold ream makes face care so easy. I just love he way it helps to keep my skin in good ondition—clean, soft and smooth."

he smooths the silky-soft cream over face and throat, pats briskly to soften and release dirt and make-up. Tissues all off.

he rinses with more of her luscious feeling Pond's—slipping her white-tipped fingers over her face in quick little circles. Tissues again. "It's a plus creaming that makes my face extra clean and soft," she says.

opy Mary Topping's cream-rinse way of sing Pond's Cold Cream—every morning, very night regularly! Use your Pond's for aytime clean-ups, too! It's no accident so any more women use Pond's than any her face cream at any price. Ask for a big r, so luxurious to dip into!

Her deep-shoulder dress is wonderful against her smooth-as-cream skin.

Ask for a big luxury jar of Pond's today!

ew of the many Pond's Society Beauties: Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr. · Mrs. Victor L. Drexel H. Princess Priscilla Bibesco · Mrs. Alexander W. Biddle · Mrs. Pierpont Morgan Hamilton

(Continued from Page 54)

turned, and he thought her profile charming. He smiled as he remembered the last time he had seen it, when, thanks to Regan, he had come close to missing the plane, and he recalled scraps of the conversation which he'd had with Mrs. Harmon, how she had bored him with her air of grief and her totally uninspiring appearance.

Behind him someone opened a window and a stir went through the room as people regrouped themselves in obedience to some mysterious law, their voices falling, then rising, as conversation was resumed at the point where a breath of air had interrupted it.

Symes turned to find that Stella was staring at him with unrecognizing eyes. He went forward and held out his hand. "How was Italy?" He asked it out of pure malevolence, annoyed that she should not have remembered him.

She shook hands. "Italy?"

Dick said, "You remember Bill Symes?"

"Yes, of course." She remembered him then, this well-groomed young man whose personality continuously and perversely eluded her.

"I hope the weather was fine for the remainder of your trip," Symes continued urbanely. "The spring wind can be rough, even for our clippers."

STELLA thanked him and said that her trip had been quite pleasantly uneventful. He saw that she was unwilling to continue the conversation, but surprise at her changed appearance, allied to injured sexual vanity, inspired him to further spitefulness.

"I haven't been in Italy since before the war," he said. "I was sent there then on a mission for our Government. I must say I dread seeing it again. I often think of Churchill's speech when he promised that the red-hot rake of war would draw the length and breadth of the country! Well, it did, though God knows we paid for it along with the Italians." His eyes, the handsome eyes of a cruel boy, dwelt on Stella as he inquired, with an air of one informed intelligence consulting another, "Tell me, how was Italy?"

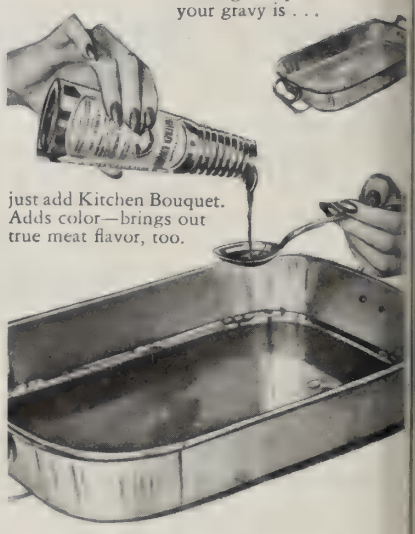
Dick stared at him in amazement, but Stella had recovered her composure. She believed that Symes must be somewhat drunk and therefore forgetful of the errand which had taken her abroad. She answered calmly that she had found Italy most beautiful, and added, "I should thank you again for your kindness in helping me get there."

"I'm sorry I couldn't have accompanied you all the way to Rome, or to have been of service to you while you were there. You were in Rome, weren't you?"

"I went north, to a town called Montescari."

"Oh, yes, the scene of one of the great battles. We lost a lot of men there. It used to be a favorite spot for tourists before the war. I don't suppose there's much left. I expect to be sent to Italy one of these days, and frankly I don't look forward to it. I don't fancy ruins in the initial stages! Ruins and cemeteries. I'd rather wait till the grass has grown a bit." He turned genially to Dick. "That was quite a bout you had with Pete Willingdon. No fair, pitching into a guy twice as drunk as yourself!"

Relieved at the change of subject, Dick laughed. "Willingdon just plain refuses to see the United States as anything but a bigger and better National Association of Manufacturers."



Stella listened with a forced smile. Symes' manner had left her considerably disturbed. Was he really drunk, or inexplicably vindictive? She found it difficult to rid herself of the latter suspicion. Yet why should he have wished to hurt her feelings? Might it be a mere trick of her own imagination? She sensed his awareness of herself, and it frightened her. This was a familiar terror; it held her rooted in the center of this noisy and preoccupied throng just as it sometimes affected her in a subway or at the crowded intersection of streets. Suppose something happened something, anything and she were to find herself once more alone? I must go away, she told herself urgently. I must

SAVE MEAT SHRINKAGE!

Get up to 27% More Servings Per Roast!

WIN PRAISE FOR

RICH BROWN DELICIOUS GRAVY

TO save shrinkage—to get up to 27% more servings from meat . . . "slow-roast" at 300°F. And to give these roasts brown, appetizing color, simply brush roast with Kitchen Bouquet before cooking—add some to the gravy.

Kitchen Bouquet is blended of 12 vegetables and choice spices. It adds that deep brown mouth-watering color; also brings out—magnifies—enhances the true rich taste of the particular meat.

It's magic, too, for stews, meat pies, croquettes, hash, etc. Get a bottle of Kitchen Bouquet—today!

KITCHEN BOUQUET

It Makes the Gravy

—RICH, BROWN, DELICIOUS

One of the Quality Foods of Grocery Store Product

"Gee whiz! We won't have a chance to beat his team! He's eatin' Peanut Crunch Peanut Butter!"

Yes, there's plenty of energy-giving food value in every jar of Peanut Crunch Peanut Butter. And every mouthful of this delightfully different peanut butter is a real flavor treat! Crisp, "chewy" bits of fresh roasted peanuts in Peanut Crunch add extra deliciousness to the flavor.

Next time you're at the store ask for Peanut Crunch, the different and improved peanut butter. Your family will love the rich flavor.

Peanut Crunch BRAND PEANUT BUTTER

Once you try it -- you'll always buy it!

find Mark. Finding him, she would cast herself into his arms. "Hold me, save me!" She turned, more than half expecting him to appear in obedience to her inaudible summons.

Her companions were talking energetically and she moved away toward the farther corner of the room, where Miriam sat beside a large pudding of a woman, the thrice-divorced wife of successively younger men. The prospective fourth, a wilted youth with padded shoulders, hovered in the offing.

Miriam drew Stella onto the arm of her chair. "You've met Marie MacLennan? Marie has been telling me about a marvelous cream for sunburn. It takes the sting out immediately."

"Costs ten dollars a jar," said Mrs. MacLennan hoarsely. "My beautician makes it up himself. It's a secret formula, and worth every cent. Magical, really magical."

Stella smiled vaguely. Two hundred pounds of vanity stared back at her with feverish eyes.

"That's a beautiful coat," declared Mrs. MacLennan abruptly. "A beautiful, beautiful coat! Would you think it rude if I asked where you found it?" She touched the coat with fat, covetous fingers.

Stella told her, laughing, and a shallow gleam flashed across the woman's eyes. Then their focus shifted like lightning toward her current betrothed, who was swaying dangerously in his long pointed shoes.

"Desmond, do sit down!" She shrugged theatrically. "He never knows enough to take his third drink sitting! Desmond!"

The young man subsided at her feet. "I have a headache," he moaned. "I have one head of a hellache, mamma."

Stella lingered a few minutes, then got up and moved from group to group till she had gone the rounds. Glancing at her watch, she realized that she had been here almost two hours. The semidelirium of these gatherings always left her with a creeping sense of depression; people crowded about her, her ears hummed with voices, her mind grappled with ideas half formed, extravagantly expressed. Time passed, time alone passed pitilessly over these unquiet heads.

One of the commonest and most popular mistakes is thinking your worries are over when your children get married. —KIN HUBBARD.

She escaped at last, but with difficulty. "I have a headache," she pleaded with Dick and Miriam, taking her cue from the prostrate Desmond. "And it's late, really late." It was after nine and they had been drinking since five-thirty.

Miriam accompanied her to the door and whispered, "Have lunch with me next week." Her eyes added accusingly, You are leaving us to go to someone else!

Stella promised to have lunch one day next week, and out on Park Avenue she lifted her face to the air, rejoicing in the summer night. But she had not gone half a block when a voice hailed her and she was overtaken by William Symes. Masterfully, he seized her arm.

"Mrs. Harmon! How fast you walk! Were you running away?"

"Running away?"

"Oh, I wouldn't blame you if you were." He pressed her arm. "I was so afraid you'd disappear before I'd had a chance to apologize. I could kick myself for having been so crude. It was completely unpremeditated, I assure you. After you had gone Dick lit into me, and quite properly too."

Stella glanced at him apprehensively. "It's all right," she murmured. "Perfectly all right. I understood."

"You're sweet to say so. I have so much on my mind, I tend to overlook personal things. I had completely forgotten that you lost your husband in Italy, and that you were going to visit his grave, the day I met you on the plane."

"It's all right," Stella repeated, suddenly on the verge of tears. Why didn't he leave

There's a great day ahead for motorists!  But it won't come until new cars and tires are plentiful...highways are repaired  and made safe through modern engineering...and until all those whose driving experience was limited during the war years renew their skill.

Right now, cars  average more than 8 years of age, many with parts and tires  badly worn. The older your car gets, the more cautiously you should drive. If you aren't sure your car is safe, protect yourself and others by keeping it off the road!

You can help reduce the traffic accident toll which has been rising steadily since the war's end. For a check list of vital parts you should have inspected regularly, and for driving suggestions on how you can help reduce traffic accidents, send for Metropolitan's pamphlet. Just ask for Booklet 66-J.

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

(A MUTUAL COMPANY)

Frederick H. Ecker, CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD

Leroy A. Lincoln, PRESIDENT

1 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 10, N.Y.

COPYRIGHT 1946— METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

her? She had planned to walk a block or two in order to clear her head, then to take a cab and stop at Mark's on her way home. Symes' personality oppressed her unbearably. "Please forget all about it, Mr. Symes. It really isn't important."

"But it is important! You must have thought me an awful heel. Dick was furious. It hurt him, I imagine, pretty much as it must have hurt you. He's one of my closest friends, as I understand that he is yours too."

Stella thought, I'll get a cab, and perhaps he'll leave me then. But Symes urged her forward, matching his stride with hers, keeping a possessive grasp on her elbow. She was conscious of some strange excitement running through him.

He went on: "You see, the trouble was I didn't recognize you when you came into the Sparrows' living room. The last time I saw you, you were not looking very well. You had a sort of sadness, as why not, considering everything? And there was I blatting on and on about Italy and the war and everything!" He shook her arm, then clasped it closely against his side. "Dick told me how fond he was of your husband too. He should have stopped me when I started to talk that way. Naturally, he was astonished at what he took to be my bad taste. I wouldn't hurt him for the world, nor you. You do forgive me, don't you?"

She said coldly, "Yes, I forgive you. Please don't let's talk of it any more. Would you mind signaling a cab? My head's quite bad and I'd like to go home."

"Poor kid! Of course." Still holding her firmly by the arm, he signaled a cab and handed her into it, getting in after her. "Where to?"

Stella thought helplessly, Mark is nearest. He'll have to leave me there. "East Fifty-third."

The cab churned down the avenue, and Symes said vibrantly, "I shall see you to your door." He took her arm again. "It's the very least I can do." He fell silent for a moment, then: "How you have changed! That's what confused me. It's what I told Dick. Do you mind if I tell you also? Don't misunderstand if I say that you make me think of a woman in love."

"I don't misunderstand," she replied bitterly, hating him.

"I'm afraid you do, but I'll take the risk." He peered at her. "I'm devoted to old Dick, myself. In fact, I regard him as an older brother. I don't know what I'd do, sometimes, without him."

"He has many friends," said Stella. Before them, apparently interminable, glittered the ruby traffic lights.

"I've never known a lawyer with more human understanding," Symes continued warmly. "You'd suppose their job would make them hard as nails. It does, most of them. But Dick is exceptional."

She managed a laugh. "Are you getting a divorce, by any chance, Mr. Symes? I was not aware that you were married."

"I'm not." He wrapped himself in a moment of mystery, then emerged. "No doubt Dick has told you something about my difficulties." It was a statement rather than a question.

She answered, "He is very fond of you, and has often spoken of you to me." Her indefinable fear of Symes had spent itself in boredom. She saw him now as merely drunk and lecherous, and gazed thankfully at the traffic lights as they turned emerald down the avenue.

The car started forward and Symes said in a charged voice, "I don't blame Dick for being in love with you."

She turned slowly to stare at him. "Dick is not in love with me. You are quite mistaken."

Symes laughed. "Oh, I understand. You and Miriam are good friends. But in these situations passion always triumphs over friendship, doesn't it?"

He is drunk, she told herself again contemptuously. Drunk like the rest of them this evening. Drunk as Dick himself. What could Dick have said to him? The thought jarred her into wariness.

She said, "Dick sometimes talks like an idiot after he's been drinking."

"Does he? I would have sworn he never transgressed the bounds of professional discretion!"

"I think you can leave transgression out of it."

He studied her intently. He was not really much farther along than when he'd started, but it had been an exhilarating interlude. Working on the faintest scent, he believed that he had flushed an invisible hare. Reassured as to his own position, he felt that he could safely relax and compose the incident into an amusing story for Regan. But that he had actually flushed a hare, and one of unexpected agility and size, dawned on him as the taxi bore them down Park Avenue toward their destination.

"East Fifty-third, did you say? I seem to remember Dick saying that you lived in the East Forties somewhere."

"I do, but I want to stop and see friends who live on Fifty-third."

"And that headache?"

"They'll have aspirin, and if it doesn't get better I can spend the night there," she told him. Weariness made her say it, weariness and the determination to get rid of him at all costs. Under the circumstances, he would scarcely try to intrude on strangers.

"Here we are, East Fifty-third."

Stella gave the driver the number of the house and the taxi stopped. Symes climbed out, holding the door for her. Surprise, which moves most people to noisy exclamation, kept him silent as he escorted her to the door. Regan's house! He could have found his way here blindfolded. How extraordinary! Who were these friends, and did Stella by some lunatic chance know Regan? But he knew all Regan's friends and most of her acquaintances, by name if not in person, and Stella was not among them.

The man who insists upon seeing with perfect clearness before he decides, never decides. Accept life and you must accept regret.

—AMIEL: The Golden Treasury of the World's Wit and Wisdom.

Hat in hand, he ascended the steps after her. "I do hope that headache will be better in the morning. And I am really, truly forgiven?"

Safe at last, Stella could smile without effort. "Thank you for bringing me so far. And don't let us talk any more about forgiveness. You've been most kind."

"I'll wait and make sure your friends are home. Which bell?"

"Two-eighteen. Bycroft, to your left."

"It says Mrs. Bycroft."

"Yes, that's it."

Symes pressed the bell. The buzzer sounded almost immediately, and as Stella pushed open the door he jauntily replaced his hat. The echo of his voice bidding her good night fell vibrantly through the air, then he turned and walked back to the waiting taxi.

XXV

Recovering from an attack of asthma which had left her chilled and spent, Hester lay among her pillows, watching Regan, who crouched at the foot of the bed, manicuring her fingernails. The lights of the bedroom played over Regan's naked body, and Hester's gaze shifted from her sister to the window. A slight mist obscured the river, but she could picture it, lead-colored, a few boats plowing against the current. Lying here, she longed for a breath of the storm-scented air, but the doctor had warned her she must keep her windows closed in bad weather. The room smelled of the aromatic powders she had burned to relieve the asthma; it smelled also of Regan's favorite perfume, which vied with the powerful tincture of drugs.

"So you've thought of everything," said Hester.

Absorbed in her task, Regan merely nodded. (Continued on Page 61)

The moon and tenpence

Even today, a dime or so will still enable a fellow to end an evening in style. The high cost of living hasn't ruled out some old favorites — not the moon, at least, nor summer's own frosty-cool ice cream cone!

At such a moment, it's almost unromantic to say anything more. But the fact is, there's a lot besides frostiness and flavor that makes a certain ice cream a very special treat. You see it under the labels "Sealtest" and "Breyers"—and whether by the cone or quart, it means extra money's worth.

Every lick of ice cream wearing these labels is subject to a supervision both rigid and unique. Sealtest Laboratories, established by National Dairy, set the standards for it. And, moreover, check continually to make sure those standards are met.

From Maine to Nebraska — from the Great Lakes to the Gulf — in over a thousand communities — National Dairy member companies hold to the high mark fixed by scientific controls. Only ice cream which conforms to Sealtest standards can be sold to you under these labels.

Of course, National Dairy's red Sealtest symbol is found, too, on milk and other milk products. The complex system of inspection, the detail work and research behind it, are all part of a larger program to perfect and improve milk in whatever form it reaches you, wherever you may live.

Dedicated to the wider use and better understanding of dairy products as human food . . . as a base for the development of new products and materials . . . as a source of health and enduring progress on the farms and in the towns and cities of America.

Kraft · Sealtest · Breyers

NATIONAL DAIRY
PRODUCTS CORPORATION
AND AFFILIATED COMPANIES

HE: Another new dress—and a snazzy one, too

SHE: New dress, nothing—this has been Luxed 20 times!

HE: Wow! Maybe you'd qualify for a poor man's bride

SHE: With Lux on hand, I might even make a poor man rich!

• •

Yes, this lovely spun rayon dress was Luxed and ironed 20 times before this picture was taken! Lux care certainly pays—it keeps pretty rayons, gay linens and cottons lovely looking ever so long.

That lovely new look....that

LUX LOOK

HINTS THAT WILL HELP YOU NOW!

1. Fabrics and nice dresses are scarce now, so take care of all nice washables. Don't soak! Never risk strong soap, hot water, rough handling. Use the gentle Lux method.

2. Always test colors in clear, lukewarm water first. Anything safe in water is safe in Lux. Scientific tests show that Lux care keeps colors lovely up to 3 times as long.

3. Dry in shade away from heat; iron most fabrics while slightly damp, never over double thicknesses. Remember, the makers of nice washables advise Lux 24 to 1.

Lux contains vital materials—
DON'T WASTE IT!

(Continued from Page 58)

"Of course there's a chance you might be mistaken."

"We've thought of that too."

Yes, Hester reflected, you would have thought of that too. After a pause she went on: "A meal here and there, an occasional visit to a man's apartment, don't necessarily constitute adultery."

"No, they don't, but they are very apt to." A gleam lighted, then veiled itself in Regan's eyes. "However, according to our information, Mark and Mrs. Harmon have been seeing each other almost uninterruptedly for the past three weeks. They've dined, lunched, taken walks together. Mark has visited her at her apartment, and I've told you Bill's account of how he escorted her to Mark's door one night last week. Since then, we've learned that they have gone shopping together, sometimes taking Neddy with them." She anointed a pointed nail with a brushload of crimson. "Neddy is in bed by seven-thirty every night, after which the maid goes home and Mark and his female friend have the place to themselves. Aside from these details we know nothing! We may, as you just reminded me, be entirely mistaken. But if anyone knows what really goes on, Neddy does."

Hester pondered, then spoke in her tired, impersonal voice: "Wouldn't you get more out of Octavia Evans than out of Neddy? And wouldn't it be better, really, to question her than that child?"

"You're always so ethical!" sneered Regan. "The point is, I want Neddy. He's my son. Besides, tackling Octavia is out of the question. I don't trust her."

"You have in the past."

"No, never. And that's lucky, for it's my belief she's sold out to Mark."

"How can you be so sure?"

"I'm not sure of anything, least of all a servant's loyalty. Now that I think of it, Octavia has always been a bit too much on the superior side to be entirely safe. Since I walked out of the apartment I haven't got anywhere with her, though she's polite enough on the telephone. But then, so am I." She held up one hand, examining it critically. "In fact, I've been at some pains not to antagonize Octavia. We may need her for a witness one of these days."

When Hester remained silent, Regan went on:

"Octavia could have proved her loyalty to me by leaving Mark and bringing Neddy over here. I never suggested she do it—I had no intention of incriminating myself in the least degree. Neither Octavia nor Mark nor anyone else has anything on me. I have not written equivocal letters, and my communication with Mark, as you know, has been by telephone. Now it begins to look as if Dick Sparrow's technique is paying off, as if I really did have something on Mark!"

"Isn't it going a bit far, setting a detective to spy on him?"

"Don't call that poor creature a detective! He's just a down-and-out pal of Bill's. He's worked for Bill before, in an official capacity, and knows how to get round doormen, bellhops, waiters and so forth. For instance, it was he who found out that Mark and Stella have been dining together regularly at Philippe's on Third Avenue. It's an old dive of Bill's, and I took Mark there to supper on his first evening home from Europe. It's only by the sheerest luck that Bill and I haven't run into them there."

"You do seem to have the darnedest luck," agreed Hester. "Just the same, I think I'd rather trust to luck than resort to the services of that grubby character Bill has sleuthing for you."

"Grubby characters have their uses." Regan put down her brush and looked at her sister. "Listen, Mark could have spared us this nonsense if he'd acted like a grown man instead of a jealous vindictive one! If he'd been willing to let me get this divorce, we could have arranged something fair and friendly about Neddy—he knows that, I told him so. He knows that I'm through and that I never will go back to him. And that's why he's determined to make it as difficult for me as he knows how. What am I supposed to do? Sit back and let him spoil my life?"

"You could let him bring the divorce."

"How you love to simplify things! Does it occur to you that he may not want a divorce under any circumstances?"

"Well, what about Neddy?"

"What about him?"

"How is he going to take all this?"

"He'll take it the way thousands of kids take it."

"But what if he should prefer to stay with Mark?"

Regan shrugged. "I've told you what I intend to do. I intend to take him away from Mark right off quick—the minute the coast is clear I'm going to the apartment and take him away. I shall leave word with Octavia, or I'll call Mark on the telephone afterward and put it up to him. 'Play ball now,' I'll tell him, 'and when the divorce has gone through you can have Neddy back, no strings attached. Refuse, and you may never have him.'" She paused, meditating. "Of course the whole thing depends on what I can find out from Neddy."

"You told me once that Neddy could have no idea of what went on between you and Bill. What makes you think he'd know more about Mark and Mrs. Harmon?"

"Because I took darned good care Neddy shouldn't know anything. Mark and I have somewhat different temperaments."

"And you believe Neddy will tell you what, if anything, he does know?"

"He'll tell me. He's my son, and I understand him."

"Yes," Hester said slowly, "yes, you understand Neddy. You understand Mark too."

"Just what do you mean by that?"

"However, there's something none of us really understands, and that is the role of Mr. Dick Sparrow in all this."

The words brought a look of uneasiness to Regan's face. She had completed her manicure, and sat contemplating ten sharply pointed, blood-red fingernails.

"It's true," she admitted. "Just what is Dick Sparrow's role in all this? Has he a role, actually?"

"He's Bill's lawyer."

"And he is also, apparently, Mrs. Harmon's friend!"

Hester seemed to struggle, for a moment, with the desire to laugh. "His role may be quite innocent, of course. He may not know of Mrs. Harmon's friendship with Mark. He may be even more in the dark than the rest of us."

"It's what Bill thinks, but I confess I don't know what to make of it. She and the Sparrows are old friends. You'd think she would have confided in them." Regan examined the long curved claw of her left thumb. "And suppose she had confided in Dick Sparrow, wouldn't he naturally—inevitably, out of loyalty to her—wouldn't he do his utmost to shield her?"

Hester's smile was spectral. "From you and Bill?"

"From anybody!"

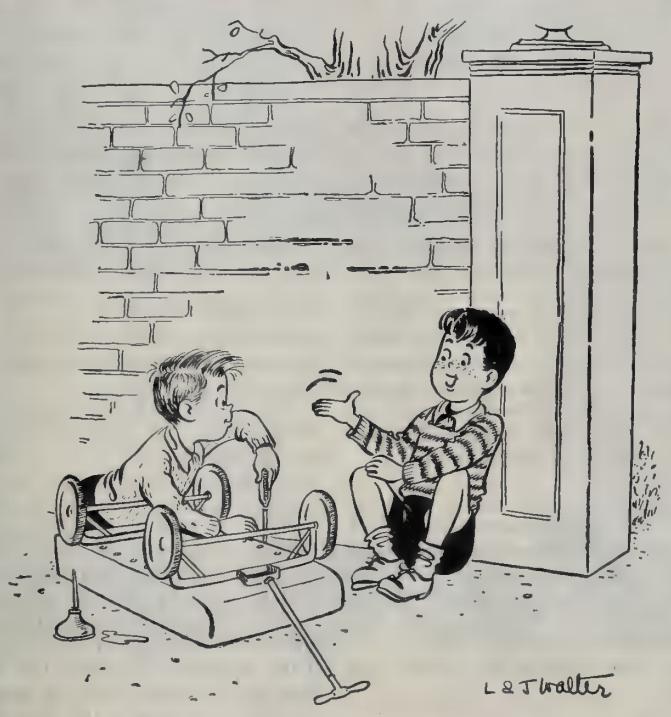
"While he continues to pose as Bill's legal adviser?"

"Oh, I know it sounds impossible." Regan rose and walked restlessly to the window. "What do we know about people, when you come right down to it? If we really knew what Mark's relations were with this woman, everything would be simple. We'd have something concrete to go on."

"Why not ask Sparrow?"

"I wanted to, but Bill's against it. He doesn't want to antagonize Dick, or even to embarrass him at this juncture."

"Of course," Hester said thoughtfully, "faced with divided loyalties, there is nothing Mr. Sparrow could do except abdicate from his role as Bill's lawyer—and perhaps even as his friend."



"I've thought of that." Her eyes had a smoky look, reminding the other of their childhood, when a frustrated Regan stood meditating vengeance. "There is just one thing to be done now, and that is for me to get hold of Neddy. Once I have Neddy, I shall be in a position to drive a bargain. Once I have Neddy, Mark will stand to lose everything, or to gain everything. After all, what do I care, really, whether he is in love with this woman or not? When I'm free to marry Bill, Mark can marry anyone he wants, and he can have Neddy for good measure. Can you see any flaw in that reasoning?"

"No," said Hester, looking at her curiously. "After all, it isn't as if you and Bill wanted Neddy yourselves. He'd be in your way—a child of six! No, I can't see any flaw in your reasoning. You've thought of everything."

Regan's face cleared and Hester, watching her, caught her breath. What can it feel like to be so lovely? she wondered. To be so filled with health and passion, so careless of the past, so ardent of the future?

Regan began to dress in a leisurely manner, picking out her underclothes, discarding one in favor of another, eying herself in the full-length mirror of the bathroom door, her scrutiny innocent of any doubt of anxiety about her appearance. She possessed a rare gift for

LITTLE GUY

"I've learned a lot from just watching my folks—things not to do, of course."

SOMETIMES it's mother-and-daughter, sometimes it's two sisters who just don't see alike or think alike in matters of grooming. . . . However, when it comes to Tampax (for sanitary protection) this interesting product can well appeal to both women even though their reasons are different.

Tampax discards the bulky external pad with belt. What does this mean to you? Freedom of action, sleek clothing and daintiness? Or efficiency, common sense and comfort? Tampax means any or all these things to its millions of users. . . . Based on a familiar medical principle Tampax was perfected by a doctor as an internal absorbent. Made of pure surgical cotton Tampax is compressed in applicators. The hands need never touch the Tampax and it is invisible and unfelt when in place.

Tampax can be worn in tub or shower, also in swimming. No chafing. No odor. No disposal trouble. A month's supply will slip into your purse—buy now for "next time." Sold at drug stores and notion counters in 3 absorbencies—Regular, Super, Junior. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

3 absorbencies { REGULAR SUPER JUNIOR

Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of the American Medical Association

TAMPAX INCORPORATED LHJ-66-N
Palmer, Mass.

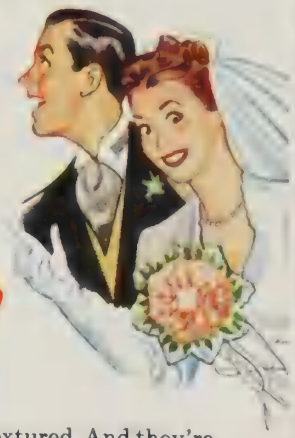
Please send me in plain wrapper a trial package of Tampax. I enclose 10¢ (stamps or silver) to cover cost of mailing. Size is checked below.

( ) REGULAR ( ) SUPER ( ) JUNIOR

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____



Butterscotch Royal "Sundae"

1 package Royal Butterscotch Pudding
2 cups milk
sliced banana ½ cup cream, whipped maraschino cherries

Mix luscious, golden Royal Butterscotch Pudding with milk. Cook as directed on package. (So easy a child can do it!) Remove from heat and cool, then place in sherbet glasses and chill. Just before serving garnish with whipped cream and top with slice of banana and maraschino cherry. Makes 4 servings . . . For another delicious "quickie" dessert, prepare Royal Chocolate Pudding by simple package directions and serve with cream or top milk.

"ROYAL PUDDINGS TASTE MORE DELICIOUS!"

—say 8 out of every 10

Survey of 1,052 Royal users reveals why millions are "Reaching for Royal"

"Taste more delicious!" they said. Just try Royal Puddings and you'll say so, too. They're so smooth, rich-tasting, creamy-textured. And they're still made the famous Royal way. Sweetened just right—no need to add sugar! You'll love Royal Gelatin Desserts, too, with their luscious, fruit-like flavors! Yes, always get Royal!

LOOK!
ROYAL PUDDINGS IN BRIGHT NEW PACKAGES!

A gay new dress—but inside the package, the same wonderful Royal Puddings you love, the same fine flavors. Dainty, delicate vanilla . . . rich, luscious chocolate . . . mellow, old-time butterscotch. Try all 3.

simplicity, yet though art was far less essential to the enhancement of her beauty than it is for other women, she gave much time and care to her toilette, moving with an objectivity which Hester had learned to recognize as the hallmark of true self infatuation.

I wonder what you'll be like when you're old, thought Hester as she watched the ritual. When those beautiful breasts have lost their roundness, that throat its texture, that glittering black hair its ebony vigor, that mind its power to deceive and to exploit not only its enemies, but its lovers and itself? No flabbiness for you, my dear. You will never flounder into old age, transferring your appetites to canapé's at cocktail time, and midmorning snacks. And in her mind's eye she saw the radiant figure of her sister dematerialize into a witchlike sharpness, the nose curved like a hawk's, the flesh turned leathery, the mouth a bitter line under cold, preying eyes. What happens when there are no further triumphs, no more lovers, no more tomorrows worth waiting for? As for me, I shall be dead by then. I hope so. I have known what it is to be the victim of your beauty; I would not care to be its last crumb!

While she was dressing Regan outlined her campaign to the wan listener among the pillows. "I'm going, now, to Bill's apartment. From there we'll get someone to call Mark's number and find out whether he's home. If he should be, I'll have to wait and try later in the day, or even tomorrow or the day after. I don't want to run the risk of finding him and letting myself in for a fight, and the possible ruin of my plans. If Mark is not home, I'll try to make sure that Neddy is. Octavia I know how to handle. After all, she has no authority when I am present. I'll go straight to the apartment and bring Neddy away—to Bill's place, where Mark won't think of looking for him. What will happen, of course, is that he'll try to get hold of me here by phone or in person. That's where you come in."

"I'd rather not. I don't want any hand in this, Regan. It's your affair, not mine."

"When has anything been my affair and not yours? I've always told you things. I've always tried to share my life with you, whenever and wherever possible. As for having a hand in this business—which concerns the whole of my future life and happiness—you don't have to have a hand in it, if you'd rather not, nor even a voice. If you feel you can't put Mark off my trail with a lie, then don't answer the telephone. Let it ring! And if he should follow it up by coming here, don't answer the doorbell."

"But I shall feel like a prisoner!"

"Just for a few hours? I'll be back here tonight."

"WILL you?" She looked desperately at her sister. "Promise, Regan? I feel so darned weak—and the maid is no company, nor much use when I feel an attack coming on. I get so scared, not being able to breathe."

"I promise I'll come back tonight," said Regan with sudden, crisp good humor. She pinned a hat composed entirely of gardenias on her dark hair, and selected a pair of white gloves from the bureau drawer. She might have been on her way to one of her women's-club luncheons. A woman of action, thought Hester despairingly. She knows what she's doing, she never would make a false step or allow herself to be tripped by another's.

"Regan——"

Regan turned from the mirror. She was picking a tiny gold label from a handkerchief, one of the dozen which Symes had brought her from Lisbon. "What is it, Hester? Now don't go and give yourself another attack! I'm not asking much—I'm not even asking you to lie for my sake, if you'd prefer not to."

"Regan, listen—listen to me. I don't want to preach ——"

"Then don't!"

"Listen, Regan!" Hester propped herself on her elbow, a feverish color burning in her cheeks. "Regan, don't take Neddy away from Mark. Go to him—go to Mark and tell him about Bill Symes. Mark is decent, he's always been decent. Regan, after four years of war can you do this to him?" Breathless from her effort, she sank back on the pillows.

For a moment Regan looked at her in silence; then she said, "Four years of war! That old blackmail. And from you! The war is over, my dear, and none of us has much time left in which to enjoy life." She came to the bedside, stooped and kissed her sister on the forehead. "Don't take things so hard, Hester. I know Mark better than you know him. He's still in love with me. That's the trouble. No matter how many women he may play around with, he's in love with me. That's why I can't tell him about Bill."

HESTER watched her walk to the door, where she turned, a graceful and exquisite figure.

"Now don't worry! If the phone rings and you think you can cope with Mark, go ahead. Tell him anything, any lie that comes into your head. Tell him I've gone to the country without leaving an address. Tell him you've been deathly ill and know nothing of my activities. If, as you say, he's so decent, he won't persist in troubling you. But if you're not equal to it, then just let the phone ring. I shall be back tonight, after dinner. I promise."

She waved, and Hester watched the door close upon her. She heard the soft rumble of the elevator and pictured the slight, purposeful figure as it stepped into the summer rain. Blindly, Hester turned and reached for the telephone. She dialed a number, her mind in a fury of excitement through which there burned a single, selfless intention.

Mark's voice answered: "Yes?"

Hester held the receiver to her ear. Her heart was beating as it did when she had had an injection of adrenalin, but no sound came from her lips. Four lives—the words leaped like living things across her gaze. Four lives are in my hand—four destinies and all their unforeseeable events depend, now, on me, on my word, on my intervention, upon me, who have never taken action in my life; upon me whose mere existence has never cast a shadow nor roused an echo in the void.

"Hullo? This is Colonel Bycroft."

The sense of his proximity overwhelmed her. She could hear the intake of his breath, faint sounds as he shifted some object on the table, fainter, farther sounds from the room where he stood. Warning, saving words dissolved in her mouth. Then Mark hung up, and she let the receiver fall on her lap. Silence settled on the room. The rain had ceased, a wan glow filled the sky. Hester coughed, her eyes dilated, she coughed again and felt the first demon stir in her chest. Slowly she got out of bed. Her limbs felt hollow like the bones of a bird as they bore her guilty body toward the window, beyond which the sky was slowly pushing through the mist. She stared at the silvery reaches of the river and the distant Jersey shore, then her gaze descended to the trees which lined the street below, and she pursued, with the wondering gaze of a captive, the gay colors of busses and automobiles. There, before her defrauded eyes, creation moved upon its destined way—survivors of catastrophe, while she was merely the inheritor.

"I've always told you things," she heard Regan saying. "I've always tried to share my life with you."

It was true. All the guilt, the scheming the restless self-seeking, the deceits and hypocrisy; the countless confidences and confessions, orgies of repentance without expiation—these had been Hester's share of that life. Out of this she was expected to make sense and to fashion, somehow, a moral and a reason. What is the bond which ties us to our brothers and sisters? Is it blood? The flesh of our parents? Is it the memory of all the dead persisting in us? Yes, Regan had shared everything with Hester. Regan had more than shared—she had rendered up the evil in herself and placed it in Hester's lap

(Continued on Page 64)

It is a great error to take oneself for more than one is, or for less than one is worth.

—From Maxims and Reflections of Goethe, Translated by Bailey Saunders. (Published by the Macmillan Company)

It costs no more to get the one with

TENDER BEEF ADDED!

ASK FOR SWIFT'S Prem

YOU'LL LIKE THE BETTER FLAVOR! Good pork is delicious. So is good beef. But they're even better when combined as they are in Prem. As soon as you taste it, you'll agree that the combination is supremely tempting and savory.

YOU'LL LIKE THE BETTER NUTRITION! Both beef and pork provide vital food elements, but not in the same proportions for each type. That's why Prem provides better nutrition. You get the benefits of both meats and that means plenty of high-quality proteins, important minerals, and B complex vitamins.

YOU'LL LIKE THE BETTER TEXTURE! Prem is firm and solid, delightfully tender and juicy. Served hot or cold, it slices cleanly and evenly.

3 TO 1 PREFER BEEF ADDED!

Tender, flavorful beef has been added to Prem because American homemakers wanted it . . . by better than 3 to 1! From their own cooking experience, they know that the combination of beef and pork produces a better-flavored loaf. So try Prem soon. See how different it is. See how much better you like it.

A SWIFT QUALITY FOOD

IT'S Swift's . . . SAY Prem!

Decorate your home inexpensively and easily with these charming

MEYERCORD DECALS

No paste...no muss...you simply dip Meyercord Decals in water and apply. Dozens of colorful new designs at your local dealer, now, for baths, kitchens, nurseries...for furniture and accessories too. They're sunfast, washable. Only 10 and 20c at 5&10, Department, Paint, Hardware, Variety and Chain Stores.

See the complete Meyercord Decal display showing dozens of actual samples of Decals in striking full color at your local dealer.

©1946, Meyercord Co.

THE MEYERCORD CO.

World's Largest Manufacturer of Decals, General Offices, Chicago 44; In Canada: Can. Decal Co., Toronto

(Continued from Page 62)

It began in early childhood when one, always sickly, lay watching with envious eyes the other's radiant unfolding. Under this vigil Hester had faded year by year, reduced at last to a shadowy mirror in whose tarnished eye the beautiful sister studied her own resplendent destiny.

XXVI

The storm passed out to sea. In the florists' shops marigolds burned a fiercer gold, and Atlas, straining his sinews, waited the hour when he might hurl the burden from his shoulders and stand erect once more; across the avenue, a threadbare St. Francis crept forth from the cathedral to feed the pigeons in defiance of municipal law.

But the storm which had been rising in Octavia Evans did not pass with the emerging sun; it smoldered in her dark body, stooped like Atlas under an imponderable burden.

In the eyes of her own flesh and blood Octavia was just a stupid woman, resigned to her debased condition and faithful to an ideal which had waited a long time for realization. Since there never had been anything else for her to cling to, she had clung stubbornly to the mythology of the white world. She needed to believe in a paramount virtue, so she believed, and buried her doubts, if she had any, very deep indeed. Mark had appeared in time to vindicate her faith, and what she felt for him was not less veneration than love. She would have died for him. She was accustomed to the genial condescension of white employers, and resigned to the attitudes and falsities which had driven her son Edgar to extremes of cynicism. But in Mark Octavia believed that she had discovered the complete human being, a human heart which had rejected all the jailbird fixations of his kind. In other words, Mark made her feel at home, and to feel at home, as Octavia well knew, is to be as near to God as one ever gets. It was not demanded of her that she die for Mark, but she felt that it was expected of her that she guard him from the catastrophe which she sensed as threatening him from every side.

Octavia was familiar with catastrophe in one form or another; suspicion rose in her as naturally as trust arises in the more fortunate. There had been a morning when, reading murder in Mark's face, she had moved swiftly to divert him. Later, in urging him to surrender Neddy, she had done so because she believed in his eventual triumph. She knew, as Mark did not, how little the child mattered to his mother, and how quickly Regan would be bound to tire of the responsibility once she had her way. But now it seemed that Mark was threatened from another quarter. Octavia's suspicions were aroused on the day of Stella's first visit to the apartment, following Mark's casual account of his meeting with her at Philippe's. Octavia had listened to that account with a polite incredulity. It just didn't make sense, or else it made a peculiarly nasty kind of sense, for even if one were to take into account a man's natural craving for feminine companionship, could he be fool enough to fall for such a fantastic lie? True, Stella's appearance did not accord with Octavia's suspicions, for Stella was gentle, even ingratiating. But that, Octavia decided grimly, is because she knows I see through her. I ought to—I've seen through enough of her sort, and smarter ones than her.

As the weeks marched forward and she watched the friendship between her idol and the interloper grow and prosper, Octavia curbed her more elemental feelings and set to thinking. Though the pair were constantly in each other's company, she guessed that they were not yet lovers. Had they been, she must have come to accept the romantic inevitable; but the fact that they were not—of this she was reasonably certain—caused her to revise her grosser estimate of Stella in favor of one even more sinister. And when the talk started about a house in the country, a house to which the deluded man dreamed of transporting himself and his son, with Mrs. Harmon in the role of benefactress, Octavia's mistrust crystallized into dreadful certainty.

"In the Home" CLEANING SERVICE

For your CARPETS, RUGS AND UPHOLSTERY

Duracleaning PROLONGS LIFE

. . . yes, your floor coverings and upholstery will last longer after Duracleaning. Acid (deposited from smoke) and perspiration are removed. Embedded grit is taken out. Fibers are re-enlivened.

This scientific process cleans the finest fabrics . . . even delicate antiques . . . with a new degree of safety. The service is rendered, without inconvenience, in your own home where you can see the care given each article.

YOU'LL LIKE THESE FEATURES:

- NEW LIFE: Resilience is restored to wool fibers. Pile unmats . . . rises.
- COLORS: Color tones reappear . . . unless badly sun faded.
- SAFETY: No scrubbing . . . no shrinkage. No mildew or "dry rot" from soaking. Twisted pile retains the twist. Rug sizings not disturbed.
- CONVENIENCE: Furnishings not marred from truck handling. Cleaned by professional Duracleaners in your home. Use again same day.

Duraproofing makes fabrics and rugs resistant to moths and carpet beetles for 4 years. The cost is far less per year than moth sprays applied annually by yourself.

MAIL THE COUPON TODAY.
It will be forwarded to a Duraclean dealer in your town.

Duraclean
DEALERS OF AMERICA
L-646 DURACLEAN BLDG., DEERFIELD, ILL.

☐ Tell us more about your services.
☐ We would like estimate on Duracleaning.
☐ We would like estimate on Duraproofing.

Name.....
Address.....
Town..... State.....

KEEP IT NEW.. Duraclean

LIN-X
Self-Polishing
WAX
IS ANTI-SLIP
EVEN WHEN WET!

HERE'S the wax you've been waiting for—LIN-X Self-Polishing WAX—it's anti-slip, even when water is spilled on it—proved by Underwriters' Laboratories!

And all you do is just wipe it on! It dries in 20 minutes to a hard, lustrous, real-wax finish that's a joy to behold. It protects and it beautifies.

Only 59¢ pt. 98¢ qt.

LIN-X CREAM POLISH

POLISHES BONE-DRY!

Cleans as it polishes. Lin-x Cream Polish restores beauty to fine furniture without tiresome rubbing. It's non-oily—resists finger marks—polishes to a hard, waxy, gleaming surface.

Only 69¢ pt.

LIN-X CLEAR-GLOSS

RESISTS BOILING WATER!

For linoleum and all wood surfaces. Resists boiling water, sizzling grease, fruit juices, perfume, even alcohol. Easy to use. Easy to clean. "Just brush it on!"

Only 95¢ pt. $1.70 qt.

TODAY!
GET THESE GREAT

Lin-x

Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Home Brighteners

Made by the Makers of *Kem-Tone

The Miracle Wall Finish

Here was a trap vile and cunning to its last detail, devised by Regan and Stella. To what purpose? Simply to put the colonel on the spot. Once on the spot, they'd have him; Mrs. Bycroft would have him as she would have Neddy—cold.

As the diabolical scheme unfolded in Octavia's brain she set to inventing frantic counterplots to save Mark. I must tell him, she exhorted herself every morning as she boarded the subway on her way to work, and every evening when she rode back to Harlem. I must put him on his guard against this Stella woman before she, too, betrays him. He would not stand another betrayal; and Octavia sweated as she recalled the look on his face the day that his wife left him. She found herself reliving the anguish which had followed Edgar's desertion of his wife, and experiencing all over again the nightmares of denial, denunciation, divorce. Yet how put Colonel Bycroft on his guard? Phrase after phrase rose to her lips and died there. That she must, sooner or later, speak out and save him, no matter at what cost, she was sure. But in the meantime her vigilance became a morose, even morbid thing, proof against Mark's new-found gaiety, against the pathos of Neddy, against Stella's conciliatory manner.

Coming to work one morning, Octavia noticed a man strolling slowly past the apartment-house door. His leisurely gait, belied by a queer alertness of the eyes, struck her at once. He was there again next day, and the next. Thereafter she saw him often, walking aimlessly with hands in his pockets, his eyes sliding to and fro under the rim of his hat. Of course, there was every possibility she might be mistaken in her fears, but she could not put the ubiquitous stranger out of her mind, and one morning she spoke of him to Mark.

---

It is very easy to criticize other people's modes of dealing with their children. Outside observers see results: parents see processes. To be a parent is almost to be a fatalist.

—OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES:
From Day to Day With Oliver Wendell Holmes.

---

Neddy was in bed with a cold and Mark was eating breakfast alone.

Octavia, who had just come up from the street, glanced at him uncertainly, then said, "Have you any enemies, Colonel Bycroft?"

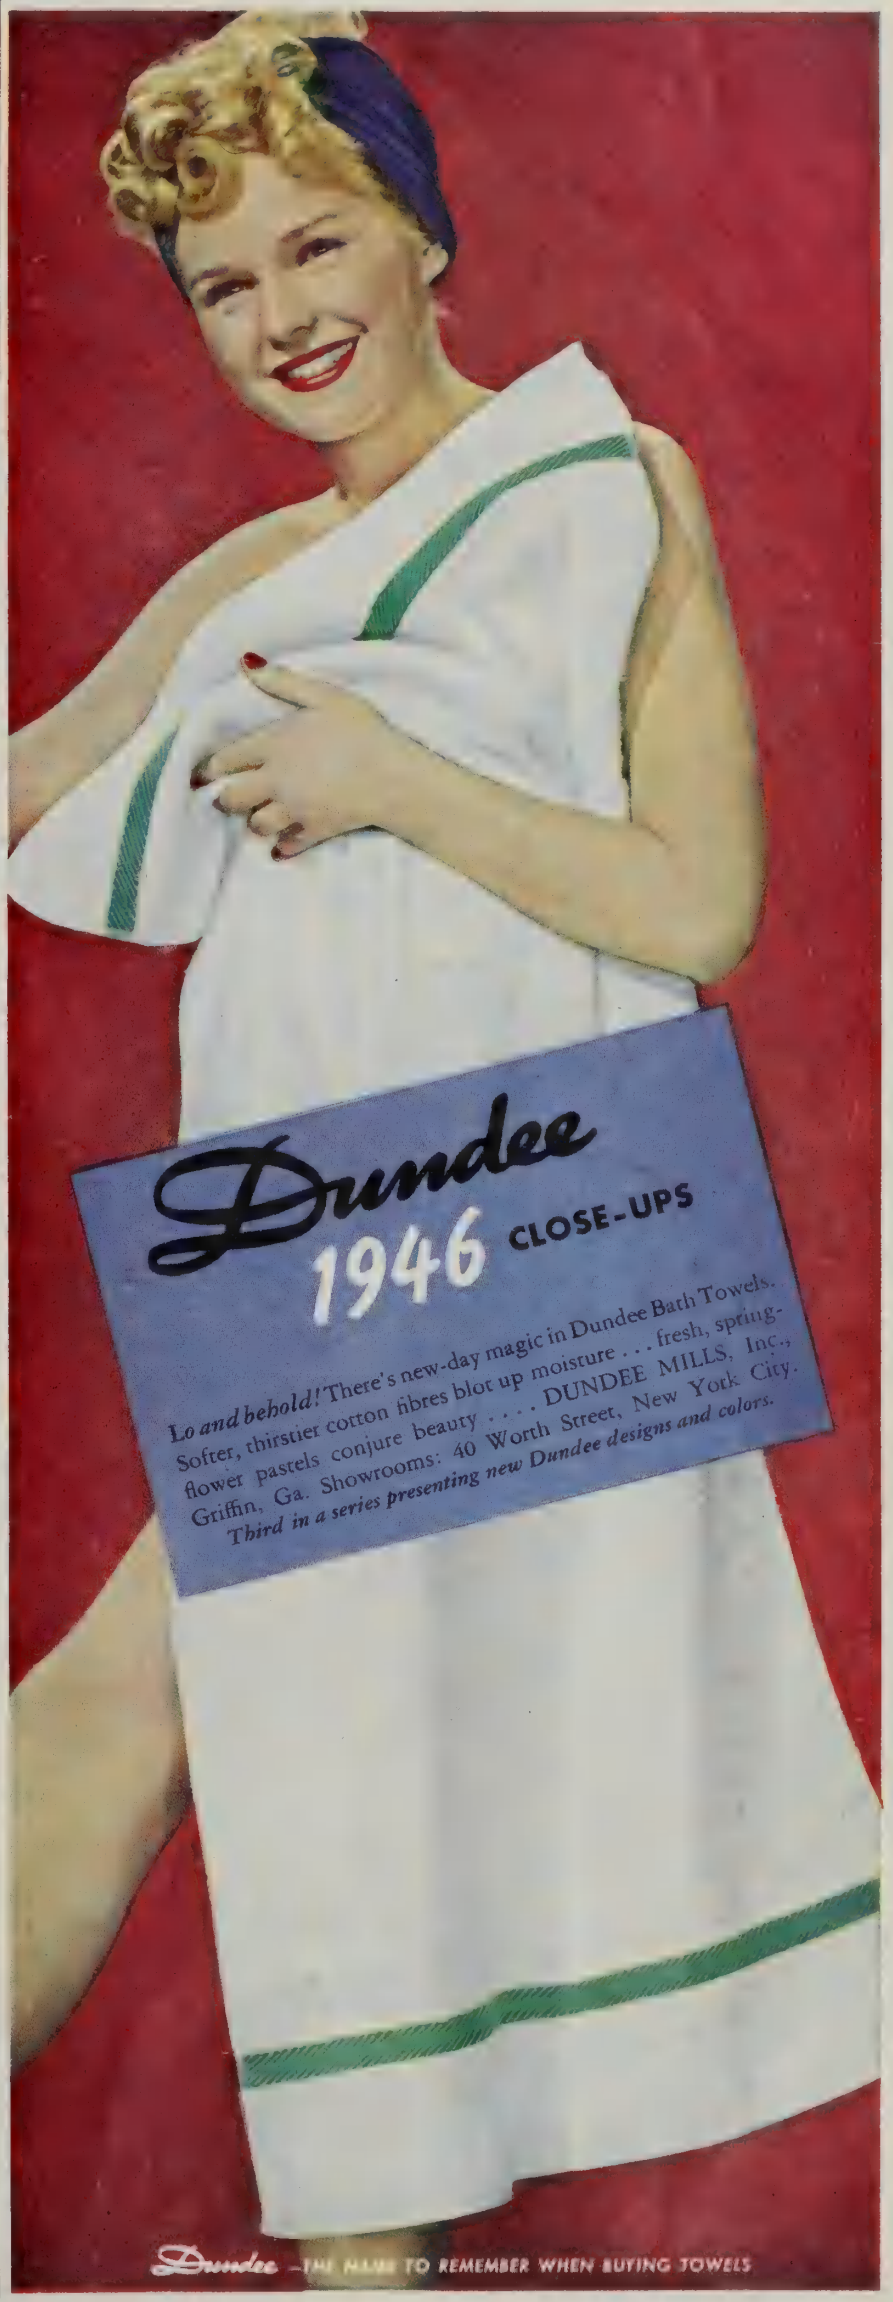
"Enemies? Why do you ask?"

She went to the window and looked out. "Would that be one of them?"

Mark followed and peered over her shoulder. The stranger was strolling along on the opposite side of the street, apparently oblivious of scrutiny from the upper windows. "Never saw the guy in my life," said Mark. He laughed. "Octavia!"

"You can laugh, but he's been there off and on for the past four or five days."

"Persistent animal. He must like the rain."



"Maybe he's paid to like it."

"Well, I can't think of anyone who'd pay him to like it on my account."

Mark went back to the table and finished his coffee. A letter from the War Department lay beside his plate. Presently he would telephone Stella and suggest that they dine together to celebrate his imminent discharge from the Army, and next week he would go to Jarley to look at the house. He might even offer to buy it, and that would be the beginning—the beginning of something. He was still not prepared to say the beginning of what, for the emotion which stirred him was unnamable and fragile. He found himself treating it with reserve, careful to exclude all dangerous elements. The thought of Regan was one element, thoughts of his undivorced condition another.

Octavia hovered near the table. "A man telephoned you yesterday. He didn't give his name, nor leave any message."

"Well, he'll probably call again if it's important." Mark tapped the letter. "See this missive, Octavia? My passport to civilian life." He frowned. "I wonder what happened to my civilian clothes?"

POUR IT OFTEN AT YOUR HOUSE!

Libby's TWICE-RICH* Tomato Juice

"Mrs. Bycroft would know."

"I suppose she would."

But he wouldn't call her up to find out. He wouldn't ever call her up again, about anything. Let there be silence between them from now on, silence between himself and the lost years and the lost hope and the lost love. The world might collapse tomorrow, atomic death finish, once for all, the past, the present and the future. What was he supposed to do about that? Forgive and forget while there was still time? Cast his vote in the next election? He glanced at the letter. Well, he had done his share in the general destruction and they had given him a medal—several medals. Things were about even, and at this moment he was prepared to cast his vote for private life, for the house in Jarley, for marsh grass and the look of a clean sea, and for whatever else might be left of his normal span of threescore years and ten.

Octavia looked out the window. "He's crossed the street," she said. "He's walking past our door."

"Shall we fill a paper bag with water?"

She turned, frowning, and he stopped her.

"What's bothering you, Octavia? Why not tell me? I might be able to help."

"It isn't me needs the help."

"Your son, then? Someone you care for?"

Here was her chance, but she could not bring herself to utter the words she had rehearsed so carefully: "Maybe it's all right for you to joke. Maybe the man down there means no harm. Maybe Mrs. Harmon is a true friend after all, and maybe I'm as wrong about her as about everything else. But you forget you're on the spot. You forget you're standing in somebody's way, somebody who would never hesitate to hurt you." How silly the words seemed when they were considered like this, and how terrible if she were to say them and he should resent her doing so! He seemed so stalwart, so more than equal to a situation. Who was she to presume he needed her advice, her feeble, stumbling assistance? He might even scorn her as Edgar scorned her for being a superstitious old black woman relying on her instincts, smelling enemies at every corner.

Mark said gently, "You know I'd be glad to help you, Octavia."

She nodded, and the nod ended in a shiver. "Thank you. But it isn't anything very serious."

SHE left the room and Mark heard her moving about the kitchen, setting her small world of pots and pans in its customary order. Then he went to the window, but the anonymous figure had disappeared in a squall of rain and blowing newspapers. Mark stood for a moment watching the rain fall into the street, and longing rose in him, longing for the look of rain falling across fields, falling into the ocean, falling across the purple shoulders of a hill. This longing cleansed the past of bitterness, and mingled with gratitude and tenderness for Stella. He meditated on the evening they would spend together, and on the peculiarities of their relationship. His desire for her was quite unlike the emotion he had always felt for Regan. He did not want to feel an identical emotion toward Stella, for his life with Regan had been unique, and his unwillingness to repeat the experience with another woman was more than a romantic loyalty to the past—it was based on necessity, the basis of most of our loyalties, the necessity to believe in the rightness, the singleness of our choice. He realized that Stella loved him, and there were moments when he rejoiced in the knowledge, yet whenever he seriously contemplated her, desire expired in him.

He heard Neddy calling from the bedroom, and went in to read to the child, and to discuss all over again their plans and prospects for life at Jarley. For the first time since his home-coming Mark felt that he had a share in his son's existence; mutual vision of the future drew them together, warming the boy toward the father, breaking down the barriers of shyness and mistrust.

Toward evening the rain stopped and he heard the telephone ringing. It was Hester, but he did not know it, and after waiting a minute or two for some sign of life at the other end of the wire, he hung up in disgust. Four lives, Hester was thinking—four destinies and all their unforeseeable events depend now, on me, on my word, on my intervention. But she remained silent, and an hour later Mark stopped at a florist's and bought flowers for Stella.

COMING out on the street carrying a paper cornucopia, he felt young and elated. The air was cool, and women's dresses blew round them in a progressive ballet which entertained him as he walked. The look on his face won him a smile or two; he responded gallantly, seeing himself as a late arrival to the celebration, still wearing his uniform with its bars and eagles. He wondered again about his civilian clothes, and decided that he must invest in a new outfit. Homespun gray flannel, corduroy, dungarees and work shirts. The trappings of freedom!

A gentleman entered a certain church. No one spoke to him. To judge by the attention of the congregation, he was a stranger. No friendly smiles or nods. It was only when he proceeded up the aisle wearing his hat that they did begin to notice him. To everyone's astonishment he seated himself near the front, with the hat still on his head. It was then that a sidesman stepped up to him and said, "Pardon me, but you have your hat on." Smiling, the stranger rose, at the same time removing his hat. "Thank you," he said. "I have been attending this church for ten years and you are the first person to speak to me in all that time—thank you, indeed." He settled back in his seat, a smile on his face.

Toronto Star: quoted in Religious Digest.

A last beam of sun struck the tops of buildings. The Hotel Rotterdam, spangled like a ballerina, beckoned him from the distance, and he felt a sudden letdown of elation. That place! Those walls covered with chromatic ringworm, that blasted elevator! And Perry, poor Perry! Where was he now? Back in God's country, posturing before a picture-post-card sunset, the war behind him, his doubts resolved, the future all rosy-red sand, flowering cacti, domestic bliss, prosperity and Gila monsters. And General Wilmer, where was he? General Wilmer, who had muffed the capture of one square mile of enemy territory, then gave it as his opinion that "we" should forthwith embark on a conquest of the world. Where were the boys who died because of General Wilmer's mistakes?

And where, at this moment, was Mr. William Symes? Mark gripped the paper of flowers a trifle harder, felt a thorn pierce his finger. Changing the flowers to his other hand he sucked the wound and walked faster to get away from the thought of Symes. Wherever he went he seemed to meet that figure disguised as echo.

Stella opened the door and he took her in his arms. "We're going out to dinner and drink bubbly all evening long. I'm out of the Army, and I've brought you some flowers."

He knew there was something false in his boyishness, but felt that it must do for the present, to tide him over certain private uncertainties. As she stood in the circle of his arms her face seemed to swim up to him like a face seen under water. He was conscious of the desire which flooded her, conscious that it ebbed again before his insincerity. He glanced round him at the room which always affected him rather dismally, as if no one lived here. She seemed so much a person who should be with others that the fact that she lived alone, that she was actually alone, always surprised him. There was a nunnery air to the place, and to her in it.

She took the flowers out of their paper and holding them against her dress, which was of some indefinite blue, she moved to the pantry, and he followed her. Light showered on her head, glittered and died there and o

(Continued on Page 68)

It's true! Crisco makes LIGHTER, RICHER CAKES!

1

CRISCO CHERRY TOP SPICE CAKE

Now—better cakes on every count! Lighter—richer—moister—finer texture. But note that this new-method recipe calls for cake flour—should not be used with emergency flour.

Measure into mixing bowl:

2 cups cake flour (sifted before measuring)
1 cup sugar • ½ cup Crisco
1 tsp. salt • 1 tsp. cinnamon
½ tsp. cloves • ¼ tsp. nutmeg
¼ tsp. allspice • ¼ tsp. soda
½ cup milk • ¼ cup molasses

Stir vigorously by hand or with mixer (medium speed) 2 minutes. Now stir in (yes, all by itself):

2 tsps. baking powder

Add: 2 eggs (unbeaten) • ⅓ cup milk

Blend by hand or in mixer (medium speed) 2 minutes. Pour into pan (8" x 12"), rubbed with Crisco and lined with waxed paper. Bake in moderate oven (375° F.) 30–35 minutes. Crisco has a baking secret. With Crisco—only with Crisco—we promise you a better cake all 'round from this recipe! Frost top of cake with fluffy white icing. Decorate with rows of cherries. Use citron or green gum drops for cherry stems. All Measurements Level.

Double-action or phosphate type (Calumet, Davis, Rumford, Clabber Girl, KC, etc.). With tartrate type (Royal, etc.) use 3 tsps.*

Parties are bustin' out all over since this good news got around . . .

Crisco improves all 3

Cakes, Pies, Fried Foods

It's a Fact! With Crisco, FLAKY PIE CRUST EVERY TIME!

2

CRISCO CHERRY TARTS

2 cups pitted sour red cherries
½ cup red cherry juice
⅓ cup sugar
4 tsps. quick-cooking tapioca
1 tsp. lemon juice
Full recipe Crisco Pastry

Line 5 or 6 tart shells or muffin pans with Crisco Pastry, rolled thin. (Now it's a cinch to get flaky, tender pie crust every single time! You just can't miss if you're sure to use Crisco and follow the easy Pastry Method on the Crisco label!) Combine cherries, cherry juice, sugar and tapioca in saucepan; bring slowly to a boil. Remove from stove. Add lemon juice and let cool. Pour into unbaked shells. Top with pastry strips. Bake in hot oven (425° F.) for 10 minutes; reduce to moderate (375° F.) and bake from 25 to 30 minutes. All Measurements Level.

What a Find! Crisco for LIGHT, DIGESTIBLE FRIED FOODS!

3

CRISCO HAM 'N' YAM BURGERS

2 cups canned sweet potatoes, mashed
1½ cups ground cooked ham
4 tbsps. brown sugar
1 tsp. dry mustard
3 tbsps. milk
1 tsp. salt
¼ tsp. pepper

Mix all ingredients thoroughly. Shape into flat croquettes (makes about 8). Coat with crushed cereal flakes. Slowly pan-fry in hot Crisco till golden brown. (Foods fried in pure, all-vegetable Crisco, not only taste better—they're so digestible even children may eat 'em.) All Measurements Level. Serves 4–6.

CRISCO COOK BOOK—Send 10¢ in coin and ■ Crisco label (any size) to Crisco, Dept. HJ, Box 837, Cincinnati 1, Ohio, for the 64-page "Recipes for Good Eating." Offer good in U. S., including Hawaii.

Crisco is America's Largest-Selling Vegetable Shortening—IT'S DIGESTIBLE!

Copyright 1946 by The Drackett Company

Don't take health chances! Don't let your drains stop up or harbor dirty Sewer Germs! Use Drāno regularly. Keep your drains free-running—free of Sewer Germs.

Never over 25¢ at grocery, drug, and hardware stores.

Drāno

T.M. Reg. U.S. Pat. Off. by The Drackett Co.

OPENS CLOGGED DRAINS
CLEARS OUT SEWER GERMS

Drāno makes septic tanks work better—cuts down odors

(Continued from Page 66)

the small pearls in her ears. He watched while she arranged the flowers in a vase; the look of her pale arms, and of her hands, hovering among the flowers, crept into him, drying his mouth.

"They are lovely," she murmured. "Lovely!"

She turned to pass him, and he took the vase from her and set it on a shelf, then drew her toward him. "Stella, do you—can you understand?"

"I think so." She put her hands on either side of his face, closing her eyes.

"Well, down at Jarley, maybe." He held her against him, then released her, then brought her back. Her warmth was all about him, with the scent of flowers and the stillness. "Away from the city, where everybody is a reflection of everybody else." Her hair was exactly like a coin, precious from the centuries. He ached with feelings he could not name. Why couldn't he love her? It had been so easy with Regan, so incredibly easy. Why couldn't he adore this woman whose body rested against his own, as if hers and no other had ever rested there?

They left the apartment, and out on the dimming streets his alien mood returned. He talked with a fluency he detested but could not restrain, telling her funny stories, recounting some of the amusing incidents of his war experience. He saw that she was playing up to him, matching him laugh for laugh, her eyes blithe, her arm thrust lightly through his.

Percy Grainger once went to great pains to explain to Duke Ellington that the Duke's hot music revealed the influence of Delius. For the rest of the evening the Duke was glum.

"What's the matter, Duke?" a friend asked.

The Duke growled, "He said I was influenced by Delius."

"But that's no crime," the friend told him; "every great composer is influenced by other great composers."

"It's not that," explained the Duke; "it's just that I never heard of Delius."

—DAVID EWEN:
Listen to the Mocking Words (Arco Pub. Co.).

So one tries to recapture the old spirit, he thought with inward bitterness. Soldiers, artists live a wholly different kind of life: they are concerned with ends and with beginnings, but we, we others exist between the two, passing from fever to fever in a waste of futility.

They had dinner at the Lafayette Café, where they toasted Mark's freedom in champagne.

"I should have brought you gardenias," he said. "Gardenias, or maybe orchids, to go with this stuff." He lifted his glass. "And a black lace nightie with pink ribbons."

"Not pink ribbons!"

They carried on the banter, and his heart sank lower and lower. He ordered rich and expensive food and more champagne, and gazed at her caressingly over his glass. She had ceased to move him, and the less he cared the more he exerted himself to be amusing, his stories getting dirtier, his voice coarser, his laughter less convincing. Meeting her glance, he read tenderness quickly veiled, and thought with a flash of temper, She's being understanding. But where is all this going to end? What happens when I take her home? And how long has it been since I took a woman home? He frowned, trying to remember. A year? Hardly that long. Where? Brussels? Munich? Did it matter? They had all been substitutes for Regan, and he was tired of substitutes, and Regan was tired of him.

"What's on your mind?" she asked him.

He told her, and watched the painful color rise in her cheeks. "Well?" he insisted. "What about it, Stella?"

"Of course."

"Of course?"

WILLETT Golden Beryl MAPLE

HOME should be BEAUTIFUL

. . . and that's why Golden Beryl Maple deserves a place of prominence in your home. You too, will find lasting satisfaction in its colorful charm. Ask to see it at your dealers.

CONSIDER H. WILLETT, INC.
LOUISVILLE 11, KENTUCKY
Also makers of authentic reproductions in Wildwood Cherry

DOES YOUR DOG ITCH? SCRATCH?
DON'T BLAME FLEAS ... MANGE ... DIET

If your dog or cat itches scratches continually, it's probably not due to fleas, mange or diet. 2 to 1, it's FUNGITCH, grass-borne fungus infection long a puzzle to science. It starts as an itch followed by dandruff-like scales or brownish-edged sores with mouldy odor. May start in ears, on paws, underbody, tail or eyes. Can have serious results—costly care—even total loss. Now a noted specialist's discovery—Dr. Merrick's SULFODENE—applied externally, stops itching in minutes, clears up scales and sores in a few days. Only $1.00 at stores or order direct. Money back guarantee. Address SULFODENE, Box F-166, BROOKFIELD, ILL.

Dr. MERRICK'S SULFODENE

WHIZOOKA WINNIE SAYS:

WHIZOOKA ROACH GUN — a wartime development, with D.D.T. added — makes short work of killing roaches, ants, bedbugs, silverfish. Comes fully loaded, ready for safe, sure, instant action. Only $1.00 at your store. R. M. Hollingshead Corp., Camden, N. J.

Roley Poley
customette
Slip Covers

Ready-made for Custom-fit

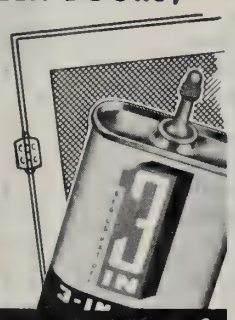
Luxury at low cost! Smartly styled slip covers with the fit and quality of finest custom-mades. Tailored the exclusive, patented Customette way . . . fully adjustable, beautifully finished in back as well as in front. The slip cover with matching drapes pictured above, a pre-shrunk, "selected vats" pattern is but one of the many new Roley Poley Customettes now becoming available at leading stores.

EXCLUSIVE CONSTRUCTION makes Customettes fully adjustable for perfect fit. Easier on and off.

Made for most styles of chairs, sofas, studio couches.

Roley Poley Mfg. Co., Chicago 10

AT BETTER DEPARTMENT STORES



SQUEAKING Hinges..
ON SCREEN DOORS!

3-IN-ONE lubricates and prevents rust.

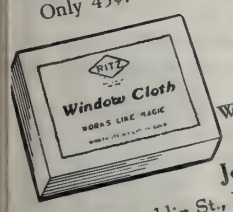
Dozens of other household uses.

On sale everywhere in 1 and 3 ounce cans.



Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

3-IN-ONE Oil

MAKE MIRRORS—WINDSHIELDS-WINDOWS SPARKLE IN NO TIME . . .

Just dampen Ritz chemically-treated cloth. Wipe crystal-clear instantly. Dirt, dust-film, fingerprints gone—at once. Positively leaves no smudge. No chamois, soap or "elbow-grease" needed. Time-tested, home-tested for over 20 years. Ask for Ritz Cloths today. At better housefurnishing and linen departments, hardware, grocery stores and gift shops. Only 45¢. Or write . . .

RITZ WINDOW CLOTHS

John Ritzenthaler
71 Franklin St., New York 13, N.Y.

Makers of the Famous Ritz Cleaning Cloths Since 1892

"There is a quotation," she said, "hd something—do you know it? Somet- about happiness remembered in misery."at

His surprise deepened, and with it the ill pulse to wound. He listened while she st in mered out the Italian phrases, then sm n- "I had no idea you were so erudite. Fn. Dante, isn't it?" Comprehension dawne e. him. "Yes, of course, I see." ne

"It's what you were thinking, too, i it?" or

"I suppose so." ts

She leaned toward him. "Mark, I you."

"Because I remind you of your husba is that why?"

"Does it matter?" of

"Maybe not. One reason is as good as other." e r

She let the remark pass, and as the p verse demon waxed within him Mark m e open love to her. He felt that she suffere out of her omniscient understanding of t plight, and to punish her he outdid himsel e general beastliness. By the time they h finished dinner and he had consumed seve g brandies he was nicely drunk. t e

Out on the street at last, in the muddy u candescence of lights, he took her arm. "L o walk a bit, or would you prefer a cab?" r

"I'd rather walk." She was pale, steady. He felt the protective response her arm, and laughed.

Drawing her into a shadowy doorway kissed her. Her lips were cool and fragra "Stella, aren't you tight?"

"No," she murmured, and steered him on the sidewalk again.

THEY walked slowly, and as his head clea a little an awful depression hovered c s him. This sort of thing, he knew, was b y done all over the city at this very mom g It was inevitable, stale as the lees in old b- bottles. Why not make up his mind that d sire, that earliest exuberance, that sharp h bliss of the very beginning of things, buried under the heaped rubbish and e nettles of the past? Neither he nor she w n ever recapture it. The world had lost it y ever. From now on it was pretense, all e tense.

He kissed Stella again, with deliber brutality, and she said, "Mark, you d love me, but we need each other. I'd be tent with that, if you could be."

"No!"

They walked on and came to West Street.

"This is where I used to live, befo was married." She pointed to the black fli of stairs which led to a basement.

"So there was a time when you and I kn only ourselves, when we were undisturbed the dead or the faithless." He drew closer, so that in walking their limbs mo in harmony.

Presently she stopped again. "And th Dockett's, where I used to work."

The sidewalk bookstalls had been cle for the night and the little shop was in d ness. She peered through the glass of door, but could see little except the b shaft of the staircase descending from floor into the deeper blackness of the b ment, and she pictured the desolate r with its bookcases rising to the ceiling spindly ladder, its dust, its mice, and dreamy figures which drifted from stac stack. One of these figures, a young with a dark, eager face, turned and cam ward her carrying a book, his voice sta an echo in her ears. Or was she aslee dreaming? She pressed her face ag Mark's shoulder, and he said coldly:

"We're both drunk and unhappy, and was to have been a joyous occasion. to have been a celebration in honor future. It was to have been ——"

A cruising taxi came to a halt besi curb, and Mark helped Stella into it.

"Let's go home to Neddy and mak good strong coffee. It's time I let pc tavia go home anyway."

She made an indefinable moveme said nothing. The wine had settled brain and his thoughts moved like nettes to a brittle tune. Stella's han

Shortest Recipe of all—
HEAT...EAT...ENJOY

Quick to serve—a joy to eat—Van Camp's Beans! Prepared for you by Van Camp's exclusive process, every bean is a delectable, digestible, nourishing morsel of good eating—rich with the flavor of the secret, savory sauce. Enjoy Van Camp's Beans often—all Van Camp's take-it-easy foods.

VAN CAMP'S FOODS — Products of Stokely-Van Camp, Inc., Indianapolis and Stokely-Van Camp, Ltd. of Canada . FAMOUS SINCE 1861

Listen to Take it Easy Time
Mutual Broadcasting System
MONDAY . WEDNESDAY . FRIDAY
11:30 AM EST 9:30 AM MST
10:30 AM CST 8:30 AM PST

TAKE-IT-EASY WITH VAN CAMP'S

Traditionally

THE FINEST OF THE FINE

To this generation of homemakers, as to their mothers and grandmothers, the words Swift's Premium mean the aristocrat of bacons. For the ideal that governs the making of Swift's Premium Bacon today has guided it from the very beginning . . . the ideal of constant striving to make the best still better. This tireless effort has won outstanding leadership . . . millions more families prefer Swift's Premium Bacon than any other kind. Realizing this, Swift is doing its very best to insure fair distribution of available supplies.

Swift's Premium Bacon

WITH THE SWEET SMOKE TASTE

until very solid. Turn out and garnish with whipped cream or fruit. And you know you can buy delightful and delicious molds of ice cream all packed and ready. Just in case!

Drink to the happy pair. May they live long and happily all the time. For happy is the bride the sun shines on, and my astrologer tells me that it's likely to be good weather all through June. I believe him, but I keep my fingers crossed!

So drink to this happy pair. And may the sunshine never grow less.

PINEAPPLE PUNCH

A day or so before the great day make some simple sirup and store in the refrigerator. Simple sirup is made by mixing sugar and water in equal proportions, and cooking to a thin sirup. For this punch receipt, cook 4 cups of sugar and 4 cups of water. (And as much more as you may need.) To make 5 quarts of pineapple punch, combine 4 cups of simple sirup, 1 cup of strained lemon juice and 8 cups of pineapple juice. Just before serving add 2 quarts of carbonated water (or if you are so inclined, this is the place to use champagne instead of carbonated water), thin slices of fresh pineapple, peeled and cored, sprigs of mint and ice.

Are the old shoes handy? Well, we must have quite a supply of old shoes on hand, having been restrained from getting any new ones for a long, long time. We can spare them now. Also ribbons and Just Married signs, if your taste runs that way.

Away with them, the wedding is over, the breakfast looks like a Grange supper right after the last chicken pie has disappeared. Away with them, into the haven where they would be, into the honeymoon of their dreams. And let us old folks settle down to a little gin rummy and that latest book. "Time marches on," and time is of the essence! And I may lay away my white hat.

THE PURSUIT OF LOVE

(Continued from Page 17)

dragged off, but meanwhile bubbles were said to have been observed). There was drama when Linda, aged ten, attempted suicide in order to rejoin an old smelly Border terrier which Uncle Matthew had had put down. She collected and ate a basketful of yew berries, was discovered by Nanny and given mustard and water to make her sick. She was then "spoken to" by Aunt Sadie, clipped over the ear by Uncle Matthew, put to bed for two days and given a Labrador puppy, which soon took the place of the old Border in her affections. There was much worse drama when Linda, aged twelve, told the daughters of neighbors, who had come to tea, what she supposed to be the facts of life. Linda's presentation of the "facts" had been so gruesome that the children left Alconleigh howling dismally. There was the unforgettable holiday when Uncle Matthew and Aunt Sadie went to Canada. The Radlett children would rush for the newspapers every day hoping to see that their parents' ship had gone down with all aboard; they yearned to be total orphans—especially Linda, who saw herself as Katie in What Katie Did, the reins of the household gathered into small but capable hands. The ship met with no iceberg and weathered the Atlantic storms, but meanwhile we had a wonderful holiday, free from rules.

But the Christmas I remember most clearly was when I was fourteen and Aunt Emily became engaged. Aunt Emily was Aunt Sadie's sister, and she had brought me up from babyhood, my own mother, their youngest sister, having felt herself too beautiful and too gay to be burdened with a child at the age of nineteen. She left my father when I was a month old, and subsequently ran away so often, and with so many different people, that she became known to her family and friends as the Bolter; while my father's second, and presently his third, fourth and fifth wives, very naturally had no great wish to look after me. Occasionally one of these impetuous parents would appear like a rocket, casting an unnatural glow upon my horizon. They had great glamour, and I longed to be caught up in their fiery trails and carried away, though in my heart I knew how lucky I was to have Aunt Emily. By degrees, as I grew up, they lost all charm for me; the cold gray rocket cases moldered where they had happened to fall, my mother with a major in the South of France, my father, his estates sold up to pay his debts, with an old Rumanian countess in the Bahamas. Aunt Emily was never glamorous, but she was always my mother, and I loved her.

At the time of which I write, however, I was at an age when the least imaginative child supposes itself to be a changeling, a princess of Indian blood, Joan of Arc or the future Empress of Russia. I hankered after my parents, put on an idiotic face which was intended to convey mingled suffering and pride when their names were mentioned, and thought of them as engulfed in deep, romantic, deadly sin.

Linda and I were much preoccupied with sin, and our great hero was Oscar Wilde.

"But what did he do?"

"I asked Fa once and he roared at me—goodness, it was terrifying. He said, 'If you mention that name again in this house I'll thrash you, do you hear?' So I asked Sadie and she looked awfully vague and said, 'Oh, duck, I never really quite knew, but whatever it was, was worse than murder, fearfully bad. And, darling, don't talk about him at meals, will you?'"

"We must find out."

"Bob says he will, when he goes to Eton."

"Oh, good! Do you think he was worse than mummy and daddy?"

"Surely he couldn't be. Oh, you are so lucky, to have wicked parents."

I stumbled into the hall blinded by the light after a six-mile drive from the station. Aunt Sadie and the children were having tea, just like in the photograph. It was the same table and the same tea things; the human beings were five years older. That is to say the babies had become children, the children were growing up. There had been an addition in the shape of Victoria, now aged two.

There was a tremendous scraping of chairs as I came in, and a pack of Radletts hurled themselves upon me with the intensity and almost the ferocity of a pack of hounds hurling itself upon a fox. All except Linda. She was the most pleased to see me, but determined not to show it. When the din had quieted down and I was seated before a scone and a cup of tea, she said:

"Where's Brenda?"

Brenda was my white mouse. "She got a sore back and died," I said.

Aunt Sadie looked anxiously at Linda.

"Had you been riding her?" said Louisa facetiously.

Matt, who had recently come under the care of a French nursery governess, said in a high-pitched imitation of her voice, "As usual, it was kidney trouble."

"Oh, dear," said Aunt Sadie, under her breath.

Enormous tears were pouring into Linda's plate. Nobody cried so much or so often as she; anything, but especially anything said about animals, would set her off, and, once begun, it was a job to stop her. She was delicate as well as a highly nervous child. The other children, and especially Louisa and Bob, who loved to tease, went as far as they dared with her, and were periodically punished for making her cry.

Linda was not only my favorite cousin but, then and for many years, my favorite human being. Her straight features, straight brown hair and large blue eyes were a theme upon which the faces of the others were a variation; all pretty, but none so absolutely distinctive as hers. There was something furious about her, even when she laughed, which

Make it with

DUFF'S HOT MUFFIN MIX

Happy days! . . it's the season for luscious strawberry shortcake. Enjoy this treat often, and let Duff's provide the lightest, flakiest shortcake you ever baked. Easy directions on box!

just add WATER - that's all!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

AMERICAN HOME FOODS, INC.

MENU CUES

SPICY FRANKFURTERS

Cut 1 lb. frankfurters in half lengthwise. Place in deep covered skillet. Combine 3 tablesp. flour with 4 tablesp. cold water; add 1 cup hot water, ¾ cup ketchup, 3 tablesp. vinegar, 1 tablesp. sugar, 1 teasp. Colman's (dry) Mustard. Pour over meat, cover, bring to boiling point; reduce heat, simmer 20 minutes. Serves 5 or 6.

FREE! NEW RECIPE BOOK
"Mealtime Magic"
Write to Atlantis Sales Corp., 3632 Mustard St., Rochester 9, N.Y.
Name_____
Address_____

she did a great deal, and always as if forced to against her will.

I could see that she was really minding much more about Brenda than I did. The truth was that my honeymoon days with the mouse were long since over. It had been a relief to me when Brenda's sufferings finally came to an end.

"Where is she buried?" Linda muttered.

"Beside the robin. She's got a dear little cross and her coffin was lined with pink satin."

"Now, Linda darling," said Aunt Sadie, "if Fanny has finished her tea why don't you show her your toad?"

"He's upstairs asleep," said Linda. But she stopped crying.

"Have some nice hot toast, then."

"Can I have Gentleman's Relish on it?" she said, quick to make capital out of Aunt Sadie's mood, for Gentleman's Relish was kept strictly for Uncle Matthew, and supposed not to be good for children.

THE others made a great show of exchanging significant looks. These were intercepted, as they were meant to be, by Linda, who gave a tremendous bellowing boo-hoo and rushed upstairs.

"I wish you children wouldn't tease Linda," said Aunt Sadie, irritated out of her usual gentleness, and followed her.

The staircase led out of the hall. When Aunt Sadie was beyond earshot, Louisa said, "Child hunt tomorrow, Fanny."

"Yes, Josh told me. He was in the car—been to see the vet."

My Uncle Matthew had four magnificent bloodhounds, with which he used to hunt his children. Two of us would go off with a good start to lay the trail, and Uncle Matthew and the rest would follow the hounds on horseback. It was great fun.

Once he came to my home and hunted Linda and me over Shenley Common. This caused the most tremendous stir locally; the Kentish week-enders on their way to church were appalled by the sight of four great hounds in full cry after two little girls. My uncle seemed to them like a wicked lord of fiction, and I became more than ever surrounded with an aura of madness, badness and dangerousness.

The child hunt on the first day of this Christmas visit was a great success. Louisa and I were chosen as hares. We ran across country, the beautiful bleak Cotswold uplands, starting soon after breakfast. The sun rose as we stumbled on, longing for our second wind; it shone, and there dawned a beautiful day, more like late autumn than Christmastime.

We managed to check the bloodhounds once by running through a flock of sheep, but Uncle Matthew soon got them on the scent again, and, after about two hours of hard running on our part, when we were only half

NEXT MONTH

MONA found herself clinging to the man's powerful shoulders a moment longer. She tried to hide the wild fright in her eyes. For it was the man of her dream. But was it Chan, her war-returned husband so changed by plastic surgery she couldn't tell? Was it Paul, the cousin she'd never seen? Something inside her checked and defeated whatever she felt or thought. It seemed like a blind search, in terrifying, close quarters. Could she get to the end of this maze and find Chan?

Purgatory Street

By Roman McDougald

The book soon to be published by Simon and Schuster, condensed in the July JOURNAL

Serve Something Simple—but Fancy It Up New Orleans Style!

SIMPLE meal of leftovers coming up? Then make it new and exciting the way famous New Orleans cooks do! Try these easy, "glamorizing" recipes, and be sure to use Wesson Oil. Pure, delicious Wesson Oil is America's favorite for salads. Try it for digestible frying, too! For baking—just pour Wesson to measure and pour to mix, whenever the recipe calls for melted shortening.

CHICKEN SAVORY

FANCY FIXINGS FOR A MERE LEFTOVER!

2 tablespoons Wesson Oil
1 small onion
1 sprig parsley
1 bay leaf
½ garlic clove
Leftover chicken, chopped or sliced
3 tablespoons flour
2 tablespoons mild vinegar or white wine
2 cups chicken broth, or canned chicken soup
Salt and pepper

Simmer for 2 minutes Wesson Oil, onion, parsley, bay leaf, and garlic, all finely chopped. Blend in flour. Add vinegar or wine and chicken broth or canned chicken soup (diluted or full strength according to directions on can). Season with salt and pepper to taste; stir until thickened. Add leftover chicken. Simmer 3 minutes. Serve with boiled rice. (What a smooth, delicate background Wesson Oil provides for sauces! One of the many reasons why more American women use Wesson than any other brand of salad oil!)

ASK YOUR GROCER FOR PURE DELICIOUS WESSON OIL TODAY!

FRUIT-IN-SEASON SALAD

Use any combination of fruits: strawberries, cherries, diced melon, pineapple . . . whatever is in season. Serve with this extra-special dressing:

FRUIT SALAD DRESSING

1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon sugar
¼ teaspoon pepper
½ teaspoon dry mustard
½ teaspoon paprika
¼ cup lime juice (or lemon juice)
¾ cup Wesson Oil

Mix and shake in a jar. And, if you happen to have some, add 2 tablespoons of raspberry syrup. Nice pink color . . . grand, fruity flavor! Wesson's light, delicate flavor is ideal—never gives your dressings a heavy, oily taste. Clip these recipes now.

Wesson Oil

FOR SALADS & COOKING

NEW ORLEANS

LET A PALM TREE TEACH YOU THIS

Short-cut to prettier floors!

Tavern Wax gives a longer-lasting lustre—with less work . . . thanks to a palm tree 'way down in Brazil! That tree supplies a 'specially hard, durable wax called Carnauba. Socony-Vacuum skilfully blends lots of this tough, top-quality wax in Tavern Non-Rub Floor Wax and buffing waxes. That's one reason why the Tavern lustre lasts longer—cleans easier—resists even water spots!

Tavern Non-Rub Wax is easily applied to linoleum, wood, rubber or asphalt tile floors. Dries in 20 minutes. To protect wood floors, woodwork, windowsills and painted surfaces, try Tavern Paste and Liquid buffing waxes. They clean and bring out the beauty of wood as they polish.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

3 KINDS OF WAX

NON-RUB PASTE LIQUID

Try these other Tavern Housekeeping Aids

Tavern Furniture Gloss
Tavern Paint Cleaner
Tavern Rug Cleaner
Tavern Parowax or Paraseal Wax
Tavern Dry Cleaner
Tavern Window Cleaner
Tavern Lustre Cloth
Tavern Electric Motor Oil
Tavern Leather Preserver

SOCONY-VACUUM

Typical Symbol of hospitality—Star Tavern, Rusper, England

TAVERN HOME PRODUCTS

a mile from home, the baying, slavering creatures caught up with us, to be rewarded with lumps of meat and many caresses. Uncle Matthew was in a radiantly good temper; he got off his horse and walked home with us, chatting agreeably. What was most unusual, he was even quite affable to me.

"I hear Brenda has died," he said. "You ought to have a dormouse, Fanny. They are much more interesting than white mice. When I go to London after Christmas, I'll get you one."

"Oh, Fa, it is unfair," said Linda, who was walking her pony along beside us. "You know how I've always longed for a dormouse."

"It is unfair" was a perpetual cry of the Radletts when young. The great advantage of living in a large family is that early lesson of life's essential unfairness. With them I must say it nearly always operated in favor of Linda, who was the adored of Uncle Matthew.

Today, however, my uncle was angry with her. "You've got enough animals, miss," he said sharply. "You can't control the ones you have got. And don't forget what I told you—that dog of yours goes straight to the kennel when we get back, and stays there."

Linda's face crumpled, tears poured, she kicked her pony into a canter and made for home. It seemed that her dog Labby had been sick in Uncle Matthew's business room after breakfast. Uncle Matthew was unable to bear dirtiness in dogs; he flew into a rage, and, in his rage, had made a rule that never again was Labby to set foot in the house. This was always happening, for one reason or another, to one animal or another, and, Uncle Matthew's bark being invariably much worse than his bite, the ban seldom lasted more than a day or two.

TODAY, as we left the stables, he said to Linda, who was sitting crying with Labby in his kennel, "Are you going to leave that poor brute of yours in there all day?"

Her tears forgotten, Linda rushed into the house with Labby at her heels. The Radletts were always either on a peak of happiness or drowning in black waters of despair; their emotions were on no ordinary plane, they loved or they loathed, they laughed or they cried, they lived in a world of superlatives.

It was an accepted fact at Alconleigh that Uncle Matthew loathed me. This violent, uncontrolled man, like his children, knew no middle course. His reason for hating me was that he hated my father; they were old Eton enemies. When it became obvious that my parents intended to doorstep me, Aunt Sadie had wanted to bring me up with Linda. We were the same age, and it had seemed a sensible plan. Uncle Matthew categorically refused. He hated my father, he said, he hated me, but, above all, he hated children; it was bad enough to have two of his own. (He evidently had not envisaged so soon having seven, and indeed both he and Aunt Sadie lived in a perpetual state of surprise at having filled so many cradles.) So dear Aunt Emily, whose heart had once been broken by some wicked dallying monster, and who intended on this account never to marry, took me on and made a life's work of me, and I am very thankful that she did. For she believed passionately in the education of women; she took immense pains to have me properly taught, even going to live at Shenley to be near a good day school. The Radlett daughters did practically no lessons. They were taught by Lucille, the French nursery governess, to read and write, they were obliged though utterly unmusical, to "practice" in the freezing ballroom for one hour a day. Uncle Matthew loathed clever females, but he considered that gentlewomen ought, as well as being able to ride, to know French and play the piano. Although as a child I rather naturally envied them their freedom from sums and science, I felt, nevertheless, a priggish satisfaction that I was not growing up unlettered, as they were.

AUNT EMILY did not often come with me to Alconleigh. Perhaps she had an idea that it was more fun for me to be there on my own, and no doubt it was a change for her to get away and spend Christmas with friends. This year, however, she had gone away from Shenley before the holidays began, saying she would see me at Alconleigh in January.

On the afternoon of the child hunt Linda called a meeting of the Hons. The Hons were the Radlett secret society; anybody who was not a friend to the Hons was a Counter-Hon, and their battle cry was "Death to the horrible Counter-Hons." I was a Hon, since my father, like theirs, was a lord. There were also, however, many honorary Hons; it was not necessary to have been born a Hon in order to be one. As Linda once remarked, "Kind hearts are more than coronets, and simple faith than Norman blood." I'm not sure how much we really believed this—we were wicked snobs in those days, but we subscribed to the general idea.

Head of the hon. Hons was Josh, the groom, who was greatly beloved by us as chief of the horrible Counter-Hons was Craven, the gamekeeper, against whom

(Continued on Page 78)

"We can be glad we were young men twenty years ago, Gebhardt."

"Does your ad-writer fall asleep before the washing is done?"

Writes Mrs. L. E. Blinkinsop of Clinton, Iowa.

"Doesn't he know DUZ does more than towels, overalls and undies?"

asks Mrs. Blinkinsop. "Your ads always talk about just those three things.

"That's o.k.—as far as it goes. But everybody knows by now that DUZ does towels white as a cloud (a very white cloud). That it washes dirty work clothes clean in jig-time. And that it's safer for pretty undies than any other 'big-name' washday soap.

"But what kind of a house does your ad-writer live in? Doesn't he wash anything else?

"Doesn't he have any kids?

"Don't they get their shirts and pants and dresses dirty? Then, for goodness sake, why doesn't he tell how fast DUZ gets out the grime yet helps to keep the colors in? Even when I dry the wash downstairs in winter, the white clothes look snowy and colors stay brighter with DUZ!

"Don't his windows have curtains?

"Doesn't he ever wash them? Then he ought to tell people how clean DUZ does the edges that have dragged on dirty sills . . . how safe it is even for delicate, colored washables. I know! My house has 27 windows!

"Doesn't his dog get dirty?

"Our Cocker Spaniel, 'Pepper,' does—and (you guessed it!) DUZ does him clean! Of course, I have to DUZ my husband's sport shirt afterwards, but that's no chore. Yes, the same DUZ that gets my sheets so white is safe for a bright plaid shirt!

"So why doesn't your ad-writer tell folks no other leading washday soap can hold a candle to DUZ for solving all kinds of washing problems. You just can't beat it for cleaning quick and washing safe!"

DUZ does Everything

—and I mean Everything!

Be lovely to love

Make the famous Fresh test. See why more women are switching to Fresh than to any other deodorant.

Fresh stops perspiration worries completely. Fresh contains the most effective perspiration-stopping ingredient known to science.

Fresh stays smooth...never sticky or gritty...doesn't dry out in the jar.

(Continued from Page 76)

perpetual war to the knife was waged. The Hons would creep into the woods and hide Craven's steel traps, let out the chaffinches which, in wire cages without food or water, he used as bait for hawks, give decent burial to the victims of his gamekeeper's larder, and, before a meet of the hounds, unblock the earths which Craven had so carefully stopped.

The humanitarian activities of the Hons were forbidden, on pain of punishment, by Uncle Matthew, who was always and entirely on the side of Craven, his favorite servant. Pheasants and partridges must be preserved, vermin must be put down rigorously, all except the fox, for whom a more exciting death was in store. Many and many a whacking did the poor Hons suffer, week after week their pocket money was stopped, they were sent to bed early, given extra practicing to do; nevertheless, they bravely persisted with their discouraged and discouraging activities.

The Hons' meeting place was a disused linen cupboard at the top of the house, small, dark and intensely hot. Here we would sit and talk for hours about life and death.

Last holidays our great obsession had been childbirth, on which entrancing subject we were informed remarkably late, having supposed for a long time that a mother's stomach swelled up for nine months and then burst open like a ripe pumpkin, shooting out the infant. When the real truth dawned upon us it seemed rather an anticlimax, until Linda produced, from some novel, and read out loud in ghoulish tones, the description of a woman in labor.

"Her breath comes in great gulps—sweat pours down her brow like water—screams as of a tortured animal rend the air—and can this face, twisted with agony, be that of my darling Rhona—can this torture chamber really be our bedroom, this rack our marriage bed? 'Doctor, doctor,' I cried, 'do something'—I rushed out into the night ——" and so on.

We were rather disturbed by this, realizing that too probably we in our turn would have to endure these fearful agonies. Aunt Sadie, who had only just finished having her seven children, when appealed to, was not very reassuring.

"Yes," she said vaguely. "It is the worst pain in the world. But the funny thing is, you always forget in between what it's like. Each time, when it began, I felt like saying, 'Oh, now I can remember, stop it, stop it.' And, of course, by then it was nine months too late to stop it."

At this point Linda began to cry, saying how dreadful all this business must be for cows, which brought the conversation to an end.

It was difficult to talk to Aunt Sadie about sex; something always seemed to prevent one; babies were the nearest we ever got to it. She and Aunt Emily, feeling at one moment that we ought to know more, and being, I suspect, too embarrassed to enlighten us themselves, gave us a modern textbook on the subject.

We managed to get hold of some curious ideas.

"Jassy," said Linda one day scornfully, "is obsessed, poor thing, with sex."

"Obsessed with sex!" said Jassy. "There's nobody so obsessed as you, Linda. Why, if I so much as look at a picture you say I'm a pygmalionist."

In the end we got a great deal more information out of a book called Ducks and Duck Breeding.

This Christmas Eve we all packed into the Hons' meeting place to hear what Linda had to say—Louisa, Jassy, Bob, Matt and I.

"The news I have for the Hons today," said Linda, clearing her throat like a grown-up person, "concerns Fanny. I won't ask you to guess, because it's nearly teatime and you never could, so I'll tell straight o Aunt Emily is engaged."

There was a gasp from the Hons in chor

"Linda," I said furiously, "you've ma it up." But I knew she couldn't have.

Linda brought a piece of paper out of pocket. It was a half sheet of writing pa evidently the end of a letter, covered w Aunt Emily's handwriting, and I looked o Linda's shoulder as she read it out:

"—— not tell the children we're engag what d'you think, darling, just at fi We'll arrive on Thursday, and I'll teleph Wednesday evening. All love from Emil Sensation in the Hons' cupboard.

"But why?" I said for the hundre time.

Linda, Louisa and I were packed Louisa's bed, with Bob sitting on the en it, chatting in whispers. These midn talks were strictly forbidden, but it safer, at Alconleigh, to disobey rules du the early part of the night than at any o time in the twenty-four hours.

"Why should she want to be married

"It's not as though she could be in l She's forty."

"How old do you suppose he is?"

"Fifty or sixty, I g Perhaps she thinks it w be nice to be a wi Weeds, you know."

"Perhaps she th Fanny ought to ha man's influence."

"Man's influence!" Louisa. "I foresee tro Supposing he falls in with Fanny, that'll pretty kettle of fish. Somerset and Princess Elizabeth ——"

"It looks as if Aunt Sadie isn't goi say anything about it before they com said.

"There's nearly a week to go—she m deciding. She'll talk it over with Fa. M be worth listening next time she has a You can, Bob."

I thanked God that there need be no utter loneliness in the world while it holds a little child.

—MICHAEL FAIRLESS: The Roadmender: Quoted in A Diary for the Thankful Hearted compiled by Mary Hodgkin (Published by E. P. Dutton & Company).

Christmas Day was spent, as usu Alconleigh, between alternate bursts of shine and showers. I put, as children the disturbing news about Aunt Emil of my mind, and concentrated upon e ment. At about six o'clock Linda and stuck our sleepy eyes and started o stockings. Our real presents came lat breakfast and on the tree, but the stoc were a wonderful hors d'œuvre and f treasures. Presently Jassy came in started selling us things out of hers. only cared about money because sh saving up to run away—she carried her office book about with her everywher always knew to a farthing what she ha So eager was she for the cash that transform her dream into reality th could be certain of picking up a few ba round Christmas and her birthday. at this time was aged eight.

I must admit that my wicked p turned up trumps at Christmas, ar presents from them were always the e the entire household. This year my n who was in Paris, sent a gilded bird ca of stuffed hummingbirds which, when up, twittered and hopped about and dr a fountain. She also sent a fur hat gold-and-topaz bracelet, whose glamo enhanced by the fact that Aunt Sadi sidered them unsuitable for a child, ar so. My father sent a pony and cart, had arrived some days before, and b creted by Josh in the stables.

We persuaded Josh to take us for after luncheon. The pony was an an the whole thing easily managed by even the harnessing. Linda wore my drove the pony. We got back late tree—the house was already full of and their children; Uncle Matthew, w struggling into his Father Christmas roared at us so violently that Linda ha and cry upstairs, and was not there to her own present from him. Uncle M

(Continued on Page 80)

CHARLES BOYER
JENNIFER JONES

in

ERNST LUBITSCH'S

Production of

Cluny Brown

with

PETER LAWFORD · HELEN WALKER

REGINALD GARDINER · REGINALD OWEN

Sir C. Aubrey Smith · Richard Haydn · Margaret Bannerman
Sara Allgood · Ernest Cossart · Florence Bates · Una O'Connor

20th CENTURY-FOX

Produced and Directed by ERNST LUBITSCH Screen Play by Samuel Hoffenstein and Elizabeth Reinhardt • Based on the Novel by Margery Sharp

Mrs. Robert Bacon Whitney

A delightful member of Long Island's younger social set, Mrs. Whitney is petite . . . enchantingly feminine. For her fragile cream and peach complexion, she chooses Pond's "sheer-gauge" powder—"Sheer color looks so much softer on the skin!" she says.

Pond's powder is "Sheer-gauge"

—for a smoother, lovelier skin tone!

Don't do all your gloating over your luscious new "sheer-gauge" stockings! For now Pond's "sheer-gauge" powder brings you that same luxury-sheer glamour—for your complexion! The same soft-as-a-whisper color—smooth . . . flawless. No streaks, no clots, no heavy "wrinkly" look. Just smooth, smooth color flattery that says—unmistakably—"sheer-gauge"!

Choose from one of Pond's many exquisite "sheer-gauge" shades—lovely in the box, but even lovelier "on"!

"Sheer-gauge" means smoother color for your face, too!

Two stockings—the same shade in the box—but so different "on"! Now—Pond's Dreamflower Powder shades look lovelier "on" because they're so "sheer-gauge"!

$1 value for 79¢, plus tax
Pond's Make-up Trio

A lovely big box of Pond's Dreamflower Powder, with matching Pond's "Lips" and Pond's "Cheeks." It's a $1 value for only 79¢, plus tax. Wonderful for prizes . . . for gifts . . . and for *you!

(Continued from Page 78)

had taken some trouble to get her a longed-for dormouse and was greatly put out by this; he roared at everybody in turns, and ground his dentures. There was a legend in the family that he had already ground away four pairs in his rages.

I naturally awaited the arrival of Aunt Emily and her future intended with some agitation.

Our little household at Shenley was calm and happy and afforded an absolute contrast to the tearing emotions of Alconleigh. I saw, only too clearly, that the addition of a man to our establishment was going to change everything. Hardly knowing any men outside the family, I imagined them all to be modeled on the lines of Uncle Matthew, or of my own seldom seen, violently emotional papa.

On Wednesday Aunt Emily rang up Aunt Sadie, and they talked for ages. When Aunt Sadie returned to the drawing room she said nothing except, "Emily is coming tomorrow on the three-five. She sends you her love, Fanny."

The next day we all went out hunting. The Radletts loved animals, they loved foxes, they risked dreadful beatings in order to unstop their earths, they read and cried and rejoiced over Reynard the Fox, in summer they got up at four to go and see the cubs playing in the pale-green light of the woods; nevertheless, more than anything in the world, they loved hunting. It was in their blood and bones and in my blood and bones, and nothing could eradicate it, though we knew it for a kind of original sin. For three hours that day I forgot everything except my body and my pony's body; the rushing, the scrambling, the splashing, struggling up the hills, sliding down them again, the tugging, the bucketing, the earth and the sky. I forgot everything, I could hardly have told you my name. That must be the great hold that hunting has over people, especially stupid people; it enforces an absolute concentration, both mental and physical.

Pride can go without domestics, without fine clothes, can live in a house with two rooms, can eat potato, purslane, beans, lyed corn, can work on the soil, can talk with poor men, or sit silent well contented in fine salons. But vanity costs money, labor, horses, men, women, health and peace, and is still nothing at last, a long way leading nowhere. Only one drawback: proud people are intolerably selfish, and the vain are gentle and giving.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

After three hours Josh took me home. I was never allowed to stay out long or I got tired and would be sick all night. Josh was out on Uncle Matthew's second horse; at about two o'clock they changed over, and he started home on the lathered, sweating first horse, taking me with him.

"And where's her ladyship hunting this year?" said Josh, as we started on a ten-mile jog along the Merlinford road.

I knew that Josh meant my mother. He had been with my grandfather when she and her sisters were girls, and my mother was his heroine, he adored her.

"She's in Paris, Josh."

"In Paris—what for?"

"I suppose she likes it."

"Ho," said Josh furiously, and we rode for about half a mile in silence. "It's my opinion," said Josh at last, "that her ladyship is wasted, downright wasted, every minute of her life that she's not on a 'oss."

"She's a wonderful rider, isn't she?"

I had had all this before from Josh, many times, and could never have enough of it.

"There's no human being like her, that I've ever seen," said Josh, hissing through his teeth. "Hands like velvet, but strong like iron, and her seat! Now look at you, jostling about on that saddle, first here, then there—we shall have a sore back tonight, that's one thing certain we shall."

"Oh, Josh—trotting. And I'm so tired."

"Never saw her tired." Josh gave me scornful looks as my back bent more and more double; I could see that he was wondering how it was that I could be my mother's child. "Miss Linda," he said, "takes after her ladyship something wonderful."

At last we were off the Merlinford r coming down the valley into Alconleigh lage, turning up the hill to Alconleigh ho through the lodge gates and into the st yard. I got stiffly down, gave the pony to of Josh's stableboys, and stumped awa was nearly at the front door before I rem bered, with a sudden leap of my heart, Aunt Emily would have arrived by now, him. It was quite a minute before I c summon up enough courage to open the f door.

Sure enough, standing with their back the hall fire, were Aunt Sadie, Aunt E and a small, fair and apparently young m My immediate impression was that he not seem at all like a husband. He lo kind and gentle.

"Here is Fanny," said my aunts in ch

"Darling," said Aunt Sadie, "can I in duce Captain Warbeck?"

I shook hands in the abrupt graceless of little girls of fourteen, and thought th did not seem at all like a captain either

"Oh, darling, how wet you are. I sup the others won't be back for ages—w have you come from?"

"I left them drawing the spinney by Old Rose."

Then I remembered, being after all male in the presen a male, how dre I always looked w got home from hun splashed from he foot, my bowle askew, my hair a nest, my stock a ping flag, and, m ing something, I for the back toward my bath my rest. After h we were kept i for at least two

Soon Linda ret even wetter than been, and got into bed with me. She had seen the captain, and agreed th looked neither like a marrying nor military man.

"Can't see him killing Germans wi entrenching tool," she said scornfully.

"Still, he looks rather nice, you know considering her age, I should think lucky to get anybody."

"I can't wait to see him with Fa," said.

However, our expectations of bloo thunder were disappointed, for it was e at once that Uncle Matthew had tak enormous fancy to Captain Warbeck. never altered his first opinion of Captain Warbeck was, henceforward, infallible wicket with Uncle Matthew

"He's such a frightfully clever cov erary, you know; you wouldn't belie things he does. He writes books, an cizes pictures. Nothing would be too d for him, you can see that."

At dinner Captain Warbeck, sittin to Aunt Sadie, and Aunt Emily, Uncle Matthew, were separated not four of us children, but also by pools o ness. The dining-room table was lit b electric bulbs hanging in a bunch fr ceiling, and screened by a curtain of d silk with a gold fringe. One spot of b light was thus cast into the middle table, while the diners themselves sat it in total gloom.

We all, naturally, had our eyes fixe the shadowy figure of the fiancé. He to Aunt Sadie at first about gardens and flowering shrubs, a topic which known at Alconleigh. The gardener sa garden, and that was that. Aunt Sa litely tried to keep up with him, bu not altogether conceal her ignorance, she partly veiled it in a mist of mindedness.

"And what is your soil here?" ask tain Warbeck.

Aunt Sadie said triumphantly, was something she did know, "Clay

"Ah, yes," said the captain.

(Continued on Page 82)

"Yes!" say her feet

She's forever "on the go." She helped herself to busier, happier days by wearing genuine Selby ARCH PRESERVER shoes. Her very first pair took foot fatigue out of her life—and every pair since has kept it out! These three famous features, found only in Selby ARCH PRESERVER shoes, are the reasons:

- steel arch bridge for firm support
- individually placed metatarsal pad for comfort
- perfectly flat innersole for comfort-plus

$8.95 to $12.95

Slightly Higher in Western States and Canada

SELBY FIFTH AVENUE at 38th St., New York City, and Your Leading Shoe and Department Store.

Manufactured for women by THE SELBY SHOE COMPANY, Portsmouth, O.; for men, E. T. WRIGHT & CO., Rockland, Mass.

IN CANADA, MURRAY-SELBY, LTD., LONDON, ONT. ■ IN ENGLAND, SELBY SHOES, LTD., LONDON ■ IN AUSTRALIA, SELBY SHOES (AUST.) LTD., SYDNEY ● IN NEW ZEALAND, SWINTON ■ OATES, LTD., AUCKLAND IN ARGENTINA, ALBERTO GRIMOLDI, BUENOS AIRES

SELBY SHOES THE WORLD OVER—ESTABLISHED 1877

Copr. 1946, The Selby Shoe Company

PHOTOGRAPH BY RAWLINGS

Selby ARCH PRESERVER Shoes

New!

DR. WEST'S MIRACLE TOOTH PASTE

Removes surface stains from the teeth . . . even tobacco stains

MADE BY THE MAKERS OF DR. WEST'S MIRACLE-TUFT TOOTHBRUSH . . . GUARANTEED SAFE

It's a brand new dentifrice idea! Worthy of a famous name—Dr. West's Miracle Tooth Paste! It incorporates, in a new, more effective paste base, two polishing ingredients and an amazing liquid cleanser, just made available—a combination having remarkable cleansing powers. Pleasing flavor. Costs no more!

(Continued from Page 80)

He produced a little jeweled box, took from it an enormous pill, swallowed it, to our amazement, without one sip to help it down, and said, as though to himself, but quite distinctly, "Then the water here will be madly binding."

When Logan, the butler, offered him shepherd's pie (the food at Alconleigh was always good and plentiful, but of the homely schoolroom description) he said, again so that one did not quite know whether he meant to be overheard or not:

"No, thank you, no twice-cooked meat. I am a wretched invalid. I must be careful, or I pay."

Aunt Sadie asked, with interest, what it was that twice-cooked meat did to one.

"Oh, it imposes a most fearful strain on the juices; you might as well eat leather," replied Captain Warbeck, heaping onto his plate the whole of the salad. He said, again in that withdrawn voice, "Raw lettuce, anti-scorbutic," and, opening another box of even larger pills, he took two, murmuring, "Protein. . . . How delicious your bread is," he said to Aunt Sadie, as though to make up for his rudeness in refusing the twice-cooked meat. "I'm sure it has the germ."

"What?" said Aunt Sadie.

"I was saying that I feel sure your delicious bread is made of stone-ground flour, containing a high proportion of the germ. In my bedroom at home I have a picture of a grain of wheat—magnified, naturally—which shows the germ. As you know, in white bread the germ, with its wonderful health-giving properties, is eliminated—extracted, I should say—and put into chicken food. As a result the human race is becoming enfeebled, while hens grow larger and stronger with every generation."

> Nothing is a greater impediment to being on good terms with others than being ill-at-ease with yourself.
>
> —BALZAC.

"So in the end," said Linda, listening all agog, "hens will be Hons and Hons will be hens. Oh, how I should love to live in a dear little Honhouse."

"You wouldn't like your work," said Bob. "I once saw a hen laying an egg, and she had a most terrible expression on her face."

"Now, Linda," said Aunt Sadie sharply, "that's quite unnecessary. Get on with your supper and don't talk so much."

Vague as she was, Aunt Sadie could not always be counted on to ignore everything that was happening around her.

"What were you telling me, Captain Warbeck?" she went on. "Something about germs?"

"Oh, not germs," he told Aunt Sadie; "the germ ——"

At this point I became aware that, in the shadows at the other end of the table, Uncle Matthew and Aunt Emily were having one of their usual set-to's, and that it concerned me. Whenever Aunt Emily came to Alconleigh these tussles with Uncle Matthew would occur, but, all the same, one could see that he was fond of her. He always liked people who stood up to him.

UNCLE Matthew and Aunt Emily were now engaged upon an argument we had all heard many times. It concerned the education of females.

Uncle Matthew: "I hope poor Fanny's school"—the word "school" pronounced in tones of withering scorn—"is doing her all the good you think it is. Certainly she picks up some dreadful expressions there."

Aunt Emily, calmly, but on the defensive: "Very likely she does. She also picks up a good deal of education."

Uncle Matthew: "Education! I was always led to suppose that no educated person ever spoke of note paper, and yet I hear poor Fanny asking Sadie for note paper. What is this education? Fanny talks about mirrors and mantelpieces, handbags and perfume; she takes sugar in her coffee, has a tassel on her umbrella, and I have no doubt that, if she is ever fortunate enough to catch a husband, she will call his father and mother Father and Mother. Will the wonderful education she is getting make up to the unhappy brute for all these endless pinpricks? Fancy hearing one's wife talk about note paper—the irritation!"

Aunt Emily: "A lot of men would find it more irritating to have a wife who had never heard of George the Third. (All the same, Fanny darling, it is called writing paper, you know—don't let's hear any more about note, please.) That is where you and I come in, you see, Matthew; home influence is admitted to be a most important part of education."

Uncle Matthew: "There you are ——"

Aunt Emily: "A most important, but not by any means the most important."

Uncle Matthew: "You don't have to go to some awful middle-class establishment in order to know who George the Third was. Anyway, who was he, Fanny?"

ALAS, I always failed to shine on these occasions. My wits scattered to the four winds by my terror of Uncle Matthew, I said, scarlet in the face, "He was king. He went mad."

"Most original, full of information," said Uncle Matthew sarcastically. "Well worth losing every ounce of feminine charm to find that out, I must say. Linda, you're uneducated, thank God; what have you got to say about George the Third?"

"Well," said Linda, "he was the son of poor Fred and the father of Beau Brummell's fat friend, and he was one of those vacillators, you know. 'I am his Highness's dog at Kew, pray tell me, sir, whose dog are you?'" she added inconsequently. "Oh, how sweet!"

Uncle Matthew shot a look of cruel triumph at Aunt Emily. "It's a lucky thing that Fanny will have fifteen thousand pounds a year of her own," he said, "not to speak of any settlements the Bolter may have picked up in the course of her career. She'll get a husband all right, even if she does talk about lunch, and *en*velope, and put the milk in first. I'm not afraid of that, I only say she'll drive the poor devil to drink when she has hooked him."

Aunt Emily gave Uncle Matthew a furious frown. She had always tried to conceal from me the fact that I was an heiress, and, indeed, I only was one until such time as my father, hale and hearty and in the prime of life, should marry somebody of an age to bear children. It so happened that, like the Hanoverian family, he cared for women only when they were over forty; after my mother had left him he had embarked upon a succession of middle-aged wives whom even the miracles of modern science were unable to render fruitful. It was also believed, wrongly, by the grownups that we children were ignorant of the fact that my mamma was called the Bolter.

"All this," said Aunt Emily, "is quite beside the point. Fanny may possibly, in the far future, have a little money of her own—though it is ludicrous to talk of fifteen thousand pounds. Whether she does, or does not, she will be more mature, a happier, a more interested and interesting person if she ——"

"If she knows that George the Third was a king and went mad."

All the same, my aunt was right, and I knew it and she knew it. The Radlett children read enormously by fits and starts in the library. But, while they picked up a great deal of heterogeneous information, and gilded it with their own originality, they never acquired any habit of concentration, they were incapable of solid hard work. One result, in later life, was that they could not stand boredom. Storms and difficulties left them unmoved, but day after day of ordinary existence produced an unbearable torture of ennui.

As we trailed out of the dining room after dinner, we heard Captain Warbeck say, "No port, no, thank you. Such a delicious drink, but I must refuse. It's the acid from port that makes one so delicate now."

"Ah—you've been a great port drinker, have you?" said Uncle Matthew.

"Oh, not me, I've never touched it. My ancestors ——"

KEEP ADORABLE!

Yodora checks perspiration odor the SOOTHINGEST way

- Made on a face cream base. Yodora is actually soothing to normal skins.
- Entirely free from irritating salts. Can be used right after under-arm shaving.
- Its soft, cream consistency stays that way indefinitely. Never gets stiff or grainy.
- Contains no chemicals to spoil clothing.
- Tubes or jars, 10¢, 30¢, 60¢.
- Yes, Yodora is a gentle deodorant. Try it—feel the wonderful difference!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

McKesson & Robbins, Inc., Bridgeport, Conn.

PREVENTS CHAFING—

Warner's
CHAFĒZE
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.
(Pronounced Chay-fees)

Adjustable, soft, washable. Rayon and cotton jersey. Worn next to the skin. Will not slip nor slide. Be sure it's a Warner's Chafeze.

$1.25
larger size
$1.50

Sold only in Corset Departments

THE WARNER BROTHERS COMPANY
FAYETTE ST. BRIDGEPORT 2, CONN.

Yes . . . You Need 'Em!
To Protect The Things You Have

Now that clothes are difficult and expensive to replace it's important to identify them against loss by marking with

CASH'S WOVEN Names

At School, Camp, and in the Home Cash's Names protect the clothing, linen, belongings of the whole family. Insist on CASH'S at your Dept. Store, or write us.

u can attach Cash's mes to anything with sh's NO-SO Cement— c tube.

ASH'S 76 Chestnut St., So. Norwalk, Conn., or 6227 So. Gramercy Place, Los Angeles 44, Cal., 56 Gray St., Belleville, Ontario.

Presently, when they joined us in the drawing room, Aunt Sadie said, "The children know the news now."

"I suppose they think it's a great joke," said Davey Warbeck, "old people like us being married."

"Oh, no, of course not," we said politely, blushing.

"He's an extraordinary fella," said Uncle Matthew. "Knows everything. He says those Charles the Second sugar casters are only a Georgian imitation of Charles the Second, just fancy, not valuable at all. Tomorrow we'll go round the house and I'll show you all our things and you can tell us what's what. Quite useful to have a fella like you in the family, I must say."

"That will be very nice," said Davey faintly. "And now, I think, if you don't mind, I'll go to bed. Yes, please, early morning tea—so necessary to replace the evaporation of the night." He shook hands with us all, and hurried from the room, saying to himself, "Wooing, so tired."

"Davey Warbeck is a Hon," said Bob as we were all coming down to breakfast next day.

"Yes, he seems a terrific Hon," said Linda sleepily.

"No, I mean he's a real one. Look, there's a letter for him, The Hon. David Warbeck. I've looked him up, and it's true. He's only a second son, and the eldest has got an heir, so I'm afraid Aunt Emily won't be a lady. And his father's only the second baron, created 1860, and they only start in 1720, before that it's the female line." Bob's voice was trailing off. "Still ——" he said.

WE heard Davey Warbeck, as he was coming down the stairs, say to Uncle Matthew, "Oh, no, that couldn't be a Reynolds. Prince Hoare, at his very worst, if you're lucky."

"Pig's thinkers, Davey?" Uncle Matthew lifted the lid of a hot dish.

"Oh, yes, please, Matthew, if you mean brains. So digestible."

The year which followed Aunt Emily's marriage transformed Linda and me from children, young for our ages, into lounging adolescents waiting for love. One result of the marriage was that I now spent nearly all my holidays at Alconleigh.

Davey had given up his flat in London and lived with us at Shenley, where, during term time, he made but little difference to our life, except in so far as a male presence in a female household is always salutary (the curtains, the covers and Aunt Emily's clothes underwent an enormous change for the better), but, in the holidays, he liked to carry her off on trips, and I was parked at Alconleigh. In spite of her being forty they were, I believe, very much in love; it must have been a perfect bore having me about at all, and it speaks volumes for their characters that never, for one moment, did they allow me to be aware of this. Davey, in fact, was, and has been ever since, a perfect stepfather.

By the Christmas holidays Louisa was officially "out," and going to hunt balls, a source of bitter envy to us, though Linda said scornfully that she did not appear to have many suitors. We were not coming out for another two years—it seemed an eternity, especially to Linda, who was paralyzed by her longing for love, and had no lessons or work to do which could take her mind off it. In fact, she had no other interest now except hunting; even the animals seemed to have lost all charm for her. She and I did nothing on nonhunting days but sit about, and play endless games of patience; or we lolled in the Hons' cupboard, and "measured." We had a tape measure and competed as to the largeness of our eyes, the smallness of wrists, ankles, waist and neck, length of legs and fingers, and so on. Linda always won. When we had finished "measuring" we talked of romance. These were most innocent talks, for to us, at that time, love and marriage were synonymous, we knew that they lasted forever, to the grave and far, far beyond. Our preoccupation with sin was finished; Bob, back from Eton, had been able to tell us all about Oscar Wilde, and, now that his

(Continued on Page 85)

She passed her Exams

but her stomach FLUNKED!

Cramming facts while cramming food is apt to cause mental or physical indigestion—or both! When your stomach doesn't make the grade, be gentle with it—take soothing PEPTO-BISMOL.

Never Upset an Upset Stomach!

Don't add to the upset of an upset stomach with overdoses of antacids or harsh physics! . . . Take soothing PEPTO-BISMOL! This pleasant-tasting preparation is neither an antacid nor a laxative. Its action is different. It spreads a soothing, protective coating on irritated stomach and intestinal walls . . . thus helping to calm and quiet common digestive upsets.

3 sizes at your druggist—or by the dose at his fountain.

Take soothing PEPTO-BISMOL... to relieve queasy, uneasy, upset stomach; distress after over-indulgence; nervous indigestion; heartburn . . . And to retard intestinal fermentation; gas formation; simple diarrhea. If you do not get prompt relief, consult your physician.

Norwich A NORWICH PRODUCT

Pepto-Bismol for UPSET Stomach

GOWNED BY BEN GAM

Muted lights . . . a gleaming table . . . and deep pride in a woman's eyes. Gracious evidence that 1847 Rogers Bros. is back in all its beauty! See these artistic, quality-rich patterns at your dealer's. There's such distinctive craftsmanship in every one . . . extra height and depth of ornament you'll find in no other silverplate! Always look for the year mark "1847" on the back.

COPYRIGHT 1946, INTERNATIONAL SILVER CO., MERIDEN, CONN.

1847 ROGERS BROS.

AMERICA'S FINEST SILVERPLATE

(Continued from Page 83)

me was no longer a mystery, it seemed dull, romantic and incomprehensible.

We were, of course, both in love, but with ople we had never met: Linda with the ince of Wales, and I with a fat, red-faced ddle-aged farmer, whom I sometimes saw ling through Shenley. These loves were ong, and painfully delicious; they occu- ed all our thoughts, but I think we half alized that they would be superseded in ne by real people. What we never would mit was the possibility of lovers after mar- ge. We were looking for real love, and that uld come only once in a lifetime; it hurried consecration, and thereafter never wa- red. Husbands, we knew, were not always ithful; this we must be prepared for, we ust understand and forgive. But women— at was different; only the lowest of the could love or give themselves more than ce. I do not quite know how I reconciled ese sentiments with the great hero worship till had for my mother. I suppose I put her an entirely different category.

Aunt Sadie was giving a ball for Louisa n after Christmas, and to this we pinned eat hopes. True, ither the Prince of ales nor my farmer s invited, but, as nda said, you never uld tell in the coun- . Somebody might ing them. The nce might break wn in his motor- , perhaps on his y to Badminton; at could be more tural than that he uld while away the ne by looking in?

"Pray, who is that autiful young y?"

"That is my unger daughter nda, Your Royal ghness."

"Please present her me."

They would then irl away in a waltz s accomplished the er dancers would nd aside to admire. hen they could nce no more they uld sit for the rest heevening absorbed in witty conversation. The following day an A.D.C., asking for hand ——

"But she is so young!"

"His Royal Highness is prepared to wait a r. Meanwhile, he sends this jewel."

A golden casket, a pink satin cushion, a mond rose.

My daydreams were less exalted, equally probable, and quite as real to me. I agined my farmer carrying me away from onleigh, like young Lochinvar, on a pil- behind him to the nearest smith, who n declared us man and wife.

MEANWHILE, preparations for the ball went ward. Linda's and my dresses, white feta with floating panels and embroidered d belts, were being made by Mrs. Josh. Luisa's came from Reville; it was silver é in tiny frills, each frill edged with blue .

Aunt Sadie, shaken out of her accus- ed languor, was in a state of exaggerated occupation and worry over the whole ng. For the first time that any of us could member, she found herself in opposition to Uncle Matthew. It was over the following estion: The nearest neighbor to Alcon- gh was Lord Merlin; his house at Merlin- d was about five miles away. Uncle Mat- w loathed him. There had, however, been open breach between them; the fact that y never saw each other meant nothing, Lord Merlin neither hunted, shot nor ed, while Uncle Matthew had never in his been known to eat a meal in anybody e's house.

The two men, and indeed their two houses and estates, afforded an absolute contrast. Merlinford nestled in a valley among orchards and old mellow farmhouses. It was a villa, built at about the same time as Alconleigh, but by a very different architect. It was a house to live in, not to rush out from all day to kill enemies and animals. It had Angelica Kauffman ceilings, a Chippendale staircase, furniture by Sheraton and Hepplewhite; in the hall there hung two Watteaus.

LORD Merlin added continually to its beauties. He was a great collector, and not only Merlinford, but also his houses in London and Rome, flowed over with treasures. His taste was by no means confined to antiques; he was an artist and a musician, and he had built a small but exquisite playhouse in the garden, where his astonished neighbors were sometimes invited to attend such puzzlers as Cocteau plays, the opera Mahagonny, or the latest Dada extravagances from Paris. As Lord Merlin was a famous practical joker, it was sometimes difficult to know where jokes ended and culture began. I think he was not always perfectly certain himself.

Such a man was bound to become a sort of legend to the bluff Cotswold squires among whom he lived. But they accepted him without question. Their families had always known his family, and his father, many years ago, had been a most popular M.F.H.; he was no upstart, no new rich.

The difference between Aunt Sadie and Uncle Matthew was not as to whether Lord Merlin should or should not be asked to the ball (that question did not arise, since all neighbors were automatically invited), but whether he should be asked to bring a house party. Aunt Sadie thought he should. Since her marriage the least worldly of women, she had known the world as a girl, and she knew that Lord Merlin's house party, if he consented to bring one, would have great decorative value. She also knew that, apart from this, the general note of her ball would be utter and unrelieved dowdiness.

Uncle Matthew said, "If we ask that brute Merlin to bring his friends, we shall get a lot of aesthetes, sewers from Oxford, and I wouldn't put it past him to bring some foreigners."

In the end, however, as usual, Aunt Sadie had her way. Lord Merlin accepted, and said he would bring a party of twelve people, whose names he would presently submit to Aunt Sadie.

A few days later Lord Merlin wrote another letter, asking Uncle Matthew, Aunt Sadie and Louisa to dine with him for the Merlinford Cottage Hospital Ball. Uncle Matthew naturally could not be persuaded, but Aunt Sadie and Louisa went. They came back with their eyes popping out of their heads. The house, they said, had been boiling hot, so hot that one never felt cold for a single moment, not even getting out of one's coat in the hall. They had arrived very early, long before anyone else was down, as it was the custom at Alconleigh always to leave a quarter of an hour too soon when motoring, in case there should be a puncture. This gave them the opportunity to have a good look round. The house was full of spring flowers, and smelled wonderful. The hothouses at Alconleigh were full of spring flowers, too, but somehow they never found their way into the house, and certainly would have died of cold if they had. Birds of paradise flew about the house, quite tame.

Child on a Merry-Go-Round

By Eunice Mildred Lon Coske

She rides away the sunny hours
Of the summer afternoon,
Upon a polka-dotted horse,
To the carrousel's tune.

And oh, her horse is flesh and blood;
He gallops as fast as the wind,
To jump the sunset's ribbon fence
To where the clouds are pinned.

Her eyes are bright with happiness,
Her curls float on the air;
Yet stolid folks state flatly she Has not been anywhere!

"Isn't Aunt Anna an old dear! ... and it's an electric."

"When it comes to wedding gifts, Aunt Anna prides herself on being a smart picker. Has an eye for a good name, too!"

The Seth Thomas* Console—self-starting electric pictured above—is perfect in any setting. Rich brown mahogany case ... graceful and modern. Strikes the hours and half hours.

Seth Thomas clocks are traditionally famed for their accuracy, dependability and long life. You'll soon see beautifully styled new models in better stores everywhere. Look for them. Seth Thomas Clocks, Thomaston, Connecticut.

Pyper—an outstanding alarm clock value. Self-starting electric movement. Plastic case in ivory color. $4.95, plain dial—or $5.95, luminous dial, tax extra.

Hitt—a smart and trim Seth Thomas electric clock for the modern kitchen. Lustrous plastic case in popular colors. $4.95, tax extra.

(Prices subject to change)

Seth Thomas

"The finest name in electric clocks"

SELF-STARTING ELECTRIC OR SPRING-WOUND

A product of GENERAL TIME Instruments Corporation

*SETH THOMAS IS REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Why miss out on comfort-in-action?

When you discover the soft-as-a-cloud comfort of Modess—you'll see why more and more up-and-doing gals say, "There's nothing like Modess for me!"

That special, gentle softness! That real comfort-in-action! They're why Modess makes such a world of difference!

Modess' famous safety features really lull away your worries, too. That triple, full-length safety shield is your safeguard against accidents!

And so dainty! Modess now has a fine triple-proved deodorant—sealed in every downy-soft napkin. A grand new confidence aid!

Costs no more! So, enjoy all the extras that make Modess America's luxurious sanitary napkin.

The house party, when they finally appeared—some of them shockingly late—from their bedroom, smelled even more delicious than the flowers, and looked even more exotic than the birds of paradise. Everybody had been very nice, very kind to Louisa. She sat between two beautiful young men at dinner, and turned upon them the usual gambit:

"Where do you hunt?"

"We don't," they said.

"Oh, then why do you wear pink coats?"

"Because we think they are so pretty."

We all thought this dazzlingly funny, but agreed that Uncle Matthew must never hear of it, or he might easily, even now, forbid the Merlinford party his ball.

As the great day of the Alconleigh ball approached, it became obvious that Aunt Sadie had something on her mind. Everything appeared to be going smoothly, but Aunt Sadie's brow was still furrowed with anxiety. She had collected a large house party of girls and their mammas, but not one single young man. The fact was that those of her own contemporaries who had daughters were glad to bring them, but sons were another matter. Dancing partners, sated with invitations at this time of year, knew better than to go all the way down to Gloucestershire to a house as yet untried, where they were by no means certain of finding the warmth, the luxury and fine wines which they looked upon as their due, where they had not been offered a mount, and where no mention had been made of a shoot, not even a day with the cocks. Uncle Matthew had far too much respect for his horses and pheasants to offer them up to be messed about by any callow unknown boy.

So here was a horrible situation. Ten females, four mothers and six girls, were advancing from various parts of England, and only two males, one of whom was not yet in tails.

The telephone now became red-hot, telegrams flew in every direction. Aunt Sadie abandoned all pride, and launched a series of desperate appeals. Mr. Wills, the vicar, consented to leave Mrs. Wills at home, and dine, unattached, at Alconleigh. Mrs. Aster, the agent's wife, also made the same sacrifice, and Master Aster, the agent's son, aged not quite seventeen, was hurried off to Oxford to get himself a ready-made dress suit. Davey Warbeck was ordered to leave Aunt Emily and come.

Most of the human race is still groaning under the belief that each of us is a special unrelated creation, just as men for ages saw no relationships between the fowls of the air, the beasts of the field and the fish of the sea. But, thank God, we are beginning to learn that unity is as much a law of life as selfish struggle, and love a more vital force than avarice or lust of power or place. A Wandering Carpenter knew it, and taught it, twenty centuries ago.

From Under My Elm, by DAVID GRAYSON. (Copyright 1924 by Doubleday, Doran & Company, Inc.)

At last Uncle Matthew saw that the situation would have to be taken in hand. He did not care two hoots about the ball. But he did care for Aunt Sadie's peace of mind, he could not bear to see her looking so worried, and decided to take steps. He went up to London and attended the last sitting of the House of Lords before the recess. His journey was entirely fruitful.

"Stromboli, Paddington, Fort William and Curtley have accepted," he told Aunt Sadie, with the air of a conjurer producing four wonderful fat rabbits out of one small wineglass. "But I had to promise them a shoot. Bob, go and tell Craven I want to see him in the morning."

By these complicated devices the numbers at the dinner table would now be even, and Aunt Sadie was infinitely relieved, though inclined to be giggly over Uncle Matthew's rabbits. Lord Stromboli, Lord Fort William and the Duke of Paddington were old dancing partners of her own; Sir Archibald Curtley, Librarian of the House, was a well-known diner-out in the smart intellectual world, he was over seventy and very arthritic.

After dinner, of course, the dance would be another matter. Mr. Wills would then be joined by Mrs. Wills, Captain Aster by Mrs. Aster, Uncle Matthew and Bob could hardly be counted as partners, while the House of Lords contingent was more likely to head for the bridge table than for the dancin floor.

"I fear it will be sink or swim for the girls said Aunt Sadie dreamily.

This, then, is a ball. This is life, what v have been waiting for all these years; he we are and here it is, a ball, actualiy going round us. How extraordinary it feels, su unreality, like a dream. But, alas, so utter different from what one had imagined. T men so small and ugly, the women so frows and their faces so red, the oilstoves so smell and not really very warm, but, above all, t men, either so old or so ugly. And when th ask one to dance it is not at all like floati away into a delicious cloud, pressed by manly arm to a manly bosom, but stumb stumble, kick, kick. They balance, like Ki Stork, on one leg, while, with the other, th come down onto one's toe. As for witty co versation, it is wonderful if any conversatio even of the most banal and jerky descriptio lasts through a whole dance and the sitti out. It is mostly, "Oh, sorry—oh, my faul

We had never learned to dance, and, some reason, we had supposed it to be a thi which everybody could do quite easily a naturally. I think Linda realized there a then what it took me years to learn: that t behavior of civilized man really has nothi to do with nature, that all is artificiality a art more or less perfected.

The evening was saved from being an ut disillusionment by the Merlinford ho party. They came immensely late, but th seemed at once to give the party a new mosphere. They flo ished and shone w jewels, lovely cloth brilliant hair and d zling complexions; wh they danced they rea did seem to float, cept when it was Charleston, and th though angular, was accomplished that made us gasp w admiration. Their co versation was quite e dently both daring a witty. Linda was tranced by them, a decided then and th that she would beco one of these brilliant beings and live in th world, even if it took her a lifetime to acco plish. I did not aspire to this. I saw t they were admirable, but they were far moved from me and my orbit.

That night in bed I thought more th ever of the safe sheltering arms of my Shen farmer. The next morning Linda told me t she had renounced the Prince of Wales.

"I have come to the conclusion," she s "that court circles would be rather d Lady Dorothy is a lady in waiting, and I at her."

The ball had a very unexpected seq Lord Fort William's mother invited A Sadie and Louisa to stay at their place Sussex for a hunt ball, and shortly afterw his married sister asked them to a shoot a an infirmary ball. During this visit, L Fort William proposed to Louisa and w accepted. She came back to Alconleigh fiancée, to find herself the center of att tion there for the first time since the birth Linda had put her nose forever out of joi This was indeed an excitement, and trem dous chats took place in the Hons' cupboa both with and without Louisa. She had nice little diamond ring on her third fing but was not as communicative as we co have wished on the subject of Lord ("Joh now to us, but how could we remember tha Fort William's love-making, retiring, w many blushes, behind the smoke screen such things' being too sacred to speak of

He soon appeared again in person, and were able to observe him as an individu Lord Fort William was thirty-nine, but certainly looked much more. His hair seem to be slipping off backward—like an eic

(Continued on Page 88)

Unceasing Excitement!

Relentless Suspense!

CARY GRANT · INGRID BERGMAN

in ALFRED HITCHCOCK'S

Notorious!

with

CLAUDE RAINS

LOUIS CALHERN · LENORE ULRIC

MADAME LEOPOLDINE KONSTANTIN

Directed by ALFRED HITCHCOCK

Written by BEN HECHT

RKO RADIO PICTURES

7 OUT OF 10 TISSUE USERS SAY

"Of all brands I like Kleenex best"

Now!
MORE KLEENEX
being made than ever before.
So keep asking for it!

One tissue stands far ahead of all other brands in public preference ...and that one tissue is Kleenex!

In a certified nation-wide poll of thousands of tissue users, 7 out of every 10 went on record to say: "Of all tissues, I like Kleenex best!"

7 out of 10. Such overwhelming preference shows there must be a real difference between Kleenex Tissues and other brands. A special process used only for Kleenex keeps this tissue luxuriously soft, dependably strong. That's why others can't be "just like Kleenex."

And only Kleenex of all tissues gives you the handy Serv-a-Tissue Box. Yes, only with Kleenex can you pull a tissue and have the next one pop up ready for use.

So keep asking for Kleenex—America's favorite tissue. Each and every month there'll be more and more Kleenex Tissues for you.

There's only one Kleenex

AMERICA'S FAVORITE TISSUE

*T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat Off.

(Continued from Page 86)

down in the night, Linda said—and he had a generally uncared-for middle-aged appearance. Louisa, however, loved him, and was happy.

Louisa was married in the spring. Her wedding dress, of tulle frills and sprays of orange blossoms, was short to the knee and had a train, as was the hideous fashion then.

Jassy got very worked up about it. "So unsuitable."

"Why, Jassy?"

"To be buried in, I mean. Women are always buried in their wedding dresses, aren't they? Think of your poor old dead legs sticking out."

"Oh, Jassy, don't be such a ghoul. I'll wrap them up in my train."

"Not very nice for the undertakers."

Louisa refused to have bridesmaids. I think she felt that it would be agreeable, for once in her life, to be more looked at than Linda.

The wedding day was fine and balmy, and, when we went in the morning to see how Mrs. Wills and Mrs. Josh were getting on with the decorations, we found the little church bunchy with spring flowers.

Neither Linda nor I had ever been to a wedding before. From the moment when we left Louisa at Alconleigh with Uncle Matthew, to follow us in the Daimler in exactly eleven minutes, the atmosphere became positively dramatic. Louisa, enveloped from head to knee in tulle, sat gingerly on the edge of a chair, while Uncle Matthew, watch in hand, strode up and down the hall. We walked, as we always did, to the church, and arranged ourselves in the family pew at the back of it, from which vantage point we were able to observe our neighbors, all tricked out in their best clothes for the wedding. The only person in the whole congregation who looked exactly as usual was Lord Merlin.

When you get to heaven you will find many people there whom you did not expect to see. Many will be surprised to see you there too.

Suddenly there was a stir. John and his best man, Lord Stromboli, appearing like two jacks-in-the-box from nowhere, stood beside the altar steps. Mrs. Wills struck up Here Comes the Bride, with all the stops out, and Louisa, her veil over her face, was being dragged up the aisle at double-quick time by Uncle Matthew. At this moment I think Linda would gladly have changed places with Louisa, even at the cost—the heavy cost—of being happy forever after with John Fort William. In what seemed no time at all Louisa was being dragged down the aisle again by John, with her veil back, while Mrs. Wills nearly broke the windows, so loud and so triumphant was her Wedding March.

EVERYTHING had gone like clockwork, and there was only one small incident. Davey slipped out of the family pew almost unobserved, in the middle of As Pants the Hart—Louisa's favorite hymn—and went straight to London, making one of the wedding cars take him to Merlinford station. That evening he telephoned to say that he had twisted his tonsil, singing, and had thought it better to go immediately to Sir Andrew Macpherson, the nose, throat and ears man, who was keeping him in bed for a week. The most extraordinary accidents always seemed to overtake poor Davey.

When Louisa had gone away and the wedding guests had left Alconleigh, a sense of flatness descended upon the house. Linda became plunged into such despairing gloom that even Aunt Sadie was alarmed. Linda told me afterward that she thought a great deal about killing herself, and would most likely have done so had the material difficulties not been so great.

"You know what it is," she said, "trying to kill rabbits. Well, think of oneself!"

Two years seemed an absolute eternity, not worth plowing through even with the prospect—which she never doubted—of blissful love at the end of it. Of course this was the time when Linda should have been made to work, as I was, all day and hard, with no time for silly dreaming. I think Aunt Sadie dimly perceived this; she urged her to learn cooking, to occupy herself in the garden. Linda furiously refused, nor would she do jobs in the village, nor help Aunt Sadie in the hundred-and-one chores which fall to the lot of a country squire's wife.

Lord Merlin came to her rescue. He had taken a fancy to her at Louisa's wedding, and asked Aunt Sadie to bring her over to Merlinford sometime. A few days later he rang up. Uncle Matthew answered the telephone, and shouted to Aunt Sadie, without taking his mouth away from the receiver:

"That hog Merlin wants to speak to you."

Lord Merlin, who must have heard, was quite unmoved by this. Poor Aunt Sadie, however, was very much flustered, and accepted an invitation which she would otherwise most probably have refused, to take Linda to Merlinford for luncheon.

LORD Merlin seemed to become immediately aware of Linda's state of mind, was really shocked to discover that she was doing no lessons at all, and did what he could to provide some interests for her. He showed her his pictures, explained them to her, talked about art and literature, and gave her books to read. He let fall the suggestion, which was taken up by Aunt Sadie, that she and Linda should attend a course of lectures in Oxford, and he also mentioned that the Shakespeare Festival was now in progress at Stratford-on-Avon.

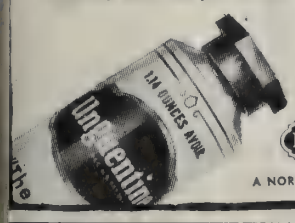
Outings of this kind, which Aunt Sadie herself very much enjoyed, soon became a regular feature of life at Alconleigh. Uncle Matthew scoffed a bit, but he never interfered with anything Aunt Sadie wanted to do.

So Linda's life, instead of being on one flat level plain of tedium, was now, to some extent, filled with outside interests. She perceived that the world she wanted to be in, the witty, sparkling world of Lord Merlin and his friends, was interested in things of the mind, and that she would be able to shine in it only if she became in some sort educated. She sat all day hunched up in a corner of the library sofa, reading until her eyes gave out. She often rode over to Merlinford, and, unbeknownst to her parents—who never would have allowed her to go there, or indeed anywhere, alone—left Josh in the stable yard where he had congenial friends, and chatted for hours with Lord Merlin on all sorts of subjects. He knew that she had an intensely romantic character, he foresaw much trouble ahead, and he continually urged upon her the necessity for an intellectual background.

What could possibly have induced Linda to marry Anthony Kroesig? During the nine years of their life together people asked this question with irritating regularity. He was admittedly very rich, but so were others, and surely the fascinating Linda had only to choose. The answer was, of course, that, quite simply, she was in love with him. Linda was far too romantic to marry without love, and indeed I, who was present at their first meeting and during most of their courtship, always understood why it had happened. Tony, in those days, and to unsophisticated country girls like us, seemed a glorious and glamorous creature. When we first saw him, at Linda's and my coming-out ball, he was in his last year at Oxford, a splendid young man with a Rolls-Royce, plenty of beautiful horses, exquisite clothes. In person he was tall and fair, on the heavy side, but with a well-proportioned figure; he had already a faint touch of pomposity, a thing which Linda had never come across before, and which she found not unattractive. She took him, in short, at his own valuation.

What immediately gave him great prestige in her eyes was that he came to the ball with Lord Merlin. It was really most unlucky, especially as it happened that he had only been asked at the eleventh hour, as a stopgap.

Linda's ball was not nearly such a fiasco as Louisa's had been. Louisa, a married



SUNBURN is a BURN

The thing to use is UNGUENTINE

Sun-scorched skin is burned skin. Treat it as a burn. Apply soothing, antiseptic UNGUENTINE at once.

It relieves pain
It fights infection
It promotes healing

In handy tubes and jars at all drug stores.

NOW! Greater Relief from CORNS

BLUE-JAY with Nupercaine!

Get Blue-Jay at any drug or toilet goods counter.

EXCLUSIVE with Blue-Jay, anesthetic Nupercaine curbs surface pain (inflamed area around top of corn) as NO other corn plaster does.

INSTANTLY stops pain caused by shoe-pressure.

GENTLE medication acts to loosen corn's hard "core" — you simply lift it out in a few days.

TWO sizes of Blue-Jay—Standard and Little Toe (where most corns occur). Also special Blue-Jay for Soft Corns.

BLUE JAY Corn Plasters

America's Largest-Selling Corn Plaster

A product of BAUER & BLACK

Division of The Kendall Company, Chicago 16

Grow Beautiful ROSES

Use TRI-OGEN

Kills sucking and chewing insects, controls Blackspot, Mildew and fungous diseases, stimulates plant growth. Use on roses, flowers, and vegetables. In spray and dust form at garden and hardware stores. FREE Bulletin.

Rose Mfg. Co.
206 Ogen Bldg.
BEACON, N. Y.

London lady now, produced a lot of young men for Aunt Sadie's house party, dull, fair Scotch boys mostly, with nice manners. They got on quite well with the girls invited by Aunt Sadie, and the house party seemed to "go" very nicely, though Linda had her head in the air, saying they were all too impossibly dreary for words.

Davey and Aunt Emily were staying in the house to see me come out, and Davey constituted himself a sort of bodyguard to Uncle Matthew, hoping to stand as much as possible between him and the more unbearable forms of irritation.

"What a pity," said Linda as we struggled into our ball dresses—proper London ones this time—"that we are dressing up like this, and all for those terrible productions of Louisa's. Waste, I call it."

"You never know in the country," I said. "Somebody may bring the Prince of Wales."

Linda shot me a furious look under her eyelashes. "Actually," she said, "I am pinning great hopes on Lord Merlin's party. I'm sure he'll bring some really interesting people."

Lord Merlin's party arrived, as before, very late, and in very high spirits. Linda immediately noticed a large, blond young man in a beautiful pink coat. He was dancing with a girl called Baby Fairweather, and she introduced him to Linda. He asked her to dance the next. Linda and I had both been having dancing lessons, and, if we did not exactly float round the room, our progress was by no means so embarrassing as it had been before.

TONY was in a happy mood, induced by Lord Merlin's excellent brandy, and Linda was pleased to find how well and easily she was getting on with this member of the Merlinford set. Everything she said seemed to make him laugh; presently they went to sit out, she chattered away, and Tony roared with laughter. This was immediately noticed by Uncle Matthew, who began to walk up and down in front of them, giving them furious looks, until Davey, observing this danger signal, came up and hurried him away.

"Who is that with Linda?"

"Kroesig—Governor of the Bank of England, you know—his son."

"I never expected to harbor a full-blooded Hun in this house—who on earth asked him?"

"Now, Matthew, don't get excited. The Kroesigs aren't Huns; they've been over here for generations, they are a very highly respected family of English bankers."

"Once a Hun always a Hun," said Uncle Matthew. "Besides, the fella must be a gate crasher."

"No, he's not. He came with Merlin."

"I knew that Merlin would start bringing foreigners here sooner or later. I always said he would, but I didn't think even he would land one with a German."

Tony, meanwhile, thought Linda ravishingly pretty, and great fun, which indeed she was. He told her so, and danced with her again and again, until Lord Merlin, quite as much put out as Uncle Matthew by what was happening, firmly and very early took his party home.

"See you at the meet tomorrow," said Tony, winding a white silk scarf round his neck.

Linda was silent and preoccupied for the rest of the evening.

"You're not to go hunting, Linda," said Aunt Sadie the next day, when Linda came downstairs in her riding habit. "It's too rude; you must stay and look after your guests."

"Darling, darling mummy," said Linda, "the meet's at Cock's Barn, and you know how one can't resist. And Flora hasn't been out for a week, she'll go mad. Be a love and take them to see the Roman villa or something, and I swear to come back early. And they've got Fanny and Louisa, after all."

It was this unlucky hunt that clinched matters as far as Linda was concerned. The first person she saw at the meet was Tony, on a splendid chestnut horse. Linda herself was always beautifully mounted. Uncle Mat-

Mrs. George Jay Gould, Jr.

New York society welcomes back charming Mrs. Gould from many months in Washington. An exquisite complexion sets off Mrs. Gould's velvet-brown eyes and lovely dark hair. "For a quick complexion 're-styling,'" she says, "I have a 1-Minute Mask with Pond's Vanishing Cream. After one minute, my skin feels different—so beautifully soft and 'unruffled'!"

1-Minute Mask

"Most effective complexion 'pick-up' I know!"

Mrs. Gould has a 1-Minute Mask three or four times weekly

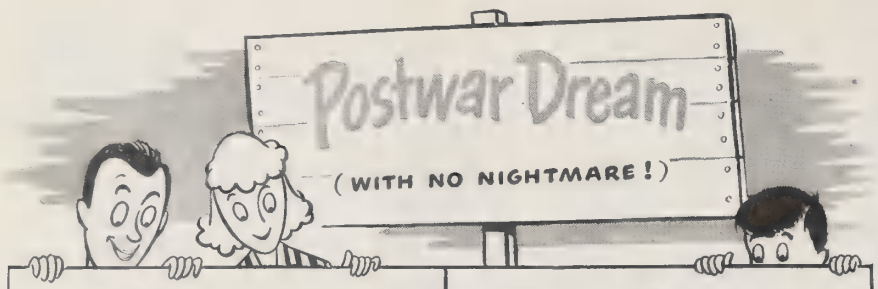
Give your complexion this quick glamour refresher!

Mask your face—all but eyes—with a fragrant, snowy coat of Pond's Vanishing Cream. You'll love its cool, refreshing "feel"!

Right away, what skin specialists call "keratolytic action" goes to work. The Mask of Pond's Vanishing Cream loosens and dissolves ruffly bits of dead skin and imbedded dirt particles. Gets them ready to tissue off!



After just one minute—tissue off the Mask. See how much brighter and more glamorous your complexion looks! How much more satiny it feels! And when you apply make-up, you'll be thrilled by the soft, even way it goes on—to stay!

Grand powder base, too!

"My favorite beauty base for make-up is Pond's Vanishing Cream smoothed on very lightly—and left on! It smooths . . . protects. Keeps my make-up fresh for hours!" says Mrs. Gould.

Get a BIG jar of glamour-making Masks!

At last! (They had waited since June '41.)
The Andersons' dream of a house was begun!

He beamed at the blueprints,
"What windows! So wide!"
"I shudder to think of the washing!" she cried.

But shopping one day
Mrs. A. made a find—
'Twas WINDEX, to take all such cares from her mind!

And now in her dream house
the windows are done
With a spray, and a wipe—and they shine like the sun!

The picture frames glisten,
the mirrors are gleaming,
With WINDEX such cleaning is easy as dreaming!

The 20-ounce size is a bargain.
Go grab it!
And shine up the glass in the house you inhabit!

Get Brighter Windows Quicker With—

WINDEX

Trade-Mark Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. by The Drackett Company

WINDEX is a must for house cleaning. No streaking, no film, when you insist on this noninflammable, oil-free cleaner that costs but a fraction of a cent per window. Don't trust cheap substitutes.

Costs less than 1¢ per window—for extra economy, buy the big 20-ounce size.

Copr. 1946, The Drackett Co.

thew was proud of her horsemanship, and had given her two pretty, lively little horses. They found at once, and there was a short sharp run, during which Linda and Tony, both in a somewhat showing-off mood, rode side by side over the stone walls. Presently, on a village green, they checked. One or two hounds put up a hare, which lost its head, jumped into a duck pond and began to swim about in a hopeless sort of way.

Linda's eyes filled with tears. "Oh, the poor hare!"

Tony got off his horse and plunged into the pond. He rescued the hare, waded out again, his fine white breeches covered with green muck, and put it, wet and gasping, into Linda's lap. It was the one romantic gesture of his life.

At the end of the day Linda left hounds to take a short cut home across country. Tony opened a gate for her, took off his hat, and said:

"You are a-most beautiful rider, you know. Good night; when I'm back in Oxford I'll ring you up."

When Linda got home she rushed me off to the Hons' cupboard and told me all this. She was in love.

Given Linda's frame of mind during the past two endless years, she was obviously destined to fall in love with the first young man who came along. It could hardly have been otherwise; she need not, however, have married him. This was made inevitable by the behavior of Uncle Matthew. Most unfortunately Lord Merlin, the one person who might perhaps have been able to make Linda see that Tony was not all she thought him, went to Rome the week after the ball, and remained abroad for a year.

Tony went back to Oxford and Linda sat about waiting, waiting, waiting. Three weeks passed, and then one evening, after dinner, the telephone bell rang. Linda answered herself. Her heart was choking her, she could scarcely speak.

"Hullo, is that Linda? It's Tony Kroesig. Will you come to lunch next Thursday?"

"Oh! But I should never be allowed to."

"Oh, rot"—very impatiently. "Several other girls are coming down from London—bring your cousin if you like."

"All right, that will be lovely."

"See you then—about one—Seven King Edward Street. I expect you know the rooms; Altringham had them when he was up."

Linda came away from the telephone trembling, and whispered to me to come quick to the Hons' cupboard. We were absolutely forbidden to see young men at any hour unchaperoned, and other girls did not count as chaperons. We knew quite well that we would not be allowed to have luncheon with a young man in his lodgings with any chaperon at all, short of Aunt Sadie herself.

In the Hons' cupboard we talked and talked. There was no question in our minds but that we must go; not to do so would be death for Linda, she would never get over it. But how to escape? There was only one way that we could devise, and it was full of risk. A very dull girl called Lavender Davis lived with her very dull parents about five miles away, and once in a blue moon Linda, complaining vociferously, was sent over to luncheon with them, driving herself in Aunt Sadie's little car. We must pretend that we were going to do that.

As we were going upstairs to bed, Linda said to Aunt Sadie, "That was Lavender ringing up. She wants Fanny and me to lunch there on Thursday."

"But, darling, last time you said you'd never go again as long as you lived.

"Oh, mummy, you don't understand. The whole point is, a man is coming who brought up a baby badger, and I do so want to meet him." It was known to be one of Linda's greatest ambitions, to bring up a baby badger.

"I see. Well, good night, then, ducks."

"We must get hold of some powder."

"And rouge."

These commodities were utterly forbidden by Uncle Matthew, who liked to see female complexions in a state of nature.

PULLMAN
presents the Century
Fireside Chair

A MASTERPIECE OF FINE CHAIRMAKING . . . CREATED TO SELL AT ABOUT $100

- Finest quality channel-back upholstering
- Full wood frame, completely encircling back
- Delicately carved
- "No Sag" long lasting spring construction

See the Pullman "Century" at finer stores everywhere. Truly distinguished—in beauty and in duty. Get one or a pair, for your fireside or that hard-to-fill corner. $100 cannot buy a more luxurious, long-service chair. Take the "Century" today!

Soon! THE NEW PULLMAN SLEEPER

Worth waiting for—this even finer, more slumberful version of America's leading pre-war sofa bed

PULLMAN Couch Company
Chicago 9 · New York 16 · Newton Falls, Ohio

Look for this famous emblem—the hallmark of quality living room furniture

A high-style sofa from the PULLMAN Heirloom Group

BISSELL

* REG. U. S. PATENT OFF.

SWEEPERS

Sweep QUICKLY — Empty EASILY

 If you need a sweeper now—you may be able to get a Bissell from your dealer—production is still limited. If you can wait—you'll be glad you did.

Bissell Carpet Sweeper Co., Grand Rapids 2, Mich.

"I once read in a book that you can use geranium juice for rouge."

"Geraniums aren't out at this time of year, silly."

"We can blue our eyelids out of Jassy's paintbox."

"And sleep in curlers."

"I'll get the verbena soap out of mummy's bathroom. If we let it melt in the bath, and soak for hours in it, we shall smell delicious."

We left our car in the Clarendon yard and, as we were very early, having allowed half an hour in case of two punctures, we made for Elliston & Cavell's ladies' room and gazed at ourselves, with a tiny feeling of uncertainty, in the looking glasses there. Our cheeks had round scarlet patches, our lips were the same color, but only at the edges—inside it had already worn off—and our eyelids were blue, all out of Jassy's paintbox. Our noses were white. In short, we looked like a couple of Dutch dolls.

"We must keep our ends up," said Linda uncertainly.

"Oh, dear," I said, "the thing about me is, I always feel happier with my end down."

We gazed and gazed, hoping thus, in some magical way, to make ourselves feel less peculiar. Presently we did a little work with damp handkerchiefs, and toned our faces down a bit. Now that we had actually achieved our objective, we were beginning to feel horribly nervous.

I never yet heard man or woman much abused that I was not inclined to think the better of them, and to transfer the suspicion or dislike to the one who found pleasure in pointing out the defects of another.

—JANE PORTER:
Tony's Scrap Book (Reilly & Lee Co.)

At one o'clock we arrived in Tony's room. He was alone, but evidently a large party was expected: the table, a square one with a coarse white linen cloth, seemed to have a great many places. An awkward silence fell.

"Been hunting at all?" he asked Linda.

"Oh, yes, we were out yesterday."

"Good day?"

"Yes, very. We found at once, and had a five-mile point and then ——" Linda suddenly remembered that Lord Merlin had once said to her, "Hunt as much as you like, but never talk about it; it's the most boring subject in the world."

"But that's marvelous, a five-mile point. I must come out with the Heythrop again soon; they are doing awfully well this season, I hear. We had a good day yesterday too."

He embarked on a detailed account of every minute of it. I saw just what Lord Merlin meant. Linda, however, hung upon his words with breathless interest.

At last noises were heard in the street, and he went to the window.

"Good," he said. "Here are the others."

The others had come down from London in a huge Daimler, and poured, chattering, into the room. Four pretty girls and a young man. Presently some undergraduates appeared and completed the party. It was not really very enjoyable from our point of view; they all knew one another too well. They gossiped away, roared with laughter at private jokes, and showed off; still, we felt that this was life, and would have been quite happy just looking on had it not been for that ghastly feeling of guilt, which was now beginning to give us a pain rather like indigestion. Linda turned quite pale every time the door opened. I think she really felt that Uncle Matthew might appear at any moment, cracking a whip. As soon as we decently could, we said good-by and fled.

On Saturday the blow fell.

"Linda and Fanny, Fa wants you in the business room," said Jassy, meeting us in the drive as we came in from riding. We looked at each other with apprehension.

"Better get it over," said Linda, and we hurried to the business room, where we saw at once that the worst had occurred.

STILL THE BEST KNOWN, SAFE, PROVEN WAY TO MOTH PROOF

NO ODOR – NO WRAPPING – NO PUTTING AWAY!

OTHER USES

There is no "off season" for moths. Moths work all year round. One spraying with LARVEX will moth proof upholstered furniture for a whole year!

Moths will never eat coats or suits sprayed with LARVEX.

ABSOLUTE PROOF

Tests show live moth worms on untreated and treated cloth. Absolute proof moth worms will not eat material sprayed with LARVEX.

This Amazing Successful Method—Used By Big Woolen Mills—Now Sold For Home Use

The wise, modern way to protect your suits, coats, dresses, rugs and sofas from moth-damage is to actually MOTH PROOF them. But don't take chances with new products which haven't fully proved their worth. Instead—BE SAFE—BE SURE—use LARVEX!

LARVEX has been proved absolutely SAFE and SURE for over 20 years. Just a few minutes spraying with LARVEX will actually MOTH PROOF woolens for a whole year. And there's no bothersome wrapping or putting away. No shrieking moth ball odor. Just spray with LARVEX and hang garment right back in its usual place. It's all so easy.

Tests have proven that moth worms will actually commit suicide by starvation rather than eat anything treated with good old reliable LARVEX

LARVEX is odorless and stainless. So play safe—sure. Always moth proof this modern way with LARVEX. Dry cleaning does not remove LARVEX protection. Washing does. But dry cleaning does NOT. Only 79¢ a pint. $1.19 a quart.

LARVEX

Is your work slowed up by one of these?

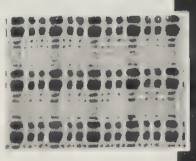
Back pain or injury

Inoperable hernia

Dropped abdominal organs



A recent operation

Movable kidney

Spinal arthritis

Ask your doctor how a SPENCER SUPPORT can help you

You may choose to have your Spencer made of open, airy summer fabric like this. Fabric is pictured actual size.

Each Spencer Support and Breast Support is individually designed to meet the physical needs of the one person who is to wear it. Every Spencer is guaranteed never to lose its shape. A support that loses its shape loses its effectiveness.

Spencers are prescribed for the conditions mentioned above and for maternity, after childbirth, spinal curvature, breast operation and other breast problems.

ABOVE: A Spencer Free-Action Support designed individually for the woman pictured wearing it, to provide abdominal and back support. Her Spencer Breast Support holds her breasts in healthful position, preserving tone of delicate breast tissues.

SEND COUPON FOR FREE INFORMATION

Send coupon below for fascinating booklet or look in telephone directory for "Spencer corsetiere"—or "Spencer Support Shop." Spencer Supports are sold by women dealers who have had special training qualifying them to follow your doctor's directions. Dealers in Spencer Supports neither diagnose nor prescribe If you have troublesome symptoms, see your doctor.

Spencer Supports for Men Are Masculine in Appearance
Many thousands of men are wearing Spencers. Used for back pain or injury and following spinal or abdominal operation; spinal arthritis; movable kidney; heart conditions where abdominal support is helpful; certain cases of hernia.
Check here ☐ for free booklet.
Also made in Canada at Rock Island, Quebec

TO: ANNE SPENCER SEND TODAY
Spencer, Incorporated
141 Derby Avenue, New Haven 7, Conn.
JUNE. 1946
Please send your free booklet for women.
Name.....
(Please Print)
Street.....
City & State.....

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT

SPENCER INDIVIDUALLY DESIGNED SUPPORTS
Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.
FOR ABDOMEN, BACK AND BREASTS

Aunt Sadie, looking unhappy, and Uncle Matthew, grinding his teeth, confronted us with our crime.

"Do you realize," he roared, "that, if you were married women, your husbands could divorce you for doing this?"

Linda began to say no they couldn't. She knew the laws of divorce from having read the whole of the Russell case off newspapers with which the fires in the spare bedrooms were laid.

"Don't interrupt your father," said Aunt Sadie, with a warning look.

Uncle Matthew, however, did not even notice. He was in the full flood and violence of his storm. "Now we know you can't be trusted to behave yourselves, we shall have to take certain steps. Fanny can go straight home tomorrow, and I never want you here again, do you understand? As for you, miss, there's no more question of a London season now. We shall have to watch you in future every minute of the day—not very agreeable, to have a child one can't trust. And no more hunting this year. You're lucky not to be thrashed; most fathers would give you a good hiding, do you hear? Now you can both go to bed, and you're not to speak to each other before Fanny leaves. I'm sending her over in the car tomorrow."

It was months before we knew how they found out. But the explanation was simple. Somebody had left a scarf in Tony Kroesig's rooms, and he had rung up to ask whether it belonged to either of us.

As always, Uncle Matthew's bark was worse than his bite, though, while it lasted, it was the most terrible row within living memory at Alconleigh. I was sent back to Aunt Emily the next day, Linda waving and crying out of her bedroom window, "Oh, you are lucky, not to be me." She was stopped from hunting once or twice. Then relaxation began, and gradually things returned to normal.

Plans for the London season went on being made, and went on including me. I heard afterward that both Davey and John Fort William took it upon themselves to tell Aunt Sadie and Uncle Matthew that, according to modern ideas, what we had done was absolutely normal, though, of course, they were obliged to own that it was very wrong of us to have told so many and such shameless lies.

WE both said we were very sorry, and promised that we would never act in such an underhand way again, but always ask Aunt Sadie if there was something we specially wanted to do.

"Only then, of course, it will always be no," Linda said, giving me a hopeless look.

Aunt Sadie took a furnished house for the summer near Belgrave Square. We really had great fun, although I don't think it was dancing that we enjoyed so much as the fact of being grown up and in London. At the dances the great bar to enjoyment was what Linda called the chaps. They were terribly dull, all on the lines of the ones Louisa had brought to Alconleigh; Linda, still in her dream of love for Tony, could not distinguish between them and never even knew their names. Tony was at Oxford for his last term, and did not come to London until quite the end of the season.

Clothes were probably our chief preoccupation at this time. Once Linda had been to a few dress shows, and got her eye in, she had all hers made by Mrs. Josh, and, somehow, they had a sort of originality and prettiness that I never achieved, although mine, which were bought at expensive shops, cost about five times as much. Linda had one particularly ravishing ball dress made of masses of pale gray tulle down to her feet. Most of the dresses were still short that summer, and Linda made a sensation whenever she appeared in her yards of tulle.

She was wearing this dress when Tony proposed to her in the Berkeley Square summerhouse at six o'clock on a fine July morning. He had been down from Oxford about a fortnight, and it was soon obvious that he had eyes for nobody but her. He went to all the same dances, and, after stumping round with a few other girls, would take Linda to pper, and thereafter spend the evening ued to her side. Aunt Sadie seemed to tice nothing, but to the whole rest of the butante world the outcome was a foregone nclusion, the only question being when d where Tony would propose.

© 1946. TRADE MARK REG. MOJUD HOSIERY CO., INC., N.Y.C.

The ball from which they had emerged—was in a lovely old house on the east side of erkeley Square, since demolished—was only st alive, the band sleepily thump-thumped tunes through the nearly empty rooms; or Aunt Sadie sat on a little gold chair ying to keep her eyes open with me beside r, dead tired and very cold, my partners all ne home. It was broad daylight. Linda d been away for hours, nobody seemed to ve set eyes on her since suppertime, and nt Sadie, though dominated by her fearful epiness, was apprehensive, and rather gry.

Suddenly the band perked up and began play John Peel as a prelude to God Save e King. Linda, in a gray cloud, was gallop- up and down the room with Tony; one k at her face told all. We climbed into a xi behind Aunt Sadie—she never would ep a chauffeur up at night—we splashed ay past the great hoses that were washing e streets, we climbed the stairs to our oms, without a word being spoken by any us. A thin oblique sunlight was striking e chimney pots as I opened my window. I s too tired to think, I just fell into bed.

As Linda came sleepily downstairs the xt morning, Uncle Matthew shouted furi- sly at her from the hall, "That Hun roesig has just telephoned, he wanted speak to you. I don't want you mixed up th any Germans, do you understand?"

"Well, I am mixed up," said Linda. "As it ppens, I'm engaged to him."

At this point Aunt Sadie dashed out of r little morning room, took Uncle Matthew the arm and led him away. Linda locked rself into her bedroom and cried for an hour ile Jassy, Matt, Robin and I speculated on future developments in the nursery.

THERE was a great deal of opposition to the gagement, not only from Uncle Matthew, o was beside himself with disappointment d disgust at Linda's choice, but also quite much from Sir Leicester Kroesig. He did t want Tony to marry until he was settled his career in the City, and then he had ped for an alliance with one of the other g banking families. Sir Leicester and Uncle atthew met, disliked each other on sight, d were at one in their determination to op the marriage. Tony was sent off to merica to work in a bank in New York, and or Linda, the season now being at an end, as taken home to eat her heart out at Al- nleigh.

"Oh, Jassy, lend me your running-away money to go to New York with."

"No, Linda. I've saved and scraped for five years, ever since I was seven; I simply can't begin all over again now. Besides, I shall want it when I run away myself."

"But, darling, I'll give it back; Tony will, when we're married."

"I know men," said Jassy darkly. She was adamant.

"If only Lord Merlin were here," Linda wailed. But Lord Merlin was still in Rome.

She had fifteen shillings sixpence in the world, and was obliged to content herself with writing immense screeds to Tony every day. She carried about in her pocket a quantity of short, dull letters in an immature handwriting and with a New York postmark.

After a few months Tony came back, and told his father that he could not settle down to business or banking, or think about his future career at all, until the date for his marriage had been fixed. This was quite the proper line to take with Sir Leicester. Sir Leicester finally gave his consent.

As Linda had virtually worked herself into a decline, and was poisoning the lives of all around her by her intense disagreeableness, Aunt Sadie, secretly much relieved by the turn things had taken, persuaded Uncle Matthew that the marriage, though by no means ideal, was inevitable, and that, if he did not wish to alienate forever his favorite child, he had better put a good face on it.

The engagement was duly announced in the Times. The Kroesigs invited the Radletts to spend a Saturday to Monday at their house near Guildford. Lady Kroesig, in her letter to Aunt Sadie, said it would be nice to get to know each other better. Uncle Matthew flew into a furious temper. It was one of his idiosyncrasies that, not only did he never stay in other people's houses—except, very occasionally, with relations—but he regarded it as a positive insult that he should be invited to do so. When Aunt Sadie had calmed him down a bit, she put forward the suggestion that the Kroesig family, father, mother, daughter Marjorie and Tony, should be asked instead if they would spend Saturday to Monday at Alconleigh. Poor Uncle Matthew, having swallowed the great evil of Linda's engagement, had, to do him justice, resolved to put the best face he could on it, and had no wish to make trouble for her with her future in-laws.

So the Kroesigs were invited. They accepted, and the date was fixed. Aunt Sadie then got into a panic, and summoned Aunt Emily and Davey. (I was staying at Alconleigh anyhow, for a few weeks' hunting.)

The arrival at Alconleigh of the four Kroesigs could not have been more inauspicious.

"My old man is always yelling at me for doing the same things he laughs at—when some kid on the radio does them!"

Men Do Not Forget

What makes the perfect Lipstick...

Is it shade—texture? Is it because it stays on without frequent retouching?

It can only be the perfect lipstick for you if its shade is most flattering to you; to be perfect, a lipstick must be creamy smooth, easily applied, not drying or smeary. Above all, the perfect lipstick must stay on (and lips stay lovely) when you eat, drink or kiss, if used as directed.

Because Don Juan Lipstick possesses all these beauty extras . . . more and more smart women are demanding

Don Juan
THE LIPSTICK THAT STAYS ON

For Beauty's Sake
Matching Don Juan powder, rouge, cake make-up and nail enamel.
Sold in Canada, too.

In Style Shades
Try new Medium Red, a true red, flattering, youthful looking, or Raspberry, darker, exciting. Other shades, too.

I've been waiting for this!

The new, white, light, absorbent Zephyr! Martex designed it because so many women want a big, fine bath towel that is lighter in weight—easier to launder, faster drying. A towel that takes so little of your closet space! And here it is, the highly absorbent Martex Zephyr in pristine white. At fine linen and department stores everywhere.

Martex

ZEPHYR

Martex

A PRODUCT OF THE WEST POINT MFG. CO.

As the car which had met them at the station was heard humming up the drive, every single light in the whole house fused—Davey had brought a new ultraviolet lamp with him which had done the trick. The guests had to be led into the hall in pitch darkness, while Logan fumbled about in the pantry for a candle. Sir Leicester hit his gouty foot on the edge of a refectory table, while the voice of an invisible Davey could be heard, apologizing in a high wail, from the top of the staircase. It was really very embarrassing.

At last the lights went up, and the Kroesigs were revealed. Sir Leicester was a tall fair man with gray hair, whose undeniable good looks were marred by a sort of silliness in his face; his wife and daughter were two dumpy little fluffy females. Aunt Sadie, thrown out of her stride by the sudden transformation of what had been mere voices in the dark into flesh and blood, hurried them upstairs to rest and dress for dinner. It was always considered at Alconleigh that the journey from London was an experience involving great exhaustion, and people were supposed to be in need of rest after it.

For dinner, Linda wore a white chintz dress with an enormous skirt, and a black lace scarf. She looked entirely ravishing, and it was obvious that Sir Leicester was much taken with her appearance—Lady Kroesig and Miss Marjorie, in bits of georgette and lace, seemed not to notice it. Marjorie was an intensely dreary girl, a few years older than Tony, who had failed so far to marry, and seemed to have no biological reason for existing.

"Have you read Brothers?" Lady Kroesig asked Uncle Matthew as they settled down to their soup.

"What's that?"

"The new Ursula Langdok—Brothers—it's about two brothers. You ought to read it."

"My dear Lady Kroesig, I have read only one book in my life, and that is White Fang. It's so frightfully good I've never bothered to read another."

Aunt Sadie was making heavy weather with Sir Leicester. He was full of boring herbaceous enthusiasms, and took it for granted that she was too.

"What a lot you London people always know about gardens," she said. "You must talk to Davey, he is a great gardener."

"I am not really a London person," said Sir Leicester reproachfully. "I work in London, but my home is in Surrey."

"I count that," Aunt Sadie said, gently but firmly, "as the same."

The evening seemed endless. The Kroesigs obviously longed for bridge, and did not seem to care so much for racing demon when it was offered as a substitute. Sir Leicester said he had had a tiring week, and really should go to bed early.

Linda went to ring up Lord Merlin, who had just returned from abroad. Tony followed her; they were gone a long time, and came back looking flushed and rather self-conscious.

The next morning, as we were hanging about in the hall waiting for the kippers, which had already announced themselves with a heavenly smell, two breakfast trays were seen going upstairs, for Sir Leicester and Lady Kroesig.

"No, really, that beats everything," said Uncle Matthew. "I never heard of a man having breakfast in bed before."

Lord Merlin was braver than the rest of us, and said right out what he thought.

Linda went over to see him and asked him, "Are you pleased about my engagement?"

"No, of course not. Why are you doing it?"

"I'm in love," said Linda proudly.

"Fiddlesticks."

"Oh, you evidently don't understand abou love, so what's the use of talking to you?"

Lord Merlin got very cross, and said tha neither did immature little girls understan about love.

"Love," he said, "is for grown-up peopl as you will discover one day. I'm all in fav of you marrying soon, in a year or two, b for all of our sakes, don't go and marry a bo like Tony Kroesig."

"I can't think why you say Tony's a bor he knows everything."

"Yes, that's exactly it, he does. And wh about Sir Leicester? And have you se Lady Kroesig?"

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Lady, Beware

By May Richstone

When he sees right through your wiles, the brute,
Give him up, for heaven's sake!
If the creature is so astute,
What kind of a husband would he make!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

But the Kroesig family was illuminat for Linda by the great glow of perfecti which shone around Tony, and she wou hear nothing against them. She part rather coldly from Lord Merlin, came hon and abused him roundly.

The arrangements for the wedding did n go smoothly. There was trouble without e over settlements. Uncle Matthew, whose e tate provided a certain sum of money f younger children, to be allocated by him he thought best, very naturally did not wi to settle anything on Linda, at the expense the others, in view of the fact that she w marrying the son of a millionaire. Sir Leic ter, however, refused to settle a penny u less Uncle Matthew did—he had no gre wish to make a settlement in any case, sayi that it was against the policy of his family tie up capital sums. In the end, by sheer pers tence, Uncle Matth got a beggarly amou for Linda. The wh thing worried and set him very mu and confirmed him need be, in his hat of the Teutonic ra Tony and his p ents wanted a Lond wedding. Uncle M thew said he had ne heard of anything common and vulgar his life. Women w married from th homes; he thoug fashionable weddi the height of degra tion. The Kroesigs plained to Linda that, if she had a count wedding, she would get only half the numb of wedding presents, and also that the imp tant, influential people, who would be of u later, to Tony, would never come do to Gloucestershire in the depth of wint All these arguments were lost on Lin Since the days when she was planni to marry the Prince of Wales she h had a mental picture of what her w ding would be like: that is, as much lik wedding in a pantomime as possible, i large church, with crowds both outside a in, with photographers, arum lilies, tu bridesmaids, and an enormous choir sing her favorite tune, The Lost Chord. So sided with the Kroesigs. Aunt Sadie too London house, and the wedding was d celebrated at St. Margaret's.

What with one thing and another, by time Linda was married, her parents and parents-in-law were no longer on speak terms. Uncle Matthew cried without restra all through the ceremony; Sir Leicester seem to be beyond tears.

I think Linda's marriage was a failure most from the beginning, but I really ne knew much about it. Nobody did. She h married in the face of a good deal of opp tion; the opposition proved to have been w founded, and Linda, being what she w maintained a perfect shop front.

They were married in February, hac hunting honeymoon from a house they t at Melton, and settled down in Bryans Square after Easter. Tony started work his father's bank, and prepared to step int safe Conservative seat in the House of C mons, an ambition soon realized.

Closer acquaintance with their new laws did not make either the Radlett or

(Continued on Page 96)

HUSH... Love's here!

STRICTLY HEAVEN . . . it's you in his arms! This is what poets talk about— this moment divine, this summer sigh before sweet wild rapture! Soon— quick man-kisses come to sting the skin and storm the heart! Atremble you hear him whisper, "Be ever as now . . . stay for me love's lovely answer!"

SO . . . cherish your bright beauty with Woodbury, the facial soap made for the skin alone . . . made extra-mild by Woodbury's costly mellowing ingredient. Daily, take a Woodbury Facial Cocktail. You'll revel in lather smooth as cream, lusciously mild! Do try it . . . it's Woodbury's wonderful way to keep skin in soft bloom. Easy to adore!

WOODBURY 10c

FOR THE SKIN YOU LOVE TO TOUCH

WHO ARE YOU...
a "Mrs. A" or a "Mrs. B"?

COME INTO THE KITCHEN... SEE HOW MRS. A SAVES TIME, WORK, MONEY AND GETS 10 GLASSES OF DELICIOUS JELLED STRAWBERRY JAM FROM ONLY 2 QUARTS OF FRUIT!

Mrs. A. uses the modern short-boil method, with Certo

Mrs. B. makes jam "the way mother used to"

Mrs. A. and Mrs. B. each have 2 quarts of strawberries. After cleaning and crushing them, each has the same amount of prepared fruit—4 cups.

BOTH MRS. A. AND MRS. B. START AT 9 O'CLOCK

Mrs. A., going by the crushed strawberry jam recipe in the folder on the Certo bottle, adds 7 cups of sugar; brings fruit and sugar to a full rolling boil; lets it boil hard for 1 minute; removes it from the fire and adds ⅓ bottle of Certo. That's all! The jam is done—and it has the bright color and delicious flavor of the fresh ripe fruit.

Mrs. A. is through by 9:15.

Mrs. A. has 10 glasses of jam from her 2 quarts of berries. Her jam has a lovely, tender "jell."

Mrs. B., following the old "cup for cup" standard recipe, adds 4 cups of sugar and has to boil her mixture about 30 minutes before it thickens to the desired consistency. This long boiling evaporates about ⅓ the prepared weight of berries, darkens color and carries off much of the natural fresh-fruit flavor as fragrant steam.

Mrs. B. finishes at 9:45.

Mrs. B. took three times as long and has only 6 glasses of jam. Its consistency is somewhat "runny."

I get a CERTO BONUS of 4 EXTRA GLASSES from the same amount of fruit!

You, too, can make wonderful jams and jellies this easy, thrifty way—with Certo!

NO RECIPES WITH CERTO! Because fruits differ in the amount of pectin they contain, Certo safeguards your success by giving you separate, scientifically tested recipes for each kind of fruit—a folder of 90 of them under the label of each bottle. These recipes make success with jellies, jams, marmalades and conserves simple and easy for even inexperienced jelly makers.

TIMELY TIP: In any Certo recipe, 2 cups of light corn syrup may be substituted for two of the cups of sugar specified.

A Product of General Foods

(Continued from Page 94)

Kroesig families change their minds about each other. The Kroesigs thought Linda eccentric, affected and extravagant. The Radletts considered that Tony was a first-class bore. He was infinitely serious, he no longer laughed at Linda's jokes, and the high spirits which, when she first knew him, he had seemed to possess, must have been due to youth, drink and good health. Now that he was married he put all three resolutely behind him, spending his days in the bank and his evenings at Westminster. He was revealed as pompous, money-grubbing, more like his father every day.

Poor Linda was incapable of understanding the Kroesig point of view; try as she might—and in the beginning she tried very hard, having an infinite desire to please—it remained mysterious to her. The only mental qualities they respected were those which produced money in substantial quantities. It was their one criterion of success.

Linda's upbringing had made all this incomprehensible, for money was a subject that was absolutely never mentioned at Alconleigh.

On the first birthday she had after her marriage, Sir Leicester gave Linda a check for a thousand pounds. Linda was delighted and spent it on a necklace of large half-pearls surrounded by rubies, which she had been admiring for some time in a Bond Street shop. The Kroesigs had a small family dinner party for her. Linda arrived, wearing a very plain white satin dress and her necklace, went straight up to Sir Leicester, and said:

"Oh, you were kind to give me such a wonderful present—look ——"

Sir Leicester was stupefied. "Did it cost all I sent you?"

"Yes," said Linda. "I thought you would like me to buy one thing with it, and always remember it was you who gave it to me."

"No, dear. That wasn't at all what I intended. A thousand pounds is what you might call a capital sum; that means something on which you expect a return. You could either have asked Tony to invest it for you, or, which is what I really intended, you could have spent it on entertaining important people who would be of use to Tony in his career."

These important people were a continual thorn in poor Linda's side. She was always supposed by the Kroesigs to be a great hindrance to Tony, both in politics and in the City, because, try as she might, she could not disguise how tedious they seemed to her.

"Your father was cross," she said to Tony as they walked home after dinner.

"I don't wonder," said Tony shortly.

"But look, darling, how pretty it is. Don't you see how one couldn't resist it?"

"You are so affected. Do try and behave like an adult, won't you?"

The autumn after Linda's marriage Aunt Emily took a little house in St. Leonard's Terrace, where she, Davey and I installed ourselves. Aunt Emily enjoyed herself so much that she talked of living half the year in London. As for me, I have never, before or since, been happier. During this time I became engaged to Alfred Wincham, then a young don at, now Warden of, St. Peter's College, Oxford. With this kindly scholarly man I have been perfectly happy ever since. I say no more about him here; this is Linda's story, not mine.

We saw a great deal of Linda. She was obviously lonely, as her husband was at his work all day and at the House in the evening. Lord Merlin was abroad, and she had, as yet, no other very intimate friends. She was much pleased by my engagement, and liked Alfred.

A man's good work is effected by doing what he does: a woman's, by being what she is.

—CHESTERTON: The Golden Treasury of the World's Wit and Wisdom.

TOP RATING!

DAYSTROM CHROME SETS with the DECORATED PLASTIC TOPS...

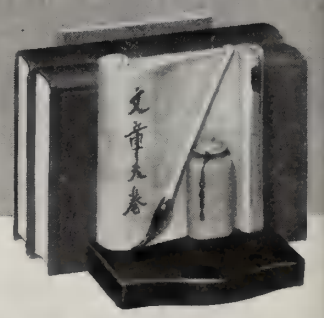
...so smooth, so smart and so very practical. These new streamlined sets will bring beauty into the most lived-in room in the home! Richly upholstered chairs, heavily plated tubular chrome—and decorator-designed table tops that are chip proof, stain and heat resistant—and so easy to clean! Daystrom, the world's largest producer of tubular chrome furniture, sets the Fashion for Kitchens! See them in better stores everywhere!

DAYSTROM

DAYSTROM CORP., OLEAN, N. Y.

Triple Helper FOR YOUR KITCHEN

The Federal NUT MEAT CONTAINER-CHOPPER-DISPENSER 25¢



Tight-fitting cover keeps whole nut meats fresh in jar. To use: remove cover, invert jar, turn handle. Nut meats are chopped and dispensed in same operation. Steel construction; 13-oz. clear-glass container. Federal Tool Corp., Chicago 12, Illinois

FEDERAL Practical HOUSEWARES

AT DEPARTMENT, HARDWARE 5¢ to $1 STORE

DISTINCTIVE...

Add a flatteringly decorative note to your hom with these hand-painted Aristocraft book ends. Yo will appreciate the appealing simplicity of the Chinese design...will find your own good tast reflected in the quality of their fine craftsmanshi These book ends—and other outstanding values i the complete Aristocraft giftware line of tray plaques, figurines, pin-up sets, etc.—are availabl at leading department stores and gift shops. Loo for the Aristocraft tag or seal. Manufactured b Multi Products, Inc., Chicago 8, Illinois.

Aristocraft

DOING laundry without Clorox is like trying to bake a cake without proper heat...the job just doesn't get done right! Clorox is easy to use, economical (it's concentrated), extra-gentle on your cottons and linens. Snowy-white bleaching, brighter fast colors are only part of the Clorox story... for Clorox also makes laundry fresh and sanitary, lessens rubbing, conserving fabrics. Clorox removes stubborn stains... even scorch, mildew... as if by magic! Directions on label.

AMERICA'S FAVORITE BLEACH AND HOUSEHOLD DISINFECTANT

CLOROX

FREE FROM CAUSTIC

Years of unsurpassed quality and performance have made Clorox the choice of millions... it's always uniform... it's always dependable!

Copr. 1946, Clorox Chemical Co.

KVP Household PAPERS

Need a Wardrobe Closet?

think of—

E-Z-DO

Need a storage chest? Think of E-Z-DO! The famous E-Z-DO "Hollywood" family also includes closet accessories, garment bags, shoe cabinets, lingerie cabinets, boudoir hampers — home space-savers for every storage need. Look for famous E-Z-DO products in leading stores throughout the U. S. A. E-Z-DO Wardrobes, $3.98 and up (slightly higher in Western States).

Replacement or Return of Money Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping if defective or not as advertised therein

E-Z-DO America's Largest Maker of Wardrobes, Storage Chests, Closet Accessories

TRADE MARK REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

One day, as we were busy with wedding invitations, she came in and announced, "I am in pig; what d'you think of that?"

"A most hideous expression, Linda dear," said Aunt Emily, "but I suppose we must congratulate you."

"I suppose so," said Linda. She sank into a chair with an enormous sigh. "I feel awfully ill, I must say."

Linda's child, a girl, was born in May. She was ill for a long time before, and very ill at her confinement. The doctors told her that she must never have another child, as it would almost certainly kill her. This was a blow to the Kroesigs, as bankers, it seems, like kings, require many sons, but Linda did not appear to mind. She took no interest whatever in the baby.

I went to see her as soon as I was allowed to. She lay in a bower of blossoms and pink roses, and looked like a corpse. I was expecting a baby myself, and naturally took a great interest in Linda's.

"WHAT are you going to call her—where is she, anyway?"

"In Sister's room—it shrieks. Moira, I believe."

"Not Moira, darling. I never heard such an awful name."

"Tony likes it; he had a sister called Moira who died."

"All the same, I don't see how you can saddle the poor little thing with a name like Moira, it's too unkind."

"Not really. It'll have to grow up a Moira if the Kroesigs are to like it—people always grow up to their names, I've noticed—and they might as well like it because, frankly, I don't."

"Linda, how can you be so naughty?"

At this point the Sister came in, and Linda introduced us.

"Oh, you are the cousin I hear so much about," she said. "You'll want to see the baby."

She went away and presently returned carrying a Moses basket full of wails.

"Poor thing," said Linda indifferently. "It's really kinder not to look."

"Don't pay any attention to her," said the Sister. "She pretends to be a wicked woman, but it's all put on."

I did look, and, deep down among the frills and lace, there was the usual horrid sight of a howling orange in a fine black wig.

"Isn't she sweet?" said the Sister. "Look at her little hands."

I shuddered slightly and said, "Well, I know it's dreadful of me, but I don't much like them as small as that; I'm sure she'll be divine in a year or two."

The wails now entered on a crescendo.

"Poor soul," said Linda. "I think it must have caught sight of itself in a glass. Do take it away, Sister."

Davey came into the room. He was meeting me there to drive me down to Shenley. The Sister came back and shooed us both off, saying that Linda had had enough.

Living in Oxford, engrossed with my husband and young family, I saw less of Linda during the next few years. This, however, did not affect the intimacy of our relationship. We corresponded regularly. I may as well say here that the one thing she never discussed with me was the deterioration of her marriage; in any case, it would not have been necessary, the whole thing being as plain as relations between married people ever can be. Tony was, quite obviously, not good enough as a lover to make up, even at first, for his shortcomings in other respects. The young man she had fallen in love with, handsome, gay, intellectual, melted away upon closer acquaintance, and proved never to have existed outside her imagination. Linda did not commit the usual fault of blaming Tony for what was entirely her own mistake, she merely turned from him in absolute indifference. This was made easier by the fact that she saw so little of him.

Lord Merlin, in London for the first time since Linda's marriage, introduced her into his world, the world toward which she had always looked, that of smart Bohemianism;

Before You Start Canning

SEND FOR THIS NEW

FREE

CANNING BOOK!

© Corn Products Sales Co.

You'll Get Finer Flavor... Firmer Texture... Brighter Color

HERE it is! The new Karo Syrup Book that tells you how to can or freeze fruits so they're finer than ever before! All by using Karo Syrup and sugar, instead of sugar alone! What's more, you can put up 20% to 30% more fruit with your sugar. In freezing fruits, you can save up to 50% of your sugar.

This big, 32 page book gives complete information on canned and frozen fruits . . . and on jams, jellies and relishes. It's packed with recipes—every one of them tested and proved for you! With exact proportions of Karo Syrup, water and sugar worked out in simple, easy form.

This fascinating book is free! Send for it, now. Use it for fruits that look so beautiful you'll be proud to serve them . . . and that taste so delicious they'll thrill your family.

SEND THIS COUPON NOW

Karo Syrup,
Madison Square Station, P. O. Box 401,
New York 10, N. Y.

Please send my Karo Syrup Book—"Finer Canned and Frozen Fruits."

Name _____
(Print Clearly)
Street _____
City _____ Zone ____ State _____

RECIPE
CORONADO CROWN

Make a nest from round, rye bread for the dish of spinach soufflé. Garnish with parsley and cucumbers. Spike with grilled SKINLESS frankfurters.

Skinless FRANKFURTERS
TRADE MARK

Serve 'em Plain - Serve 'em Fancy!

BUT ALWAYS SERVE DELICIOUS SKINLESS FRANKS

Tasting is believing! Franks made the modern SKINLESS way are extra tender, extra juicy. They bring all the savory flavor to your plate—without one bit of waste! By themselves or fancied-up in countless combinations, SKINLESS franks are a two-helping hit every time!

Progressive packers all over America make franks and wieners this new, modern, improved SKINLESS way. So it isn't necessary to change brands. Just change your order. Simply add, "the SKINLESS kind, please." Once you try them, you'll always buy them.

THE VISKING CORPORATION, 6733 W. 65th St., Chicago 38, Illinois

SAY SKINLESS WHEN YOU SAY FRANKFURTERS

and here she had an immediate and great success. She became very gay and went everywhere. There is no more popular unit in London society than a young, beautiful but perfectly respectable woman who can be asked to dinner without her husband, and Linda was soon well on the way to having her head turned. Her house was full of people from morning till night, chatting. Linda, who loved to chat, found many congenial spirits in the carefree, pleasure-seeking London of those days.

Tony did not seem to mind; he had long given up Linda as hopeless from the point of view of his career, and was rather pleased and flattered by the publicity which now launched her as a beauty: "The beautiful wife of a clever young M.P." Besides, he found that they were invited to large parties and balls, where there were often to be found not only Linda's friends, with whom she would amuse herself, but also colleagues of his own, and by no means unimportant ones, whom he could buttonhole and bore at the bar.

Linda now proceeded to fritter away years of her youth, with nothing whatever to show for them. If she had had an intellectual upbringing the place of all this pointless chatter, jokes and parties might have been taken by a serious interest in the arts, or by reading; if she had been happy in her marriage, that side of her nature which craved for company could have found its fulfillment by the nursery fender; things being as they were, however, all was frippery and silliness.

Alfred and I once had an argument with Davey about her, during which we said all this. Davey accused us of being prigs, though at heart he must have known that we were right.

"But Linda gives one so much pleasure," he kept saying. "She is like a bunch of flowers. You don't want people like that to bury themselves in serious reading; what would be the good?"

However, even he was forced to admit that her behavior to poor little Moira was not what it should be. (The child was fat, fair, placid, dull and backward, and Linda still did not like her; the Kroesigs, on the other hand, adored her, and she spent more and more time, with her nanny, at Planes. They loved having her there, but that did not stop them from ceaseless criticism of Linda's behavior.)

Tony soon became, as was to be expected, a perfect mountain of pomposity, more like his father every day. He was full of large, clear-sighted ideas for bettering the condition of the capitalist classes, and made no bones of his hatred and distrust of the workers. Both Sir Leicester and his son were great admirers of Herr Hitler; Sir Leicester had been to see him during a visit to Germany, and had been taken for a drive in a Mercedes-Benz by Doctor Schacht.

LINDA took no interest in politics, but she was instinctively and unreasonably English. She knew that one Englishman was worth a hundred foreigners, whereas Tony thought that one capitalist was worth a hundred workers. Their outlook upon this, as upon most subjects, differed fundamentally.

By a curious irony of fate it was at her father-in-law's house in Surrey that Linda met Christian Talbot. Little Moira, aged six, now lived permanently at Planes; it seemed a good arrangement, as it saved Linda, who disliked housekeeping, the trouble of running two establishments, while Moira was given the benefit of country air and food. Linda and Tony were supposed to spend a couple of nights there every week.

One April Saturday morning, in 1937, Linda, with whom I had been staying in London, took me down there for the night. I think she liked to have a buffer between herself and the Kroesigs.

"Have women a sense of humor?" an English friend once asked Mark Twain. "Well," replied Mark Twain, "I don't think they have humor themselves, but they appreciate the quality of humor in others. Now, you see that woman crossing the lawn there?" The woman was his wife. "I don't suppose that woman ever said a humorous thing in her life; but she always sees the point of my jokes."

—PAUL B. DAVIS.

Sir Leicester was pottering in the garden, as we drove up, a depressed Corgi at his heels, and a mellow smile on his face.

"Here you are," he said heartily. "Tony and Moira have gone out riding. Isn't the garden looking grand just now? I can hardly bear to go to London and leave all this beauty. Come for a stroll before lunch." He led us off. "I must warn you," he said, "that we have got rather a rough diamond coming to lunch. I don't know if you've ever met old Talbot, who lives in the village, the old professor? Well, his son, Christian. He's by way of being rather a Communist, a clever chap gone all wrong, and a journalist on some daily rag. Tony can't bear him, but I always think it's as well to see something of these left-wing fellows."

SO Christian came to luncheon. He was an extraordinarily handsome young man, tall and fair, in a completely different way from that of Tony, thin and very English-looking. His clothes were outrageous—he wore a really old pair of gray flannel trousers, no coat and a flannel shirt, one of the sleeves of which had a tattered tear from wrist to elbow.

"Has your father been writing anything lately?" Lady Kroesig asked, as they sat down to luncheon.

"I suppose so," said Christian, "as it's his profession. I can't say I've asked him, but one assumes he has, just as one assumes that Tony has been banking something lately."

He then planted his elbow, bare through the rent, onto the table between himself and Lady Kroesig and, swivelling round to Linda, who was on his other side, he told her, at length and in immense detail, of a production of Hamlet he had seen lately in Moscow. The cultured Kroesigs listened attentively, throwing off occasional comments to all of which Christian turned a deaf ear, gobbling his food with one hand, his elbow on the table, his eyes on Linda.

After luncheon he said to Linda, "Come back and have tea with my father; you'd like him," and they went off together, leaving the Kroesigs to behave for the rest of the afternoon like a lot of hens who have seen a fox.

Linda returned just in time to dress for dinner, looking extremely beautiful. She made me come and chat while she had her bath—Tony was reading to Moira upstairs in the night nursery. Linda was perfectly enchanted with her outing. Christian's father, she said, lived in the smallest house imaginable. Mr. Talbot was the exact opposite of Sir Leicester. He was brisk and matter-of-fact, and had made some funny jokes about Davey, whom he knew well.

"He's perfect heaven," Linda kept saying, her eyes shining.

What she really meant, as I could see too clearly, was that Christian was perfect heaven. She was dazzled by him. It seemed that he had talked without cease, and his talk consisted of variations upon a single theme—the betterment of the world through political change. Linda, since her marriage, had heard no end of political shop talked by Tony and his friends, but this related politics entirely to personalities and jobs. As the persons all seemed to her infinitely old and dull, Linda had classed politics as a boring subject. But Christian's politics did not bore her. As they walked back from his father's house that evening he had taken her for a tour of the world. He showed her Fascism in Italy, Nazism in Germany, civil war in Spain, inadequate Socialism in France, tyranny in Africa, starvation in Asia, reaction in America and right-wing blight in England. Only the U.S.S.R., Norway and Mexico came in for a modicum of praise.

Linda was a plum ripe for shaking. The tree was now shaken, and down she came.

S-i-z-z-ling hot dogs are so-o-o good

broiled with FRENCH'S

FREE! NEW RECIPE BOOK... "Mealtime Magic." Send name, address to The R. T. French Company, 1273 Mustard St., Rochester 9, N. Y.

SMOOTHER CREAMIER!

Largest Selling Prepared Mustard in U.S.A. today
(Also made in Canada)

Intelligent and energetic, but with no outlet for her energies, unhappy in her marriage, uninterested in her child, she was in the mood either to take up some cause, or to embark upon a love affair. That a cause should now be presented by an attractive young man made both it and him irresistible.

The poor Radletts were now presented with crises in the lives of three of their children almost simultaneously. Linda ran away from Tony, Jassy ran away from home, and Matt ran away from Eton.

Linda threw discretion, and what worldly wisdom she may have picked up during her years in London society, to the winds; she became an out-and-out Communist, bored and embarrassed everybody to death by preaching her new-found doctrine, not only at the dinner table, but also from a soapbox in Hyde Park. Tony started proceedings for divorce. This was a great blow to my aunt and uncle. It is true that they had never liked Tony, but they were infinitely old-fashioned in their ideas. Aunt Sadie was, in particular, profoundly shocked by the light-hearted way Linda had abandoned Moira.

Linda came to see me in Oxford. She was on her way back to London after having broken the news at Alconleigh. "Goodness," she said. "I'd forgotten how terrifying Fa can be. He simply roared, and poor mummy looked miserable, but she was pretty furious too. Oh, well, that's over. Darling, it's heaven to see you again."

I hadn't seen her since the time at Planes when she met Christian, so I wanted to hear all about her life.

"Well," she said, "I'm living with Christian in his flat, but it's very small, I must say, but perhaps that is just as well, because

---

It is not miserable to be blind; it is miserable to be incapable of enduring blindness. —JOHN MILTON.

---

I'm doing the housework. I don't seem to be very good at it, but luckily he is."

"He'll need to be," I said. As she had never in her life done so much as make her own bed, I could not imagine that Christian's flat could be very tidy or comfortable if it was being run by her.

"You are horrid. But oh, how dreadful it is—cooking, I mean."

She seemed tired, I thought, and rather worried, and I looked in vain for signs of great happiness or great love.

"What about Tony—how has he taken it?"

"Oh, he's awfully pleased, actually, because he can now marry his mistress without having a scandal, or being divorced, or upsetting the Conservative Association."

It was so like Linda never to have hinted, even to me, that Tony had a mistress. "Who is she?" I said.

"Called Pixie Townsend. She's a terrific Counter-Hon, but I'm only too thankful now that she exists, because I needn't feel in the least bit guilty—they'll all get on so much better without me."

"Married?"

"Oh, yes, and divorced her husband years ago. She's frightfully good at all poor Tony's things, golf and business and Conservatism, just like I wasn't, and Sir Leicester thinks she's perfect. They'll be happy."

"Now I want to hear more about Christian, please."

"Well, he's a frightfully serious man, you know, a Communist, and so am I now. You can't think what an extraordinary man he is, so detached from other human beings that he hardly notices whether they are there or not. He only cares for ideas."

"I hope he cares for you."

"Well, I think he does, but he is very strange and absent-minded. He says he's going to marry me—when I'm divorced. I think it's rather silly—I rather agree with mummy that once is enough, for marriage—but he says I'm the kind of person one marries if one's living with them, and the thing is it would be bliss not to be called Kroesig any more. Anyway, we'll see."

So different!

MILLIONS PREFER

THE ONE AND ONLY

Miracle Whip

No other salad dressing has the can't-be-copied flavor of delicious Miracle Whip. No other even approaches it in popularity. So the disappointment is the keener when Miracle Whip gets hard to find.

And it is hard now, we know. Continuing shortages of fine salad oils and sugar make it impossible to keep up with the demand.

We are doing our very best to distribute available supplies fairly . . . if your dealer doesn't have Miracle Whip, please remember he's disappointed, too.

TOMATO-RELISH RING. Soften 1½ tbsp. gelatin in ¼ c. cold tomato juice. Dissolve in 2 c. heated tomato juice. Add ½ tsp. salt. Chill. When semi-firm, fold in ¾ c. India relish or chopped sweet pickle. Pour in 6½" ring mold; chill until firm. Serve on lettuce, with deviled eggs. Fill center with lettuce and Miracle Whip.

KRAFT MAYONNAISE is still scarce, too, but it's just as fine as ever. Keep on the lookout—we hope there'll be more soon.

Connie could cycle with effortless wheeling

...for GAYLA HOLD-BOBS kept her coiffure appealing!

● Invisible heads, rounded-for-safety ends, long-lasting, springy action make Gayla Hold-Bob pins America's favorite brand.

Gayla
HOLD-BOB
BOBBY PINS THAT HOLD

COPYRIGHT 1946
GAYLER PRODUCTS, INCORPORATED • CHICAGO 10, ILL.

"Then what's your life? I suppose you don't go to parties and things now, do you?"

"Darling, such killing parties, you can't think—he won't let us go to ordinary ones at all. The worst of being a Communist is that the parties you may go to are—well—awfully funny and touching, but not very gay, and they're always in such gloomy places. Next week, for instance, we've got three: some Czechs at the Sacco and Vanzetti Memorial Hall at Golders Green, Ethiopians at the Paddington Baths, and the Scottsboro boys at some boring old rooms or other."

"What do you wear at them?" I asked, with some interest, thinking that Linda, in her expensive-looking clothes, must seem very much out of place at these baths and halls.

"You know, at first it worried me dreadfully, but I've discovered that, so long as one wears wool or cotton, everything is all right. Silk and satin would be the blunder. But I always wear only wool and cotton, so I'm on a good wicket. No jewels, of course, but then I left them behind at Bryanston Square. Christian doesn't know about jewelry. Oh, dear, he is such a funny man, you must meet him again soon. I must go, darling, it has so cheered me up to see you."

I don't quite know why, but I felt somehow that Linda had been once more deceived in her emotions. A few minutes after Linda had left I had another caller. This time it was Lord Merlin. I liked Lord Merlin very much, I admired him, but I was by no means on such intimate terms with him as Linda. To tell the real truth, he frightened me.

"This is a bad business," he said abruptly. "I'm just back from Rome, and what do I find—Linda and Christian Talbot. It's an extraordinary thing that I can't ever leave England without Linda getting herself mixed up with some thoroughly undesirable character. This is a disaster."

I told him that he had just missed Linda, and said something about her marriage with Tony having been unhappy.

"Naturally she never would have stayed with Tony—nobody expected that. The point is that she's out of the frying pan into an empty grate. I've known Christian from a child—his father is a great friend of mine. Christian is a man who goes through the world attached to nobody—people are nothing in his life. The women who have been in love with him have suffered bitterly because he has not even noticed that they are there. I expect he is hardly aware that Linda has moved in on him—his head is in the clouds and he is always chasing after some new idea." He looked at me so angrily that I felt it had all been my fault. "What are they living on?" he said.

"VERY little. Linda has a small allowance from Uncle Matthew, and I suppose Christian makes something from his journalism."

Lord Merlin said, taking out his notebook, "Can I have Linda's address? I'll have to see what I can do."

What he did was to present Linda with the freehold of a tiny house far down Cheyne Walk. It was the prettiest little dolls' house ever seen, on that great bend of the river where Whistler had lived. The pleasure Linda derived from her new surroundings, the relief which she felt at having once and for all got rid of the Kroesigs, were, I think, laid by her at Christian's door, and seemed to come from him. Thus the discovery that real love and happiness had once more eluded her was delayed for quite a long time.

The Radletts were shocked and horrified over the whole Linda affair, but they had their other children to think of, and were making plans for the coming out of Jassy, who was as pretty as a peach. She, they hoped, would make up to them for their disappointment with Linda.

Jassy went with Aunt Sadie to a few London dances at the end of the season. She was thought to be rather delicate, and Aunt Sadie had an idea that it would be better for her to come out properly in the less strenuous autumn season, and, accordingly, in October, took a little house in London. Jassy complained that the young men she had met were dull and hideous, but Aunt Sadie took no notice. She said that all girls thought this at first, until they fell in love.

A few days before they were to have moved to London Jassy ran away. She was to have spent a fortnight with Louisa in Scotland, had put Louisa off without telling Aunt Sadie, had cashed her savings, and, before anybody even knew that she was missing, had arrived in America. Poor Aunt Sadie received a cable:

ON WAY TO HOLLYWOOD. DON'T WORRY.
JASSY.

At first the Radletts were completely mystified. Jassy had never shown the smallest interest in stage or cinema. Then it occurred to them that Matt might know something, he and Jassy being the two inseparables of the family, and Aunt Sadie got into the Daimler and rolled over to Eton. Matt was able to explain everything. He told Aunt Sadie that Jassy was in love with a film star called Cary Goon, and that she had written to Hollywood to ask him if he were married, telling Matt that if he proved not to be she was going straight out there to marry him herself.

"So I suppose," he ended up, "that she got a letter saying he's not married and just went off."

As always in times of crisis, the Radletts now sent for Davey, and, as always, Davey displayed a perfect competence to deal with the situation. He found out that Cary Goon was a second-rate film actor whom Jassy must have seen when she was in London. He had been in a film then showing called One Splendid Hour. Davey got hold of the film, and Lord Merlin put it on in his private cinema for the benefit of the family. It was about pirates, and Cary Goon was not even the hero, he was just a pirate and seemed to have nothing in particular to recommend him; no good looks, talent or visible charm, though he did display a certain agility shinning up and down ropes.

After great consultations it was decided that some member of the family would have to go to Hollywood and bring Jassy home. Davey consented to go with Louisa—the good, the sensible Louisa.

It proved to have been a useless trip. Two days after their arrival in Hollywood, Jassy became Mrs. Cary Goon. Louisa telegraphed this news, adding, "Cary is a terrific Hon."

Matt, aged sixteen, ran away from Eton to the Spanish war. Aunt Sadie minded this very much, but I don't think Uncle Matthew did. The desire to fight seemed to him entirely natural, though, of course, he deplored the fact that Matt was fighting for foreigners. It was decided that no steps should be taken to retrieve Matt.

Christmas that year was a very sad one at Alconleigh. The children seemed to be melting away like the ten little Indians. Bob and Louisa, neither of whom had given their parents one moment of disquiet in their lives,

(Continued on Page 103)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Habitual Ritual

By Ethel Jacobson

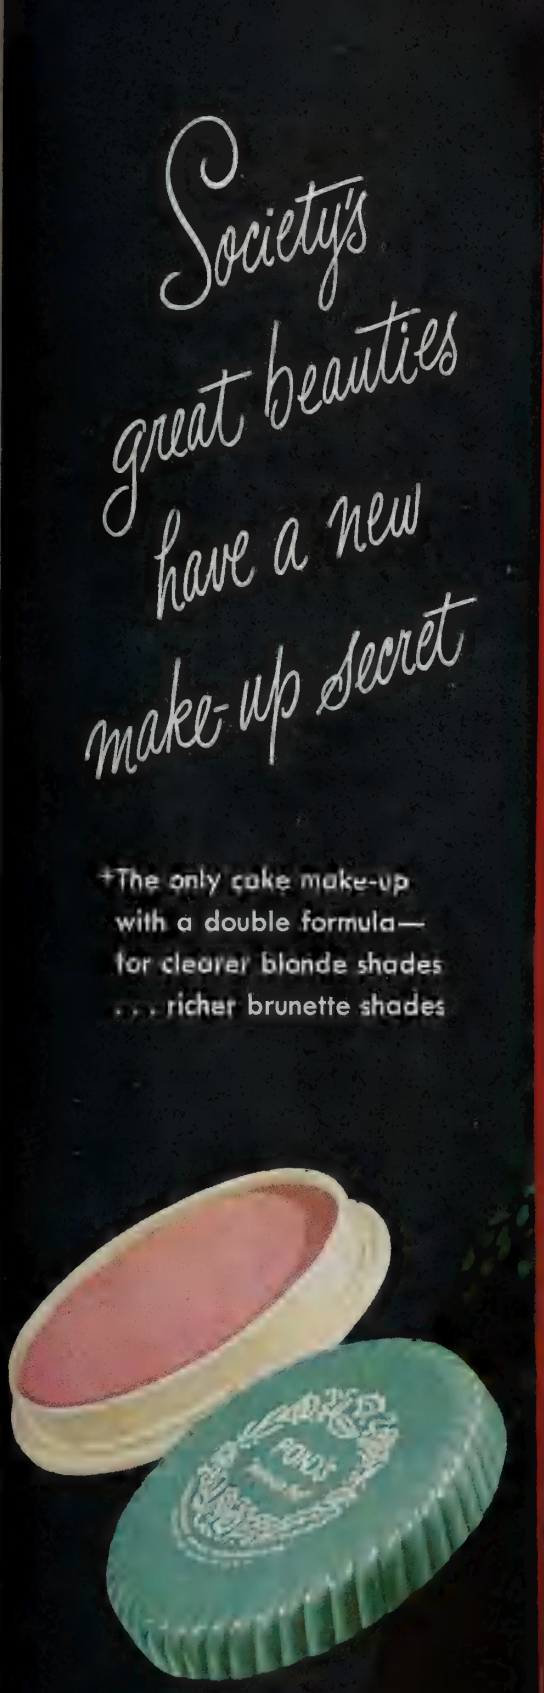
Home from the office
And one-two-three,
"Is dinner ready?"
It better be!



Or oo-oo-oo!
How he'll stew
And set
And fret
And gloom
And fume
Till . . .

"Dinner's ready, milord!"
And that is
When he goes off
To wash his patties.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Society's great beauties have a new make-up secret

+The only cake make-up with a double formula—for clearer blonde shades . . . richer brunette shades

MISS CYNTHIA McADOO . . . With her small, proud golden head and purity of feature, Cynthia McAdoo is one of New York society's outstanding beauties. For the perfect, gardenia-smooth look of her skin, she credits her choice of make-up—Pond's Make-up Pat. "It gives my skin a lovely finish," she says. "Smooth, natural and lasting!"

POND'S

Make-up Pat

* We know of no other cake make-up with Pond's secret of smooth, natural color—a DOUBLE FORMULA. Pond's lighter shades are in a featherweight formula to go on sheer, delicate—never "masky." The darker shades are in a richer formula for richer, rosier color—never "yellowy." For a flawless-looking, softly radiant complexion, try Pond's new Make-up Pat today! 79¢, 39¢, plus tax.

Intelligent refrigerator buyers will do at least one thing:

When you decide to buy a new refrigerator, you'll find many good makes to choose from.

One of these makes is the G-E.

A million G-E Refrigerators have been in service ten years or longer. No other maker has a more enviable reputation; no other refrigerator has a finer record of performance.

For practically every FIRST in refrigeration has come from G-E.

So—considering the importance of the investment you're making—whatever refrigerator you may eventually buy, one thing at least you'll do:

Put on your hat . . . go to your G-E retailer's . . . and get the story of the refrigerator that many, many people say is the finest ever made.

P.S. Ask about the new G-E Home Freezer, too. General Electric Company, Bridgeport, Conn.

G-E Refrigerators

A MILLION IN SERVICE 10 YEARS OR LONGER

GENERAL ELECTRIC

(Continued from Page 100)

could not make up for the absence of Linda, Matt and Jassy, while Robin and Victoria, full as they were of jokes and fun, were swamped by the general atmosphere, and kept to themselves as much as possible.

Linda was married in the Caxton Hall as soon as her divorce was through. The wedding was as different from her first as the left-wing parties were different from the other kind. It was not exactly sad, but dismal, uncheerful, and with no feeling of happiness. Few of Linda's friends, and none of her relations except Davey and me, were there; Lord Merlin sent two Aubusson rugs and some orchids, but did not turn up himself.

Linda and Christian lived in their house in Cheyne Walk, and, if Linda was not as happy as she had hoped to be, she exhibited, as usual, a wonderful shop front. Christian was certainly very fond of her, and, in his way, he tried to be kind, but, as Lord Merlin had prophesied, he was much too detached to make any ordinary woman happy. He seemed, for weeks on end, hardly to be aware of her presence; at other times he would wander off and not reappear for days. Cheyne Walk was always full of comrades, not chatting to Linda, but making speeches to one another, rushing about, telephoning, typewriting, drinking, quite often sleeping in their clothes, but without their boots, on Linda's drawing-room sofa.

Money troubles accrued. Christian, though he never appeared to spend any money, had a disconcerting way of scattering it. He had few, but expensive, amusements, one of his favorites being to ring up the Nazi leaders in Berlin, and other European politicians, and have long teasing talks with them, costing pounds a minute. "They never can resist a call from London," he would say—nor, unfortunately, could they. At last, greatly to Linda's relief, the telephone was cut off, as the bill could not be paid.

Twice a week Linda worked in a Red bookshop. The rest of her time was spent in keeping house for Christian and the comrades.

"You know, being a Conservative is much more restful," Linda said to me once in a moment of confidence. "Though one must remember that it is bad, not good. But it does take place within certain hours, and then finish, whereas Communism seems to eat up all one's life and energy."

"What exactly does Christian do?" I said.

"Oh, everything you can think of. Just at the moment he's writing a book on famine—goodness, it's sad!—and there's a dear little Chinese comrade who comes and tells him what famine is like; you never saw such a fat man in your life."

I laughed.

Linda said, hurriedly and guiltily, "Well, I may seem to laugh at the comrades, but at least one does know they are doing good, not harm, and not living on other people's slavery, like Sir Leicester, and really you know I do simply love them, though I sometimes wish they were a little more fond of chatting, and not quite so sad and earnest and down on everybody."

Early in 1939 the population of Catalonia streamed over the Pyrenees into the Roussillon, a poor and little-known province of France.

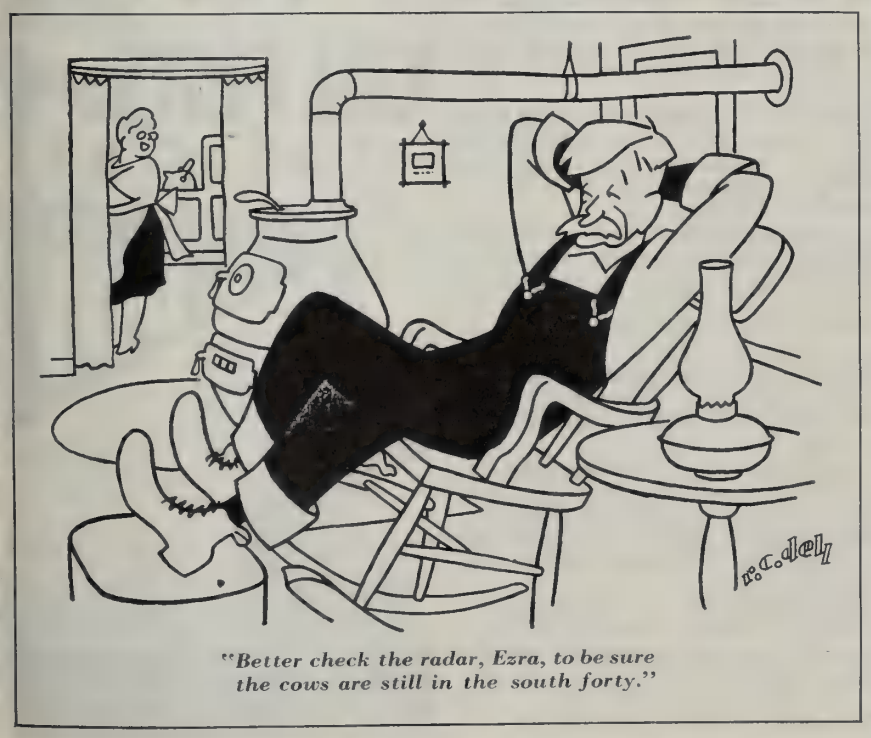
Christian, who had always, I think, had a half-guilty feeling about not having fought in Spain, immediately rushed off to Perpignan. He wrote an endless series of reports, memoranda, articles and private letters about the conditions he had found in the camps, and then settled down to work in an office financed by various English humanitarians with the object of improving the camps, putting refugee families in touch again, and getting as many as possible out of France. This office was run by a young man called Robert Parker.

As soon as it became clear that there would not be, as at first was expected, an outbreak of typhus, Christian sent for Linda to join him.

It happened that Linda had never before been abroad in her life. Of course the journey was an enchantment to her. Her very stilted, very English French got her across Paris and into the train for Perpignan without a hitch.

Paris. She looked out the window at the lighted dusky streets, and thought that never could any town have been so hauntingly beautiful. A strange stray thought came into her head that, one day, she would come back here and be very happy, but she knew that it was not likely; Christian would never want to live in Paris.

At Perpignan she found him in a whirl of business. Funds had been raised, a ship had been chartered, and plans were on foot for sending six thousand Spaniards out of the camps to Mexico. Christian explained all this to Linda almost before she was out of the train; he gave her an absent-minded peck on the forehead and rushed her to his office, hardly giving her time to deposit her luggage at a hotel on the way.



Linda was introduced to Robert Parker and to Randolph Pine, a young writer. They seemed pleased that Linda had arrived, and were most friendly and welcoming.

"You must give me some work to do," said Linda.

"Yes," said Robert. "There's masses of work, never fear; it's just a question of finding the right kind. Can you speak Spanish?"

"No."

"Oh, well, you'll soon pick it up."

"Better check the radar, Ezra, to be sure the cows are still in the south forty."

"Lavender will find her a job," said Christian.

"Lavender?"

"A girl called Lavender Davis."

"No! I know her quite well, she used to live near us in the country. In fact, she was one of my bridesmaids."

"That's it," said Robert. "She said she knew you; I'd forgotten. She's wonderful, she helps us a great deal. There's absolutely nothing she doesn't know about calories and so on. She's the hardest worker I've ever come across."

"I'll tell you," said Randolph Pine, "what you can do. There's a job simply waiting for you, and that is to arrange the accommodation on this ship that's going off next week."

"Oh, yes, of course," said Robert, "the very thing. She can have this table and start at once."

For the next weeks Linda lived in an atmosphere of alternate fascination and horror. She grew to love Perpignan, a strange little old town, so different from anything she had ever known, with its river and broad quays, its network of narrow streets. Linda went to the camps nearly every day, and they filled her soul with despair. As she could not help very much in the office, owing to her lack of Spanish, nor with the children, since she knew nothing about calories, she was employed as a driver, and was always on the road in a van full of supplies, or of refugees, or just taking messages to and from the camps. By this time the camps were quite decently organized. But the sight of these thousands of human beings, young and healthy, herded behind wire with nothing on earth to do day after dismal day, was a recurring torture to Linda.

The only cheerful prospect was the ship. It was going to rescue only a few thousand of the refugees, but, at any rate, they would be taken to a better world, with happy and useful future prospects. When she was not driving the van Linda worked hard over the cabin arrangements, and finally got the whole thing finished in time for the embarkation.

All the English except Linda went to Cette for the great day. Christian and Robert came back in a cheerful mood. The arrangements had gone like clockwork.

Robert said to Linda, "Did you work on any special plan when you were arranging the cabins, or how did you do it?"

"Well, I simply," said Linda, "gave the best cabins to the people who had Labrador on their card, because I used to have one when I was little and he was such a terrific—so sweet, you know."

"Ah," said Robert gravely, "all is now explained. Labrador in Spanish happens to mean laborer. So you see under your scheme—excellent by the way, most democratic—the farm hands all found themselves in luxury while the intellectuals were battened. You did very well, Linda; we were all most grateful."

"He was such a sweet Labrador," said Linda dreamily. "I wish you could have seen him. I do miss not having pets."

Linda never could remember afterward whether she had really minded when she discovered that Christian was in love with Lavender Davis. Certainly wounded pride must have played a part, though perhaps less so with Linda than it would have with many women, as she did not suffer from much inferiority feeling. All the same, it was not a flattering choice. Lavender had seemed for years to epitomize everything that the Radletts considered most unromantic.

Linda did not discover their love in any vulgar way. It was far more subtle, more dangerous than that, being quite simply borne in upon her week after week that they found perfect happiness in each other, and that Christian depended entirely on Lavender for comfort and encouragement in his work. As this work now absorbed him heart and soul, as he thought of nothing else, dependence upon Lavender involved the absolute exclusion of Linda. She felt uncertain what to do. She could not have it out with Christian; there was nothing tangible to have out, and, in any case, such a proceeding would why risk offending?...

air-wick

kills the odor of perspiration-laden clothes in closet, bedroom, locker

air-wick

kills unpleasant summer cooking odors

air-wick deodorizer and household freshener is fully protected by U.S. patent. air-wick is a trade-mark of Seeman Brothers, Inc., New York 13, N.Y.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

have been absolutely foreign to Linda's character. She dreaded scenes and rows more than anything else in the world. She began to think that it would be well for her to get away from Perpignan herself before Christian and Lavender went off together, as it seemed most probable that they would, wandering off hand in hand to search for and relieve other forms of human misery.

One afternoon she saw them walking up the Quai Sadi Carnot together, completely absorbed, utterly contented in each other's company, radiating happiness. Linda was seized by an impulse and acted on it. She packed her things, wrote a hasty letter to Christian saying that she was leaving him for good, as she realized that their marriage had been a failure. She bundled herself and her luggage into a taxi and took the night train for Paris.

The journey this time was horrible. She was, after all, very fond of Christian, and as soon as the train had left the station she began to ask herself whether she had not in fact behaved stupidly and badly. He probably had a passing fancy for Lavender, based on common interests, which would fade away as soon as he got back to London.

She had her return ticket, but very little money—just enough for dinner on the train and some food the next day. And in London what would she find? A little empty, dusty house. Perhaps, she thought, Christian would pursue her, come and insist that she belonged to him. But in her heart she knew that he would not, and that she did not, and that this was the end.

It could not be said, thought Linda, as the train pursued its way through the blackness, that her life so far had been a marked success. She had found neither great love nor great happiness, and she had not inspired them in others. Whatever quality it is that can hold indefinitely the love and affection of a man she plainly did not possess, and now she was doomed to the lonely, hunted life of a beautiful but unattached woman. Tears for her lost hopes and ideals, tears of self-pity, in fact, began to pour down her cheeks.

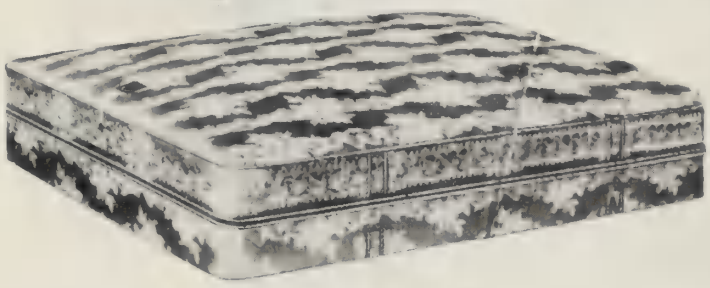
Sad and tired as Linda was, she could not but perceive the beauty of Paris that summer morning as she drove across it to the Gare du Nord. Paris in the early morning has a cheerful, bustling aspect, a promise of delicious things to come, a positive smell of coffee and croissants, quite peculiar to itself. This joy, this life, this beauty did but underline poor Linda's fatigue and sadness. She turned her thoughts to old familiar London, she longed above all for her own bed, feeling as does a wounded beast when it crawls home to its lair.

But when she presented her return ticket at the Gare du Nord she was told that it had expired. "See, madame—May twenty-ninth. Today's the thirtieth, isn't it? So!" Tremendous shruggings.

Linda was paralyzed with horror. Her eighteen shillings sixpence was by now down to six shillings threepence—hardly enough for a meal. She knew nobody in Paris, she had absolutely no idea what she ought to do, she was too tired and too hungry to think clearly. She sank onto her suitcase and began to cry; nothing so dreadful had ever happened to her before. She cried bitterly, she could not stop.

She became aware that somebody was standing beside her, a short, stocky, very dark Frenchman in a black Homburg hat. He was laughing. Linda took no notice, but went on crying. The more she cried the more he laughed.

At last she said, in a voice which was meant to be angrily impressive, but which squeaked and shook through her handkerchief, "Go."



For answer he took her hand and pulled her to her feet. "Hello, hello," he said.

Man argues woman may not be trusted too far; woman feels man cannot be trusted too near.
—JUNIUS HENRI BROWNE.

No other mattress gives you new

Two Way Comfort!

1. SOFT: Smooth, Tuftless cushioning to relax you!
2. FIRM: "Live" Ribbon Steel Innersprings support you!

See the difference!

SOFT to relax you . . . for soothing comfort to weary nerves and muscles. Supersmooth because it's SERTA tuftless . . . no buttons, bumps or cramping hollows!

Feel the difference!

FIRM to support you healthfully...its "Live" Ribbon Steel Coils give you lasting resilient, satisfying support. Deep-down comfort, through and through!

Here is the innerspring mattress that's built the way medical men recommend. Its Two-Way Comfort means that you relax more luxuriously . . . sleep more healthfully. Make sure your next mattress is a SERTA Perfect Sleeper Tuftless.

COPYRIGHT 1946, SERTA ASSOCIATES, INC., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

Sleep on a SERTA

PERFECT SLEEPER TUFTLESS

nerspring Mattress and Box Spring

A ASSOCIATES, INC., 33 Leading Mattress Manufacturers From Coast-to-Coast and in Canada Executive Offices and Permanent Showrooms, 666 Lake Shore Drive, Chicago 11, Ill.

clean as a WHISTLE!

The gleaming whiteness of a Sani-Flush-cleaned toilet bowl means real cleanliness. SANI-FLUSH removes stains and invisible film where germs lurk and odors thrive. Remember—a clean toilet bowl has no odor. The chemical, disinfecting action of SANI-FLUSH, used regularly, ensures a clean, odorless toilet bowl always.

No messy scrubbing—effective in hard and soft water—safe in septic tanks—sold everywhere.

Sani-Flush
QUICK EASY SANITARY

SAFE FOR SEPTIC TANKS

Sani-Flush won't harm your septic tank. This has been proved by a nationally-prominent research laboratory. Your copy of its scientific report is free. Write for it. Address The Hygienic Products Co., Dept. 101, Canton 2, Ohio.

YOU CAN MAKE $1 IN 15 MINUTES

Everyone WANTS PINES Birthday, Xmas & All-Occasion GREETING Cards with two easy visits or 'phone calls to your friends . . .

Thousands vote PINES the most popular Greeting Cards! Irresistible 12 to 24 card boxed assortments sell on sight for $1 You make 100% profit . . . even more on Special Extra Bonus Plan. Write for full information.

A. PINES, Box 32, Flushing, New York.

KILL PESTS with VEECO INSECT SPRAY CONTAINING 5% DDT

KILLS FLIES, MOSQUITOES, ROACHES, BEDBUGS, WATER BUGS, ANTS, GNATS, SILVERFISH, ETC.

MADE BY ONE OF THE LARGEST WARTIME PACKERS OF DDT

■ Now available for safe home use! This powerfully effective, new D.D.T. insecticide, especially prepared for home sanitation is on sale at your store.

Veeco Insect Spray containing 5% D.D.T. is economically priced in 6-oz., pint and quart sizes.

If your dealer does not have it, ask him to get it for you.

THE AMERICAN PRODUCTS CO.
Manufacturing Chemists
Dept. J, Cincinnati 25, Ohio

4 WAYS BEST!

No other window cleaner gives you all these—

1. Speed—Rub it on lightly; wipe it off before it dries. Bon Ami Cake whisks dirt off like magic.

2. Polish—Bon Ami Cake polishes, too. Leaves glass shining, crystal-clear.

3. No oily film—Bon Ami Cake leaves no dust-catching oily film or streaks.

4. Economy—Cleans 10 average windows, inside and out, for a penny.

Best for windshields, too!

HANDY
KE FORM

HE COMPLETE BOOK OF steps for beginners
t designs for experts
IZABETH L. MATHIESON
tionally famous stylist

CROCHET

eautiful things for home and wardrobe—purses, weaters, baby togs, toys, gifts; doilies, runners, ets, rugs, afghans, etc. Clear "learn-how" direc- features Irish and filet crochet, pineapple design, wide variety of patterns. By a famous authority ze winner for exquisite needlework. Large, library-size volume, profusely illustrated with photos and drawings. 288 pages.

GET YOUR COPY NOW

Only $1.95 wherever books are sold; or send check or money order to The World Publishing Co., Dept. O, Cleveland 2, Ohio.

Use—

B/C LINOLEUM LACQUER

THE 60 MINUTE DRYING MARVEL!

Easy to apply—quick to dry

Cleans in a jiffy

Protects, preserves, beautifies

k for B/C Linoleum cquer at your partment, hardware paint store

DEVOE

7 FIRST AVE., NEW YORK 17, N. Y.

"Will you please go?" said Linda. "I should like to point out that I am not a white slave. I am the daughter of a very important British nobleman."

The Frenchman gave a great bellow of laughter. "One does not," he said in nearly perfect English, "have to be Sherlock Holmes to guess that. French ladies covered with the outward signs of wealth never sit crying on their suitcases at the Gare du Nord in the very early morning, while white slaves always have protectors, and it is only too clear that you are unprotected just now."

This sounded all right, and Linda was mollified.

"Now," he said, "I invite you to luncheon with me, but first you must have a bath and rest and a cold compress on your face." He picked up her luggage and walked to a taxi. "Get in, please."

Linda got in. Her powers of resistance were at an end, and she really saw no alternative.

"Hotel Montalembert," he told the taxi man. "Rue du Bac. I apologize, madame, for not taking you to the Ritz, but I have a feeling for the Hotel Montalembert just now, that it will suit your mood this morning."

Linda sat upright in her corner of the taxi, looking, she hoped, very prim. Her companion hummed a little tune, and seemed vastly amused. When they arrived at the hotel he took a room for her, told the liftman to show her to it, told the concierge to send her up a café complet, kissed her hand, and said:

"Good-by for the present—I will fetch you a little before one o'clock and we will go out to luncheon."

LINDA had her bath and breakfast and got into bed. When the telephone bell rang she was so sound asleep that it was a struggle to wake up.

"A gentleman is calling, madame."

"Say I will be right down," said Linda, but it took her quite half an hour to get ready.

"Ah! You keep me waiting," he said, kissing her hand, or at least making a gesture of raising her hand toward his lips and then dropping it rather suddenly. "That is a very good sign."

"Sign of what?" said Linda.

He had a two-seater outside the hotel and she got into it. She was feeling more like herself again.

"Oh, of this and that," he said, letting in the clutch. "A good augury for our affair, that it will be happy and last long."

Linda became intensely stiff, English and embarrassed. "We are not having an affair," she told him.

"My name is Fabrice—may one ask yours?"

"Linda."

"Linda. What a pretty name! With me, it usually lasts five years."

He drove to a restaurant where they were shown, with some deference, to a table in a red plush corner. He ordered the luncheon and the wine in rapid French. Then he turned to her and said:

"Now tell me, madame."

"Tell you what?"

"Well, but of course, the story. Who was it that left you to cry on that suitcase?"

"He didn't. I left him. It was my second husband and I have left him forever because he has fallen in love with another woman."

"What a very curious reason for leaving one's second husband. Surely with your experience of husbands you must have noticed that falling in love with other women is one of the things they do? Why didn't you put yourself in the train and go back to monsieur the important lord, your father?"

"That's what I was doing until they told me that my return ticket had expired. I only had six shillings threepence, and I don't know anybody in Paris, and I was awfully tired, so I cried."

"The second husband—why not borrow some money from him?"

"He's in Perpignan."

"Ah, you come from Perpignan. Go on telling me about your husbands. It's interesting."

THIS story begins in the late 1920s . . . day of the boyish bob, the flower-pot hat and the Charleston.

That's when Mrs. P. R. Norris of Grinnell, Iowa, was married. When she set up housekeeping, her hope chest was bulging with fifteen beautiful sheets.

Doesn't sound hard so far, does it? But those fifteen sheets taught Mrs. Norris a valuable lesson! We quote her recent letter:

"Nine of those sheets were Pequots. Blithe little me, I never dreamed, then, what a differende there was in sheets. But I learned...and learned the hard way!"

Our blithe little bride had plenty of opportunity to compare her Pequots with the other sheets; she used them through the inevitable sieges of sickness and years of commercial laundering. Here's what she learned:

"...the other sheets proved to be weak in spots, and one by one had to be discarded. The Pequots stood up beautifully! Even now, four of them are fresh and firm and whole enough to use...From now on, it's 100 per cent Pequots for me!"

We're sure that if you buy sheets of several other brands, and use them with your Pequots, you too will find Pequots give smoother comfort and longer wear.

But why learn the hard way? Why not ask for Pequots right off? We're doing our best to supply all retail stores with America's favorite sheets.

Pequot Mills, Salem, Massachusetts.

PEQUOT SHEETS

so good-looking — so long-wearing

Now I Know

Why Sanitone Dry Cleaning is Better

- ✔ It actually removes perspiration stain and odor!
- ✔ brings out original colors . . . makes garments look like new!
- ✔ gets out more spots . . . more dirt than old-style cleaning possibly can!
- ✔ no shrinking . . . garments fit and press perfectly!
- ✔ and it leaves no dry cleaning odors!

If you're not quite satisfied with your present dry cleaning, why not let the nearest SANITONE cleaner prove claims listed above. He has been carefully selected, before being licensed to use this improved dry cleaning method and offers, in addition, meticulous pressing with attention to detail plus quick, courteous service.

Your Sanitone cleaner is listed in the classified directory of your phone book. Look for the Sanitone seal.

THIS SIGN MEANS BETTER DRY CLEANING

LICENSED SANITONE CLEANERS

A CLOTHES TIP FOR NEXT SEASON!

Sanitone your clothes before you pack them away. Next fall they'll be fresh and new-looking, READY TO WEAR!

EMERY INDUSTRIES, INC. • CINCINNATI 2, OHIO

"Only two. My first was a Conservative, and my second is a Communist."

"Just as I guessed; your first is rich, your second is poor. I could see you once had a rich husband—the dressing case and the fur coat, though it is a hideous color. Still, mink usually betokens a rich husband somewhere. Then this dreadful linen suit you are wearing has ready-made written all over it."

"You are rude; it's a very pretty suit," she said.

"And last year's. Jackets are getting longer, you will find. I'll get you some clothes—if you were well dressed you would be quite good-looking, though it's true your eyes are small. Blue, a good color, but small."

"In England," said Linda, "I am considered a beauty."

"Well, you have points."

So this silly conversation went on and on, but it was only froth on the surface. Linda was feeling, what she had never so far felt for any man, an overwhelming physical attraction. It made her quite giddy, it terrified her. She could see that Fabrice was perfectly certain of the outcome; so was she perfectly certain, and that was what frightened her. How could she, Linda, with the horror and contempt she had always felt for casual affairs, allow herself to be picked up by any stray foreigner? He was not even good-looking, he was exactly like dozens of other dark men in Homburgs that can be seen in the streets of any French town. But there was something about the way he looked at her which seemed to be depriving her of all balance. She was profoundly shocked, and, at the same time, intensely excited.

After luncheon they strolled out of the restaurant into brilliant sunshine.

"Come and see my flat," said Fabrice.

"I would rather see Paris," said Linda. "I've never been here before."

Fabrice was really startled. "Never been here before? What a pleasure for me, to show it all to you. There is so much to show, it will take weeks."

"Unfortunately," said Linda, "I leave for England tomorrow."

"Yes, of course. Then we must see it all this afternoon."

They drove slowly round a few streets and squares, and then went for a stroll in the Bois. Linda could not believe that she had only just arrived there, that this was still the very day which she had seen unfolding itself, so full of promise, through her mist of morning tears.

"How fortunate you are to live in such a town," she said to Fabrice. "It would be impossible to be very unhappy here."

"Not impossible," he said. "One's e tions are intensified in Paris—one car more happy and also more unhappy than in any other place. But it is alwa positive source of joy to live here, and t is nobody so miserable as a Parisian in from his town." He spoke with great fee

After tea, which they had out-of-doo the Bois, he drove slowly back into P He stopped the car outside an old hous the Rue Bonaparte, and said, again:

"Come and see my flat."

"No, no," said Linda. "The time has come for me to point out that I am femme sérieuse."

Fabrice gave his great bellow of laug "Oh," he said, "how funny you are. Wh phrase, femme sérieuse; where did you it? And if so serious, how do you explai second husband?"

"Yes, I admit that I did wrong, and r a great mistake," she told him. "But is no reason for losing control, for sli down the hill altogether. Please, if you be so kind as to lend me some mone want to catch the London train tomo morning."

"Of course, by all means," said Fab

He thrust a roll of bank notes into hand, and drove her to the Hotel Monta bert. He seemed quite unmoved by speech, and announced he would come at eight o'clock to take her out to di Linda's bedroom was full of roses. R she thought with a giggle, this is a very p novelettish seduction; how can I be taken it?

But she was filled with a strange, wild familiar happiness, and knew that this love. Twice in her life she had mistaken s thing else for it; it was like seeing somebo the street who you think is a friend, whistle and wave and run after him, an not only not the friend, but not even like him. A few minutes later the real appears, and you can't imagine how you mistook that other person for him. I was now looking upon the authentic fa love, and she knew it, but it frightene She told herself, over and over again, tomorrow she must go back to Londo she had no intention of going back, an knew it.

Fabrice took her out to dinner and th a night club, where they did not dance chatted endlessly. She told him about Matthew, Aunt Sadie and Louisa and and Matt, and he could not hear enou

In the taxi on their way home she re again to go back with him or to let him

(Continued on Page 108)

"And who was mighty stingy about letting her daddy use her bike last year?"

Very personally yours

The cushioned softness of Kotex*—the sanitary napkin made for lasting comfort

Comfort and confidence are always yours . . . with Kotex! For it's made to stay soft while wearing—made to hold its shape. Its extra comfort is only one of many special Kotex features that are all very personally yours.

To prevent revealing outlines, Kotex has flat, tapered ends that don't show. So, your secret's safe!

What's more, Kotex is made with an exclusive safety center designed for plus-protection against accidents, against roping and twisting—against moist, chafing edges.

A deodorant in every Kotex napkin

As an extra safeguard for your daintiness, your poise, every Kotex napkin contains a deodorant. It's locked in so it can't shake out—a new Kotex "extra" at no extra cost . . . And only Kotex of all napkins provides 3 sizes for different women, different days—Regular in the blue box, Junior in the green box, and Super Kotex in the brown box.

More women choose Kotex than all other sanitary napkins

*T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

(Continued from Page 106)

into the hotel with her. He did not insist, he did not try to hold her hand, or touch her at all. He merely said:

"You are putting up a magnificent fight, madame, and I offer you my heartfelt felicitations."

Outside the hotel she gave him her hand to say good night. He took it in both of his and really kissed it.

"Till tomorrow," he said, and got back into the taxi.

"Allo—allo."

"Hullo."

"Good morning. Are you having your breakfast?"

"Yes."

"I thought I heard a coffee cup clattering. It is good?"

"It's so delicious that I have to keep stopping, for fear of finishing it too quickly. Are you having yours?"

"Had it. I must tell you that I like very long conversations in the morning, and I shall expect you to tell me some stories."

"Like Scheherazade?"

"Yes, just like. And you're not to get that note in your voice of 'now I'm going to ring off,' as English people always do."

"What English people do you know?"

"I know some. I was at school in England, and at Oxford."

"No! When?"

"Nineteen-twenty."

"When I was nine. Fancy; perhaps I saw you in the street—we used to do all our shopping in Oxford."

"Elliston and Cavell?"

"Oh, yes, and Webber's."

They had a long and very silly conversation, and, at the end of it, Fabrice said, "Now get up, and in an hour I will fetch you and we will go to Versailles."

At Versailles, which was an enchantment to Linda, she was reminded of a story she had once read about two English ladies who had seen the ghost of Marie Antoinette sitting in her garden at the Little Trianon. Fabrice found this intensely boring, and said so.

"Stories," he said, "are only of interest when they are true, or when you have made them up specially to amuse me. No more ghost stories, please."

"All right," said Linda crossly. "I'm doing my best to please."

He put his hand up to Linda's forehead and stroked back a strand of hair which was loose. "How badly your hair is done, my dear."

"If you don't like my clothes and don't like my hair and think my eyes are so small, I don't know what you see in me."

"Nevertheless, I admit there is something," said Fabrice.

Again they dined together.

Linda said, "Haven't you any other engagements?"

"Yes, of course. I have canceled them," he told her.

"Who are your friends?"

"Society people. And yours?"

"When I was married to Tony, that is, my first husband, I used to go out in society, it was my life. In those days I loved it. But then Christian didn't approve of it, he stopped my going to parties and frightened away my friends, whom he considered frivolous, and we saw nothing but serious people trying to put the world right. I used to laugh at them, and rather long for my other friends, but now I don't know. Since I was at Perpignan perhaps I have become more serious myself."

"Everybody is getting more serious, that's the way things are going. You should never despise social life—I mean, it can be a very

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

There's No Place— BY BERTON BRALEY

We said, "Oh gosh, we are sick of moving,
Sick of carting our junk around,
Our fortunes never will start improving
Until a terminal port is found."
We have bought a house. It is Greek Revival;
It's old and weathered and picturesque,
The sort of thing it is hard to rival
With brand-new plans on a builder's desk.

It's Home! A spot that is most appealing
(And paint's apeeling inside and out);
New cracks appear in the walls and ceiling,
The porch has dropsy, the sills have gout.
It's Home! It gives us a prideful tingle,
It thrills the spirit and warms the heart
Though hornets nest under every shingle
And plumbing constantly comes apart.

It's Home! With rooms that are large and gracious,
Although the plaster is full of nails.
The fireplaces are very spacious,
Though they smoke us out in the wintry gales.
Most of the mansion is sturdy timber,
But now and then it is evidenced
That one or two of the walls are limber
And sway a bit when they're leaned against.
And though old houses are what one likes
One sometimes wonders at builders' views,
Who put up moldings with six-inch spikes
And hung huge hinges with half-inch screws.
But we love our house, though the flues are leaky
And the wainscot ticks like a metronome,
Though the thresholds warp and the panes are streaky
And the clapboards flap and the rooftree's creaky;
Nevertheless it's Home!

It's Home! At last we are actual owners
No longer under the landlord's thumb.
Though now we're working for money loaners
With interest payments for years to come.
For it's cost us twice what we estimated,
And a brand-new house could have been created
For what we've paid—but as has been stated,
And here is stoutly reiterated,
"It's Home!"

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

BEFORE STORING BLANKETS WASH THEM IN WOOLFOAM

PERFECT WOOL WASH

Before storing any woolens wash them in WOOLFOAM! Not a soap but a specialized product to leave them really clean—light and fluffy—just as soft as new! Colors don't streak or fade; fibres won't harden. A box of WOOLFOAM—which washes 5 Blankets—16 Sweaters—may be bought at department, grocery or drug stores for 25¢. The economy size is only 50¢.

25¢

WOOLFOAM CORP.
1 Madison Ave., N. Y. 10, N. Y.

Made For Wool by a Wool Firm

Plants Grow "Like Magic"

Plants have no boarding house reach. Reach the roots with HY-GRO—13-26-13. Dissolve in water. Pour on. Plants get food at once. Amazing results. Ideal starter solution and all-season fertilizer. Ask your dealer for HY-GRO—in 25c and $1 jars. For folder write: McCormick & Co., Inc., Baltimore 2, Md.

HY-GRO SOLUBLE PLANT FOOD

Slenderizing Dream DRESSES for Stylish STOUTS

And EXTRA SIZES

Oh yes, dresses can "give you away" or help camouflage those extra pounds—It's all in the clever way Janne of Hollywood dresses are designed. Youthful ideas of slender grace that are so utterly figure flattering you'll love them. A dress for every occasion and at surprising low prices. All Sizes.

FREE from HOLLYWOOD

New style book sent upon request, FREE. Write today. JANNE OF HOLLYWOOD, Dept. 159-S, 5071 Hollywood Blvd., Hollywood, California.

SEND 25c FOR THIS CATALOG

You will enjoy every one of the 125 illustrations in this book, "PRINTS THAT MAKE A HOUSE A HOME". There are Landscapes, Marines, Interiors, Maps, Hunting, Sporting, Birds, Flowers, Fruits, Currier & Ives, etc. Some in full color . . . The catalog contains many ideas for glorifying your home... and for inexpensive gifts. Send 25¢, coin or stamps.

OLD PRINT EXCHANGE
14 East 48th Street, New York City 17

satisfying one, entirely artificial, of course, but absorbing. What else is there to distinguish man from the animals but his social life? And who understands it so well and who can make it so smooth and so amusing as society people? But one cannot have it at the same time as a love affair, one must be wholehearted to enjoy it, so I have canceled all my engagements."

"What a pity," said Linda, "because I'm going back to London tomorrow morning."

"Ah, yes, I had forgotten. What a pity."

"Allo—allo."

"Hullo."

"Were you asleep?"

"Yes, of course. What's the time?"

"About two. Shall I come round and see you?"

"Do you mean now?"

"Yes."

"I must say it would be very nice, but the only thing is, what would the night porter think?"

"My dear, how English you are. Well, I shall tell you—he will be in no doubt whatsoever."

"No, I suppose not."

"But I don't imagine he's under any illusion as it is. After all, I come here for you three times every day—you've seen nobody else, and French people are quite quick at noticing these things, you know."

"Yes—I see ——"

"All right then—I'll be over directly."

The next day Fabrice installed her in a flat. It was a beautiful flat, large and sunny, and decorated in the most expensive kind of modern taste. Belonging to the flat was a charming elderly housekeeper called Germaine. She was assisted by various other elderly women who came and went in a bewildering succession. She was obviously most efficient, she had all Linda's things out of her suitcase, ironed and folded away in a moment, and then went off to the kitchen, where she began to prepare dinner. Linda could not help wondering how many other people Fabrice had kept in this flat; however, as she was unlikely to find out, and, indeed, had no wish to know, she put the thought from her.

When people complain of life, it is almost always because they have asked impossible things from it. —ERNEST RENAN.

In her bath, before dinner, the telephone bell rang. Germaine answered it, tapped on the door, and said, "The duke will be a bit late, madame."

"All right—thank you," said Linda.

At dinner she said, "Could one know your name?"

"Oh," said Fabrice. "Haven't you discovered that? What an extraordinary lack of curiosity. My name is Sauveterre. In short, madame, I am happy to tell you that I am a very rich duke, a most agreeable thing to be, even in these days."

"How lovely for you. And, while we are on the subject of your private life, are you married?"

"No."

"Why not?"

"My fiancée died."

"Oh, how sad—what was she like?"

"Very pretty."

"Prettier than me?"

"Much prettier," he told her. "Very correct."

"More correct than me?"

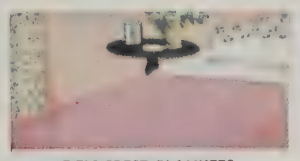
"You—you are mad, madame, not correct at all. And she was kind—really kind."

For the first time since she knew him, Fabrice had become infinitely sentimental, and Linda was suddenly shaken by the pangs of a terrible jealousy, so terrible that she felt quite faint. If she had not already recognized the fact, she would have known now, for certain and always, that this was to be the great love of her life.

"Five years," she said, "is quite a long time when it's all in front of you."

"What's this, darling—a different towel for every day of the week? Sounds swell!"

"No, silly—but these are Fieldcrest's brand new colors. And . . . well, I couldn't choose between them so I took them all."



SEVEN DECORATOR COLORS

Here's news color-thirsty homes have been waiting for. Now bathrooms will be gay with 7 new wonderful colors in soft, deep-down-drying Fieldcrest towels. Lovelier than ever pastels—Lemon, Lime, Azure Blue, Pink, Flesh, Turquoise, Dusty Rose. It's good news, too, that Fieldcrest towels will be a little easier to find in stores from now on.

Fieldcrest TOWELS

FIELDCREST SHEETS

FIELDCREST BLANKETS

FIELDCREST BEDSPREADS

MARSHALL FIELD & COMPANY, INC. · Manufacturing Division · 88 WORTH ST., NEW YORK 13, N. Y.

(Continued from Page 106)

into the hotel with her. He did not insist, he did not try to hold her hand, or touch her at all. He merely said:

"You are putting up a magnificent fight, madame, and I offer you my heartfelt felicitations."

Outside the hotel she gave him her hand to say good night. He took it in both of his and really kissed it.

"Till tomorrow," he said, and got back into the taxi.

"Allo—allo."

"Hullo."

"Good morning. Are you having your breakfast?"

"Yes."

"I thought I heard a coffee cup clattering. It is good?"

"It's so delicious that I have to keep stopping, for fear of finishing it too quickly. Are you having yours?"

"Had it. I must tell you that I like very long conversations in the morning, and I shall expect you to tell me some stories."

"Like Scheherazade?"

"Yes, just like. And you're not to get that note in your voice of 'now I'm going to ring off,' as English people always do."

"What English people do you know?"

"I know some. I was at school in England, and at Oxford."

"No! When?"

"Nineteen-twenty."

"When I was nine. Fancy; perhaps I saw you in the street—we used to do all our shopping in Oxford."

"Elliston and Cavell?"

"Oh, yes, and Webber's."

They had a long and very silly conversation, and, at the end of it, Fabrice said, "Now get up, and in an hour I will fetch you and we will go to Versailles."

At Versailles, which was an enchantment to Linda, she was reminded of a story she had once read about two English ladies who had seen the ghost of Marie Antoinette sitting in her garden at the Little Trianon. Fabrice found this intensely boring, and said so.

"Stories," he said, "are only of interest when they are true, or when you have made them up specially to amuse me. No more ghost stories, please."

"All right," said Linda crossly. "I'm doing my best to please."

He put his hand up to Linda's forehead and stroked back a strand of hair which was loose. "How badly your hair is done, my dear."

"If you don't like my clothes and don't like my hair and think my eyes are so small, I don't know what you see in me."

"Nevertheless, I admit there is something," said Fabrice.

Again they dined together.

Linda said, "Haven't you any other engagements?"

"Yes, of course. I have canceled them," he told her.

"Who are your friends?"

"Society people. And yours?"

"When I was married to Tony, that is, my first husband, I used to go out in society, it was my life. In those days I loved it. But then Christian didn't approve of it, he stopped my going to parties and frightened away my friends, whom he considered frivolous, and we saw nothing but serious people trying to put the world right. I used to laugh at them, and rather long for my other friends, but now I don't know. Since I was at Perpignan perhaps I have become more serious myself."

"Everybody is getting more serious, that's the way things are going. You should never despise social life—I mean, it can be a very

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

There's No Place— BY BERTON BRALEY

We said, "Oh gosh, we are sick of moving,
Sick of carting our junk around,
Our fortunes never will start improving
Until a terminal port is found."
We have bought a house. It is Greek Revival;
It's old and weathered and picturesque,
The sort of thing it is hard to rival
With brand-new plans on a builder's desk.

It's Home! A spot that is most appealing
(And paint's apeeling inside and out);
New cracks appear in the walls and ceiling,
The porch has dropsy, the sills have gout.
It's Home! It gives us a prideful tingle,
It thrills the spirit and warms the heart
Though hornets nest under every shingle
And plumbing constantly comes apart.

It's Home! With rooms that are large and gracious,
Although the plaster is full of nails.
The fireplaces are very spacious,
Though they smoke us out in the wintry gales.
Most of the mansion is sturdy timber,
But now and then it is evidenced
That one or two of the walls are limber
And sway a bit when they're leaned against.
And though old houses are what one likes
One sometimes wonders at builders' views,
Who put up moldings with six-inch spikes
And hung huge hinges with half-inch screws.
But we love our house, though the flues are leaky
And the wainscot ticks like a metronome,
Though the thresholds warp and the panes are streaky
And the clapboards flap and the rooftree's creaky;
Nevertheless it's Home!

It's Home! At last we are actual owners
No longer under the landlord's thumb.
Though now we're working for money loaners
With interest payments for years to come.
For it's cost us twice what we estimated,
And a brand-new house could have been created
For what we've paid—but as has been stated,
And here is stoutly reiterated,
"It's Home!"

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

BEFORE STORING BLANKETS WASH THEM IN

WOOLFOAM

PERFECT WOOL WASH

Before storing any woolens wash them in WOOLFOAM! Not a soap but a specialized product to leave them really clean—light and fluffy—just as soft as new! Colors don't streak or fade; fibres won't harden. A box of WOOLFOAM—which washes 5 Blankets—16 Sweaters—may be bought at department, grocery or drug stores for 25¢. The economy size is only 50¢.

25¢

WOOLFOAM CORP.
1 Madison Ave., N. Y. 10, N.Y.

Made For Wool by a Wool Firm

Plants Grow "Like Magic"

Plants have no boarding house reach. Reach the roots with HY-GRO—13-26-13. Dissolve in water. Pour on. Plants get food at once. Amazing results. Ideal starter solution and all-season fertilizer. Ask your dealer for HY-GRO—in 25c and $1 jars. For folder write: McCormick & Co., Inc., Baltimore 2, Md.

HY-GRO SOLUBLE PLANT FOOD

Slenderizing Dream DRESSES for Stylish STOUTS

And EXTRA SIZES

Oh yes, dresses can "give you way" or help camouflage those extra pounds—It's all in the clever way Janne of Hollywood dresses are designed. Youthful ideas of slender grace that are so utterly figure flattering you'll love them. A dress for every occasion and at surprising low prices. All Sizes.

FREE from HOLLYWOOD

New style book sent upon request, FREE. Write today. JANNE OF HOLLYWOOD, Dept. 159-S, 5071 Hollywood Blvd., Hollywood, California.

SEND 25c FOR THIS CATALOG

You will enjoy every one of the 125 illustrations in this book, "PRINTS THAT MAKE A HOUSE A HOME". There are Landscapes, Marines, Interiors, Maps, Hunting, Sporting, Birds, Flowers, Fruits, Currier & Ives, etc. Some in full color . . . The catalog contains many ideas for glorifying your home... and for inexpensive gifts. Send 25¢, coin or stamps.

OLD PRINT EXCHANGE
14 East 48th Street, New York City 17

satisfying one, entirely artificial, of course, but absorbing. What else is there to distinguish man from the animals but his social life? And who understands it so well and who can make it so smooth and so amusing as society people? But one cannot have it at the same time as a love affair, one must be wholehearted to enjoy it, so I have canceled all my engagements."

"What a pity," said Linda, "because I'm going back to London tomorrow morning."

"Ah, yes, I had forgotten. What a pity."

"Allo—allo."

"Hullo."

"Were you asleep?"

"Yes, of course. What's the time?"

"About two. Shall I come round and see you?"

"Do you mean now?"

"Yes."

"I must say it would be very nice, but the only thing is, what would the night porter think?"

"My dear, how English you are. Well, I shall tell you—he will be in no doubt whatsoever."

"No, I suppose not."

"But I don't imagine he's under any illusion as it is. After all, I come here for you three times every day—you've seen nobody else, and French people are quite quick at noticing these things, you know."

"Yes—I see ——"

"All right then—I'll be over directly."

The next day Fabrice installed her in a flat. It was a beautiful flat, large and sunny, and decorated in the most expensive kind of modern taste. Belonging to the flat was a charming elderly housekeeper called Germaine. She was assisted by various other elderly women who came and went in a bewildering succession. She was obviously most efficient, she had all Linda's things out of her suitcase, ironed and folded away in a moment, and then went off to the kitchen, where she began to prepare dinner. Linda could not help wondering how many other people Fabrice had kept in this flat; however, as she was unlikely to find out, and, indeed, had no wish to know, she put the thought from her.

When people complain of life, it is almost always because they have asked impossible things from it.
—ERNEST RENAN.

In her bath, before dinner, the telephone bell rang. Germaine answered it, tapped on the door, and said, "The duke will be a bit late, madame."

"All right—thank you," said Linda.

At dinner she said, "Could one know your name?"

"Oh," said Fabrice. "Haven't you discovered that? What an extraordinary lack of curiosity. My name is Sauveterre. In short, madame, I am happy to tell you that I am a very rich duke, a most agreeable thing to be, even in these days."

"How lovely for you. And, while we are on the subject of your private life, are you married?"

"No."

"Why not?"

"My fiancée died."

"Oh, how sad—what was she like?"

"Very pretty."

"Prettier than me?"

"Much prettier," he told her. "Very correct."

"More correct than me?"

"You—you are mad, madame, not correct at all. And she was kind—really kind."

For the first time since she knew him, Fabrice had become infinitely sentimental, and Linda was suddenly shaken by the pangs of a terrible jealousy, so terrible that she felt quite faint. If she had not already recognized the fact, she would have known now, for certain and always, that this was to be the great love of her life.

"Five years," she said, "is quite a long time when it's all in front of you."

"What's this, darling—a different towel for every day of the week? Sounds swell!"

"No, silly—but these are Fieldcrest's brand new colors. And . . . well, I couldn't choose between them so I took them all."

SEVEN DECORATOR COLORS

Here's news color-thirsty homes have been waiting for. Now bathrooms will be gay with 7 new wonderful colors in soft, deep-down-drying Fieldcrest towels. Lovelier than ever pastels—Lemon, Lime, Azure Blue, Pink, Flesh, Turquoise, Dusty Rose. It's good news, too, that Fieldcrest towels will be a little easier to find in stores from now on.

Fieldcrest TOWELS

FIELDCREST SHEETS

FIELDCREST BLANKETS

FIELDCREST BEDSPREADS

MARSHALL FIELD & COMPANY, INC. • Manufacturing Division • 88 WORTH ST., NEW YORK 13, N. Y.

HAPPY PLATE MATES...

SPAM* DUTCH OVEN DINNER

SPAM* DUTCH OVEN DINNER

FROM THE HORMEL MENU FILE

Top o' the stove! Start by browning the Spam all sides, add onions, carrots, potatoes with a little water. Cook covered slowly till vegetables are tender. Serve with fresh peas and gravy made with bouillon cube or meat stock. Top o' the evening!

SPAM* 'N' MACARONI LOAF

For a harmonious taste blend, arrange alternate layers of Spam slices and macaroni mixture in loaf pan. Bake in a pan of water at 375° until firm. Serve with broccoli blossoms accented with your favorite sauce. Smash hit with any audience!

COLD OR HOT SPAM HITS THE SPOT!

*"SPAM" is a registered trademark. It identifies a pure pork product — packed only in 12-ounce tins — made exclusively by Geo. A. Hormel & Co., Austin, Minnesota.

HORMEL GOOD FOODS

PS YOU'LL LIKE HORMEL CHILI CON CARNE! Everybody likes chili the way Hormel makes it, because Hormel Chili is different. You'll like it, too. DOUBLE YOUR MONEY BACK IF YOU DON'T!

But Fabrice was still thinking of the fiancée. "She died much more than five years ago—fifteen years in the autumn. I always go and put late roses on her grave."

"And what was her name?"

"Louise. The only daughter of the last Duc de Rancé. I often go and see her mother, who is still alive, a remarkable old woman."

A deep melancholy settled on them both. Linda saw too clearly that she could not hope to compete with a fiancée who was not only prettier and more correct than she was, but also dead. It seemed most unfair.

After dinner, however, Linda was restored to happiness. Being made love to by Fabrice was an intoxication, quite different from anything she had hitherto experienced.

Their life now began to acquire a routine. Fabrice dined with her every night in the flat—he never took her out to a restaurant again. During the day she hardly ever saw him. He always lunched with his mother, who had the first-floor flat in the house where he lived on the ground floor. Sometimes he took Linda sight-seeing in the afternoon, but generally he did not appear until about half past seven, soon after which they dined.

Linda occupied her days buying clothes, which she paid for with great wads of bank notes given her by Fabrice. Might as well be hanged for a sheep as a lamb, she thought.

FABRICE was delighted. He took an intense interest in her clothes, made her parade around her drawing room in them, forced her to take them back to the shops for alterations which seemed to her quite unnecessary, but which proved in the end to have made all the difference.

"Only by trial and error," he said, "can you find out your type. So keep on, my dear, work at it. You're not doing at all badly."

The weather now became hot and sultry, holiday, seaside weather. But this was 1939, and men's thoughts were not of relaxation, but of death. Fabrice said every day how much he longed to take Linda to the Riviera, to Venice and to his beautiful château in the Dauphiné. But he was a reservist, and would be called up any day now. Linda did not mind staying in Paris. She felt no particular apprehensions about the coming war, she was essentially a person who lived in the present.

One afternoon in July she arrived home wearing a new and particularly ravishing straw hat. It was large and simple, with a wreath of flowers and two blue bows. Her right arm was full of roses and carnations, and in her left hand was a striped bandbox, containing another exquisite hat. She let herself in with her latchkey, and stumped, on the high cork soles of her sandals, to the drawing room.

The green Venetian blinds were down, and the room was full of warm shadows, two of which suddenly resolved themselves into a thin man and a not so thin man—Davey and Lord Merlin.

"Good heavens," said Linda, and she flopped down onto a sofa.

"Well," said Davey, "you do look pretty."

Linda felt really frightened, like a child caught out in some misdeed. She looked from one to the other. "What have you come for?"

"You don't seem very pleased to see us," said Davey. "We came, actually, to see if you were all right. As it's only too obvious that you are, we may as well go away again."

"How did you find out? Do mummy and Fa know?"

"No, absolutely nothing. They think you're still with Christian. We haven't come in the spirit of two Victorian uncles, my dear Linda. I happened to see a man I know who had been to Perpignan, and he mentioned that Christian was living with Lavender Davis. I went round to Cheyne Walk and there you obviously weren't, and then Mer and I got worried."

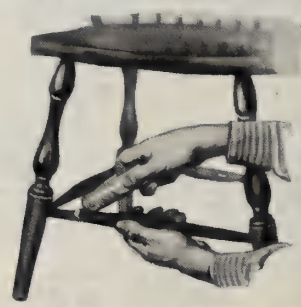
"You gave us a fright," said Lord Merlin crossly. "Another time, when you are putting on this Cléo de Mérode act, you might send

Don't be a RUBBIT!

Don't be a slave to messy pots and pans. Don't try to rub 'em clean with a sticky dishrag! Wipe 'em smooth and shiny with a Brillo pad!

BRILLO whisks 'em shiny!

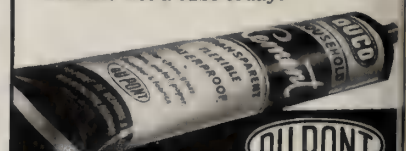
Swirl a square, metal-fiber Brillo pad around scorchy pans. Whee! They're clean! And Brillo's special-formula polishing soap makes 'em shine! Neat! Fast! Brillo Soap Pads —red box; or Brillo Cleanser, pads and soap separate—green box.



Keeps aluminum brilliant

PURE Genuine VANILLA EXTRACT

Guaranteed Full Strength "DOES NOT BAKE OUT"



Dr. PRICE'S VANILLA EXTRACT

REPAIRS

FURNITURE, TOYS

... also broken china, glassware, torn luggage and books. This handy adhesive is waterproof, transparent and flexible. Get a tube today!

DUCO CEMENT

The second best way to get rid of Ants . . .

. . . is to bring home an anteater. The best way is to bring home a can of Peterman Ant Killer. Just sprinkle Peterman Ant Killer around the house wherever you find ants. Clean, odorless powder kills 'em dead, dead, dead. Get the famous powder that's sent millions of ants to their ancestors! Peterman with or without DDT!

PETERMAN
ANT KILLER

a post card. What an interest you are in one's life, Linda dear. Have you told him he must give you up and marry a pure young girl yet?"

Linda said disarmingly, "Don't tease. I'm so happy you can't think."

"Yes, you look happy, I must say."

"What time does your lover generally arrive?" said Davey, taking out his watch.

"Not till about seven. Do stay and see him."

"No, thank you, not for the world."

"Who is he?" said Lord Merlin.

"He's called the Duke of Sauveterre."

A look of great surprise, mingled with horrified amusement, passed between Davey and Lord Merlin.

"Fabrice de Sauveterre?"

"Yes. Do you know him?"

"Darling Linda, one always forgets, under that look of great sophistication, what a little provincial you really are. Of course we know him, and all about him, and, what's more, so does everyone except you. Fabrice is undoubtedly one of the wickedest men in Europe, as far as women are concerned."

"Do you remember in Venice," said Davey, "when he made off with Ciano's girl friend, what a fuss there was. And then, a week later, he dumped her in Cannes and went to Salzburg with Martha Birmingham, and poor old Claude shot at him four times, and always missed him."

"Fabrice has a charmed life," said Lord Merlin. "I suppose he has been shot at more than anybody, and, as far as I know, he's never had a scratch."

Linda was unmoved by these revelations, which had been forestalled by Fabrice himself. Anyhow, no woman really minds hearing of the past affairs of her lover; it is the future alone that has the power to terrify.

The more intellectual people are, the most originality they see in other men. To commonplace people, all men are much alike.

—PASCAL

"Come on, Mer," said Davey. "Good-by, Linda, we're off to dine. Good-by—give our love to Fabrice."

When Fabrice came in he sniffed about, and asked whose cigar. Linda explained. "They say they know you."

"Surely—Merlin, such a nice chap, and poor Warbeck, always so ill. I knew them in Venice. What did they think of all this?"

"Well, they roared at the flat."

"Yes, I can imagine. It is quite unsuitable for you, and with the war coming ——"

"Oh, but I love it, I wouldn't like anything else half so much. Wasn't it clever of them, though, to find me?"

"Do you mean to say you never told anybody where you were?"

"I really didn't think of it—the days go by, you know ——"

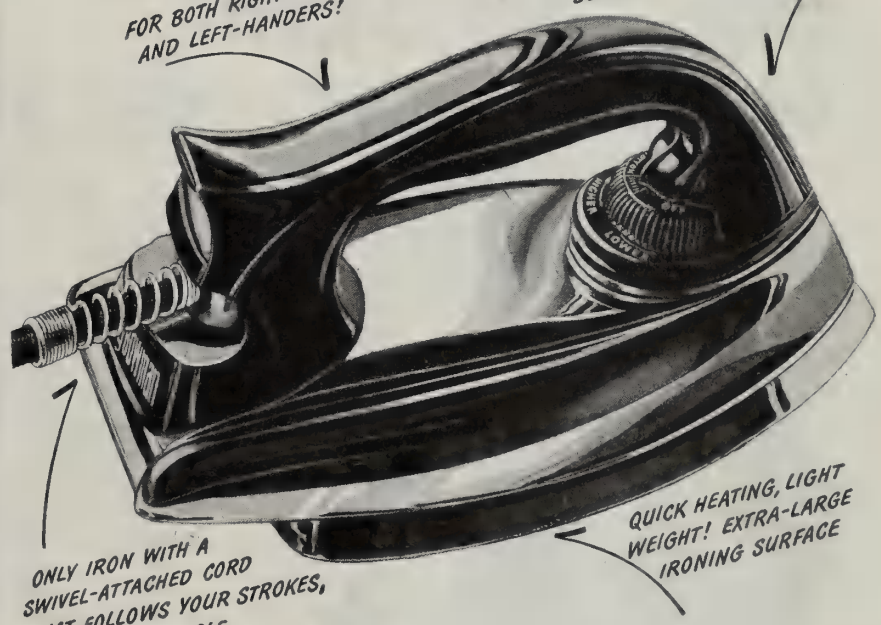
"And it was six weeks before they thought of looking for you? As a family you seem to me strangely disorganized."

Linda suddenly threw herself into his arms, and said, with great passion, "Never, never let me go back to them."

"My darling—you know you will probably have to, soon. The war is going to begin, you know."

"Why can't I stay here? I could work—I could become a nurse—well, perhaps not a nurse, actually, but something."

"If you promise to do what I tell you, you may stay here for a time. At the beginning we shall sit and look at the Germans across the Maginot Line, then I shall be a great deal in Paris, between Paris and the front, but mostly here. What you must promise me is that the minute I tell you to leave for London you will leave, even if you can see no reason for doing so. Will you solemnly promise, now?"



"All right," said Linda. "I don't believe anything so dreadful could happen to me, but I promise to do as you say. Now will you promise that you will come to London as soon as it's all over and find me again?"

"Yes," said Fabrice. "I will do that."

"That reminds me, Hector—it's time I got one of those M-B irons with the non-kink cord!"

Now! The Iron That-Wags-Its-Tail!

Manning Bowman
Means Best

SMOKELESS TABLE BROILER
No smoke, odor, effort

LONG-LAST PERCOLATOR
Dripless spout — dignified design

WAFFLER-THAT-DOESN'T-OOZE
Overflow control — automatic

5-MINUTE MOTHPROOFING
with new, lasting HEX would have saved this suit!

Why risk finding your costly woolens completely ruined by moths? Protect them now with one quick spray application of the lasting Hex liquid mothproofing. Scientific tests prove that moths absolutely will not harm fabrics treated with Hex. Hex-treated woolens require no wrapping or storing away! A Koppers product.

HEX PUTS THE HEX ON MOTHS!

BUY HEX AT VARIETY, HARDWARE DRUG OR DEPARTMENT STORES

Here's the first step toward new beauty for your skin. Spread Hopper White Clay Pack over clean face and neck. Relax. Enjoy the stimulating effect of your beauty mask on your tired, tense skin . . . so helpful to loosen blackheads and deflake "top skin."

Once a week—White Clay Pack

Next, in 8 minutes . . . or when mask has "set". Slosh on cool, clear water. How wonderfully soft your skin feels now—looks smoother, finer in texture. It's actually glowing, brightened by the gentle blushing action of White Clay Pack, Not a rough patch left to cause "bumpy" make-up. Now you're a smoothie for fair!

here's a famous way to flower-fresh skin

it's the Edna Wallace Hopper Twin Treatment for coarse dry skin flakes and clogging dirt

Then, every day . . . to help keep that underskin beauty bright. Pat on Hopper Homogenized Facial Cream with upward, outward strokes from the base of your throat. (See diagram.) Ever-so-gently around the eyes where tiny lines creep in. This rich cream is the make-up base you've been searching for. And, lady—what a night cream!

Every day—Homogenized Facial Cream

You can start rejoicing, any day, about the new loveliness your Twin Treatment care reveals. For, day after day, this super beauty cleansing will help to keep your skin brighter, more youthful in appearance. Yours will be the true beauty of a clean skin!

Sold at leading cosmetic counters . . . 25c, 60c, $1.00 sizes

When the war, which had for so long been pending, did actually break out some six weeks later, Linda was strangely unmoved by the fact. She was enveloped in the present, in her own detached and futureless life, which, anyhow, seemed so precarious, so much from one hour to another; exterior events hardly impinged on her consciousness.

Since Davey's visit Linda had been getting letters from her family. He had given Aunt Sadie her address and told her that Linda was doing war work in Paris.

Christian, who was back in London, had left the Communist Party and had joined up. Lavender had also returned; she was now an A.T.S. Christian did not show the slightest curiosity about what had happened to Linda, he did not seem to want to divorce her or to marry Lavender, he had thrown himself heart and soul into army life and thought of nothing but the war.

On a beautiful windy blue-and-white day in April the blow fell. Fabrice, whom Linda had not seen for nearly a week, arrived from the front looking grave and worried, and told her she must go back to England at once.

"I've got a place for you in the airplane," he said, "for this afternoon. You must pack a small suitcase, and the rest of your things must go after you by train. I have to go to the Ministère de la Guerre. I'll be back in time to take you to Le Bourget."

WHEN he returned he looked more preoccupied than ever. Linda was waiting for him, her box was packed, she was wearing the blue suit in which he had first seen her, and had her old mink coat over her arm. Linda said good-by to Germaine and followed Fabrice into the lift, out into the street. She did not fully understand that she was leaving that happy life behind her forever.

At first, back in Cheyne Walk, she still did not understand. The world was gray and cold certainly, the sun had gone behind a cloud, but only for a time; it would come out again. Then, as sometimes happens, the cloud, which had seemed at first such a little one, grew and grew, until it became a thick gray blanket smothering the horizon. The bad news began, the terrible days, the unforgettable weeks. A great horror of steel was rolling over France, was rolling toward England, swallowing on its way the puny beings who tried to stop it, swallowing Fabrice, Germaine, the flat and the past months of Linda's life, swallowing Alfred, Bob, Matt and little Robin, coming to swallow us all. London people cried openly in the busses, in the streets, for the English army which was lost.

Then, suddenly one day, the English army turned up again. There was a feeling of such intense relief, it was as if the war were over and won. Alfred and Bob and Matt and little Robin all reappeared, and, as a lot of French soldiers also arrived, Linda had a wild hope that Fabrice might be with them. She sat all day by the telephone, and when it rang and it was not Fabrice she was furious with the unlucky telephoner—I know, because it happened to me. She was so furious that I dropped the receiver and went straight round to Cheyne Walk.

I found her unpacking a huge trunk, which had just arrived from France. I had never seen her looking so beautiful. It made me gasp, and I remembered how Davey had said, when he got back from Paris, that at last Linda was fulfilling the promise of her childhood, and had become a beauty.

"What are you doing in London, darling?" she said, between tears and laughter.

"I'm with Alfred. He's got to get a lot of new equipment and see all sorts of people. I believe he's going abroad again very soon."

"What does he say about Dunkirk?"

"He says it was like something out of the Boy's Own—he seems to have had a most fascinating time."

"They all did. The boys were here yesterday and you never heard anything like their stories. Of course they never quite realized how desperate it all was until they got to the coast. Oh, isn't it wonderful to have them back? If only—if only one knew what had

Absorbine Jr. effective for Athlete's Foot in 3 out of 4 cases tested!

Clinical tests, laboratory tests prove Absorbine Jr. may relieve your Athlete's Foot symptoms, too!

To kill laboratory cultures of the organisms which cause painful Athlete's Foot is one thing. To reach and kill them on living tissues of human feet is far more difficult.

Yet that is exactly what Absorbine Jr. has been proved to do in 3 out of 4 cases tested under strictest clinical and laboratory control.

REPEAT—3 out of 4 suffering from Athlete's Foot got complete relief, not partial relief, from the symptoms of this painful skin condition by application of Absorbine Jr.

Cracks warn of danger

Look between your toes tonight! Is it cracked, raw? These signs often mean your feet have been infected with Athlete's Foot organisms.

Drench these cracks with Absorbine Jr.

Pour on—full strength. Often a cotton swab soaked in Absorbine Jr. will help remove loosened patches of dead skin, if rubbed gently.

Guard against reinfection!

Boil socks 15 minutes. Disinfect your shoes. In advanced cases, consult your doctor in addition to using Absorbine Jr. $1.25 a bottle at all drugstores

W. F. Young, Inc., Springfield, Mass.

Absorbine Jr.

Kills Athlete's Foot organisms on contact ened to one's French buddies ——" She d at me under her eyelashes, and I ght she was going to tell me about her ut, if so, she changed her mind.

"Why don't you go to Alconleigh?" I said. to Shenley? I'm going there with the en as soon as Alfred is off again."
d like to come for a visit sometime,
I know a little more what is happen-ut at the moment I must stop here.
them my love, though. I've got such s to tell you, Fanny, what we really is hours and hours in the Hons' cup-t."

through those terrible months of May, and July, Linda waited for a sign from ce, but no sign came. She did not that he was alive, it was not in Linda's e to imagine that anyone might be dead.
new that thousands of Frenchmen were rman hands, but felt certain that, had ce been taken prisoner, he would unedly manage to escape. She would rom him before long, and, meanwhile, was nothing to be done, she must simait. She alternated between hope and ir, but as the months went by without a despair began to prevail.

n, on a sunny Sunday morning in Au-very early, her telephone bell rang.
llo—allo?"
abrice?"
ui."
h! Fabrice—I've been ing for you for so long."
ow nice! Then I may right away?"
, wait—yes, you can at once, but don't go minute, go on talking,
t to hear the sound of voice."
, no, I have a taxi
e, I shall be with you minutes."
lay back, and all was and warmth while she for that sound more tely connected with rban love affair than cept the telephone bell,
f a stopping taxicab.
tly she heard it in the
She rushed down-

Hours later Linda made coffee. "Why did you Fabrice? To join General de Gaulle?"
, that was not necessary, because I oined him already. I was with him in aux. My work has to be in France, have ways of communicating. I shall see him, of course, he expects me at y, but actually I came on a private n." He looked at her for a long time.
e to tell you that I love you," he said
.
Linda felt giddy. "You never said that to Paris."
."
u always seemed so practical."

. I suppose so. I had said it so often ten before in my life, I had been so tic with so many women, that when I is to be different I really could not ut all those stale old phrases again, I 't utter them. I never said I loved Because from the first moment I knew is was as real as all the others were t was like recognizing somebody—
I can't explain."
t that is exactly how I felt too," said
"Don't try to explain, you needn't, I en, when you had gone, I felt I had to u, and it became an obsession with those dreadful weeks were made more ul because I was being prevented from you."
'
wever did you get here?"
e moves about," said Fabrice vaguely.
st leave again tomorrow morning, rly, and I shan't come back until the over, but you'll wait for me, Linda, thing matters so much now that you
'

"Oh, Fabrice ——" She put her head on his shoulder, and they sat for a long time in silence.

The air raids on London now began. Early in September, just as I had moved there with my family, a bomb fell in the garden of Aunt Emily's little house in Kent. It was a small bomb compared with what one saw later, and none of us were hurt, but the house was more or less wrecked. Aunt Emily, Davey, my children and I then took refuge at Alconleigh, where Aunt Sadie welcomed us with open arms. Louisa had already arrived there with her children.

The big rooms at Alconleigh were filled with the contents of some science museum and no évacuées had been billeted there; I think it was felt that nobody who had not been brought up to such rigors could stand the cold of that house.

Soon the party received a very unexpected addition. I was upstairs in the nursery bathroom doing some washing when Louisa burst in.

"You'll never guess," she said, "in a thousand thousand years who has arrived."

"Hitler," I said stupidly.

"Your mother, Auntie Bolter. She just walked up the drive and walked in."

"Alone?"

"No, with a man."

"The major?"

"He doesn't look like a major. Come on, Fanny, leave those to soak ——"

And so it was. My mother sat in the hall recounting in her birdlike voice with what incredible adventures she had escaped from the Riviera. The major with whom she had been living for some years, always having greatly preferred the Germans to the French, had remained behind to collaborate, and the man who now accompanied my mother was a ruffianly looking Spaniard called Juan, without whom, she said, she could never have got away from a ghastly prison camp in Spain. She spoke of him exactly as though he were not there at all, which produced rather a curious effect, and indeed seemed most embarrassing until we realized that Juan understood no word of any language except Spanish.

Presently Uncle Matthew appeared, and the Bolter told her adventures all over again to him. He said he was delighted to see her, and hoped she would stay as long as she liked.

As for me, it was the first time in my life that I had really found myself face to face with my mother. When a small child I had been obsessed by her and the few appearances she had made had absolutely dazzled me, though, as I have said, I never had any wish to emulate her career. At Alconleigh, in contact with her morning, noon and night, I studied her with the greatest curiosity. I couldn't help rather liking her. Though she was silliness personified, there was something engaging about her frankness and high spirits and endless good nature.

Early in November I had to go to London for the day, and, having heard nothing of Linda for some weeks, I took a taxi to Cheyne Walk. There had been a heavy raid the night before, and I passed through streets which glistened with broken glass. Many fires still smoldered, and fire engines, ambulances and rescue men hurried to and fro, streets were blocked, and several times we had to drive quite a long way round. There seemed to be a great deal of excitement in the air.

Linda's nice daily woman, Mrs. Hunt, opened the door to me at Cheyne Walk. "She's very poorly, ma'am, can't you take her back to the country with you? It's not right for her to be here. I hate to see her like this."

Fear

By C. E. Stummer

Knowing fear
Of this and that,
Let me be frightened.
A bee or a bat,

A slamming shutter,
Scurrying mice,
A snapping log—
These will suffice.

Let the brave hearts
Ponder death
While sudden spiders
Catch my breath.

win in a walk

Perfect blend of crisp tailoring and summery prettiness that makes a smart shoe for any occasion. Shaped over the De Luxe Cushion Tred; Educators hug your instep, your heel ...like lovely shadows. Fifty years' experience in making fine footwear produced idyllic comfort—makes possible their pared-to-the-minimum price.

$6.00

Educator Shoes

Sold Exclusively in 310 KINNEY Shoe Stores

M-M-M!

Made of "FLUFF" again!

EXTRY! EXTRY!

The new Northern Tissue at your store is the softest, whitest ever!

It is now made of "FLUFF"* again—and downy "FLUFF" is the softest, whitest thing there is of which to make a bathroom tissue.

Will you try it soon?

Softer!

Whiter!

NORTHERN TISSUE

NORTHERN TISSUE

made of "FLUFF"

*"FLUFF"—a registered trade-mark symbolizing the snow-white, cotton-soft pure cellulose of which Northern Tissue is made.

Copr. 1946, Northern Paper Mills, Green Bay, Wis.

Linda was in her bathroom, being sick. When she came out she said, "Don't think it's the raid that's upset me. I'm in the family way, that's what it is."

"Darling, I thought you weren't supposed to have another baby."

"Oh, doctors! They don't know anything, they are such fearful idiots. Of course I can, and I'm simply longing for it: this baby won't be the least bit like Moira, you'll see."

"I'm going to have one too."

"No—how lovely—when?"

"About the end of May."

"Oh, just the same as me."

"Linda, why don't you come back with me to Alconleigh? Whatever is the sense of stopping here in all this? It can't be good for you or the baby."

"I like it," said Linda. "It's my home, and I like to be in it. And besides, somebody might turn up, just for a few hours you know, and want to see me, and he knows where to find me here."

"You'll be killed," I said, "and then he won't know where to find you."

"Darling Fanny, don't be so silly. There are seven million people living in London, do you really imagine they are all killed every night?"

"Apart from being killed or not, it doesn't suit you. You look awful, Linda,"

"Not so bad when I'm made up. I'm so fearfully sick, that's the trouble, but it's nothing to do with the raids, and that part will soon be over now and I shall be quite all right again."

"Well, think about it," I said. "It's very nice at Alconleigh. I don't like to leave you, darling, I do wish that you'd come back with me."

"Perhaps I will later on, we'll see."

A week later Mrs. Hunt rang me up at Alconleigh. Linda's house had received a direct hit and they were still digging for her.

AUNT Sadie had gone to do some shopping, Uncle Matthew was nowhere to be found, so Davey and I took his car, full of Home Guard petrol, and drove to London. The little house was an absolute ruin, but Linda and her bulldog were unhurt, they had just been got out and put to bed in the house of a neighbor.

Linda was flushed and excited. "You see," she said. "What did I tell you, Fanny, about air raids not killing people?"

Presently a doctor arrived and gave her a sedative. He told us she would probably go to sleep and that when she woke up we could drive her down to Alconleigh. I telephoned to Aunt Sadie and told her to have a room ready.

Winter now set in with its usual severity. We made our children go out and collect wood: Davey became an assiduous and surprisingly efficient woodman, but, somehow, they produced only enough to keep the nursery fire going, and the one in the brown sitting room. After dinner the two armchairs on each side of the fire were always occupied by Davey and my mother. The rest of us sat in a semicircle well beyond the limits of any real warmth. Linda had an evening coat, a sort of robe from head to foot. She wrapped herself in this for dinner, and suffered less than we others did.

The Radletts still believed that Linda was the devoted wife of Christian, who was now in Cairo, and, of course, it had never occurred to them for a moment that the child might not be his. They would ask her from time to time w Christian was doing. She would then obliged to invent bits of news out of im nary letters. In point of fact, Linda n got any letters at all.

Louisa and I were busy from mornin night. We now had one nanny (mine) an eight children. So we worked hard, men and washing, doing chores. As well as loo after the clothes of our existing families also had to make for the babies we wer pecting.

So the winter slowly passed. The sp came with extraordinary beauty, as al at Alconleigh, with a brilliance of colori richness of life, that one had forgotten t pect during the cold gray winter months now waited with longing and impatienc our babies to be born. The days, the hours dragged slowly by, and Linda beg say "better than that" when asked the

"What's the time, darling?"

"Guess."

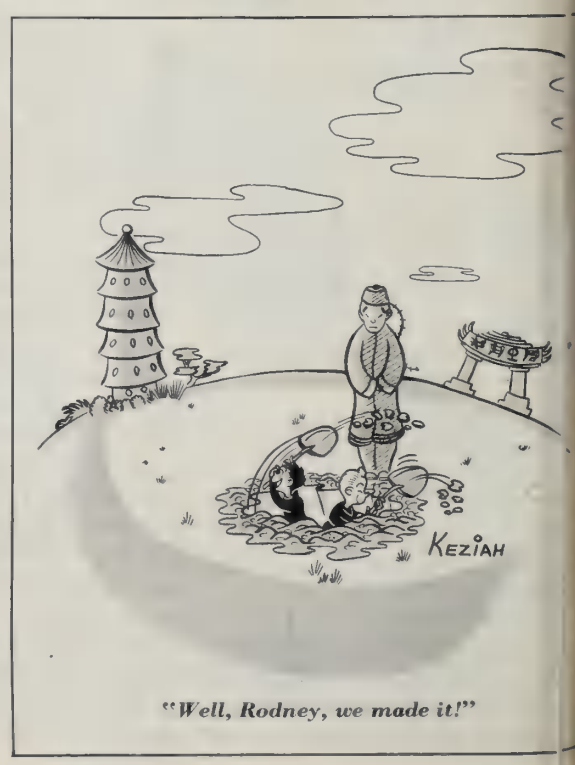
"Half past twelve?"

"Better than that, a quarter to one.

ON the twenty-eighth of May both babies were born—both boys. The do who said that Linda ought never to another child were not such idiots afte It killed her. She died, I think, comp happy, and without having suffered much, but for us at Alconleigh, for her and mother, brothers and sisters, for I and for Lord Merlin a light went out, a deal of joy that never could be replace

At about the same time as Linda's Fabrice was caught by the Gestapo an sequently shot. He was a hero of th sistance, and his name has become a in France.

I have adopted the little Fabrice, wi consent of Christian, his legal father. black eyes, the same shape as Linda ones, and is a most beautiful and ench child. I love him quite as much as, a haps more than, I do my own.



The Bolter came to see me while I w in the Oxford nursing home where my had been born and where Linda had "Poor Linda," she said, with f "poor little thing. But Fanny, don think perhaps it's just as well? The li women like Linda and me are not so fun when one begins to grow older."

I didn't want to hurt my mother's f by protesting that Linda was not that woman. "But I think she would hav happy with Fabrice," I said. "He w great love of her life, you know."

"Oh, dulling," said my mother "One always thinks that. Every, time."

(THE END)

"Well, Rodney, we made it!"

BY APPOINTMENT
PERFUMERS TO
H. M. QUEEN MARY
YARDLEY, LONDON

they say it's pure white magic—

Imperial HAND-CRAFTED
CRYSTAL

For a gay luncheon or a family dinner at home. Use it day in, day out . . . nothing can dim the brilliant beauty of clear Candlewick or Cape Cod crystal. Both are open stock patterns . . . hand-crafted at IMPERIAL GLASS CORPORATION, Bellaire, Ohio.

This combination of moonlight, a leaf-hung terrace, you—and Yardley English Lavender! There is a gentle spell about a scent so heavenly fresh — so young, so exquisitely feminine — but you're the one to see that it's as magic as they say!

Yardley English Lavender, the gay-hearted fragrance, $4.75, $2.50, $1.50.
Yardley English Lavender Soap, 35c, box of three tablets, $1. Prices plus tax.

YARDLEY
ENGLISH
LAVENDER

Yardley products for America are created in England and finished in the U. S. A. from the original English formulae, combining imported and domestic ingredients. Yardley of London, Inc., 620 Fifth Avenue, Rockefeller Center, New York 20, N. Y.

ADV. BY N. W. AYER

Only one soap gives your skin this exciting Bouquet

Discover the secret of popular girls' fragrant appeal!

Would you impart to your skin the scent tantalizing enough to beguile a man into that "I-love-you-only" look? Then do as popular girls have done for seventy-seven romantic years. Bathe with Cashmere Bouquet Soap, the soap with the fragrance men love. Its beguiling bouquet comes from a secret wedding of rare perfumes, far more costly than you'd expect to find in any soap. Be all-over dainty. Be all-out appealing. Bathe with Cashmere Bouquet Soap every day. Lovely for your complexion, too.

10¢

3 CAKES FOR 27¢

Cashmere Bouquet

ADORNS YOUR SKIN WITH THE FRAGRANCE MEN LOVE

CASHMERE BOUQUET

the dining room with a platter that would have staggered a plow hand.

"Good morning," she said. "You haven't done anything to work up an appetite, so just stop when you're through. You don't have to eat it all."

"Thank you," said Martin sardonically.

It was surprising, though, how one pancake led to another. And the sausage was really rather good, not overfilled with the cereal and other guk so often substituting for good pork. But he did not, of course, eat it all. A pancake and some coffee were left when he was through.

He lit a cigarette and went out to the porch. He thought now that perhaps the house would endure through a Wesleyville bombing. Not that anyone would waste a bomb on Wesleyville; it was simply a matter of abstract calculation, you understand.

Round old Bleeker leaned against the porch rail talking in a desultory way with round old Mrs. Bleeker, who sat in a rocker shelling Lima beans. Martin, coming out, caught the tail end of some inane remark about cutworms. Then they saw him.

"'Morning," said Bleeker, who'd obviously done a half day's work by now. "Feelin' better, doc?"

"Better than what?" snapped Martin, irritated as usual at the sight of unlearned humanity being cheerful when its years, perhaps its very days, were numbered.

"Better'n last night," said Bleeker equably.

Martin grunted.

Bleeker went on: "You ever do any scythin', doc?"

"Now, Henry," said Mrs. Bleeker, shelling beans, "the young man came here to rest."

"Sure. From the eyes up. Nothin' wrong with his back, is there? Wanta try?"

Martin snorted, but he had nothing else to do and he might tire himself out enough to sleep for a change—he ignored last night—so he followed Bleeker to the barn, behind which was a field to be cleared of weeds. It looked like an awfully big field to Martin, who was beginning to think sourly of the idea anyhow, but he listened perfunctorily while Bleeker talked.

"You swing nice an' easy. See? Don't fight the scythe and don't fight the weeds. A nice, easy cut-across."

Martin swung.

"No. No. Don't hook at it. Slice 'cross the stalks, gentle an' easy. Do it right, you can scythe all day. Wrong, an' a strong man's worn out in an hour. There's a rhythm to it, like dancin' a pretty girl around."

Like dancing Maggilone Kellsey around, perhaps? Martin had never danced with Mag. . . . Martin stopped thinking of Mag.

IT TOOK a while before Martin changed his stubborn conviction that any fool with arms could scythe; but finally, by concentrating hard, he got so that he could hold an easy swing for several minutes at a time, letting the scythe do the work, drawing the blade with light precision across the tough stalks so that, faintly sighing, they fell away.

If I could just cut through the weeds of ignorance like this, he thought—and so thinking, began to hook and haul and sweat. That for you, Senator Which! That for you, Congressman Whosis! That for you, Maggilone Kellsey!

Bleeker came and shook his phlegmatic head. "Go at it wrong, you wear yourself out for nothin'. Better rest now, doc."

Fuming, Martin went upstairs to shower and change his sweaty clothing. After that he sat on the bed a moment to relax—and when he woke up it was three o'clock. He woke up yelling, "Can't they see? For the love of heaven, can't they see?" He sighed and went downstairs, where on the table he found a mound of fresh-baked bread, a great gob of homemade butter and a two-quart pitcher of milk.

MARTIN VORHEES had intended to stay at Sugarbowl Road no more than a week end but after ten days he was still there, still saying each night that next morning he must leave. The place had been good for him in a brainless way; he admitted that. He'd slept. He had regained weight, and his body had got back some of its normal bounce. Also, he'd liked the scything.

You could think while scything, and at the same time the rhythm of it drained violence from thought. And the analogy of it increasingly entertained him. Deftly you drew the blade of reason across the rank and chokin growth, and deftly you laid your adversarie low. Then, time out to sharpen up. Don fight it, don't club around; you get no plac fighting either you weapon or your wor all the time.

Perhaps, Marti conceded now, he ha clubbed around t crudely about th peril of the split aton Perhaps he had fough himself and others t arrogantly in his effo to amputate stupi ity; he even conced that he might ha acted with a bit le fanaticism with Ma gilone in the canoe though he still fe that for a great scien tist as well as a sens tive woman she ha shown remarkabl little understanding

Martin had abou decided not to go bac to the university. H thought that nov rested, he might do better, smoother jo of persuasion in Was ington. Also, he foun himself thinking wit more mellowness Mag. He pondere writing her: "De Mag: I've had a fu vacation down he and perhaps have suffered a change of pe spective. I want to say that even thou your recent articles differ from my views, admire them very much." That, he thoug would be swallowing an awful lot; but he w preparing to when Bleeker called and asked he wanted to drive to town with them. Mart hadn't stirred off the place for ten days, he accepted the invitation.

Wesleyville holds fewer than a thousa souls. On a week night you could fire cha shot down State Street and not scoop more than a dozen people, but this was Sa urday night and there were astonishing nur bers in the town. Round Mrs. Bleeker we into a store, and Martin pushed with rou Mr. Bleeker toward a newsstand, where bought a city daily.

He glanced at the first page—and howl with rage. "Famed Woman Scientist Sa Danger of A-Bomb Exaggerated." In t interview which followed, Professor Kells neatly demolished Professor Vorhees' stat ment that too many atomic explosions mig start the nitrogen chain reaction which wou consume Earth's crust. Martin furious crammed the paper into a trash can, a then was aware of Bleeker's mild blue ey on him.

"Somethin' wrong, doc?"

Something wrong! Martin hunted words to tell him and couldn't find any for ful enough.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

What are You, Time?

By Bianca Bradbury

What are you, Time? Friend or enemy?
Carelessly
You carve hard anger in a face,
Or mold it to an antique grace.
You pick at locks
The heart puts up—they lie
Who say you heal. And yet you spend
A thousand years or more
Rubbing pink-veined sea stones on a shore
To fill a child's treasure box.
Casually, you cut a love in two.
Time, how does one compromise with you?
You sour a whole life to an acid end
Or mellow it as surely as good wine.
Enemy or friend—
What will you make of mine?

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

LITTLE JACK HORNER...

. . . would have been clean in a jiffy, had mama known about soft SITROUX TISSUES! Grand for "mopping up", for sniffles and sneezes, facial cleansings, dozens of daily uses. Today, say "Sit-True"!

* Tissue manufacturers are still faced with material shortages and production difficulties . . . but we are doing our best to supply Sitroux Tissues. And, like all others, we are making the finest quality tissues possible under present conditions. For your understanding and patience—our thanks!

Bleeker said diffidently, "You like beer? It ain't bad at the tavern."

"Why not?" snarled Martin. So they went in.

Martin saw a big, low room filled with tables and a bar. Filled with men, too, this evening. Bleeker knew everyone, of course, and through the smoky air he introduced Martin around. "Doc, this's Jud Pearson, Ed Krause, Pete Kusak. Boys, this's the professor. You know."

Martin nodded to the Petes and Eds and Juds, meanwhile thinking what he'd do to Maggilone Kellsey next time he had a chance. He'd mash her crazy theories to a pulp! He'd annihilate her! He'd —— He saw that all the men in the place were looking at him. They seemed, either through news columns or old Bleeker's gossip, familiar with his name. Beers slid along the bar and Martin raised his glass and Kusak spoke.

Kusak, a big, dish-faced man in stiff good clothes, said in the half-defiant, half-deferent tone of folks addressing professors, "We understand you're up on this here atom stuff. We been talkin' about it some—guess everybody has—and we wondered what would be your idea: should we keep the secret of the atom bomb, or let others have it, too, to show we're friendly?"

Martin strangled on his beer. He counted ten. It did no good. These words, this empty phrase, this thoughtful, thoughtless, cautious, moronic, judicial, fair-minded, nit-witted query—how often had he heard it! He turned to face the man. Behind Kusak, around the big room, they all were looking at him as if he were on a platform. Well, they'd hear!

"Keep the bomb a secret?" His throat swelled red; his eyes burned over his great beak of a nose. "Keep it a secret?"

Blistering words rushed up for utterance. He raised his fist—and caught old Bleeker's eyes on him again. Bleeker had never looked more childlike and ingenuous; his gaze expressed only puzzled effort at comprehension of such things as atoms. But under that naïve stare Martin slowly brought his fist down, and for the first time wondered if this man weren't a whole lot smarter than he looked. Those scything instructions: "Easy, smooth, let the blade do the work." He'd been prompt to compare this parallel with the present angry dilemma of his life. Was it possible that Bleeker had made the same comparison?

"Well, now, I'll tell you," he said, breathing heavily through his nose. "We don't think there's much question of its being kept secret. Hundreds of men have worked for years all over the world at atom smashing. Already, we think, others can make the bombs about as well as we can."

There was silence while the words sank in. Martin stared around. The half-suspicious, half-defiant faces did look like weed blooms swaying in the smoky air. An easy cut, don't hook and haul. An angry man is an inefficient man.

"So if there's another dust-up," someone finally said, "both sides'd drop the bombs like peanuts all around the place."

"Could be," said Martin, sipping at his beer.

More silence. No one there, it seemed, liked peanuts.

Slow Kusak said, "And if a lot of them go off? What then? We've read queer stuff about that. What would happen?"

It was the spot for battering logic. It was the place to club and flail around, and if any doubted, to thunder the doubter down. Martin burned to do it, but he only said, "We don't know."

The men looked perplexed, then each glanced sidelong at his neighbor.

A Chinaman never argues with a woman. This diffidence arises from no chivalrous feeling, but from the conviction that he will be worsted in the end.

—E. J. HARDY: How to be Happy Though Civil (Charles Scribner's Sons).

Favorite of Feminine America

BETTER 5 WAYS

- Easy to fasten
- Eliminates garter bumps
- Helps prevent garter runs
- Keeps hosiery seams straight
- Eliminates bunching of too—long stockings

INVIZ-A-GRIP
The Modern Garter on Fitter Corselets

Primitive Red
Du Barry Lipstick

A red for the woman who knows as instinctively as a primitive painter stroking color on canvas.
Pure, unblended red...basic as love and life. Stark and beautiful above the crowd.

New York Richard Hudnut Paris

PRIMITIVE RED MAKE-UP TRIO
Primitive Red Lipstick and Brush, with easy instructions from the Du-Barry Success School on how experts use a brush for lovelier lips. Packaged with generous sample of harmonizing DuBarry Face Powder, complete $1.50, plus tax.

Painting, "The Old Checkered House," by Grandma Moses · Spaniel hat by John-Frederics

WHEN SUMMER BREEZES GET CAPRICIOUS . . .

. . . reach for a Lady Seymour "Summer Light" and slumber dreamily on. All wool, in zephyr-soft pastels. Limited editions available at your favorite store.

Lady Seymour
ALL WOOL BLANKETS
SEYMOUR WOOLEN MILLS
SEYMOUR, INDIANA

ALSO MAKERS OF Seymour ALL WOOL FABRICS

DEVOE MARBLE FLOOR VARNISH

- DRIES IN 4 HOURS
- WEARS LONGER
- WITHSTANDS HOT WATER

A DEVOE Post War PRODUCT
AT YOUR PAINT DEALERS

The Mark
TO LOOK FOR
by SALEM CHINA CO.

Whenever smart women choose a dinnerware for truest harmony with their other furnishings, for long service, for welcome savings on just-beginning budgets . . . . it's Salem they look for. It pays to be curious; look underneath for the Salem mark. Dealers will show you more Salem China soon.

American Dinnerware of Distinction
The SALEM CHINA Co.
ESTABLISHED 1898 — SALEM, OHIO

EXTRA MONEY FOR YOU
SELL GREETING CARDS AND PERSONAL STATIONERY
Take easy orders from friends, neighbors. Sell beautiful $1.00 50 Christmas Assortments. Costs you 50c up per box. Also Birthday, Baby Congratulation, Gift Wrapping, Humorous, Scripture Text assortments 50c up. Up to 100% profit. Extra Bonus. Request $1.00 Everyday assortment on approval and Free Stationery portfolio. Special Offer.
FREE SAMPLES Name Personalized Stationery
ELMIRA GREETING CARD CO., Dept. M-35, ELMIRA, N. Y.

EXTRA MONEY EASILY EARNED
SHOW FRIENDS EXCLUSIVE GREETING CARD ASSORTMENTS
Up to 100% profit for you. Request new 1946 exclusive 14 card All Occasion $1.00 assortment on approval. Many other year 'round money makers—Birthdays, Gift Wrappings, Social Notes. Write today for box on approval and new selling plan.
FREE SAMPLE PERSONALIZED STATIONERY
THOMAS [illegible] STUDIOS, 117 Union Ave., Westfield, Mass.

"You could make a guess, couldn't you?" said Kusak.

"I'd much prefer not to," Martin replied dryly.

They didn't like this either. They thought it over and found the unknown rather chilling. Finally someone whistled and said thoughtfully, "Holy smoke!" Someone else rasped nervously, "You seem pretty calm about it."

"What can I do?" Martin shrugged. "It's up to you, the people, now."

"But look." Kusak was almost pleading. "You mean if a couple nations get reckless, you can't even guess what would happen? With all you guys know—you don't know that?"

"That's right," said Martin. "We're working with something the potentialities of which are colossal, and still mysterious. We—just—don't—know."

He saw them write it in their minds in blacker letters than ever he could chisel in: "Doomsday?" So I don't know anything about people, Maggilone? he thought. But for once, at least, he'd held an audience. While it was still held, silent, he paid for two beers and walked outside with Bleeker. Behind him, he thought, some weeds had been deftly laid low, with no rhythm of dignity lost in the process. If only, on that afternoon with Mag, he had kept more balance.

On the sidewalk he said to Bleeker, "Think you're pretty smart, don't you?"

"Me?" said Bleeker, looking very surprised. "Smart?"

"You're a good scything teacher, at any rate."

"You're a good pupil. You catch on fast. Now where you goin'?"

Queens are superior to kings, because when a woman is on the throne it is men who govern, whereas with a king it is a woman.
—THE DUCHESS OF BURGUNDY.

"Drugstore," said a reconstructed professor with a new theory. "Phone booth."

It took a lot of change, but finally after various clinks and clangs Martin was connected with Tarreytown, and Prof. Maggilone Kellsey, it appeared, was there. He could see the deep blue eyes and the dark soft hair, sleek now with no wind or hand to tumble it.

"Mag," he blurted, "I've been looking at road maps. I think if I drove all night I could get to Tarreytown by morning."

Perhaps it was abrupt; perhaps a build-up would have helped. Anyhow, Professor Kellsey's voice came back as long-distant as the call. "That's interesting. But why should you?"

Well, thought Martin hotly, if that's the way she wants it —— He squeezed the receiver tight. Don't flail around—an easy, precise stroke. He said, "Because you're there. That's why."

Distance melted. Over two hundred and eighty-some miles came the small catch of her breath. "Oh?"

"I want to take back some statements I made one day in a canoe," said Martin. "I find that I have had a few things twisted, and I want you to help me untwist them. Will you?"

"Darling," said Prof. Maggilone Kellsey, falling with scarcely a sigh. "I'm the one who's been twisted. Oh, come fast! All the silly things I've said for publication just because you —— Martin, I want you to know that in spite of all I've said and done deep down, dear, really ——" She spoke then, the three little words that meant all the world to Martin as her lover: "I'm scared too!"

KING GUS

(Continued from Page 22)

He grinned. Here was something he knew about—the withdrawn and wary look. He said, "Joss wouldn't like this, you know. But I've got a can of sardines in my kit, and she doesn't need to know about it."

He padded back to his Gladstone and opened it and noticed that the gladiator was still at his heels. It was a silent and one-sided companionship. He brought the sardines back to the kitchen and broke them out and watched the tough gent eat them. It was quite a cat.

It was an old, tough warrior, with plenty of wars to his credit. Its credit. France didn't know, but he was amused. He felt better. Cats fought too. Men fought.

The cat went on methodically licking out the sides of the sardine can, and France watched him. This would annoy Joss, it certainly would.

He thought, If this were a man, I could talk to him. But this is a cat, of sorts, and quite a person, but he doesn't speak English—or American.

He thought sardonically, I've covered a lot of stories, but here is a cat who could probably tell me what I want to know.

France scrambled some eggs and gave the cat most of the cream he found in the icebox, and sat there and brooded. How could you be angry with a wife who wasn't there? He sat there for a long time, and after a while the bat-eared cat got up on his lap and washed his triangular face with a large and businesslike-looking paw and then turned and scrutinized France. France had been looked at like that before. It had been by a Regular Army sergeant, who considered the war an infringement on his personal concerns, and so conducted his end of it. France sneered at the cat—and then thought better of it. He put his own lean, long hand on the cat's battle-scarred flanks and was astonishingly rewarded with a ripe and resonant purr.

On France's flat thigh that animal managed to achieve a comfortable posture and a resonant purr. France, naturally, was flattered, as any man would be. This was a cat who didn't take to just anybody. France relaxed and listened to the inordinate rhythm and enjoyed it. Nobody had made a fuss over him in a long time.

And then he began to notice things.

The whole place was shot. The edge of the window sill looked as if something had been teething on it. The chair legs looked scratched and worn. And there was a large shabby dog bed under the kitchen table. There was a section of tree trunk standing under the window, nailed to a flat base and bearing the marks of industrious claws. France looked at the cat thoughtfully. "Have you moved in here in my absence, cat?" he inquired, and then laughed at the spectacle of himself attired in a large towel, cradling the homeliest bucko of a cat in his experience. Well muscled too.

He put the cat down, and wandered back through the apartment, turning on lights as he went. He whistled. There had been changes made in the careful décor of Messrs. Keene and Frost, those men of nuance and trend.

The living room, hitherto veiled in twilight, displayed calm linen slip covers hiding the opaline satins which France resentfully remembered. The seat of one of the chairs was distinctly soiled too. You might even say it was dirty, France reflected. The cat, still purring like a fur-lined teakettle, settled the matter by leaping up lightly and taking his accustomed place in the chair. France whistled—it was becoming a mere plainer now.

Joss found them so when she came in, hurriedly—the cat kneading its paws in the chair seat and France stretched on the divan, his hands clasped behind his head, the two staring at each other unblinkingly.

"Darling!" Joss flew to him. She was holding a cable form in her hand. France opened his arms and she fell into them, hat and all, and for a while neither of them said much of anything. The cable form fluttered to the floor—it was France's to have saying he'd be home.

(Continued on Page 122)

THIS IS FOR KEEPS

This is the moment, this is forever, this is the slice of enduring joy you have cut for yourself for keeps . . .

For keeps, too . . . you'll cherish your longed-for Community. Place it proudly on lace or linen, delight in its tradition, its distinction. You'll feel a gracious hostess as candleglow lights its mellow gleam. You'll bless that treasured Community "extra"—an overlay of solid silver at hard-use points. Community patterns are classic, enduring. Community prices are bride-budget wise. Right now jewelers suggest Community's 50-piece service for eight, in a handsome chest, $71.50. (No Government tax.)

Community

THE FINEST SILVERPLATE

If its Community . . . its correct*

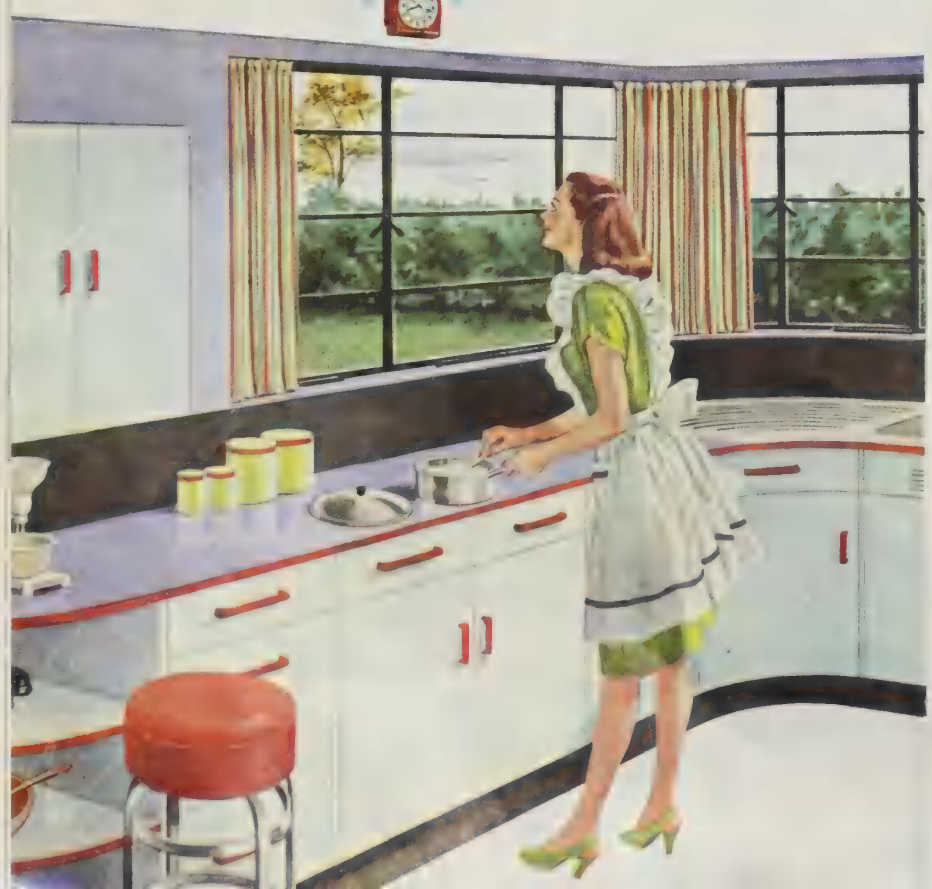
*TRADE MARKS OF ONEIDA LTD. COPYRIGHT 1946 ONEIDA LTD.



Where the right time saves time

Ever overcook the roast because you "guessed" at the time? Ever been late for the movies because you dawdled over the dishes? Try a little kitchen clock-watching, with an accurate Telechron electric wall clock, and whiz through your work on schedule. You can count on the "Buffet" model for the right time for a long time . . . and it never needs winding, or oiling, or regulating. The self-starting, sealed-in-oil motor is the one that has made Telechron electric clocks famous for long life and dependability. The clean-cut dial, with clear figures, is for easy reading, and the colorful plastic case harmonizes with your kitchen scheme. In green, red, ivory, and white plastic.

Telechron
ELECTRIC CLOCKS

TELECHRON INC. • ASHLAND, MASSACHUSETTS

(Continued from Page 120)

Something very odd and queer, something very nice, about this home-coming: Joss crumpled against him on the divan, a cat purring on a chair. France raised his head and looked over Joss' shoulder. The cat had turned his back on both of them. France chuckled, and Joss twisted her head and looked up at him inquiringly. "Nothing at all," he said. "Not for right now." Joss snuggled her head back into his bare shoulder.

France woke up the next morning and the pattern of sunlight on the floor through the Venetian blinds said it was nearly noon. He felt wonderful, but one arm was asleep. Joss was on it. France thought, Something has happened to this joint. And Joss is different too. She's like I always dreamed she'd be. I will be devious and find out what went on around here while I was gone. In a subtle kind of way.

He said, "Miss Latimer! Oh, Miss Latimer!"

Joss said automatically, "I've been awake for hours," and yawned. Her eyes opened and she asked, "What did you call me?" She always said that. She smiled at him—he always called her "Miss Latimer" when he was very happy.

He said, "Miss Latimer, I am about to ask your father if I may pay you my addresses. Miss Latimer — Jocelyn—will you marry me?"

"What?" Joss demanded. "Again?" She giggled. She remembered their wedding, and France's neglecting to tell her Uncle Charles that the punch was spiked. It had lent a flavor to the whole proceedings, that punch.

Joss got out of bed and slung on a somewhat inadequate white lace negligee, through which she glowed like a rose. France looked at her appreciatively, and thought about the change in her. She giggled, she cuddled, she let him rumple her up. He decided that unraveling Joss was much more interesting than reporting to the airways commission. The air, he thought drowsily, had been there for a long time and would probably still be hanging around tomorrow.

He woke to find Joss climbing back in bed with a large breakfast tray. He leaned over and looked into the little server of brown pottery. "What's in there?"

"Baked eggs in cream. Some whole-wheat toast. Mushrooms. And a thick slice of salami that was cut up and cooked with the mushrooms. Before the eggs went in, I mean."

"Who cooked it?" He sniffed the faint redolence of garlic stealing through the air.

"I did."

"Where's Minna?"

"I fired her."

TOTAL disbelief informed France's face. "Fired Minna? What about Carl? After all, they're a couple."

"I suppose they still are, darling."

France leaned back. His wife intrigued him. Something had come over her. He said, "Who taught you to cook, Miss Latimer?"

Joss looked pensive. "I went to cooking school three afternoons a week for a couple of months. And I fooled around with cookbooks here at home." She delicately lifted a large mushroom out from its hiding place in the cream. "Want some breakfast?"

The whole day intrigued him, starting with the large cat strolling in through the kitchen window. He said, "Hello, Big Guy."

Joss turned around from the sink. She looked like an illustrator's dream of Young Mrs. America, France decided. Her pink pinafore had little black horses cavorting around the hem, and she wore black ballet slippers laced with green ribbons. Her silky black hair he had watched her do, in a minute approximately, but he couldn't figure it out: she combed her hair with her head bent over and he wondered why women did that—standing with her legs braced and bent over from the waist until the flying mop almost touched the floor. Then she swooped it up with one hand and made circular motions with the other and spiked the resultant huge doughnut to her skull with four or five jade-green Chinese-looking spikes.

"FOUR or five hundred dollars on the hoof," France said admiringly, "and washing dishes for me!" He reached for the cat and lifted the warrior up in his lap. "See the pretty lady, Big Guy?"

"His name is Gus," Joss offered cordially. "In fact, it's Gustavus Adolphus. But I just call him Gus."

And this was the gal who'd never wanted a pup because they chewed furniture! France marveled, and ignored the scratching log, the bed basket under the table. "How does he get in and out?"

Joss said, "He's wonderful, really. He jumps from the fire escape. That's why I leave the window open."

France said, "Why, that's about five feet, isn't it?" The cat turned his head and looked up at him and yawned, and France decided he understood every word. "But what about winter nights? Doesn't the kitchen get cold?"

"Oh, I just shut the kitchen door into the pantry. That's what Minna and I had the fuss about. She didn't like Gus."

France tickled the little hollow behind Gus' right ear and pondered the matter. They'd had Minna and Carl for the five years they'd been married—a post-honeymoon present, in effect, from Joss' mother. The Latimers had had them for years. Carl he didn't mind, but Minna had always got on his nerves. Still, with a wife who couldn't cook ——

"What do you see in this animal anyway?" he asked.

Joss finished the sink with an efficient swipe and rubbed lotion into her hands and admired her fingernail polish. Then she picked the cat out of France's lap and slung him over her shoulder like a fox fur. He hung there limply. She said, "He was the homeliest cat in the world, that's what he was! Wasn't he?" Abruptly she reversed him, holding him in her arms like a baby, and he opened one eye and reached up and patted her cheek gently. He closed the eye and began to purr. "Was he an old hungry thing?" She smoothed the fur under his chin, and he stretched his head back trustingly. "You know, France," she said suddenly, "he startled me once. Elinor was over here one day—you know, Elinor Welsh—and I was very aggrieved because I couldn't get a small capon, because that was the next cooking lesson, and I wanted to sort of practice at home first. And Gus went off out the window, and after a while he came back with a rat. He killed it all for me," she added proudly. "He couldn't manage a capon, but he did the best he could."

France swallowed. "Probably worried about the meat shortage," he managed. "What did Elinor think?"

(Continued on Page 124)

I remember once when my mother was full of years, and famous for her religious teachings, that a party of schoolgirls from some pious school in Philadelphia visited Oxford, and the teacher who conducted the party wrote to my mother, who was then living at Iffley, to say that it would be a privilege for the little flock of maidens to have a sight of this venerable Quaker saint, and hear from her own lips a few pious words. The permission was granted: the schoolgirls assembled on the spacious lawn outside our house, and I wheeled my mother out in her Bath chair to address them. The spectacle of all these good young girls, being prepared, as my mother knew, for lives of self-sacrifice as daughters, or as wives of American business husbands—somehow this spectacle banished from the old lady's mind the admonition she had intended for them, and when she opened her lips I was considerably surprised to hear her say, "Girls, don't be too unselfish."

From Unforgotten Years, by LOGAN PEARSALL SMITH (Little, Brown & Company Atlantic Monthly Press).

Take a tip from millions of women!

Here's why more women use Glo-Coat than any other floor polish . . .

"It gives us exactly the things we want in a floor polish . . . Lustrous Beauty and Cleanliness and Protection!" That, in a nutshell, is why millions of wives and mothers prefer Glo-Coat.

So easy, too. You simply apply and let dry. No rubbing or buffing needed. As Glo-Coat dries (in 20 minutes), it shines itself, without streaks or dull spots. Spilled things wipe up without leaving a blemish. Naturally Glo-Coated floors go on looking their Sunday best week after week.

Experience shows this famous polish adds greatly to the life of linoleum. Glo-Coat's tough, transparent film protects surfaces from wear caused by dirt, friction and moisture. No wonder linoleum makers themselves strongly recommend Glo-Coat care.

You'll save yourself hours of work, and save your floors, if you use the easy Glo-Coat method . . . as so many other women do.

Tuesday night is Radio's Big Night!
Tune in Fibber McGee and Molly, NBC.

New! DRAX for Clothes and Fabrics
Trademark Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Johnson's DRAX is a protective rinse for clothes and fabrics that will make them resist dirt, shed water, keep fresh longer! 1. Look for the DRAX tag on garments you buy. 2. Many laundries and dry cleaners can give you DRAX service.

Five Famous Johnson Polishes:

Self-Polishing Glo-Coat, Paste Wax, Liquid Wax, Cream Wax, Carnu for cars

© S. C. Johnson & Son, Inc., Racine, Wisconsin, 1946

HANDKERCHIEFS

"very much in the picture"

WHETHER to wave "hello" or flutter "good-by" — to tuck in the handbag or complete the ensemble — handkerchiefs are very much "in the public eye".

SAYLERIZED cotton handkerchiefs have a finish that gives them linen-like beauty and a lasting freshness that endure through many, many launderings. This process minimizes lint and fuzz.

SAYLERIZED finish is also applied to cotton wash goods, and to curtain organdies, by Sayles Finishing Plants, Inc., Saylesville, Rhode Island.

When you buy for yourself and family —

SAYLERIZED PERMANENT FINISH

Look for this label

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

EXTRA MONEY QUICK — SELL $1 NAME IMPRINTED STATIONERY — FREE SAMPLES

Up to 100% profit taking easy orders from friends, fellow workers, others. Send for free samples of our new fast selling $1.00 line of Personal Stationery. Everybody uses. Also large line of popular Everyday greeting card assortments 35c up. Special feature 14 card $1.00 All Occasion assortment. Extra Bonus. Special Offers.

ODD GREETING CARDS 2½c UP

New England Art Publishers, North Abington, Mass.

WATCH CRYSTALS YOU CAN'T BREAK

ANY SIZE—ANY SHAPE

ASK ANY JEWELER FOR A G-S FLEXO CRYSTAL 100% BREAKPROOF. CAN BE FITTED WHILE YOU WAIT. GUARANTEED.

GERMANOW-SIMON CO. ROCHESTER 1, N.Y.

CRO•PAX DEODORANT

Soothing . . . Cooling

The use of Cro•Pax Foot Powder is a most effective method of foot hygiene . . . a safe, dependable way of taking the odor out of foot perspiration. It is an antiseptic, soothing and cooling to tender, burning feet.

For the Relief of

ATHLETE'S FOOT

the daily use of Cro•Pax foot powder is particularly helpful. As a precaution against reinfection, continued use is to be recommended.

at all 10¢ stores

FOREST CITY PRODUCTS, INC. Cleveland, Ohio

(Continued from Page 122)

"Oh, she carried on like crazy. That girl's an awful fool."

He looked carefully at the cigarette he was lighting. "How is Elinor, anyway?"

Joss said, "I wouldn't have the faintest idea. I haven't seen her since. She got practically hysterical about Gus' rat, and she was positively insulting about him. She said that the best thing to do was to take him someplace and have him put to sleep. Imagine!"

"Silly of her," France conceded. "What did she have against Gus?"

"Oh, she gave me a song and dance about pedigreed animals and how homely Gus was—you know, France, he is, he really is, the homeliest cat in the world," she finished, crouching down by the refrigerator, and fishing something from its depths. "Veal hearts," she said matter-of-factly. "He loves them. I get one for me and one for him."

A long lovely vista stretched ahead of France Forrest. No Elinor Welsh! He tried another tack. "Tell me, how are Ben and Jeremy?"

Joss was writing things on a pad, her left leg crossed in back of her right and poised on a toe, and her elegant derrière inviting a soft slap, which she got. She said, "Ow!" and continued, "Mushrooms. See if I can get steak. Out of garlic. Flea powder. Ask about bird's-eye diapers. And potatoes." She pushed the yellow pencil in with the green spikes in her hair, and immediately withdrew it. "Fish for Gus," she finished. "What did you say?"

"Ben. Jeremy. How are they?"

Joss giggled. "I honestly don't know. Gus bit Ben and he hissed at Jeremy until it was really funny. He just didn't care for them, seemed as if."

France considered the crouching cat, neatly finishing his meal, and his respect for the cauliflower-eared pugilist mounted. "He didn't, eh?"

"Nah," said Joss. "Want to help me straighten up the living room?"

Wonder mounted on wonder in Mr. Francis Forrest, who had married a lovely girl nurtured on interior-decoration magazines and the snootier ideas of her sex. She had been lovely—but untouchable. Her mind, like her eyes, had had a faraway expression. Not now.

He said diffidently, "Diapers? What do you want with bird's-eye diapers?"

Joss looked at him, her eyes soft, and came over and put her weight on his lap and buried her head in his shoulder for a long moment. She raised her head finally. Her eyes were wet. She said, "Didn't you know they made the best dish towels? Ask anybody, France. Somebody with a two-year-old baby, for choice." She buried her face on his shoulder again and shook all over.

He put a grim thumb under her chin and turned her face over. She was helpless with laughter. France put his cheek down on her hair and recoiled from the Chinese spikes. One of them had bitten him.

He said bitterly, "Is this a subject for mirth, my good woman?"

She gave a final, subdued chortle and said, "Really, France, you've been gone six

(Continued on Page 126)

Quilting for Christmas

TRAPUNTO quilting—lovely to look at, easy to make, admired by everyone. You will find its delicate designs in simple stitches ideal handwork for sultry summer afternoons. So plan your Christmas giving now, order from the patterns listed below, and start stitching.

JOURNAL REFERENCE LIBRARY

2231. ROLL CONTAINER FOR LINENS. Flower and leaf design to be worked in trapunto quilting. Pattern includes one 15-inch motif and two small circular motifs for roll ends. The quilted fabric is then fitted over a stiff mailing tube and finished with a ribbon tie. A hot-iron transfer pattern. 15c.

2232. HEART-SHAPED TRINKET BOX. A hot-iron transfer pattern. The design for the lid is a delicate lattice pierced by an arrow, with a trailing flower motif around the rim. The sides of the box are quilted in a pattern of hearts and scrolls. Directions for making the box itself are included. 15c.

2233. HATBOX. Hot-iron transfer pattern for quilting a cover for a ready-made hatbox. A flower medallion and a scroll motif are effective here. Make this of chintz and trim it with upholstery cording for a de luxe closet accessory. 15c.

2234. LINGERIE CASE. Hot-iron transfer pattern for a motif of flowers and interwoven bands of curving lines, 15 by 5 inches. To be quilted in a simple running stitch. This case can be made with or without pockets. Use satin, taffeta or crepe with matching or contrasting lining. 15c.

2235. HANDKERCHIEF OR GLOVE ENVELOPE. A hot-iron transfer pattern for a flower motif to be used on the flap of the envelope and a matching design for the corners. Instructions for making the envelope and for trapunto quilting are included. 15c.

2236. LINGERIE CASE. Hot-iron transfer pattern for a beautiful conventional motif 13½ by 5¾ inches. Instructions are included for making the case (with two pockets or a single one, as desired) and for embroidering it in running stitches and French knots. Make this case of satin, taffeta or crepe. 15c.

2228. CHAIR BACK AND SEAT COVERS. Hot-iron transfer patterns in a beautiful rose design. One 13-inch motif and a duplicate 9-inch one. Also a matching 12-inch spray to use on the boxing strips of the seat cover. To be quilted in a simple running stitch. 15c.

2227. PILLOW PATTERN. Hot-iron transfer in interlaced lattice design. Two identical pattern sheets are included. To be used for 14-inch or 16-inch pillows. Make this of taffeta, chintz or sateen. 15c.

2226. QUILTED CHAIR PAD. Hot-iron transfer pattern for cover and seat pad for a chair with a tall back. The motifs are in a graceful flower design—a 26-inch one for the chair back and a 14-inch one for the chair seat. 15c.

2229. CHAIR PAD AND BACK COVER. Hot-iron transfer for trapunto quilting in flower design. One motif 15 by 13 inches and one 13 by 6 inches. These pads are fastened with tie tapes. 15c.

2230. COVER FOR BOSTON ROCKER. Hot-iron transfer pattern in "tree of life" design. This is particularly effective worked in bright yarns on natural-colored linen. Directions for cutting the cover and quilting it are given. 15c.

BOOKLET AND PATTERN LISTS

Lists are sent free on request. They give the title, number and price of all our booklets and patterns.

2008. LIST OF DEPARTMENTAL BOOKLETS. About the home, the garden, child care and training, beauty, entertaining.

1695. SUB-DEB BOOKLET LIBRARY. Booklets about everything a Sub-Deb does and dreams of.

1752. LIST OF JOURNAL HANDICRAFT PATTERNS. Useful and beautiful things to make for your home, your garden, your children and yourself.

1660. LIST OF JOURNAL HAT AND-BAG PATTERNS. Turbans, berets, halos, pillboxes. Make them of fabric, knit them, crochet them. Patterns, too, for a variety of bags.

1571. CHECK LIST OF PATTERNS FOR JOURNAL KNITTED AND CROCHETED ARTICLES.

2076. THINGS TO WEAR. A handy pocket guide to JOURNAL patterns for gloves, aprons, neckwear—accessories galore!

We will gladly send any of these patterns if you'll order by name and number. They will be mailed anywhere in the United States and Canada upon receipt of stamps, cash, check or money order. Do not send stamped, addressed envelopes or Savings Stamps. Readers in all foreign countries should send International Reply Coupons, purchased at their post office. Please address all requests to the Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia 5, Penna.

The Woman's World is a Better Place with Vinylite plastics

TRADE-MARK

BEAUTIFYING YOUR APPEARANCE . . . improving your home . . . prolonging the life of your family wardrobe . . . these are just some of the benefits VINYLITE Plastics bring to the busy world of woman.

In the realm of fashions for instance, you'll find handbags in gleaming black and in rich, shimmering colors. Created by leading designers, their exciting beauty is matched only by their almost unbelievable sturdiness. Shoe soles in brilliant colors or in basic shades, add a piquant touch to your costumes . . . and are one of the longest-wearing soles ever made, simply because they're VINYLITE Plastic!

Fashions for the home and the home-maker include garment bags of VINYLITE Plastic that keep clothes fresh and new-looking, disdainful of dust, VINYLITE Plastic baby pants are lastingly waterproof, flexible . . . and wear till they're outgrown.

Then there are combs, bowl covers, beach-balls, raincoats, and a host of other articles—all waiting to give you the long-term service that's characteristic of these laboratory-born wonder materials.

As you can see, VINYLITE Plastics have their ways with women . . . indispensable, ever-increasing ways to make your world, the woman's world, a happier, safer, better place to live in! Look for VINLYITE Plastics on the tag when you shop!

You know it's right if it's

Vinylite TRADE-MARK PLASTICS

BAKELITE CORPORATION

Unit of Union Carbide and Carbon Corporation UCC 30 East 42nd Street, New York 17, N. Y.

SUNTAN BECOMES YOU SPLASHED WITH

Flamingofrom

Dorothy Gray

Tan to your most becoming shade! Dorothy Gray Sunburn Cream sifts out the rays of the sun . . . makes it easy to tan light and creamy or dark and deep. Be sure to highlight your wonderful tan with the bright plumage of the new sun-drenched coral Flamingo Lipstick and Flamingo Nail Polish.

Flamingo Kit, containing Dorothy Gray Sunburn Cream, Flamingo Lipstick and Flamingo Nail Polish $3.00* . . . sold separately, too . . . at all fashion-minded stores.

*PLUS TAX

Dorothy Gray Flamingo inspired this Cole of California bathing suit—California Authentics print on Brighton Fabric.

Copyright 1946, by Dorothy Gray Ltd.

(Continued from Page 124)

months. Did you think they'd run up new rules?" She sat up and bit him on the chin and escaped into the broom closet before he assessed his reaction. She emerged, carrying a businesslike sausage of vacuum cleaner, some dusting paper and a shaker of powder. "How would you like to get out of here for an hour while I take some of the surface layer off this place?"

France got into old tweeds musingly. Could it be that a cat had worked this miracle? Or was it just that it was time for Joss to grow up? He frowned. After all, Joss was twenty-three, and about time she grew up! Still, her mother, Mrs. Hoddie Latimer, IV, had never grown up. Candace Latimer was a sweet moron still. He loved Candace like a son, but there were times when he could have cheerfully wrung her little white neck—her and her swoopy ideas about how to live, and what to do.

Joss interrupted his thoughts. "Dad and mother are coming for dinner," she said. "This is the only place he can get garlic with his steak. Besides, they want to see you. Mother wants to tell you how awful I am lately, and dad wants to know whether your outfit has got all the financing it needs. So get back here by six—I can't cope with mother and a steak too." She kissed him lingeringly and then gave him an estimating eye. "Oh, no, you don't," she said firmly. "Get out of here. And if you see any mangoes or pomegranates, bring some back. And some Roquefort. Dad likes strange fruit and odd cheese."

France wandered down to the corner in a daze. It didn't seem possible that six months could make this much difference in a grown woman. His thoughts reverted to Joss, a peeled peach in that white lace negligee, and he grinned a little wryly. And then he thought suspiciously, I'll bet she did that on purpose. He felt his coat pocket automatically. He was out of cigarettes. He went into the nearest bar and looked for a cigarette machine. And then it seemed like a good idea to have a seltzer lemonade and re-establish his equilibrium.

There was a little guy on the next bar stool, and he was unhappy. He peered into his glass, and sighed. France thought, I might as well add this to My Day. Nothing can throw me now. He said, "What's the matter, fellow?"

THE little man looked up. He was mostly black eyebrows and a hairless skull. "It's my cat, see?" he reported. "He comes and he goes. Everything I get for him, chicken livers, fish, but he goes away. I think, 'This is natural; he is a boy, he likes girls, he will come home.' For five months I haven't seen him except twice. He is a lovely cat; he is the homeliest cat in the world." He hiccupped lonesomely.

France put his glass down with an audible bang. The homeliest cat in the world. That struck an echo. He said cautiously, "What color is he?"

That brought on a deluge. "Color? He is gray like snow under soot and the same snow when it is new-fallen. He purrs like a leopard, and I have heard them. He is muscled like a Greek fighter in an old statue; and he is mean as a child's nurse to interlopers."

"Is this cat of yours a little bat-eared? I mean, does he have a cauliflower ear?"

"You have seen him!" The little man was ecstatic. "Gray and white, generally dirty, a bad ear! That is The King!"

The King, thought France, my eye. This is going to hurt Joss. She loves that burly animal. He reached for his fresh drink, knowing in his inmost soul that Gus was The King. He pondered imponderables. He thought about how Joss had fallen in love with a cat. He thought about his nasty satin living room, where nobody could put his feet on anything, and about Minna and Carl, and Elinor and Ben and Jeremy. A hair shirt woven of those people, he thought desperately, or a lonely little man? And he remembered nights in the dark when men talked their hearts out. He remembered the warm purr of Gus on his lap. He asked:

"Why did he go away from you?"

The little man spread his hands. He said, "It was my fault. I moved. I was purse-proud. I moved, and he was lost. He cannot find his way back."

FRANCE thought, noncommittally, of the fire escape and a lonely girl. A cat with a sense of responsibility, hey?

He cupped his glass in his hands and thought about Gus. Gus was a mighty happy animal just where he was. He had the rusty purr of a gent who had found himself a home from home.

He asked the little man, "Where did you see him those two times?"

"In the alley," the little man said sadly. "He was going away."

France thought, This is the time to take the helm. He said, "I think you'd better come home with me. We can think about what to do."

He got his cigarettes and took the little man by the elbow and steered him up the street. Joss was a little surprised, but Gus wasn't. Gus leaped into the little man's arms and washed his chin and pawed his cheek.

"One-man cat," France said laconically.

A tear ran down Joss' cheek, but she rallied nobly, and brought them coffee and hot sandwiches. Gus roamed over his owner's frame, biting his ear from time to time, and the little man wept.

"This is my King," he said. "He is part of me." Gus made shameless love to the little guy with the eyebrows, who explained: "I lose my wife, my boy. Now I have only The King, and you have brought him back to me!" He purred at The King in a strange tongue and Gus rose on his hind feet and arched his head under the little guy's chin.

"That's Russian," France told Jocelyn. "And I ask you, Miss Latimer, did you ever know a more bilingual cat?"

A spark lit in Miss Latimer's eyes. She gave France that look. She said slowly, "That's the loveliest animal I've ever known. Somebody taught him his selective manners. He was beautifully reared."

Gus was looped over the little man's shoulder. From time to time he got down in his lap and scrutinized him anxiously, looking from feature to feature. France held Joss' hand, and they both watched him. It was plain that Gus owned the little guy.

"I've had him five months," Joss said desperately.

"Pig," said France. "You've had me five years. But I couldn't put my feet on the furniture the way he does. You just like him. He appeals to you. And your ma and pa are coming for supper. Should we keep the little guy and his cat—or let them go?" He looked into her gray eyes with the tricky black circles around the iris. He said, "How about a baby instead?"

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

My Mother Was a Gypsy

By Alma Robison Higbee

My mother was a gypsy
And this is what she said,
"He whose pride becomes a mantle
Makes a lonely bed."

My mother was a gypsy
Who spoke a meager word.
She said, "The way is lonely
Companioned by a bird."

She crossed Life's palm with silver
Who sleeps as still as stone,
How hard she tried to tell me
That none can walk alone.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

If You Mind Your P's and Q's always use
Rand GUARANTEED
DRESS SHIELDS

P IS FOR POISE! Look dainty and poised, because your clothes have the guaranteed stainproof protection of RAND DRESS SHIELDS.

Q IS FOR QUALITY! Light, soft, comfortable—quick washing and drying . . . use an individually styled pair for dresses, sweaters, jackets, coats. Popularly priced at notion counters.

"They Last Longer"

Rand Rubber Co. "SINCE 1880" Brooklyn, N.Y.

"GRAND AS Rand BABY PANTS"

STICKS PERMANENTLY IN 8 SECONDS
Sanford's LIBRARY PASTE
The only genuine Library Paste. Never stains nor discolors.
10¢ A JAR

IT'S PURE
IT'S SURE

try Nujol
MINERAL OIL
The easy-action laxative for ordinary constipation

Copr. 1945, Stanco, Incorporated

Joss tucked her feet under her—the two of them were sitting on the divan—and said seriously, "Well, I don't think a baby would be any more worry than Gus."

France took her hand. "He wouldn't jump from the fire escape for a while," he agreed. "And he might be all the same color and not spotted."

Joss grinned. She said, "France, I want to ask you a serious question. I mean it. Do you like your steak really rare or only pink rare, like daddy?"

France thought about it. "It's hard to explain about an old steak addict like me," he said. "I want it seared crisp on the outside and meltingly rare on the inside. I want it companioned with salads that smell of heaven. I want baked potatoes and French-fried carrots. Do you care?" Joss turned her mouth up toward him. She had changed her frock and she was very elegant in pale blue and silver. France thought, I'll bet she'd rumple easy! But he only said thoughtfully, "And I'd like apples cooked in honey and sherry." And then he shut up. It was too much for a man to bear. He had him a wife, and he prayed for the knowledge to handle her.

The little man saved him. He rose up, glowing. "You have brought us together again," he said. Gus—The King—was sitting on his breast pocket, one hind leg hanging down appealingly. His nose was tucked under the little man's chin. The little man's eyebrows arched in an infinite appeal for understanding. He said, "We, my child and I, we love you. We will come back to see you."

---

In the Ethiopian War Haile Selassie drafted his army to fight Italy with the following proclamation: "Everyone will be mobilized and all boys old enough to carry a spear will be sent to Addis Ababa. Married men will take their wives to carry food and cook. Those without wives will take women without husbands. Women with small babies and those who cannot walk are exempt. Anyone found at home will be hanged." JAMES M. WILLIAMS.

---

He bowed himself out, with Gus coiled around his shoulders.

France brought himself back to the divan and wondered what to say. Joss might take this thing hard.

Joss said in a practical way, "France, wasn't that a nice person?"

"Who, Gus?"

"No," she said reprovingly. "The man Gus owns. There's a man. I do hope he comes back to see us again."

France put his arms around her. Gosh, she was a heart-filling armful! The doorbell was going to ring in a moment. Candace Latimer was always on time, one of her most hateful characteristics. He savored the moment.

He said, "Miss Latimer, did you mean that about having one small baby? I would love to have one small baby. Mostly one just like you, if possible."

She reached up and bit him, but very gently. She said reprovingly, "France, no! He'd have to be just like you."

Well, any moment the doorbell would ring. France Forrest buried his nose in his wife's neck and appreciated the lovely interim.

He thought, It isn't often a man sees his dream coming true! He thought, Thank God for Gus. He didn't dare think about it.

He said gently, "Well, let's us have one of each, and a place where I can put my feet up."

"I know," Joss said. "All men are alike—you and Gus. You come home with mud on your feet. And you have to have some place to put them." She put her arms around him. She said gently, sweetly, "The nice thing about being a man instead of a cat—a man has a key to the door." And her chuckle subsided against France's cheek.

France thought, Just the same, I wish we could call the kid Gus!

Reaches neglected teeth

EVEN SOME VERY CAREFUL PEOPLE skip teeth that need cleaning—because their brushes can't easily get at every tooth. The Squibb Angle Toothbrush was scientifically designed to reach those teeth that usually are neglected. The moment you first put this new, improved toothbrush in your mouth you'll catch on to its secret. The angle does it. The Squibb Angle Toothbrush was developed by a practicing dentist after years of study of tooth-cleaning problems. It costs no more than other brushes. It's a joy to use. Your choice of hard or medium bristles.

Listen to Academy Award Theatre every Saturday 7 P.M., E.D.S.T. — CBS Network

SQUIBB A name you can trust

MOR Recipes

MOR Kabobs and MOR Roll-Ups

"At Home" Preparations

MOR KABOBS—Cut 1 can MOR into 6 slices; cut each slice into 2 squares. Arrange MOR, onion slices, and bacon alternately on a skewer as illustrated.

MOR ROLL-UPS—Cut 1 can MOR into 16 thin slices. Roll each around a slice of sweet-sour pickle and a piece of Certified American Cheese. Fasten with a toothpick.

At the Picnic

Transfer MOR Kabobs and MOR Roll-Ups to roasting forks or green twigs and roast over glowing coals. Yummy!

Have you ever tasted

KABOBS* made with grill-sizzled MOR?

There's something about a picnic that makes appetites perk right up. Especially when marvelous food like MOR Kabobs is on the program.

George Rector
Food Consultant to Wilson & Co.

Kabobs! It's a queer little name for a grand bit of food for picnic or lunch. Make them with MOR in any outdoor fireplace, on your own portable charcoal grill—or in your own kitchen. The MOR Roll-Ups, too, with a bit of cheese and pickle inside, are delicious hot or cold. And, of course, any picnic, at home or away, can do with cold sliced MOR and deviled eggs.

Wilson's MOR is different. It has something—something that comes from tender pork shoulder meat—as sweet and juicy as finest ham—processed and seasoned the special Wilson way. So, whenever you see MOR on the dealer's shelf reach for it. There's always meat in the house when there's MOR in the pantry.

WILSON'S "QUICKIE" SHELF

With a handy line like this you're never out on a limb, come dinner time. Devote one shelf to these quality meat products—Wilson's MOR, Corned Beef Hash, Chili, Tamales, Deviled Ham and America's favorite meat flavor, Wilson's B-V, all seasoned the Wilson Way.

An adaptation of a favorite Armenian dish.*

WILSON & CO. INC.

The Wilson label protects your table

REPRINTED PERMISSION THE NEW YORKER. COPYRIGHT THE F.-R. PUBLISHING CORPORATION.

"now pronounce you wife and man."

t settle down. Since 1920 Mrs. Forbes, born in England, has been touring the world. Her record is every country on the globe except Tibet and New Zealand. These two she touched, but did not visit officially. She was the first European (since 1879) to go into Kufra, Libya, was in secret-service work in Syria, tried to enter Mecca disguised as an Arab (she speaks Arabic fluently), interviewed Hitler many times, Ibn-Saud, Lawrence of Arabia, Stalin, Gandhi and Henry Ford. She gave eighty-eight lectures in the United States in ninety-one days, flew her own plane 14,000 miles around Central and South America, and now—after all these peregrinations—has lighted on a little island in the Bahamas. On the island of Eleuthera, about sixty miles from Nassau, she has built herself a sprawling handsome house where she now lives in peaceful seclusion with her husband, Col. Arthur McGrath.

You'd expect something of an Amazon, with this record of endurance. But not Rosita Forbes-McGrath: slender, willowy, casual, humorous, waving her hands as she talks—a sort of Zasu Pitts-Mélisande. Her personal life has been quite as exciting as her professional one, as GYPSY IN THE SUN, her twenty-fourth book, will testify. She is quite willing to tell all, as f'rinstance: "I made an inevitable unhappy marriage—with Donald Forbes . . . a soldier without ideas. . . . He eventually fell in love with a charming woman, a little like me but much better looking. When I divorced him he married her, had children, and was, I hope, happy. . . . I must confess that he had a very bad temper. A temper always gets me down. It is so noisy, and I love silence. It is so hideous and I love beauty."

In her compact little new empire on Eleuthera, she has beauty and silence—the emerald-green Atlantic and the lapping of waves on the coral beach. Her latest book is APPOINTMENT WITH DESTINY.

• • •

If you've thrown away the children's books and regret it, here is a chance to get them back in newer and better form. A. A. Milne's four classics are now out in a set or to be bought singly: WHEN WE WERE VERY YOUNG, NOW WE ARE SIX, WINNIE THE POOH, THE HOUSE AT POOH CORNER. If you can believe it, When We Were Very Young was published over twenty years ago, and Christopher Robin fought during the war in Italy with the Royal Engineers. Another old treasure coming out anew is CHRONICLE OF THE MARCH FAMILY, by Louisa May Alcott, a combination of Little Women, Little Men, and Jo's Boys. Our guess is that they won't show date. As Emerson said, "Perpetual modernness is the measure of merit in every work of art." Which reminds us that A. E. Housman's A SHROPSHIRE LAD is also out in a new edition.

• • •

"Honeyfogling" is such a provocative word that a lady wrote a book about it. It comes out of the vocabulary of the Middle West of the 80's, and means just what it sounds as if it meant: to put something over by sweet words. According to Virginia Dale, author of HONEYFOGLING TIME, a honeyfogler was a wolf of the 80's. Miss Dale made quite a study of the year 1880, and out of her research picked up a nice bit of useful information. She learned how to make soap, whitewash, cleaning fluid, how to burn out a barrel for rain water, how to make liquid smoke, and how to get 17 per cent interest on money. 1880 was the year, she tells us, when sewing machines were considered inventions of the devil and sermons were preached on the danger to the sanctity of the home if these devices were ever brought into common use.

• • •

Betty MacDonald of THE EGG AND I just naturally doesn't like chicken. In spite of which she had a wonderful time at all the luncheons and dinners tendered her on her trip East, when she and her handsome husband—not the egg man—drove across the country from the state of Washington to Florida and points north. She is a tall, rangy girl, full of talk and fun, and on top of the world—as why wouldn't she be? Sitting at a great oval table at the Ritz in New York, beaming across a magnificent centerpiece of spring flowers, she certainly looked remote from the ranch wife who used to get up at five A.M. to deal with a refractory stove and feed the fowls. In fact, she was late for this particular luncheon, and rumor had it that she overslept.

• • •

Never underestimate the power of a woman! Mary A. Beard, in WOMAN AS FORCE IN HISTORY, with all the anthropologists of high standing behind her, writes: "To woman must be assigned all or the main credit for having effected the first sharp distinction between the ways of human beings and the ways of great beasts of prey. . . . Of cooking, making cloth, devising handmade shelter, manufacturing domestic utensils of pottery and baskets for garnering seeds and grain, extending the diet and making meals attractive, budgeting the food supply, learning essentials about doctoring and nursing, making animals serve human beings, and tilling the soil. . . . Woman's success in lifting men out of their way of life nearly resembling that of the beasts—who merely hunted and fished for food, who found shelter where they could in jungles, in trees, in caves—was a civilizing triumph." And so on, ladies—right down to the present.

CULVER

QUEEN OF THE LIGHTNING.

How the most popular operator in New York diffuses a magnetic influence behind the counter of a hotel telegraph office and rakes in the shekels for herself as well as the monopoly.

• • •

One of the phenomenal best sellers of all time was IN HIS STEPS, by Dr. Charles M. Sheldon, who died this past February at the age of eighty-eight. In His Steps, published in 1896, is calculated to have sold 25,000,000 copies, and was translated into twenty-one languages. Although brought out by fifty or so publishers only one is said to have paid Doctor Sheldon any royalties, due to no copyright; 8,000,000 copies were sold in the United States, and royalties received were only the $7000 from Grosset & Dunlap. Doctor Sheldon once received a 20-pound note from a British publisher, and that is all he ever got from abroad, where 12,000,000 copies of the book were sold. Doctor Sheldon was the son of a Congregational minister, and was himself pastor of the Central Congregational Church of Topeka, Kansas. Discouraged about the Sunday-evening attendance, he thought up the idea of writing a story and reading it to the congregation instead of giving a sermon. HIS BROTHER'S KEEPER was the first story he tried, and, after reading its twelve chapters, he found that the

INTERNATIONAL

Who hatched this up?

PLEASE—BE SURE IT'S GOLDEN GUERNSEY
THAT Special MILK

Don't take chances—look carefully at the bottle-cap or bottle. Accept only milk plainly marked "GOLDEN GUERNSEY"

Many of the millions of families who read this magazine take GOLDEN GUERNSEY Milk. Why? Because of its extra delicious flavor, its extra supply of cream that tops each bottle, its extra food value below the cream line.

These extras are not accidents. They are the result of a special program to give you a superior milk, of constant quality and always identified by the name "GOLDEN GUERNSEY".

WHY
GOLDEN GUERNSEY
MILK HAS SO MANY EXTRAS

1 Comes only from selected Guernsey cows

2 Meets requirements of local and state health authorities

3 Is supervised in production by GOLDEN GUERNSEY, Inc., a non-profit agricultural organization

To get these extras you will want to be sure your milk is plainly marked "GOLDEN GUERNSEY". If you are not a regular user at present, ask your milkman to deliver GOLDEN GUERNSEY Milk as soon as he can. Extra quality control means there isn't much extra supply at the moment, but you can be near the top of the list to get the milk with the extra values.

GOLDEN GUERNSEY
That SPECIAL Milk

GOLDEN GUERNSEY, Inc., Peterborough, N. H.

Here's a happy woman,
Active, poised and free—
Safe with Meds' protection,
Meds' security!

Have a grand and carefree summer! Enjoy convenience and comfort, extra-security and an easy mind—with Meds internal protection. Meds can be changed in a moment, disposed of easily and a day's supply carried in your handbag.

- Meds alone have the "SAFETY-WELL"—designed for your extra protection.
- Meds are made of real COTTON—soft and super-absorbent for extra comfort.
- Meds expand quickly and adapt themselves easily to individual needs.

Meds only 25¢

FOR 10 IN APPLICATORS

Note special design of Meds applicators. Firm, smooth, easy to use, completely disposable.

HAPPY FEET ARE HERE AGAIN

When your feet are sore, aching and dog-tired due to fatigue, just apply time-tested, popular OIL-O-SOL. It quickly brings such soothing, cooling relief you'll want to say, "happy feet are here again." This fine inhibitory antiseptic is also valuable in treating mosquito bites, sunburn, minor injuries; cuts, scratches, burns. Only 50c at druggists. Must satisfy or money back. Don't suffer. Get Mosso's OIL-O-SOL now.

WE PAY YOU $25
FOR SELLING FIFTY $1 ASSORTMENTS of Birthday, All-Occasion cards. Low cost, double demand. Sell for $1.00 your profit. Costs nothing to try. Write today.
Cheerful Card Co., Dept. H-6, Plains, N.Y.

WRITE FOR SAMPLES

FALSE TEETH
KLUTCH holds them tighter

KLUTCH forms a comfort cushion; holds dental plates so much firmer and snugger that one can eat and talk with greater comfort and security; in many cases almost as well as with natural teeth. Klutch lessens the constant fear of a dropping, rocking, chafing plate. 25c and 50c at druggists. If your druggist hasn't it, don't waste money on substitutes, but send us 10c and we will mail you a generous trial box. © L. P. INC.

KLUTCH CO., Box 4621-F, ELMIRA, N. Y.

FOR MEN AND WOMEN GOLFERS LEARN TO BEAT PAR
Score a hole in one! Improve your grip, stance, swing with PRACTISOR Putting Trap. Play on rug or lawn. Takes perfect shot only, just like cup on green. Fun for partiest! 4 for $5.00 or each, ppd. .... $2.00

J. BERGHMAN CO., 112 E. Ave., Maywood, Ill.

church was filled to overflowing and had standees. After this he continued with some twenty-five more stories, among them IN HIS STEPS.

KEYSTONE

Charles M. Sheldon.

Another religious book that began its career in a modest way is THE PROPHET, by Kahlil Gibran. It sold 1200 copies in 1923, and has built up an increasing sale every year since. In 1943 over 50,000 were sold; in 1944, over 65,000; and in 1945, 91,400. The publisher is now getting out a new printing, for 1946, of 100,000 copies. Gibran, a Syrian, died sixteen or seventeen years ago. He was a lonely young man, living in a shabby studio in Greenwich Village. Among his few friends was a Syrian lady well known in New York, whom he saw only occasionally. One time, not having heard anything from Gibran in several months, this lady went downtown to see what had happened to him, and found him lying in a corner of his studio on a heap of rugs, dying of cancer. Gibran never took any royalties from his book for himself, but bequeathed them all to the little town in Syria where he was born.

• • •

For lovers of good poetry—and a "must" for those who believe in the invincibility of the French spirit—ARAGON: POET OF THE FRENCH RESISTANCE is not to be missed. It is a slender book of the poems of Louis Aragon which he wrote during the days of German occupation. "I write in a land devastated by pest. . . . I write in this country of a thousand deaths. . . . I write on this tragic stage where the actors have lost their way." His wife, Elsa who shines with a fine bright light through his poems, was with him in all his Resistance activities. "My nice wise calm little wife," he wrote recently in a letter, "turned into such a fighter that I passed half of my life fearing for her and unable to sleep, during which time she was wandering about from the Alps to the Ocean, riding in cars she had stolen from the Gestapo, delivering machine guns to the Underground, and visiting escaped Russians hiding in distant parts of France."

• • •

A new book by Elizabeth Bowen is always news. IVY GRIPPED THE STEPS is a collection of twelve new short stories set in wartime England, not dealing with the physical violence of war, but with the psychological and spiritual overtones. No one, we're out to say, not even Katherine Mansfield, has quite the appreciation of the very young girl that Elizabeth Bowen shows in her stories and in her novels. You'll remember DEATH OF THE HEART—the yearning and the youngness of it comparable to THE CONSTANT NYMPH, but more delicate and searching. Likewise THE HOTEL, which was chosen Book-of-the-Month.

Elizabeth Bowen is Irish. When she was twenty-one her father gave her her money—not very much, she says—and with it she went to London to make her way. She was inexperienced and extravagant in characteristic Irish style, but she learned to pawn and to save, led a hand-to-mouth existence, and ended up writing. Bowen's Court is the home in Ireland where she now lives with her husband when there's not a war on. It was given one of her ancestors by Cromwell.

• • •

Eudora Welty is another whose short stories are outstanding, the gal from Mississippi who came out, completely unheralded, with CURTAIN OF GREEN, a book of short stories that took the critics off their feet, followed by ROBBER BRIDEGROOM and THE WIDE NET. Now she has written her first novel, DELTA WEDDING, seven days in the life of the Fairchild family as they prepare for the wedding of seventeen-year-old Dabney to their plantation home in the rich delta land of Mississippi in the summer of 1923. Miss Welty is one of those rare authors who can stay at home to write. She doesn't have to move to Chicago or New York. In fact, she seems rather to enjoy the small ways of living in her home town. "Underfoot locally" is the way she describes it, meaning that she's socially available and has no special job (writing in a small Mississippi town is not a "job"). She scarcely knows a writer, never has been part of any literary "school," and doesn't take herself too seriously. But she might well. We recommend all her short stories, but THE PETRIFIED MAN in particular, in case you come across it.

• • •

Add THE INNOCENT MRS. DUFF, by Elizabeth Sanxay Holding, to your list of good mysteries. More psychological than mystery, actually, because you see only murder committed, and sit on the edge of your chair waiting for the next. Reminiscent of BEFORE THE FACT. Remember the wife who knew that her husband was going to kill her?

REPRINTED PERMISSION THE NEW YORKER. COPYRIGHT THE F.-R. PUBLISHING CORPORATION

"It's awfully good so far. The first victim is a disagreeable cook."

THE MAJOR MINDS THE MINOR

(Continued from Page 26)

relax in solitude. That was what he missed now. The dismal dreariness of his room in Washington was slowly driving him mad.

The street was still slippery with ice from the Christmas snow flurry. There was a cutting little wind stinging his ears to redness. What to do now that he was out of his room? He couldn't simply walk around the streets. There were no movies he wanted to see. Inevitably he was reduced to choosing a couple of indifferent mysteries at the local drugstore library, going home and reading until he might reasonably turn out the light and expect to sleep.

In a mood of despair, he turned into the corner store and scanned the bookshelves. His eyes moved slowly from shelf to shelf; and, when he had picked out his books, he stood waiting for the clerk to charge them to him. Idly he examined the little bulletin board near the charge desk. Sometimes the local items were amusing, but there was nothing much on the board at present. Someone had lost a poodle and offered a reward; someone else offered crocheted gloves as the perfect gift for the people back home. His eyes caught a fresh slip of neatly typed white paper posted at the side, reading with the humorous desperation so fashionable nowadays:

Female afflicted by claustrophobia wants baby watcher—evenings only. Won't somebody please give me a chance to see a movie or play bridge before I start chewing the carpet? Good baby, nice living room and all the comforts of home. Mrs. Kendall, 34 Pine Road.

Just one of the girls, thought Lewis cynically. Fair, fat and forty, and can't ever remember what's trumps. He sighed. Nice living room—who would ever want to leave that? If he only had a nice living room he'd never go out.

"Your books, sir," said the clerk. "Thirty cents, please."

Automatically Major Fives counted out the silver, his eyes fixed absently on the slip of paper. He tucked the books under his arm, turned up his coat collar and plunged forth into the street. Nice living room and all the comforts of home ran through his head as he turned toward his rooming house. For two blocks he tramped along, distaste for his dismal room growing within him. Suddenly he turned and with rapid steps returned to the drugstore.

"Where is Pine Road?" he asked.

Ten minutes later he was standing in front of an attractive little house, ringing the bell. In the dim light of the street lamp down the block he could see white shingles, green shutters and dark clumps of shrubbery lining a little path between gate and front door. Warm floods of lamplight streamed through the partly closed Venetian blinds. Just to think of the comfortable room behind those windows raised his spirits. He was whistling softly when the door opened and he found himself facing a pretty young woman with a cloud of dark hair and two of the deepest, merriest dimples he had ever seen. Fair, fat and forty? Lewis gulped with the reality before him.

"Mrs. Kendall?" he asked politely, raising his cap.

What seems to grow fairer to me as life goes by is the love and grace and tenderness of it; not its wit and cleverness and grandeur of knowledge—but just the laughter of little children and the friendship of friends, the cozy talk by the fireside, the sight of flowers and the sound of music.

—J. R. GREEN: Quoted in A Diary for the Thankful Hearted, compiled by Mary Hodgkin (Published by E. P. Dutton & Company).

Makes Herself Over During Summer Vacation

Teen-ager loses 35 pounds, goes from size 20 to size 14, surprises her school friends.

Sue Nichols, of Raleigh, North Carolina, is the kind of girl who makes you proud of the teen-age generation. She lives on a farm and loves it. She is a good swimmer, plays the piano well, and makes many of her own clothes.

One thing used to bother her. She had always been overweight. When school closed last year, she weighed 173 and had to buy women's dresses that made her look far older than her years. She had been reading about the DuBarry Success Course and she decided that a summer vacation at home was a good time to take it.

In three months she lost 23 pounds, surprised her friends by coming back to school in a smart size 16. She kept on with the Course, lost 12 pounds more, is now a perfect 14 Junior Miss. Here's the way she sums up what the Course has done for her:

"I look and feel like a different person.

"My posture is so much better I stand 1¼ inches taller.

"My skin is softer, smoother. DuBarry Preparations have done wonders for it.

"Friends compliment me on the amazing change in my appearance, but the credit goes to the DuBarry Success Course."

SUE NICHOLS' MEASUREMENTS TELL THE STORY

| | Before | After | Change |
|---|---|---|---|
| Height | 5′6″ | 5′7¼″ | 1¼″ |
| Weight | 173 lbs. | 137¾ lbs. | 35¼ lbs. |
| Bust | 39″ | 35″ | 4″ |
| Waist | 34″ | 27″ | 7″ |
| Abdomen | 38″ | 33″ | 5″ |
| Hips | 43″ | 36¾″ | 6¼″ |

The photos above show, at left, Sue in July, 1945, when she enrolled for the Success Course. At right, the slender Sue Nichols of today, with a gracious, girlish loveliness she knows how to keep.

How about You? You are neither too young nor too old to enjoy, right in your own home, the benefits of this simple, successful, inexpensive plan. Schoolgirls, business girls, mothers and grandmothers—more than a quarter of a million of them—have found it a practical way to make the most of themselves. The Success Course is individual. You get an analysis of your needs, a goal to work for and a plan for attaining it. You follow the methods taught by Ann Delafield at the famous Richard Hudnut Salon, Fifth Ave., N.Y.

Why not use the coupon to find out what this Course can do for you?

Accepted for advertising in publications of the American Medical Association

DuBarry Beauty Chest Included!

With your Course you receive this Chest containing a generous supply of DuBarry Beauty and Make-up Preparations selected for you.

DuBarry Success Course
ANN DELAFIELD, Directing

RICHARD HUDNUT SALON, Dept. SF-2
693 Fifth Avenue, New York 22, N. Y.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF DEFECTIVE OR NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY

Please send the booklet telling all about the DuBarry Home Success Course.

Miss
Mrs. _____

Address _____

City _____ Zone No., if any _____ State _____

How to Remove Dandruff Completely

APPLY FITCH'S directly from bottle onto the hair and scalp before any water is added. Massage well with hands, making sure shampoo reaches each part of scalp.

ADD WATER gradually, removing cleansing lather as it forms. Then continue to add water until more lather forms.

RINSE THOROUGHLY with clear water. Since Fitch's is completely soluble, no after-rinse is required. Set the hair and dry.

FINISHED HAIRSTYLE is soft and lovely. No trace of dandruff or dull soap film left to cloud its natural, sparkling highlights.

Fitch's Dandruff Remover Shampoo is the only shampoo made whose guarantee to remove dandruff with the first application has the backing of one of the world's largest insurance firms. Enjoy lustrous, dandruff-free hair! Ask for an economical bottle of Fitch's at your drug counter, or have professional applications at your beauty shop.

After and between Fitch Shampoos you can keep your hair shining and manageable by using a few drops of Fitch's Ideal Hair Tonic every day. Fitch's Ideal Hair Tonic is not sticky or greasy yet it gives your hair that well-groomed look.

Fitch's TRADE MARK

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Dandruff Remover Shampoo

THE F. W. FITCH COMPANY • Des Moines 6, Iowa • Bayonne, N. J. • Los Angeles 21, Calif. • Toronto 2, Canada

LAVORIS

For those who have Artificial Teeth

It cleans, it stimulates and relieves soreness

STOP under arm PERSPIRATION and ODOR WORRIES

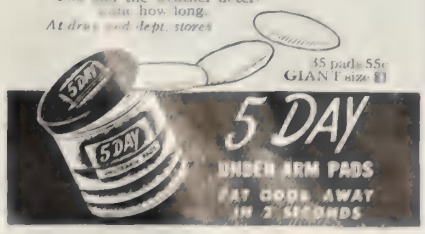
FASTER! LONGER! SAFELY!

PAT ODOR AWAY IN 2-SECONDS! New 5 DAY underarm padgives 1 to 7 days protection.*



BETTER—5 DAY under arm pads are moist with an amazingly effective perspiration stopper.

KINDER to clothing and normal skin.

FASTER-NEATER—Just pat under arms and discard. Dries in seconds. No mess.

*You and the weather determine how long.

At drug and dept. stores

35 pads 55c GIANT size $1

HAVE YOUR OWN MONEY MAKING BUSINESS

SELLING GREETING CARDS TO FRIENDS

FREE SAMPLES CORRESPONDENCE NOTES

Fascinating year 'round income building plan. Take easy orders for 10 fast selling greeting card assortments. Sell for $1.00 each—cost you 50¢ up. Extra bonus. Experience unnecessary. Request foremost $1.00 All Occasion box on approval, free Correspondence Notes sample. Special Offer. BLUEBIRD STUDIOS, Dept. L-2, FITCHBURG, MASS.

REQUEST SAMPLE $1 ALL OCCASION ASSORTMENT ON APPROVAL

"Yes?" she replied. He thought her voice matched her looks—crisp, but with a chuckle in it.

"My name is Major Fives. You advertised for a baby watcher?"

"Oh, yes," she said, smiling warmly and opening the door wider. "You know of someone? Do come in."

One glimpse of the nice living room behind her went to the major's head. Some imp took hold of him. "I represent the Acme Lullaby and Baby Storage Service," he told her impressively as he followed her in toward the fire. "Our motto is 'Satisfied Babies.'"

"What did you say?" she murmured blankly.

"I said I represented the Acme Lullaby and Baby Storage Service."

"I never heard of it," she said, widening her eyes.

"Naturally," he said judicially. "I organized it myself just ten minutes ago. For the nominal sum of two dollars and fifty cents a week, our regular service offers one bonded major in the United States Army, guaranteed reliable and equipped with an uncertain baritone for singing lullabies."

She backed away and measured him with faintly suspicious eyes. Major Fives grinned engagingly.

"Of course, it's slightly higher in price if I don't sing a lullaby," he remarked.

"Do I gather that you are offering to be a baby watcher?" she asked in a strangled voice.

"I just told you I had organized the Acme Lullaby and ——"

"—— Baby Storage Service," she broke in with a twinkle. "Yes, I know. May I ask just what you are selling? It's a very novel approach, I must say."

He laughed. "I'm selling myself. Seriously, Mrs. Kendall, I saw your advertisement in the drugstore this evening and it occurred to me that we ought to be able to make some sort of arrangement to our mutual satisfaction. I'm at loose ends in Washington, finishing up a job of work for the anticlimax department. I don't know very many people and I'm just sort of marking time until I can get my discharge. I'm living in the most soul-withering room you ever laid your eyes on. There isn't even a decent reading light. You need someone to watch your baby and I need a nice comfortable living room to sit in—it's as simple as that. I'll be glad to give you references, of course. Perhaps you know my superior officer, Colonel Richard Davis? He lives in this section of town."

"I've met Mrs. Davis at the Red Cross," she admitted. With an expression of bewilderment she sank down on the couch, gesturing faintly toward the large easy chair at one side of the fireplace. "I'm afraid I don't understand," she confessed. "You mean you really want to come here every evening and watch a baby?"

"Roger."

"But you can't," she protested. "I meant a woman. Some nice elderly woman who's had children of her own."

"Why wouldn't I do?" he said stubbornly. "I'm an uncle and I know how to give bottles and—you know. I haven't had children, of course, but if you don't think I'm elderly, just look at my gray hairs."

"But—you're too big," she said.

He looked at her judicially. "How old is this baby?" he asked.

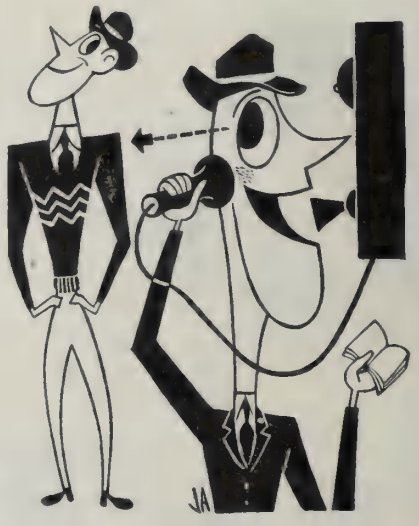
"Eleven months."

"Oh, well," he said with exaggerated relief. "I was afraid it was five or six. I can lick my weight in eleven-month-old babies any day."

She giggled nervously. "It's still absolutely out of the question," she stated. "If you haven't any friends now, you never will have if you mew yourself up with Fatso every evening."

"Fatso?" he inquired with raised eyebrows.

"Julian Amory Kendall Third to you. To his intimates he's just Fatso. But it really wouldn't do. You can't take care of a baby, you know."



The Kirsten Cigarette Holder is smart looking and smart to use. The slim, light-weight radiator cools the tobacco smoke and removes bitter tars and oils which cause throat-irritation. No filters . . . no mess. An ideal gift for men and women.

Kirsten Pipe Co., Dept. 286, Seattle, Wash.

"Yeh, he's tall, blond and wears a Skipper Sweater."

Wilson Brothers

Quality Men's Wear Since 1864

Chicago • New York • San Francisco

Pajamas • Shirts • Sportswear • Knitwear

Shorts • Ties • Socks

Kills Garden Insects

Use Red Arrow Garden Spray on flowers, shrubs, vegetables, lawns. Kills most common garden insects, yet safe to humans, birds and pets when sprayed. 35c bottle makes several gallons. Buy Red Arrow Spray where you buy garden supplies.

FREE For free chart, "How to Fight Garden Insects," send postal to McCormick & Co., Inc., Baltimore 2, Md.

NEW creamy, white pleasant LOTION Safely
REMOVES HAIR

Leaves skin smooth, alluring.

1. A pleasant white lotion without bad, clinging, depilatory odor.
2. Painless . . . not messy, quick to use. As simple to remove as cold cream
3. No razor stubble. Keeps legs hair-free longer. Economical!
4. Does not irritate healthy, normal skin.
5. Removes hair close to skin, leaving skin soft, smooth, and alluring.

NAIR Cosmetic lotion to remove hair

49¢ plus tax

At Drug, Department and 10¢ Stores

"Don't make me say why again," he begged. "Look here," he said, leaning forward earnestly. "I am perfectly serious, Mrs. Kendall. I'm not really so mad as I sound. You'll never get a woman—you know that perfectly well—not while there are bingo games and movies or whatever. Won't you please call up Colonel Davis right now, while I'm here, and ask him about my character? It's Colonel Richard A. Davis, and he's in the telephone book."

She looked at him undecidedly. Major Fives put every ounce of his will power behind the steady gaze of his brown eyes. "Well," she said hesitantly, "I still think it's silly—but if you insist ——"

While she was busy at the telephone in the little hall, Major Fives leaned back and surveyed the "nice living room" with great approval.

A cunning hand had been combined with excellent taste. There were one or two good old pieces of furniture and lots of gay chintz and cretonne. He just wished his mother could see the fascinating old sampler hanging over the couch. In the corner was a radio-phonograph flanked by a small cabinet of records. A fire crackled on the hearth and a knitting bag spilled bright-colored yarn onto the couch. Looking down, Major Fives met the interested gaze of a dozy-looking cat. He began to feel that he would cheerfully watch a whole regiment of babies for the privilege of sitting in this living room every evening.

Mrs. Kendall concluded her conversation and returned to the living room, looking dazed.

"I hope he gave me a clean bill of sale?" Lewis asked, hauling his big body courteously to his feet.

---

The Harvard naturalist Louis Agassiz had a habit of collecting specimens for study which he would bring home with him. One morning Mrs. Agassiz was putting on one of her shoes when she felt something wriggling inside. She called to the professor, who was still asleep in an adjoining room, "Oh, Agassiz, come here, there is a snake in my shoe." To which he sleepily replied, "My dear, where can the other five be?"

—JAMES McBRYDE.

---

"Oh, yes. He was very flattering. As a matter of fact," she announced with a sudden flashing of the dimples, "he said you could be trusted to take care of a baby who was three times eleven—either months or years."

"Then you'll take me?" Lewis pressed eagerly, sensing the change in her attitude after talking with the colonel.

"Well, I suppose we might try it. There really isn't very much to do. He's a very good baby."

"My sister Helen says all healthy babies are good," he replied, anxious to air his familiarity with the subject.

"Oh, he's very healthy. He sleeps from about six-thirty at night until six in the morning."

"Well, that's settled," he said with great satisfaction. "When do I start? Shall I bring my own apron?"

"Oh, no thanks," she said demurely. "I always furnish my nursemaids with their uniforms."

"I suppose you do not allow followers?" he asked anxiously.

"Certainly not," she replied firmly. "Suppose we start tomorrow night. Would you like to see the baby before you go?"

Julian Amory Kendall III was busily engaged with the sandman and paid no attention to his spectators.

"Cute little fellow, isn't he?" commented Lewis in surprise.

"Naturally," she informed him scornfully. "You have just been privileged to look on what is practically the most unusual child in the world."

Lewis looked at her in awe. "Two-headed, is he?"

Footlets* for Your Comfort, Lady!

No more shoes over bare feet. Fashionable women everywhere depend on FOOTLETS for daintiness as well as cool, summertime comfort.

FOOTLETS protect your sense of ease and freedom, cushion your steps, guard against irritation or infection.

Be comfortable—be healthy—wear genuine FOOTLETS when you go without stockings

J. W. Londenberger & Co., Phila. 24, Pa.

Also Makers of Randolph Knit Anklets

*Trade mark

MEET the beauty discovery that brings you radiant complexion loveliness in a matter of minutes!

Liquid Velvet of Peaches is a silky, protective make-up that instantly glorifies drab, dull skin with rich, clear color . . . covers minor blemishes, flaws . . . stays fresh and color-true on the skin for twelve full hours. Comes in four vital, lifelike colors . . . Blonde, Brunette, Mandarine and Sun Tan.

Add a dusting of smooth, sheer Barbara Gould face powder . . . and you face a glorious new beauty future!

| | |
|---|---|
| Barbara Gould Liquid Velvet of Peaches | $1.50 |
| Barbara Gould Velvet of Peaches, cream powder base in nine tints | $1.00 |
| Barbara Gould Face Powder, ten shades | $1.00 |
| (All prices plus tax) | |

Barbara Gould NEW YORK

Glorify your Lifeline

...WITH FORMFIT ALL THE WAY

THE FAMOUS Life-Bra ...brings alluring "lift" to glorify your upper Lifeline. $1.25 to $3.50.

THE NEW Life-Girdle ...brings new trim, feminine curves to glorify your lower Lifeline. $7.50 and up.

The line of your figure is your Lifeline . . . target of all eyes. A wrong line above waist or below can spoil the precious first impression you make . . . impair the way you feel and work. For your upper Lifeline, Life-Bra lifts—holds—corrects—molds. For your lower Lifeline, the new Life-Girdle brings alluring new curves, with elastic comfort and tailored-in material control. Working together, these superb Formfit creations GLORIFY YOUR LIFELINE ALL THE WAY! Be fitted today—see and feel the difference. At all the better shops and stores.

A Formfit CREATION

Look for this label. It is your assurance of quality—in fabric, tailoring, fit, long life.

THE FORMFIT CO., CHICAGO, NEW YORK

She looked at him sideways, caught his twinkle and grinned shamefacedly. "I think he's wonderful," she said apologetically. "Here are the underpinnings"—pointing to a pile of white unmentionables. "I usually investigate the situation about eleven or so, but outside of that you won't have anything to do."

"I can't wait for tomorrow night," he announced when they had returned downstairs and he was shrugging himself into his coat. "By the way, will the phonograph disturb the baby?"

"No, but it doesn't work very well, I'm afraid."

"I'm fairly handy with things like that," Lewis told her reassuringly. "I'll get it in shape so you can use it when your husband comes home. I take it Mr. Kendall is in the services?"

A curtain slid across her face. "Captain Kendall—my husband—is dead," she said simply.

"I beg your pardon," Lewis said gently, conscious of shocked pity for the girl holding the door for him. "I didn't realize."

"That's quite all right," she said pleasantly. "You couldn't possibly know. I'm more or less accustomed to it after a year. I'll expect you tomorrow night, then. Good night."

Needless to say, Colonel Davis was all eyes and ears when he encountered Major Fives the following day. "What is this all about?" he demanded severely. "Jenny Kendall tells us some cock-and-bull story about your watching her baby."

"That's right," Lewis agreed genially. "I've found me a home at last."

"I don't get it," the colonel stated flatly, "but if this is a joke, I think it's a very poor one. She's a nice youngster and a good friend of my wife's. I won't have her upset by any of your misplaced humor, Fives."

An eating-house keeper does not care how large your stomach is.

A fox sleeps, but counts hens in his dreams. —RUSSIAN PROVERBS.

"It isn't misplaced humor," Lewis reassured him. "It's an arrangement for our mutual benefit. She's free to go out every evening and I get all the comforts of home, complete with cat and radio."

He did, indeed. Every evening he presented himself, brushed and beaming, at 34 Pine Road, to be greeted with affection by the dozy puss, and settled himself for a luxurious wallow while Mrs. Kendall went to the Red Cross, the convalescent hospital or a party. Due, Lewis felt, to the unexceptionable credit rating obtained from Colonel Davis, she accepted him with a casual friendliness from the first. Hovering in the doorway before she left the first evening, she suggested that he might like a cup of coffee or a bite to eat later. At this happy thought, Lewis looked at her with impersonal affection—a woman after his own heart, he decided, who understood that the high spot of any evening was the cup of coffee at the end of it.

Thus encouraged, Lewis made himself completely at home. Fatso proved, as advertised, to be a very good baby, although there was a bad moment for Lewis on his very first evening. On making his voyage of exploration upstairs to the nursery, he entered the room on tiptoe, turned on the shaded lamp and started to attack the problem of fresh diapers—only to find two wide brown eyes regarding him seriously. Fatso was awake.

It struck Lewis with a horrid thud that while he had inspected Fatso, Fatso had never inspected him. Suppose the baby didn't like strangers? Suppose it was frightened of him and began to cry? For a moment of sheer panic Lewis and Fatso regarded each other searchingly.

"Hello, feller," Lewis said finally in the most soothing tone at his command. And Fatso concluded his appraisal with a wide toothless grin—a grin which to Lewis ap# a blemish?

what of it—

I use Covermark!

Completely conceals all blemishes—large or small! You, too, can show a flawless and lovely complexion—always! Called "modern miracle" in Reader's Digest! Accepted for advertising in the Journal of American Medical Association.

Covermark Cream—1.35, 3.00
Covermark Spot-Stik (for everyone)—1.25

At better drug and cosmetic counters

Be sure to write for your copy of the complete story and color chart.

Lydia O'Leary

Dept. M., 551 Fifth Avenue, New York 17, N. Y.

*unretouched photos of Mildred Black, Phila., Pa.
more than a cosmetic—exempt from Federal Tax

PERSPIRING FEET

Say goodbye to clammy discomfort of sweaty stockings and offending foot odor. Sprinkle Allen's Foot-Ease on feet and in shoes. Really effective for absorbing perspiration, neutralizing odor, besides giving such sublime comfort to hot, weary feet. 25¢—35¢—50¢. At all druggists or send for FREE sample. Write Allen's Foot-Ease, Suite 176, P. O. Box 156, Buffalo, New York.

ALLEN'S FOOT-EASE

MATERNITY DRESSES! Write for Catalog

Smart, youthful styles for Morning, Street, or Afternoon. Also Maternity Corsets & Lingerie.

Summer Styles

CRAWFORD'S-Dept. A-729 Balt. Ave., Kansas City 6, Mo.

YOUR SHOES ARE SHOWING!

EMBARRASSING, ISN'T IT?

YOU NEED SHINOLA

As the saying goes, if the shoe fits, wear it. hat's an old saying, but good advice. It will y you to KEEP 'EM SHINING WITH SHINOLA. addition to improving the appearance of ur shoes, the oily waxes in Shinola help eserve the leather.

SHINOLA WHITE is what no well-dressed person should be without. hat is, if he wears white shoes. SHINOLA HITE works beautifully on all types of hite shoes.

SHINOLA PASTE OR LIQUID ALL COLORS 10¢

IN CANADA IT'S 2 IN 1

IMPROVE Foot Balance with Cuboids

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

PAIR $5.00 and $6.50

When better balance is achieved foot pains often disappear and you feel like you're walking on air. Slip CUBOID Balancers in your shoes now, and enjoy walking. Sizes for everyone. Sold in good shoe departments.

★ INTERCHANGEABLE
★ FEATHERWEIGHT ★ NO METAL

BURNS CUBOID COMPANY
BOX 658, SANTA ANA, CALIF.

Overworked Eyes?

When eyes burn and smart due to overwork, driving, exposure to dust or wind, bathe them with Lavoptik. Soreness, tired feeling, itching from local irritations all relieved or money refunded. 30 years success. Thousands praise it. Get Lavoptik today. At all druggists.

peared the most cherubic he had ever seen. Weak with relief, he bent over the baby, babbling inconsequentially from sheer nerves. "In need of a helping hand? We'll fix that. Oopsadaisy"—while his fingers fumbled with pins. Fatso continued to grin good-humoredly while Lewis got through the unaccustomed task.

There is nothing so calculated to make you feel a good chap as the casual approval of a baby, and Lewis was absurdly bucked by Fatso's acceptance.

"I've been making friends with your son," he told Mrs. Kendall when she returned that evening. "He was awake when I went up. I was a little worried for fear a strange face might frighten him, but he favored me with a Grade A smile. Quite a lad!"

"Oh, he's very friendly," she replied proudly. "The only person he's ever taken a dislike to was the doctor."

"Can't say I blame him," Lewis said with a grin. "Thank goodness, he approved of me."

Thereafter the evenings settled into a sort of pattern. Lewis dutifully went upstairs about eleven and ran a gentle hand over the baby's nether portions. Sometimes a change was indicated, and he became quite expert at whipping diapers on and off. On his return downstairs he made coffee and foraged happily in the shelf of biscuits and crackers that Mrs. Kendall had provided. He spent a couple of happy evenings pulling the phonograph to pieces and putting it back together again "with no parts left over," he said proudly as he exhibited the results to his employer. Emboldened by her approval, he inquired whether she would object to his bringing a few albums of records over to 34 Pine Road.

Life gives to us all intervals, all too brief it may seem, of exquisite joy, intense pleasure. But we come silently, unexpectedly, unknowingly upon happiness through being forced to use all our faculties in effort; through learning and being willing to learn, through discovering and scrapping the hampering bits of our dead selves and moving steadily, surely forward into a better sort of human being. It is the chance of making the very best of what we have, the adventure of taking up the challenge of life that keeps the heart young and the spirit proud and resilient to the end.

ANN TEMPLE:
Good or Bad—It's Life (Nicholson & Watson).

"Not at all," she replied.

"But, you know," he remarked, "the machine is in quite the wrong place. It ought to be more out in the room so the music isn't obstructed by the table and that chair."

"You might put it over by the couch," she suggested dubiously. "Wouldn't it be rather crowded, though?"

"Try it and see," he replied, and for fifteen brisk minutes they pushed and pulled furniture about the room.

"It looks—different, doesn't it?" she said wonderingly when their labors were complete. "Much better. I don't know why I never thought of doing this before."

"That's because you never had anyone to suggest it. I," said Lewis modestly, "am very stimulating."

With a phonograph at his disposal, Lewis went slightly berserk in the record shops, and the problem of storage became acute. He spent an evening designing a new and superior record cabinet to fit into the space beside the door, and the feeling of drafting and blueprints for something other than a new group of barracks aroused him to a further request of Mrs. Kendall. Would she object, he asked, if he could borrow a drawing board to start the plans for an addition to his house? In the end, the living room looked like Lewis Fives' personal property.

The weeks passed. Washington went through a prolonged spell of horrible weather which affected Lewis Fives not at all as he sat cozily over his drawing board, bidding

Nylons of Note by Holeproof

How do you know they're HOLEPROOF?

There's no guessing about Holeproof Nylons... they're labeled DO for small, RE for medium and MI for tall! This perfect proportioning gives Holeproof hosiery finer fit, longer life and greater glamour!

Makers of Luxite Lingerie and Men's Socks by Holeproof
HOLEPROOF HOSIERY COMPANY • Milwaukee 1, Wisconsin
(in Canada—London, Ontario)

LOOK! EXTRA MONEY FOR YOU

FREE SAMPLES CORRESPONDENCE NOTES

SELL LEADING $1 ALL OCCASION GREETING CARD ASSORTMENT

UP TO 100% PROFIT

You just take easy orders from friends, fellow workers. 10 big money making assortments. Sell for $1.00 each—cost you 50¢ up. Extra bonus. Experience unnecessary. Special Offer. Write for leading $1.00 All Occasion box on approval and free correspondence notes, samples.

REQUEST SAMPLE BOX ON APPROVAL

HARRY DOEHLA CO., Dept. L-11, FITCHBURG, MASS.

CORNS also Calluses. Quick, easy, and economical. Just rub on. Jars, 30¢ and 50¢. Buy Mosco at your druggist.

REMOVED BY MOSCO

Your money refunded if not satisfied. The Moss Company, Rochester, N.Y.

AGAIN! BELTONE REDUCES SIZE OF

Amazingly Improved Hearing Aid

Amazing "X-Cell" out-performs units 5 times its size! All one unit—no cumbersome separate battery pack—no battery wire nuisance—no "harness." Comfort-Curv design—wafer-thin case! Increased power gives better hearing under all conditions. Ever-level full tones bring back clear, lifelike hearing. Find out WHY there are more Beltone one-unit Hearing Aids in use than all others combined.

SO TINY! SO LIGHT! YET EVERYTHING SOUNDS CLEARER-TRUER

BELTONE HEARING AID CO.
1450 W. 19th St., Chicago 8, Ill.

MAIL COUPON NOW FREE BOOKLET

BELTONE HEARING AID CO. Dept. L-6
1450 W. 19th St., Chicago 8, Ill.
Without obligation, send me FREE information on how the new Beltone Mono-Pac makes better hearing much easier now.
Name_____
Address_____
Town_____ State_____

"Inside Story" on new window beauty

You will soon be able to do wonders with windows! Kirsch improved curtain rods, draw-cord rods and Venetian blinds are on their way to your dealer.

Now is a good time to plan new beauty for every room in your home. The easiest, most economical way to get beauty in the room is through attractive new window treatments. Kirsch equipment opens the way for any effect you want with windows; for new ways to control daylight and ventilation; new ways to insure privacy.

Let your dealer show you what you can do with Kirsch devices. The "inside story" on window beauty is more interesting now than ever before.

KIRSCH

DRAPERY HARDWARE AND VENETIAN BLINDS

STURGIS, MICHIGAN

Beauty in the Room Begins at the Windows . . . Start with Kirsch Drapery Hardware

Mrs. Kendall a cheerful good night each evening. His only complaint was that the evenings were all too short. Mrs. Kendall was never later than midnight, and on Red Cross nights was usually home in time to share his coffee; but since she rarely went to bed before twelve, she told him there was no reason for him to stop working. So Lewis puffed contentedly at his pipe and bent over his board while she curled on the couch with her knitting and chatted impersonally of this and that.

Every now and again Fatso would be awake when Lewis went upstairs, and they enjoyed a stimulating bit of conversation. "That is," Lewis explained to Mrs. Kendall, "your son is of a philosophical turn of mind. I converse and he listens, but of course he doesn't care to commit himself." It had been a long time since Lewis' niece and nephew were Fatso's age. He had almost forgotten what little babies were like and was constantly astonished to notice Fatso's growth and development.

On the night when he discovered Fatso's new tooth he was, if possible, even more proud of this completely natural event than Jenny. Greatly daring, he brought the baby downstairs to sit on the couch for a celebration while he and Jenny drank their coffee. Fatso quite understood that this was merely in consequence of his having cut a tooth and conducted himself like a gentleman throughout his visit, cooing and chuckling and displaying the tooth on request.

"Play those records you got yesterday," Jenny suggested. "The quiet bits might put him to sleep."

But although Fatso patted his hands together and made earnest attempts to roll off the couch and grab the phonograph during the music, as a lullaby Paris: Ein Nachtstucke turned out to be a flop.

These evening gossips and an occasional frolic with Fatso put the finishing touch on Lewis' well-being. Jenny Kendall had a well-developed sense of humor and a gift for making a dramatic story out of the most trivial incidents. Lewis had not laughed so much in years.

She was a pleasant youngster, he thought, possessing both common sense and perception. Conversation and Jenny Kendall were no strangers, yet she was not one to prattle aimlessly and could be companionably silent while he played the new records he had brought or fussed over a calculation. She had ideas about houses too. She developed a deep interest in the plans he was making for the wing to be added to his house. He had meant to make this addition similar to the main house, but Jenny suggested the use of glass brick at one end. It was Jenny, also, who thought of fitting built-in storage cabinets on one wall, to be hidden by paneling. He had planned to finish the space above this room later, but spurred by her interest he found himself turning it into an extra bedroom.

LEWIS got quite to depend on these chats, holding off on making coffee until he might reasonably expect her to arrive. Conversation was no stranger to Lewis Fives, either, and he regaled her with incidents from the office, from his childhood, tales of his parents and his sister Helen, until Jenny knew them all by name and often asked for his latest news from home. Jenny herself was an orphan and her husband's family had consisted only of a sister, now in the Army Nurse Corps. He had no real idea of her age, but estimated it as twenty-two or three. Very hard lines, he decided protectively, losing a husband and left all alone in the world with a baby. Undoubtedly she would marry again. He hoped she would pick someone who would appreciate Fatso, who seemed to grow more captivating to Lewis every time he saw him. Lewis had an idea she already had one or two beaus, but how serious they might be he couldn't tell. She seemed to have an escort to bring her home most nights—and a good thing, Lewis thought, recalling the dark shrubbery-lined streets. Twice someone had called for her, and at times she had reported having dinner and seeing a movie. Several times there had been telephone calls—always in a male voice.

Oh, Let Me Dream

By Joan Story Wright

Oh, let me dream my little while
And laugh—then, all forsaking,
I'll come with you your worldly way
Although my heart be breaking.
I'll pace with you the stony streets
And cross the smoky town,
But let me dream my little while
Before you take me down.

ONE miserably raw and stormy night Lewis arrived in a very damp state, to find she was not going out after all.

"I'm so sorry I couldn't let you know," she apologized, "but I didn't know where to reach you after you left the office."

"Oh, that's all right," he said cheerfully. "It's not much of a walk back."

"Come in and get dry first," she ordered. "I don't want you to catch pneumonia. Johnny Ipswich came to take me to a movie but it was so rainy I voted against going out."

Major Fives surveyed Lieutenant Ipswich with deep interest as introductions were performed. The verdict, he decided, was good. Johnny was a nice boy, a little young and inane, but nothing time wouldn't cure, and obviously devoted to Jenny. Major Fives feeling very elderly and responsible, put Lieutenant Ipswich through a slight cross examination which seemed entirely satisfactory. Concluding three was a crowd, he drifted himself slightly, picked up his book and departed.

It was suddenly spring and the cherry trees were showing signs of life. Lieutenant Ipswich, it seemed, had taken Fatso to see the cherry blossoms.

"He took Fatso?" Lewis inquired in bewilderment. "What about you?"

"Oh, I was allowed to go also, since I'm Fatso's mother," she replied airily. "Johnny is Fatso's greatest admirer. He's almost a nuisance at times—whenever he gets bored with his aunt, he dashes over here to play with the baby."

"He sounds rather—serious," Lewis remarked tentatively.

"Oh, he is," she assured him calmly.

"Well—er—are you?" Lewis asked, taken aback.

"I'm taking it under advisement," she told him, her dimples flashing, "but so far I've told him I'd rather be loved for myself alone."

Well! If things were that serious Lewis felt he owed it to someone to find out about this chap. By dint of a bit of digging, he investigated Lieutenant Ipswich within an inch of his young life, but in the end Lewis was forced to agree that Jenny might go farther and fare worse—provided she had an eye to her material advantage. Johnny came of unexceptionable pedigree, with a tidy sum of money behind him and a great deal more in the offing. At the same time, Lewis found himself extremely critical of the whole affair. Lieutenant Ipswich might be a thoroughly nice young man, but he was rather too young, Lewis felt. Jenny needed someone with a little more maturity—someone in the early thirties, say, who was sufficiently responsible to be trusted with the guidance and rearing of Fatso. Young as she was, Jenny had an exceptionally good mind. Lieutenant Ipswich would neither get the most out of her nor stimulate her to any further attainment. Lewis felt very upset over this turn of events. He decided he owed it to the late Captain Kendall to see that his wife got the right sort of second husband.

Jenny, having divulged this much to her baby watcher, became quite confidential under slight pressure from Lewis. She had, it

Potpourri

OLD WORLD FRAGRANCE
NEW AS TOMORROW

Flowers and spice and everything nice . . . that's what Potpourri Cologne is made of. And it's meant to be worn by the woman who is as sweet— and as smart—as the fragrance itself.

In a full line of Bath Luxuries . . .
Potpourri Cologne, 1.00 and 2.00
Bath Oil, 1.25 Dusting Powder, 1.00
*Soap (box of 3), 1.00 Talc Mitt, 1.00
Plus tax*

Prince Matchabelli

711 FIFTH AVENUE, N. Y.

appeared, some doubts as to the wisdom of marrying Johnny. For one thing, he was two years younger than she. Lewis was flabbergasted to discover she was actually twenty-seven. She had known Johnny only a matter of a few months while he was visiting his aunt near by. Marrying him would mean living in New York and in a very different social world from what she had been used to. On the other hand, he seemed to adore the baby and Jenny had made up her mind to remarry.

Curled up on the couch, tugging absently at a strand of her dark hair, she looked, Lewis thought, about sixteen as she told him seriously, "Some widows feel it's disloyal to remarry. I don't know how I'd feel if I didn't have Fatso, but as it is, I think I ought to try to give him a balanced home life."

Matters came to a head with amazing rapidity. Johnny was due for discharge and return to New York very shortly, and he had no intention of leaving without Jenny. Lewis found himself in the thick of a whirlwind courtship, in which Jenny was dashing into town for dinners, theaters, movies and parties every night of the week apparently. Gone were the companionable hours before bedtime, with a chat over a cup of coffee. Lewis spent solitary evenings over his studio plans, mapping out little improvements, planning the possible decoration, and missing Jenny's interested suggestions. Letters from his mother and father, reporting progress on the construction of the wing, lay unread in his pocket. Lewis could not refrain from definite disapproval of the way things were going. With a jaundiced eye he viewed Jenny's departure each evening, noting her fondness for absurd hats and discreet whiff of perfume. When she came home at one o'clock with every appearance of a girl who has just been thoroughly kissed, his blood boiled.

Young whippersnapper, he growled to himself as he tramped home through the deserted streets. Keeping her up until all hours. All this talk of affection for the baby! Bosh. Once he's married to her he'll keep her gallivanting every minute so she can't take care of her child. Everyone knows the city isn't good for babies.

It was the following night that Johnny was leaving for New York. It was also the night on which Fatso elected to cut a tooth. Lewis arrived as usual at seven-thirty to find Lieutenant Ipswich ensconced in the living room waiting for Jenny.

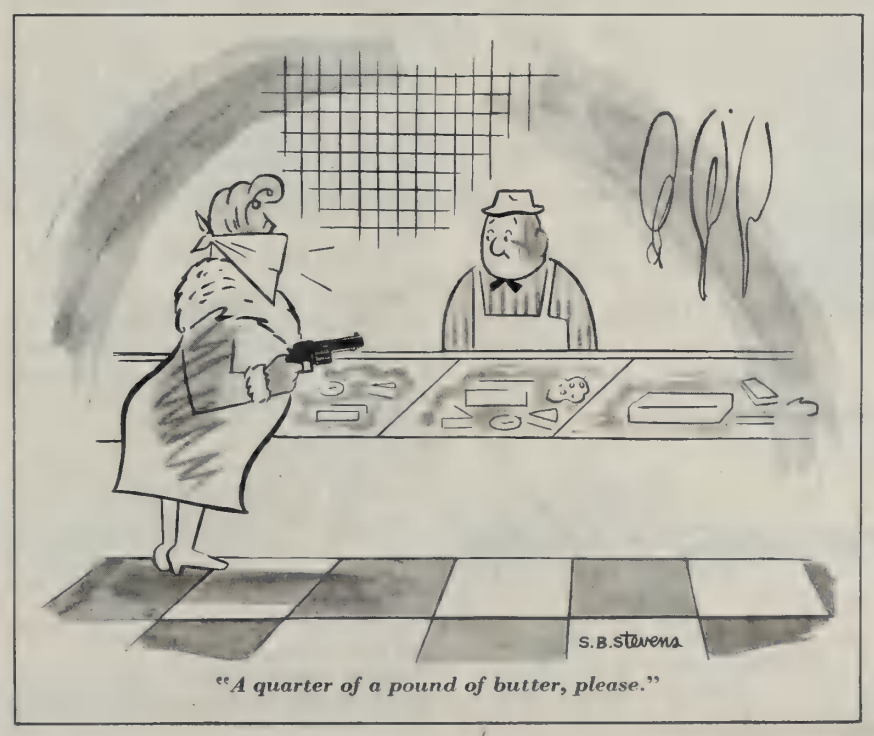
"This is my farewell," Johnny announced cheerfully. "It's back to New York for me."

"When are you leaving?" Lewis inquired hopefully.

"On the midnight train, so tonight's the night. Wish me luck."

"Oh, I do," Lewis assured him politely.

That was a very long evening for Lewis. All his old pleasures failed: his book was dull; the radio had nothing but commentators and repulsive jazz bands which only served to call up a picture of Jenny waltzing merrily in Lt. Johnny Ipswich's arms. He had no heart for fussing with the plans. He was prowling around restlessly when there was a sudden wail from the nursery. He bolted up to the bedroom. Fatso was getting into his stride by the time Lewis reached the crib. He applied a fresh diaper and waited for the solace to take effect, but it didn't work. Fatso moved restlessly from side to side and continued to give tongue. Lewis thought for a moment. Then he searched for open safety pins. There were none.



He thought again, heavily. Then he turned Fatso over on his tummy and patted gently. The baby howled thickly, so Lewis hastily reversed him. He fought down the rising panic. What had he seen Helen do in situations of this sort? He had tried for pins and gas bubbles. What next? A drink of water! He found the bottle near by and quickly inserted the nipple, spraying Fatso liberally in his haste. Fatso spewed it forth and redoubled his yells. He grew red in the face; he beat the air with his hands.

Finally Lewis picked the baby up gingerly and patted its back with feeble little swats. Fatso evidently resented this lese majesty, for he wriggled like an eel and roared into Lewis' ear. Grasping the baby firmly, he walked up and down the room, patting mechanically and saying "Sh-h-h" at intervals. The cries diminished slightly and eventually subsided to gurgles. With a sigh of relief Lewis carefully replaced the baby in his crib. Fatso eyed him unwinkingly for a minute. Then he opened his mouth and wailed like a banshee.

"Good grief," said Lewis, grabbing the child up once more. He resumed his walking and patting; the cries stopped. He replaced Fatso in his crib with cajolery. "See, boy—nice crib! Nice warm blankets. Go beddy-by now," and so on. It was no use. Fatso was possessed to cry.

He looked at the clock desperately. It was after eleven. His heart rose a bit. Johnny had said he was leaving on the midnight train. Therefore, Jenny would have to be home shortly, in order for the boy to make his train. Gently he picked up the baby and, cuddling the sobbing little bundle awkwardly in his arms, soothed and paced and paced and soothed. Any moment, now, Jenny would return.

But at twelve-thirty she was still absent. Fatso had subsided into an uneasy doze, waking to whimper every now and again. He stanchly and firmly refused to go back to his crib peaceably. Lewis rumpled up his hair wildly and realized he didn't even know the name of a doctor in Washington. In addition, he began to be more than worried about Jenny. If Lieutenant Ipswich had taken the

"A quarter of a pound of butter, please."

Painful Feet CAN PUT LINES OF PAIN IN YOUR FACE!

GET DR. SCHOLL'S FOR QUICK RELIEF

Why let painful feet age you beyond your years; make you hurt all over? It is needless! Dr. Scholl, the noted foot authority, has formulated a Remedy, Appliance, Arch Support, Pad or Plaster for quickly relieving almost every common foot trouble. Each one is clinic-tested, made under Medical and Orthopedic supervision. Their cost is small. At Drug, Shoe, Dept. Stores and Toiletry Counters. Insist on Dr. Scholl's!

FALLEN ARCHES
Dr. Scholl's Foot-Eazer and exercise relieve tired, aching feet, foot and leg pains, when due to weak or fallen arches. $3.50 pair.

PAIN HERE?
Dr. Scholl's LuPAD, a soft featherweight cushion, loops over fore part of foot; relieves pains, callouses at ball. Washable. $1.00 pr.

CORNS—SORE TOES
Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads quickly relieve pain and gently remove corns; stop shoe pressure; soothe, cushion. Prevent corns, sore toes and blisters. 25¢ and 35¢ boxes.

CALLOUSES
Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads relieve pain, soothe, ease pressure on sore spot; quickly loosen and remove callouses. 25¢ and 35¢ boxes.

BUNIONS
Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads, special size for bunions, relieve tender and enlarged joints; lift shoe pressure. 25¢ and 35¢ boxes.

SOFT CORNS
Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads quickly relieve and remove soft corns between toes. Be sure to ask for this special size. 25¢ and 35¢ boxes.

HOT, TIRED FEET
Dr. Scholl's Foot Balm quickly relieves, refreshes feverish, tender, sensitive, tired feet, due to exertion or fatigue. 35¢.

TENDER FEET
Dr. Scholl's Foot Powder soothes, refreshes tender, chafed, hot feet; eases tight shoes; helps dispel offensive foot odor. 35¢.

BUNIONS
Dr. Scholl's Bunion Reducer, of soft rubber, relieves pain from shoe pressure, hides the bulge, helps preserve shape of shoe. 50¢ each. Leather Bunion Protector, 75¢ each.

ATHLETE'S FOOT
Dr. Scholl's Solvex relieves itching feet and toes; kills fungi it contacts; helps heal Athlete's Foot. Liquid, Ointment or Powder, 50¢.

Dr Scholl's
REMEDIES · PADS · PLASTERS · ARCH SUPPORTS FOR MOST ALL COMMON FOOT TROUBLES

FREE Foot Book, also sample of Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads for Corns. Address Dr. Scholl's, Inc., Chicago, Ill.

Name.....

Address..... D6

It's as simple as this!

GIVE YOURSELF A BEAUTIFUL Crowning Glory

COLD WAVE PERMANENT.. AT HOME!

Ideal FOR CHILDREN'S HAIR, TOO

The dainty softness of your little girl's hair will be accented by a natural-looking Crowning Glory Permanent given at home. Crystal-clear Crowning Glory Solutions are as effective and easily used on her baby hair as on yours.

* You can treat yourself to a perfect, soft, natural-looking permanent—done at home—in three hours or less with the simple, ready-to-use Crowning Glory Cold Wave Permanent Solutions. . . . Simply put your hair in curlers, dampen each curl with Crowning Glory and, in less time than you believe, you have a lovely new permanent—ready to set in your own most flattering style. . . . And all you need is—CROWNING GLORY!

Complete with Curlers... $2.00 plus tax

Crowning Glory

Ask for Crowning Glory at All Drug Stores and at Cosmetic and Notions Counters in Department Stores

midnight train, where was she? Holding Fatso in his arms, Lewis worked himself into a frightful sweat, imagining all kinds of tragedies. The thought struck him suddenly that he had heard it was possible, by means of liberal payments for disturbed sleep, to get married in very short order in one of the neighboring states. Johnny had said, "Tonight's the night." Was it? At the thought of Jenny in her gay party frock, standing before some sleepy justice of the peace, his heart turned over and he grasped Fatso with such force that the baby cried out.

"Sh-h-h," said Lewis automatically. She can't be getting married, he told himself.

But, after all, why not? Because I'm going to take her home with me, his mind said instantly. Because I'm building a nursery for Fatso right this minute. Fatso hiccuped gently and buried his head in Lewis' neck. Lewis cuddled the baby with instinctive tenderness. "You'd like to live in the country, I'll bet," he said soothingly.

A wave of indignation swept over him at the feel of the exhausted little body slumped against him. The more he thought of it, the madder he got over this young woman who went gaily off to parties every night of the week, handing her baby over to the first person who came along, never caring if Fatso were sick or well, alive or dead.

No sense of responsibility, he fumed to himself. All she really wanted was enough freedom to catch another man. All this talk about finding a father for Fatso, she ought to get married so the boy'd have a balanced home life—nonsense.

By two o'clock his feet were sore and his nerves were worn thin. He had imagined every conceivable kind of accident and worried himself sick over the possibility of Jenny's runaway marriage. Fatso had hit a lull when the front door slammed; he immediately awoke and wailed loudly.

Jenny ran up the stairs. "What are you doing to that child?" she demanded accusingly.

In his relief at seeing her alive and apparently undamaged, Lewis lost his temper. "What am I doing?" he said, glaring at her wildly over the baby's shrieking form. "I'm minding your baby, madam, while you go out for a bit of jitterbug. Can I help it if he cries? I'm not a doctor."

"How long has he been crying?" she cried. "Give him to me at once. What did you do to him?"

"I didn't do anything to him. I merely walked him up and down, up and down, for three hours while you were out jigging about the town, flirting like an adolescent schoolgirl, just as though you hadn't a care in the world. All you can think of is dumping your responsibility onto the first person that comes along and dashing out for a little cheap thrill."

"Are you quite through?" she said icily.

"No, I'm not. You may make a big hit at the USO and the convalescent hospital, but I'm one serviceman you don't fool. To think I let myself be lured into aiding and abetting you—sitting here night after night so you could gad about with one man after another. Well, I'll have no part in it. From now on you can tell your boy friends you're out of circulation and stay home and take care of this child." He dumped Fatso into her arms dramatically. Fatso immediately stopped crying.

"So that's what you think, is it?" she asked slowly.

"That's what I think," he replied flatly and went downstairs.

He had his cap and coat on and was stacking his drawing equipment into a neat pile when Jenny spoke to him from the doorway. "You had your say about this," she told him formally, "but I think I've a right to defend myself. I suppose it never occurred to you that I do take care of my baby all day long, every day of the week. Just because I'm a widow doesn't mean I have to take the veil, you know. I'm only twenty-seven, after all, and I'm certainly entitled to a little fun and a few friends. Maybe my living room looked wonderful to you after the furnished room you were living in, but you haven't any associations with it."

Slowly she stepped down into the living room and walked over to the table. He was appalled to see her eyes fill with tears.

"I suppose you think it's easy to sit in a room all alone, night after night, where everything reminds you of someone," she went on, her voice trembling. "Well, it isn't. I've sat here knitting and reading for over a year with no one to talk to. It's no fun having a cup of coffee alone, you know, or listening to records. I haven't any relatives to keep me company, and the only people I know down here I've met through the Red Cross or the USO. They all have families and jobs to do, and lives to live. They don't have time to keep me company. I suppose I could move away, but I don't know where I'd go. Houses are so difficult to find. I thought, when you came, I'd have time to build up a new life at least. Perhaps it wouldn't be so hard to be alone. At least, you made the place look different and I had someone to talk to a little. I didn't have to come home to an empty house. And now," she finished, "you're leaving."

Lewis reached a tentative arm about her shoulders. "You make me feel like a heel," he told her earnestly. "It was unforgivable of me, Jenny, but I thought Johnny was leaving at midnight and you'd certainly be home before that. When you didn't come home, I got worried to death, imagining accidents. I even thought perhaps you'd eloped with him, and when the baby sounded off like an air-raid siren, it was just the last straw. I just lost my temper and said a lot of things I didn't mean. Please, will you forgive me?"

She nodded wearily. "That's all right. I didn't realize you'd worry. Johnny got involved in a lot of speechmaking and missed his train. By the time I got a taxi to bring me home, it was much later than I'd intended."

"Speechmaking?" Lewis held his breath but he had to know. "Are congratulations in order?" he asked.

She shook her head. "No. I don't think Fatso would be happy living in the city." She retreated a step at something in his eyes. "Besides," she said breathlessly, "I don't think we'd like an apartment."

"Um-hm," Lewis replied conversationally, feeling a tremendous hope within him. "Do you think, perhaps, that he'd prefer living in the country—out West, say?" he asked. "In something like a studio house, with a room of his own? Because I think I know just the place."

"Well," she said faintly, "yes, I think he would."

With one immense stride he closed the distance between them and folded her in his arms.

"Jenny," he said then, "do you mean it? Will you really come out and live in my house?"

After a short but satisfactory interlude Jenny pulled away from him. "Do you think," she said thoughtfully, "that the Acme Lullaby and Baby Storage Service might be expanded to offer a service for mothers?"

---

"I need oil," said an aged monk, as he planted an olive sapling. "Lord," he prayed, "it needs rain, that its roots may drink and swell. Send gentle showers." And the Lord sent a gentle shower. "Lord," prayed the monk, "my tree needs sun. Send sun, I pray Thee." And the sun shone. "Now, frost, my Lord, to brace its tissues," said the monk, and the little tree sparkled with frost. But at eventide it died. The monk told a brother monk his disappointing experience.

"I, too, have planted a little tree," he said, "and it thrives well. I entrusted my tree to its God. 'Lord, send what it needs,' I prayed—'storm or sunshine, wind or frost. Thou hast made it and Thou dost know.'"

—CHARLES F. PERRY:
Tell Me a Story (Frederick Muller, Ltd.).

MRS. CHARLES BOYER
—glamorous wife of the screen's leading romantic actor.

"Enticing!"

says Mrs. Charles Boyer,

"No wonder TANGEE SATIN-FINISH LIPSTICK is a Hollywood sensation."

GLAMOROUS COLORS? Of course, Tangee has them! But that alone doesn't explain the Tangee Lipstick's fabulous success in Hollywood. The other reason is—SATIN-FINISH! This amazing development gives a lipstick wonderful "staying power"... so that you aren't constantly taking time out for "repairs".

Even on a hot summer day, Satin-Finish doesn't get soft and greasy... does NOT run or smear to spoil the lovely lines of your mouth. When you moisten your lips, the taste is just right. And when you look in your mirror you'll agree with Mrs. Boyer—the effect is enticing. And remember only Tangee has Satin-Finish.

HIT COLORS OF HOLLYWOOD

TANGEE GAY-RED... "to make your lips look young and gay" —a favorite of Mrs. Robert Montgomery and Mrs. Gary Cooper.

TANGEE RED-RED... a clear vivid shade—first choice of Mrs. Charles Boyer, Mrs. George Murphy and many others.

Other popular Tangee shades are:

THEATRICAL RED...MEDIUM RED...TANGEE NATURAL

CONSTANCE LUFT HUHN
Head of the House of Tangee and creator of the world famous Satin-Finish Lipstick and Petal-Finish Cake Make-Up.

Use Tangee...

and see how beautiful you can be

More beautiful than ever . . . in

Velva Leg Film

So easy to apply and quick to dry, Elizabeth Arden's leg make-up stays on the legs and off the clothes.

Water-resistant. Clings, until deliberately washed away, with a blemish-concealing sheer-textured beauty that trims the ankle — slims the leg. Be sure to wear Velva Leg Film with bathing suits or shorts, it makes your legs look sun-burnished . . . far more lovely.

Sun Beige, light—Sun Bronze, medium—Sun Copper, dark

Approximately 20 pairs in the 5 oz. bottle, 1.00
Almost 50 pairs in the 12 oz. economy size, 2.00

SLEEK . . . the fragrant cream that removes hair and leaves the legs satin smooth, 1.00

VELVA LEG FILM BUFFER . . . for polishing after applying Velva Leg Film. Must be thoroughly dry, then buff lightly for a sheer-textured finish, .50

Elizabeth Arden

All prices plus taxes, except Buffer

LONG AND WITH CURLS

(Continued from Page 19)

blocks on her bicycle and throw the ribbon in an ash can. Then if Felice asked her she would simply shrug and say, "How should I know what happened to your darn old red ribbon?" Yes, that would do it.

She opened the door, went out into the upper hall and, thrusting her upper teeth out over her lower lip, slid down the banister to the accompaniment of a long, shrill whistle.

Her mother called fretfully from the living room, "Margery! For heaven's sake!" It was Mrs. Dilling's reaction to almost everything that Margery did. The child's vehemence bewildered her.

Margery dived into her jacket and opened the door. "Back in a flash," she shouted, and the door slam made a period to the sentence.

She ran around to the side of the house, trotted her bike out of the garage and pedaled off at high speed down the hill. She was glad none of the neighborhood children were out. They were mainly girls, and she never played with any of them. At first puzzled and offended, later they learned how to pay her back for ignoring them. Their weapon was laughter. When she passed by on her bicycle, they would huddle together and whisper, and then with sidelong glances at Margery they would giggle and whisper again. And Margery, riding by them with her head up and her chin stuck out, would be hurt to the marrow. "Dopey," she would mutter half aloud. "Silly dopes." Then she would put on a burst of speed and go whizzing down the hill standing dangerously on one pedal.

But today none of them were in sight. She rode on past the first and second crossings, where she usually turned off to go to the Camuses, the four tough little brothers who were her sole playmates. Margery was small and not actually very strong, but the Camuses had recognized that she made up in grit what she lacked in brawn. They accepted her on her own terms.

The reason for this choice of friends was not very clear to Margery. That is, she had no exact knowledge. For instance, she could not have known that when she was a tiny baby her father had stood over her crib one morning and said, half aloud, "Should've been a boy." She was four months old at the time, and, furthermore, she was asleep. How could she have learned that morning of her father's disappointment?

And yet she grew up knowing. Although he never said it again, from her earliest moment of awareness of anything at all, she was aware that she would have made her father happy if she had been born a boy. And knowing this was hard on Margery, because she loved her father best in the whole world. He loved her, too, in a way—she knew that—but it was not with that very special love he would have had for her if she had turned out to be a boy instead of what she was.

In fact, what she was didn't seem to satisfy anyone. Her mother, for instance, who was sort of a ladylike person, and wanted everything to be pretty and nice. Mrs. Dilling's taste ran to sheer fabrics and ruffles, while Margery simply had to have sailor collars and boy-tailored jumpers—and each time she acted, as Mrs. Dilling said tearfully, "stubborn as a little mule" until the ruffles were all packed up and sent back. The child would stand at the table like an angry monitor, and if she had any regrets at seeing the soft, frilly stuff disappear, they emerged in the form of remarks like, "Junk! Stupid junky mush!"

She knew she was making life harder her mother, who seemed to be in some kin trouble. There were times when her mot was talking and her father would get a away look in his eyes. That always seeme frighten mother. Her voice would get ha and nervous, and she would look around h lessly. Margery always felt sorry, wanted to comfort her. But somehow, wh ever dad was absent-minded toward motl why, mother would get cranky toward M gery. Mother would turn to Felice inste would smooth Felice's silky curls and fluff her dress, as though that gave her a spe kind of comfort. Once in a while Ma caught herself wishing there was someth on her dress that mother could fool arou with. But she always pushed away s thoughts with great hemence.

Elegy

By Elizabeth Travers

Dark earth
Grass green over
Her who had neither
Love nor lover.

Was it for this Firm lips kept under
The mind's longing
The heart's thunder?

For this alone
The word unspoken
And the mind bent
And the heart broken?

The red ribbon was passing weakness. The ribbon was something get rid of and forget quickly as possible.

At the third cross Margery swerved right was a street of sma houses, with coal furna She stopped halfway d near a pair of ash c and looked carefu around. It was almost dinner hour, and the st was empty. Quickly reached into the neck her blouse. But the rib had slipped farther d and she couldn't get t She unbuttoned her jac and reached in ag hunched over to make blouse loose across chest.

At this moment a ne by upper window open and two girls, sisters wh she knew slightly fr school, leaned out. Margery jerked hand out of her blouse guiltily.

"Hi, tomboy," the older girl call "What'sa matter, got an itch?" The youn sister giggled, and the older one caricatu Marge's position, pretending to scratch, a like.

Margery flushed darkly. "Bug mu dropped in," she called, broadly casual, a pedaled off in a furious burst of speed.

What a dopey thing she'd said about bug! It only made her more ridiculous. S with embarrassment, she pressed do harder on the pedals, her shoulders hunch Why the dickens did she ever start up w the darn old red ribbon? She had felt lik sneak taking it, and now it was even m trouble to get rid of. And what for, anyw It was darn fool girl stuff. It was a darn old piece of disgusting junk. She hated way it shone, and its bright color, and soft way it fell into folds. She would like have thrown it into a smelly old garb can—but there it was down somewhere in clothing, right up against her body, pra cally.

She made a fast right turn at the cor leaning at a dizzy angle. Out of breath now, still she pumped furiously, hurry toward some place which was still vague her mind where she would not only get of that ribbon, but spoil it, make it filt and ugly.

After a minute, some intuition made look back. Farther down the street were two little girls. On bicycles now, they apparently followed her, looking for a li fun. She slowed down. No sense letting th think she was running away.

The girls had almost caught up when reached the Camuses' house. Ignoring th Margery laid her bike down on the grass front lawn and walked over to the adjoin lot. Two of the boys were there, inspectin pile of timbers.

Stops Perspiration Troubles Faster

THEN YOU SLIP INTO YOUR SWIM SUIT

Get in the swim! Get next to this new post-war super-fast deodorant. Ask for new ODORONO Cream Deodorant . . . stops perspiration faster than you slip to your swim suit. Because it contains science's most effective perspiration stopper.

Works wonders when you work or play hardest. Really protects up to 3 days. Will not irritate your skin . . . or harm fine fabrics . . . or turn gritty in the jar.

Change to the new super-fast ODORONO Cream Deodorant—super-modern, super-efficient.

NEW, *Superfast

ODO-RO-DO

CREAM DEODORANT

39¢

Also 59¢ and 10¢ Plus Federal Tax

ORONO ICE is back from the wars 39¢

Margery picked her way over cans and broken bottles and came up to them. "Whatya doin'?"

"It's planks from Johnson's old garage. We're gonna make a fort." Two walls of the fortress were already partly built. Micky, the biggest Camus, was puffing as he pulled at the heavy boards.

"I'll give a hand," Margery offered, aware of the girls watching. Let them see she didn't just hang around. Let them see she was one of the boys, right in with them. "Which way ya want 'em?"

"Naw, never mind," Micky answered uneasily.

Margery knew it was the presence of the other girls that made him act that way. They made him conscious, all of a sudden, that she was a girl. "Come on, Micky," she said angrily, "which way?" And she lifted the end of one plank.

"Well," he said unwillingly. "Well—we'll lay these ones on the crosspieces."

"Okay," said Margery, tough and businesslike. "Okay, Micky—you take that end."

Straining together, Micky and Margery lifted the heavy plank into place.

"Whoo! There!" she said briskly. "That does it. Now this one." With her toe she indicated a slab of oak twice as thick as the pine plank they had just handled. She bent over it, waiting.

Micky hesitated, glancing uncomfortably at the two girls standing at the curb. "Aw, never mind, Marge," he said. "Sidney'll help me."

Margery straightened up. "I can lift it the same as Sidney," she said quickly. Micky put his hands in his pockets. "Don't be so silly," she argued in a low voice. "C'mon, Micky—grab your end."

Just then Sidney moved over to them, and Micky took his hands out of his pockets. "Okay, Sid," he said, "grab an end." Spreading his legs, he bent over the beam.

Margery shouldered Sidney out of the way roughly. "He can take the next one," she said defiantly. "I'm taking this one. C'mon!"

Micky shrugged and unwillingly took hold of his end, and Margery put both hands under hers. At the word "Lift!" she pulled upward.

The weight of the beam shocked her. Micky stood erect, but at the first effort Margery's end was only two or three inches from the ground and she stood bent double, her back strained into a painful arc.

"Let Sidney take it," Micky called.

"Nuts!" panted Margery, sweat coming out on her face. With a fierce effort, her back aching and her arms feeling pulled from their sockets, she raised her end a few inches. "Move!" she grunted, and together they edged over to the half-built wall.

Breathing noisily, Micky eased his end into place, and Margery saw she must raise hers a good six inches to get it in place. She wanted to drop the beam. Her shoulders hurt so that she felt she would die if she couldn't drop the beam.

Then she saw Sidney stepping over to help her. So he thought she couldn't do it herself! With a desperate effort, she wrenched up and toward the crosspiece—and failed by an inch. Instead of slipping on top, her end rammed the side, dislodging the crosspiece, and with it several of the planks underneath, and the wall of the fortress collapsed. The momentum of the effort carried Margery forward, and she fell with the wall, tumbling awkwardly, banging her shins and scraping her arms against the wood, and receiving a slap from one stray, bouncing plank square in the stomach.

"Holy jeepers!" Micky swore. "Holy jeepers! All our work!"

Sidney, playing up to the girls, started to laugh, and they with him.

Dazed, Margery clambered to her feet, rubbing at her shins. "I'll help you fix it, Micky," she said with difficulty.

"No, never mind," Micky retorted bitterly, and this sent Sidney and the girls into fresh bursts of laughter.

"Ain't she terrific, though?" the older girl giggled. "Ain't she just supercolossal?"

MY California Fashions are the kind you can wear!

If you like the bright gaiety of California fashions without going to extremes, you'll like my California dresses . . . comfortable, colorful, casual . . . in short very "wearable." Look for . . .

Alice OF CALIFORNIA · SAN FRANCISCO 5

AT BETTER STORES OR WRITE TO

Make Money

SELL CHRISTMAS CARDS

As low as 50 for $1 With NAME IMPRINTED

Show exclusive NAME IMPRINTED Personal Christmas Cards, low as 50 for $1. Amazing values bring you easy sales.

BIG SELLERS IN BOX ASSORTMENTS

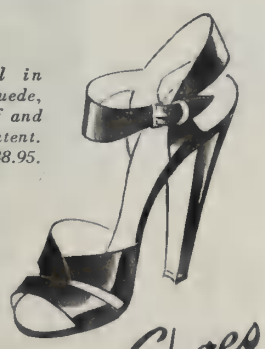
Boost profits with 21 "Feature" $1 Christmas assortment—sparkling new features. Other money making assortments—including our famous Christmas Gift Wrap Ensemble, Religious, Everyday, Oilette, many others. Write today for samples.



TRADE MARK JANES ART STUDIOS INC. 1225 Clifford Av., Dept. B-4 Rochester 5, N.Y.

delight for dancing

distinction for you

orchids—from *him

Sandal in white suede, red calf and black patent. $7.95—$8.95.

Paradise Shoes

BRAUER BROS. SHOE CO.
ST. LOUIS 8, MISSOURI

AT FINER STORES ▪ SORRY, NO MAIL ORDERS

RARE LOVELINESS
TO GIVE . . . TO OWN

Portfolio of Hand-Coloured

WYTHE HOUSE FLOWER PRINTS

(Approved Williamsburg Reproductions)

Now you can own authentic reproductions of the famous Furber flower prints gracing the Wythe House, Colonial Williamsburg in Virginia. Each print (18½"x24") represents a distinctive and beautiful seasonal flower arrangement. Limited edition, hand-colored.

Complete portfolio (12 prints) $50
Individual prints, each $5

Get free descriptive folder from your dealer or write

THE DIETZ PRESS, Inc.
Official Publishers Colonial Williamsbu
112 EAST CARY STREET
RICHMOND 19, VIRGINIA

"Problem" Hair
made Lovely again

Buried treasure in your hair? Yes, the sparkle of jewels, the soft sheen of silk lie under the luster-dimming dirt, dust, dandruff. To recapture your hair's natural glamor, do what professional hairdressers do—shampoo with Admiracion. Admiracion cleans hair 'til it shines—'til it comes all alive with natural, ravishing highlights. Helps make hair lovely without affecting its color. Get Admiracion from your favorite toilet counter or hairdresser. For lots of lather—use Admiracion Foamy Shampoo. For coarse or wiry hair many people prefer Admiracion No-Lather.

says Michael of the Waldorf,
Director, Beauty Salon, of the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel
"I prefer Admiracion Shampoo because it makes hair easier to manage. In fact, Admiracion Shampoo is such an effective aid to hair beauty, we use it two to one over any other shampoo."

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Girls with Lovely Hair always get ADMIRACION Shampoo

Numb with the pain in her shins, and a little sick at the stomach, Margery turned to leave. "I'll help fix it up tomorrow, Micky," she called back, half to herself.

"No, never mind—please never mind!" Micky shouted after her furiously.

Marge went up the back stairs to avoid seeing anyone until she stopped feeling so queer. She closed the door of her room and locked it. Then she crumbled onto the bed, flattened out on her face and lay very still.

Almost immediately she heard her mother calling from the foot of the stairs, "Margery?"

She lay motionless, waiting for her stomach to stop doing somersaults.

"Margery!" her mother called again, and then continued, in her unhappy voice, "She'll be late for dinner again, you'll see. Honestly, Ben, I don't know what to do with her. She's like a little savage. You'll have to punish her, Ben—she's too much for me."

Then there was Ben's voice, placating absent-mindedly. Poor daddy, Margery thought. He was no good at punishing. Besides, he really didn't want to be bothered.

Margery sighed heavily and sat up on the bed. No sense being any later than she was. It only made things bad between mother and daddy. She went into the bathroom and washed her hands and face. Then she came back and brushed halfheartedly at her disheveled hair. Seeing in the mirror that her blouse was muddy and in need of changing, she put down the brush and peeled the blouse up over her head.

The ribbon dropped out and fell at her feet, and when she picked it up it was still warm with the heat of her body. And somehow the warmth and the color and sheen of it brought tears into her eyes. The tears that didn't come when she was scorned by Felice or hurt by the lumber or laughed at by the girls—all those tears that had stayed inside for a long time came out now at the touch of a piece of red ribbon, and they ran down her face and even got as far as her neck, so that after a while she took the sleeve of her soiled blouse and had to wipe from the collarbone up. She didn't know exactly why she was crying. It had something to do with making a fool of herself in front of those kids—but there was more to it than that, only she didn't know just what.

She put on a clean blouse and brushed her hair down again, all the time eying the ribbon. She took it up and fingered it. It was so very smooth. It looked nice, and she yearned to have it look nice on her.

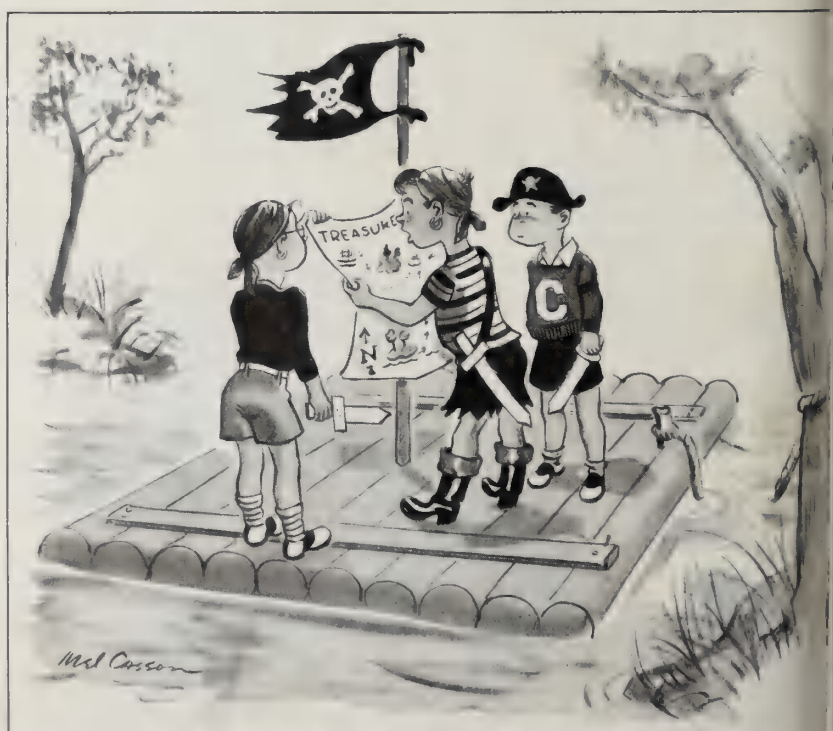
She wrapped it all around her head, and the result in the mirror surprised her. That way it didn't look silly. It looked quite natural. It was just long enough to get arou and allow for a knot. And, when the k was tied, two perky little ends stood up a flirted with her out of the mirror. She pus the ends around to one side, and that v even better. The ribbon, drawn tight, sh sleekly against her straight, dark hair, ho ing the short strands close to her head, m ing the shape of her head look sort of ferent and—and nice!

Her heart began to quicken with exci ment. Not willing to trust the bedro mirror, she went into the bathroom a looked at herself again in the cold, wh light. Her cheeks were flushed and her e bright with the recent tears, and her h made a curved fringe under the ribb framing her face softly. She frowned. Di look nice, or did it look silly?

Reluctantly she put up her hand to tak off—and stopped. What if she went do this way? Would they laugh? Would th make fun of her? Would they? Maybe th would, but—but—maybe not! Maybe th wouldn't even notice! Maybe they ——

On a mad impulse she ran out to the sta checked an automatic motion to straddle banister, and began to walk down decorou The impulse died on the fourth step do and panic filled her. But it was too late, her mother was at the foot of the stairs, fu ing.

"Margery! So you are home. Why did you answer when I ——" Then there wa silence while Helen Dilling stared at difficult younger child, her unmanagea tomboy daughter. Margery stared ba seeking uncertainly for the meaning of t look on her mother's face. At any rate, th was no trace of amusement. After a mom Mrs. Dilling said, "Well!"



Margery waited for more, but noth came, and she realized she couldn't j stand there in the middle of the stairs. continued on down, slipping between mother and the newel, and went into living room.

Felice was lying on the sofa filing her na Her father, in his favorite chair, the ne paper in his lap, was scraping out his p He looked up with his preoccupied half-sm but the smile faded, and after a moment cleared his throat and said, "Well!"

Now Felice turned her head, and what saw made the file stop scraping. She sw her legs to the floor and said, sitting v straight, "Well!"

Margery's heart banged so thickly in throat that her voice could scarcely through.

"Can't anybody say anything but 'w in this house?" she managed finally.

"It's not worth finding; my father told me what the taxes on it would be!"

So cooling for tired, burning feet

When feet burn, callouses sting and every step is torture, stop groaning and rub on a little Ice-Mint. A frosty-white, medicinal cream, its cooling comfort helps drive fire and pain right out . . . tired muscles relax in grateful relief. A world of difference in seconds. Helps soften up corns and callouses, too. Get foot-happy today, the Ice-Mint way. At drug and department stores.

Or, send for FREE sample. Write Ice-Mint, Suite 46, P.O. Box 155, Buffalo, N.Y.

"well-groomed women wear Elinet for their hair"

YOU, TOO, WILL PREFER

A favorite with fastidious women because Elinet is so delicately sheer, yet gives such firm control to even the "heaviest" hairdo. Full size and made to give extra long wear. So look for the net with the name Elinet . . . at your favorite chain store.

IN POPULAR HAIR COLORS

IVY PRODUCTS CO., NEW YORK

THOMASTON Sheets

SINCE 1899 THEY HAVE MET THE TEST OF TIME

KILL INSECTS WITHOUT DUST OR SPRAY

t in the protective tube unfailingly s roaches, silverfish, waterbugs, crick-Sanitary—cannot be blown or tracked food supplies, etc. Gives clean, long ing protection. Sold by most drug, cery and other stores. If yours none send $1.00 for 3 packages tpaid. Money back guarantee.
r 20 million sold. De Soto emical Company, 6 Rose Arcadia, Florida.

Her father crooked a finger at her and said, "Come here, baby."

It was a long time since he had called her "baby." She went to him, and he sat up in his chair and put his hands on her shoulders, studying her face. A great excited joy began to well up in her. She could tell by his face that she did look nice. She did!

"You're going to be a very pretty young lady, honey," he said. Then after a pause he went on: "You're going to look a lot like your mother, and she was a very pretty young lady." He looked over her head at her mother, smiling as though he remembered something very pleasant. Then he leaned forward and kissed Margery on the forehead and then on the cheek.

A sudden wave of love for her father almost suffocated her. She threw her arms around his neck and hugged him fiercely, and he held her so close that she could feel when he started to laugh. She drew back, alarmed, and scanned his face anxiously.

"Baby," he said, still laughing, "will you do that to every man who says you're pretty?"

That was all right. He was kidding her, but it was a nice kind of kidding, the kind you do to people you like. She felt so close to him then that she could say almost anything.

"Hey, dad," she said, "if I do grow up to be pretty—if I really do—would you still feel sorry I'm not a boy?"

THE smile froze on his face. He looked so completely astonished that she wondered what she had said. A kind of horror came over his face, the way a boy might look at a tender little animal he has killed without meaning to.

Oh, she was so sorry she had spoken! Now she had worried him. "Daddy!" she cried, wanting to undo her words. "Daddy!"

He swallowed, and then took her by the shoulders and shook her a little. "Honey," he said, "you listen to me. It's so long since I wanted you to be a son that I can't even remember it. And ever since I really knew you, why," he went on, low-voiced and earnest, "I wouldn't change you for anything!" He looked at her long and steadily, so that she knew he meant every word of it.

"Daddy," she whispered lovingly, and nestled against him, and a hard, painful little kernel in the center of her being seemed to be melting out of existence there in his arms.

Her father held her in his lap, then, while he and her mother got to talking and laughing about something that happened long ago, before they were married. Mother seemed rather excited, somehow, and her father's voice was low and soft in his chest—she could feel it rumbling under her cheek.

Felice kept looking at her thoughtfully, and once when Margery looked up, Felice leaned over and said, "You stick to red, Marge. Red's for you."

Margery flushed with pleasure, feeling goose-pimply all over at her sister's confidential tone, which made it seem as though they had something private between them, a kind of business secret. Why, Felice would show her how to use a curler! She felt certain of it!

The thought of the curler came from a plan Margery had been pushing out of her mind for half of her life. Never having been aware of it, she was astonished when it popped, full-grown, into her mind. It was so thrilling she had to tell her father right away.

She took his hand and smiled up at him ecstatically as they went toward the dining room. "Daddy," she breathed, unconsciously pinching his hand in her excitement, "daddy, I'm gonna let my hair grow! I'm gonna wear it long and with curls!"

Ben looked down at her with shiny, loving eyes, and squeezed her hand in response. Then he looked across at her mother, and her mother looked back, her lips trembling a little, but not saying anything, and Margery thought, in warm surprise, Why—why they can talk without words! And from that time on she began to think less about boys as something you had to beat at their own game, and more about them as people you might communicate with, eventually, without words.

REVOLUTIONARY NEW CURLER AVOIDS BROKEN HAIR ENDS

No matter how beautiful your permanent, no matter how natural your wave, broken hair ends can cause ugly, unmanageable frizz.

The revolutionary new GAYLA "Easy-Lock" Curlers "baby" brittle hair-ends, treat them softly, gently —thanks to the unique "open end" feature. No wonder your hair looks so soft, so lovely, so natural!

SAFER
Distinctive open end can't catch or cut hair

EASIER
Patented "Easy-Lock" snaps closed easily with one hand from any position

DON'T RISK A FRIZZY HAIR-DO BY BREAKING, MASHING, CUTTING

Get a whole set of these new, safer curlers today and help yourself to uniformly soft, flattering, natural curls every time.

Gayla
"EASY-LOCK"
CURLER
by the makers of the famous Gayla Hold-Bob bobby pins and hairpins

COPYRIGHT 1946 ■ GAYLORD PRODUCTS, INCORPORATED ■ CHICAGO 16, ILLINOIS

THE "Big Difference" IN PRESSURE PANS

MIRRO-MATIC

Rotate

MIRRO-MATIC CONTROL
for correct pressure... 5,10 or 15 lbs.

5 LBS. . . . the correct pressure for cooking Frozen Vegetables. Average time about 2 minutes.

10 LBS. . . . the correct pressure for cooking meats. Better texture. Time, 16 minutes to the pound.

15 LBS. . . . the correct pressure for most fresh vegetables. Whole, small carrots speed-cook in 2½ min.

CANNING . . . 3 one-pint jars—made possible by MIRRO-MATIC'S versatile control set at 10 pounds.

MIRRO-MATIC GIVES YOU PERFECTED Speed COOKING

Enjoy tender, flavorful foods cooked the speedy, simple, efficient MIRRO-MATIC way through correct pressure selection for properly cooking each type of food—that's perfected speed cooking. Foods retain more of their natural color, more of their precious vitamins and healthful minerals.

The dome shape cover adds cooking capacity for bulky foods or pressure canning. The new, improved gasket, readily removed for cleaning, automatically seals and locks cover under operating pressure.

At department, hardware and housefurnishing stores... 4 Qt. $12.95 (West $13.95).

ALUMINUM GOODS MANUFACTURING CO.
MANITOWOC ▪ WISCONSIN
Largest Manufacturer of Aluminum Cooking Utensils

MIRRO
THE FINEST ALUMINUM

THAT'S HOW IT IS—

(Continued from Page 49)

"Possible? In such a country, mamma—and you will forgive me for the display of English—in such a country the question is rhetorical. In such a country anything is possible."

Then Lilla said, "I, too, shall now look for employment."

Mamma protested, "No. It is not fitting. And it is not necessary. I forbid it."

"Nevertheless, please forgive me, I must find work to do. I would also like to achieve a good education and become completely Americanized."

"But you are so young, Lilla. Hardly more than eighteen."

"The hardships have made me not so young any more, mamma."

"I also work," declared Georg, feeling somewhat left out of all this. "I go about collecting discarded woods and making things. See, even a great man such as papa does not collapse on the bench I sawed together with the tools the janitor lends me."

"This is a memorable time in our lives," said Mr. Torvik. "Soon the application for our citizenship can be made. Let us say a silent prayer of thanksgiving. I also anticipate my first payday. Ai! We will invite the surgeon Horla to come and have supper with us. We possess the table the American gave us, benches to sit upon, and a week to look forward. Now I—now I am a little tired from pushing. I think it will be to lie down a moment."

Like Mr. Torvik, Lilla also looked in the fine print in the back of the newspapers, where employment agencies advertised. There was no nice street dress she could wear, but she made herself as pretty as possible in the old dotted crepe that had once been mamma's, and sought out the address listed in the paper.

"Yes, miss," said a white-haired lady who took her application.

"I am a foreigner to this country, please," said Lilla. She was frightened; her heart beat violently beneath her boyish chest.

"What would you say you were best fitted for?"

"I ——"

"You've never worked before, is that it?"

Lilla nodded.

"Age?"

"Eighteen."

"Were you in school in Europe?"

"I am sorry, no," said Lilla. "You see, for four years we went from city to city so the Nazi police wouldn't kill us."

"Why did they want to kill you?" asked the white-haired lady.

"WHY?" Lilla was surprised at the question. "Because my papa is not capable to teach lies. They killed everybody they could. Isn't that known everywhere? But the English and the Russians and the Americans stopped them at last, and then our dream came true. Now we are in America, and almost every day we weep for joy. Is so beautiful a country. Forgive me!"

"Well ——" said the white-haired lady. "Lilla?"

"Yes. Lilla."

"I'll try to see if I can find a job for you, Lilla. Wait out in the anteroom until you hear from me. You're a pretty girl—I'm certain we'll manage to get you something."

In the anteroom Lilla sat on a bench. A newspaper lay there between herself and a young man. After a little while she took courage to speak. "Forgive, please. Is it yours—the ownership of this?"

He nodded. "Help yourself."

Lilla began reading the news items, but she could feel the young man's eyes on her. She became conscious of the mended places in the old crepe dress.

At last she heard his voice say, "Have any luck in there?"

"The lady said she will try to find me work."

"I'm out after a job in radio. I'm a radio mechanic."

Lilla did not know quite what to answer.

"I just came out of the Army," the young man explained. "It sure feels good to be back. You can't realize how much the old U. S. means to you until you think maybe you're never going to see it again."

Lilla glanced shyly at her companion. "In Europe you fought?"

He tossed his head in amusement. "In Africa I fought, and in Italy. In Holland and France and Germany I fought all over the place. Only I don't go around wearin' a suitful of buttons and ribbons, because I'll tell you why. I want to forget it, see. I'm not a veteran. I'm just a guy startin' out in life, looking for a job. I ——" He turned and looked at Lilla. "Well, you and me."

"Yes," said Lilla. A strange warmth had stolen over her as he spoke. It was as though she had known this young man in some previous existence. To prove her prescience, she said, "You were much wounded?"

HE laughed outright. "That's a funny way you speak. I wouldn't say I was much wounded. Of course, if you keep hanging around where the bullets are flyin', you're going to stop a couple. But I'm not the only G. I. with a Purple Heart. Look. My name's Chick Williams. What's yours?"

"Lilla Torvik. I am a foreigner here in this country."

"Glad to know you, Miss Torvik," said Chick. "Sometimes I feel a little lost in it myself, kind of all alone in the world." He became introspective, his eyes cast down between his newly bought shoes, and she wondered what he was thinking of. Suddenly a self-conscious smile broke out on his face. "Here," he said. Reaching into his pocket, he brought forth a package of chewing gum. "Help yourself."

Lilla had never chewed gum in her life, but she accepted the proffered slice.

Chick grinned. "Well, what do you say? You root for me, and I'll root for you. Bargain?"

"Root?" Then she remembered. "Oh, yes. Cheer." The warmness was turning into a hurting joy. "I will cheer very strongly that you get the job of your dreams."

The white-haired lady came out then. "That's all today," she announced. "We're working on your applications, so make sure to be here promptly on time tomorrow."

At dinner that evening Mrs. Torvik questioned Lilla closely about her experiences. Lilla's cheeks were pink with color, her dark eyes bright and shining. "Is it something that happens to excite you, Lilla?"

"No, mamma."

"You do not eat properly. Jan, I repeat myself. She is not ready to look for work. I worry. All day I think maybe a speeding truck overruns her, or is kidnaped or something."

"Mamma! Such things to speak!"

"Lilla can take care of herself," said Mr. Torvik.

"Today I met a typical, clean-cut American," Lilla informed her family. "In the employment agency. He too looks for work. We made up an interesting thing to do together."

"What is this you do with a strange man?" asked Mrs. Torvik.

Lilla laughed. "We made up a bargain to cheer together for each to get good jobs. Mamma and papa, I love it so, everything here that happens in America! In the old U. S. people are immediately friends. This man I met is a great hero of the war. Wounded he often was, which gives him serious heart trouble. His heart, he told me, is all purple."

Georg laughed so that the food made a ludicrous sound in his mouth.

"He chokes!" cried Mrs. Torvik.

Georg finally managed to swallow his food. "Mamma, she makes me so I almost die with fits." Turning to Lilla, he said, "Forgive me, sister. The Purple Heart is not a sickness, it's a medal for bravery."

Butterscotch Pudding that's My-T-Fine

Easy recipe for Scotch Mint Pudding: Prepare My-T-Fine Butterscotch Pudding according to simple directions on the package. Top each serving with a swirl of whipped cream; cut chocolate-covered mint and insert halves butterfly-fashion in whipped cream. Delicious!

5 delicious My-T-Fine desserts
Butterscotch
Chocolate
Vanilla
Nut Chocolate
Lemon Pie Filling

Good food sends savory fragrance ahead . . . when you cook with Derby Barbecue Sauce. Its mouth-watering goodness works a spell on appetites. Dozens of easy ways to spice your cooking with it. Send for Free Recipe Book.

GLASER Derby Barbecue Sauce

● Steak Sauce... Barbecue Sauce... Hot Sauce
Worcestershire Sauce... Chop Suey Sauce
GLASER, CRANDELL CO., Chicago 8, Dept. E6

FIRST AID FOR CLEVER COOKS

Lilla was both annoyed and amused. "I said he was a hero, did I not?" Wanting to change the subject, she spoke to her father. "Did it go well, the pushing?"

"Already it is second nature," said Mr. Torvik. "Also today I spoke to Doctor Horla. Delightedly he accepts the invitation for our celebration. A very great man. So democratic."

"Nobody makes questions about my experiences," Georg complained, pouting a little.

"The dessert," said Mr. Torvik, "is always saved for last. Come, Graino, the experiences. The heroic with you is commonplace. We expect it."

"Me," said Georg, "I am today taken into membership at an American school. I am laughed at, which is natural. Also I am okay. After school they place stones in my shoes, after which I must put them on and run until I catch somebody. This is customary. It hurts my feet, but I finally catch a boy. They then pat me on the back and say I am okay. When they pat me, it gives me a beautiful feeling. I am liked!"

Jan Torvik tousled his son's hair. "Graino, disappointing performance is not in you. Please, humbly and with respect, I beg you not to call me Graino."

"It is said only with paternal affection."

"Papa, even with paternal affection, don't say it."

When all was quiet, and the lights put out for the night, Lilla lay on her mattress with her eyes open. It was unbelievable that the others could not hear the loud pounding of her heart. Staring up into the darkness, Lilla prayed: Make him to have the position he seeks, Heavenly Father. Make him soon to find it. Only, dear Lord, make him not to find it too soon, because then it will be that I may never see him again.

She felt little and lonely as the morning went by and he did not come. The bench in the employment agency made her bones ache, and each time the door opened her hopes would rise, only to be disappointed. He is gone, that I know, she thought. Not even will he remember me.

Finally the white-haired lady sent for Lilla. "Tomorrow morning report to this address. A person named Miss Jackson will give you a costume to put on. Then she will show you what to do. Good luck, Lilla. And let me know how you make out."

"Thank you very gratefully." She took the slip the lady handed her. The anticipated elation at securing a position was missing. She could not help it.

LILLA was strangely silent that night. In the morning she reported to the address on the piece of paper. It was a large restaurant. The person named Miss Jackson did indeed choose a stiffly starched blue-and-white costume for her to wear, then brought her into an immense kitchen faced by a huge metal wall. Into this wall were fixed hundreds of little cabinets containing an infinite variety of foods.

"All you do, Miss Torvik, is to watch for the doors to fly open on the other side where the customers are. You merely keep replacing the items in the empty ones from these tables. Is that clear?"

"Yes, clear, thank you."

While she worked Lilla tried to console herself with the thought that she could now help to support the family, that she could go to school and become truly Americanized. How happy I am, she sighed mournfully. How nice it will be when papa and mamma learn that I am working at so splendid a job. Her ankles ached a little when the day was over and she changed back into the dotted crepe.

At the employees' entrance he was waiting for her.

"Hi," he said matter-of-factly.

"Chick!" The name came out because for so long it had been on the tip of her tongue.

"I just had to find you and tell you. At first that old dame at the agency wouldn't give me your address, but I finally wormed it out of her." He grinned. "I guess we both did some wholesale rootin' for each other, huh? That same night they sent me a telegram to my room to report to this big outfit downtown. And here you are with a job too! Like it?"

"Yes, thank you."

"I ——" He handed her another stick of gum. "Well, I just had to find you and tell you."

NEITHER of them knew what to say next.

"I'll walk to the corner with you," said Chick at last.

At the corner Lilla held out her hand. "Good-by. Good-by, Chick."

"Good-by," said Chick. "It sure was swell, the way things turned out, wasn't it?"

"It sure was swell," said Lilla. She turned her dark eyes up and tried to smile. "Good-by, Chick."

"What way do you go?" he asked.

"I live upon Third Avenue."

"Say, I'm going that way myself. My room's —— Would it be all right if I took your arm?"

"Of course," said Lilla.

They walked in silence through the busy streets of the city.

Finally Lilla said, "I think I like us to say good-by here, Chick, because my family is very poor yet in America and we live in not too nice a block."

"But —— All right, Lilla."

It was the first time he had said her name. It sounded like a hundred violins singing through her chest. "Well—good-by."

"But can't I see you again?"

"Do you want to, Chick?"

"Sure. You can tell me how you like it in your new job, and I'll tell you about mine. How about tomorrow night?"

"Tomorrow night."

The next evening, at dinner, Lilla casually mentioned that she was meeting her acquaintance of the employment agency.

"So soon you are falling in love, Lilla?" said Mrs. Torvik.

"Who falls in love?" Lilla involuntarily raised her hand to her chest.

"Everyone, sometime. But it is not proper to have friendships in the street. If it is the right kind, bring him to the home that we may look on him."

"But, mamma, I —— This clean-cut American, what will he think? It is yet so poor we are. Maybe he misunderstands about papa being a subway pusher. I am ashamed that he should come to our home without furniture in it."

"Ashamed of papa? Ashamed of our home?" Mrs. Torvik put down her knife and fork. "Is this what you call being Americanized? Better we should have stayed in Europe!"

"Now, mamma," said Mr. Torvik soothingly. "Is nothing to become excited about. A girl, it is natural to be sensitive. Once we were young, too, Sada."

"Never was I ashamed of my parents."

"How can you talk so, mamma?" cried Lilla. "I ——" Suddenly she burst into tears.

(Continued on Page 147)

Return

By Stella Weston Tuttle

Hushed lies the meadow,
Mute lies the lane;
Someone beloved
Is coming again—

Someone approaches;
See how the fern
Shines where her sandals
Casually turn

Into our valley;
See how each stem
Trembles at knowing
The touch of her hem.

Lovely as morning,
Light as the deer,
She pauses on tiptoe:
Summer is here.

Baking makes the difference

Heinz oven-baked Beans

57

Packed with energy and real old-fashioned flavor

Ready to Heat, Eat and Enjoy!

"you can't beat STEEL for porch furniture"

and this label means the steel is good

Steel is in a class by itself. No other material combines strength, long life, usefulness, and good looks to an equal degree. That's why steel is better for porch furniture, shutters, window sash, and scores of other uses in your home. And when you buy any article made with steel, be sure it bears the U·S·S Label. Then you'll know you're getting quality steel—backed by all the engineering skill and manufacturing knowledge of the world's foremost steelmakers. The U·S·S Label helps you get your money's worth.

LISTEN TO ... the United States Steel Radio Show every Sunday evening. Consult your local newspaper for time and station.

UNITED STATES STEEL Subsidiary companies: AMERICAN BRIDGE COMPANY • AMERICAN STEEL & WIRE COMPANY
CARNEGIE-ILLINOIS STEEL CORPORATION • COLUMBIA STEEL COMPANY • CYCLONE FENCE DIVISION • FEDERAL SHIPBUILDING & DRY DOCK COMPANY
NATIONAL TUBE COMPANY • OIL WELL SUPPLY COMPANY • TENNESSEE COAL, IRON & RAILROAD COMPANY • UNITED STATES STEEL EXPORT COMPANY
UNITED STATES STEEL PRODUCTS COMPANY • UNITED STATES STEEL SUPPLY COMPANY • UNIVERSAL ATLAS CEMENT COMPANY • VIRGINIA BRIDGE COMPANY

(Continued from Page 145)

"Now see what comes," sighed Mr. Torvik.

"I'm sorry, papa. I"—Lilla dabbed at her eyes with a handkerchief—"I didn't mean. He is so—so well bred, the handsome American. I only feared he might think we were ignorant foreigners."

"Dear Lilla," said Mr. Torvik, "that is what we are—ignorant foreigners. Better it should be to ask him here, whatever may happen. Mamma is right. Street friendships are not proper. Love does not flourish in dark corners."

"Papa, no one says he has love. Only interest, to know about each other's jobs."

"Then let the interest be healthy and without shame. Invite him that he should come to dinner on Saturday and observe the good fortune that is ours."

They sat on a park bench. Stars appeared in the sky as darkness fell. "Lilla." He pronounced the name strangely.

"Yes."

"I think we're falling in love."

Her heart contracted inside her. Gropingly she reached out for his hand.

"Is it all right, Lilla? Do you want it to happen?"

"I want it to," she whispered.

"Only I think it happened to me a long time ago."

"To me it happened when you offered the gum and wanted us to cheer for each other."

"Are you happy?"

"What can I say? It is like a thousand violins singing through my body. It is all the music that was ever played going on inside me. Yet, I am afraid."

"Afraid?"

"My papa ——" She swallowed. "We are poor and ignorant foreigners." A sigh escaped her. "On Saturday night we are making a little dinner for Doctor Horla, our sponsor in America. Maybe it is better that you should come then and see what we are like before—before ——"

"I—all right, Lilla. I'll be glad to come if you want me to." He grew silent, as though there was something he wanted to say and could not.

Saturday afternoon Lilla and Mrs. Torvik worked on the blue gown.

"Mamma, I can't wear it. I can't!"

"What foolishness is this?"

"Suddenly it becomes old-fashioned in my eyes. So old-fashioned and European it looks. Mamma, I am afraid. Is like a hard rock inside my chest. If the American looks down on us, my heart will break. Never again will I have love. Mamma, don't make me wear it."

Mrs. Torvik slipped it on over Lilla's head. "Now you are a woman, and beautiful. If you have love, the time for childishness is past. Ai! Here is papa with the wine."

"Red wine!" cried Mr. Torvik, holding aloft two large bottles. "With roast a red wine. Does Graino return yet with the glasses from the ten-cent store?"

"Already," said Mrs. Torvik. "He is now upon a mission to acquire another chair from our next-door neighbor, Mrs. Markoff."

"Papa, I am so nervous I die little deaths inside me. Ugly I look in my gown, I know. What shall I do? What shall I do?"

"Do nothing, darling Lilla." He went to her and drew her head upon his shoulder. "So much we have been through, never losing the courage."

"I know, papa. But the strength can only stand so much. If I lose the American, I think I would not like to live."

Mr. Torvik stroked her hair gently. "Let us see what God wills. If ——" A knock sounded on the door.

Doctor Horla and young Williams arrived almost simultaneously. There was a little period of uncomfortable strangeness at dinner, which Mr. Torvik exerted himself to overcome with politely suggestive bits of conversation and much pouring of claret wine. Chick seemed deliberately to keep his eyes away from Lilla.

When the meal was over, Doctor Horla smiled at his protégés. "Torvik, I have a pleasant announcement to make." The doctor turned to Chick. "Are we curious people to you, Mr. Williams? Do we act like foolish peasants but lately transplanted to a new soil? Allow me to observe that this young lady's father is a respected historian, with several standard volumes to his credit. Come, fetch me a light for my cigar, Graino."

Chick looked down at his plate.

"A preface, my good friends. A little build-up, as we Americans say. Lately it has come to my ears that an excellent

The Notion Counter

By Elizabeth Metcalf

MY FRIEND pulled the old dust-writing reprimand by scrawling her maid's name in the dust she found under her small daughter's bed. The next morning the maid was indignant. "You misspelled my name!" she complained. . . . Your small son will be both intrigued and impressed if you toss off to him the information that most trains that run east in the United States have even numbers, those that run west have odd numbers. . . . Remember how long hair crackled when you brushed it? There are other nice sounds around the house: clothes being plunged into thick suds; apple biting; sheets flapping on the clothesline; batter beating; the closing of a thick book; a zipper's zipping; and the wind around the corner when it means business.

My friend now has a daughter at Sarah Lawrence. But she still thinks she was a pretty smart bride because she spent her last unmarried sixty seconds doing knee bends in the church vestibule. Then her knees didn't crack audibly when she knelt at the altar. . . . The most thoughtful doctor I know holds a child's tongue down with a lollipop when he takes a look down a small throat. . . . My cousin drives moths mad by putting up her sweaters for the summer. She "cans" each sweater by sealing it in a mason jar.

An eyelash curler has a practical side. A long-lashed husband will find that a good crimp with a curler will keep his eyelashes from rubbing against the lenses of his glasses. . . . Have you ever tried a few drops of angostura bitters on your grapefruit, or on a lamb chop?

"Boy, oh boy, I'm sure going to be a minister when I grow up!" he said when he got home from Sunday school. "Just an hour's work on Sunday and you're all through!" . . . I never tire of the way the second phone is answered when my morning call to the grocery is pushed on. "Meat market," says a cheery voice. "That handsome butcher speaking."

I resent the fact that I can't prick up my ears and turn one in a chosen direction, as so many talented animals can do. And how I wish I could shiver a small patch of my skin to flick off a fly while sun bathing, a gift possessed by any old broken-down horse. . . . The men will be delighted if they find a bowlful of plain, peeled hard-cooked eggs and a big salt shaker among all those dainty hors d'oeuvres.

Our town's most devoted husband pushes his car out of the drive many a morning, so the motor won't awaken his sleeping wife. . . . The teacher asked the children the meaning of the word "conquer." The example given: "When I get mad at my sister, I conk 'er."

A Bedroom... Bright and Beautiful

The charming 18th Century atmosphere of this beautiful Newport bedroom by Drexel is the result of perfect . . . balanced harmony. The rich, gleaming mahogany . . . the graceful Chippendale lines and the fine sensitive carvings blend together to create a room glowing with the finest traditional spirit.

For gracious living, plan your room settings around Drexel masterpieces. There are beautiful and practical collections to fit every budget. Each piece is carefully branded with the famous, "by Drexel seal." Ask for Drexel by name at leading department and home furnishing stores.

Write today for booklet, "Traditional Furniture by Drexel" showing various room settings. Send 10c to Dept. D to cover cost of mailing.

THE BRAND MARK OF SUPERIOR CRAFTSMANSHIP

by Drexel

Drexel

FURNITURE COMPANY

DREXEL ▪ NORTH CAROLINA

AMERICA'S LARGEST MANUFACTURER OF QUALITY BEDROOM AND DINING ROOM FURNITURE

Potato Salad – Party Style!
Dress it up with Durkee's Dressing

America's favorite salad takes on real party sparkle when it's dressed up with Durkee's Dressing. For this rich, golden dressing is a subtle combination of rare spices that works wonders on salads, whether it's used alone or in combination with other dressings. Try it! And for the final touch, add a dash of Durkee's Celery Seed. You'll relish its delightful tang!

Try this special Durkee Potato Salad recipe!

Boil 4 large potatoes in jackets. Peel; while warm, dice; add salt, pepper, 1 chopped onion, and ½ tsp. Durkee's Celery Seed. Blend ½ c. Durkee's Dressing, ½ c. mayonnaise; mix well into salad. Garnish with tomatoes. Write for other salad recipes and 10 salad dressing tips, Durkee's, Dept. LJ6-6, Elmhurst, L. I.

Want your family and guests to enjoy every last morsel of your cookies? Then for flavor and richness use Durkee's Margarine. Notice how much better your cookies taste! Durkee's is so mild, so sweet, so country-fresh in flavor. Smooth and perfectly blended, too. No wonder youngsters love it on bread—good cooks prefer Durkee's for cooking, baking, frying! This top quality margarine is famous for food value as well as economy. It's enriched with Vitamin A.

SO MILD.. SO SWEET.. SO COUNTRY-FRESH IN FLAVOR!

Durkee Famous Foods . . . Division of the Glidden Company
Other Durkee Favorites: Durkee's Spices Cocoanut . . . Worcestershire Sauce

private school for girls is in need of a history teacher. An invitation to take the position will be made to Jan Torvik in a day or two. Later, when the citizenship is granted, perhaps a position in a public school."

Mr. Torvik was dumfounded. "I am again to teach history?" He sat down limply in a chair. "This makes me to wish I had not eaten so much food for dinner."

When it was time to leave Chick said to Mrs. Torvik, "Would it be all right if Lilla came out for a little walk? I'll see that nothing happens to her."

Outdoors it was almost dusk. He seemed preoccupied and introspective. She followed along silently by his side, trying to lengthen her footsteps to match his. Unable to bear the suspense, Lilla said finally in a small voice, "Is it my dress, Chick?"

"Huh? Oh, yes. It's about the prettiest dress I ever saw." He turned his head and looked down into her wide eyes. "Lilla, I don't know how to tell you this."

"Tell me what?" She swallowed painfully.

"What I've been keeping from you."

"I don't understand. Is another girl?"

"Of course not. It's something I should have explained right away. I—I can't ask you to meet my parents, Lilla, or visit me in my home."

"You can't?" The words were almost inaudible.

"No. You see, I haven't got a home. I was brought up in an orphanage. Maybe your family wouldn't want you to marry a nobody like me."

"A nobody, Chick?"

"You must be pretty proud of a father like you have, being a teacher and all. I guess I acted kind of dumb the whole evening, but I was afraid of saying something wrong. I wanted them to like me. Do you think maybe they might come to like me after a while, Lilla?"

Lilla raised her head and gazed up into the starry sky. "Oh, Chick, is so beautiful the night. Never will I want to forget this moment, not so long as I live."

OUR READERS WRITE US

(Continued from Page 13)

nearest him and exhibits similar weaknesses as his own. He must also happen to have a little surplus calcium in his system.

The best source of calcium is milk. Bananas and raw turnips are also valuable. When a man has had from one to two quarts of milk a day, combined with other good food, he is qualified to choose a girl who will suit him for life.

But if he has been fed on candy bars and soft drinks, his supply of calcium is low. Then he must have the spicy, exotic, flashy, and his "love" doesn't last long.

The wife's charm and abilities have nothing to do with the success of a marriage.

Good food and a quart of milk a day for every boy would solve the divorce problem.

No, I'm not the disgruntled spouse of a badly fed husband. I'm a girl in my late teens, but these things seem to me to be perfectly obvious. Sincerely,

MARY WALD LANGDON.

Nothing New Under the Sun

Urbana, Illinois.

Dear Editors: A reader asks Mrs. Roosevelt if the quotation, "We have nothing to fear but fear itself," was original with the late President. The reply is: "It was an original saying, if there is anything really original!"

Henry D. Thoreau anticipated Mr. Roosevelt by eighty years. September 7, 1851, Thoreau wrote in his Journal: "Nothing is so much to be feared as fear."

Very truly yours,

JOHN J. REA.

Rural Children Need Education Too

Decatur, Mississippi.

Dear Editor: We read appalling things about the schools. Of adults age twenty-five or over, 3,000,000 have never been to school; 13 per cent have not completed the fourth grade. Schoolteachers are paid less than field laborers, charwomen, mill hands. Almost 300,000 teachers have left the profession since Pearl Harbor. Enrollments in colleges preparing teachers have declined 60 per cent.

I speak as a county supervisor of rural schools in a state low in statistical ranking as to educational opportunity, and frankly "the half has never yet been told." Even before Pearl Harbor rural-school conditions were bad. Then many teachers deserted for higher wages. City schools, stripped of teachers, turned to the smaller towns and skimmed the cream of their teacher crop. "Just send me a teacher, any teacher!" went up the desperate cry. Although the war is over, the cry still goes out. "It doesn't matter what she can teach. It isn't qualifications—it's a teacher I'm wanting!"

Today I am trying to work with teachers who do not have an hour of college training; teachers who are not as educated as the children in their classes; teachers using emergency licenses, who could not pass any form of teacher examination.

This is what I see as I go into my schools: Material on blackboards, written by teachers, with common words misspelled. Teachers who do not know how to perform simple operations in arithmetic. Teachers who use miserable English.

Mercifully, our teachers are not all like that! Some have stood stanchly by, shining lights in the darkest situation that has ever confronted our rural schools. But every teacher who takes into her hands the molding of the lives of a nation's children should be equipped with those qualifications essential to the best teaching.

May I paint a picture of a rural-school child of the United States of America, typical of hundreds of thousands?

He has a bright mind, but it does not function. When he started to school, about all he had ever known was an environment of hard work and hard living. In his schoolroom, the major part of the equipment consists of free textbooks, furnished by the state. A few backless, outdated readers make up his library. He has never seen a wall map, and his teacher has not bothered with the maps in geography. He has a scientific mind, and a science textbook, but there is no equipment through which to verify its statements. He loves to sing, but there has never been any music in his school. His reading consists of calling words. His teacher listens as he stumbles through it, probably unacquainted with its meaning herself.

Every thoughtful citizen knows that a child who attends a school where the average expenditure is only $40 per pupil is not getting educational opportunity to compare with schools where average child expenditure is $150. The child from the $40-a-year school is not merely a local problem. He is a universal problem and a nation's responsibility. This country has ample resources to provide an adequate education for every child. My rural child deserves the best school, an attractive building with library and modern equipment, a teacher well trained, resourceful and imaginative, the opportunity to develop wholesome attitudes and right thinking, and happy living. He is an American too. Sincerely,

MRS. MAUD W. HUNTER.

Sending Journals Abroad

San Francisco, California.

Dear Editors: I have just read your letter from Mrs. Eli Lund of Sandvika, Norway. Isn't there some way those of us who receive the JOURNAL regularly could forward our copies to her and others like her, who have been through so much?

Sincerely yours,

MRS. NORMAN ROBERTS.

The cost of postage for sending 12 secondhand JOURNALS abroad is at present about the same as the cost of a year's gift subscription. But readers who wish to send such a subscription to JOURNAL friends in other countries may send in their names for that purpose. ED.

Black's Eulogy On a Country Churchyard

The Duke's Cottage, Rudgwick, England.

My dears: It was a sad week. Mr. Humphreys, of the post office and village shop, died and was buried under a mound of daffodils. He was the strength and stay of the village, and ruled his shop with a rod of iron. He always looked a bit like an admiral on the quarter-deck, but he never got the way some folks did, as if they liked not being able to sell anything.

I have always thought I would hate to be buried in the cold, cold ground, but whenever I go to these country funerals I am not so sure. There is something very friendly about it, the neighbors in their tombs clustering around just as they did in life at a party.

Later. Mary and her baby, who I believe I once called Gentle Annie, to tea. What a child! At this early age it has discovered one magic word which will bring its mother instantly to its side, and get it removed from any boring situation without fail. And it makes full use of that word, and we none of us care to risk anything, although we know quite well it can't possibly mean it again so very soon. I had forgotten at how early an age guile is born in the human heart.

Later. Mary's Nigel is home on ten days' leave, before going off to Palestine. He won't be stationed at home again for years. It seems sad, when they love their little home, and one another, so much, but they are so good about it. Mary's next baby is due in August. He may get some leave to have a look at it before he is whizzed off again.

Later. We had a fearful thrill, with the return of Sales. There were one or two in London after coupon rates for winter coats suddenly came down. Women flocked madly, in a real old-time jostle, and for once there seemed to be something to buy in the shops. We are also slightly over-excited at the rumor that sheets and towels may be off the ration soon.

This is a season of moves. So many people have gone, and strange faces have suddenly appeared in the village, to be glowered at, in truly British fashion, by the Old Inhabitants. No one ever makes a move until the newcomer has been vetted by the Hon. Mrs. Cecil (and, I fancy, her butler Jackson). If passed by them, we advance cautiously. Why are we as a nation so timid, socially? This problem never seems to arise out your way. How I loved the easy friendliness to all and sundry, which never seemed to commit you to anything. Maybe it is because our island is so small, and it is less easy to escape the bugbear, once acquired. Whilst you-all can simply buzz off to Arizona, or Martha's Vineyard.

My love to you all,
DOROTHY BLACK.

Journal Gives Her a Complex

Pryor, Oklahoma.

Dear Editors: Your magazine gives me the most amazing inferiority complex. Dorothy Thompson, first, with her sane, sensible, efficient articles on world affairs. Next is your fashion section with pictures of smooth, salubrious young ladies with shining immaculate hair and impeccable complexions.

Ann Batchelder! Alas, I am undone!

Since I became a mother, I've ventured into the social whirl but once. I attempted to aid my sister-in-law when she entertained the Young Baptist Matrons' Study Circle. At 4 in the afternoon, L. hit J. in the nose with a baseball bat. J.'s nose bled all the way across the front hall, sitting room, bedroom, bath. By 5 P.M. the nosebleed was stopped, the house remopped. At 6, N. broke out with hives and 102° temperature. At 7, I, who had been sent to the rented locker for refreshments, discovered to my horror that "Str B" stood, not for Strawberries but for String Beans.

Marcelene Cox always gives me that frustrated feeling; I'd like a literary career myself. Gladys Taber's descriptions are uplifting, stimulating. But dear heaven! It is obvious the woman has an overactive thyroid. Just reading about her accomplishments leaves me inarticulate.

All this, dear editors, and Eleanor too. Honestly! INAPT ANNIE.

(Mrs. John Wesley Sturges.)

2 grand breakfasts from this ONE grand cereal!

1. Families start humming "oh what a beautiful breakfast" when they see this one! — Sun-goldened Nabisco Shredded Wheat, surrounded by rich cream and topped with luscious, red strawberries. Tempting — hearty — and as nourishing as a "cooked" cereal. Remember, Nabisco Shredded Wheat is wholesome whole wheat — steamed, shredded, baked.

2. A sugar-saver that will send cereal bowls back for more. Crumble Nabisco Shredded Wheat, add cream and honey. M-m-m what an eye-opening breakfast to set before the family. Remember, these are just two of the many ways you can serve Nabisco Shredded Wheat, the truly versatile cereal. For the original Niagara Falls product, ask for Nabisco Shredded Wheat.

The cereal you can serve a dozen ways

One of the many fine foods baked by Nabisco
NAtional BIScuit
COmpany

EARLY AMERICAN Friendship's Garden*

A Cool and Perfumed You
—ALL SUMMER LONG

The romantic bouquet of Friendship's Garden Toilet Water is cool and refreshing as perfumed rain, and even more so when followed by a fragrant cloud of the Dusting Powder. Toilet Water 4 oz. 1.00 and 8 oz. 1.75 Dusting Powder 1.00

SHULTON
Rockefeller Center, New York

America is the Story of Individual Achievement

Prices Plus Tax *Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

STILL PROUD TO BE A TEACHER

By Mary Eleanore Grant

THEY say we teachers are doing a poor job. In our grade schools, they say, we beat tom-toms and mold candles and call it teaching American history; in high school many of the boys and girls are simpletons, so confused from twelve years in public school that we teachers should hide our heads in shame. Our poor darlings think Stonewall was Old Hickory. They aren't sure whether Jefferson Davis or Thomas Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence. And some 1012 out of 2216 can't think what is the capital of Maine.

Well, for eight and one half years I have been teaching, and I am still proud to be a teacher. At our school United States history is taught—in the high school and in junior high. I know, because I am the teacher. Each morning I drive nine miles to my school. In my mind are plans for the day. I wonder if it is to be a good day or an almost-good day. I hope it will not be a bad day.

A good day means that the children will be tolerant with one another and with me. It means quiet halls, orderly lines, clean floors, sociable study, and during lessons an atmosphere of good will.

A bad day means that the children will be edgy with one another and with me. It means noise that you can't put your finger on. It means malicious little notes protruding from girls' books. It means boys and girls staying in at recess. A bad day comes seldom. It is the almost-good day I expect.

The air in my room is faintly suggestive of chalk dust, peanut-butter sandwiches and boys' sweaty gym shoes. I water my flowers, raise the shades and see to the radiators. I lay my lesson plans on the desk and wait.

Most of the children arrive in a hilarious mood. I see once again Tom's unwashed face, Jane's long braids, Susan's red coat with dog hairs all over it. I hear, too, the dragging slide of Kitty's lame foot on the stair steps. I see Bill toss on my desk a salt bag of coins. I watch him write "$10.56 payed, Bill" on the blackboard under War Stamps. As I count pennies, nickels, dimes my desk litters with a real Japanese bill, last night's homework, a bottle of toothache medicine and a note from Ray's mom.

School begins. We start with a Bible story. We have arithmetic, and I dare to hope that Dot at last understands division. We have geography. We progress from lesson to lesson. In history we study about the battle of New Orleans, but Bill can think of nothing but Japs. He tells us again of his brother's shooting down nine planes.

At last it is dismissal time. The children march from the building and I return to my desk. It has been an almost-good day. The children learned. And Susan wrote a beautiful two paragraphs on dogs. I gather together the countless papers on my desk, placing Susan's composition on top. It is heartening to have a Susan in the class. As I look back, I can remember many Susans.

That is why I cannot understand the criticism of our graduates. There must be something solid back of our good sailors and soldiers and marines. Surely our boys and girls have proved themselves in war plants and hospitals and colleges.

It should be remembered that the average eighteen and nineteen year old is not yet mature. He can fight for his country, yes. He can work at a job that is part of the war. But he is too immature to care greatly for such things as historical background, good music, proper language and conduct. For the typical young person of today is full of the jitters; he resents culture. More than once I have heard a student apologize for an A grade. It was something he had to minimize in order to rate with his gang.

How well we teachers know the stress laid upon the modern child. For the material we are receiving each morning from the homes is not quite up to the mark of some years ago. Children are no longer so pleasant to teach. Too many comic and movie magazines accompany the child to school. He seems tired, in need of rest and a wholesome breakfast. In his pockets jingle too many dimes, quarters and fifty-cent pieces. He eyes his schoolbooks and teacher with resentment. He wants entertainment.

Parents are fond of saying that children are more "free" today than they used to be. Then the parents look with question at the public schools. But school discipline depends on more than the efficiency of teachers. There are such things as home background and parents' attitudes to consider.

Take the radio, for instance. To whom do children listen most frequently on our national hook-ups? The strident voices of men and women who act well the part of nitwits. Gorgeous, glamorized exciting nitwits. They brag about their own school failures. They roast teacher unmercifully. Our top radio comedians insult one another. They make petty, malicious remarks. All this makes a good show for adults, but the effect on children is different. Some of us teachers wonder why parents don't find more suitable entertainment for their children.

If our graduates do not appear to do well in their postschool exams, look for more than one source at fault. If we err, correct us—but with good manners, if you please.

Only yesterday I sat in a restaurant and heard a man rant against schoolteachers until I could not drink my soda. For more than an hour he quoted and misquoted some article he had read. He repeated quips his ten-year-old daughter had made about her teacher. I was not amused. My friends smiled at me and said I did not look much like a schoolteacher. I was supposed to be mollified.

Well, I am still proud to be a teacher.

"But this isn't the kind of 'man's woman' I thought you meant!"

Bachelors . . . but not for long! Nothing like American women. No colors like Revlon "American originals" to idealize American beauty!

PHOTO BY JON ABBOT

Greatest catch of the season! Revlon's new color

"Bachelor's Carnation"

NAIL ENAMEL • LIPSTICK • FACE POWDER

A capricious carmine with a tender passion!

Spring really happened . . . the moment "Bachelor's Carnation" made its bow! Now it's the first color of the land!

Plucked from the heart of his carnation . . . it turns siren on your matching lips and fingertips.

There's beauty thrill in "Bachelor's Carnation" face powder . . .

incredible stay-on thrill in everything Revlon.

"Toast of the town" packages!
"Bachelor's Carnation" Match Box Set 1.75, Face Powder 1.00, plus tax

COPYRIGHT 1946, REVLON PRODUCTS CORPORATION

AMERICA SAYS: "They're Terrific!"

THE GREATEST ZENITH RADIOS EVER BUILT

New Cabinets, Speakers, Tubes, Circuits!

Yes, everything about them is brand new clear through. That's why America says these new Zenith Radios are "terrific"!

And we agree—they're the greatest instruments we've ever built. Every one unsurpassed in performance, beauty and value.

Whether you buy the lowest-priced Zenith table radio or a big radio-phonograph console, you get quality and features found only in a Zenith. That's because Zenith concentrates on RADIONICS EXCLUSIVELY!

Visit your Zenith dealer today for a demonstration.

ZENITH RADIO CORPORATION, CHICAGO 39, ILLINOIS

Shown above, Model 12H092R: Genuine Mahogany 18th Century console with Cobra Tone Arm . . . Silent-Speed Record Changer . . . New 2-Band FM . . . standard broadcast . . . shortwave.

With the
NEW COBRA TONE ARM

The Sensational New Way to Play Records

Only Zenith Has This. Reproduces tones on a Radionic wave—no needles to change. Brings out full musical beauty for the first time. No annoying hiss, scratch or rattle. New "Floating Filament" rides lightest in the groove—⅔ of an ounce. Records last hundreds of plays longer. You can drop the Cobra, even press down and scrape across records—nothing's harmed. So revolutionary that radio stations use the Cobra to broadcast records.

World's Fastest Record Changer

Only Zenith Has This. New "Silent-Speed" record changer gently, quietly, smoothly changes records in only 3½ seconds. Plays 10 and 12 inch records mixed—automatically. No complicated gadgets to set or fuss with.

New 2-Band Static Free FM

Only Zenith Has This. New "Perma-Tuned" FM. It's the genuine—not imitation. Holds stations razor-sharp in glorious static-free reception for all FM channels.

ZENITH LONG DISTANCE RADIO

18th Century Mahogany Console. Features Cobra Tone Arm, Silent-Speed Record Changer, two FM bands and standard broadcast. Model 9H0884.

Table Model Radio-Phonograph. Automatic record changer and crystal tone arm. Wavemagnet. Walnut, Mahogany, Bisque. Model 5R086.

Modern console. Cobra Tone Arm, Silent-Speed Record Changer, two FM bands and standard broadcast. Walnut, Mahogany, Bisque. Model 9H079.

Plastic Table Model Radio. Folding handle, super powered big set Consotone, Wavemagnet. Choice of Walnut grain, Black, White. Model 6D015.

Transoceanic Portable Radio. Standard broadcast plus 5 international short wave bands. Plays on trains, planes, ships, AC or DC current or long life batteries. Model 8G005Y.

30 YEARS OF "KNOW-HOW" IN RADIONICS EXCLUSIVELY!

COPYRIGHT 1946, ZENITH RADIO CORP.

IF YOU WANT TO KNOW WHAT A MINISTER HAS TO PUT UP WITH, ASK A WIFE WHO OWNS ONE

OFTEN, in the early years of my marriage, I was asked this question: "Well, how do you like being a minister's wife?" It was as if we were things set apart like gems in Tiffany's window or, according to the point of view, freaks in a circus. I have only one answer: "I like being this clergyman's wife very much and I haven't tried any other. After all, I married a man and not a profession."

Nevertheless, I do think that the wife of any professional man, to a certain extent, marries his profession also—just as we all marry, to a certain extent, the families of our husbands. As in everything else in life, I like some things about this, and some things I dislike. Let's look at the latter first in the ascending order of their importance.

I dislike not ever having quite enough money. We have to figure out whether to get bicycles for all three children or send to camp the one who needs it most. We have to choose always between the several things, none of them wildly extravagant, we want to do. And we always will have to choose. We'll never be able to say, "Wouldn't it be fun to take the children up to New York for a couple of weeks—so educational, you know?" and then do it. We even have to decide whether to have roast beef or chicken this week, for we can't have both. I don't believe we appreciate the chicken any more next week. I would like them both this week.

I don't like to have people say that the ministry is an easy job, with nothing to do except on Sundays. The clergyman and the doctor are probably the busiest two people in town. My next husband is going to be one who has a nine-to-five job and a five-day week. I once said to my husband, "Why work so hard? You won't live so long that way." His reply was, "If I worked twenty-four hours a day to the end of a long life, there wouldn't be time enough to do all there is to be done." And there echoed in my heart, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"

I dislike the boors—like the one who said, "You're careful, I see, not to excommunicate those who give a great deal of money." Of course he didn't know what he was talking about, for we don't excommunicate anybody. They disassociate themselves from the Church. The Church yearns for her children and wants and urges them to return to her at any time they wish. And yet she does not run after them. Our Lord, you will remember, looked on the rich young ruler and yearned for him; but there is no record that He ran after him to bring him back. The gospel of Jesus and His Church must draw people because they want and need something outside themselves more powerful than they are; and no lure or coaxing will accomplish this result.

I dislike in churches the volunteer help that welshes on the job. In the average parish, the clergyman is largely dependent on volunteer help. Often it is loyally given under inconvenient circumstances, and he is most grateful for it. But almost as often Mrs. Jones calls to say that her seventh cousin has caught cold and so she won't be able to do the work as she promised to do. And she does hope it will be all right. And if the Rev. Mr. Husband should say that "No, it won't be all right—the whole plan will fail without Mrs. Jones' part," Mrs. Jones is as likely as not to hang up in a huff and never darken the church door again.

So friend husband does the polite thing and tells her that he is awfully sorry about the cold (which is true) and that it is perfectly all right (which isn't true). And where does that leave the dear rector who has carefully laid out plans, organized them with care, launched them with enthusiasm and seen them frustrated? Well, the clergy seem to be made of sterner stuff than most of us mortals. They see businessmen carry through plans with the benefit of paid help or know the reason why not. The clergy must work with volunteers and never question why if the plan goes sour.

And, oh, I dislike the "holier-than-thous" who draw their figurative skirts aside while they say, "Go to church? With all those hypocrites? Why, just look at Mr. So-and-So in your church. He drinks like a fish and yet he goes to church. Why he goes, I wouldn't know; perhaps for show? Anyway, I know he can't mean it." But the clergyman has seen in this man a person who has put up a magnificent fight against well-nigh overwhelming odds. It has been a greater fight than I trust I shall ever have to make, for I am not at all sure that I should do as well. What do such commenters think the church is—a band of saints singing psalms for the sinners? Rather it is a band of sinners seeking help, some of whom have humility enough to cry, "Lord, have mercy on me, a sinner." I suspect that such people are merely rationalizing, giving themselves a reason for not being church people. Some remnant of their ancestry feels more comfortable if they can explain a little. Well, why not be honest and stop hiding behind a subterfuge? I have no quarrel with those who, with honest sincere conviction, find that they cannot accept God. I am sorry for them; for such a conclusion often leads to perplexity, cynicism and despair. There is a better way. But they are honest, and I will take them in preference to those who make the frailties and imperfections of church members their reasons for not going.

And I dislike the chronic objectors, the always-on-the-opposition-bench kind. I don't mean the tradition-respectors; I mean the tradition-bound, the good-enough-for-grandpa-good-enough-for-me kind. They are as bad in their way as those who think everything new is good because it is new.

But I dislike most of all the gossips. I don't mean the news dispensers. Everyone is interested in the latest romance or the newest baby. I dislike the malicious gossips, the talebearers, the prejudgers who, without knowing all the facts, run across the street to Mrs. Jones and around the corner to Mrs. Brown and up the road to Mrs. Smith, saying, "Have you heard ——" "I've been told ——" "They say ——" until their buzzing is heard from one end of town to the other. Not long since I talked at length with a young minister a very few years out of the seminary. He had come out, as most of them do, filled with a consuming desire to do all he could to advance the Kingdom of God on earth. Slowly the unkind gossip, the carping criticism, the petty intrigues are breaking his heart. As he told me about it, a little of my heart broke for him. I am certain that he has made mistakes. I am certain that he will make more so long as he tries to take positive action forward. But mistakes can be corrected by the exercise of Christian charity.

The gossips don't irritate me—they sadden me. All groups of any size have them, but they seem particularly out of place in a church. The Christian Church is a fellowship of love whose members have chosen to follow Jesus—to try to be like Him. Can you imagine the gentle majestic Jesus sidling up to Peter, saying, "By the way, have you heard the latest about John?" Then scurrying to Andrew: "Don't quote me, but I've been told that James ——" Then rushing off to Philip: "They say that Bartholomew ——" Jesus could be righteously indignant; but first He knew His facts and then He spoke directly.

Gossips cause sorrow and heartache, but in the long run they do little harm. Soon or late, each of us becomes known for what he is, and our words are valued accordingly. I have never yet known a talebearer, a malicious gossip—and one cannot be for twenty years the wife of a man in a semipublic position without having known several gossips—who was not, soon or late, hoist on his own petard. "With what measure ye mete it shall be measured to you again." The ancient truth whose modern version is "Chickens come home to roost" forever holds true. Nor have I ever yet known one who was not at heart an unhappy, frustrated person.

Finally, I dislike the fact that, as a rule, one in the ministry can make few intimate friends. The clergy have few roots in places. A clergyman and his wife cannot have the friendships which are apt to come when grandparents and parents and children have all lived in the same community. Then, too, our leisure time does not coincide with that of other people—we of the ministry, I and my husband. We are busy on week ends and holidays when others are free. Nevertheless, I do have on my desk at this minute letters from three friends in widely separated parts of the country, and each one represents a friendship that has endured in spite of separation. And yet we do miss the closeness that would come if they were here.

My attitude toward the people represented by some of these dislikes has gone through five stages. The first was fear. I feared their gibes and I hated being ridiculed. Then I progressed to pity. These people do not see how much of themselves they reveal. Thirdly, I was amused and I still am. The sight of people setting themselves up as authorities on subjects of which they know little has its elements of humor—albeit cruel humor, I grant. And of course there is probably no subject upon which people are more likely to set themselves up as authorities than on religion. Next, I was contemptuous. Who did these people think they were—setting

ONLY BY HIGHWAY

you'll find America so thrilling, so friendly!

Following U. S. Highway 1 along the New England Coast, you'll see many a lobster fisherman with his boats, his traps and brightly painted floats.

● The colorful, the curious, the friendly things that make America so fascinating are found in the fullest measure along its highways. There you'll meet them close up, at first hand . . . and in congenial company.

You'll see these exciting things and places most intimately, enjoy them most keenly, when you travel by Greyhound—for Greyhound alone follows the great highways of every one of the forty-eight States, reaching far up into Canada and down to Mexico.

It isn't just scenery that makes Greyhound one of the World's greatest carriers of passengers. Greyhound's daily schedules are usually far more frequent than those of other transportation . . . they serve not only all the big cities, but the thousands of towns and communities in between. In a world of rocketing costs, Greyhound fares remain amazingly low.

Today, Greyhound buses are comfortable, well-ventilated, many of them fully air conditioned. In the days to come, expect further striking innovations in Greyhound travel, more than keeping pace with U. S. highway construction and modernization. And remember—by Highway means by Greyhound!

. . . . and only by
GREYHOUND
you'll fully enjoy each scenic mile.

THESE GREYHOUND ROUTES SERVE ALL
This Amazing America

GREYHOUND

themselves up as monitors over an organism which has lived two thousand years? But that is all passed, except for some inward amusement, and I am now in the final stage of my thinking about them. I have come to excuse them. They simply do not know. And if they do not know, they cannot be held to account. I admit it still rankles in my soul when someone implies that the Church caters to the rich. After twenty years of marriage I can still say that I have never known my husband—never once—to have an ulterior motive. If anything, he neglects the rich to spend more time shepherding the poor.

But our life is not made up entirely or even largely of entries on the red side of the ledger. Maybe we don't have much money, but we have enough. After all, a surfeit of material possessions does blind people to spiritual values. We need only to look around us—and not very far at that—to see that money does not make happiness. I would not like to be poor and have to see my children undernourished or with clothes so makeshift that they were marked as apart from their fellows. But keeping up with the Joneses is a great waste of time and energy in a race you can't win. The Bible says, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God . . . and all these things shall be added unto you." That's true and it works.

I like the fact that a clergyman's work makes for a busy, many-sided life. The minister should have knowledge in many fields. He must be a better-than-amateur psychiatrist. He must, if he is to succeed in interpreting the message of Christ in a modern day, have at least a working knowledge of social trends. He must know how to get along with people—must be a man of sympathy and understanding. He should be a good administrator. He should be a good speaker. In fact, I know of no other profession whose members should be such all-round men.

I like the thoughtful kindly people who make life a constant joy. They are like a broad deep river flowing quietly, steadily onward toward its goal. Many people do many things which warm your heart. I remember the Sunday on which the first every-member canvass took place after our coming to our present parish. My husband arrived at the church at seven A.M., held three services during the morning, and stayed there until ten that night. It never entered my head that he might get hungry during that time. But we have a dear sweet person who lives near the church who not only thought of it but did something about it—she brought over his dinner complete!

Then there was the vestryman who asked us all to lunch on the day we moved in—and continued the invitation for all three meals for five straight days! I could go on and on about people just being kind and thoughtful to their minister and his family. Most of those who are interested in the work of the church are unbelievably reliable, too; good workers who give of themselves unstintingly.

I LIKE our wide contacts. On Monday night we dine at the Muchmoneys'. The women are beautifully gowned, the service is faultless, the menu exhaustive—from terrapin through guinea hen to chocolate soufflé. Tuesday night we dine with the Havelittles. The menu is meat loaf, cabbage salad, cornstarch pudding—all put on the table at once. Do I enjoy both these parties? I do. I have learned from these valuable contacts that the worth and integrity of Henry Havelittle and Mortimer Muchmoney are the same; and the prospects of a good time are as great in one place as the other.

I like so many things—we both do—that we can't help having a lot of fun. We like the theater; music—all kinds; good talk; baseball games; books; the ocean; a game of bridge, if we can play it with a couple of good friends whose game is about like ours—incidental to the companionship.

I like thinking back over some of the funny things that have happened. I have chuckled for twenty years over something which happened that long ago. As a young bride I was fair game for all peddlers who came to the door. I bought everything. Finally I gave myself a pep talk and decided to buy nothing. One day the bell rang, and on opening the door I found an old man there with a basket of grapes. "Good morning," I said. "I don't believe I want any grapes today." He replied, "Don't you? They're very nice grapes." "I'm sure they are, but I won't have any." "I think you'd like them," he urged. At this I became exasperated and said quite crisply, "Maybe I would, but I have a whole grapevine in my garden, and besides, I don't want any grapes!" He just looked at me—and then it exploded on my numb brain that this was old Mr. Tubbs, a parishioner from the country, bringing me a gift of a basket of grapes! Oh, horror! Oh, despair! I gasped out my apologies, asked him in, and we had quite a visit.

Slander resembles counterfeit money. Many people have great scruples to coin it; but little to pass it along.

It is easy to tell one lie: hard to tell but one.

I LIKE most of all the way of looking at life which being a clergyman's wife has brought to me. The most important thing in life is the living of it, and our point of view in this is of primary importance. Many people say, "Eat, drink, and be merry—for tomorrow we die." The Christian says, "Eat, drink and be merry—for tomorrow we live!" I see life as a continuing thing, beginning at God, the source of all life, continuing in this world and continuing after this world; with me a child of God Who loves me; Who will work out His purpose for me. In other words, I have a philosophy of life common to practicing Christians everywhere, which makes it impossible for me to be defeated by anything which may come to me. Misfortunes come—that is the way of the world, and at times a pretty rotten way it seems. But the Christian sees that these misfortunes are not life's meaning—are not God's will, as is so often said. He who has come through trouble triumphantly can say with our Lord, "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world."

If I am looking at life, I must also look at death, for death is a part of life—an incident in it. I see a good bit of people whom death has touched, and I cannot help but wish that more of them knew, and felt, the message of Jesus about eternal life. Those who do know it have something which ever death cannot take from them. The life eternal goes on here and now with us and keeps on going, uninterrupted by death.

Now the natural sequel to this philosophy of life is that I have no fear of anything which may come to me, for these things cannot touch the real me. And if I have no fear it follows that I have peace and poise and serenity.

The rewards of the minister and his wife are largely intangible. I cannot buy the rugs for my upstairs that I have needed for some time. But here is a mother who comes into the office and literally sobs out her gratitude for the interest the church has taken in seeing that her boys are kept off the street and given some spiritual training. Here is a man who comes in and says that if it weren't for you he would be dead now. He goes on to say that he stopped in church—his last stop, he thought, before jumping off the bridge; and the unfolding there of his possibilities in life made him change his mind.

The clergyman deals much with people whose burdens are too heavy for them to bear. He has his own troubles and those of literally hundreds more. And he cannot share those troubles with any living soul. More than other men, then, does he need a home of rest and fun, a wife who encourages him, loves him, is not irritated with him when he seems preoccupied. How often she fails him she alone knows.

WHAT A JOB—being bridesmaid for my sweet but scatter-brained cousin!

A few days ago, I thought I'd never get her down the aisle. And on top of everything, I found she hadn't bought a thing for her linen closet!

"Darling, you help," she begged. "Here's some petty cash—could you pick me up some sheets? 'Course, I couldn't begin to afford anything as luxurious as the dream sheets you have, but I do need something . . ."

Uh-huh—I helped. And returned shortly with my best canary-feathers smile—and the smoothest, softest, whitest sheets a gal could touch fingers to!

"Behold!" I beamed. "Lovely, long-wearing Cannon Percale Sheets—twins to mine! What's more, you get some change. Cannon Percales put de luxe sleeping within anybody's reach!"

Grateful? You never heard such cries of joy! And ever since, she's been telling chums, "You must come sleep on my divine sheets—Cannon Percales! You'll see how smart I was to pick 'em!"

TRADE MARK MADE IN U.S.A. CANNON

My own true-life experiences

As an engaged gal, I quizzed all my young-married friends about sheets. Found 'em living blissfully with lovely Cannon Percale Sheets—the sheets that reconcile percale tastes and slim pocketbooks!

As a bride, I puffed with pride about my own lovely Cannon Percale Sheets. So smooth, so sweet-sleeping. Woven of special long-staple cotton. So fine that they have 25% more threads per inch than best-grade muslin sheets!

As a housewife, I'm enjoying my Cannon Percales anniversary after anniversary. (A budget-minded gal—or any other kind—does appreciate wear!) And Cannon Percale Sheets are so light—make bedmaking and home laundering heaps easier!

Another real Cannon value—Cannon Muslin Sheets! Well-made, long-wearing!

Cannon Percale Sheets

Cannon Towels • Stockings • Blankets ★ CANNON MILLS, INC., NEW YORK 13, N.Y.

Longer Life FOR GAY COLORS WITH AMAZING COOL-WATER IVORY SNOW

NEW! DIFFERENT! ...It carries protection a step farther

No other Soap Like it!

Ivory Snow is the only soap that is both

1. Ivory-mild
2. In quick-sudsing granulated "snowdrops"!

Follow tested directions on the box! Don't waste wonderful Ivory Snow—it's made of vital materials.

99 44/100% Pure

A gay deceiver . . . her one-piece frock with the two-piece look! She'll keep its rainbow brightness lovely longer with Ivory Snow! Different from cake soaps . . . newer than flake soaps . . . Ivory Snow's quick-sudsing, Ivory-mild "snowdrops" burst into instant suds in lukewarm water . . . even in cool water! Safe suds that are kind to colors and fabrics, that carry protection a step farther than soaps not Ivory-mild! Here's longer life for fine washables! Wonderful Ivory Snow!

Longer Life FOR PRINTS, NYLONS, RAYONS, SILKS

Out of the West

Harold E. Stassen is the Republican Party's $64 question. Three times honored as governor at home, three times decorated at war, his political horoscope points well beyond the borders of his native Minnesota.

★ ★ ★ BY J. C. FURNAS ★ ★ ★

"RED" STASSEN—the pale carroty hair that gave him his campus nickname is starting to disappear—came out of six years of university as broke as any other kid who earns his way through. The Minnesota campus figured young Stassen had a future, but few, not including Esther, his piquant half-pint wife, ever picked him for the political Paul Bunyan that he has become in a very few years. At twenty-three he was county attorney, stepping out of the office routine to midwife local settlement of a seething milk strike. At thirty-one he was governor, moving in on the Minnesota Republican Party and roundly defeating the formidable Farmer-Labor Party that had held the state for four increasingly corrupt and violent terms of office. At thirty-three he was keynoter of the Republican

★ HOW AMERICA LIVES ★

Stassen is happiest when "something serious comes up and he has to figure out an answer." Keynoter of G.O.P. National Convention at 33, one of key delegates at 38 to San Francisco conference, backers contend he meets issues with a veteran's wisdom, a young man's drive.

ACME

National Convention—the first time in history that a man not yet old enough to be President held such an assignment—and floor manager for Wendell Willkie. At thirty-nine, after two and a half years of active duty at sea, he has joined millions of other American ex-servicemen in readjusting to civilian life.

Harold Stassen grew up in the kind of house that is full of rocking chairs—chunky rockers, skinny rockers, old-timey rockers, Mission rockers. The moment you sit in one, its balanced bracing of knees and back feels like home. The fruit piece on the dining-room wall features watermelon, and the kitchen often features lemon pie. The outside is weathered, shingled and high-shouldered and surrounded by the forty acres, usually featuring cabbages, that brought in the cash that paid for the clothes and doctor bills involved in rearing five children, four of them boys who grew over six feet tall.

Though past seventy, his father, William Stassen, still raises apples and truck and resists suggestions that he owes himself retirement. A bulky bear of a man, who states things plainly in a solid baritone and doesn't look a day over sixty, he has been three times mayor of West St. Paul, local municipality on the outskirts of Minnesota's capital, and a pillar of the State Growers' Association. Mother Elsie Stassen, whose erect carriage and special way of smiling could be called queenly if that did not sound too formal, is now a grandmother twelve times over and well aware that her children turned out fine.

Married sister Violet, now Mrs. Rollin M. Crawford, had a good job as a secretary at the State House. Brother William learned the sheet-metal trade and is a foreman at the war-built Gopher Ordnance Works. Brother Elmer runs a grocery store in South St. Paul. Brother Arthur long drove a milk route and then moved over to a supervisory job in the state Petroleum Division. And Harold E. (for Edward) has been elected governor of Minnesota three times running and is now in a fair way to be a candidate for the Presidency of the United States.

All live within a mile and a half of the old place, and Sunday afternoons one or another son and family are likely to drop in to talk politics and crops with William while assorted children swarm on the sitting-room carpet with a miscellaneous collection of well-worn toys that grandmother keeps handy in a corner. When he is home, Harold observes this custom regularly along with his girlish-looking wife Esther (born Glewwe in Mound, Minnesota) and Glen and Kathleen, the grandchildren they have contributed.

Of late years, however, Harold hasn't been home much. For thirty months he served in the wartime Navy, most of the time as flag secretary to Admiral Halsey, finally getting a captain's four stripes on his sleeve. Since returning he has resumed the practice of appellate law—he argued and won his first United States Supreme Court case at the boy-wonder age of twenty-six—and has been traveling all over the United States to get back the feel of "Stateside." There is no indication that long-standing ## and a Back to Home Front Battles—

A man who upsets political probabilities, Stassen has fought against odds all the way. In a state where isolationism was time-worn campaign capital, his internationalism won votes; his labor legislation, following up bitter union-management battles, cut strikes 70 per cent. "For democracy to work," he says, "you've got to have leaders willing to risk a licking."

A man around the house is a luxury item for political families. Stassen likes to lounge about in tired sneakers, make notes for speeches, discuss merits of different kinds of pups with three-year-old Kathleen. Before press of official duties, he and wife Esther used to play golf, fish or shoot pheasants together, now reserve each other one free afternoon a week, occasional movies.

RYAN

nine, Glen Stassen can beat his father at chess, plans a three-ay career as poet, commando, and prospector for buried gold.

"My career picked me quite early in life," says Esther Stassen, who describes herself as "average housewife," likes to garden, do own marketing, take over in the kitchen.

NKACSI

Happy Wife and Kido

Sunday afternoons at the elder Stassens' are a three-generation affair. None of children lives more than a mile and a half from "the old place," which features all kinds of rocking chairs, lemon pie and a handy corner for toys. Conversation ranges from politics to crops to the latest antics of twelve grandchildren.

PHOTO BY MUNKÁCSI

A Family of Workers

WORK IS A WAY OF LIFE FOR ALL THE STASSENS, WHO HAD FARM-STYLE TRAINING FOR JOBS AROUND THE CLOCK.

speculation as to his chances as presidential timber have gone to his thirty-nine-year-old head. But, if there were any danger, these visits to his parents, keeping him in touch with their corrective aura of integrity and intelligent simplicity, should keep him from getting too big for his breeches.

As a matter of fact, he came back from the Pacific too small for them—thirty pounds underweight. Like many another returning serviceman's wife, Esther had to send all her man's pre-uniform clothes out to be altered. So far she has got five pounds back on him, feeding him up on such high-caloried favorites of his as home-baked beans, creamed potatoes and lemon pie made as near like his mother's as another hand can manage. Harold never lacked appetite. It took lots of raw material to develop his long-boned six-foot-three frame so early that, at fourteen, he could take full charge of those forty acres when his father had a year of illness. Nor did he ever lack the industry implied. He made juvenile pickings out of raising rabbits and skunks—for fur, not perfume—and running a roadside vegetable stand. When it was time for college, the necessity for earning his way through, if he went at all, spurred him into more extreme activity. To keep the required funds rolling in for undergraduate and law schooling, he greased pans in a bakery, punched an accounting machine, acted as sleeping-car conductor on excursion trains and, at the same time, managed to be all-time Big Man on Campus at the University of Minnesota.

Student government, ROTC, oratory, debating, fraternity piled up on him so high that, legend still insists, Stassen had to install a fraternity brother as secretary. He was also a champion rifle shot, once hanging up a perfect score that, by definition, can never be surpassed. This might have significance. To collaborate with a rifle in such accuracy, you have to be nerveless and concentrated, loose as ashes and yet a connoisseur of the right split-second. As a young politician, Harold Stassen has been a man of nerve but no nerves.

Esther Stassen can't remember when she didn't know her husband. Their families had always been friends, and it's her family's grocery business that Elmer Stassen now owns. While she was working during his college years as stenographer-secretary in various St. Paul law offices, she decided Harold was "the kindest person I ever saw"—as articulate a reason for falling in love with a big, able, gentle youngster as you could expect to get.

Their marriage date coincided nicely with the Wall Street crash of 1929 that sparked the Great Depression. The newlyweds were unaffected—they lost nothing, Esther says, because they had nothing to lose. Matters sharply worsened when, as his frenetic expenditure of energy in college finally caught up with him, Harold came down with a touch of lobar tuberculosis and had to drop his law career before it was well started. Esther helped pitch in the office with his partner while Harold went to work on this menace as resolutely as he later attacked the state budget, reducing both with equal success. Rumor sometimes leaves him with only one lung—erroneously: the Navy does not take a one-lunger, however able, and place him under fire on the bridge of a warship at Empress Augusta Bay. At thirty-eight he was a delegate to the United Nations Conference at San Francisco, where newspapermen voted him one of the two outstanding figures on the scene, along with Australia's Evatt. Esther went out to be with him during the proceedings and saw him operating not only on the conference floor but in the small committee meetings where the real work was done and where Stassen's virtuosity as a catalyst and solution finder proved most.

"I never was so proud of him in my life," she says. "He's always happiest when something very serious comes up and he has to figure out the answer and then make it work." She would not go the length of saying he never misses, but she probably believes that in her heart.

THE young fellow had earned his San Francisco assignment. Six years ago he left his party popeyed with astonishment by getting elected governor a second time in spite of unequivocal attacks on isolationism in a state where isolationism was supposed to be politically indispensable. This emphasis on youngness means something besides precocity. "I'm all for Harold Stassen," a St. Paulite told me last winter, "because all the young people seem to be for him." Though his ethnic background is largely German—Elsie Stassen was born in Germany and William has only admixtures of Czech and Norwegian—this forthright yea-sayer with the Eisenhowerish countenance was out ahead of President Roosevelt himself in his opposition to isolation. Four years ago he devastated the probabilities again by pocketing the governorship a third time in spite of a frank campaign announcement that he would resign and enter the Navy within a few months of inauguration.

He did not have to enter the armed services. His position as official keyman of an important state was ironclad "essential." But, he said, the war had to be fought by young men, and in uniform was where he belonged. It was obvious the Navy had recognized that Minnesota's loss was its gain when Captain Stassen's boss, Admiral Halsey, acted as introducer for his former subordinate at a New York dinner last spring.

Stassen's brothers are infallible pipelines into current public opinion. William earns around $3000 yearly as sheet-metal worker, is foreman at Gopher Ordnance Works. An A. F. of L. union member, his reports on views of the labor front have firsthand veracity.

Violet Stassen Crawford can't remember when she hasn't shared a job with her brother. He hired her at 12 for a dollar a day to help run his roadside vegetable stand, later found her equally indispensable as secretary who didn't know meaning of overtime.

PHOTOS BY GEORGE MILES RYAN

Conducting a new streamliner's an honorary job when a man gets to be governor. But Harold Stassen can remember earlier days when punching tickets helped earn way through college. Other professions included greasing bakery pans, selling turkeys won at local shoots.

One of Elmer Stassen's first jobs was hauling ice off the frozen Mississippi. Now he puts in 65-hour week running his own grocery store in South St. Paul. He buys all produce he can get from his father "because there's always good stuff in bottom of baskets."

On their 40-acre truck farm west of St. Paul, the William Stassens have lived by crops and weather since 1899. When boys were home, they kept pigs, cows and chickens, often netted about $6000 yearly. Past 70 now, they plan to ease off a bit, raise flowers, "drive all around country."

RYAN

Teamwork's a habit for elder Stassens. Sharing farm chores has meant time for "extra" activities, including William's 40-year tenure as treasurer of State Growers' Assn., three-term stretch as mayor of W. St. Paul. Elsie belongs to Ladies Aid, is veteran campaign worker.

Approximate Stassen Household Budget for 1942

| | |
|---|---|
| Payments on home | $1500 |
| Taxes | 550 |
| Insurance, savings account | 950 |
| War Bonds | 200 |
| Food | 775 |
| Clothing | 750 |
| Medical expenses | 290 |
| Fuel and electricity | 291 |
| Phone | 84 |
| Household help | 1050 |
| Family car | 180 |
| Church and charity contributions | 290 |
| Miscellaneous | 90 |
| Salary as Governor | $7000 |

State allowance against official expenses

| | |
|---|---|
| Travel | $1500 |
| Entertainment | 900 |
| Total | $2400 |

Mrs. Stassen explains: "1942 was our last reasonably normal budget year. When Mr. Stassen went on active duty in the Navy in April, 1943, our income decreased sharply and a joint economy budget with my mother and sisters, who lived with me during the war, was necessary. With the resumption of his civilian status and the development of some immediate income through lecturing and writing, we are now increasing our budget again to replenish depleted wardrobes and some refurnishing and remodeling of our home. But we have not yet established a definite annual postwar budget."

Realization of how things had changed while he was away came swiftly and dramatically to Stassen last November when he hit San Francisco on the homeward trip. His first move was naturally toward the long-distance telephone, and after he had talked with Esther a bit she put young Glen, now nine years old, on the phone. Anybody peering at the captain through the phone-booth glass would have seen him visibly jump, as if at unexpected shock. "Hello, son," he had said to the telephone and it yelped back:

"Daddy, can you play chess?"

The last good look daddy had had at the boy, he had barely started in grade school, and here he was in fourth grade, tackling the most intellectual of games and counting on daddy to steer him right. Kathleen, too, had doubled her height while he was out in the Pacific.

In prewar days, when the kids were as little as their daddy remembered them, Esther stayed home while Harold was away politicking. Now, to catch up, he wants her with him as much as possible. So she asks one or another of her family—she has eleven brothers and sisters—to come and ride herd on Glen and Kathleen while she goes along in Bedroom B, Car 168, or Seat 19, Car C, while Harold adjusts his length as best he can to the space allowed by designers in Seat 17 at her elbow.

It was a rugged program this spring: Steubenville today; Cincinnati tomorrow; Washington next day; Pittsburgh the next; Akron the next; Washington again and then Buffalo, like a one-night-stand tour laid out by a madman. But this balding political prodigy of hers has a miraculous ability to sleep anywhere at any time—five minutes or ten hours, in plane, car, train or bed, are all the same to him—and has stood it well. The results were in your morning paper: "STASSEN SAYS TRUMAN FAILS IN LABOR CRISIS" . . . "STASSEN SEES U. N. IN CRUCIAL ROLE" . . . "STASSEN SEEN ABLE TO INFUSE PRESIDENCY WITH VITALITY."

When speechifying, he uses his even-paced baritone well. Unlike most contemporary political figures, he actually prefers talking impromptu from meager notes instead of carefully writing out a canned speech for glib reading into the microphone. Though he writes well, too, his first instinct in treating international relations or labor readjustments is to go somewhere somebody will listen and then get on his feet and think out loud. But this spring barnstorming concerned not merely speeches and resulting headlines. Much more important was the opportunity to talk to people here, there and everywhere and find out what has been stirring in American minds since he went into uniform.

No reporter interviewing him can miss the fact—also rare among politicians—that he listens just as well as he speaks. That means ability to stay on a train of thought without fear of sidetracking. It is quite a thing to see him go right on discussing the United Nations in his own living room while, with long-practiced skill, skinning perky little Kathleen out of her leggings. Only when she falls down and bumps her head does he drop U. N. flat and devote himself single-heartedly to kissing the place to make it well, without any visible trace of self-consciousness.

There is no big-shottery about the home circumstances into which, with the "ruptured duck" duly in his lapel, this kinetic (Continued on Page 172)

Stassen always had a penchant for hitting the bull's-eye. Marksmanship hung up all-time state record, won him military honors in ROTC. At Minnesota, he was a crack member of university rifle team (second from left), which won three intercollegiate championships, one world title.

BORN JUNE 10, 1926, in upper New York City, Sandy Carleson grew from the neighborhood tom-boy into one of the prettiest models ever to smile at you from a magazine page. Already a 9-month-old Ivory baby when she posed for this portrait, it's only natural that Sandy grew up to be a famous Pin-up Girl!

SITTING PRETTY at the age of 4, Sandy took to posing like a baby takes to pure, mild Ivory Soap. Ivory has been her beauty soap right along. "I know more doctors advise it than any other," she says.

WINTER SPORTS have always been Sandy's dish—her Finnish ancestry gave her a head start at being an outdoor girl. Here she is at 10, having fun with her dog.

LOVELY SANDY CARLESON . . . AND HOW SHE GREW

GROWING LOVELIER every day, Sandy at 12 became a crack swimmer at the family bungalow in Gardner, Mass. And she knew even then that 'teen-age beauty begins with that Ivory Look.

AT 17, SANDY and her dog, Olaf, pose in Central Park. Informal pictures like this helped Sandy get her first modeling job! Now her ready smile, and her clear, fresh Ivory complexion, make her one of the most popular new models.

TODAY SANDY SAYS, "Since my face is my fortune, I'm never careless about keeping it fresh and clean. Don't you be if you want a softer, smoother complexion." It's never too late to change to regular, gentle cleansings with baby-mild Ivory. You can have that Ivory look, too!"

99 44/100% Pure
it floats

MORE DOCTORS ADVISE IVORY THAN ANY OTHER SOAP . . .

You'll adore it...this new Improved

POSTWAR★ARRID

No other Deodorant

stops perspiration and odor so effectively, yet so safely!

...As shown by our tests...

It's the improved deodorant you've been waiting for! The new, soft, smooth, creamy deodorant that gives you maximum protection against perspiration and odor with safety to your skin and clothes! We believe no other deodorant of any sort . . . liquid or cream . . . meets the standard set by this wonderful new Postwar Arrid for stopping perspiration and odor with safety!

For Summer Evenings

Glamorous clothes, more utterly feminine than you've worn for years! Fragile fabrics, to make you look like a delicate flower. More than ever you'll need Arrid's thorough protection. No other deodorant tested stops perspiration and odor so effectively, yet so safely! Smart women use Arrid daily.

★ All Postwar Arrid packages are marked with a star above the price.

WIDE, TIGHT MIDRIFFS are top fashion news! To accentuate their slimness, skirts are very full. But bodices are snug, with close-fitting armholes. Rely on Arrid to guard against perspiration stains. Arrid is shown by our tests to be more effective in stopping perspiration than any other leading deodorant cream!

Only safe, gentle Arrid gives you this thorough 5 way protection:

1. No other deodorant tested stops perspiration and odor so effectively, yet so safely.
2. More effective in stopping perspiration than any other leading deodorant cream. according to our tests.
3. Does not rot clothes. Does not irritate the skin. Antiseptic.
4. Soft, smooth, creamy . . . easy to apply. Greaseless and stainless, too.
5. Awarded the Seal of Approval of the American Institute of Laundering for being harmless to fabric.

39¢ plus tax Also 10¢ and 59¢

ARRID

...gives maximum protection against perspiration with safety to skin and clothes!

Some of the many Stars who use Arrid: Grace Moore • Beatrice Lillie • Carol Bruce • Barbara Bel Geddes • Jessica Dragonette • Diana Barrymore • Georgia Gib

Mother and Daughter PLAY DOUBLES

Every little girl would love to have a dress like her mother's—every mother loves the young look it gives her. Mrs. Stassen and Kathleen are closely kin to millions of mothers and daughters in their desire for these gay young clothes. Summer is the time for them, for vacations or at home, cottons the prettiest, and the favorite fashion—American as a picnic or an ice-cream cone. ★ BY RUTH MARY PACKARD

At home in Minnesota—Mrs. Stassen and Kathleen in twin dresses of pale yellow.

PHOTOGRAPH BY STUART DRAWINGS BY LEE LUNZER

ty in the yard—basque-style pastel cottons eyelet petticoat edging; matching ballet shoes.

fresh and starchy cool—pale gray chambray with cap sleeves, full skirts.

ner into fall—white crocheted weskits, t red flannel skirts, red leather moccasins.

Mornings in the garden—red, white and blue seersucker with coolie hats, Jac Sandler moccasins.

BILL:

Great Scott, Ann—why stop to clean now?

MRS:

Why not? It only takes a secon when your cleanser never leave dirt-catching scratches!

BILL: What a woman! Company coming minute, and she talks about dirt-catch scratches! Anyway, what's that got to with fast cleaning?

MRS: Everything, my darling crosspa Scratches are dirt-traps that make you sc If I used a gritty, scratchy cleanser y have something to worry about!

BILL: Well, I admit you polished up tub in a hurry. Guess I married a s girl after all.

MRS: Smart enough to stick to Bon It just slides dirt and grease away i time, and "hasn't scratched yet!"

BILL: O. K., sugar. I may not know about cleaning, but I do know you the prettiest hands in town!

MRS: You can thank Bon Ami for that pet. Cleans like a breeze—but doesn' a manicure!

US: Fine, white Bon Ami comes in both Powd and Cake form. Powder for sinks, tubs, p and pans, enamel stoves, refrigerators. Ca for making windows and mirrors shine.

Bon Am

THE SPEEDY CLEANSER

"hasn't scratched yet

assen and Kathleen arrange fruit at the little able where the children sometimes have lunch.

She planned it that way

BY JUDY BARRY

PHOTOS BY STUART

Armed with memories of things she hadn't liked in her previous kitchens, Mrs. Stassen planned this one herself, and it's charming. Less than perfect, she admits, but comfortable to work in. "Not too big, lots of view, lots of light, a friendly look" were her important specifications. It's nine by twelve feet, with a window wall, fluorescent tubing under cupboards and over the sink to light main work spaces. Enameled wood cupboards match creamy walls; blend with honey-beige counter tops, maple-sugar-brown linoleum; gay red curtains.

ere's a glorious seven-foot ead of working space between refrigerator and sink, with iously shaped drawers and a tted cupboard for trays below.

A tip-down bin offers soap flakes at just right height beneath the porcelain-edged sink, equipped with a spray for rinsing. Racks for tea towels behind ventilated doors.

The knife rack's position isn't entirely satisfactory, for knives sometimes slip down behind the range. Next time, she'd plan space for a wastebasket near the sink.

Best thought of all, Mrs. Stassen and Lorraine Hansen, her excellent maid, agree, was a plug-in phone for the kitchen. A great step-saver in such a busy house.

other of Mrs. Stassen's "musts" t has been a great convenience, mall folding ironing board in kitchen. There's an electric ner in the pleasant basement.

Strategically placed just inside the vestibule door is a sizable package shelf for incoming groceries or deliveries from stores. Tinned foods are stored just above.

"My greatest mistake," Mrs. Stassen admits. There's no place in the kitchen that will take a wall can opener, so it hangs way out in the back hall closet.

In winter, Lorraine hangs laundry in the big attractive pine-paneled basement playroom. Shining little metal line holders are decorative enough to be left up permanently.

ACCENT ON ARRANGEMENT

PHOTOS BY HAROLD FOWLER

Party bouquets such as this one add a gala touch to family rooms.

Mrs. Stassen's tea-table flowers follow the seasons and are exquisitely arran

Grooming each flower before using it is one of Mrs. Stassen's important bouquet secrets.

NOWADAYS, even busy women like Mrs. Stassen have their own flower gardens. Flowers for decoration, flowers for fun. "Bouquets do freshen up a room," she says. "And, if you want to give a party air to informal entertaining, just spruce up all the important spots with glamorous bouquets. A tea or a small dinner becomes so much more of an occasion when you use flowers for decoration." We agree with Mrs. Stassen all along the line and think that more and better bouquets make for cheerier rooms and happier living. Flowers are the one thing about a room that you can change constantly, and not only do they add variety to a setting you may be tired of, but they point up the seasons delightfully.

Garden flowers make the most charming bouquets for family rooms. First favorites are the annuals and their up-to-date hybrid cousins which parade from March to November in your own back yard, supplying you with marvelous blooms for every type of arrangement.

Garden flowers are individuals and naturally make personality bouquets with great charm, but out of season, when you must use cut flowers, these will need extra doing, as hothouse flowers look formal until groomed to your own taste. Flower arrangement is not an artistic gift so much as a technique which you can acquire just as you do other (Continued on Page 224)

BY HENRIETTA MURDOCK

Interior Decoration Editor of the Journal

Mix color and variety in garden-flower bouquets for the greatest charm.

BEFORE YOU BUY . . . COMPARE . . .

See Philco, the refrigerator with ALL the features . . .
lavishly equipped at every price . . . developed by Philco to bring you the finest refrigerator ever built.
See it . . . compare it . . . judge for yourself.

PHILCO

Famous for Quality the World Over

GO STEADY WITH-

Ginger!

Cast thirst aside and sip care away . . . have a date with Canada Dry, the "Champagne of Ginger Ales." Revel in delicious tang and bubbling zest that are out of this world! Whenever you're thirsty, pick up your pep and perk up your spirits.

Go steady with ginger—Go steady with Canada Dry.

. . . You're heading for pleasure with Ginger . . . thanks to the Lloyd Liquid Ginger Process — exclusive with Canada Dry — a scientific method of extracting all the delightful flavor and the natural bouquet from the finest Jamaica ginger.

Enjoy the zip and zest of refreshing Canada Dry any time, any place. It's pure. It's wholesome. The economical large size bottle is ideal for home use and soon you'll be able to enjoy the convenience of the individual size bottle.

GO STEADY WITH—

CANADA WORLD FAMOUS DRY

"The Champagne of Ginger Ales"

As sugar rationing eases, Canada Dry Ginger Ale will naturally become more plentiful.

Copr. 1946, Canada Dry Ginger Ale

Chuck-wagon supper—back-yard style. Barbecued chicken and what goes with it.

PHOTOS BY STUART

IT'S THE AMERICAN WAY

BY LOUELLA G. SHOUER

THERE'S something about cooking and eating a meal outdoors that beats anything you can produce indoors—even if the menu is the same. Maybe it's that wonderful aroma of wood smoke, mingled with brewing coffee, or the sputtery sound of potatoes frying and steaks or chops sizzling on the grill. Whatever it is, you have an appetite like a lumberjack and your inhibitions are left in the house with the silver service.

Almost everyone now has an outdoor fireplace—the kind that are tributes to home designing, or tiny wire jobs for a back-yard corner. Placed near enough the house for toting baskets, yet far enough away for a change of scene, they'll guarantee, not only a picnic, but domestic miracles from the man in your life. For though he won't don an apron at the kitchen range, he'll get a real bang from being chef to a steak out-of-doors.

Men really blossom out as cooks when it comes to grill work. Whether you have a rock-bordered hearth out beyond the apple tree or one of those portable affairs that you trundle in and out of the house on occasions, give your menfolks all the gadgets they need and let them go to town on the grilling or barbecuing.

You come in on the planning and the indoor preliminary fixing. Play up to your chef's specialty. Keep the food simple, but have plenty of it. It's man-sized food you want. You'll be surprised what a party of eight can get away with.

How about this meal if his specialty is steak? It's a sure-fire hit for barbecue parties.

Barbecued Steak
Scalloped Potatoes – Boiled Corn on the Cob
(when in season)
Sliced Tomatoes, Cucumbers and Onions
Homemade Rolls
Apple Pie and Cheese
Coffee

Steaks are the big thing in this meal, and when there's a crowd waiting (Continued on Page 182)

Any man can broil a steak. Just give him a fire and plenty of makings. He'll do the rest.

Two ways to look at a Bride

. . . if you want
WEDDING and SHOWER GIFTS that will thrill her now and help her later!

1 You can take the romantic view . . . and see her always as a lovely young bride. And Pyrex ware is one of the most popular gifts for brides. This handsome Pyrex cake dish is grand for baking, serving, and storing all kinds of food. Saves on dishwashing. Better give her at least a pair for layer cakes! Each, only.. 35¢

2 You can take the practical view and remember she'll have a hungry husband to feed. Even if she's a natural born cook you can't give her a more inspiring present than Pyrex ware. And she can watch foods cook. The Pyrex utility dish shown above should be in every bride's kitchen. Grand for roasts, chops, hot breads and cakes. Two sizes. Larger size, only.. 65¢

LOOK FOR THE FAMILIAR ORANGE LABEL OR THIS TRADE-MARK PRESSED IN GLASS

"PYREX" IS A REGISTERED TRADE-MARK OF CORNING GLASS WORKS, CORNING, N. Y.

OUT OF THE WEST

(Continued from Page 162)

political force is readjusting himself. His law office in St. Paul's Pioneer Building is just another unostentatious businessman's suite. The Stassen home, built after years of zealous planning, is a one-large-and-two-small-bedroom job of one-maid caliber with some of the mortgage yet to pay. The only unusual things about it are Lorraine, Esther's smilingly competent blond maid, who came happily back to the old job after having done her share in a war plant; the thundering views of the Mississippi and distant St. Paul out of the windows of the big, blue-dominated master bedroom; and the contents of the garage, which makes the text of the current favorite Stassen family story:

Esther had an old Ford coupé and Harold had a chance to get her a splinter-new sedan for Christmas. She isn't quite sure just how the switch was worked right under her nose; but her Christmas present proved to be merely a pretty compact with a note inside saying there's another present in the garage too heavy to carry in the house—better go look. And lo, the old coupé was gone and in its place stood a sleek new gray job, exactly the way he had planned. Just another instance to Esther of the sureness of her husband's kind and competent touch.

When the house was aborning, she worked long and constructively with the architect to make the most of site and by no means unlimited pocketbook. Harold was governor then; but, at the time, the job carried only $7000 a year, in contrast with New York's $25,000 and Pennsylvania's $18,000. And the state's $2400-a-year allowance against discretionary expenses did not come within miles of covering the extra cost of holding down the assignment in expected fashion.

The core of all house plans was Harold's study, which had to be compact to save cost but also take in desk, typewriter, dictating machine, books and the boss himself, who, being the size he is, requires room. Esther also insisted on seclusion—the one place where the Stassens are isolationists is while Harold is working. During his absences, the mail stacks up alarmingly on that desk. A man saying and doing so much about important matters gets scads of mail and, crank or not, it all gets answered. That is good manners—and good politics too. When the stack gets too high, Harold's secretary sister comes over an evening or two to help.

Dark, demure and self-possessed, without a trace of pretentiousness, Esther Stassen protests there is no "copy" in her, since "I live just exactly the way every other married woman in this neighborhood does," and goes on to tell how, with practically every husband in this cluster of young marrieds away in uniform, the lonesome wives used to gather for hen-party barbecues at the Stassens' grill in the ravine back of the house.

Nevertheless, when the special angles of being an eminent figure's wife inevitably intrude, Esther is right in there pitching. During the last campaign, for instance, with Harold six weeks away by letter, press and party put her on the spot politically. She used her own judgment about dutifully sitting on the platform at Dewey meetings; but, when reporters wanted to know if that meant outright Stassen-for-Dewey, she said: "I never have spoken for my husband and cannot now." Which, said husband points out admiringly, was word-for-word exactly right—one more would have been a mistake.

She also took the social side of being governor's lady in stride. Since Minnesota furnishes no gubernatorial mansion to queen it in, such as more pretentious states do, Esther, unrepining, booked state dinners for distinguished visitors like the Duke and Duchess of Windsor, and the Crown Prince and Princess of Denmark, into a private club. Her own table, with just Lorraine in attendance, seats a maximum of ten and there isn't a trace of "Shall we join the ladies?" in the sunny, informally attractive Stassen dining room.

She sighs a little recalling how, in the early days, they used to get in golf or fishing together; he looks wistful, too, when speaking of the marvelous plethora of pheasants in South Dakota, where he used to go shooting. The best they can do now is a mutual compact to spend one afternoon a week relaxing together, and an occasional movie—though, since movie after movie was all the recreation Harold had in the Navy, he is pretty choosy about them now.

When his barnstorming fit is over, he will try to stay put more, figure out what kind of pup to get Kathleen for her birthday, do a few chores round the place, and earn more money lawing than comes out of the fees that occasionally dropped in from speechmaking. But, since he is also planning to help the campaigns of young and open-minded candidates who seem like right guys in this year's congressional elections—he would very much like to see a lot of fresh faces in Republican ranks next November—it looks bad for domesticity for some time.

Ask Esther Stassen to lay out the typical day in her household and she answers, with a wryly loyal smile, "Well, so far I should say a typical day since my husband got home would consist of catching a train."

"New York, New York. A Wonderful Town!"

FROM the rear end of the ferry, from the top story of a skyscraper, from any seat in the house, there's an exciting sight to see in the big city. Two pretty young visitors from Des Moines do the town: Broadway, the Bronx and the Barberry Room, with stop-offs along Fifth Avenue and 42nd Street. Take a NEW YORK HOLIDAY with Betty Jo Burton and Mary Jean Nesbitt

IN THE JULY JOURNAL

How America Lives

NEW IDEAS ON OLD PROBLEMS

(Continued from Page 25)

from the bargaining, while they are still on the job, you get very few strikes."

"In Washington," interrupted Bruce Gould, "labor is objecting to cooling-off laws as infringement of the right to strike."

"I don't see why," said his wife. "Take getting married. The law can require several days' waiting between getting a license and the wedding without really infringing on the right to get married."

Mr. Stassen grinned at her approvingly, a way-back grin.

"Labor did object on those grounds at first," he admitted. "Labor leaders were dead against the law and so was management. Management wanted extreme, punitive legislation, and labor wanted a Little Wagner Act. Still, we early found that when we were putting the new law into effect, we got real support from the rank and file of labor. And by now a tremendous respect for the count-ten law has developed."

"I'm always afraid of our American tendency to oversimplify," said Bruce Gould, frowning a little at his cup. "Isn't there more than that to Minnesota's success?"

The approving grin came his way this time. "Naturally," said Mr. Stassen. "There would have to be. After all, there are no teeth in the thing. If the state hasn't he parties to agree by the end of the ten irty days, the strike can go right ahead." eatrice Gould dropped the words "com- ory arbitration" into play and got in- t results. Elbows on table, head for- d, Mr. Stassen made it very clear that nt-Ten's skirts were clear on that score:

I am thoroughly against compulsory tration. How do you enforce a com- ory finding? Enforce it against man- ment and you may destroy a business. certainly take away management's retionary rights. Enforce it against or and you have to use either strike- ker tactics or work-or-jail threats. h mean just one thing: democracy has n thrown out the window. Getting parties to agree to arbitration and to k to the arbitrator's finding is fine— voluntary arrangements should be uraged. But compulsion to arbitrate to accept the finding is both unfair impractical."

Ir. Stassen pushed his chair back, laid napkin down on the table and cocked a leg confidentially over his knee.

"Out there," he went on, "we often ap- nt conciliating boards to work on in- dual disputes. Only they differ from the sident's fact-finding boards, which repre- only the public. Ours have one member n local labor, one from local manage- nt—and the third is a rank outsider, pur- ely recruited from another part of the e altogether."

ruce Gould nodded, seeing where that ussion was headed. Stassen developed ixing his guest with a shrewd eye:

That way two members are well posted local situations and the third brings in side perspective. Picking the right third is important: lawyer, insurance man or t not, he should have had plenty of ex- ence in dealing with people and have n active in his own community. But find- him is not too hard. And results do show well."

Reports I've seen of the results," said eatrice Gould, "looked very good to me."

They have been fine," said Mr. Stassen ply. "I guess Minnesota was the only e in the country where busses all kept t on running during the Greyhound Bus ke. The drivers stayed on the job while situation was worked out during the ling-off period. For that matter, Minne- steelworkers did not go out either until thirty days had elapsed. And all through war Minnesota man-hours lost through kes were far lower than the national rage. In the period before the count-ten , they had been far higher."

HE waiter, apparently as interested as a rge Bernard Shaw servitor in this kind of , had taken a long while to clear the le of everything but cups and fresh pots offee. But now he was all loaded up and his way, forgetting only a tray of rolls haned on the mantelpiece next to a pink bud in a skinny vase. Mr. Stassen gave the start of a grin and a flap of the hand t said, very cordially, both thanks-a-lot take-it-easy. Then he dropped that hand k on his ankle and looked at his guests in e of another question.

Bruce Gould was thinking out loud again. ou seem to feel," he said, "that labor and nagement can't afford to think of them- ves as members of two armed camps, but Americans mutually interested in economic social progress. In a country as well off this, there's no reason why they shouldn't together if given a sporting chance."

That is right," said Mr. Stassen. abor, management, stockholders, con- mers are fellow citizens. On that fact have built the world's most successful nomic system."

Inquisitively Beatrice Gould looked up m fresh coffee. "That Minnesota law ust have even more to contribute," she gested. "How does it handle the open- -books problem, for instance?"

"The power is there," the ex-governor d. "The boards can subpoena people or ords. But they have never used the power. The companies have always willingly supplied anything asked. It strikes me that current implications about sinister management secrecy have been most unfortunate. Actually, our economic system makes public voluntarily far more information about management than any other I ever heard of. It is surprising how much any financial researcher can find out just by going to the available record."

"What would be your idea of why management was so reluctant to open the books in the G.M. dispute?" asked Bruce Gould.

"I can guess," said Mr. Stassen cheerfully. "They probably suspected that the next thing would be labor's trying to question amounts set aside for reserves, or whether building a new plant would be advisable—fear of interference in kinds of decisions to which management should have sole right."

"I'd like to know what you think about profits too," said Beatrice Gould. "Would you agree with management's statements about profits being none of labor's affair?"

"No," he replied categorically. "Labor ought to share in profits, so they are definitely labor's business. Profits should go three ways: to capital, to the consumer in reduced prices, and to labor, which has a large hand in creating them."

"BUT what about huge salaries for management? I know income taxes whittle down a five-hundred-thousand-dollar salary to perhaps seventy-five thousand, but a good many people seem to feel that nobody can be worth all that."

"In general there should be no limit on individual earnings, although"—with a twitch of a smile—"there might be arguments as to whether a given man was earning his pay. I think the truth is that huge salaries for top executives often amount mostly to formal recognition that they are outstanding in achievement. Of two corporation presidents, one getting three hundred thousand dollars a year and one two hundred thousand, the difference in net cash held on to is not much in proportion. [The actual difference after taxes is the difference between $52,000 and $43,000. Ed.] But the feeling that goes with it is definitely of greater recognition for the three hundred thousand dollar man."

Going back to his World War I days as a Navy flier, Bruce Gould suggested, "It's like the scrambled eggs on the admiral's hat," and, getting a "That's right" from the ex-governor, proceeded to bring up the most uncomfortable subject of all: "Some Congressmen want unions controlled under Federal restraint-of-trade laws, as management already is." Stassen looked straight ahead of him like a baseball pitcher studying the plate—then almost visibly pulled down his cap, wound up and delivered the ball in the exact spot he had planned:

"Unions definitely should be under restraint-of-trade laws. That was implicitly recognized in the recent Supreme Court decision that exempted them. But"—bearing down on this pitch—"it does not follow that unions should be weakened. Without strong unions you cannot have healthy management-labor relations. Any other approach, particularly efforts to break or weaken unions, can lead only to industrial chaos."

Beatrice Gould also displayed the family habit of thinking out loud: "A stronger union which no longer has to fight merely to stay alive does stand a better chance of developing responsibility."

"That is right. That is only one angle of these things that is inadequately understood. We all need to know much more about the backgrounds that produce healthy labor situations. We need thorough studies of industries and unions that have been most successful in labor-management peace and high production. The spotlight is always on the places where strikes occur and the bricks are flying, not where frictions are reduced without destructive conflict. That is why I have urged the National Association of Manufacturers to make

V-8 Vegetable Juices

Wakes Up Your Taste

for "Fresh Vegetables"

As you lift your breakfast glass of V-8* Vegetable Juices, think of the quantity of fresh vegetables pressed to supply that single glass! Taste V-8 . . . and its good flavor tells you that each juice adds its seasoning accent to the inimitable V-8 juice combination. Serve it daily to the family, especially to growing children, because V-8 supplies fresh-vegetable nutrients so temptingly, and economically.

Juices of

Lettuce · Spinach
Beets · Tomatoes
Celery · Parsley
Carrots · Watercress

Deliciously Combined

Contains Vitamins A, B1, C, Calcium and Iron.

* V-8 is a trademark owned in the United States by Standard Brands Incorporated; in Canada by Standard Brands Limited.

Ask for V-8 at your food store, fountain and restaurant.

Housewives Everywhere Say —

Thousands switching to amazing New 5-Second G. Washington!

■ It's true! Housewives everywhere are discovering that the NEW G. Washington's Instant Coffee—made in just 5 seconds—is as delicious as the finest ground coffee they ever tasted! And no wonder! Because G. Washington is pure coffee; 100% coffee—with no dextrins, maltose or dextrose added! And G. Washington has been in the business of making delicious instant coffee for over 25 years! Just add hot water to one-half teaspoonful! There's no coffee pot . . . no grounds to bother with.

COSTS NO MORE

Best of all, G. Washington costs no more. The 2-oz. container is equal to a full pound of ground coffee! Say goodbye to complicated coffee-making. Get the New G. Washington's Instant Coffee at your grocery or delicatessen store today!

THE NEW G. Washington's INSTANT COFFEE

A PRODUCT OF AMERICAN HOME FOODS, INC.

such studies. Naturally, it will take ingenuity and imagination to develop unions that are strong without being dictatorial ——"

"I thought we would eventually get round to talking about James Caesar Petrillo," said Bruce Gould. His grin went round the table like a rueful infection. "Can Government do anything in that line?"

"Something," said the ex-governor. The thrust of his long legs had now pushed his chair even farther from the table. The merest further touch of relaxation would undoubtedly move him to tip back on its two hind legs—not a good idea for this by-no-means-sturdy little period number, matching the suite's somewhat finicky furniture, and never built for so much man. "Legislation can at least help. It could require periodic election of union officials by secret ballot; and public financial accounting, which some progressive unions now do of their own accord; and plebiscites of union members on whether or not to strike ——"

"That might imply Government supervision of the voting," said Bruce Gould.

"It need not," said Mr. Stassen quickly. "Government should not try to do everything, but keep to essential functions. Such votes within unions could parallel ballotings in corporation elections of directors. The Government does not supervise those either, but any stockholder—or union member—who thinks his rights have been overridden could always go to court with the facts and get redress by proving his case."

In the next room a secretary's typewriter started clicking busily and then the phone rang and shut off in the middle of a peal. Bruce Gould lit another cigarette on the principle that, now Mr. Stassen, too, was thinking out loud, it would be a pity to stop him. One finger of the latter's big white hand was thoughtfully tracing a rib in his wool sock.

"In my view," he said, "the single thing worse needed is better human relationships between management and labor. Some managements tend to take the position that, once the shop is organized, they need deal only with union officials. Some unions make the mistake of encouraging that narrow attitude. It is true that smaller corporations can work out warm boss-worker relations more easily than big ones. But that is all the more reason why the big companies cannot afford to neglect this angle. I would like to see the front office taking lively interest not only in working conditions in the shop, but in their men's housing troubles and in the quality of the local schools. I would like to see a kind of personal-contact sampling made among the men every two weeks or month—managers sitting down to dinner with ten employees picked at random to talk over anything and everything that would help mutual respect and understanding."

"I LIKE the sound of that very much indeed," said Beatrice Gould. "Are companies doing those things now?"

"Not precisely those things," said Mr. Stassen. "But there are a thousand ways of getting at it. Take the Northern Ordnance Company out in Minnesota—that was a huge war plant run by a man named Jack Hawley who is a combination cheerleader and engineer, and good in both jobs. If he found that his stream of men going home after a shift were being bottlenecked at a certain bridge so they were always late for supper, he was right there with pressure rerouting and traffic-control plans to remedy matters. He arranged with a garage to have men patrol the plant parking lot, and whenever they found a flat tire, they jacked up the car and fixed it free of charge. Jack found that, after his boys had worked ten hours they did not want to have to wrestle with a flat before they could start home to relax. And always on the spot was a tow car and a mechanic to make free repairs and get going any car that would not start—in a Minnesota winter that was a great thing and really appreciated. There was never any doubt that Northern Ordnance, for all its size, was interested in human beings."

"WITH that kind of thoughtfulness," said Bruce Gould, "it would be hard for the men to stay angry at management very long."

"That is right," said Mr. Stassen. "But you cannot formulate how to do it. You have to want to do it and go on from there, suiting what you do to local conditions. The same thing is true in most labor-management problems. Now take the matter of union restrictions on productivity ——"

"You mean bricklayers," said Beatrice Gould, "forced by union rules to lay only so many bricks a day regardless of how much a skilled man might lay?"

Harold Stassen nodded. He was plainly talking about things that he had been pondering for a long time, working with what he had learned from long discussions with union leaders and members back in the days when Count-Ten was a hazardous experiment.

"Practices like that are shortsighted," he said. "But back of them often is the veteran workman's fear—often justified—that he will not get a year's worth of work. The answer is the annual-wage idea, such as the Hormel packing plant have worked out successfully, might help a lot. But the way to find out if it will help is to try it with union co-operation in some local community. I can't see any single thing as the over-all panacea. The background and conditions of each industry, the length of time that its workers have been organized—that has a lot to do with workers' attitudes—the nature of the product and its market must all be taken account of in experiments that when they succeed locally, can be applied elsewhere."

Bruce Gould had more on his mind. He was to cut labor in on profits, for instance; and what about fair ways to get individual workers more pay for better work; and, if the governor felt inclined to discuss Republican politics a little, that would be interesting, to say the least of it. But, as he had half reached for the matches, his coat sleeve had pulled away from his watch and he saw the hands were crowding eleven o'clock. One of those telepathic glances common among husbands and wives passed across the table, and Beatrice Gould rose.

Coming up from his chair, Mr. Stassen was suddenly very tall again, loose-hung without clumsiness. Beatrice Gould is not the tall side herself, but she barely came up to his chin as he helped her with her coat.

"We had a good talk," said the three-time governor.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Love Dawns

By Eleanor Alletta Chaffee

Love dawns for some with the slant of banners waving Fairly in sun and wind, with sound of drums.
Oh, a festive day it is for such as these
When their love comes!

Love dawns for some with the threat of wet winds blowing
In from the east where lowering thunder hums.
Oh, it is a promise of but cloudy weather
When such love comes!

Love dawns for such as I like a far bird singing,
Knowing the hovering hawk: his martyrdoms,
Since time began, as certain as the doom
That with love comes.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Swift's Brookfield Eggs

Quality protected from farm to your food store

vift's Brookfield Butter

The taste appeal of every meal is better with Swift's Brookfield Butter

At that mellow moment

. . . when natural flavor is at the fullest, Swift begins the blending and processing of the cheeses that go into Swift's Brookfield Pasteurized Cheese Products. Swift protects this Flavor-peak deliciousness at every step. The result is utmost uniformity. Thus, whichever one of the many Swift-Brookfield Cheese Products meets your particular taste, you'll always be able to have that very same peak flavor. So—whenever you buy cheese, remember to say "Swift's Brookfield, please."

Swift's Brookfield

BUTTER, EGGS AND CHEESE

DDT Will Get 'em, But—

By Jerome Feiner and Eleanor Resnick

To most civilians, the advent of DDT on consumer markets spelled a magical end to the cockroaches, bedbugs, flies, ants and other pests that plague the average household. Manufacturers and city health departments were flooded with requests for the material and instructions on how to use it. But for the most part, people were content to buy it blindly and to apply it haphazardly. As a result, DDT has been somewhat less than a howling success on the home front.

Has DDT, then, been oversold to the American public? Is it less effective as a domestic weapon than as a war weapon? The answer to both questions is "No." DDT can become the Nemesis of household pests, but it must be used in the proper strengths, under the proper conditions and with proper precautions. In other words, DDT works best when treated simply as a new and better insecticide rather than as some form of black magic.

Tried out in your city apartment or in your friend's Connecticut farmhouse, DDT may fall a bit short of the spectacular results it achieved in insect-infested jungles of the Pacific or in typhus-ridden Naples. Nevertheless, both you and your friend can obtain a gratifying degree of success, for the new insecticide has unique properties which make it extremely advantageous for household use.

You must know that there is nothing higher and stronger and more wholesome and good for life than some good memory, especially a memory of childhood. People talk to you a great deal about your education, but some good, sacred memory, preserved from childhood, is perhaps the best education.

—From The Brothers Karamozov: Selected by Mary Ellen Chase for front of book "Mary Peters," published by The Macmillan Company.

It kills a greater variety of insects than any previously used insecticide. It can be applied in minute doses with devastating effect on the insect world. And it remains potent, with almost the same degree of effectiveness as when first used, for long periods of time.

DDT acts by attacking the nervous systems of insects, causing tremors, paralysis and finally death. When insects crawl or alight on a surface which has been adequately coated with DDT, they absorb a deadly dose through their bodies. The insects need not eat the chemical, nor be sprayed directly with it. Mere bodily contact is sufficient and, once an adequate dose has been absorbed, the death of the insect is assured, though it may not occur immediately. Some insects may survive for as long as several days, but most of them die within a short time. Some are more susceptible than others. Of the common household pests, for example, cockroaches are the most resistant. But even they can be eradicated by means of DDT.

There are three methods of applying DDT, depending in each case upon the insect to be exterminated and the duration of effectiveness desired. It can be used (1) as an air spray for prompt, but not lasting elimination of flying insects such as flies, mosquitoes, moths and gnats; (2) as a spray applied directly to all surfaces with which insects come in contact; and (3) as a powder in cracks and crevices for prolonged effectiveness against crawling insects such as roaches and ants. For over-all use and long-lasting freedom from most types of household pests, however, the spray applied directly to all surfaces with which insects come in contact is most effective.

To rid a room temporarily of flies or mosquitoes, the spray can be applied either through atomizers equipped with a hand pump or mechanical compressor, or through the so-called DDT aerosol bomb, a nonrefillable container whose DDT content varies with different manufacturers. Both the atomizer and the aerosol bomb are simple to use. Close all doors and windows and spray the entire room, particularly in the direction of the ceiling. With a 3 per cent DDT solution, four seconds is considered adequate treatment for an average-sized room with the aerosol bomb. After the spraying, the room should be left closed for ten to fifteen minutes.

This method is effective only as long as the toxic agents are in the air, a matter of a few hours. To prevent early reinfestation, the second method of application should be used. This necessitates spraying all surfaces on which the insects come to rest, such as screens, window frames, walls, ceilings, painted woodwork, light fixtures, and so on. In the case of mosquitoes, it is also necessary to treat spaces behind pictures, mirrors and bookcases, under furniture and in closets, since mosquitoes generally hide in dark places.

Careful treatment with DDT should give at least one season of freedom from these pests, provided treated surfaces are not rendered ineffective by repainting or washings. Window and door screens are subject to "weathering," and should be re-treated at intervals of one month, or oftener, during the fly-and-mosquito season. A 5 per cent spray is generally effective against most household insects when this method is used.

Two general types of spray solutions or emulsions are available; one type is a DDT suspension in water developed primarily for use out-of-doors on foliage, gardens and on walls of barns and outbuildings, while the other type is a kerosene solution for use inside on surfaces where the water solution might cause stains. Both the water and kerosene types are available in concentrated form which may be readily diluted to a 5 per cent solution. Where kerosene odor and oily residue are objectionable, the kerosene-solvent type should be diluted with odorless or refined kerosene.

For bedbugs, simply spray the mattress and box spring just enough to dampen the surfaces without wetting them. Use a paintbrush to apply the mixture to bedsprings and painted bedsteads, taking care to fill all cracks and crevices. A dusting powder containing 5 to 10 per cent DDT can be substituted for the liquid spray, but will not produce an equally lasting effect.

To eliminate fleas from a building, a powder or liquid spray should be applied to infested areas, including floors, rugs and cellars. (In removing fleas from pets, see caution later in this article.) If the powder or spray is allowed to remain, reinfestation will not occur for several weeks.

The same treatment will rid your house of ants, provided a heavy sprinkling of DDT is deposited on the pathways and resting places of the ants, and particularly behind and beneath baseboards, on window sills and frames, near sinks, table and chair legs, and in places where food residues may accumulate. An even more effective kill can be obtained by spraying the ants directly, if this is possible. In either instance, the treatment should give relief from these insects for several weeks.

In the case of moths, clothes should be sprayed thoroughly so that all parts, including folds and seams, are dampened. Unless the clothes are packed away in closed containers, which have been similarly treated, they must be re-treated at monthly intervals.

"BRIEFED"
...And Ready for Action!

Like wearing nothing at all... that describes Dutchess Briefs! Feathery-light. Cool as mint. And they fit like your own skin ... the bias-rib cuff smooths, gives without binding, stays put. And there's never a revealing line under the most form-fitting frock. Your choice of two cotton and two rayon Dutchess-knit fabrics with bras to match. Priced to please you!

At good stores or write
DUTCHESS UNDERWEAR CORP.
Empire State Bldg., New York 1, N. Y.

Dutchess Briefs

Rugs infested with carpet beetles should be sprayed not only on the woolly side, but on the underside as well. If reinfestation occurs, repeat the treatment.

Cockroaches, which probably constitute the greatest single category of household pests, are also the most difficult to control. To eliminate roaches, use an insecticide powder containing at least 10 per cent DDT, or a spray containing at least 5 per cent DDT. Apply the spray or powder to cracks and crevices in woodwork, tile walls and floors; behind and around pipes; beneath the edges of linoleum floor coverings—in short, to all dark places which roaches customarily infest. Pay special attention to the undersides of tables and benches; to areas behind and under sinks, bathtubs, washtubs, washing machines and refrigerators; and to the enclosed hollow bases of cabinet-type sinks, ranges and refrigerators. Last, but not least, give the same thorough treatment to your cellar, which is generally the worst offender in breeding cockroaches.

Whatever your particular problem may be, remember that for long-lasting insect control a film of DDT must remain on all surfaces with which the insects come in contact; therefore, a semicoarse liquid spray should be used. A fine spray or mist is dispersed to so great an extent that much of it fails to adhere to the surfaces being treated.

For most effective results in spraying, keep the spray nozzle six to eight inches from the surface being treated. Apply just enough spray to wet the surface without excess. (Fly screens and bedsprings can be treated more economically with a wide paintbrush than with a sprayer.)

Almost any sprayer can be used, provided it can be adjusted to deliver a semicoarse spray, has oil-resistant fittings and will not spill on the user. Paint sprayers and agricultural insecticide sprayers give good results. Some manufacturers of vacuum cleaners also provide an efficient spray attachment. All sprayers should be emptied, cleaned and oiled after use to keep the nozzles from becoming clogged, and to prevent corrosion of metal parts.

One further use of DDT requires mention here; namely, its use on household pets. Solvents, particularly kerosene, which contain DDT should never be used on pets, since they may cause blistering, and even death, if applied or sprayed directly on the skin of animals. Insecticide powders containing DDT are not so safe as those containing pyrethrum and, if used, should contain not more than 5 per cent DDT. They should be applied in small doses only, and in the case of cats should be avoided altogether, since cats are likely to lick enough of the powder to make them sick. It is also best to remove dogs, cats, birds and fish bowls before spraying a room.

In general, a few simple precautions should be observed when using DDT, although in the usual insecticidal doses it is not injurious to human beings. First, do not spray cribs or toys, as children frequently lick the surfaces and might possibly swallow enough to make them ill. Avoid spraying a bedroom when someone is sick, as the spray may cause the patient some discomfort. Secondly, remove or cover all food, dishes, glasses and silverware before spraying the kitchen, dining room or pantry. Also cover table tops, breadboards and all surfaces on which foods are prepared. Thirdly, extinguish all flames, such as pilot lights on gas appliances, before applying the DDT, and do not smoke while spraying if a kerosene solution is used. Fourthly, if the DDT solution should spill on the skin, wash immediately with soap and water. And fifthly, keep supplies of DDT separate from foods and medicines, adequately labeled, and out of the reach of children. Sixthly, avoid inhaling dusts and mist from spray. Cover nose and mouth with a handkerchief or mask.

Avoid spraying polished and varnished wood surfaces, since these sprays will mar and spot such surfaces.

If these few precautions are kept in mind, and DDT is used wisely and well, freedom from household pests can be achieved. Of course, it cannot be too strongly emphasized that solutions of DDT in concentrations of less than 5 per cent are usually ineffective. The prospective user must therefore exercise extreme care in shopping for the material, since some brands are known to contain as little as one tenth of 1 per cent DDT.

The outlook, certainly, is bright. Solutions containing 10 and even 20 per cent of DDT are expected to appear on the market in the near future. And recently a paint company announced the development of a special wall paint mixed with DDT. While sufficient information is not yet available on the effectiveness of this new product, tests conducted by the company showed that flies and mosquitoes were eliminated from rooms painted with the material. The cards are heavily stacked against the household insect.

"Are you through reading my diary, Adele? I need it to make some entries."

TO HELP A Bride DECIDE

Be practical about your silverplate as well as romantic. See these two blocks of sterling silver? They make Holmes & Edwards patterns stay lovelier longer. The spoons and forks you will use most often are invisibly inlaid with these protective blocks at the backs of bowls and handles.

Be wary All that glitters is not Sterling Inlaid silverplate. There are other kinds like extra plated or reinforced, but they're not, not at all like Sterling Inlaid.

Be choosy when you pick a pattern. You're going to live with it a long time. Holmes & Edwards designs are not fussy or frilly, but have exquisitely carved surfaces with a beauty that is ageless.

Be thrifty A fifty piece service for eight, including a handsome chest, is really inexpensive ... only $65.75 No federal tax.

HOLMES & EDWARDS
STERLING INLAID° SILVERPLATE

HERE AND HERE
It's Sterling Inlaid

LOVELY LADY YOUTH DANISH PRINCESS

Copyright 1946, International Silver Co., Holmes & Edwards Div., Meriden, Conn. In Canada: The T. Eaton Co., Ltd., °Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

THE GIRL I WOULD LIKE TO PROPOSE TO

by Louise Paine Benjamin

Beauty Editor of the Journal

ARE you feeling marriage-minded? Are you shopping with a wide and an open heart for a nice husband, or wishing on the new June moon that someone tall, dark and interested would come hunting for you? Or maybe you would just like to check up on the tastes of the husband you already have, to find out why he picked you.

In any case, it's always fun (and wise) to know what eligible young men think they want in the way of a perfect wife. This year's crop of youthful bachelors is full of ideas. They are even more positive in their tastes than the swains of the past. Perhaps it is because many of them have been in foreign lands in recent years and have had an opportunity to extend their experiences and observations far beyond the usual spotting grounds of church gatherings, frat dances and local Main Streets. They have had time to think, hope and paint pretty mental pictures—and many a veteran has come home with a fond female dream tucked away in his barracks bag.

If, however, you are one of the American girls who have been worrying that these overseas boys might come back with light-minded notions about life, love and marriage, put your mind at rest! Their composite picture of domestic bliss is still as pleasantly prosaic as a refrigerator ad: a solid home with plenty of children (at least three!), all presided over by a well-rounded little woman who can flip a neat omelet, play a fair hand of bridge, know the difference between the New York Giants and the Chicago Bears and keep her stocking seams tidy at the same time.

Nor need you fear that bright foreign eyes and knowing looks have given them a taste for flirtation. Three out of five are thumbs down on that kind of approach (though they aren't immune to plain, All-American friendliness).

But you had better watch your figure, stay away from phony accents and be kind to your parents, if you want to hear wedding-march music playing just for you!

The detailed report is here for you to read. Are you the girl who fits the picture?

WHAT DOES YOUR IDEAL GIRL LOOK LIKE?

She is almost five and a half feet tall: 5′ 5.7″ to be exact.

Her hair is brown, longish and wavy. And she likes to style it the way she likes it.

She is slender, but with curves. Weighs about 118 pounds, the boys say. (That "figure" may be all right for dream girls, but you'd better allow a 10-pound margin. It was curves you said, wasn't it?) Her eyes may be blue, brown or green.

Her personality is outstanding—but her face, figure and legs are all right too.

WHAT DO YOU NOTICE FIRST WHEN YOU MEET A NEW GIRL?

Her personality, her smile. After that, her contours, with special reference to shapely legs. And she ought to have a generally well-groomed look, as smooth as her personality.

DO YOU BELIEVE IN LOVE AT FIRST SIGHT?

"Attraction but not love." Give the boy a little time.

HOW IMPORTANT IS HER SPEAKING VOICE?

Very! (Almost half the men underlined this asset and think, with Shakespeare, "her voice . . . ever soft, gentle and low, an excellent thing in woman.")

DO YOU MIND IF HER ACCENT IS ENTIRELY DIFFERENT FROM YOURS? IS THERE ANY KIND YOU PARTICULARLY LIKE, OR DISLIKE?

Phony speech tricks are out. Don't try to borrow an accent from another region and don't affect the pseudointellectualism of broad a's and dropped r's. A New Englander or a Middle Westerner ought to stick to the speech she inherited, but do cut down on the magnolia blossoms, honeychile—even if you-all did just come up from under the Mason-Dixon Line! Speech affectation of any kind will leave even a pin-up girl talking to herself or establish her as a charter member of the lonely-hearts club!

WHAT KIND OF CLOTHES DO YOU LIKE YOUR GIRL TO WEAR?

Trim sports clothes or simple suits get the most votes. Blue is the favorite color; then green, red and brown. Three out of five men say they think black dresses are smart and five out of five will look twice at the girl who wears one. Yes, they say they think present-day hats are pretty terrible (but don't believe it—it simply makes them feel masculine to see you look so feminine!) and ruefully admit that even their best girls won't listen to suggestions in this matter.

Bareheaded girls look good to them, with hair trimmed a bit with a ribbon or a flower. Encouraging note: Only one man in four thinks a girl with a lot of clothes is extravagant. The rest seem to think it shows a commendable desire to be attractive to a favorite male, or may be evidence of good taste, a good buying ability or just ability to get fun out of living!

DO YOU LIKE GIRLS WHO FLIRT?

Three out of five are against flirting, especially if the girl is someone more important to them than a "good-time date." The feeling seems to be that the girl who is flirtatious before marriage might be so afterward—and not exclusively in one direction. Again, that's what the boys say, but if you are someone's favorite girl friend, he won't mind if you roll your eyes, smile often and "act pretty" just for him!

MUST YOUR WIFE BE A GOOD MIXER?

Yes. The gentlemen are almost five to one in favor of having their wives hold up the social end of marriage—by giving parties and going to them. All married men have a "that's my wife" complex in a crowd, and they want a partner at whom they can smile when they say that!

FAULTS YOU WOULDN'T WANT YOUR WIFE TO HAVE:

"Sloppy appearance" gets almost twice as many black marks as any other single item! (Their recent stretch with Uncle Sam has given most boys a well-scrubbed outlook.) Next in order of possible defects that might make a wife less loved are: talking too much, refusing to welcome husband's friends, unpunctuality, poor cooking, extravagance, running to mother, crying too easily, too much bridge and chatter with the girls.

DO YOU BELIEVE "THE WAY TO A MAN'S HEART IS THROUGH HIS STOMACH"?

The vote is about fifty-fifty on this. A number say "No, but it helps." There is also a division on who is the best cook in the world. Some men like to reminisce about "mom's" kitchen triumphs and others are hopeful for equally good chicken and dumplings from "the little woman." Those hungry males who specify favorite dishes list such hearty combinations as "veal cutlets and potato pudding"; "spaghetti and meat balls"; "just steak and roast chicken." Only dessert mentioned is apple pie—with the pretty cook seated across the table as an added sweet.

DO YOU APPROVE OF YOUR GIRL'S DIETING?

"Yes, if she needs it" say two thirds of the men. But they don't want crazy peeled-grape-and-lettuce-leaf fad diets, and insert such sound bits of thinking as "only if her doctor says it's O.K."; "only if she follows a well-balanced plan."

FURTHERMORE:

- The young men prefer to call on a girl in her own home and they take great note of how she treats her parents. (A young lady who isn't sweet and lovely to her father won't be the thoughtful pipe-and-slippers type in her own home, either.)
- Because most men like sports, they would be happy if their wives shared their tastes, but they won't insist on enthusiasm for such rugged exhibitions as wrestling or prize fighting. However, they don't want to be nagged about the hours spent poring over the sports page—or about anything else, for that matter!
- It's still a man's working world, but about 50 per cent of the marriageable males would agree on a career for their wives, if outside work didn't interfere with home and family. The average man would like at least three children, and some specify five or six. (All this and a career, too, gentlemen?)
- Most men prefer to have wives worry about balancing the family budget, but almost half are willing to volunteer a wrinkle in the brow to divide everything and work out all family problems together.
- Above all, a good wife is a good sport, willing to take the bad breaks with the better—and for the right man, it's worth it.

3 Sparkle Recipes that Sing a Tune for June

- Easy to make . . . glamorous!
- Taste-tempting . . . refreshing!
- 6c or less a serving!

Here are three cool propositions, to add a note of good cheer to springtime meals! Made with top-quality Ann Page Sparkle Desserts, they're light, colorful, and downright delicious! Light on your purse, too . . . they cost only 6c a serving or less!

A&P both makes and sells all 33 Ann Page Foods, eliminating many unnecessary in-between expenses. Result: high quality at modest cost.

It pays to choose

Ann Page Foods

MADE, SOLD AND GUARANTEED BY A&P

*Recipe costs based on average prices of ingredients in A&P Super Markets at press time.

A&P

QUICK AND EASY'S for Two

BY CHARLOTTE ADAMS

COOKING for two, especially when both halves of the team work, in or out of the home, is generally regarded as quite a proposition. One has so little time. One is so limited in choice of foods (never a roast, for instance). In these times, one frequently lives under distinct physical handicaps such as a two-foot-square cooking space "complete" with two-burner electric plate.

Good food, varied and palatable, can come out of such a setup. You must plan carefully and well. You must be prepared to pay with money, as well as with thought, for the time you save. Just to prove it can be done, we offer you here a variety of solutions to your varied culinary problems.

Are You Going Out After Dinner?

(Here's a Quickie)

Crab Soup

Chef's Salad Croissants

Strawberries and Cream

★ Crab Soup: ½ can of condensed pea soup, ½ can condensed tomato soup, ½ pint thin cream, ½ teaspoon curry powder, ½ cup crab meat, fresh or canned. The minute you come in the door and take off your hat and office dress, open the cans of soup and place the required amounts, together with the cream and curry powder, in the top of a double boiler, over hot water. Now pick over the crab meat carefully and add it to the soup.

Your ingenuity in using leftovers is a great help in varying your menu. The two half cans of soup, carefully refrigerated, can make the sauce (undiluted) for a spaghetti, meat and vegetable casserole next night. Or perhaps you'll dilute the leftover tomato soup with a bit of cream, use it as a sauce, and save the pea soup to serve two nights later, combined with chicken stock and cream, and topped with croutons.

★ Chef's Salad: Lettuce, escarole, 1 hard-cooked egg, shredded cheese, shredded chicken, anchovy fillets, and anything else you want to add! French dressing.

There will be purists who tell you that a chef's salad must contain a specific list of ingredients. Well, yours doesn't have to. The main requirement is that it provide a light but filling meal in itself. It can have shreds of ham or tongue in it and be the more delicious. It can have thin slices of radish or cucumber. It can have tomato wedges. I've left those out of this particular one because there's tomato in the soup, though in very different guise, and you may not mind repeating.

Most of the ingredients for this salad you will have prepared the night or the morning before the meal. There will be a hard-cooked egg in the refrigerator, well chilled. Peel and slice it. I hope you keep a tightly covered box of salad greens in your refrigerator all the time. Greens should be washed, thoroughly drained (the best method is to hang them up in a string bag) and then well chilled before using. If you bring home from work greens which you're going to use that night, prepare them before you start to cook and let them get as long a chilling as possible.

A nice combination of greens for any salad need include only two varieties. Possibilities are lettuce, romaine, water cress, escarole, dandelion, chicory, spinach or any other leaf you like to eat.

You can buy a tiny jar of cooked chicken which will be more than enough for this salad for two. Cut it into thin strips.

The ideal cheese for Chef's Salad is real Swiss cheese. If you cannot buy it, Münster does quite well. Cut it into thin strips too.

Tear as much lettuce and escarole as you wish to use into the salad bowl. Add other ingredients, except dressing, including 2 or 3 anchovy fillets, cut in half. Keep cool until ready to serve. At the very last minute add the French dressing. This should be a staple in your refrigerator. It keeps perfectly and is the better for standing, as the flavors mingle well. Take it out to bring to room temperature as soon as you start to prepare the meal.

★ French Dressing (enough for 16 individual servings): 12 tablespoons salad oil, 4 tablespoons vinegar (red wine vinegar is preferred by some), ½ teaspoon salt, ⅛ teaspoon dry mustard, 1 clove garlic—cut, ⅛ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce, ½ teaspoon mixed salad herbs, good grind of fresh pepper. Put all ingredients into a jar or bottle. Shake well before using. Two tablespoonfuls is adequate for a salad for two. When you are ready to serve the salad, add the dressing and toss lightly so that the ingredients are not broken up, but thoroughly enough so that all are coated with the dressing.

★ Croissants: In the baked-goods department you save time and make yourself popular by doing a good research on where in your area you can buy the very best rolls, cakes and pies. Making them would take too much of your precious time. Having them, though, should be your privilege, and having them the finest. Croissants are properly French, and you will probably have to find a French-pastry shop if you want the best. They should be very "short" and flaky. If you can't get good ones, serve another kind of bread. Heat croissants before serving, and in this meal eat them with both soup and salad.

★ Strawberries: Buy 1 quart strawberries. That's a lot—in fact, entirely too much for two people. But buy also ½ pound rhubarb and make tomorrow night's dessert.

Hull the berries. (I hope you have a little metal "huller." It makes life far easier.) Put them into a colander. Run cold water over them gently. Drain thoroughly. Arrange as many as you wish to eat tonight in two individual dishes and return them to the refrigerator to chill. Sprinkle sugar on them if you wish. But do, please, try a grind of fresh pepper over them, whether with cream and/or sugar or no, for truly wonderful flavor.

It won't give you much extra trouble to stew up the rhubarb and remaining strawberries right now while dinner's cooking—or afterward when you're doing the dishes—and there's tomorrow's dessert, needing only chilling.

★ Stewed Rhubarb and Strawberries: 1 cup rhubarb, cut up; 1 cup strawberries, ½ cup sugar, ½ cup water. Wash the rhubarb before cutting it up, but do not peel it. You've already washed and hulled the strawberries—haven't you? Boil sugar and water together for five minutes. Add fruit immer gently until tender, but still holds its shape. Cool, and then refrigerate.

Quick-Frozen Timesaver

Quick Chicken Divan
Dandelion Salad
French Dressing
Rye Crackers
Raspberry Ice and Cookies

uick-frozen foods are a boon to the hur- cook, who also wants her meals to be . The fruits and vegetables are excellent. re the meat, fish and chicken. Any of prepared quick-frozen dishes (stews and ike) can take a touch of fixing up from ne who admires distinction in food. this:

Quick Chicken Divan: ½ package k-frozen broccoli, 1 package quick- en chicken à la king, ½ teaspoon curry der, ½ cup thin cream, grated Parme- cheese, butter or margarine.

ook broccoli according to directions package, reserving half for salad or r dish tomorrow night. Fill bottoms mple individual casserole dishes with coli.

leantime, heat chicken with curry powder cream in top of double boiler until en- y melted. Mix carefully so that chicken ot too broken up. Pour over broccoli in erole dishes. Top with grated cheese, dot butter or margarine and brown under e or in oven.

Raspberry Ice and Cookies: Buy ½ raspberry ice on the way home from and store it in the coldest part of the gerator until ready to serve. The cookies uld be, again, a result of your research who makes the best, obtained, perhaps, time from a lady who bakes "home- e" ones for pin money.

Planned Leftovers

ere's a dinner which, if you buy and cook proper quantities, will provide tomorrow t's meal with only a little fixing. Two ds of veal cutlet is twice too much for so is a bunch of asparagus. Cook twice any new potatoes as you need. Cool refrigerate the extra ones until tomor- night. Following this menu and recipes, will find the same ingredients in very ent style.

VEAL MENU I

Breaded Veal Cutlet
Asparagus with Drawn Butter
New Potatoes in Jackets
Whole-Wheat Bread
oneydew Melon with Lime Wedges

readed Veal Cutlet: 2 pounds veal t, 1 cup bread crumbs, 1 egg, 2 table- ns milk, salt and pepper. Wipe cutlet it a damp cloth. Sprinkle with salt and er and dip into bread crumbs. Beat egg it milk. Dip cutlet into this and then ga into bread crumbs. Sauté in butter or a arine over low heat until nicely rned. Turn only once, and brown second de Serve on hot platter.

oiled Asparagus: Scrub a bunch of sp agus with a stiff brush. Cut off the ou white ends, if any, and remove the ale scales. Never peel asparagus, as is on times done in fancy restaurants. It's a s ration and a waste. Tie the asparagus dy into bunches with a piece of white ng. (Make a bow knot, it's easier to get one later.) Stand the asparagus bunches pidly boiling, salted water (the top of u double boiler is good for this) and cook o fifteen minutes. The tips should cook e steam.

For drawn-butter sauce, add ½ tablespoon lemon juice to 2 tablespoons melted butter or margarine. A bit of chopped chive is very good in this.

★ New Potatoes in Jackets: Scrub 8 little new potatoes. Cook in boiling salted water until done (about fifteen minutes). To make the ones you serve tonight look more handsome, cut away a strip of the skin about half inch wide from around the middle. Sprinkle with paprika before serving.

★ Honeydew with Lime Wedges: If you can buy a ripe, small honeydew, and wish to use only half of it, the other half will keep pretty well in the refrigerator, if you cover it carefully with wax paper and then wrap it in a tea cloth—or put it in a covered storage dish if you have one large enough. Or buy a honeyball and have a half apiece. Wedges of lime squeezed over the melon make a fine taste combination.

VEAL MENU II

Veal Soufflé
Creamed New Potatoes
Asparagus Vinaigrette
Whole-Wheat Melba Toast
French Pastries

★ Veal Soufflé: 1 cup cooked veal, ground; 1 tablespoon butter or margarine, 1 tablespoon flour, 1 cup milk, salt and pepper, ¼ cup soft bread crumbs, 1 teaspoon minced onion, 2 eggs. Melt butter or margarine. Remove from stove and blend in flour smoothly. Return to stove, add milk and stir until thickened. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Add bread crumbs and stir in well. Remove from fire and stir in veal, onion and the egg yolks, slightly beaten. Cool. Beat egg whites stiff and fold into first mixture. Pour into buttered baking dish, set in a pan of hot water and bake in 350° oven forty-five minutes until top is lightly browned.

★ Creamed New Potatoes: 4 cooked new potatoes, 1 tablespoon butter or margarine, 1 tablespoon flour, ½ cup milk, salt and pepper, paprika. Peel potatoes and cut into dice. Melt butter or margarine. Remove from stove and blend in flour smoothly. Return to stove, add milk, and stir constantly until thickened. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Add potato dice, place pan over hot water and allow to heat through. When ready to serve, sprinkle with paprika.

★ Asparagus Vinaigrette: Place half of the stalks of asparagus left over from last night's cooking on each of two well-chilled plates. Pour over them the following sauce: 3 tablespoons salad oil, 1 tablespoon vinegar, ½ clove garlic (optional), 1 tablespoon sweet-pickle relish. As soon as you start preparing this dinner, place the oil, vinegar and garlic together in a bowl. Just before serving remove the garlic, add the relish and mix well. Pour over asparagus as directed.

★ Whole-Wheat Melba Toast: Slice not-too-fresh whole-wheat bread very thin. Place in a large pan and bake in 325° oven until thoroughly dried out and delicately brown. The pieces will curl in the process. You can't do this in the same oven with your soufflé, but it is something you can make in between times, such as during dinner, after you've used the oven, or while you're getting breakfast in the morning. Melba toast is good to have on hand.

★ French Pastries: These you buy, and if you've been a smart researcher they'll be better than you could make.

Guest for Dinner

We figure that you'll want to have guests to share the pleasures of your home and your cuisine—perhaps as often as once a week, perhaps as seldom as once a month. You should, and you can, if you plan carefully.

Tropical Tempters Delicious cookies . . . lavishly studded with bits of rich, luscious dates . . . and delicately spiced. Real appetite-tempters, they're just the thing for luncheon and dinner desserts . . . snacks for the children . . . and swell for parties, too! Keep them on hand at all times! Baked to perfection by A&P Bakers . . . and sold at their fresh, flavorful best! Yet, for all their goodness . . . they're attractively priced!

AT ALL A&P FOOD STORES . . . Except on Pacific Coast

A&P

Cambridge designers surpass in the art of sophisticated simplicity . . . offered in many forms, handcrafted in ultra-brilliant Cambridge crystal. The demand is great, so please be patient if some of these fine American-made pieces are not always available.

GENUINE HAND MADE Cambridge MADE IN U.S.A.

THE CAMBRIDGE GLASS COMPANY, CAMBRIDGE, OHIO

No matter how simple your quarters may be, if you're happy in them, your guests will be too. Presumably these people are your friends and accept your invitation because they want to see you. That means you mustn't fuss in the kitchen while they're there any more than the minimum necessity dictates. How do you arrange that? You prepare as much as possible the night before (serving yourselves a can of baked beans, doctored up by you to the point of perfection, and a green salad, which takes no time at all to get ready).

Hot Consommé Bellevue
Tomato-Aspic Ring
with Coleslaw
Sliced Ham and Chicken
Hot Finger Rolls
Raspberry Shortcake

In this case, you make your tomato aspic the night before, and you check through carefully to be sure that all other ingredients needed for the dinner are either in the house or on your market list.

★ Tomato-Aspic Ring: 1 tablespoon unflavored gelatin, 1 cup hot water, 1 cup freshly stewed (or canned) tomatoes, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon lemon juice, ½ teaspoon sugar, 1 tablespoon vinegar, 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce, ½ teaspoon basil. Soften the gelatin in cold water and dissolve in hot. Add tomatoes and seasonings. Mix well, pour into a mold and chill thoroughly.

As soon as you get home on the night of the party, start the soup.

★ Consommé Bellevue: 1 pint clam juice, 1 pint chicken stock, salt and pepper, paprika, whipped cream (if possible). Good clam juice comes in a bottle. If you can't get clear chicken broth the same way, make it with a bouillon cube. Combine clam juice and chicken stock. Season to taste, going lightly on the salt, as clam juice is naturally salty. Heat well. When ready to serve, cover with a thin film of whipped cream, if you can get the heavy cream needed, and sprinkle with paprika. Even without the cream, the consommé is good. Serve in hot cups.

You know I hate, detest and can't bear a lie, not because I am straighter than the rest of us, but simply because it appalls me. There is a taint of death, a flavor of mortality in lies.

—JOSEPH CONRAD: The Golden Treasury of the World's Wit and Wisdom.

Next in order for this meal is to split the biscuits for your shortcake, butter them and put them in a pan for heating in the oven. Also, prepare the raspberries.

★ Raspberry Shortcake: 4 large baking powder biscuits, 1 box raspberries, sugar, butter or margarine, whipped cream, if available. Split biscuits and spread with butter or margarine. Put the berries into a colander or sieve and run cold water over them very gently. Mash berries slightly and sprinkle with sugar. Place in refrigerator to chill and draw juice. If you put your split biscuits into the oven with the finger rolls and turn the oven out when you remove the rolls, the biscuits will keep warm enough until you are ready to serve. Place the bottom half of a biscuit on an individual plate. Pour some berries over. Top with upper half of biscuit. Pour over some more berries, and top them with a big blob of whipped cream—again if you can get it!

Last of all, in your preparation, make the coleslaw.

★ Coleslaw: Small new cabbage, mayonnaise, chili sauce, celery seed. Chop the cabbage fine, or cut into long thin strips, if you prefer it that way. The nicest combination is part red cabbage, part white, but if you make this you will have a good deal of each left over to cope with the next day, even if you buy the smallest possible cabbages. Mix the shredded or chopped cabbage with mayonnaise enough to make it well moist, add a tablespoon or so of chili sauce and about 1 teaspoon of celery seed.

Unmold the tomato aspic you made last night and heap the coleslaw in the center and around it.

Buy sliced chicken and ham, or other cold meats if you prefer, in the delicatessen. Just before serving, take them from the refrigerator and arrange them attractively on a cold platter, using fresh parsley sprigs as decoration.

IT'S THE AMERICAN WAY

(Continued from Page 171)

the grill space except that reserved for the coffeepot and corn kettle is given over to them. That's why it's a good idea to have the hot casserole of potatoes, the pie and salad things brought out—ready to eat—from the house. This way everyone has something to do. It's more fun. The stove-shy ones husk corn or set the table Who wouldn't work for a meal like that?

Where there's smoke, there's fire. You can make your own rules—be your own expert on this outdoor-cooking business. Your way is as good as your neighbor's. A good bed of coals is the important thing, and whether you use charcoal, wood or pressed sawdust doesn't seem to matter, as the results are pretty sure to taste good anyway. Let the boy scout of the family do this trick of fire building.

At this point it seems as good a time as any to pass on a few hints from folks who are old hands at this outdoor cooking. There may be a trick or two here that will make your own family's outdoor stove work easier and more fun.

Barbe-cues

1. You might keep a crayon record on a shingle, or set your record down in a handy notebook, of just how long you have discovered it takes your particular grill or fireplace to get "perking." Also keep a sort of timetable of cooking time. With winter in between, one does sort of forget from summer to summer whether it took one hour or three hours before the fire got to the proper behaving stage. The best reason for this is that you'll know how to gauge your party time. If a portion of your meal is being cooked indoors, you can more easily plan everything being ready at once.

2. If your guests' tastes vary from rare to well done—and they usually do—small steaks are better than one big one, but by "small" I don't mean thin. One and a half inches thick is ideal. Lamb chops, to be best, should be three quarters of an inch thick. Put on two or three at a time, arrange them in groups so it is easy to tell which is which. This goes for hamburgers too.

3. Your barbecue gadgets and tools can be as elaborate or as simple as your kind of outdoor cooking demands. The shops are full of them! But a pair of long-handled tongs, a long-handled fork and spoon—the longer the better—and a pair of asbestos mitts rate the most votes for first things first. This is the time you don't want to get too close to your work. Wood is splintery, charcoal messy. Your master of ceremonies will be glad of the mitts and the tongs when a log needs shifting or a chicken leg gets lost in the embers. I like them for turning chops and steaks even in the kitchen. No fork pricks to let out the juices.

4. A good sharp carving knife and a carving board are quite the things for big thick steaks and spit-roasted meats to be sliced. Leave the platter in the house. Serve right from the board. However, when it comes to plates, you'll find that wood, plastic or pottery ones are best.

(Continued on Page 184)

YOUR VEGETABLE SALADS—does he take 'em or leave 'em?

Choose your vegetables for looks—and flavor!
Del Monte Quality—no less!
And give him nippy, zippy dressings—lots of hints here!

See what these "tricks of the trade" do for your vegetable salads

First and foremost, remember you need super vegetables to make super salads. So choose them for color, garden looks and fine garden flavor. That's what you get—full measure—in every Del Monte Brand Vegetable. So, if your grocer doesn't have just the one you want, try another variety. Whichever you use you're sure of success.

Make 'em hearty! Go easy on frills, concentrate on big bright salads and rousing dressings. Just try Del Monte Diced Beets and Green Beans together. Or pair delicate Del Monte Asparagus with Diced Carrots. Or toss lots of Del Monte Early Garden Peas and Limas with salad greens. Mix or match Del Monte Vegetables any way, every way—there's good eating ahead for menfolks, for everybody!

Vary your dressings—French dressing for instance. Give it new twists—often—with piquant flavors, racy seasonings. First make

BASIC FRENCH DRESSING

1 cup fresh salad oil
2 tsps. lemon juice
3 tbsps. vinegar
1 tsp. sugar
½ tsp. each salt & pepper
1 tsp. paprika

Shake all ingredients together in tightly covered jar. Makes 1½ cups. For a change, add 4 tbsps. crumbled Roquefort cheese. Or add 3 tbsps. minced fried bacon and 4 sliced green onions, tops and all. Or add 1 can of Del Monte Tomato Sauce, ¼ cup cold water, salt and lemon juice to taste. Or substitute red wine vinegar, add 1 tsp. mustard seed, garlic and minced onion to taste.

Try marinating Del Monte Vegetables an hour or so in French dressing. Makes 'em even better! Serve salads shivery cold with piping hot companions. Mix tossed salads gently. Let yourself go on garnishes—onions, nutmeats, sliced egg, anchovies, mushrooms, cheese cubes.

Remember! Del Monte puts

flavor first

✓ In Growing
✓ In Picking
✓ In Packing
✓ In Testing

Del Monte VEGETABLES

When Excess Fat is Excess Baggage... Better Reduce the Ry-Krisp Way!

Clip off pounds! Get the Ry-Krisp plan for normal overweights. Then, choose meals you like from long lists of low-calorie foods (in quantities given) . . . and enjoy Ry-Krisp as bread. Soon, watch ugly fat disappear.

Because delicious Ry-Krisp is a whole-grain bread, rich in vitamin $B_1$ and minerals, it helps you gain tone, sparkle. Crisp, flavorful . . . and only 23 calories per double-square wafer.

FREE! NEW "DESIGN FOR REDUCING," GIVES COMPLETE REDUCING PLANS FOR MEN AND WOMEN. WRITE RY-KRISP, 10 CHECKERBOARD SQUARE, ST. LOUIS 2, MISSOURI

(Continued from Page 182)

5. Rub the grill with a piece of suet before putting on meats. Prevents sticking.

6. Did you ever try using a wire corn popper for grilling wieners? Shaken gently, the "dogs" turn over and you can get a good, even broil instead of a one-strip line of "char."

7. Corn season will be here in no time. Some say the best way to "butter" corn is to have a pastry brush and the melted butter or margarine in a bowl. The idea is to swab the ears of corn with the spread. Much better than chasing a piece of the precious stuff all around the ear.

Grill or barbecue? I get all tied up in knots trying to keep "grilling" and "barbecuing" straight in my mind. Most everyone these days speaks of their outdoor cooking spot as a barbecue. You'll not find a word here on how to roast a pig or an ox in a pit dug up in your back yard. That's out of my line. If you have the kind of fireplace equipped with a spit on which you can spear a whole chicken or roast, baste and turn away to your heart's content. That's the real authentic barbecuing. But not everybody has such a rig. You can still have a barbecue in the true sense of the word by either soaking meats in a sauce or basting them with it as they cook. Or you'll still be in the swim if you serve the plain grilled meats with a barbecue sauce.

Best way to swab meats is with a brush or a stick with cloth wrapped on one end and dipped in the sauce. You don't get too much on at once. Good swab stuff for chicken is this sauce:

BARBECUE SAUCE

Put the following into a quart jar and shake well so ingredients will be well blended: 2 medium onions, chopped fine, 3 or 4 cloves garlic, minced, 2 cups catchup, ½ cup wine vinegar, 1 cup salad oil, 3 tablespoons Worcestershire sauce. Let this stand twenty-four hours. There isn't any salt or pepper in this sauce. You'll season the chicken well as it grills.

There are sauces and sauces. Some barbecue sauces are cooked—start with canned tomatoes and have a list of ingredients as long as a ticket from New York to San Francisco. Embellish the one above if you like, but it's simple to make and good the way it is.

A catchupy sauce spoils a steak or chops for the basting, though it is good as a condiment. The best sauce for barbecuing steaks and chops is the following:

Olive oil or other salad oil with plenty of garlic, 3 or 4 cloves to 1 pint. Or mix olive or salad oil half-and-half with the same amount of garlic as above. Marinate steaks or lamb chops in either of these dressings for several hours before grilling. The salting and peppering are done while they cook. Use your pepper grinder. Freshly ground pepper is best. A little more of the basting sauce after turning the meat is called for too.

Most hostesses who go in for barbecue parties stick to one or two specialties their husbands toss off particularly well. A good thing is worth repeating. Vary the trimmings. Here are some menus built around the meats you will be most apt to have for these parties. This meal was shown in the photograph.

Hot Bouillon
Barbecued Chicken
Scalloped Potatoes and Onions with Cheese
Sliced Tomatoes – Raw Relishes
Crusty Rolls
Sugared Strawberries – Cookies
Coffee

The bouillon is a good idea. Keeps guests out of the chef's way and it's an appetizer for the meal to come. Serve it in mugs. Either heat it on the spot or bring it out in a vacuum jug.

Have you ever tried skewered meats? Call them shaslik, shishkabab or just "kabobs"—it's all the same. The meat, whether it's lamb, pork, ham, chicken livers, sweetbreads or steak, should be cut into inch squares. Have plenty of tomato quarters,

CREAMED FISH

Add 1 tsp. Lea & Perrins Sauce to white sauce. To give tangy-good flavor to fish . . . always use Lea & Perrins! Either to season its sauce, or in the cooking! And at the table . . . a few drops more will make fish taste even better!

FREE Recipe Book. Write Lea & Perrins, Inc. 241 West Street, New York 13, N.Y., Dept. 6E

A FAVORITE FOR OVER 100 YEARS

LEA & PERRINS Sauce
THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

ONE THING IS SURE . . .

WAXTEX is a real help in your kitchen! A perfect food-saver . . . strong, dependable, sanitary Easy to use, because of patented handy dispenser box! Look for the orange-and-brown carton

WAXTEX

HEAVY WAXED PAPER

Marathon Corporation, Menasha, Wisconsin

slices of onion, whole mushrooms, bacon and whatever else you think might be good. You can either provide the makings and let everyone string up his own concoction on long skewers, adding as much as there is room for—sort of an add-a-pearl necklace idea—or prepare them in advance in the house. Long green sticks, well sharpened, will do just as well as fancy skewers. Broil the same way as you would anything else, only turn them more often.

Marinate the meat cubes in the same oil and garlic dressing suggested for steaks. Here's a ham kabob that sounds like a fruit cocktail but is mighty good. Alternate cubes of ham with quarter-inch slices of canned pineapple, mushroom caps, halves of apricot and bacon. Scallops and shelled shrimps, oil-dipped, tomatoes, bacon and onion is another one that's out of the ordinary. And if you've nothing on hand but frankfurters, cut them in sections and string up with apple pieces, onion slices, mushrooms and tomato sections.

Here's a simple menu for a kabob supper:

Tomato Juice
"Broil Your Own" Kabobs
French Bread
Assorted Cooked Vegetable Salad with Sour-Cream Horse-Radish Dressing
Watermelon Filled With Honey-Drenched Fresh Fruits
Hot or Iced Coffee

Here again in this meal we'll leave the grill space free. With everyone "doing their own" this is no time to fry potatoes or grill corn. The French bread has a purpose. Those who don't want to eat their meat off the skewers or be fancy with knife or fork can slip the meat and vegetables off the skewers between two slices of French bread. A hefty sandwich, but good. And this reminds me—bring out the loaf uncut. Those that want it will slice their own. Count noses when you buy rolls for a picnic too. With so many other good things, you don't want to waste bread these days, even on a picnic.

Now for some more activity on the grill itself. This time we'll really put it to work.

Raw Vegetables and Caraway-Cheese Appetizer
Barbecued Ham
Skillet-Fried Potatoes
Corn on the Cob
Buns or Slabs of French Bread Garlic Buttered
Bonfire Apples or Apple Turnovers
Fireplace Coffee

The cheese is cottage and cream cheese mixed, thinned with cream. Add chopped onion, salt and pepper and caraway seeds. The idea is to dip the radishes, carrot sticks or whatever in the cheese. This informal, help-yourself bowl gives everyone that isn't busy something to nibble on while supper gets under way.

Have the potatoes cooked in the jackets. Put someone at slicing the potatoes and onions and husking the corn. A black-iron skillet and dark enamel pot are best. The pan can't call the kettle black! Don't bring out your aluminum. You'll be scouring for days. Put on the water for the corn and start the potatoes first—then when it's time for the ham, these can be set back to cook slower while the ham gets the benefit of the best heat. Gash the ham slices along the fat edge. Have it cut thick—2 one-inch-thick center cut slices will serve 8. Use the sauce given for barbecued chicken for swabbing, or this one: ½ cup of pineapple juice, 3 tablespoons of vinegar, ½ cup of brown sugar, ¼ cup of prepared mustard. If you have room on the grill you could broil lengthwise wedges of fresh pineapple along with the ham.

You might prefer to have the dessert ready, but if anyone wants to cook himself an apple, here's how: Simply roast the apple over the fire on a long stick. The skin peels off. Then roll the apple (it's still on the stick and very hot, by the way, so watch your fingers) in a panful of brown sugar. This time hold it farther away from the heat. The sugar will bubble and glaze the apple. Let it cool a bit before eating it off the stick. You'll be sorry if you don't.

Before the fire dies down, however, I do want to tell you about two meals I have eaten that didn't have a grilled or broiled food in either one, but they stand out as two "bests." One was a chowder supper, the other featured a stew—both cooked in big iron kettles over an outdoor fire.

Beef Stew, Camp Style
French Bread – Dill Pickles
Whole Peeled Tomatoes in Cracked Ice
Sour-Cream Coleslaw *(to pour over them)
Cheese-and-Fruit Platter
Coffee

This wasn't a participation meal. The stew was tended throughout the afternoon by one of the family. When the time came for the guests to go down to the picnic spot, everything was ready. No first course was necessary, as no one could wait long enough for that stew, which was rich and savory and had most every vegetable in the garden in it. It was eaten in deep bowls and there were many refills. A meal to remember! Everyone has a pet stew. Try cooking and serving yours outdoors sometime.

For the chowder supper keep the emphasis on the chowder. Make your best clam or fishchowder, the kind you were brought up on.

There's really no limit to what you can cook and eat outdoors. And if you haven't had a cook-out Sunday breakfast, you've missed some really superb eating.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Ask Any Woman

BY MARCELENE COX

WHY is it that when other people are selling their homes to "make money" the real-estate agent goes on living in his same little bungalow?

No woman should admit to having a knack for repairing appliances any more than a man admits the ability to sew on a button.

As a gem can be cut to minimize its flaws, so a child can be polished to minimize its inherent defects.

There comes a time in early spring when, no matter how much a mother loves her children, she feels like opening the door and saying, "Shoo!"

Returning veterans, who missed out on watching the baby discover his toes, can take comfort from the fact that second babies have toes too.

No child should be complimented or placed on a pedestal for doing what it ought to be doing anyway.

The woman most pitied by other women is she whose husband comes home to lunch.

It can do a parent as much good literally to run away from the home situation as it did the little boy who "ran away" for a day and, returning, observed, "I see you still have the same stove."

A bold front cannot hide what is said behind a back.

An adult's conduct today is his grandchild's heredity tomorrow.

Whenever we see an adolescent or an adult on the wrong path we might well ask, as Saint Paul did the Galatians, "Ye did run well, who did hinder you?"

ONE GOOD TURN...

BILL: Say that again! Who's—beautiful?

BARB: Pepperells! They're the beautiful sheets with the wear woven in! That's what makes them such practical luxuries . . . Why, our first ones were so lovely after such long wear that I knew you'd like more—

BILL: Well, sugar, I told you one good turn deserved another! Now, how about that other cheek?

BARB: Mmm . . . All because Pepperell makes such good sheets—and makes all types, at prices folks want to pay. I'll always ask for Pepperell Sheets! Pepperell Blankets, too . . .

WE: More women know Pepperells than any other sheets they can buy! If your store is out, remember we're making more as fast as we can.

Pepperell Manufacturing Company, Boston, Mass.

PEPPERELL SHEETS are smooth, strong—finished with fine-stitched hems, Tapered Tape Selvages, "Tellmark" Tabs. And Pepperell's factory-sealed carton keeps your new sheets clean, fresh, "ready for bed!"

PEPPERELL Sheets and Blankets

LADY PEPPERELL • DUCHESS • COUNTESS • ABBOTSFORD

When Excess Fat is Excess Baggage... Better Reduce the Ry-Krisp Wa

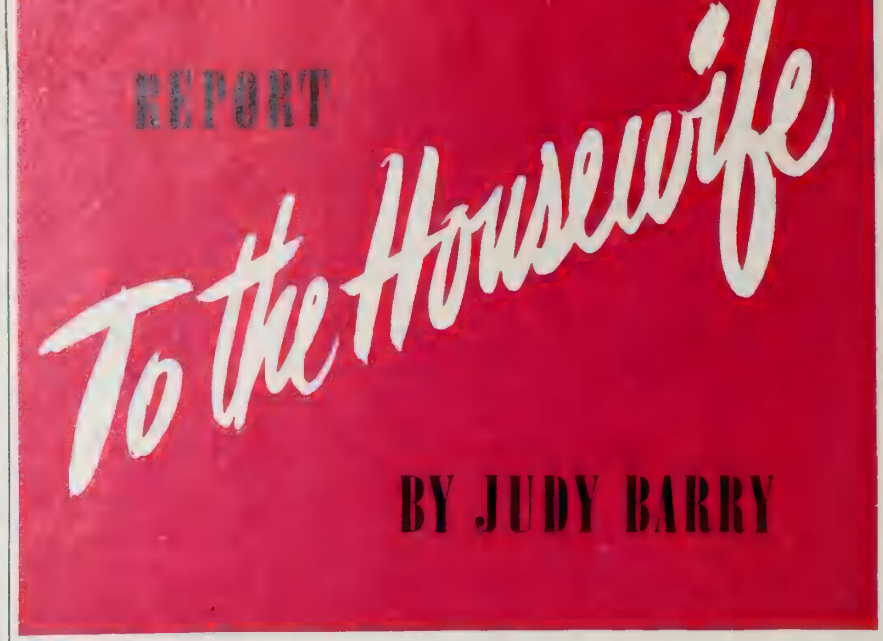
Clip off pounds! Get the Ry-Krisp plan for normal overweights. Then, choose meals you like from long lists of low-calorie foods (in quantities given) . . . and enjoy Ry-Krisp as bread. Soon, watch ugly fat disappear.

Because delicious Ry-Krisp is a whole-grain bread, rich in vitamin and minerals, it helps you gain to sparkle. Crisp, flavorful . . . and o 23 calories per double-square wa



SUMMER SLIMMER:
Salad of cottage cheese, peas, cole slaw, sliced tomatoes, lettuce, with low-calorie dressing; Ry-Krisp, fresh pineapple, iced coffee.

FREE! NEW "DESIGN FOR REDUCING," GIVES COMPLETE REDUCING PLANS FOR A AND WOMEN. WRITE RY-KRISP, 10 CHECKERBOARD SQUARE, ST. LOUIS 2, MISSO

JUST about now you ought to be reveling in the new slimness of your figure, the clarity of your complexion. That is, if your conscience is clear, too, and you have been faithfully doing what our President and Mr. Hoover have asked, helping to save food for our hungry neighbors in Europe. Not very often that we get such a plus dividend as looking and feeling better just for doing our duty, is it? This is one time when virtue reaps more than its own reward.

War Food Order No. 144

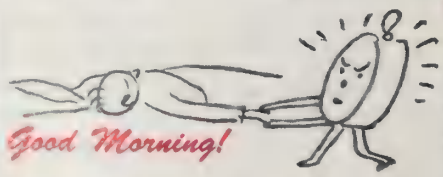
That refers to the new "Emergency Flour"—have you used it yet? We've been working with it, and it reminded us of a strange child who thinks he may be unwelcome, and thus is on the defensive, casts dark looks, is a little hard to handle at first. But by the same token, it responds warmly to patience and understanding.

Here in the Workshop Kitchen, we found that after a bit of practice you use it just as you would enriched white flour.



The rule for quick breads, "mix only until flour is moistened," is especially true of Emergency Flour.

We'd advise you to put away your famous 8-egg cake recipe for a while, but plain cakes, while they may not be as velvety as of yore, can still be good. All our simple basic recipes made with Emergency Flour have turned out to be very acceptable, in fact. Honesty, however, compels us to admit that the shadowy look of the innards of our pet biscuits took a bit of adjusting to, but only for a moment.

At Long Last!

New lamp shades, equipped with a levelizer to keep them horizontal through everything, even a sub-deb daughter's jive sessions, are being made. Now if someone would only do the same for picture frames, and invent a gadget which would force all Venetian blinds in a room to halt at the same angle, we could relax and never again have to fret about the wild-eyed look such tipsiness can give to even the prettiest rooms!

Good Morning!

And now some eager beaver has invented an alarm clock which rings and keeps on ringing until the formerly peaceful snoozer actually gets out of bed. His rising permits the bedsprings to rise also, which automatically operates the alarm's cutoff switch. Isn't someone always taking the joy out of life?

Yum, Yum!

How would you like bricks of peanut butter all ready to be sliced and laid on bread as you do now with cheese? They're on the way—and experiments in flavoring them with chocolate, vanilla and such are now being conducted.

More DDT

Newest use is in cedar-closet wallpaper, the kind you can apply yourself because it's ready-pasted. Its makers guarantee that for one year at least, this DDT-treated paper will kill moths, flies, ants or silverfish bold enough to come in contact with it.

Cooking With the Gas Off

Cooking with the gas off is the special talent claimed for one of the new gas ranges by its makers. An automatic device turns the gas off when the proper temperature is reached, seals the flue vent and allows the heavily insulated oven to keep right on cooking. The makers of this range promise that, with your dinner in the oven, controls set for the number of minutes indicated in the range's chart, you may lightheartedly go out to dig in your garden or catch forty winks, and be assured that the meal will be ready when you are.

Keep it Clean!

An enterprising manufacturer, who has respect for his wife's shining floors, has developed a door mat which automatically brushes off shoes when it's stepped on. An electric motor moves tiny brushes back and forth.

We Knew it All the Time!

Technicians at a university research laboratory have decided that convention, not sense, guides men's habits of dressing! Laboratory tests have proved that tightness of weave is an important factor in the comfort of fabrics worn for both hot and cold weather. The next coolest thing to nothing at all is clothing of thin tightly woven fabric. Yet a "windbreaking" tightly woven fabric can also be warmer than a porous material of much heavier weight.

January in June

This summer, when you go to market to buy frozen foods, you won't have to rush straight home before they melt. You can dally downtown on the hottest day for luncheon and a movie, if you're carrying a new kind of utility bag we've been using here in the Workshop, to keep frozen foods safely frigid for six hours. The secret is the "heat barrier" interlining, covered with lacquered neoprene lining. There are three variations of this bag—a zipper case, a fold-over style, and a drawstring type. Ought to be useful for toting milk, butter and ice cubes to your favorite picnic spot, wouldn't you think?

Bring Your Own Steam Heat

Quick comfort for those bone-chilling days that abound in June (poets to the contrary notwithstanding) is a new lightweight portable steam heater that looks like a smart suitcase. It plugs into any room outlet, and in a very few minutes blessed heat should circulate through your fog-chilled beach-house living room. Weighs 37 pounds, stands 16½ inches tall, is 22 inches long, wears a convenient carrying handle.

Pickup

We've been having a fine time in the Workshop lately with a new little dustpan-on-wheels, which allows us to pick up papers, lint, crumbs or what not from bare floors or rugs without bending our weary backs an inch, for it has a nice tall handle. A tiny roller brush across the front of the pan is adjustable.

No Kitchen. Steak for Four

It can be managed, with cordon bleu success. All you need is the steak, and one of the not new, but greatly improved, table broilers. They'll do after-theater hamburgers for eight, or a broiler for dinner à deux. Wedding-gift idea for which a kitchenless bride, or even a bride with a city-apartment-sized kitchen, would remember you gratefully forever.

Good Mixer

A plug so adaptable that it fits almost all household appliances now appears to comfort those of us who've scrambled through tangles of cords to find the plug we needed in a hurry. This one has co-operative self-adjusting "jaws," is attached to six feet of cord.

Swishes the Dishes!

A brand-new nonelectric dishwasher has been announced, tested and should be in production by the time you read this. Engineers believe that this hydraulic washer can be mass-produced for an extremely nominal cost, for it is simple in construction, made of aluminum alloy. Its capacity seems to be fairly small—21 inches in diameter, 21 inches deep. A hydraulic lift raises the basket to easy position for filling with dishes. After loading is completed, a valve is opened in the pipe which connects the washer to the house hot-water supply. Faucet pressure then propels jets of water from little nozzles around the inside of the tub. These rotate the dish basket as they wash. Opening the lid, after they're all clean, allows the hydraulic lift to raise the basket up out of the tub. The basket continues spinning by momentum until the dishes are air-dried!

Today Forever

We've heard of a beautiful new radio-phonograph cabinet which also has a device for recording right in your own home. Wouldn't it be fun to capture, on a record, the baby's first words, a birthday party, or any of the important sound effects of one's family life, to send to relatives far away, or to keep for old-age entertainment?

Thunderstorm Brewing?

We've seen a good-looking new window ventilator that effectively keeps the storm and rain out, but lets the fresh cooling air in. It's made of translucent plastic-covered wire mesh in a featherweight aluminum frame. Adjustable to windows up to 36 inches.

ONE GOOD TURN...

BILL: Say, honey, that deserves another. In fact, why not another one for every sheet?

BARB: And once it was me you loved! Now maybe I ought to be a little jealous—of my beautiful new Pepperell Sheets?

BILL: Say that again! Who's—beautiful?

BARB: Pepperells! They're the beautiful sheets with the wear woven in! That's what makes them such practical luxuries . . . Why, our first ones were so lovely after such long wear that I knew you'd like more—

BILL: Well, sugar, I told you one good turn deserved another! Now, how about that other cheek?

BARB: Mmm . . . All because Pepperell makes such good sheets—and makes all types, at prices folks want to pay. I'll always ask for Pepperell Sheets! Pepperell Blankets, too . . .

WE: More women know Pepperells than any other sheets they can buy! If your store is out, remember we're making more as fast as we can.

Pepperell Manufacturing Company, Boston, Mass.

PEPPERELL SHEETS are smooth, strong—finished with fine-stitched hems, Tapered Tape Selvages, "Tellmark" Tabs. And Pepperell's factory-sealed carton keeps your new sheets clean, fresh, "ready for bed!"

PEPPERELL Sheets and Blankets

LADY PEPPERELL • DUCHESS • COUNTESS • ABBOTSFORD

For Baby's Health

Light, airy, sweet-and-clean diapers—that's what you want for a healthy, happy baby. CHIX Down-Weve gauze diapers—in bird's-eye weave—wash, rinse and dry fresh-smelling and soft in a jiffy. This helps prevent diaper rash.

For Baby's Comfort

The special weave of CHIX makes them specially comfortable because it's amazingly absorbent. In addition, it slows down the spread of moisture—so baby is less apt to be "soaking wet," and you save frequent changing of his shirt and bed clothes.

To Save You Time and Trouble

You'll find CHIX are truly "mother's helpers"—made of surgical-type gauze, woven in an unusually soft and absorbent weave. Inexpensive in the long run because, by folding according to directions, CHIX fit baby until he graduates into his first real pants!

Send for Free "Common Sense" Booklets on Dressing and Training Baby.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Chix

DOWN-WEVE GAUZE

DIAPERS

CHICOPEE PRODUCTS

Chicopee Sales Corporation
47 Worth St., New York 13, N. Y.

OTHER CHICOPEE PRODUCTS

DISPOSIES—Throw-away inserts of patented cotton Masslinn and cellulose, used with waterproof holder.

CHUX—Complete diaper, completely disposable. Excellent for travel, busy times, vacations, emergencies.

THE MEANING OF THE NUREMBERG TRIAL

(Continued from Page 32)

But, in fact, this is not the law. The critics have misread the law. As Mr. Justice Jackson demonstrated successfully to the four governments, the true reading of the law is as follows: before the Pact of Paris in 1928, it was lawful, at least for any state not a member of the League of Nations, to wage war—even a war of conquest and aggression. Since war was lawful, the rulers of a state were acting legally when they ordered their troops to fire, and those who were killed were war casualties, not the victims of murder. The difference between murder and war is that murder is illegal killing, whereas in war killing is under certain conditions legal. It was as lawful to kill in war, within the limits of the rules of war, as it is to kill in a legal execution.

The legal question then comes down in the last analysis to this: under what law was it a crime for Goering to order German troops to kill Dutch troops, for instance, on Dutch soil? We have seen that under international law he had no legal right to give the order which resulted in the killing of these Dutch troops. We know that under American law, German law, Dutch law, to kill deliberately and illegally is murder. The killing of these troops was murder. The only legal question then is whether it was not only murder under American, German and Dutch law but under international law as well. It is a fine point, and if Mr. Justice Jackson can be said to have created any new law, it is here. He could have let Goering be tried for murder under Dutch law in a Dutch court, or under Norwegian law in a Norwegian court, or under the law of any other state which was unlawfully attacked. Or he could have let Goering be tried under German law. For murder is and always has been a crime under German law. But Mr. Justice Jackson took the position that since murder is a crime under every code of law, it is a crime under universal law, under international law, or the law of all the nations.

THE idea of a universal law is not a new one. Piracy is a universal crime: a pirate, no matter what his nationality, can be tried and condemned in any court anywhere in the world. Some lawyers boggle at this, arguing that there is no specific statement which states that murder is an international crime, and that, therefore, to try Goering as an international murderer is to apply ex post facto law. But is this much of an objection? If murder is a crime in every country, are we doing any violence to the law or to the principles of justice when we arraign Goering for doing what was a criminal act anywhere, everywhere and always?

We can see how little substance there is to the objection by reminding ourselves by a concrete example of what would be a genuine case of prosecuting a man under ex post facto law. In America the law states that you must drive on the right side of the road. In England the law states that you must drive on the left side of the road. Suppose that on a Sunday in May an American driving his car in Chicago kept to the right side of the road. Suppose that in June the Illinois legislature changed the law, adopted the English system and made it illegal to drive on the right side. If, then, the Chicago driver were arrested in June for the way he drove his car in May, he would be charged for doing something which, when he did it in May, was legal. He would be the victim of ex post facto law.

The essence of the injustice would lie in the fact that a perfectly good and reasonable man could not know, except by consulting the statute book, which side of the road to take. In England he would obey the law by driving to the left; in America, by driving to the right. Therefore, if you make a new law, you must not punish him for anything he did when he was obeying the old law.

But Goering cannot argue that it was ever legal anywhere to commit murder, and that in trying him for killing innocent people deliberately and illegally, he is being tried under a newly invented law. Mr. Justice Jackson refused to admit that Goering could kill illegally and yet be legally immune. He has insisted that under international law, once aggressive war had been made illegal, Goering could not get away with murder!

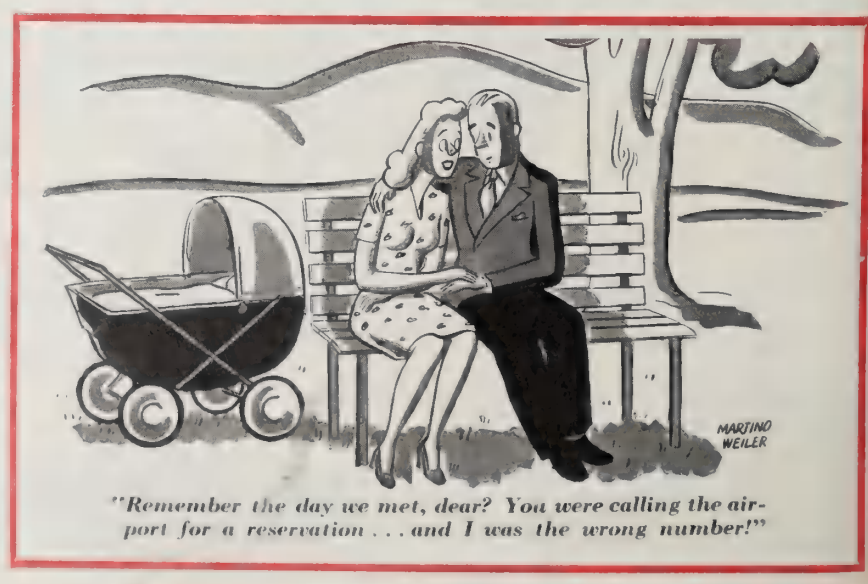
Now why, since Goering could be tried under Dutch, Norwegian, Polish or German law, is it of such great importance to establish the precedent of trying him for the same crime but under universal law? Since he is undoubtedly a criminal, why go to the trouble of insisting that he is an international criminal?

Because this clarifies the law. It establishes a clear precedent that there is such a thing as world law. In the long view it is impossible to exaggerate the importance of this. Goering was one of the rulers of the German state. Under international law in the nineteenth century, and indeed until Mr. Justice Jackson applied the Pact of Paris, the ruler of a state was not legally accountable outside his own country. If he ordered his troops to wage aggressive war abroad, that was no crime for which he was accountable, except to his own government, and there was little likelihood that his own government would ever punish him. If his country was defeated in that war, he could not be punished, though his country could be. This was sheer anarchy—that is to say, the absence of law—and it is against this anarchy that Mr. Justice Jackson has moved in.

When he has finished with the case—supposing that nothing unforeseen happens—it will be the clearly established law of the world that any person who wages aggressive war—be he a private citizen, an emperor, a king, a president, a commissar, a foreign minister, a general or whatever—has committed a crime for which he can be arrested, tried and, if convicted, punished. The fact that he was the official of a sovereign state is no defense. There is a law above everybody on earth, and there is no right of sovereignty by which any government or any man can say that this world law may not be enforced.

To appreciate how revolutionary and epoch-making this is, we have only to remind ourselves of the debates about the United Nations Charter. In that charter the five great powers have what is called a veto. They can forbid the United Nations Organization to enforce its decisions. But no one can veto the law as it is being established at Nuremberg. Veto or no veto, it will still be a crime to wage aggressive war. Veto or no veto, the rulers of the state will be personally liable as international criminals.

The real purpose of the charter is, therefore, protected by the Nuremberg process. Because of what Mr. Justice Jackson has done, it is impossible for the members of any government to claim that their veto gives them the right to be immune from punishment. It is now impossible for an aggressive state to say, "We are exercising our veto, and there is no right to interfere with our aggression." For the answer will be, "Though we cannot interfere with your aggression under the Charter, there remains the world law, and under that law, which you cannot veto, your aggression is unlawful and your responsible rulers are criminals, and we have the right and the obligation, fixed by the Nuremberg precedent, to bring them to justice."



I do not think there is any doubt whatsoever that this is the right view of the situation. The world society which we call the United Nations has a Charter, written at San Francisco and ratified by the great majority of the states of the world. But besides the Charter, the United Nations also has a body of law, which is stated in the Charter of the International Tribunal that is judging the Nazis at Nuremberg. The charter of the Tribunal has been agreed to not only by the four governments—namely, Great Britain, France, the Soviet Union and the United States—but by more than twenty of the civilized countries of the world.

The Nuremberg Charter and the San Francisco Charter are equally binding in law and in morals on the nations which have subscribed to them. And if anyone wishes to understand what is world law, what are the rights and duties of governments and of individuals in the United Nations, he must read both the charters and construe them together. He will then see that whereas the San Francisco Charter contains a veto, the Nuremberg Charter overrides any veto when the crime of aggressive war is committed.

EVERY student of American history will recognize where Mr. Justice Jackson got the fundamental idea of holding the rulers of the German state personally accountable for breach of the peace. He got it from the debates in the American Constitutional Convention at Philadelphia in 1787. That convention met to deal with the anarchy and disorder under the Articles of Confederation. Now if you read the Articles of Confederation today, you will see that they were in essence a treaty among sovereign states. They provided for a league of states as did the Covenant of the Geneva League of Nations, as does the San Francisco Charter of the United Nations. There is really no substantial difference, and there are the most striking similarities, between our own Articles of Confederation back in the 1780's and the San Francisco Charter.

The Articles of Confederation proved to be too weak to keep the peace. Why? Because, as Alexander Hamilton and others argued at Philadelphia, there was no way to enforce the law against individual citizens. There was then no way to enforce the law. If the law was violated by a state or inside a state, there was nothing the United States could do about it except to complain and protest. Therefore, in the Philadelphia Constitution, which is our present Constitution, a new principle was introduced: it was that the

(Continued on Page 190)

"Remember the day we met, dear? You were calling the airport for a reservation . . . and I was the wrong number!"

"When I was a baby it happened to me...

NOW IT'S HAPPENING TO MY BABIES!"

"I wonder if there are many families like ours," writes Mrs. Basil Robinson, of Rochester, New York. "Not only was I raised on Clapp's myself—when Clapp's were the first baby foods ever made—but now I've got two Clapp-fed babies of my own!" And she continues . . .

'Douggie was just 3 years old when these pictures were taken, and Linda was 22 months. I'd just taken them to the doctor and heard the happy report that they just couldn't be healthier!

"As a matter of fact, neither one has ever been sick. (Maybe I should knock on wood!) They're both terribly active, and into everything. Sometimes it's all I can do to keep up with them!

When Douggie was ready to start strained foods, didn't have a minute's doubt about what brand to get. For Mother had always let me know that I was a Clapp-fed baby—and my babies were just bound to be Clapp-fed babies too!

"Linda has pretty much followed Douggie's stages of development all along. She weighed 6 lbs. at birth, while he'd weighed 7 lbs. 11½ oz. But for the past year she's always weighed exactly 2 lbs. less than he has, and has been exactly 2 inches shorter.

"Both of them have enormous appetites—and they've always loved their Clapp's foods. I'm sure their nourishing, well-balanced diet has done a lot to make them such healthy, happy children. So you can see why I'm so loyal to Clapp's!"

Why your baby will thrive on Clapp's:

- Ever since Clapp's originated baby foods 25 years ago, we've made all our foods to fill doctors' requirements.
- We've constantly improved our formulas, added new foods, according to doctors' suggestions. Now we offer "the world's largest baby menu."
- We make every test we can, because we want to.
- We discard many fruits and vegetables that would be perfectly acceptable for adults, but not, in our judgment, for Clapp-fed babies.
- All our foods are pressure-cooked—to help retain vitamins and minerals, fresh color and flavor.
- We have seen two generations of babies raised on Clapp's. Our business, we believe, is the most important business in the world. It is our sole business, not a side line.

- Perhaps this is why so many doctors prescribe Clapp's regularly.

This is the 25th Anniversary of

CLAPP'S BABY FOODS

—the first baby foods

PRODUCTS OF AMERICAN HOME FOODS, INC.

TOONERVILLE FOLKS
by FONTAINE FOX

Quick as a flash your carton of Chef BOY-AR-DEE becomes that epicure's delight, an authentic spaghetti dinner.

No tedious fussing over home-blended sauce; no precious time lost grating cheese. Everything ready and everything just right, for the tastiest feast hungry folks ever enjoyed.

Thrifty, too—only a few pennies a portion. Treat your family often to a Chef BOY-AR-DEE Spaghetti Dinner...THE meal of the week!

Children adore it!

Here's That Famous
"Meal of the Week"
Ready in 12 Minutes!

The handy Chef Boy-Ar-Dee carton provides a complete spaghetti dinner, all prepared but for the quick final cooking:

1—A full 8-ounce package of golden spaghetti, made of select durum wheat. Cooks to perfection in just 12 minutes—plump, firm, and tasty.

2—A large jar of savory spaghetti sauce created by Hector Boiardi*, world-famous chef. It's already blended—needs only heating.

3—A canister of specially aged and extra-fine Parmesan style cheese, grated for sprinkling.

Makes a big platter of tempting spaghetti goodness for three or more heavy eaters.

* Pronounced BOY-AR-DEE

Chef BOY·AR·DEE
Spaghetti Dinner
A PRODUCT OF AMERICAN HOME FOODS, INC.
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

(Continued from Page 188)

laws of the United States could be enforced against individuals anywhere in the United States. It was this principle, that the laws bound all individuals, which transformed the confederation into our federal union, which created out of what was only a league of many sovereign states a national union.

At Nuremberg Mr. Justice Jackson has introduced this same principle of individual liability into the United Nations. It is, therefore, true to say that this is the event which marks the beginning of the first world state in the history of mankind. Once the principle has been established that there is such a thing as universal law binding every person in the world, men have set their feet upon the road that leads to a universal state.

The road will surely be long, hard and broken. We shall not soon or easily establish a world state under a world government. I at least do not think we shall. Nor do I think it likely that having taken the initial step, we can now disarm, or consider that "power politics" are abolished, and that wars have been prevented. There may, we must admit to ourselves, be many wars before the union of mankind in a universal state is achieved. After our own federal union was established, we had a civil war. The unification of national states has been a long, tough and violent business. The unification of mankind is likely to be a long, tough and violent business. But this principle is the fundamental principle by which, however it is achieved and whenever it is achieved, the unification will come about. It is upon the foundation of a universal law binding all persons, establishing their individual duties and rights everywhere, that mankind will eventually reach unity. There is no other way, no other possible way.

It will be one of the chief glories of our time that this great beginning was inaugurated; and to have participated in it, merely by understanding and appreciating it, will constitute as great a claim as most of us can hope to make upon the gratitude of the generations to come.

THE "ONE WORLD" DELUSION

(Continued from Page 6)

America, and it is not. The history of the United States is not the history of Britain. Immigration to America has introduced enormous changes in the original American race; the American climate and continental size have created a different type of person and mind from the British. We may deepen a "fraternal association," but any attempt to put us again under one government would have to be the result of force, and have to be maintained by force.

The agreements at Yalta and Potsdam resulted in the reincorporation into Russia of Latvia, Esthonia, Lithuania, part of Poland, Moravia, Carpatho-Ruthenia, and part of Finland. This was made possible by the presence of the Soviet armies. It was an act of force, and it will have to be maintained by force and the ruthless liquidation of thousands of human beings. To bring these peoples under the one government of the Soviet Union, hundreds of thousands of persons had to be deported from their ancestral homes. Hundreds of thousands more fled into exile or, being in exile, have preferred to remain there. Rationally speaking, it would certainly seem safer for them to be within the great Soviet "security" system than living the precarious life of small states, but they don't like it, and likes and dislikes are part of human nature, and therefore factors of politics.

Even within Christendom, countries with a long tradition of Catholicism have a quite different culture from countries that have been Protestant since the Reformation, or countries that have belonged to Byzantine Christendom since the great schism, and the difference is even visible to the naked eye. Even Western Europeans, all of whom stem from mixtures of the same races, and all of whom have the same basic religion, and who

EVERY DISH A COUP DE MAITRE!

There's never any doul about any tuna dish . . . hot or co . . . when you use these famou brands of quality tuna. Every dis is a culinary triumph . . . delica and delicious! For, only the tend light meat is packed. With ma of our boats still "in the Navy" yo dealer can't get all he wants, ev yet. But we're supplying hi with as much as we can, as oft as possible.

VAN CAMP SEA FOOD CO., INC.
Terminal Island, California

FAMOUS VAN CAMP SEA FOODS

Buy EITHER Brand.. the quality is the same onally should have had a common gov-ment for centuries, resist it to this day, every attempt to create one government had to resort to force—the French atipt under Napoleon; the German under ler.

But now we are asked to imagine that we join, under One World Government, ssia, with its Byzantine and tyrannical
ory; Western Europe, Insular Britain; Middle East, with its nomadic traditions its cultural allegiance to the Koran; na, Egypt, India; the South Pacific isds, rebelling from European rule; the ted States and Latin America! Why, n the Americas could be put under one ernment only by conquest, and kept e by tyranny.

he concept is one of those mechanical s that can be born only in the heads of em builders, who more than any other an species have trampled the world in d to create world orders that have in-ably been born in strife and dissolved in s.

ne World Government could be imposed by force and kept imposed by the most nscionable despotism and a single mity international party, like the Com-ist, which would hold all power ruth-
y. It could not possibly be "demoic," for a democratic world government ld break up at the first session.

is, nevertheless, conceivably possible all nations might agree to the mutual ptance of a single world law, prohibiting settlement of disputes between them orce—that is, war. Whether or not they ld conform depends on the world law's ing no other function of government ex-that single one: the constraint of force n instrument of sovereign states against other—that is, a purely negative func-
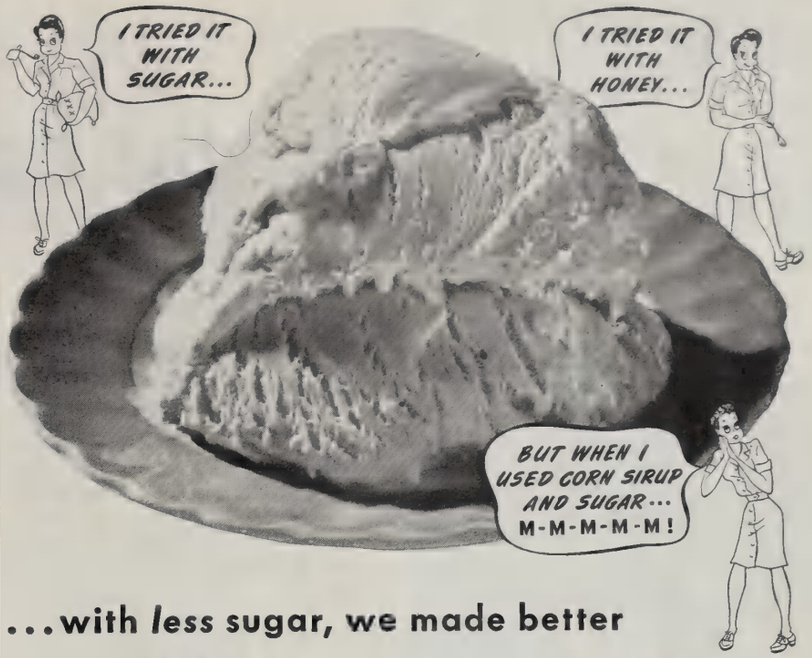
. Sovereign states might put themselves er the authority of an international law ibiting war, only on condition that it lved no further interference whatsoever nd checks against armament. That is greatest and only hope, and that alone is what we should strive for. For the rest, our motto must be the old, tried political wisdom of "live and let live."

Any attempt at more than that purely negative function would inevitably mean the introduction of a world-wide reign of terror, the last and worst form of war. The attempt to create one world civilization—without which there is no possibility of one government—whether that civilization were American, British or Russian, would result only in a world-wide civil war, accompanying a world-wide international war.

Furthermore, the theory that the constriction of space by the increased speed of communication, having brought the world geographically nearer, will naturally bring peoples and civilizations closer, is highly dubious. The French hate the Germans and not the Chinese just because the Germans are closer. If the Chinese were on the Rhine they would hate the Chinese. The Roman imperialists never had a war with the Vikings because they were too far away.

Actually, if war could be abolished from the world, the French would like the Germans, at least more than they do, and vice versa. But if war were abolished, and with the abolition of war there were no more opportunity to unite mankind under one government by force, there would probably be a natural tendency of some civilizations to draw closer together and others to move apart. The natural affinities and disaffinities would operate, between civilizations, as they do between persons. Many of the existing "unities" would break up. Others would form themselves.



God would still "fulfil Himself in many ways, lest one good custom should corrupt the world"—to quote Tennyson, who, like all poets, saw the truth about humanity more clearly than do the system builders.

Our world is a "house of many mansions," and God forbid that it should ever be turned into the apartment house of uniform flats; for the day it is, that house will be a prison, with bars on the windows, and guards with machine guns at the gates.

By Munro Leaf

THIS Can't-Take-It is a person that makes life miserable for just about everybody who knows it. It can't stand being disappointed in anything without screaming at the top of its lungs, jumping up and down and acting like a cross between a tiny baby and a kangaroo having a fit. This Can't-Take-It couldn't go along in the car when it wanted to, and, even though it should not have gone at all, it is having such a fit of temper that it looks as though it will probably burst. Some people probably wish it would.

...with less sugar, we made better

RENNET-CUSTARD ICE CREAM!

by Mary Mason
DIRECTOR OF THE TEST KITCHEN

We've just made a wonderful discovery! We've learned how to make the smoothest, most delicious rennet-custard ice cream ever turned out in our test kitchen—and we've done it time after time, so it's no accident. It happened when we were seeking ways to help homemakers save sugar and still enjoy incomparable rennet-custard ice cream. We found that half sugar and half corn sirup made that wonderful ice cream even smoother—even more lusciously like Grandma's unforgettable hand freezer ice cream. It's so smooth and satisfying that once you try it in your automatic refrigerator, you may never want to make any other kind again! Try these recipes—and see the amazing difference for yourself!

'Most everyone said, "It's out of this world!"

VANILLA ICE CREAM

1 "Junket" Brand Rennet Tablet
1 tablespoon cold water
2 cups light cream
¼ cup sugar
¼ cup corn sirup (Karo, Sweetose, etc.)
1¼ teaspoons vanilla

Dissolve rennet tablet by crushing in cold water. Mix light cream, sugar, sirup and vanilla. Warm slowly, stirring constantly. Test a drop on inside of wrist frequently. When COMFORTABLY WARM (110° F.), not hot, remove at once from heat. Add dissolved rennet tablet and stir quickly for a few seconds only. Pour at once, while still liquid, into freezing tray. Do not move until set—about 10 minutes. Then place in freezing unit and freeze until firm. Remove to bowl, break up, and beat with rotary beater till a thick smooth mush. Finish freezing.

Some folks preferred our . . .

HONEY ICE CREAM

1 "Junket" Rennet Tablet
1 tablespoon cold water
2 cups light cream
⅓ cup strained honey
¼ cup chopped nuts (if desired)

Follow same directions as above. If nuts are desired, stir in when ice cream is beaten, after first freezing.

Old-time favorite—with all sugar

CHOCOLATE ICE CREAM

1 "Junket" Rennet Tablet
1 tablespoon cold water
2 cups light cream
½ cup sugar
¼ cup cocoa (not Dutch process)
1¼ teaspoons vanilla

Mix sugar and cocoa; add cream slowly, mixing to smooth paste. Add vanilla. Then follow directions above.

SEND coupon for FREE SAMPLE!

. . . Please send me enough "Junket" Rennet Tablets to make more than a quart of ice cream . . . also many more exciting sugar-saving recipes.

"THE 'JUNKET' FOLKS,"
Chr. Hansen's Laboratory, Inc., Dept. 26,
Little Falls, N. Y. (In Canada: Toronto, Ont.)

Name .....
Address .....
City ..... State .....

"JUNKET" is the trade-mark of Chr. Hansen's Laboratory, Inc., for its rennet and other food products, and is registered in the U. S. and Canada.

SERVING THROUGH SCIENCE TO PROTECT AN ACTIVE BOY'S FEE

He can be the boy he wants to be in KEDS

He's showing off one minute. He's jumping or turning cartwheels the next. A normal, active boy lives on his feet. His fun gives them hard work to do.

He can just forget his feet if he wears Keds. The sure-footed soles help his balance, take some of the risk out of stunts. The Scientific Last lets his toes move in healthy, barefoot freedom, protected from barefoot dangers. When he falls off that fence or drops out of a tree, whenever he runs, Keds Shock-Proof Arch Cushion softens the jolts. Keds let a boy have more fun.

Four generations of shoe building experience give Keds everything a boy wants in a shoe. Breathable uppers mean cool, fast-running feet. Keds are as washable as his shirt.

KEDS SHOCK-PROOF ARCH CUSHION

(in certain shoes) absorbs jars and jolts—helps avoid overstrain and fatigue. A Keds feature famous for years.

KEDS SCIENTIFIC LAST

is designed to fit growing feet. Gives straight-line toe action. Barefoot freedom with protection.

HYGIENIC KEDS are kept clean and odorless—the right way. Plain soap and water. Tub-able and scrub-able.

"U.S." Keds The Washable Shoe

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Genuine "U. S." KEDS are made only by United States Rubber Company. Look for the name.

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY

ROCKEFELLER CENTER, NEW YORK

Mothers—Teach Your Child to Swim When Young

BY VICTOR E. LAWSON
International Swimming and Athletic Coach

ONE of the first questions asked me by the mother of each of my swimming pupils, as she brought her child to me for instruction, was invariably, "Victor, is my boy old enough to learn to swim?" or "Victor, what is the best age for my little girl to begin?" It seems that every mother wants to have that question answered, for whether she was Mrs. Evalyn Walsh McLean at Palm Beach, Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan at Long Island, or Lady Lauderdale in England, each mother, though eager to have her child take up swimming, was uncertain as to the child's having reached the right age.

Mr. Lawson, proof of his word, shows swimming builds muscles.

Usually I would explain that it is a very short step from crawling on the floor to swimming, which is, roughly speaking, just crawling in the water. You mothers have seen how well and how unbelievably fast a child can get around the floor, using his arms and legs in the motions we call "crawling." Well, provided that the water is as accessible as the floor, a child will take that step according to his own desires and just as naturally as he crawls. No one has to teach a child to crawl on the floor, as you well know. So, the earlier you take your child to the water, the earlier he will learn to swim. The first stroke a child learns, called the "puppy paddle," is as instinctive as that crawl along the floor.

Children love motion and action. I have seen tiny tots of but two years going through on the dry sand the arm motions of a swimming stroke after watching some children or a parent swimming in the water. How well you know what a little mimic your own child is in every way. In general, however, I believe that a child will be anywhere from four to six years of age before he or she can become an accomplished child swimmer. Only a little one who is taken to the water at an early age, who practically grows up beside the water, can acquire the confidence in his buoyancy and the knowledge and love of the water that make him an intelligent and fearless swimmer at an early age.

Fortunate is the child whose mother gets him off to the earliest start possible in learning how to swim. I happen to be one of these fortunate sons, for I am able to cherish the happy memory of such a wonderful mother and always remember with appreciation the opportunities she opened up for me by giving me an early start at this great health-building and body-developing sport. A splendid swimmer herself, she was eager for her son to appreciate the great pleasure of this sport and its value in keeping fit. Today, even at her advanced age, she enjoys good health and still maintains the lovely, graceful figure that swimming builds for women and helps them to retain through the years. It is my opinion that a son or daughter can never be sufficiently grateful to such an understanding mother.

Start your child, then, as early as possible, for swimming is more than just fun. As you have watched your child develop from a wee bit of humanity with a tiny wobbly head, you must have observed the demonstration he gives of what muscles can do for a human being. You have seen him kicking away for all his worth as he developed his muscles and finally was able to stand erect, and walk, and talk.

This need of the muscles for activity is one that never ceases. Your child's body will grow and develop throughout life to the extent that he participates in proper muscular activity. This is true not only of a baby or young child, but of children of all ages and of adults too. But whereas the child goes at his muscular activity guided by instinct, it is strange to find that adult men and women often have to become ill before they realize how much the body requires muscular activity.

Swimming is a sport that stops for building muscles—not big, bulging ones, but long, flowing muscles that give poise and power to the body, and develop good posture and well-shaped limbs.

In addition, however, to this body-building activity, swimming gives your child the advantage of hours of wholesome fun in the great outdoors—the stuff that teaches him self assurance and gives him the feeling that there is so much to see and do, so much to learn, and that the world is a great place in which to be alive.

Now, while swimming is a wonderful means of supplying the body with proper physical activity, there are still other tremendously important reasons why you should teach your child to swim.

You have learned, for instance, how necessary it is for your child to have a continuous supply of fresh air, so, as he grew, you have wrapped him up and set him outdoors to drink in his fill of the air. In that air is oxygen. It is a gas that the body uses to promote the growth of the body tissues. Do you know that the oxygen that is taken into our lungs as we breathe is then carried along hundreds of miles of blood vessels to every part of the body? It would seem that Nature planned very carefully for the body to get its quota of oxygen, and it would seem also that Nature intended every human being to swim.

Let's do a little comparing, and you will soon see why I make that claim. If you place a human body in the position in which the lungs can breathe in the largest supply of air possible, the amount of air taken into the lungs will be seven quarts per minute. Remember that figure, please:

7 quarts of air per minute.

Now, look what happens in swimming. That same person by doing a swimming stroke in the water can breathe in 45½ quarts of air per minute.

Roughly speaking, that is 6½ times as much air.

So, you see, when your child swims, he or she can take in 6½ times as much oxygen into his body. That extra oxygen intake is one reason why swimming is such a wonderful sport for strengthening the body. As you know, oxygen is used by the body to hasten the removal of worn body tissue, thus making way for the new growth. The process of renewing the body tissue is continuous throughout life, and therefore we should all try to get as much air into our lungs as possible.

Still another reason why every child should swim is that the water itself has therapeutic value. Also, the action of the water, as the body moves through it, is very soothing to the nerves and therefore helps to strengthen them. These facts about the value of swimming are now very generally recognized by all health authorities. Swimming has been made a part of the Army program—especially for promoting the health of wounded men. The swimming pool at Army hospitals is considered a very important department.

So you see there are many scientific and logical reasons why your child should learn to swim as

1 The first swimming stroke is as instinctive a baby's crawl. The sooner you take yo child to the water, the better it is for hi

2 Your child can practice the motions with the water. First let him "paw" the air, rea out and then bring his arm way back to his si

3 Extra oxygen intake is one reason why swi ming is such a wonderful sport for building body. It lets you breathe 6½ times more oxyg

4 Once in the water, try holding him while moves legs. Keep well behind him—he'll g if he needs you. Soon he won't want to be he early as possible. If you choose an opportunity when you are at the beach, you can begin by placing your little child at the edge of the water to play—where the end of the wave will wash gently over his legs. That is his first swimming lesson—getting properly acquainted with the delightful waves. He will want to see your face down beside him, so do not stand up, but sit down or squat down and play a game with him.

Most children love the thrill of the ever-coming and ever-running-away water. However, if your tiny tot feels strange or timid, you can get him to build a big sand castle and let him enjoy the fun of the wave washing the castle away, a sight that never fails to delight the young folks. Pretty soon he will want to run after the water as it recedes, and in no time at all he will have overcome any strangeness he may feel at the start. If you keep him interested and occupied, he will not have time to feel afraid and will adjust himself to this new situation.

Another way to do is to dig a big hole and let the water in. He will sit on the side, splashing with his feet and having a grand time, then he will experiment and explore.

Little boys in particular love to dig a big hole or trench and make a pond for the water to flow into. If you help them and encourage them to make it deep enough, the hole will form a fine little swimming pool, where the child can practice his beginning stroke with perfect safety and get the feeling of the water supporting him. This pond should be near enough for water to reach it with each incoming tide, so that the pool will be constantly freshened. A little digging each day will keep the pool from filling up with sand.

Suppose, however, you have a timid little girl on your hands, who does not seem to be progressing as you would like. You may want to try playing pickaback. Walk out in the water and bend down, letting the waves come over both of you a little. In this way she will get used to the feeling of the water and will soon realize that it is good fun. If you duck your face into the water, she will want to try that too.

When your child begins to feel at home in the deeper water, about up to his chest, so that he can scramble up again if a wave has bowled over him, show him how to crawl along in the water, using hands and knees. Stay with him at the start, moving along beside him to give him confidence. Have him watch some other child if possible, and soon he will catch the rhythm of the arms as they move in the "puppy paddle" stroke, as the child's first stroke is called. You will understand the advantage of watching another child, but you can also show your child how you move your arms, reaching forward one after the other.

Next try holding him, while he practices moving his legs. Keep well behind him and hold him very gingerly by a piece of the bathing suit with your right hand, being ready to grasp the child's body from the underside with your left arm—scoop him up easily, out of the water and into your protecting arms—should a strong wave catch him unprepared. Be sure to laugh and make a game of any such happenings, and set the child back in the water again immediately and very casually.

You will have to use good judgment at this stage. The child will be eager to go ahead on his own, and you must not destroy this self-confidence. After one or two attempts, most children do not want to be held—boys especially. So, you see, you will have to keep well behind the child and carefully conceal from him your hold of his swim suit. It is usually enough for the child to know that you are there, and in case of difficulty he will grab you—have no fear of that, for his instinct for self-preservation is primitive. If

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

It's a Mystery to Me

By Constance J. Foster

THE latest whodunit has nothing on the things that go on at our house. Why is the cooky jar always empty? I have examined it carefully and it has no hole in the bottom—only a crack where it was mended after it had been knocked off the shelf by a wicked little gnome, no more than a foot tall. Johnny saw him do it, so who am I to doubt?

Who vanishes my scissors? What happens to all the screw drivers? Why are there never any pencils when it is time to start for school? It makes me suspect that a genie lives in our house, but though we have set bottles for him, baited with everything from a full-masted sailing vessel to a drop of champagne, we have so far been unable to trap him.

Why is it that rubbers are all invariably at school when we wake to a rainy morning? Surely some malicious spirit must be responsible. Perhaps, Ruthie suggests cheerfully, he isn't really bad, but just web-footed himself and doesn't know that wet feet can cause "new-monya." (She spells it that way herself, which is another mystery, because all the other children take after their father and never misspell a word!)

How come that brothers and sisters who disagree so violently that strangers in the neighborhood are directed to "go up the hill and turn left by the house where the children are always quarreling," suddenly turn into a United Nations when any one of them is attacked by an outsider?

"Scram—he's my brother, see?"

"But you just pulled his hair yourself," I remind them.

"Sure, what do you expect? He's my brother, isn't he?"

Page Sigmund Freud, friends. This one is a real psychological mystery, too deep even for Ellery Queen or the Shadow.

Why does Janet, whose room resembles Hiroshima after the atomic bomb struck, always emerge from it looking as if she came out of a bandbox, while Ruthie, who is as fussy as an old maid about her belongings, invariably looks as sloppy as a washday clothesline, flapping in the breeze?

How can it be that when I scold Pete for rushing out coatless, hatless and rubberless to take a crack at a squirrel with his new shotgun in a driving downpour, he is always perfectly dry but demands, "Where's an old rag? Gotta wipe off my gun. It's soaking wet!"

I've tried to solve these mysteries in the scientific spirit. When the large cut-glass rose vase was found in fractured pieces, I applied the fingerprint powder that came in Johnny's G-Man kit. The evidence pointed conclusively to the involvement of all four, though each had stoutly denied the crime. So they were punished, looking innocent to the bitter end. The next day came a letter from Great-aunt Sis, who had been visiting us. "Am sending you a new container for flowers. Sorry I forgot to tell you I broke your other one the day I left."

Mysteries like these abound in our house. I'm completely baffled trying to fathom them. But the weirdest one of all is the Mystery of the Perfect Child. I never meet him, but apparently the neighbors do. The myth is always coming back to me. It goes like this:

"Johnny is such a perfect gentleman. At the party he was really an example to the others. How in the world do you manage to to make him so courteous and polite?"

Or the school report goes: "We find Janet a well-adjusted child with socially responsible traits and emotional maturity."

How did it happen? It's a mystery to me!

If Your Child is THIN AND NERVOUS

By all means try Ovaltine!

IF a child's diet lacks certain food elements serious things can happen. Stunted growth, soft bones, poor teeth! Faulty nerves, loss of appetite, defective eyesight!

Ovaltine supplies food elements frequently deficient in ordinary foods. Three glasses made with milk provide a child's daily requirement of vitamins A, $B_1$, C, D and G, and minerals Calcium, Phosphorus and Iron.

But Ovaltine is more than just a vitamin carrier. It also provides basic food substances—complete proteins to build muscle, nerve and body cells—high-energy foods for vitality and endurance. It thus acts as an insurance against food deficiencies that retard normal growth.

So if your child is thin and nervous, or eats poorly, why not turn to Ovaltine?

OVALTINE

Off to a Royal Start

A sterling silver cup for dimpled newcomers. Handsome enough today to become an heirloom tomorrow, and twenty years from now it will hold cigarettes or flowers on a coffee table. Engraved with a single initial, it's 2⅛" high, 2¾" in overall diameter.

$9 inc. tax & post.
Sorry, no C.O.D.'s

A. WEILER & COMPANY
Greenwood, Mississippi
Down in Dixie

ET 'EM SWIM!

IT'S SAFE—IT'S FUN
WITH STAY-A-FLOAT

Filled with soft Kapok six times more buoyant than cork, can't bruise or puncture, no air to leak out. Adjustable straps (patented feature) hold Stay-A-Float securely in place—it can't slip up or down. This sensational life preserver and swim vest makes swimming easy and safe for everyone. At department, sporting goods or marine stores—for children or adults.

FREE Expert swimming instructions, how to teach beginners, how to master speed strokes. Write today

AMERICAN PAD & TEXTILE CO. Dept. 4, GREENFIELD, OHIO

STILL'S THANX
AIDS IN CORRECTION OF THUMBSUCKING AND NAILBITING
50c AT DRUG STORES

you are not a swimmer, you should remember that the human body floats very easily when relaxed—when there is a complete absence of any tautness of the nerves or muscles. As most children are relaxed, they float easily.

You can also let your child practice the arm motions while out of the water. Build a big heap of sand. Place him face down on it—his tummy on the sand heap and his body balanced, leaving arms and legs free to move. First let him "paw" the atmosphere, reaching out and bringing his arm back again to his body. Remember that one arm should be reaching forward while the other is moving back to the hip. That is the way I used to do when coaching little Brenda Frazier, who became a prize swimmer and developed into such a glamorous beauty with a lovely figure.

This "pawing" stroke, the puppy paddle, is the stroke that comes naturally to all children, as it is just a simple pawing motion of arms and legs similar to those made by a dog when swimming. However, it will also form the basis of a good American crawl stroke, which the child will learn later.

Practice in the puppy paddle should always be a form of fun. You should avoid any discipline. Give your approval freely. Be sure to avoid any display of nervousness on your part. Avoid raising your voice as you give instructions, but use your clearest, but soft and encouraging, tones. If he moves his arms incorrectly, do not call attention to what he is doing wrong, but rather say, "Can you do this, dear?"; "Try it this way"; or "Here's a better way to do that." Show him the how and why and what of the matter.

As a rule, a child will try very hard to do what he should, in order to win your approval. Be very patient and show him as often as necessary. However, do not tire him out. If he is trying too hard, just say, "You're getting along fine," and then add, a minute or two later, "Now it's time for a run on the beach!" It is very important that he leave the water, feeling he has done well. He will have made some progress, even though it may not be apparent at the moment. Remember that the body, legs and arms and head must all be relaxed in swimming, so if the child is timid or nervous do not expect too much, but endeavor to build his confidence in the meantime.

I have saved one important point, because it should be handled by you at your discretion, but as early as possible. That is, always to tell the child to close his mouth if the waves come at him or if his face is in the water, and also to "Spit out the water if it gets into your mouth." The action is something that the child very quickly learns to do in the water. An adult must also learn to spit out the water if it gets into his mouth. Tell the child that the ocean is very salty and is not for drinking. You can even scoop up a little in your hand and let the child taste how salty it is and then spit it out.

I haven't mentioned the breathing method for this puppy-paddle stroke, for it is just the normal method of breathing, which the child will perform naturally; that is, in through the nose and out through the mouth.

Most children take naturally to the water if allowed time to get used to this new sensation. Some, however, are timid at first, but I have seen even the most timid and scrawny little tots develop into fine strong swimmers and well-developed and lovely shaped bodies.

I wish that every mother could realize how much swimming means to the development of her child and to the fine opportunities for good, clean fun and sociability this sport presents for everyone. Remember, too, how the precious vitamin D—the sunshine vitamin—is absorbed by the body at the same time the child is out for an afternoon of swimming or when spending the summer vacation at the beach.

Go to it, mother, with your child's first swimming lesson. Who knows, you may have a fine Olympic swimming champion in your family! And though I have mentioned the ocean, a lake or other waterway adapted to your needs will be suitable. So I say again—teach your child to swim when young.

When tiny tantrums mean
"Childhood Constipation"

...give Fletcher's Castoria!

"It's the laxative made especially for infants and children."

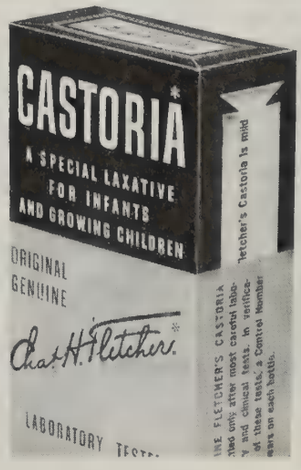
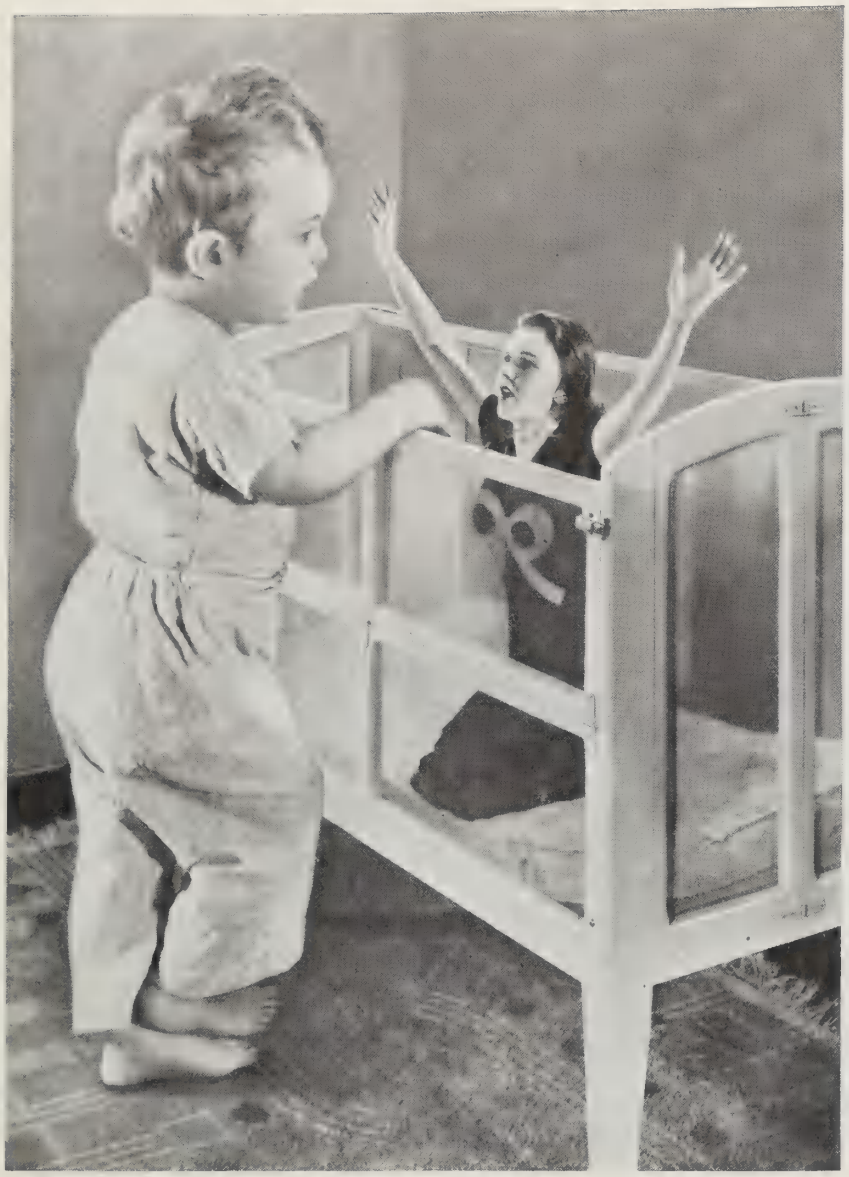
WHEN your baby shows his temper, and those unhappy tantrums come from "Childhood Constipation"... it's time for you to do the wise thing:

Give him Fletcher's Castoria. It works thoroughly and effectively—yet, it's so gentle it won't upset his sensitive digestive system.



Unlike adult laxatives—which may be too harsh—Fletcher's Castoria is specially made for children. It contains no harsh drugs, and will not cause griping or discomfort.



And Fletcher's Castoria has such a pleasing taste that children really love it. They take it gladly without forcing.

Get Fletcher's Castoria at your drugstore today. Look for the green band and laboratory control number on the package.

Always take a laxative only as directed on the package or by your physician.

Chas. H. Fletcher
CASTORIA
The original and genuine

"I know it's no picnic, Mom!"

BABY: Didn't I tell you a baby's life is tough, Mom? But you had to try it—to believe me!

MOM: Lamb—you were so right! I hate being parked in one spot. I'm miserable from wriggling around. Does a baby's skin always feel as uncomfortable as this?

BABY: That depends, Mom. A baby's skin can be smooth and soft as a stork's wing. Providing, of course, his mother treats him right with Johnson's Baby Oil and Johnson's Baby Powder!

MOM: Darlin', I didn't know! But I'm willing to learn!

BABY: Okay, Mom. First lesson—smooth me down with pure, gentle Johnson's Baby Oil, after my bath. Use some more at diaper changes, to help prevent what my doctor calls "urine irritation."

MOM: Yes, teacher. And then?

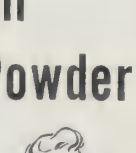
BABY: Lesson two—Don't forget there'll be times when I need lots of soft, cool sprinkles of Johnson's Baby Powder to help keep chafes and prickles away!

MOM: Let's go—for the Johnson's! Here's where I start taking honors as a mama!



Johnson's Baby Oil
Johnson's Baby Powder

Johnson & Johnson

WAYNE F. MILLER

Baby won't die of pneumonia unless mother is blind to the signs. But fever plus pain is reason to think a cold is more than just bad.

PNEUMONIA

By Dr. Herman N. Bundesen
President, Chicago Board of Health

ONCE a name to strike terror in the hearts of mothers, pneumonia is no longer the dreaded disease that, only twenty years ago, killed nearly a third of the babies who became infected with its germs. Today, medical science fights back with telling effect when pneumococci attack. Except in rare cases, children do not die of pneumonia any more—unless mothers fail to recognize the signs and act promptly to get medical science on the job.

Still, pneumonia is a treacherous adversary, quick to take any advantage that is offered. Especially when children are weakened by fatigue, undernourishment or previous illness, it may spread so rapidly that within a few hours the child is in grave danger.

So here is the most important rule for mother to remember: When there is any reason to suspect pneumonia, call the doctor now! It is never safe to "wait and see" when pneumonia could be the cause of sickness.

Chiefly, the signs to look for are chills and fever; pains in the chest or side; general soreness, raspy breathing and coughing. Sometimes one or more of these symptoms are missing; fever plus any one of the others is reason enough to be doubtful that it is not "just a bad cold."

Until the doctor arrives to determine specifically whether or not the sick child has pneumonia, keep him in bed—and make certain that he stays covered and quiet. A little aspirin may be given to relieve chest pains and general discomfort, but don't give any sirupy cough medicines; these can easily get into the air passages and add to the difficulty. Instead, use a steam kettle in the child's bedroom; this will make breathing easier and help the cough some. Sponging with lukewarm water will bring the fever down a little, but, if this is done, particular care must be taken to prevent exposure and chilling. If possible, give the child some warm, nourishing food and fluids to keep up his strength. However, he may not feel like taking anything, and food should not be forced on him.

One way the doctor can tell immediately whether or not the bronchi and the lungs are involved is by tapping the chest with his fingers. Where the air passages or cells are filled with infectious matter, he hears a comparatively high-pitched, dull sound instead of the low, resonant tone which is the response of the normal lung. When congestion is found in the bronchial area, the diagnosis is likely to be bronchopneumonia; when the rm, sunny days call for healthfully "ven-ed" Little Yankee Sandals — scientifically gned, like the entire Little Yankee line, skilled New England craftsmen, and built special last which provides ample "grow-room." Top-quality materials throughout. white and brown. 8½-12. ths B,C,D. Little Yankees priced at $4 and up. The kee Shoemakers, Division the Sam Smith Shoe ipany, Newmarket, N. H.

GRATEFUL young mothers from Maine to California tell us that Doctor Bundesen's baby booklets have been of the greatest help to them in caring for their own babies. The first eight booklets cover your baby's first eight months. They sell for 50 cents. The second series of booklets covers the baby's health from nine months to two years—seven booklets for 50 cents. The booklets will be sent monthly; be sure to tell us when you want the first booklet. A complete book on the care of the baby, a necessary supplement to the monthly booklets, OUR BABIES, No. 1345, is 25 cents. A booklet on breast feeding, A DOCTOR'S FIRST DUTY TO THE MOTHER, No. 1346, sells for 6 cents. Address all requests to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania.

THE YANKEE SHOEMAKERS

LITTLE YANKEE

GREAT SHOES FOR LITTLE AMERICANS"

If someone betrays you once, it's his fault. If he betrays you twice, it's your fault.

—RUMANIAN PROVERB.

greet the NEW BABY with a

Cuddle-Nest

3 GIFTS IN 1

PAD, PILLOW AND QUILTED COVERLET

Cuddle Nest is the perfect gift. In pink, blue, or white quilted satin with Kantwet's famous wetproof lining to keep a chubby angel socially acceptable. For trips in the car or his own carriage. Any new mamma will bless you for it.

AT LEADING STORES

A "KANTWET" PRODUCT

entire lung is involved, it is called lobar pneumonia.

Depending on the severity of the disease, the general condition of the child, the distance to be traveled and the circumstances in the home—including the likelihood that other children might become infected—the doctor will decide whether or not hospital care is necessary. The fact that he rules in favor of the hospital is no cause for alarm; on the contrary, it means added protection in the form of constant attendance by professionally trained people who have all the drugs and equipment that might be needed.

The sulphonamide drugs are now the most widely used weapons to combat pneumonia. Taken by mouth in pills or capsules, these lifesaving chemicals act with dramatic swiftness to check the multiplication of pneumococci, so that the body's own disease fighters, the white cells of the blood, can destroy the germs with comparative ease. Often this happens so rapidly that the fever is reduced and the other symptoms are noticeably diminished within twenty-four hours after the drug is first taken, though usually from four or five to seven or eight days are needed before all signs of disease disappear. If the child is kept at home during the acute period, it is mother's responsibility to continue the same care—chiefly rest, warmth and nourishment—that is required from the very beginning.

Many times nowadays mothers ask the doctor to give their children penicillin instead of the sulphonamide drugs, believing that this will make recovery quicker and surer. While pneumonia is treated successfully with penicillin, it is no more effective than the sulphonamides in most cases—and it has the great disadvantage of having to be given by intramuscular injection instead of by mouth.

To answer another question that mothers are asking in increasing numbers: There is no evidence yet that streptomycin, another new "miracle drug," is useful at all against pneumonia. None of the drugs, moreover, is effective against one form of the disease, known as virus pneumonia or pneumonitis. Fortunately, this type is usually short-lived and is almost never fatal.

Because its germs invade the respiratory tract, pneumonia is passed easily from person to person by coughing and sneezing—and often by the "hand to mouth" route, when germs are deposited on objects and picked up by the fingers. During the war, its infectiousness made pneumonia a major medical problem among troops living close together in barracks. So Army doctors worked to develop a vaccine which would aid in preventing the disease. Successful results were obtained with vaccines made from a starchy substance which surrounds or encapsulates pneumococci in the body. However, it will be some time before these vaccines are widely available.

Some pneumococci are found in the membranes lining the mouth, nose and throat of healthy people all the time. Doctors do not yet understand just what it is that suddenly makes some of these germs active in those who get pneumonia. It is known, however, that they are most likely to become virulent in people whose general condition is poor. Mother's job, then, week after week throughout the year, but especially during the winter season when pneumonia is most prevalent, is to see that the children get plenty of rest and sleep, and regular, well-balanced meals. Excessive fatigue and exposure to cold and dampness are hazards which must be avoided. Above all, the child with a cold, sore throat or cough should be kept home in bed until these symptoms have disappeared. The day will never come when mothers can be excused for carelessness resulting in exposure to pneumonia.

ONE MOTHER TO ANOTHER

Traveling around the countryside near my home, I can see the farmers busy in the fields. It gives me deep satisfaction that many of these crops in the form of prepared baby foods will help to feed America's babies!

Mrs Dan Gerber

Hello, Mom...Time to eat?

Every mother knows that newly waked look just before feeding time! Yes, eating can be the greatest pleasure your baby knows. You can be sure baby will enjoy every spoonful of Gerber's. For Gerber's Baby Foods are made to taste extra good, with smooth, uniform texture just right for easy digestion. The selected vegetables and fruits are first carefully washed in pure, artesian water, then cooked the Gerber way by steam . . . to retain precious minerals and vitamins. Be sure to get Gerber's—with "America's Best-Known Baby" on the label!

Two Excellent Starting Cereals

Gerber's Cereal Food and Gerber's Strained Oatmeal are made to suit babies' needs as starting cereals, and all through babyhood. Both mix to a creamy, smooth consistency; both have generous amounts of added iron and B-complex vitamins needed by most babies. Serve by adding milk or formula—no cooking.

Remember, it is wise to check your baby's feeding program with your doctor

Gerber's

FREMONT, MICH. OAKLAND, CAL.

Baby Foods

Cereals Strained Foods Chopped Foods

19 kinds of Strained Foods, 9 kinds of Chopped Foods, 2 special Baby Cereals.

Free sample ..... © 1946, G. P. C.

My baby is now ..... months old; please send ... samples of Gerber's Cereal Food and Gerber's Strained Oatmeal.

Address: Gerber Products Company, Dept. 86-6, Fremont, Mich.

Name.....

Address.....City and State.....

"I hate to be a meddling neighbor...but"

NEIGHBOR: I notice Tommy practically lives in those sneakers. And I was...

MOTHER: Certainly he does, darling. You see, Tommy's shoes have "P-F."

NEIGHBOR: "P-F" indeed! Never heard of it.

MOTHER: Then it's high time you did. "P-F" means Posture Foundation. This special, built-in feature keeps the bones of the feet in their natural, normal position, and . . .

MOTHER: "P-F" guards against flat feet and strained, tired leg muscles. I have it in my own tennis shoes, and I know!

NEIGHBOR: Well, I declare. Do all canvas shoes have "P-F"?

MOTHER: No, "P-F" is a Patented Feature. It's found only in canvas shoes made by B. F. Goodrich and Hood Rubber Company.

NEIGHBOR: Well, I'm certainly glad to know about it. That's just the kind of shoes I ought to get for Johnny!

HOW "P-F" PROTECTS FEET

1 This orthopedically correct, rigid wedge keeps the bones of the foot in their natural, normal position.

2 This sponge rubber cushion protects the sensitive area of the foot.

"P-F" means Posture Foundation

—a Patented Feature found only in canvas shoes made by

B. F. Goodrich or HOOD RUBBER CO.

NOT BEAUTIFUL

(Continued from Page 20)

it! It was so little her own private property that she had forgotten it. He would not have believed it of anyone else. Standing there, he felt tears sting his eyes. It brought back everything: the ship, the men, everything moved before him as a motion picture run too rapidly and blurred a little, but with a continuity all the same.

They had been a long time in Massacre Bay. The long slow patrol, back and forth, the fog, the silly piping birds, the snow and the broken back of Attu; back and forth, back and forth, with chilblained hands and faces and the rough wool hoods under their thick coats and oilskins. He had certain deck duties, though he was a pharmacist's mate.

The men were not busy enough. They seemed to pass into a strange hiatus where they waited for something that would never happen. That was when they talked too much. If he himself hadn't talked, it was only because he felt he had not much to say. They talked about their wives, their sweethearts, and other women too. He saw many a curvaceous beauty tacked to a bulkhead. He heard many a man say things he would never have said to other men under other circumstances. Lying in his own bunk, or sitting watching the card game and listening, he had remembered that there was a story about a man named Tarquin he had read. Some man had boasted once too often of his wife's beauty and favors and had inflamed the brutal Tarquin. It was something like that now, except that the girls were safe at home and no one to harm them—none from this ship, anyhow.

It was Proctor who had the beautiful wife. Walter felt a pang of envy—he could not deny it—when he looked at the pictures Proctor was always showing. "They really don't do her justice," Proctor said. "Her skin's kind of translucent, if you know what I mean. And her eyes are really and truly like violets. They are dark blue." Her hair was beautiful, her face and figure were perfection. Walter did not believe he had ever seen a more beautiful woman. Whether the pictures were smiling or serious, whether she was dressed elegantly or just had on old ski clothes, she was so beautiful it took one's breath away. Now and then she sent Proctor a new picture, a snapshot or a big new tinted photograph. Proctor was madly in love with her. He could think of nothing, talk of nothing but her beauty. He was enthralled by it. She was to get a movie tryout. She had won a contest.

WALTER looked at the small, smiling snapshot he carried in his own billfold, but he didn't pass it around. It wasn't that he was ashamed of Ilene, in her trim little suit and narrow high-heeled pumps, with the beret on her smooth hair. No, not at all. But it was a picture that wouldn't mean anything to anyone else. And all the time he was away she had never had her picture taken, or sent him a new one. He had wondered if she had changed. But she had not. She was not more beautiful, nor less so either. She was just Ilene. One night Proctor wakened them all with a terrible dream. He cried out in his sleep, he wakened sobbing. He was so shaken that Walter took him in charge and gave him a sedative. He held onto Walter's arm a few minutes after he drank the bromide. He looked at Walter haggardly.

"I dreamed she was old," he whispered. "I dreamed she was very old—and ugly. My great-grandmother lived to be ninety. She had things—like warts, they were—on her face. I dreamed Marybelle had them, that her skin was brown and wrinkled."

"Nuts," said Walter. "She's still twenty years old. You'll be dead long before she's ninety."

But he lay awake in his own bunk. Marybelle would get old, he thought. No matter how well she took care of herself. If she didn't die, she would get old—and ugly! Not that Proctor would mind, when the time came. He'd be old himself. By that time,

Little Dianne Green, White Plains, N. feeds baby sister with modern Even

Evenflo — America Most Popular Nurse

Everywhere you go, you see babies being fed with handy Evenflo Nursers. Mothers, and sometimes fathers, write us that modern Evenflo is far superior to the old type pull-on nipples. They say Evenflo makes baby feeding just as easy while traveling as at home. They report, too, that Evenflo's valve-action nipple enables babies to finish their bottles better and get more benefit from their food. Evenflo Nursers are 25c at baby shops, drug and dept. stores.

Evenflo

Nipple, Bottle, Cap All-in-One 25 Ce

Double-tipped makes cleansing quick — ste tion makes Q-Tips safe! Use Q-Tips double-ti sterilized swabs for easy, safe care of your b ears, nose, and other delicate spots.

STERILIZED Q-TIPS Double-tipped SWABS

25c & 45c PKG.—ALL STORES. Q-TIPS, INC., N

Heir Minded MATERNITY DRESSES From Janne

The newest in smart Maternity Dresses for home and street wear. Darling frocks for comfort and concealing lines. surprisingly low prices. A dress for every o

FREE from HOLLYWO New catalog sent upon request wrapper, free. Write today.

JANNE OF HOLLYWOOD, Dept. 133, 5071 Hol Blvd., Hollywood, California.

SAVOGRAN REMOVER & BLEACHER Renews Floors!

AT PAINT AND HDWARE STORES WRITE FOR CIRCULAR K

THE SAVOGRAN CO., BOSTON 10, MASS.

y, there'd be more to his love than just young worship of her young beauty. e should be, anyhow!

was Benson who had the clever wife. ad met and married her in college and ad taken all the honors, to hear him tell he had a wonderful job in New York. had made a great deal of money and about with smart people. Now and she sent Benson a clipping in which columnist mentioned her name along the names of the great and famous. was devoted to Benson, she was abso- y loyal to him. She was interesting the people in a good job for him when his was done. Benson had never had a job is life. He had come into the Navy ght from school. It didn't seem to worry He had no trade or profession of any just a medium education and a clever Maybe it was enough. Benson bragged t her. He was satisfied, but it would not left Walter very peaceful. He'd have worried if he were Benson.

ut though they all bragged and talked f turn, it was Clarke who really said too . Clarke thought his wife more beau- than Proctor's, but no one else agreed him. She was, in fact, a sultry-looking ber, the men agreed behind Clarke's , looking at her picture, whistling le. In the photograph her head was ng back on a satin pillow and her dy dark hair was loose, curled softly the pillow. Her face was turned three ters toward the camera, with plead- eyes and softly shining lips. Those were made for kissing, and Walter felt e others felt. He felt desire and was med of it—and ashamed of her and e too. But Clarke was in love with her. ad what he wanted. It was all he ed. She was Eve herself. Perhaps they all a little jealous of him. Perhaps they ed her, too, or someone like her!

s own marriage, Walter knew, was of the fabric of his own character as as Ilene's. Kindness and restraint and rdless affection had been their portion. small golden flame of passion they had d, but never mentioned. It was some- that might disappear if they ever e of it. But Clarke's wife wrote long t letters to him. He left them lying t. Some of the younger men had picked r two up and read them, their faces et with mirth. Ilene's affectionate, times whimsical letters would not in- t anyone but him.

, well, every man got what he asked for, er supposed. Maybe he himself had for too little. He had been a kind of ent, he knew, always working and try- o get through school with no one to help But it was a strange thing to learn t such women here in this frozen, fog- d waste, this timeless, lightless end of orld.

ne of them was really surprised when te went into his slump, when he quit eating and ended in sick bay. The word went around the ship. His wife had gone off with some other man. It was inevitable, Walter felt. She was not to blame. The very thing that Clarke loved her for made it inescapable that she could not endure separation. It was her function to delight, to stir. She had to be what she was. They were all cold and hard toward her now, and hated her. Someone tore down the picture of the head on the satin pillow, and when Clarke came back he never asked about it. He hadn't much to say.

There were others too. There were the glamour girl, and the actress, and the fashionable girl, who was always broke, buying clothes. Of course there were dozens of girls and wives like his, just good girls that no other man would even think about or look at. There were a lot of them, he knew, and their men didn't show their pictures or their letters or talk about them, save to some special friend, and then guardedly. Just ordinary girls.

But somehow the conviction had grown on Walter. He didn't know when it started, how it came to be not just an idea, but a conviction that he, himself, had missed romance. Yes, he came to believe it. He accepted it as true that he was not in love. He was just one of those to whom a great love never came. No great beauty, no great or stormy passion, no glamour or excitement or tragedy or power! Just a girl he'd always known and liked, who waited for him until he got through school, and helped to buy the house and postponed her desire for a baby till his long service was ended. Just a girl who saved his money and loved him and no one else.

No, it wasn't the money! He could have managed that, or done without it. It was just what all of this suddenly meant to him. He drew a deep breath. He caught her hand in his and looked at her.

Not beautiful; but, oh, it was so pleasing just to look at her!

Not voluptuous; but, oh, the comfort of her small firm hand!

Not ardent; but every thought she had was turned to him!

Not fashionable; but she was neat and orderly, and this would last as long as there was bone or bit of flesh to her!

Not clever; but here was all this money she had saved!

Not glamorous. Oh, no! She was, in fact, almost invisible to a stranger's eye, but her honor was as sturdy as her health!

What did a man want, he asked himself. There she stood, and she was his. His honor, his good name were safe with her. His children would be safe with her. His health and his comfort, as well as theirs, could not be in better hands. His money was safe with her; his getting on in the world. And his love! No love was ever safer than his own!

His heart swelled to bursting. He caught her in his arms and held her hard.

"Believe me, if there were a woman running this country we'd have two-way-stretch girdles back by now."

Glass PROTECTS. And baby's food can be heated and refrigerated right in the jar.

It guards his health .... the Duraglas Jar!

YOU: I always feel so safe about buying my baby's food in glass. I know that a glass jar just can't affect its contents.

US: And after you get it home—

YOU: Oh, it saves me so much work. I heat my baby's food right in that clean little glass jar—

US: And when your baby has finished eating . . . ?

YOU: I re-seal the jar and pop what's left into the refrigerator in the self-same jar. Saves using extra dishes —and saves waste, too.

US: D'ye mean not a bit is wasted?

YOU: Not a smidgin! I buy all the family's fruits and vegetables in glass . . . It's so thrifty to see exactly what you're getting . . .

There are a thousand and one other things you buy for which Duraglas, the modern container, provides the same ideal, economical protection. Owens-Illinois Glass Company, Toledo 1, Ohio.

Duraglas
TRADE MARK REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

His father's a Doctor—

Tommie Q. is a doctor's son. So he's being raised with all the benefits of the most modern scientific care. Isn't he a healthy, bright-eyed youngster?

Tommie at 21 months
Weighs 34¼ lbs., is 37½ in. tall. (At birth he weighed 7 lbs. and was 18½ in. tall.)

His cereal is CLAPP'S!

Why so many doctors feed their babies Clapp's Baby Cereals

—because, in addition to fine whole grains, these special cereals provide extra food elements such as dry skim milk, wheat germ, and brewers' yeast.

—because every spoonful of Clapp's Instant Cereal gives a baby—

3 times as much iron as unfortified home-cooked cereals.

2½ times as much vitamin $B_1$ as most of the unfortified home-cooked cereals.

—because every ounce of Clapp's Instant Cereal provides:

Vitamin $B_1$—0.3 mg.
Vitamin G—0.1 mg.
Iron—6 mg.
Calcium—96 mg.

—because the texture of Clapp's Baby Cereals is fine but definite.

—and because preparation is so simple.

PRODUCTS OF AMERICAN HOME FOODS, INC.

No cooking needed. You just add milk or formula right in the serving dish. Try Clapp's Instant Cereal or Clapp's Instant Oatmeal today.

*Name on file at CLAPP'S BABY FOOD DIVISION, American Home Foods, Inc.

Ask your Doctor!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Facts About Left-Handedness

By Roy E. Hoke, Ph.D.

MANY a mother is unduly concerned about the problems of a left-handed child. If the child has difficulty with reading, writing, spelling or number relationships, if he develops a hesitation or stutter in speech, parents wonder whether the trouble may not have been caused by the child's confusion about handedness. Especially is this true when the child has been changed from a left-hander to a right-hander. Let us review the facts of the subject as they are known.

Some individuals are able to use either hand with equal facility in all types of manipulation. This is called ambidexterity, or both-handedness. The great majority of people use the right hand only to make the finer manipulations, and use the left hand for holding. This is called dextrodextrality, or right-handedness. Some few people use the left hand for the finer manipulations, and this is called sinistrodextrality, or left-handedness.

To be a left-hander does not mean that one is odd; it simply means that one is in the minority with reference to his preferred hand. It rather implies difference, and in no sense inferiority. There are advantages and disadvantages for left-handers. It may at times be an advantage to use the left hand, as in some positions on the baseball team—where, by the way, the left-hander is referred to as a southpaw. While a left-handed catcher or third baseman probably would not prove satisfactory, left-handed pitchers may be very good. A football player who can pass with his left hand is dangerous. In writing shorthand, left-handedness is a decided disadvantage, in the opinion of some teachers. In typewriting it may be an advantage, as most of the work is done by the left hand on the standard typewriting keyboard.

All animate nature shows the principle of duality, or right and left handedness. Plants twist and turn and climb mostly to the right, but some few to the left. Animals are probably more ambidextrous than man, but we do find left-handed flounders, left-handed lobsters and left-whorled molluscs. There is a twinning of amethysts where there is a union of two crystals, one right-handed and one left-handed. Quartz is found in right and left handed crystals. Of course, there are right and left handed sugar, dextrose and levulose, as is well known.

SAVAGES of the present day have approximately the percentage of handedness that is found in civilized races. Many of the arrows and artifacts of the early American Indians were made by left-handers and for left-handers. Two of the oldest skulls of primitive man—the Neanderthal and the Cro-Magnon man—were both right-handers. This can be determined because a right-hander has a larger left side of the cranial vault or skull. While there is some evidence that there were left-handed tribes in the early days of the world's history, it seems clear that the usual condition was one of right-handed predominance.

The percentage of children who are left-handed varies in different parts of the world and in different countries. In the United States there are four boys and two girls out of a hundred in the general population who are left-handed. Children at birth are fairly ambidextrous. About 72 per cent of babies show their final hand preference before eighteen months of age. Most mothers, however, at some time or other are convinced that their child will be a left-hander.

While it is true that left-handedness is not an oddity today, it is also true that primitive man did so consider it. To him it appeared different or awkward. In fact, in some languages the word for left-handedness a awkwardness are one and the same. C numbers have always been considered l handed and even numbers right-handed, p haps because odd numbers give child most trouble in arithmetic. A left-han oath became one which was not to be ke A "left-handed wife" was the term used mistress. A left-handed marriage was a m riage of convenience or morganatic. through history the right is considered male and the left as female. Man with right hand placed the ring on the woma left hand in marriage. This was intended show the dominance of the male over the male. It is also interesting to note t Galen, the great physician of about 150 A. claimed that there was left-handed pote for drugs. He directed to "pluck cert herbs before sunrise with the left hand."

THE Bible mentions the right hand eig times, ambidexterity twice, and the left h twelve times. Not once is the right hand ferred to in dishonorable fashion, and once is the left hand referred to in honor fashion. The blessed are always on the r and the damned on the left.

What is the cause of left-handedn Many explanations have been offered, no one theory is universally accepted. S say that handedness is determined by tr ing. Civilization tends to encourage ri handedness, it is said. Heredity is the ca others claim. The speech center in the b seems to have something to do with hand ness. The position of the baby in the ute seems related to it. Primitive man cove his heart with his left arm and used the r for fighting. This habit, some say, fi right-handedness. One outstanding psyc ogist says he can train any child to be a l hander. If this is true, handedness woul a matter of environment. The left side of brain has the better blood supply. might cause right-handedness, and is perh the most widely accepted theory. The e cause of left-handedness has never b discovered.

Benjamin Franklin at one time wro letter advocating the training of the left h up to the level of the right. In England s societies stress this ambidextrous deve ment. Psychologists generally do not f this movement today.

There is a formula which indicates degree of handedness for any person. arrived at by means of a test which show what extent a child or adult is given to use of either hand. For instance, one will be found to be practically 100 per left-handed, and another 65 per cent handed.

Some children who are changed from handers to right-handers do stutter. A number who are changed experience no effects.

A left-hander has a large dominant brain and his speech center is on right side. The left-hander is also left-e When a child who was born a left-hand changed to a right-hander, there is a turbance of the dominance of one side o brain over the other, his eye dominanc also affected, and the speech center likely receive conflicting impulses from hemispheres of the brain at one time. may lead to slowness in speech or a stu Coupled with all this is the emotional produced by the nagging of parents teachers who correct him whenever he the "wrong" hand.

Many children are so weakly left-ha that a change will produce no bad eff Other children are so strongly left-ha that they violently resist the change.

Your Stanley Card,

Gives so much pleasure

Through thoughts of you

That Mothers treasure.

STANLEY
GREETING CARDS

this latter group the emotional upset may be alarming. Nervousness and stuttering and other defects may appear. Before the handedness of a child is changed a very careful psychological study should be made.

Why should any child be changed from left-hander to a right-hander? There are laws against it in many states, and it is not done as a rule in the better schools. Left-handedness is just as natural as right-handedness and should be so considered. People must be educated to an appreciation of this fact.

Right-handers have plenty of trouble in school with reading, spelling and number relationships, and they also stutter. Any teacher knows that these difficulties are by no means confined to left-handers. In fact, some investigators have changed a number of children from left-handers to right-handers and produced no speech defects. In one school system it was found that only 10 per cent of the stutterers either had been or were left-handers.

On the other hand, it often happens that a man who loses his right arm and must, therefore, use his left arm for working, begins to stutter or hesitate in speech. The problem is not altogether clear, nor is all the evidence on one side.

A mother should seldom mention the matter of left-handedness to the child. He should never be made to feel different or inferior in that respect. If the child has difficulties in his studies, these difficulties should be dealt with as if the problem of handedness were not involved. Neither the mother nor the child should ever develop a complex on the subject. The child should use whichever hand he chooses in performing his duties. If the child appears to be left-handed, he should not be corrected whenever he uses the "wrong" hand. If a left-handed child has been changed to a right-hander and he later begins to have a speech defect, he should change back to the left hand, which was originally preferred. If handedness was the cause, the hesitancy or stuttering may in time leave.

Left-handedness is not an oddity or an affliction or a sign of inferiority. It is entirely natural. Remember that Michelangelo, Raphael, Leonardo da Vinci, President Garfield and many others of the world's great men and women were left-handers!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

I Saw a Dream

BY JANET WEINBERGER

I saw a dream last night and you were there;
Could almost touch you, felt the distance close,
Then held your head well molded in my hands,
And bending low your lips reflecting mine
As if their mirror wore a gauzy film
And I were not the substance that
I am.
Elusive lips, how tenderly I strained
To reach beyond the film, to touch your kiss,
To finger well the motion of the hair
And turn to tangible each formless glance!

And now, beyond the dream, the film is still
About your eyes like gauze; I am a form
That, passing, nods and swiftly moves along,
Touching your shadow carelessly with tears.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

SURE IT LOOKS CLEAN BUT play safe

BANISH TOILET ODORS WITH

- Cleans toilet bowls quickly
- Removes a major source of toilet odors
- Leaves fresh minty aroma
- Used as directed
- Bleaches porcelain
- Harmless to septic tanks

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF DEFECTIVE OR NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY

ON SALE AT YOUR GROCER

JUDSON DUNAWAY CORPORATION
(formerly Expello Corporation)
Dover, N. H.

I'm Putting Myself in Your Boy's Shoes!

Poll-Parrot Pre-Tester

Scores of Lively Youngsters Pre-Test Poll-Parrots for Your Children!

Each time we develop a new pattern, sole, heel, tip, or any other feature, we build it into at least a hundred sample shoes. Then scores of lively boys and girls Pre-Test them in actual wear for several months.

We keep records, keep testing, keep improving until each part has successfully survived the most grueling punishment. Then—and only then—are Poll-Parrots approved for your children. We've done this for 18 years.

That's why Poll-Parrots have hidden reinforcements at vital points. That's why they give your child the kind of fit, style, and wear no ordinary shoes can match.

For nearest Poll-Parrot dealer, see Classified Phone Directory, or write us.

ROBERTS, JOHNSON & RAND, ST. LOUIS, MO.
Division of International Shoe Company

EVERY IMPROVEMENT PRE-TESTED!

Poll-Parrot
& STAR BRAND SHOES
with BUILT-IN FIT for Boys and Girls

Mrs. James C. Cooke of Sunnyside, Long Island says: "I HAVE TO KEEP BARBARA'S AND CATHERINE'S CLOTHES SPARKLING CLEAN ALL THE TIME

—EVERYBODY NOTICES TWINS!"

The Cooke Twins are 8 years old and full of fun. Cathy is impulsive and curious. Babby is cautious, shy with strangers. Their Dad is teaching them to swim. They make up games to play with their twin baby dolls and their brother, Jimmy, who is just 4. Jimmy is the doctor; they're nurses.

"Twins make lots more wash," says Mrs. Cooke. "When one gets her dress dirty I have to change both. But clothes wash clean as a whistle in Rinso's soapy-rich suds. Undies come Rinso-WHITE. Washable colors come Rinso-BRIGHT."

Lucky for Mommy that Rinso's long-lasting suds make short work of washing! Besides playing with the turtle, the twins like to play "bus" with chairs. Jimmy is driver; they're passengers.

The Twins love to wash their doll's dishes or clothes in Rinso. But they'll jump at the chance to go in the car with Dad who is on the way to business. Their favorite outing is a picnic at the beach. Dad's waiting there to swim.

RINSO IS ANTI-SNEEZE

(PATENTED PROCESS)

— the only granulated soap 98% free of irritating sneezy soap-dust

SUDDEN DEATH IN THE HOME

(Continued from Page 29)

will ever be rid of the hollow in the calf of her left leg where the muscles never reconstituted.

Good but unintelligent intentions can be hazardous too. Mrs. Grace Anderson, a very tidy type, always scalded out her glass milk bottles after washing them—a sanitary procedure, but useless, since the milk company is legally obliged to sterilize them at the plant. On a very cold morning she scalded her bottles and immediately set them out on the step. The sudden shift in temperature, amounting to between 150 and 200 degrees, cracked a bottle in her hand and sent a long splinter of razor-sharp glass to slash the arteries in her wrist. If she had been alone in the house, her chances of bleeding to death would have been first-class. As it was, a clumsily applied tourniquet—you remember that first-aid course you never quite got round to taking?—did hardly any good, and from now on Mrs. Anderson is very definitely living on borrowed time.

Vanity, too, plus hurry, misplaced thrift and absent-mindedness, play vicious shares in these tragedies. Little Frances Hirsch had a lovely, fuzzy new sweater, bought downtown that very day and put on in anticipation of her husband's return from work—he liked his wife in sweaters, sometimes calling her Lana Turner with evident appreciation. Frances waited a thought too long before applying the match to the oven when she started supper, and a gust of igniting gas resulted. Many a housewife has lost eyebrows and front hair that way. In this case, the fuzzy sweater turned instantly into a seething shirt of flame.

Levelheaded even in her agony, she ran into a bedroom and rolled in a bedspread to smother the fire. But by then only a charred strip or two was left of the sweater and, waist to throat, front and back, she was a crimson statue of screaming pain. That much burned area can kill you. Frances survived. Now she knows about woolly sweaters too close to flame.

There was the thrifty girl who decided to dry-clean an evening gown herself instead of sending it to a professional. She dutifully remembered to do the job in the open air, knowing that to use inflammable cleaning fluids in the house is an excellent way to commit suicide and blow up the premises to boot. But she did not remember to overallow drying time for the gown after it had been saturated in high-test gasoline. It felt dry and had lost practically all its odor when she put it on for a gala evening at a friend's party. It still felt dry when she moved up closer to the leaping wood fire after dinner. She survived, too, largely because her host immediately knocked her backward on a large rug and rolled her in it. A second's delay and no hospital could have saved her. While the doctors were battling to give her a chance to live, she would actively have preferred to die and be rid of her shuddering agony. People sometimes wonder why, when she tans up in summer, freckles develop on her left arm but not her right.

Many a housewife has told many a daughter to make sure that all pot and saucepan handles are turned in toward the back of the stove. They get hotter to handle that way, but it is good insurance against accidental scalding. And many a daughter proceeds to forget this part of the time—like a certain mother of three last year whose apron string caught in the outward-jutting handle of a large kettle of water boiling in preparation for cooking sweet corn. Her smallest boy, just a little tyke, was tagging around after her in the kitchen. He got the full gush of the capsizing kettle, head to foot. His death was much less merciful than if his mother had picked him up by the feet and dashed out his brains on top of the stove.

The fact is that civilization—implying explosive fuels, domesticated fire, electricity harnessed in gadgets, cleanliness, medical use of poisons, artificial environments—has made the modern way of life a conglomeration of lethal traps. Mrs. Verna Muller had a fine old-fashioned, glass-doored, towering china closet. When the household moved, the heavy silver and china were taken out of its lower shelves for packing and it stood waiting empty, doors unlatched, for the men to lug away. Making a final checkup of the dining room, Mrs. Muller stood with her back to the thing, not noticing that the vibration of her steps on the bare floor had jarred its doors into slowly swinging outward. A creak warned her to glance round; but the closet, unbalanced, was already falling forward.

When they lifted the brutal mass off her, the doctors found a cracked shoulder, a lacerated ear, one arm broken above the wrist, the other wrist broken, four fingers broken, one ankle broken, and bruises all over her. She spent two months in a plaster cast, was on crutches for three months, walked with a cane for four and limped for six months longer still.

That was not bad luck. No piece of furniture should ever have been in so unstable a condition that taking out its contents would produce a crash.

In his old age the English statesman, Lord Balfour, was invited to speak at a banquet. The introductory speech was long and tiresome. As his Lordship was accustomed to retire early, when his time came to speak he arose and said, "You have asked me, gentlemen, for an address. Mine is No. 40 Carlton Gardens, and with your kind permission, I shall go there immediately."

—J. TAYLOR.

Those risks, bad enough for adults, are especially hazardous to children, who are not yet psychologically ready for the forethought and common sense that would save most adults, if they bothered. Left alone for a few minutes, a small boy electrocutes himself by biting moistly into an electric cord, as innocently as he bites into a wooden toy. Not that the toy is so safe either, if ignorant or careless parents have failed to make sure there is nonpoisonous paint on it.

A small girl decides to wash her doll clothes just as mother does and proceeds to feed her own arm into the electric wringer, which she has learned from observation to turn on. Her screams bring mother running to reverse the rollers and call the doctor. But it is too late for that blackening, swelling little arm. For all their usefulness, electric wringers can do worse than that unless their owners take precautions. Mrs. Harriet Cameron had heard she ought to tuck up her hair in some sort of turban while doing her wash, but she actually worked with her longish hair in neat braids. And one morning they found her, head jammed backward against the wringer, strangled in her own hair.

The loose window screen, the too widely spaced balustrade, even warm and protecting bedclothes—1500 babies die yearly of accidental smothering—lie in wait for small fry. Sometimes the devil exercises special ingenuity. A while back a neat small-town housewife finally got around to a long-planned cleaning out of the family medicine chest. She eliminated some thirty little boxes and bottles, the need for which had long since lapsed, and poured them into the ash can which, almost full, was waiting at the back gate to be emptied.

Two small boys exploring the alley after school found the collection in the can and seized the opportunity to play doctor in genuine style.

Gravely the doctor selected the proper pill for the patient's complaint—a dull blue affair that looked much fancier than the plain white and conventionally pink specimens in the other boxes—and gravely administered it, washed down by a swig from a bottle of defunct mouthwash. The mouthwash was harmless. The dull blue pill was bichloride of mercury, which the neat housewife had once used to sterilize things with during a family illness.

It seems unfortunate that the small boy had to die just to dramatize for his neighborhood that medicines are a hazard.

Every day in the week somebody somewhere succeeds in or comes close to involuntary suicide by taking the wrong pill in the dark or by failing to check the label before taking. It is not Milquetoastish, it is mere common sense, to stick pins in the corks of poison bottles or strap their tops with adhesive to call unmistakable attention to what is inside.

As for leaving medicines within children's reach, that goes in the same feckless category as putting pills in odd boxes or bottles without changing the labels. For drugs being what they are, actual poison is not the only risk. A youngster died not long ago of the consequences of finding, liking and eating most of a bottle of cascara pills.

The presence of medicines in the cabinet over the washstand helps the bathroom run a good second to stairs in the relative efficacy of the traps that civilization lays for its inventors. But the case for stairs is superlative. Few engineers could devise a better killing device, as some of the above shows, particularly when the fundamental ingeniousness of the contraption is supplemented by stair carpets, run-over heels, throw rugs at top or bottom, graceful curves and bad lighting. Slip on a level surface and you get only one blow as the floor comes up to meet you. Slip at the top of a stair and down you go with the hard edge of every tread hammering on the back of your skull.

Safety crusaders are consequently delighted with the modern trend toward all-on-one-level house design which, they hope, modern innovations in heating have now made practical in all climates. Cutting out cellar, attic and second floor cuts out at least three of those yawning pits for the careless, the sleepy, the unwary and the immature to tumble into.

Yet, until the world is rebuilt that way, a simple thing like an all-night dim light at the stairhead would keep many a drowsy man getting up to investigate a noise from taking the wrong turn—people do this even in houses in which they have lived for years—and getting thoroughly killed. The mere lettered word "Stairs" might have saved the life of a woman in a strange house a few years ago who, being called to by her hostess, opened the wrong door in a corridor full of similar doors and went hurtling down to smash herself up on a concrete floor in the dark.

But bathrooms cannot be discounted at all. Their lovely white or delicately pastel surfaces have tragically often made a shocking contrast for blood and violent death. Tub, toilet and washstand are all made of glass-hard porcelain or enamel baked over cold steel—sanitary but shatteringly dangerous to fall on, particularly on those numerous rounded edges which have about the same profile as a savage's skull-cracking stone war club. Add the slipperiness of soap and water, or just water, on such surfaces, lack of proper handhold bars to grip when getting into or out of the tub, and the quaint and prevalent habit of drying the feet while standing one-legged without a nonskid mat in the bottom of the tub.

Of course you may merely break a couple of ribs. But not long ago a girl who slipped in a tub knocked herself out face downward while the water was still running and was still dead hours later when they gave her up, drowned for all that artificial respiration could do. An elderly judge, a valued pillar of the community, slipped in the tub, accidentally turning on the hot water—which had been dangerously overheated—and scalded himself to death before anybody could reach him.

THEY dry in record time, indoors or out. That's one of their many advantages, which include —

1. Faster drying speeds diaper laundering, indoors or out.

2. Highly absorbent — surgical weave absorbs more thoroughly.

3. Foldline, woven permanently into fabric, makes it easy to adjust the fold to growing babies.

4. Have no hems to irritate baby's tender skin.

5. Easier to wash — open weave speedily cleansed with pure Ivory Flakes.

Mothers, medical authorities, and leading hospitals use and endorse Curity Diapers. Buy Curity Diapers at your favorite infants' store.

KENDALL MILLS, Walpole, Massachusetts

A KENDALL PRODUCT

"I GOT the RECIPE for beyootiful baby skin"

"Here's the recipe: Sprinkle mild, soothin' Mennen Antiseptic Baby Powder on baby's skin every day, for lovelier skin, 'glowin' with health! Mennen is smoothest—that means extra comfort. It protects better against diaper rash, urine irritation, many other troubles. No wonder more doctors prefer Mennen than any other baby powder. And new scent makes us babies smell so sweet!"

Twin Blessings for Baby

MENNEN

TAN MORE BEAUTIFULLY, SAFELY, COMFORTABLY . . . new beauty secret—mothers rave about their beautiful suntans (and baby's, too) with soothing, protective Mennen Antiseptic Baby Oil. Try it yourself now—best for baby, best for you!

For foot comfort

QUEST

All-purpose DEODORANT

The positive deodorant powder that destroys all body odors!

HEY, MOM! Don't be a Diaper Drudge! Dennison Diaper Liners reduce unpleasantness in changing and washing my diapers. Just fold a Liner inside diaper next to my skin. When soiled, flush away. No hard scrubbing. Sanitary. Helps prevent diaper rash. Costs only a few cents a day. BABYPADS: 200 for $1. DOWNEE-SOFT: 200 for 69¢.

FREE . . . To get one full day's supply of Diaper Liners write to Dennison, Dept. F-1, Framingham, Massachusetts.

Dennison
DIAPER LINERS
Wherever Baby Goods Are Sold

Time for Baby? Give her the right start!

When baby arrives, nurse her if you can. If she's a bottle-baby start her on the Davol "Anti-Colic" brand "Sani-Tab" nipple. This natural-way nipple helps to develop the muscles of mouth, jaw, and tongue. You'll find the complete and informative story in our free booklet offered below.

"Anti-Colic" DAVOL BRAND NIPPLES

FREE! Our helpful booklet Baby Feeding Made Easy. Send for it now! Write Dept. L-66, Davol Rubber Company, Providence 2, Rhode Island.

Being the wettest place in the house besides, bathrooms specialize in electrocutions, for human beings conduct electricity far better when in contact with water, even if it is merely a damp surface. No matter how cleverly modern bathrooms are planned with no electric switch within conceivable reach of the tub, there will still be plenty of unimaginative people who insist on taking in there and using electric heaters, electric razors, electric curling irons. Such things no more belong in that environment than lighted pipes belong in powder magazines. Or than the Luger pistol that Uncle G. I. brought home from Germany as a souvenir belongs anywhere but on a top shelf in a locked box with the ammunition drawn.

There is a great deal of luxurious comfort in taking a little oil heater into the bathroom when the house is chilly. Since the thing uses up a lot of air in burning—too much when the door is closed, as bathroom doors usually are—this makes a very luxurious way to die, if that is what you are after. A lady who tried that combination last year did have the gumption to be alarmed when she felt herself growing inexplicably sleepy in the tub. She managed an effort to get up and out, but dizziness overwhelmed her halfway and she tumbled groggily over the edge in a faint. All that saved her was having fallen with her face close to the crack under the door, through which could come enough life-sustaining air to stall off death until her sister found her.

There is nothing man is so anxious to preserve, yet takes less care of, than life. If some died and others did not, death would be a terrible affliction. —JEAN DE LA BRUYÈRE.

Human error again. Oil heaters don't know, and can't be taught, that, under those circumstances, they should obligingly go out. You have to think for them a little.

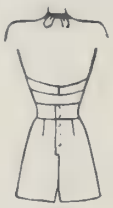
Nor do stepladders know that, when stood up unfolded with inadequate bracing so the lady of the house can wash a high window in a stair well, they should considerately refrain from falling. In that particular case the housecleaning lady found herself hung screaming by a broken wrist caught between the two window sashes. She was alone in the house. Her screams kept up for a while, but she was dumb with exhaustion, pain and fear when rescue appeared, hours later. In medieval times such a hanging was considered one of the higher and better tortures.

Such things happen too often, but the wonder is that they don't happen as much as human error prepares the way for. Visiting nurses are often supposed to report—as well as try to get corrected—safety hazards in the houses they visit. What they often find makes them wonder why half the world is not in a plaster cast. Here is a small footstool left in the middle of a badly lighted room through which people frequently pass. A closed staircase with three milk bottles on various steps. A baby playing on the floor within two feet of a frayed electric cord.

Many public institutions, such as the New York State Board of Health, are working hard to bring home safety into the public mind. So is the National Safety Council, the Green Cross outfit, working as hard in this field as it does in industry—just now, for instance, it is promoting co-operation among architects and contractors to see that new buildings and old buildings under remodeling incorporate elementary safety features. Much can be done by such organizations. But the thing worst needed is individual imagination—as in the case of the pensive wife and mother who, as it happened, didn't get hurt.

This is back on the cellar stairs again, the conventional tripping over an empty fruit jar that should not have been there. Fortunately, she merely lost her balance momentarily and only slid down three steps, finding herself sitting, sore and extremely shaken, on the fourth. As her breath came back, apprehension came with it.

Her year-old baby was in his play pen in the kitchen so she could keep an eye on him while she worked. On the gas stove was a kettle of water heating toward a boil. Nobody was due at the house for at least six hours. And just what would have happened to that baby if, instead of being there jittering on the fourth step, she had been lying unconscious—or worse—at the foot of the cellar stairs?



From that day to this, she says, she has never parked anything on the cellar stairs for any purpose at any time, and has had a far keener eye for hazards throughout the house. Maybe what the nation needs is a Fourth Step Club. Only, in the initiation ceremonies, be very sure that you manage to stop at the fourth step.

Back Views, Sizes and Prices of Patterns on Pages 40 and 41

1822 Coat, bra and shorts; 12 to 20; 25c.
1823 One-piece dress; 10 to 18; 25c.
1825 One-piece sun dress and bolero to match; sizes 10 to 18; 25c.
1837 Bra, skirt and bloomers; 10 to 18; 25c.
1839 One-piece dress; 12 to 42; 25c.
1845 One-piece dress; 12 to 20; 25c.

Buy Hollywood Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, postage prepaid, from Hollywood Pattern Service, Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada from 2 Duke Street, Toronto, Ont., Canada.

1822

1822

1837

1837

1839

1845

1825

1825

1823

1823

Trying to skip a week with us watching?

You'd think we were born yesterday!

MOLLY: Our own mother! Taking chances with us babies around!

POLLY: She told us herself how many germs can collect on the kitchen floor!

MOLLY: Well, there she goes! Mopping it up this time without "Lysol" brand disinfectant.

POLLY: Remember what she said about mothers who wait till somebody gets sick 'fore they add "Lysol" to the cleaning water, instead of using it every single time?

MOLLY: I recall the conversation exactly . . .

She said, "I wouldn't trust to just a washday bleach or cleanser if I knew germs were around. The doctor told me it takes a real germ-killer!"

POLLY: So . . .

MOLLY: "So I'll play safe every time I clean," she said, "because how do I know when germs may be lurking?"

POLLY: Those were her very words!

MOLLY: Of course, if she's out of "Lysol". . . .

POLLY: She better get right down to the drug store. We should never risk being without it!

MOLLY: Well, what are we waiting for? I could use a buggy ride right now!

MORAL: Every single time you clean . . . disinfect with "Lysol" Brand Disinfectant

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

"Lysol" the floors: Quick and easy. Just add 2½ tablespoons to each gallon of cleaning water. Won't harm paint, varnish or linoleum.

"Lysol" the kitchen: Powerful germ-killer . . . you need up to 6 times less than of bleach disinfectants.

"Lysol" the toilet: Actually helps remove stubborn stains because it's "soapy." Deodorizes, too!

More women use "Lysol" than any other household disinfectant. Don't ever risk being without it!

"LYSOL" is the registered trade-mark of Lehn & Fink Products Corporation and any use thereof in connection with products not made by it constitutes an infringement thereof.

Copyright, 1946, by Lehn & Fink Products Corp.

For FREE booklet on family health protection, send postcard or letter to Dept. G-46, Lehn & Fink, 683 Fifth Avenue, New York 22, N. Y.

"Wait till my bridge club sees them now"

"I guess I'd become used to those old curtains. At least I hadn't particularly noticed how wilted they looked until I overheard my bridge club gossips call them 'Droopy Drapes'. Well, something had to be done!"

"Lovely, crisp, new curtains

Vogue panels, floor length

Dainty and graceful, yet with tailored formality. That was the answer. And I found just the curtains . . . Vogue Tailored Panels. They're perfect! And they're tailored to fit my windows properly. (Oh, yes . . . there's a proper length and fullness for curtains.) Just wait till my bridge club sees them now!

"So take a tip from me. Don't you be embarrassed by 'Droopy Drapes'. Get crisp, new Vogue Curtains today! The better stores from Coast to Coast are showing VOGUE Curtains this Spring. Watch for their advertisements of 'Tailored-to-fit' Vogue panels and other Vogue styles—the Ruffler, the Priscilla, the Criss-Cross, the Flora Dora in these exquisite Vogue fabrics —the Bridal Veil, Clearweave, Cloudspun and Sheer-delite Marquisettes; Organet; Shadownet; and Triplnet."

MEASURE YOUR WINDOWS BEFORE YOU BUY CURTAINS

Diagram illustrates how to measure floor length curtains. Always measure to top of rod and add ½" for heading above rod · For sill length, measure to the sill · For apron length, measure to bottom of apron · For width, measure the width of the rod · A pair of curtains should be twice the width of the rod.

Vogue Curtains

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

ROBERTSON FACTORIES, INC. • 321 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

9 FACTORIES COAST TO COAST: Cincinnati • Cleveland • Detroit • Los Angeles • Pittsburgh • Portland, Oregon • San Francisco • St. Paul • Taunton, Mass.

From now on, Snow and Hildegarde will take up the sun chairs, the house will be full of flowers, and June again will be too short.

Diary of Domesticity

By Gladys Taber

IT might seem as if June were an old story, with so much poetry written about it, and so many songs sung. And yet every time it comes it is as much of a wonder, as much of a delight.

If I had Aladdin's lamp and the usual three wishes, the first would always be, "Give me the first day of June." The whole, complete day, with the sky-blue dawn and the golden noon and the violet dusk and the silvered night. With early roses unfolding and a hummingbird over the border. And a whole packet of smells too. New-cut grass, and pea vines, and freshly hoed garden soil.

When I was growing up, June meant the end of school, and going away for the summer to the cottage. Such packing and unpacking and buying of groceries! And when the car was loaded, there was room for everything except me and one large Irish setter. Papa and mamma were in front, the lunch basket under mamma's feet. We always started off with a flourish and got as far as Kaukana before we remembered something had been left behind. Then we drove back madly and retrieved it and started all over again.

Nothing was more wonderful than the first sight of the cottage. Pine needles had drifted over the steps. The water was that deep June blue, which made me always wonder why they called it Green Bay. Timmie would leap through the car window and frantically begin on the squirrels. We would go into the cottage, and the smell of winter was still there, and the good odor of unpainted pine boards. There was never any dust. Mamma could whisk the newspapers from the kerosene stove and have a hot supper in no time. I always flew into my heavy wool bathing suit and rushed to the shore. The icy water was delicious. It was almost like being born again.

Now in New England, June brings many activities. The late planting must be done and Jill is eternally in the garden, bent in a permanent curve. The rabbits are there, too, at dusk. Somehow, no matter what damage they do, I cannot work up any resentment toward rabbits. They are so soft and their eyes have a melting wistfulness. I like their lopping gait too.

The pest that causes us the most tr is the mole. Not only the ridges he rais the lawn are bad, but the digging the co do makes it worse. Once the moles ate whole tulip bed which we expected to b pecially beautiful, since the bulbs were greed.

There are many remedies for m but none of them have been very succe for us. Pouring old crankcase oil in the is a good one, provided the dogs do no in the same spot and get a good oilin muzzles and ears.

June is one of the easiest months as f menus go. With the first fresh garden c meals can be simple and quick. And oh, first salad of baby lettuce leaves just curling, crisp red radishes, young c sweet scallions! I use a plain French dre with a clove of garlic steeped in it.

Broilers are for Sunday. I do them u the broiler, rather far from the heat so cook slowly and stay moist. I rub them with butter and a cut clove of garlic, sprinkle them with paprika and salt. them with the skin side down first and them once.

FAY CLARK's baked broilers are elegant She piles cooked rice or well-seasoned po dressing in a baking pan and lays the br on top, seasoning them well. She bakes in a moderate oven (350°F.) until the br are tender.

When any chicken is done, a sharp will pierce down to the bone easily. hard to see why so often you get under fried chicken, for when you test with a if it is not done, red juice will ooze out the fork.

Deep-dish rhubarb pie or rhubarb co is my choice for June dessert until st berries are right. Of course strawberry s cake, made correctly, is the dessert abo comparison. A rich biscuit dough is wl takes, and no sponge or cake mixture. the berries must be partly crushed, sweet and set in a bowl near the stove so the be slightly warm. This brings out the rich flavor. The biscuit dough shoul baked in round tins, split and buttered

(Continued on Page 208)

Imagine Waking up in this Beautiful Maple Bedroom

dream come true!

a thrill . . . having such handsome maple Colonial pieces in your home!

witchingly beautiful, so alive, so t, so adaptable . . . and so permanent!

n't you often wished that some furniture facturer would find a way to keep joints and red surfaces from coming apart?

el has discovered the way . . . in Permanizing!
at last, you can own solid maple furniture will not come apart regardless of climate . . .
atter how damp or dry, hot or cold.
nized furniture stays your friend for life.

reach for a drawer. See . . . your little finger ull it out. That's a Permaslide drawer, made by Mengel, of molded plywood . . . guaran-never to stick or loosen. Feel those smooth, ned corners . . . you can dust them in a jiffy.

Let your hand run over the lustrous, marble-smooth, multi-coated Mengel finish. You can almost feel why it weathers the years so gracefully.

Turn around from the crystal-clear mirror of your vanity, and look at the bed. That's sleeping beauty, from head to foot . . . graceful, well-proportioned. Mengel excellence again!

Look for the "Mengel Man" trademark on the bedroom furniture you buy and, when you see all the Mengel features, you'll find it hard to believe that the price tag is right . . . that it isn't just a dream.

We have a new booklet "Let's Dress Up Your Bedroom." Mail the coupon for your copy. The Mengel Company, Incorporated, Dept. 101, Louisville 1, Kentucky.

Name _____

Street _____

City _____ Zone _____

© 1946, The Mengel Co.

Mengel

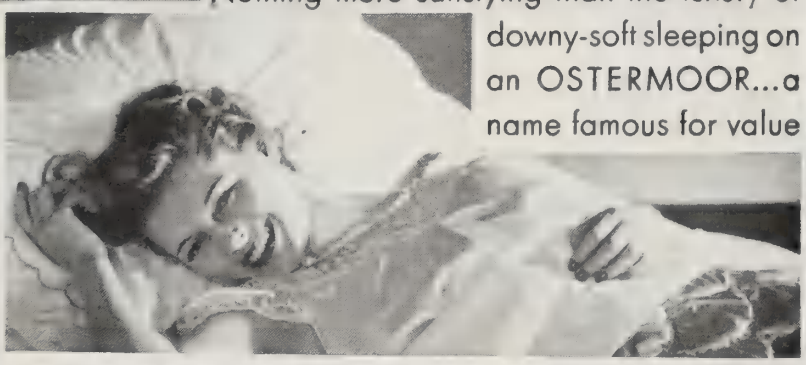
Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

PERMANIZED FURNITURE

A long life and a cheery one is in the cards for old floors of wood, concrete, or pattern-worn linoleum painted with Kyanize Floor Enamel.

Easy to brush on, it's hard to wear off. Bright or subdued colors. Washable. Clean and sanitary. Self-smoothing.



BOSTON VARNISH COMPANY
Boston · Chicago · Los Angeles · Montreal

SAVE THE NATION FROM INFLATION
Use it up. Wear it out.
Make it do or do without.

Self-Smoothing Kyanize
PAINTS · VARNISHES · ENAMELS
THE LIFE OF THE SURFACE

Nothing more satisfying than the luxury of downy-soft sleeping on an OSTERMOOR...a name famous for value

OSTERMOOR
America's Quality MATTRESS

OSTERMOOR · BUILT! NOT STUFFED

SEE THE LOCAL DEALER, OR WRITE OSTERMOOR, 348 GEORGE STREET, BRIDGEPORT, CONN. OR 2317 CALUMET AVE., CHICAGO, ILL.

POTS AND PANS OF THERMO-PLY
Stainless Steel

Carlton Ware combines all the features of the perfect utensil. Fast, worry-free cooking ... savings in good food values, in fuel cost, in time ... easy to clean. Each utensil a work of art with a beauty that never grows old.

Special heat-conducting core metal between two layers of tough, brilliant stainless steel — that's Thermo-Ply. RESULT—
- even-heating,
- fast-cooking,
- easy-cleaning

Look for this tag in maroon and tan on every Carlton utensil.

FREE:
Beautiful folder of Carlton utensils. Write Dept. L. CARLTON MFG. CO., Carrollton, Ohio simply deluged with berries. Topped with a mound of fluffy whipped cream.

(Continued from Page 206)

The best way to serve shortcake is to make it the whole meal. And eat all you can hold. We like it for supper, and if the day is fine, we can eat out under the apple trees. Honey especially loves whipped cream and the last bits of the sweet biscuit on the platter.

Melody and Hildegarde like to lie flat on the warm grass with their hind legs out frog-fashion. Silver is always near the picket fence, in case something should come down the road that she can leap at. The older dogs stay up on the terrace where there is the best view and the most sun. They form a frieze of cockers as you look at the house from the hill.

We try to have the house organized as well as possible before the summer rush sets in. Jill has cooked and frozen a number of meals, ready to thaw and heat and serve. If we freeze broilers, we have a good layer of wax freezer paper between the halves. And we wrap the giblets separately. It is important to seal the packages so that no air can possibly get in. If there is a pinhole anywhere, the chicken will turn dark and be dehydrated when thawed. If I think by any chance there was a flaw in the sealing, I steam the chicken in a covered deep fryer instead of broiling or frying it. In a creole sauce, it is delicious.

PIN MONEY

During the sixteenth century in England it became the custom for husbands to give their wives a special allowance to buy pins, which were then important articles of adornment. To this day the term means money allowed by a man to his wife for private purposes.

In England among the wealthier landowning families it is often provided for by a small rent charge to be paid to the wife during the life of her husband. The wife has absolute control of it. Here in America it is commonly used to refer to money derived from any source for a woman's private and personal expenditures.

—DAVID T. ARMSTRONG.

From now on, the house will be full of flowers. I like a Victorian bouquet done in an old oil lamp that has lost the chimney and wick. My friend Ruth Kistner taught me how to fill the bowl of the lamp with water to which a tablespoon of milk and a teaspoon of dye had been added. Any of the package dyes at ten-cent stores is good. The milk makes the liquid opaque and the trick is to use a dye which is the same as the main color of your bouquet, or a little darker, but in harmony with it.

I make the bouquet with the darker heavier flowers at the base and the lighter ones at the top. And as for all bouquets, I make the height satisfying by measuring the height of the lamp, doubling that measure and having the tip of the bouquet equal it. Twice the height of the container makes your whole creation artistic.

An all-white bouquet is lovely. So is an all-white garden. Last year at the National Flower Show in New York, there was a white garden and it seemed perfect. There were tall pearly white tulips, and white massed shrubs—azaleas, I thought—behind them, and white blossoming fruit trees making a background. There were white pansies for ground cover under the tulips, and the little inner secret resting place was a frosty white iron Victorian bench. There were serenity and quiet in this little garden, and mystery. It seemed as if anyone who sat on the wrought-iron bench under the blossoming pear tree might find all her young dreams again.

It's fragrant of PINE Cleans!
Disinfects!

Guaranteed b
Good Housekeep

- MAKES CLEANING EASIER
- DEODORIZES
- ECONOMICAL TO USE
- FOR TILES, FLOORS, BATHROOMS, KITCHENS, CELLARS
- WON'T IRRITATE HANDS
- ASK YOUR DRUGGIST

Sergeant
DISINFECTAN

"LAZY DAISY"
AUTOMATIC DUST P

A rapidly revolving brush picks up c lint, ashes and everything loose and it onto the pan. Raise the brush, contents of pan. The greatest h cleaning device since the invent the vacuum cleaner. Quick, eff easy way to "tidy up". Clean wood floors, linoleum. Get out-of-the-way places. On use it you will never be with $4.25 postpaid

Send check or money order

Mayfai
Gifts
72-08B Aust
Forest Hills,

The Most Comfortable Cha in the World!

The BEAUTIFUL Streit "SLUMBER CHAIR

ON SALE AT FURNITURE AND DEPARTMENT STORES EVERYWHERE

(Continued from Page 210)

the selection of the main dish. It e a production, a chef-d'œuvre im- enough to carry the whole enter- success; we want to concentrate on e spectacular, hearty, hot dish and involved in a long-drawn culinary t on a warm summer day.

es Newburg were my solution, and n be yours. They are a dish that has virtues—especially the supreme virtue iring very little last-minute work. ake the crepes into a big sea-food e pie—practically a meal in itself, need only a simple appetizer to pre- a salad to accompany it and a macé- f fresh fruits to follow.

ember the rule: do everything the ore that can be done then; and with nu you'll find that practically every- an be.

plan this as a luncheon or evening the menu is suitable for either—and pes will serve eight or ten people.

GUACAMOLE AND RILLED BREAD STICKS

n 2 ripe avocados to a smooth paste. scant teaspoon salt, 1½ tablespoons juice, 1 tablespoon Worcestershire 1 medium clove garlic mashed to a 4 teaspoon red pepper and 1 tea- inely grated onion. Stir until thor- blended and taste. If the avocados ite large, you may want to add a ore seasoning.

bread fairly thin, remove crusts t into slender strips. Fry in a little or margarine until golden brown rve with the bowl of guacamole. oth the day before. Store guaca- n refrigerator and reheat bread short time before serving.

ES NEWBURG

, frozen or canned d can be used in ing this dish. um quantities, sh has been picked d is ready for use, ups crab meat, 2 hrimp, 2 cups lobster. The crab used in the filling between the pan- the shrimp and lobster are used in wburg.

lay before, shred crab and add to it can mushrooms cut into small clean shrimp and leave them cut lobster into large bite-size (If lobster is unobtainable substi- ore shrimp.) Store all sea food in rator, ready for use next day.

E FOR PANCAKE FILLING

in a saucepan 4 tablespoons butter garine. Remove from fire, add 6 oons flour and stir to smooth paste. in slowly 3 cups hot cream or un- evaporated milk and add 1 tea- salt, 2 chicken bouillon cubes, ½ n Bahamian mustard or ¾ tea- other prepared mustard, 1 clove inely minced, ¼ teaspoon red pep- teaspoon ginger, ⅛ teaspoon nut- tablespoon soy sauce and ⅓ pound itey cheese cut into pieces. Return fire and stir constantly until mix- ils. This is pretty high seasoning. ittle more may be added to taste. his the day before and store in cool

NEWBURG SAUCE

cream sauce (same method as in e filling) using 4 tablespoons butter garine, 4 tablespoons flour, 2½ cups or undiluted evaporated milk, 1 n salt and 1 teaspoon paprika. Set place ready for use next day.

prepreparation is complete, and that's jor effort in making Crepes Newburg. ell, but not too late in the morning if o be a luncheon.

to the assembly line.

CREPES

together 2½ cups flour, 2½ cups (or 1 cup undiluted evaporated milk 2 cups cream), 6 egg yolks, 2 table- sugar, 1 teaspoon salt, ½ teaspoon powder and 1 tablespoon melted or margarine. Beat with rotary beater until very smooth and fold in 6 egg whites that have been beaten until quite frothy but not stiff. This thin batter should make about 12 pancakes approximately the size of a smallish dinner plate.

Select a skillet of the right dimensions, heat, grease with butter or a little salad oil and pour in a small quantity of batter. Quickly tilt the skillet from side to side until the batter completely covers the bottom surface and cook over moderate heat. When underside of pancake is a delicate brown, turn it over and brown other side. Repeat until all pancakes are made, storing finished ones on an oiled cooky sheet in a very slow oven.

While you make pancakes reheat sauces over pans of boiling water. To the pancake-filling sauce add the crab and mushrooms. To the Newburg sauce add 3 beaten egg yolks, ½ cup milk or, if you like sherry as a seasoning, ½ cup sherry instead of milk, and the shrimp and lobster. Stir this as little as possible after sea food is added.

If your serving platter for the Crepes Newburg is ovenproof, assemble the pie on it; if not, use a flat pan from which the pie can be transferred to serving dish. Place a pancake in the center, spread evenly with about a quarter inch of the crab mixture, cover with a pancake, then more mixture and so on until all pancakes are used, saving the most handsome one for the top. Cover the pie with wax paper and keep in slow oven until ready to serve. The pie can be made two or three hours ahead of time.

To serve, cut into pie-shape wedges, surround with shrimp and lobster Newburg and garnish with water cress or parsley.

> Never forget what a man says to you when he is angry. —HENRY WARD BEECHER.

TOMATO ASPIC

Into a saucepan put 3½ cups tomato juice, 2 cloves garlic, ½ cup vinegar, 1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce, 1 teaspoon whole black pepper, 5 cloves and ½ teaspoon salt. Boil ten minutes uncovered, fifteen minutes covered, and strain. Soften 2 tablespoons gelatin in ¼ cup cold tomato juice and add to hot liquid, stirring until gelatin is thoroughly dissolved. Add salt to taste, remembering that food tastes more highly seasoned when hot than when cold. Pour into well-oiled molds and store in refrigerator. Use individual molds or one large one. Tiny eggcups make very attractive small molds.

ASPARAGUS

Cook the asparagus in salted water until barely tender. Drain, and when cool arrange neatly in dish and store in refrigerator. Frozen asparagus is perfect for this salad, uniform in size and color and a lot less work to prepare.

Make mayonnaise according to recipe in March Conversation Piece.

To assemble salad, line salad bowl or platter with crisp lettuce leaves and water cress. Divide asparagus into groups of 5 or 6 stalks, bind each group with a strip of pimiento and make an attractive arrangement of aspic and asparagus in serving dish. If a large mold has been used for aspic, empty it in center of serving dish. If small molds have been used, alternate them with groups of asparagus. Serve mayonnaise in separate bowl.

MACÉDOINE OF FRUIT

Any fresh fruit can be used, and the greater the variety and contrast in color the better. Melon balls, both pale green and orange, strawberries, sliced peaches, sections of grapefruit and orange, pitted bing cherries, and so on. Keep the different fruits in separate containers, and when you arrange your serving platter have an eye for color and variety. The effect is bound to be lovely and the delightful taste of fresh icy-cold fruit will be a perfect climax.

Service. This must be planned to suit the setting and your equipment. It can't present serious problems if you choose in advance the dishes, silver and linens to be used and have them ready on trays.

I hope your guests like the food as well as mine did and that the sun shines as brightly for you as it did for me. But don't worry too much about the sun. Obviously this is no picnic snack we've planned, and it doesn't have to be eaten alfresco.

Next time they'll demand this new dressing!

IF YOU'D LIKE to be known as that charming girl who comes up with divine salad dressings—here's your chance! People won't stop at praise. They'll thump the table—calling for this new Sour Cream Dressing! The cream itself lends an interesting note. But the dressing's real claim to fame is its oil. Mazola Salad Oil, with that rare ability to blend flavors, yet accentuate them too. How wonderful—that you can have golden Mazola, and at such slight expense!

©Corn Products Sales Co.

SOUR CREAM DRESSING

| | |
|---|---|
| 3 tablespoons corn starch | 1¼ cups milk |
| 1 tablespoon sugar | 2 egg yolks |
| 2 teaspoons mustard | ¼ cup vinegar |
| 2 teaspoons salt | ½ cup Mazola Salad Oil |
| ⅛ teaspoon pepper | 1 teaspoon onion juice |
| Few grains cayenne | 2 teaspoons chopped parsley |
| ½ teaspoon paprika | ½ cup sour cream |

Mix first seven ingredients in small amount of the milk until smooth. Add remaining milk. Bring to a boil over low heat and boil 2 minutes, stirring constantly. Remove from heat; gradually beat mixture into egg yolks with rotary beater. Return to heat and cook 2 minutes longer, stirring constantly. Remove from heat. Add vinegar; beat well. Gradually beat in Mazola Salad Oil until smooth. Cool; fold in onion juice, parsley and sour cream. Makes about 2½ cups.

P. S. Ever try marinating hamburgers before you cook them? Two or three hours spent blissfully soaking in Mazola French Dressing makes them out of this world!

"I'VE KNOWN EVER SINCE I WAS A BRIDE, ANNE—"

It's Smart to Buy the FINEST Sterling

Your own solid silver pattern is the most personal, unchanging expression of your taste for now, for always. So choose the very finest sterling. Generations of American families have identified the best with Reed & Barton.

Find your favorite pattern here . . . or see other Reed & Barton masterpieces, in flatware as well as tea and coffee services. It costs very little more to own the best.

HELPFUL HOSTESS HINTS: For fascinating and valuable booklet, "How To Be A Successful Hostess", send 10 cents to Reed & Barton, Box 990, Dept. L, Taunton, Massachusetts.

Reed & Barton

Sterling Silver

GEORGIAN ROSE
STERLING

FRANCIS FIRST POINTED ANTIQUE GUILDHALL FRAGRANCE
FRENCH RENAISSANCE

A Group of the World's Most Beautiful Sterling Patterns

NEVER A DULL MEAL

By Clementine Paddleford

STUART

Clementine Paddleford

NEVER put off till tomorrow the good meals you can today. It's our notion that if every home adopted a good-meals-a-day system of eating, we could forget "basic seven" rule of nutrition and cook and eat just fo What's fun about cooking? Then you are bored with That is, with your own? The only cure is to find new w handling the same old stuffs, to forget the hidebound rule tie the cook's hands. There's excitement and thrill in disco a new approach to the daily bread. It gives a woman strings to her bow and endears her to family and friends.

Consider breakfast—and it's time we did. A national bre survey shows that less than 1 per cent of America's homem spend any thought whatsoever on planning menus for the ing meal. Yes, we know tastes are simple early in the day. even the basic breakfast patterns are improved with a frill or two. A mere shake of th gives the orange juice new sparkle. Remember, good beginnings make happy en There's no better time to begin the day with a good breakfast than summer. It's coo the morning. By high noon a salad, a sandwich, a glass of milk are luncheon en

★ ★ ★ MONDAY ★ ★ ★

Breakfast

*Citrus-Juice Frappé
*Sautéed Farina—Apricot Slices
Frizzled Ham
Coffee Milk

Dinner

Cold Sliced Meat from Sunday Roast
*Macaroni—Sour-Cream Cheese Sauce
Buttered Garden Peas
Crusty French Bread
Wilted Lettuce
*Jellied Cherries
Iced Tea Milk

★ ★ ★ TUESDAY ★ ★ ★

Breakfast

*Orange Slices with Fresh Mint
Wheat Flakes, Honey-Sweetened
Chipped Beef on Waffles
Coffee or Cocoa

Dinner

*Succotash (Fresh Lima beans and sweet corn)
Broiled Bacon
Whole Broiled Tomatoes Baby Carrots
Whole-Grain Bread
Cottage Cheese and Chive Mounds on Cress (Garnish with radish slices)
Deep-Dish Rhubarb Pie
Coffee Milk

★ ★ ★ WEDNESDAY ★ ★

Breakfast

*Green-Pepper Tomato Juice
Scrambled Eggs on Toast Spread with Deviled Ham
Coffee Milk

Dinner

*Liver Potato Patties—Parsley Sauce
*Poor Man's Asparagus (Scallions)
*Seven-Minute Beets
Chutney
Assorted Rolls
*Honey Fluff or Berries and Crean
Iced Coffee

★ ★ ★ THURSDAY ★ ★

Breakfast

*Summer Fruit Medley with Tossed Cereal Toasted English Muffins or Toast
Whole-Wheat Muffins
Jam or Marmalade
Coffee Milk

Dinner

Chilled Vegetable Juice
*Savory Veal
*Noodles Cooked in Bouillon
Steamed Broccoli

OUR guest of the month is a food reporter. She gets the low-down on the latest in food and where you can find it. Her name is Clementine Paddleford. She lives in New York, week-ends up in Connecticut where she grills the hours away over the outdoors fireplace and eats whereof she grills. She says so herself. Also she watches the weeds grow—or so she claims.

Clementine is a tallish, reedlike figure of a girl who gets around easy. Hither and yon she goes, looking up something new, exotic as the South Seas can send us, plain as corned beef and cabbage, but always new. Maybe her best-known reporting is done in New York's Herald Tribune, but her columns in This Week and The Gourmet Magazine are followed by a long procession of gourmets and would-be ones.

Well, Clementine, you've got here at last; and come right in and leave your hat on any handy chair. The caviar's in the refrigerator, and those Morro-crab claws are icing. I'm real glad you came.

Ann Batchelder

Tossed Greens with Sieved Egg Yolks with French Dressing
Brown Bread and Raisin Bread
Cantaloupe
Hot or Iced Tea

★ ★ ★ FRIDAY ★ ★ ★

Breakfast

*Cereal-Peach Shortcake
*Egg Puff with Toast Triangles
Currant Jelly
Coffee Cocoa

Dinner

ellied Consommé with Lime Quarters
*Creamed Salmon in Mashed-Potato Nests
Buttered Spinach
Mixed Vegetable Slaw (side dish)
Hard Rolls
Blueberry Shortcake
Coffee Tea

★ ★ ★ SATURDAY ★ ★ ★

Breakfast

*Sunshine Cocktail
*Oatmeal with Molasses Milk
Whole-Wheat Toast Sticks
Coffee Milk

Dinner

Cream of Onion Soup
*Budget Birds
Buttered Green Beans
*Grandma Flint's Potatoes
Bread Jelly
*Jackstraws ucumber, carrots, celery, green-pepper sticks)
*Strawberry-Gelatin Pie
Iced Tea or Fruitade

★ ★ ★ SUNDAY ★ ★ ★

Breakfast

*Fruit-Plate Temptation
lternate orange sections and sweet cherries circling mound of honeydew balls, served with sweetened lime juice)
*Eggs à la Suisse on Buttered Toast
And More Toast
*Bacon Curls
Coffee Cocoa

Dinner

*Rolled Lamb Shoulder
*Currant Barbecue Sauce
Zucchini
Potato Soufflé
Tossed Green Salad with Diced Avocado,
French Dressing
*Hot Buttered French Loaf
*Ice-Cream Cupcakes
Iced Tea or Coffee

FRUITS OF THE MORNING

Take a day when every pore is panting and present the Citrus Frappé. Nothing to it but arm action. Orange or grapefruit juice alone, or in combination, a tear or two from the lemon, shake with finely cracked ice, and violently, for a five-carat-diamond gleam.

Sliced orange, it is found, gives more of the precious vitamin C than the reamed fruit. A picture plate of Sliced Oranges served with the slices overlapping, a miserly dusting of sugar, a liberal sprinkling of finely cut mint not long from its bed, will tempt both eye and appetite.

Green-Pepper Tomato Juice. Give that changeless tomato juice a new palate smack. Open the can but halfway. Turn back and spoon in 1 teaspoon lemon juice, ¼ teaspoon celery salt and ½ green pepper, finely minced; mix well. Close down top, cover with wax paper, fasten with a rubber band. Chill overnight; strain before serving.

Sunshine Cocktail. It's too hot to eat? Drink your egg for today. Beat together 1 egg yolk, the juice of 2 oranges, juice of ½ lemon and 2 teaspoons honey—call it a Sunshine Cocktail.

Fruit-Plate Temptation is for a heat-wilted morning, a Sunday morning when half the thrill of the day lies in leisurely breakfasting, in serving those foods which have no niche in the daily timetable. Choose from the prodigality of the season—an embarrassment of riches! Here we suggest orange sections alternating with sweet cherries, circling a mound of green balls dipped from the honeydew melon. Just as well that the melon be cut into sticks and arranged in sunburst pattern around the sweet cherries, or there might be peeled peach halves, split and filled with dewy fresh raspberries or small clusters of the red ripe currants, sugar dipped, or the seedless white grapes coming now into market. Dress the fruit with lime juice sweetened with maple sirup; this passed in a small pitcher—each helps himself.

Party-pretty luncheon plate

Cucumber-and-Lime Aspic

Ritz Crackers

Shrimp

Fill aspic rings with shrimp and mayonnaise, circle with radish slices, serve with Ritz Crackers. Scrumptious luncheon for the girls—lovely to look at . . . luscious to eat! For tangy Ritz brings extra sparkle to salad—makes the flavors bloom like roses in the sun. So golden-good . . . so crunchy-crisp—Ritz is the darling of every hostess, the love of every guest. Here's something to remember when you go to buy crackers—

NOTHING TASTES AS GOOD AS RITZ—BUT RITZ!

NOW- a bowl cover that's odor-proof

make it yourself in 30 seconds

TRY IT YOURSELF—see how simple it is to make bowl covers with waxed-through, odor-proof Cut-Rite. No rubber bands or strings needed. And Cut-Rite covers never stretch and never have to be washed.

Cut-Rite covers can be used once on leftover dishes and thrown away, or lifted off jelly jars and put back on again.

Cut-Rite cooks find a "thousand uses" for this strong, pliable wax paper. You save dishwashing by sifting flour, rolling breadcrumbs on it. You save dishes, icebox space by wrapping small things small. You prevent scissors from rusting by wrapping them in Cut-Rite. You keep leftovers delicious by wrapping them in Cut-Rite to help keep air out, food flavor in! Put Cut-Rite* on your shopping list today! A Scott Paper product.

Get Cut-Rite with its famous sawtooth cutting edge in the big 125-foot roll

Tear off enough Cut-Rite to extend beyond rim of bowl at least an inch on all sides. Center Cut-Rite on bowl; hold firmly in place with left hand.

Pleat and twist! Still holding the wax paper firmly in place, start by pleating a corner, then twist and tuck under-and-up to the rim of the bowl.

Continue to twist and tuck under-and-up, working on the bias and turning bowl away from you as you go . . . until you have completed a snug-fitting roll.

TEARS QUICKLY - EASILY - ALWAYS!

"Cut-Rite" Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

CEREAL-FRUIT BLENDS

Leading them to breakfast, that's one thing; getting them to eat is something else again. Coax with fruit-and-cereal blends. Peel and slice the fragrant peach, add quarters of nectarine or apricot, and the berries of your choice. Heap these jewels of the orchard high in a glass bowl; drizzle over warm honey. Toss together à la tumble a medley of ready-to-eat cereals—puffed cereals, crispy oats, wheat flakes, what you will. Fruit and cereal come to the table together. Help yourself to cereal, then a topping of fruit, a pouring of cream.

Another day, another way: Cereal-Peach Shortcake. Split a shredded-wheat biscuit oven-crisp. Sandwich with a generous filling of sliced peaches or berries. Now, fruit over top and serve with light cream.

Something else to do with that shredded-wheat biscuit: Oven-heat and serve with a stuff called peach cream. To 1 cup milk, add ½ cup fresh sliced peaches, a wee pinch of salt, sweeten to taste and mix thoroughly with a rotary beater or the electric blender. This rosy thick cream over the crisp biscuit gives a dish nutritious and irresistible.

Oatmeal and Molasses: A new team is oatmeal served with milk, sweetened and flavored with a few glups from the molasses pitcher. To 1 cup milk, add 1 tablespoon of the sirup, or more as you please.

Sautéed Farina With Apricots: Farina climbs out of the bowl onto the breakfast plate. Cook farina in advance, and just before removing from the heat add finely cut dried apricots, soaked and drained, but not cooked. Turn into loaf pan, chill until firm. Unmold, slice thin, sauté in a little fat, turning to brown on both sides. Pass along thin slices of boiled ham sautéed in melted ham fat, one side, then the other, until their edges curl and crisp—that's a love match. Or do it this way: add a speck of onion and sautéed crumbled sausage to the hot cereal; chill; slice to fry like mush and serve with preserves.

TEMPTING WITH TOAST

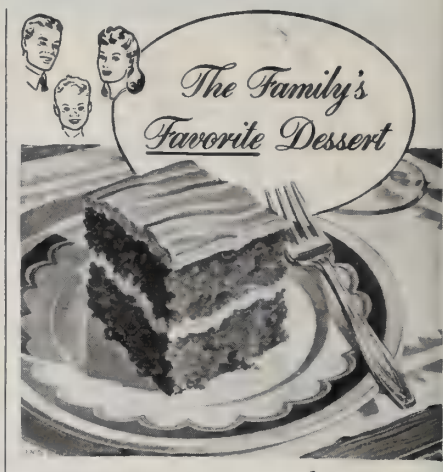
Endless are the ways of presenting the toast. And toast is a fine user-upper of stale bread—something to keep in mind today. Cut the toast into triangles, into sticks, into fingers.

Make Toast Wafflettes: Put together two thin slices of buttered bread lightly spread with jam. Place in heated waffle iron and bake to a crisp perfection.

Jelly-Toast Rolls make a festive service. Cut crusts from bread, spread lightly with jelly. Roll each slice as for jelly roll. Hook with toothpicks, place on baking sheet, seam side down. Toast under medium broiler heat, turning until evenly browned.



Eat your toast spread thickly with a highly spiced deviled ham, a poached egg nested tiptop. Toast is a cozy couch for creamed foods such as dried beef or those eggs à la Suisse.

Another little stunt: Cut whole-wheat bread into one-inch-thick slices, remove crusts, cut into three strips. Place on buttered tin and toast quickly on all four sides under a hot broiler. For a sweet bite, brush the sticks well with melted butter or margarine, roll in sugar combined with cinnamon.

THE EGG QUINTUPLETS

Eggomaniacs want their eggs plain boiled, fried, scrambled, poached or in omelet—but plain! Others get bored with these monotonous quintuplets. Then it's time for a change on the five basic themes.

For a happy variable, Eggs à la Suisse, so the French call them; we call them slick. Melt 1 tablespoon butter or margarine in an omelet pan, add ½ cup cream or undiluted evaporated milk, slide in 4 eggs, sprinkle with salt, pepper and a few grains of cayenne. When the whites begin to set, sprinkle with 2 tablespoons grated cheese. Finish cooking and serve on buttered toast. Strain hot cream over each serving. Add 4 handsome Bacon Curls, and that's a good breakfast. Bacon will curl like the little pig's tail when sliced very thin, placed in pan and boiling water poured over, then let stand a few moments.

Spicy Gingerbread

. . . with Creamy Mocha Icing

Sure to win approval is a dessert featuring gingerbread . . . especially when you add a tantalizing contrast like Mocha icing, or some other fancy topping. For finer flavor, lighter texture, make your gingerbread with Duff's.

just add WATER —that's all!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

A PRODUCT OF AMERICAN HOME FOODS, INC.

WILSON'S B-V "MEAT MAGIC" for SOUPS

George Rector
Food Consultant to Wilson & Co.
gives you this soup secret:

It's so simple. Cook vegetables, noodles or "what have you" until tender, add as much boiling water as is needed for quantity desired, and then add Wilson's B-V to taste—about ⅔ tsp. per cup of soup. Wilson's B-V is a delicious blend of concentrated meat extract and selected vegetable flavors.

Makes it taste better

re's no finer gift to make a bride-to-be happy my sparkling, spotless Dunbar cooking glass.
t the new bride off right by helping stock her en with crystal clear, streamlined Dunbar sils . . . so beautiful, so practical, so easy-ton. This vacuum coffee maker will make a lovely for any bride. All Dunbar ware is so reasonably ed, too."

Jane Dunbar

. Send post-card for my
"Glamour in Glass" to Dunbar, Dunbar Glass
306 Payne Ave., Dun-
W. Va. Est. 1911.

Drain, roll, fasten with toothpicks and broil to a crisp.

Egg Puffs are a fine take-off to the day. Beat 2 eggs to a froth, season, add 2 tablespoons cream and pour into small skillet lubricated with melted butter or margarine. Right through the cooking, keep the mixture twirling. You won't believe it, but those eggs rise to the top of the pan and, what's more, stay there. The yellow puff is served with triangles of hot buttered toast and a big dip of sparkling jelly, either crab apple or currant.

LEFTOVER ROAST

Roasts belong to Sunday. Sliced cold roast belongs to Monday—it's second-day feasting! So eye-arresting and cool is a platter of sliced meat, garlanded with cress. Pass along one hearty hot food such as the macaroni done in a sour-cream sauce. That's a dish first met at Herman Smith's table; he's the author of Stina, a book about an Alsatian cook. The dish was originally served by this Stina long ago at the Smiths' table in a little Michigan town.

Macaroni in Sour-Cream Sauce. Double-boiler heat two 14½-ounce cans evaporated milk, add ½ pound grated sharp Cheddar cheese and stir into milk until melted and blended. Add 1 teaspoon dry mustard and 2 teaspoons Worcestershire with salt and pepper to taste. Cook to the consistency of thick cream, then thicken a bit more with a paste made by blending 1 tablespoon cornstarch with 1 tablespoon water. Cook 1½ boxes macaroni until tender, drain, rinse in cold water. Drain again, mix with sauce and turn into a broad casserole. Pour over 1 pint sour cream; sprinkle with ¼ cup finely cut chives or scallions. Top with mixture of ½ cup crushed corn flakes and ¼ cup grated cheese. Place in slow oven until well heated and the topping has browned. That's macaroni for six with second helpings around—and these never refused.

It is never the woman who makes good biscuits that lures a man away from his fireside and his bachelor comforts, but the one who wears a rose in her hair.

—HELEN ROWLAND: The Digressions of Polly (The Baker & Taylor Co.)

Jellied Cherry Dessert is a sweet without sugar. Chill 1 pound pitted big black cherries (sweet) and pile in mound in serving bowl. Melt together over hot water one 8-ounce glass apple jelly and one 8-ounce glass raspberry jelly, stirring until smooth. Let cool until thickened; pour over the chilled cherries and place in refrigerator for thirty minutes or until the jelly is set. Serve at once with plain cream, garnishing plates with mint leaves.

SUCCOTASH DINNER

Corn's ripe, and no finer way to eat the sweet harvest than straight from the cob. Next best is succotash, the garden-fresh Limas joining with the milk-blessed kernels—a dish for the gods. Cook 2 cups fresh Lima beans in a small amount of boiling water until tender but not broken. Add 3 cups fresh corn and cook five minutes more. Drain, add 1 teaspoon salt, ⅛ teaspoon paprika. Hold your hats—add ¼ pound butter or margarine and ¾ cup light cream. Place over hot water five minutes, serve piping. Yield: six polite portions. Pass with a platter of crisply broiled bacon, whole boiled tomatoes and whole baby carrots.

Ever boil a garden-fresh tomato? Don't wait a day longer. Drop firm ripe tomatoes into boiling salted water and clock for five minutes. Stick tines of fork into core, remove from water and peel quickly. Dig out a cozy little hollow in the top, drop in a dot of butter or margarine, sprinkle with pepper, serve immediately.

Garden carrots, the little ones, about the size of your middle finger, take kindly to the whole treatment—so shapely and handsome on the dinner plate.

(Continued on Page 219)

S STILL SCARCE

BUT THERE'S MORE COMING!

JUST GRIN AND SPREAD IT THIN!

HE SANDWICH SPREAD OF THE NATION
anded with the devil...but fit for the gods!

It's time to discard dull, makeshift knives and rejoice in super-sharp FLINT Hollow Ground Cutlery!

Made of special chrome vanadium cutlery steel, hollow ground to have and hold a razor's sharpness.

A sharp Flint blade flashes through every carving, cutting, paring or peeling task—a boon to the carver—a blessing to busy hands in the kitchen. Every home can afford this fine cutlery, and every homemaker will want a full set of matchless Flint blades. Friend husband will snitch the ham slicer for his very own, and do wonders with it at the table. At all good stores.

FLINT
HOLLOW GROUND
CUTLERY

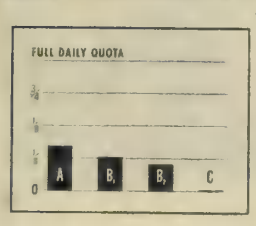
EKCO

EKCO PRODUCTS COMPANY
CHICAGO

Send 10c for this new book on carving by film star Edward Arnold

EKCO PRODUCTS COMPANY
Box No. 8308, Chicago 90
Send your illustrated book, "Edward Arnold Shows You How to Carve Meats and Poultry." I am enclosing 10c in coin.

Name.....
Address.....
City.....Zone.....State.....



"Flint" is a registered trademark of Ekco Products Company

DO YOUR BREAKFASTS MAKE THESE MISTAKES?

DO THEY SKIMP?

Break fast means just that. More than any other meal, it must build up pep and energy. You'll do that, and get many vitamins, too, from a cereal with milk, buttered toast, and an egg. But without orange juice, even this substantial breakfast gives your family almost no vitamin C. And because so few foods are good sources of C, health authorities say it's best to get your full day's share at breakfast.

Without California orange juice, breakfast supplies this much of day's vitamin needs:

DO THEY SKIP?

Don't miss your California orange juice. Besides supplying many added health values, it fills your day's quota of vitamin C. You need this vitamin every day to fight fatigue and infection, protect teeth and gums, and keep feeling young.

So let every breakfast start with California orange juice—even when you have other fruit. There's no brighter, cheerier, more delicious start for the day.

With California orange juice, breakfast supplies this much of day's vitamin needs:

It's America's health habit—California orange juice every morning. Nothing else so delicious is so good for you. Sunkist Oranges are the finest from 14,500 cooperating California and Arizona citrus growers.

NO FANCY RECIPE NEEDED

—start with orange slices, add any other fruits you choose. Easy-to-peel California oranges are favorites for the lunch box and eating between meals too. For free Orange Recipe Book, write to Sunkist, Dept. 206, Los Angeles 55, Calif.

CALIFORNIA ORANGES

Sunkist

BEST FOR JUICE—and Every use!

(Continued from Page 217)

ONCE A WEEK, LIVER

Potato Liver Patties. Do appetites sulk when it's liver again? These patties won't cause a stampede toward the table, but they do get eaten to the last bite. Simmer ½ pound beef liver two minutes in boiling water. Drain well and put through the food chopper with ½ small onion. Combine thoroughly with 1½ cups mashed potatoes, 2 tablespoons pickle relish, ½ teaspoon salt, ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Form into small balls, dip in beaten egg, roll in crumbs and pan-fry until brown. Serve with parsley sauce.

With this we like a dish known in France as Poor Man's Asparagus—dainty green onions prepared asparagus style. Gather the onions fresh from the garden, allowing 8 to a portion; or if purchased in the market, 1 bunch apiece. Wash and strip away thin outer membrane. Remove roots and a part of top, leaving perhaps three inches of the green. Lay onions all one direction in pot wide enough to accommodate their length and cook in boiling well-salted water until just tender, twelve to fifteen minutes. Serve with melted butter or faithful margarine. Hear that round of applause?

Now a speedy way with beets: Peel the vegetable raw, then slice very thin, shred or dice fine and into a saucepan or skillet with barely enough water to cover. Cook seven to ten minutes, add butter or margarine, season and meet beets at their best—better texture, better flavor, a joy to the palate and all done in jig time.

Honey Fluff. No precious sugar is required for that fluff dessert made with a prepared vanilla pudding, and simple as shucks! Follow package directions, and the minute before removing from heat, stir in ¼ cup honey. Set aside until almost cool, then fold in 3 stiffly beaten egg whites and serve well chilled.

The late Simon Bolivar Buckner used to tell a story of an old resident in his Kentucky home who was celebrated for his wisdom.

"Uncle Zeke," a young man once asked, "how does it come you're so wise?"

"Because," said the old man, "I've got good judgment. Good judgment comes from experience, and experience—well, that comes from poor judgment!"

JUST A NICE DINNER

The mood shifts. Come Thursday, you'll be wanting something substantial in the meat line to sink the teeth into. Savory Veal. Order a 4-pound leg or rump of veal, wipe with damp cloth. Make a paste of 1 teaspoon sage, 1 teaspoon brown sugar, 1 tablespoon dry mustard, 1 tablespoon salt and 3 tablespoons vinegar and spread over meat. Place in roaster, skin side up; arrange 4 strips of bacon over top, cover and roast in a moderate oven (350° F.) allowing twenty to thirty minutes per pound. Approximate serving: 8 portions.

Plain wide noodles are the right thing with this, and twice as right when cooked in a chicken bouillon. Just before serving drain noodles and add about 1 tablespoon finely cut parsley. Freckle with freshly ground pepper. If you can spare it, stir in a lump of butter or margarine, nut size, to glaze the noodles in a golden sweetness.

Greens for the bowl: garden lettuce, water cress, chard, a few heart leaves of spinach. Send the leaves to the table washed, dried and wearing a halo of gold—this a sprinkling of ¼ cup sieved hard-cooked-egg yolk, with a pinch of curry powder mixed in. French dressing joins the salad at the time of serving. Toss well, that every leaf be shining with oil.

A WORD IN YOUR EAR

Salmon returns to the grocer's shelf. How good it tastes creamed and dipped into fluffy mashed-potato nests. Creamed Salmon in Potato Nests. Add about 1 tablespoon finely minced scallions and 1 tablespoon finely cut green pepper when you whip up the "spuds." That garden edition does something divine for the fish. But fish, you say, is not your dish? Here's a substitute then. Pour creamed June peas over deviled eggs arranged in a casserole, then oven-heat. Use the same menu as for the salmon, but plain sliced tomatoes instead of the mixed vegetable slaw. This, by the way, is but shredded cabbage, carrots and green pepper, in a French dressing, faintly scented with garlic.

OTHER IDEAS

Budget Birds. Balm to the budget are these. An easy way to dress up a half-dozen slices of cold boiled ham: Make a moist bread dressing, season with onion and thyme. Mix in a bowl well rubbed with a cut garlic clove. Place 1 tablespoon dressing on each of 6 slices of ham. Roll, then wrap with a bacon slice, fasten with toothpicks. Brown quickly in hot fat. Reduce the heat and cook until the bacon is crisp.

Potatoes in Cream. It was Grandma Flint, a farm woman in Riley County, Kansas, who taught us her way to do potatoes in cream. Pare potatoes and put through meat grinder. Cover at once with coffee cream, dot with butter or margarine and season with pepper and salt. Cover and bake in moderate oven (375° F.) thirty minutes or until tender and cream has been absorbed. Eight coarsely ground potatoes provide portions for six.

Jackstraws. Sophisticates who like their garlic can perfume the jackstraws this easy way. Rub both sides of a piece of wax paper with a freshly cut garlic clove. Spread matchsticks of cucumbers, carrots, green pepper and celery over one side of paper. Roll as for a jelly roll, and wrap the bundle in a clean cloth. Chill in the refrigerator until the sticks are snapping crisp.

Strawberry-Gelatin Pie stretches 1 cup of sliced berries to serve a party of six. Bake pastry undercrust and set aside to cool. Line with cup of firm sliced strawberries. Whip the whites of 4 eggs, add 4 tablespoons granulated sugar and whip until the whites look glazed. Dissolve 1 package strawberry-flavored gelatin in ½ cup boiling water. Cool the gelatin slightly and add to the egg white. Pour over the sliced berries in crust. Chill until firm.

IT'S SUNDAY AGAIN

If Gertrude Stein ever lets loose and writes on America's Sunday dinner, you will read something like this: "A roast is a roast is a roast." But roast, too, can be different.

Rolled Lamb Shoulder. Have the meat man bone and roll a shoulder of lamb. When you take over, rub it well with 1 tablespoon salt and ¼ teaspoon pepper and place on rack in uncovered roasting pan. Let roast, without water or flour added, for approximately forty minutes per pound or until meat thermometer registers well done. During the last hour baste frequently with this Currant Barbecue Sauce: Melt 2 tablespoons butter or margarine, ½ cup currant jelly and 2 tablespoons vinegar together with ½ teaspoon dry mustard. Serve additional barbecue sauce with the sliced meat.

Usually one looks at a loaf of bread as a finished product. We like to use it as a point of departure. Buy a long crisp crusted loaf, French or Italian. You know the kind, white of crumb with an all-over quarter-inch crust, brown as a hickory nut. Thickly slice, cutting to the bottom crust, but not through. Ten minutes before serving, drizzle melted butter or margarine over, letting this run between the slices. Now into a hot oven until the loaf is piping. Serve on your best breadboard—the eaters pull off pieces, but only as needed, of course.

Ice-Cream Cupcakes. Sunday, and men want dessert with a capital D. Fruit fresh from the limb doesn't quite satisfy. Give them cake and ice cream and serve the two as one. Scoop centers from 6 cupcakes and fill with ice cream (1 pint is enough); beat 3 egg whites and ½ cup honey until stiff and canopy the cakes in meringue. Brown quickly in a hot oven (425° F.). Rush tableward in a double hurry.

"We got Heisey, too!

. . . and we've treasured every piece of it for almost 50 years"

HEISEY CRYSTAL has graced bridal-gift tables since 1895. And many a delighted bride has continued to add to her Heisey collection, thus building a treasure of gleaming crystal whose loveliness never fades. To give HEISEY CRYSTAL is now a tradition. To buy it for your own home is an unending source of pride and pleasure. Today, as through these fifty years, there is nothing finer than crystal created by HEISEY. To be seen at better stores. A. H. HEISEY & CO., NEWARK, OHIO

Heisey's

HAND•WROUGHT CRYSTAL

PHOTOGRAPH BY RAWLINGS

Why this bridal gown costs $650!

This bridal gown with its exquisite pearl-encrusted bodice is custom-made to individual order. Created by a master designer, interpreted in a sumptuous brocade by the most highly skilled needlewomen—it is an outstandingly beautiful example of the couturier's art. Another quality feature of this gown is its Talon slide fastener . . . the slide fastener flexible as a ribbon . . . that follows the flow of the fabric so faithfully you are never aware of its presence. Yet, surprising as it may seem, the Talon slide fastener, a quality feature in a $650 bridal gown, is so inexpensive that you can enjoy its proven excellence in your $1.95 house dresses. Look for the trademark "Talon" whenever you buy merchandise equipped with slide fasteners. Talon, Inc., Meadville, Pa.

$650 gown or $1.95 house dress, the Talon slide fastener adds extra value to each!

Talon

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

THE QUALITY SLIDE FASTENER

Here Comes the Bride

By Iris Wilken

WAY back since the days when the first bride got a glow in her eyes, picked herself a new set of fig leaves and said, "Today is the day," weddings have set an etiquette standard all their own. And now, whether a bride is planning to say her vows simply or arranging a wedding complete with rice and flower girls, there are still definite rules to be followed. Maybe you're the bride this season, maybe just a wedding guest—but bride, groom, best man or bridesmaid, you must know your wedding "do's and don't's!"

YOU ARE THE BRIDE—then this ur day of days, the day when all eyes admiration are focused on you. You t to be lovely and you will be lovely, but ything must be smooth as satin—bridal at that.

ou are in the spotlight from the day the ations are mailed out. They should be out three weeks before the wedding, two ks if the wedding is small and simple. Anncements and invitations are selected by and your mother; your mailing list is piled by you and the mother of the groom. ouncements go into the mail as soon as ceremony has been performed.

nancial responsibility he wedding, reception trousseau is yours and family's. The groom give you jewelry and . but your going-away t is your own selection. ur parents are divorced, onsidered your mother's to give the wedding, your father will still give away.

ur wedding dress sets tyle standard for those ur attendants and it is who decide what they ll wear. Gifts to your atants are presented be the wedding—usually uncheon or tea—and it stomary to give them thing they can wear . Jewelry is the most lar gift.

nless the sleeve of your n are long, you will gloves, and unless the s are short, and can be ved easily, thethird finger of the left- glove is slit ad simply turned back the wedding ing is slipped on your r.

the day of te wedding leave your gement ring at bme or wear it on your hand until afte the ceremony.

ur bridal bouqut is a gift to you from room, although ou plan the style and e on the flowers ou will carry. The ex- of decorating te church, fees for the nist and soloist ad the photographer's re on your accout.

u may present a edding ring or gift to room if you wis. If it is a gift, this ntation also takeplace before the cere-. It is quite cusomary for you to acany the groom when he buys your wedring, whether or ot you are buying a or him.

the wedding reheasal you are in charge, a substitute takes your place and no s of the ceremonyare used. You walk the aisle only when it is the real !

e hour set for th wedding depends y on your choice and the matter of is governed by theime and size of the ding. You are the lat person, accompaby your father, to ave for the church.

And you time your arrival for one minute past the hour set for the ceremony to give late-comers a last moment's grace. You proceed down the aisle on your father's right arm and, as you meet the groom, change your bouquet to your left arm and give your right hand to the groom. At the termination of the processional the bouquet is handed to the maid of honor. If the groom is to have a ring, you receive it from the maid of honor at the same time the best man hands your ring to the groom. The ring is placed on his finger immediately after you receive your ring. At the beginning of the recessional your bouquet is returned to you. The maid of honor assists you with your veil and train.

At the reception you will stand on your husband's right, the maid of honor on your right. After the guests have all arrived and you have had refreshments, you may leave to dress. This is the time to gather your bridesmaids about you to toss your bouquet. If you are having only one or two attendants, the young girls present may be included in this group.

In the excitement of leaving, remember your husband's parents. Ask them to come to say good-by before dashing down the stairs.

With a shower of rice you are off—but there is still an after-honeymoon duty. Thank-you notes in the bride's own handwriting are a social must. When gifts have been received from married couples, the envelope is addressed to the wife, but the salutation also includes her husband. Never send engraved cards, but acknowledge every gift personally—no matter how small.

IF YOU ARE THE GROOM—then you, too, are sharing the spotlight. And besides putting a flower in your buttonhole, you have "do's and don't's" duties as important as those of the bride.

Buying the engagement ring is your first big expense. After that you can rest in relative peace—supposedly, at least—until shortly before the wedding.

You are expected to buy a gift for the bride—always something for her personal adornment. And you will also buy her bridal bouquet, but she will decide what she wishes to carry. You may present a corsage to the bride's mother, and of course you are responsible for the marriage license, wedding ring, clergyman's fee (which is placed in an envelope and turned over to the best man) and the honeymoon expenses.

Gifts to your attendants will be presented at your bachelor's dinner or sometime before the ceremony. The expense of that dinner is yours.

What you wear is determined by the time and size of the wedding, but cutaway coats

Magic

By Kingsley Tufts

The weather is fair,
  The leaves are green;
The apples are there
  Unripe, unseen.

Time passes his hand
  From an old habit
Over the land,
  The hat, the rabbit.

His fingers snap;
  He jerks the shawl
And into my lap
  Red apples fall.

Home... is where a bride looks loveliest

...when Daniel Green Slippers are in her trousseau!

THE MILITAIRE
Heaven Blue rayon satin mule for every occasion. Also in bridal white. Around $5.00.

THE JOLI
For the loveliest—in blossom pink rayon satin. Around $4.50.

THE MOLLY-O
A dainty, lime rayon satin mule. Also in bridal white. Around $4.50.

The final, perfect touch to make a bride or any woman look her loveliest at home—dainty, exquisite Daniel Green slippers.

And the brightly styled beauty of the first day you wear them, will last for countless wearings. For Daniel Green tradition is enduring, painstaking craftsmanship—right down to hidden details you never see or think of. For "stay-in-shape" beauty, your wisest choice in slippers . . . is beautiful Daniel Greens.

Daniel Green
COMFY SLIPPERS
THEY STAY IN SHAPE

Follow your secret heart with

SunBird

Louis Philippe's new lipstick shade

Count your heart lost when your lips meet Sunbird. Your new love . . . your new loveliness . . . will be Louis Philippe's enchanted red! Lipstick in a golden-colored metal case of jeweler design. $1. Matching rouge, creme or cake, 49¢. (Plus tax.)

require high hats and a stick for the groom. The bottom of your soles should be blackened so that when you kneel your shoes will be neat and not detract. Make sure the polish doesn't come off, however—particularly if a white carpet is used.

In most instances you and the best man will follow the clergyman from the vestry into the chancel. Usually it is considered more gallant for you to wait on the right side until the bride approaches and then to go down the steps to meet her. If there are no steps, you merely take a step forward. You will then take the bride's right hand in your own right hand and draw it through your left arm, at the same time turning toward the chancel.

The best man will hand you the ring at the proper time, and if it is a double-ring ceremony, you will receive your ring immediately after the bride has received hers. After the ceremony you leave the church with your bride on your right arm. She will also stand on your right in the receiving line.

All reservations, tickets and other arrangements should be ready when it is time to leave on your honeymoon. You do not wear your boutonniere after leaving the house. When the bride is ready, she will call you and you will meet with your attendants and parents for a last good-by. Then it's a dash down the stairs and you are off—from then on all responsibilities are yours.

IF YOU ARE THE MAID OF HONOR—you have the second feminine lead on this special day, and it is your duty to be pretty, pleasant and available whenever the bride needs your assistance.

● Your costume is your expense, but the bride selects it. The flowers you carry will be given you as a gift.

You meet the other attendants at the bride's home and leave from there for the church together.

At the time of the wedding you walk down the aisle alone behind the bridesmaids. When the bride and groom ascend toward the altar, you move out of line until you stand immediately below the bride. After the processional the bride hands her bouquet to you. If it is a double-ring ceremony, you will hand the groom's ring to the bride when the best man hands the groom the bride's ring. As the recessional begins, the bride again takes her bouquet, and if she has worn a veil over her face, you turn it back at this time.

As the bride descends the altar steps, you will hand your bouquet to a second attendant or hold it in your left hand if you are the only attendant and see that the bridal train is properly arranged. At a very formal wedding, you will walk up the aisle alone, otherwise with the best man.

In the reception line, you will stand on the bride's right. There you will remain until the bridal party is served, but after taking your chance at catching the bouquet, make sure there is some rice on hand to join in a traditional farewell!

IF YOU ARE THE BEST MAN—then you are Johnny-on-the-spot. You are the groom's right-hand man and serve in every capacity from ticket buyer to personal valet, besides being escort-for-the-day to the maid of honor.

● You will help the groom make all necessary arrangements for his wedding trip, and on the day of the wedding you will think for him as well as for yourself.

You wear precisely what he does, with the exception of a smaller boutonniere, and it is up to you to keep the ushers in line and see that each one knows what to do.

You must make sure you have the ring ready for the proper moment, and you take charge of the clergyman's fee. The groom should put the money in an envelope, and you should make sure you have it before the ceremony.

You follow the groom from the vestry and take a position opposite the maid of honor. Should the ring be dropped as it is being handed to the groom (and who said grooms don't get nervous?) you pick it up, and you had better practice doing that gracefully! When the bride and groom descend the altar steps, you return to the vestry, pick up the groom's hat and stick and proceed to the front door, where you see the couple into their car. In some instances, however, you may be asked to walk with the maid of honor up the aisle.

When the newlyweds are off, you return to the vestry, give the clergyman his fee, pick up your own hat and go to the reception. You are never in the receiving line, but be on hand to give the bride and groom a last good-by and a hearty send-off!

IF YOU ARE A BRIDESMAID OR AN USHER—you are just part of the wedding scenery and your duties are few.

● Be punctual and available whenever needed.

You are responsible for your own costumes. Bridesmaids' dresses are selected by the bride. Ushers will dress in conformity with the groom. Flowers or boutonnieres are given you as a gift.

Bridesmaids meet at the bride's home where they receive their bouquets, and proceed to the church from there. Ushers arrive at the church about an hour before the ceremony. They meet in the vestibule, where their boutonnieres should be waiting for them. The brother of the bride, if she has one, and a brother or relative of the groom are usually selected as ushers for the center aisle because they are most familiar with the relatives and friends.

Ushers offer their arm to each lady as she arrives. No one is seated in the family pews after the bride's mother is in her place.

Bridesmaids should not walk either up or down the aisle with the ushers. The ushers enter first, the bridesmaids leave first.

As soon as the recessional is over, the ushers hurry back down the aisle and escort the ladies in the first pews back to the church door.

Ushers do not stand in the receiving line but bridesmaids do—usually to the right of the maid of honor, depending on the size of the reception room. At a small wedding reception, ushers may bring guests up to the bride and groom.

If you are the lucky bridesmaid who catches the bride's bouquet, it is considered a thoughtful gesture to offer it to the bride's mother. After all, catching it was the significant thing and the bride's mother will value it as a keepsake.

Bridesmaids will assist the bride as she changes to traveling cloths, and both ushers and bridesmaids are present to say good-by before the other guests realize it is time for rice and slippers!

IF YOU ARE THE PARENTS OF THE BRIDE—this is a day you have been thinking about for many years. And since it is the biggest moment in your daughter's life, you are in charge of what you want to be a "perfect" weddig.

● Father has little to do but dress for the big day—his boutonniere is the same flower as that of the groom. (Of course the bills are his big headache.) On the day of the wedding he will ride to the church with his daughter and will walk down the aisle with her on his right arm. He remains at the spot where the groom meets the bride. At the proper time the father steps forward, places the bride's right hand in that of the clergyman, thus sig-

Women, especially very young women, have a curious habit of attaching themselves to what is successful—never to what will be successful. —PAUL MORAND: Delineator.

There is no wholly satisfactory substitute for brains, but silence does pretty well. —ANON.

It is more to one's credit to go straight than to move in the best circles. —ANON.

HONEYMOON LOVELINESS

...BEGINS IN YOUR BATH

Revel in this dancing, magic foam as it caresses you softly, gently—leaving your skin velvety smooth and excitingly fragrant. Fatigue melts away. You step forth fresh as a dew-drenched flower. Five floral scents in every package to make every bath a beauty rite, and you a lovelier you!

FOAMING BATH Sachet

sale at all better toiletry counters

ROBERT H. CLARK COMPANY
Beverly Hills, California

nifying that he gives the bride in marriage, and then takes his place next to his wife at the end of the first pew on the left of the church.

The bride's mother has been busy with guest lists and other arrangements weeks before the wedding, and now that the day has actually arrived she serves in the capacity of hostess and must see that different duties have been allotted to specific persons and that all plans will work out efficiently.

As the bride's mother, you are the last person to be seated before the ceremony and are the first to leave after the bridal party has gone down the aisle. You and your husband leave the church together. At the reception you will receive first at the door of entrance. You may do this alone, or you may ask the groom's mother to assist you. Your husband may stand next to you or he may mingle with the guests.

You will help your daughter change to her traveling outfit, and you and your husband will join the couple to say good-by before they dash for the door.

IF YOU ARE THE GROOM'S PARENTS—your role is little more than that of a guest, especially for the groom's father.

● Before the wedding, however, the groom's mother prepares a list of relatives and friends for the bride's mother to combine with her list for invitations.

On the day of the wedding you will wait in the vestibule until the entire wedding party has arrived. The groom's mother is then escorted by the head usher to the first pew on the right, her husband follows alone and stands beside her. The same usher then returns to the vestibule to escort the bride's mother to her place. The groom's mother is escorted from the church immediately after the bride's mother.

At the reception you may be asked to receive with the bride's mother, or you will take your place beyond the bridesmaids. Your husband mingles with the guests.

When the bride is dressed to leave, she should ask you to join her and the groom upstairs for final good-bys.

IF YOU ARE A GUEST—you have the least important role, but even that has rules attached!

● You will receive an invitation to the wedding and reception. An invitation is considered a higher compliment than an announcement, and it is quite proper for you to receive an invitation although you may live at too great a distance to attend. The couple wished that you might be able to be there.

As soon as possible after receiving the invitation, you should send a wedding gift to the bride at her home. A card with your name, or that of both husband and wife, is enclosed.

Since duplication is easy, don't feel hurt if the bride wishes to exchange your gift. No one can use ten pairs of crystal candlesticks in a three-room apartment!

Be punctual at the wedding, and don't expect to be seated after the bride's mother has gone down the aisle. Neither do you make any move to leave the church until the guests and relatives on the first pews have been escorted from the church.

At a wedding reception conversation centers on the bridal couple. Congratulations are in order for the groom, but it is a breach of etiquette to offer the same to the bride, implying that she is to be congratulated on finding a husband! Make your greeting brief—others are waiting behind you. You will introduce yourself to the bride's mother and to the groom's mother if you have not met.

After congratulating the groom and expressing best wishes to the bride, you will mingle with the guests and enjoy the refreshments which are served. If gifts are being displayed, join the other guests in viewing them.

When the bride and groom are ready to leave, it's "Here they come, there they go," and you go too! With a final handful of rice and a last good-by, the wedding is over.

Lovely hair deserves fine care

... use a Du Pont Comb

FOR HAIR THAT GOES STRAIGHT TO HIS HEART . . . be fussy, lovely lady, about little things! About combs . . . for instance. You want a comb with rounded edges that never rip your scalp. A comb with smooth teeth that never split or bite . . . one that's plastic-clean . . . in gay, mood-matching colors . . . a Du Pont comb. And look! You get exclusive Du Pont design, unbeatable Du Pont quality, for 10 to 50 cents, at good dealers everywhere. Look for the Du Pont Oval . . . it's your guide, your protection in combs!

BETTER THINGS FOR BETTER LIVING . . . THROUGH CHEMISTRY

DU PONT

Du Pont Combs

Looking better every day

That's true, certainly, of Long Distance telephone calls! They're looking better now, because long delays are fewer—more calls go through as you hold the wire.

We've still got a good way to go before we catch up to the pre-war standard of service. But once we do catch up with it, we'll keep right on going and try to raise the standard even higher.

BELL TELEPHONE SYSTEM

ACCENT ON ARRANGEMENT

(Continued from Page 168)

accomplishments. It is a skill, really, and you can have as much fun arranging flowers as if you were painting a masterpiece in oils. So, let's get going!

CONTAINERS AND HOLDERS

Having the right containers for various types of flowers is important, and Mrs. Stassen picks up bowls and vases, urns and odd jars for her bouquets, keeping in mind the places she will use them. For large flowers, like gladiolus, long-stemmed roses, peonies, tulips and chrysanthemums, she uses deep containers which support the long stems and are properly scaled for lamp and magazine tables. Deep jars and bowls are necessary also. For the dining table, she prefers the daintier flowers, such as sweet peas, cornflowers, tea roses and lilies of the valley. For intimate spots about the house she has collected smaller bowls and vases to suit every native flower from the first delicately stemmed violets of spring to autumn's last courageous aster.

Needle holders of various shapes and sizes are a must. Heavy frogs are good for small-stemmed flowers. Fine chicken wire bent into a mushroom and placed over the holder helps the arrangement stay put.

REMEMBER

Here is Mrs. Stassen's basic rule for successful bouquet making: Build your bouquet to a design, natural or modern, placing each flower separately and in the exact spot where it will show to best advantage. In other words, make the arrangement a picture. Natural grace gets top consideration. Stylized or modern arrangements are fun to make, and you can use flower heads or short-stemmed blossoms to advantage this way; and if you are wondering about Mrs. Stassen's pet rules for handling flowers to make them behave well and last longer, here is top information:

TO MAKE FLOWERS LAST

Gather garden flowers before the sun is hot, preferably while the dew is still on. Put them in a deep temporary container so that the water comes almost up to the blossoms, and set them in a cool dark place. That big, long drink makes them keep fresh much longer. This goes for out-of-season cut flowers too. Remove the foliage from the part of the stem immersed in the water. The bouquet stays fresh longer if the water is not made acid by decayed foliage.

Clip off part of the foliage on leafy sprays or branches, such as lilacs or syringa, as the stem cannot supply all of them with enough water to keep both flowers and foliage from wilting.

SPECIAL TIP

In the case of woody branches, such as dogwood, evergreens or foliage, scrape the bark away for a few inches, and split the stem with a knife. Good for dahlias, gladiolus and lilies, too, as it augments the water intake of the stem.

STEM TECHNIQUE

Use a small wire to reinforce limp stems. This is regular florists' wire, which you buy in bundles, cut to appropriate lengths. Don't twist it all the way down the stem; just stick one end into the base of the flower, go once or twice around and secure the end near the base of the stem. The wire won't show and the blossoms will all look alert and stay that way to the very last, even in a warm room.

Cut the stems of hothouse flowers when it will improve your arrangements to have some blooms placed low. It takes courage, of course, to whack off inches from a long-stemmed flower, but it is worth the emotional strain. All stems the same length make stiff, artificial-looking bouquets that lack artistry, show up your lack of imagination and of course defeat your efforts at composition.

FLOWER SALVAGE

Learn a technique for using the heads of flowers and those with short stems. Needle holders make it easy to use flower heads effectively, especially with the addition of fresh foliage. Such arrangements come under the head of modern—look sophisticated.

ORIGINALITIES

Try new tricks, such as using a variety of odd foliage in with more familiar flowers. Float flower heads in a crystal bowl. Make nosegays from tiny flowers such as violets, pansies, crab-apple blossoms and phlox, and use groups of them for a really dramatic effect.

FOR ROMANCE

Grow some fragrant herbs such as rosemary, mint and basil to give a potpourri fragrance to your bouquets. Don't forget the six or more varieties of geraniums with aromatic leaves which are perfect for the added bit of fragrance and whimsey, to say nothing of their beautiful design and color accent. Always grow a few plants of heliotrope, mignonette and lemon verbena for the romantic note in your bouquets.

GROOMING

Change your dining-table flowers every day. They must be as fresh as your salads, and the sweeter you can make them, the better.

Using a few lumps of charcoal keeps water sweet in long-lasting bouquets, and commercial chemical tablets to dissolve in the water do make flowers last longer.

If you want certain bouquets to last and last, take the flowers out of their vases and immerse their stems in deep, cool water every night, covering over their heads with wax paper.

"This is the fifth anniversary of my 29th birthday."

Printed in U. S. A.

Pei
1306 517